1021. The evidence pertaining to Ms Mokonyane must be considered both from the perspective of TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. The evidence about the inducements is relevant to both TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. This is because the conferral of benefits on a public office bearer by a person or entity doing business with the State or SOEs, particularly when the benefits are substantial, leads ineluctably to the question of whether anything was expected in return. The question is relevant to Ms Mokonyane because there was evidence of substantial benefits having been conferred on her, some of which are not in dispute. Taking this into account, the evidence pertaining to Ms Mokonyane is dealt with under the rubric of TOR 1.4, whilst at the same time enquiring whether there was conduct as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

1022. Ms Mokonyane falls squarely within the lists of public office bearers in both TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. She served in various senior roles in the Executive at National and Provincial levels i.e., as the Premier of Gauteng, Minister of Water and Sanitation, Minister of Communications and Deputy Minister of Environmental Affairs respectively.

1023. In considering the other components of TOR 1.4 and TOR 1.1, it is appropriate to start with the evidence pertaining to the benefits received. There was extensive evidence of a wide range of benefits that were bestowed upon Ms Mokonyane and her family by Bosasa and its leadership. It is not necessary to repeat all the evidence here.

1024. To her credit, Ms Mokonyane responded to the Commission's regulation 10(6) directive and notice in terms of Rule 3.3 and presented both affidavit and oral evidence at the Commission. She denied any conduct on her part that was unlawful or might fall within the Commission's terms of reference. As regards:

    1024.1 The birthday party, Ms Mokonyane denied that she had ever celebrated any birthday party of hers at the Victorian Guesthouse or that any party had ever been funded or sponsored by Bosasa

    1024.2 The catering and other arrangements for many ANC functions, whilst she did not dispute this, this would not have fallen within her area of responsibility and no blame could be directed at her in this regard

    1024.3 The making available of its facilities for the ANC for elections, essentially the same applied

    1024.4 The cash payments in the amount of R50 000 per month, she denied this entirely

    1024.5 The provision of alcohol, beverages, and various kinds of meat for Christmas, she denied that the alcohol, beverages and meat was provided for her family. According to Ms Mokonyane, if any food was provided at Christmas time it was provided by Bosasa for poor communities that were at times (once or twice) delivered to her home

1024.6 Annual birthday gifts, she denied knowingly receiving these

1024.7 The security installations, she denied these and indicated that such equipment would have been provided by the state

1024.8 Maintenance work provided at her home, she disputed this, said that the family had their own service providers and that, if any services were provided, this was something arranged by her late husband without her knowledge

1024.9 Having provided for expenses for her son's funeral, she denied this, asserted that the family had paid for these expenses and that, if a donation was made by Mr Watson, this was not at her request; and

1024.10 Car hire for her daughter, this was because Mr Watson knew her daughter well, made use of her services arising from the fact that she was fluent in Mandarin and would have made his own arrangements as between the two of them – Ms Mokonyane had no part in this.

1025. Further, Ms Mokonyane contended that Mr Agrizzi, whom she said she had never met either socially or professionally, was motivated by racism and retaliation for her not providing him with assistance he thought she had the capacity to provide.

1026. The following observations are made regarding the foregoing competing versions emerging from the evidence:

1026.1 As regards the evidence that Bosasa funded Ms Mokonyane's birthday party at the Victorian Guest House, Ms Mokonyane denied, more than once, that there had ever been a party (of any kind or at any time) for her at the Victoria Guesthouse in Krugersdorp. It was only upon being confronted with the evidence of the owner of the guesthouse, Mr Coetzee, that Ms Mokonyane admitted that her 40th birthday celebration was indeed held at the Victorian Guesthouse. Her explanation for failing to disclose this in her initial testimony was wanting. In this regard, she stated that she did not mention the 40th birthday party because she was "preoccupied" by Mr Agrizzi's assertions that it was her 50th birthday party with a "Break a Leg" theme.

1026.2 Birthdays marking the passage of a decade in one's life are invariably well remembered. Even more so where, on her version, she walked into the venue expecting a private family dinner and found that a surprise party with many guests had been arranged for her. It strains credulity that she would not have had this function foremost in her mind while dealing with the questions put to her by the Commission's evidence leader and the Chairperson.

1026.3 Ms Mokonyane disavowed any personal knowledge of most of the evidence regarding the booking and payment of the venue for her birthday party. She said that the event was arranged by her late husband. She later contradicted herself by stating that both she and her husband knew that they did not pay for the party because they did not arrange it.

1026.4 Ms Mokonyane later accepted that she could not dispute Mr Coetzee's evidence that the event was paid for by Bosasa. Ms Mokonyane initially claimed that she had not seen Mr Agrizzi at the birthday event, but later stated that she could not remember if Mr Agrizzi was there.

1026.5 Although she claimed that Mr Coetzee's version on the number of guests and the additional drinks at the event was an exaggeration, she provided no substantive evidence to contradict his evidence. She sought to explain her inability to recall the event because it was a dinner rather than a party. This is not so; it was a gathering of over 100 people.

1026.6 Ms Mokonyane's recollection of the event was unintelligible at times. For example, she initially stated that they did not have many people speaking at the event. When reminded of Mr Coetzee's evidence that the speeches at the event lasted for three hours, she responded by stating that she was not part of the preparation, and she did not know what the situation was "behind the scenes."

1026.7 The upshot is that Ms Mokonyane was shown to have been dishonest in her evidence when she initially denied that any party had ever been held for her at the Guesthouse. She was given more than one opportunity to think about her initial denials before persisting in them. The evidence leader pointed out in fairness to her that her denials would form the subject matter of further investigation. Yet she persisted in them.

1026.8 In the absence of Ms Mokonyane providing any objective basis to reject the evidence of Mr Coetzee, which was backed with documentary evidence, there is no basis for any finding other than that it is so that Bosasa paid for the event. Mr Agrizzi's evidence in this regard was corroborated by, and aligned with, that of Mr Coetzee. There was no suggestion that Mr Coetzee would have an ulterior motive for corroborating Mr Agrizzi's version. On the contrary, his evidence would probably not be good for business. Mr Agrizzi's presence at the party, along with his role in arranging it, is confirmed by Mr Coetzee and supported by the probabilities.

1026.9 Given that her late husband was responsible for keeping the secret to ensure that it was a surprise, there must have been a significant degree of involvement on his part in the arrangements. On the probabilities he must have been aware of Bosasa's involvement. Ordinarily a spouse would be responsible for hosting a surprise birthday party. Where another party assumed responsibility for this, it is probable that the responsible spouse would know who it was. Her evidence that she never enquired of her husband afterwards about the funding of the event is also not credible.

1026.10 Significantly, Ms Mokonyane agreed that it would be entirely inappropriate for Bosasa to have paid for her birthday party. Given her dishonesty about the dinner, the conclusion is unavoidable that she was well-aware of Bosasa's role in sponsoring and arranging the birthday party but did not wish to acknowledge it because she knew that it was corrupt in nature.

1026.11 Ms Mokonyane disavowed any responsibility for seeking and obtaining Bosasa's assistance in catering and other arrangements for ANC events and the making available of facilities during elections. She did not, however, deny that such assistance was provided to the ANC. It is seriously open to doubt that Ms Mokonyane was not involved in procuring such assistance, particularly given her dishonesty in relation to her birthday party function. President Ramaphosa acknowledged Bosasa's assistance to the ANC and that vigilant members of the ANC would have known Bosasa was helping the ANC through donations and benefits in circumstances where there was a concern regarding criminal elements of its conduct.

1026.12 The evidence that R50 000 in cash would be packed and delivered to Ms Mokonyane monthly was denied by Ms Mokonyane. In support of his evidence pertaining to the cash payments, Mr Agrizzi testified that he was able to describe Ms Mokonyane's two houses where the cash was delivered, first the one in Krugersdorp and later the one in Bryanston and proceeded to do so in considerable detail. Ms Mokonyane disputed this as the basis for Mr Agrizzi's familiarity with her home. In this regard, she claimed (i) someone may have given Mr Agrizzi a description of the house (she offered no explanation of who); (ii) the guardhouse could be seen on Google Maps (although this did not explain Mr Agrizzi's familiarity with the interior); (iii) representatives from Bosasa may have met with her husband or visited the house when she experienced a bereavement; (iv) Mr Agrizzi may have become familiar with some features of her house when her fence was being looked at (there was no evidence of Mr Agrizzi's involvement in attending to her fence; and this corroborates the evidence that Bosasa was involved in assisting her with maintenance of her security); and (v) Mr Agrizzi was "desperate" to tarnish Mr Watson's reputation and had not denied the fact that he hates black people or that he had complained about the relationship she had with Mr Watson. These explanations are speculative and do not provide an objective basis to reject Mr Agrizzi's ability to demonstrate his familiarity with Ms Mokonyane's house.

1026.13 Also supporting Mr Agrizzi's version was his ability to provide the code that was used for her payments - "NMR 50 CCY", with Watson as the "Distribution Person". The code NMR 50 CCY was recorded in documentary evidence in the form of a list of cash payments to recipients attached to Mr Agrizzi's initial affidavit.

1026.14 Counting against Mr Agrizzi in relation to this specific evidence is that an aspect of his evidence, when discussing the payments, may have been contradictory. Seemingly at the time of one of the payments, when he was in a car with Mr Watson outside Ms Mokonyane's house, he questioned the wisdom of the payments that were being made to her. In his subsequent evidence he seemed to contradict himself as to whether his concern was that there was no corrupt quid pro quo coming from Ms Mokonyane or whether his concern was Bosasa's continued reliance on corruption when the business no longer required it. In fairness to Mr Agrizzi, however, his original affidavit appears to have disclosed both concerns, and they are not incompatible. At the same time, Mr Agrizzi's attempts to cast himself in a less corrupt light must be treated with caution.

1026.15 The difficulty for Ms Mokonyane is that she was shown to be dishonest in relation the benefit constituted by the sponsorship and arranging of her 40th birthday party, including Mr Agrizzi's role in it. That has the effect of undermining the reliance that can be placed on her other denials pertaining to the receipt of benefits from Bosasa, including the alleged cash benefits.

1026.16 While Ms Mokonyane denied receiving Christmas hampers of alcohol, meat and other beverages from Bosasa, the evidence strongly suggests the contrary. In this regard, Ms Thomas confirmed that she would liaise with Ms Mokonyane's sister about the arrival of items destined for Kagiso. Ms Dube corroborated the evidence that "Christmas" deliveries were made to Ms Mokonyane on Mr Leshabane's instruction. She was able to recall a specific instance in 2017, the supplier of the meat and the approximate value thereof. Ms Mokonyane's suggestion that Bosasa supplied food and drink destined for the community may be true to a degree. But as was pointed out to her, parcels destined for the poor would not have included alcohol, particularly premium whisky and brandy.

1026.17 There was sufficient evidence to establish on a balance of probabilities that Ms Mokonyane and Ms Thomas received birthday gifts from Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi. This was corroborated by Ms Pieters and Ms Thomas – the latter being an individual with a strong allegiance to Ms Mokonyane. Ms Pieters confirmed that Mr Agrizzi had requested her to stipulate that there should be no reference to Bosasa on the hampers, so that the persons could not be linked to Bosasa. The insistence on hiding the link with Bosasa points to the arrangement being a corrupt one.

1026.18 As regards the security installations and maintenance work at her homes, although Mr le Roux was unable to match the work done at Ms Mokonyane's residence in Krugersdorp with invoices as the work occurred in 2013 and the invoices from Regal Distributors are from 2014 onwards, he provided extensive detail about the nature of the work conducted and the cost thereof. This was not meaningfully disputed by Ms Mokonyane.

1026.19 Mr le Roux's claims that he received numerous callouts for maintenance issues at the premises was corroborated by a WhatsApp message from Ms Thomas requesting help with the house alarm. Ms Thomas confirmed that this was not her first contact with Mr le Roux. The WhatsApp message from Ms Thomas to Mr le Roux dated 1 June 2017 was an instance where Ms Mokonyane accepted that Bosasa's involvement had been sought by Ms Thomas, but she claimed that this was on a once-off basis. However, this could not be reconciled with the fact that, if this was a once-off item of work, why the premises were simply referred to as "the house" without giving the address. The implication is that Mr le Roux knew the address of the house. No explanation was provided for this. Mr le Roux's evidence was not unsatisfactory in any way and the probabilities are firmly against this having been a once-off request for assistance.

1026.20 Mr Charl le Roux was able to give significant detail of Ms Mokonyane's premises to support his claim of having assisted with the installation of security and maintenance work at the property. Ms Mokonyane confirmed his evidence in several respects. Ms Mokonyane denied, however, that the Aston Martin was black or blue. She said that the connections to the generator were not inside the garage, they were outside. She believed that this demonstrated that Mr Charl le Roux may have been misleading the Commission. This is not a justifiable conclusion. Mr

Charl le Roux's evidence was confirmed by Ms Mokonyane in several respects without an explanation of how he would be privy to this information without having attended at the premises. Ms Mokonyane later agreed that it appeared indisputable that Mr Van Biljon's company did do various items of work at her residence, that he, together with Messrs Charl and Richard le Roux, had all been to her house, which Mr Van Biljon's company had been paid by Bosasa and were there on Bosasa's instructions.

1026.21 No objective evidence was presented by Ms Mokonyane to refute Mr le Roux's evidence that the estimated the cost of the equipment installed at her house was in the region of between R100,000 and R130,000, and the cost for labour and travelling to undertake this work would have been approximately R58,080.

1026.22 A letter was produced from the Department of Public Works stating that the department did not have a record of a formal request for security measures in Ms Mokonyane's private residence either by the Gauteng Housing Department, the Gauteng Office of the Premier, the Department of Infrastructure Development, or the Department of Water and Sanitation. The department indicated that generally security measures are administered by the province and not the national department. Ms Mokonyane responded by pointing out that it was her assumption that security was done by the State and this letter simply refers the Commission to the provincial government.

1026.23 There is no reasonable basis to reject the credibility of Messrs Richard and Charl le Roux's evidence and that of Mr Van Biljon. If that is so, then the version that Ms Mokonyane asks the Commission to accept is that her husband never informed her of the arrangements with, and the work done on their private residence by, Bosasa. This proposition is far-fetched and inconsistent with the probabilities. It is also expedient that Ms Mokonyane claims that any knowledge of this arrangement was between her husband and Bosasa, given that one cannot test her late husband's version.

1026.24 Although she denied Mr Agrizzi's evidence that he signed off expenses such as the cost of hiring a marquee, air-conditioning, printing of memorial pamphlets, and refreshments for the funeral of her son, Ms Mokonyane did not unequivocally deny that Bosasa contributed towards her son's funeral. Again, Mr Agrizzi's evidence was detailed in this regard, and his evidence as to his role in signing off on this expenditure was consistent with the position that he held in Bosasa.

1026.25 Ms Mokonyane did not deny that Mr Watson assisted her daughter with the costs of car hire, although she claims to have played no role in relation to the rental of a car and asserted that there was a business justification for this, given that her daughter could assist Bosasa with her ability to speak Mandarin. Assuming that this is correct and that Ms Mokonyane's daughter arranged university holiday employment with Bosasa herself, it remains contrary to the probabilities that a student employee would be afforded the employment benefit of the expensive hire of a cabriolet vehicle, even if she could speak Mandarin. In any event there was no evidence of Bosasa's need for an employee fluent in Mandarin. The inference more reasonably to be drawn is that this was one of the many forms of inducement and gain provided to Ms Mokonyane and her family in order to buy Ms Mokonyane's influence.

1027. Considering the foregoing analysis with reference to TOR 1.1, there were clearly extensive attempts by Bosasa and its leaders, through various forms of inducement and gain, to influence Ms Mokonyane in her position as a member of the national executive, the provincial executive and office bearer in organs of state. These inducements are established on a balance of probabilities.

1028. TOR 1.4 then requires one to ask whether Ms Mokonyane was involved in the unlawful facilitation of tenders.

1029. Insofar as the facilitation of tenders is concerned:

1029.1 Mr Agrizzi testified that in approximately 2008/2009 when Ms Mokonyane was the Premier of Gauteng, Ms Mokonyane approached Bosasa with a request to do an analysis of security at Gauteng hospitals. Mr Agrizzi duly prepared a report at an expense to Bosasa of some R2 million. The idea was that, if Bosasa produced a good report, there would be a tender put out for the provision of security services at such hospitals that it could be involved in. Ms Mokonyane denied this and stated that she never requested any such report; she was never furnished with one by Mr Agrizzi; and that she was not involved in hospitals at the time. No report has been placed before the Commission.

1029.2 In relation to this allegation, there is insufficient evidence to resolve this dispute of fact in favour of either party, and no finding can be reached. However, it may be that further investigation by the appropriate authorities would uncover a prima facie case of corruption or attempted corruption as contemplated in section 3 or 12 of PRECCA.

1029.3 Mr Agrizzi testified that in 2014, at the time that Ms Mokonyane was the Minister of Water Affairs, Bosasa was requested to do an analysis and report on the securing of the dams in South Africa for the Department of Water Affairs. Mr Agrizzi was also instructed by Mr Watson to recommend a consultant group who would assist the Department of Water Affairs in managing the award of the tender for securing the dams.

1029.4 Mr Agrizzi testified that a report was duly prepared at an estimated cost of R1.3 million. There was a tight deadline and Mr Agrizzi had to get the assistance of:

> ... official security people that understood dams and that type of thing to assist us. ... The report included the protection of dams with high security fencing, to prevent any ingress or any contamination of the dams. It included sensors to measure levels of dams, potential leaks, breakages in dam walls. It also included, if I recall correctly, camera systems that were integrated onto a singular platform, which to be viewed (sic) by the Minister at any one time.

1029.5 The instruction to recommend a consultant group resulted in Mr Agrizzi scheduling a meeting with Chiefton Consultants, represented by Paul Silver, whom Mr Agrizzi described as head of facilities management, and Raymond Moodley, whom Mr Agrizzi described as co-founder of Chiefton. The specifications of the contemplated project were discussed as well as their potential role as consultants and the expectation that they would be pro-Bosasa when evaluating the tender.

1029.7 Ms Mokonyane denied these allegations on a blanket basis without further elaboration. Mr Agrizzi's evidence in this regard is, however, detailed and reasonably convincing. If one searches "Chiefton Consulting" on the internet it takes one to the website www.chiefton.co.za. On that website, reference is made to Chiefton South Africa as a holding company and one of the companies in the group as being Chiefton Facilities Management (Pty) Ltd which "was formed in 2003 with a key focus on Facilities Management and Consultancy." "Our team" refers to three persons, one of whom is Mr Raymond Moodley, who is described as "Group CEO". His LinkedIn profile describes him as "Chief Executive Officer and co-founder of Chiefton Facilities Management and goes on to say:

> We furthermore embark on Security by Design analysis and has (sic) saved clients millions in doing things differently and efficiently. Paul Silver heads this division with vast experience internationally and has co-authored correctional facility books and is a Professional Architect.

1029.8 This tends to bear Mr Agrizzi's evidence out. Chiefton and Mr Moodley were issued with a Rule 3.3 notice but did not respond to it.

1029.9 When contrasted with Ms Mokonyane's bare denial, there is a sufficient basis for a finding that the facts as testified to by Mr Agrizzi in this regard are established on a balance of probabilities.

1029.10 Had the tender proceeded, the facts testified to by Mr Agrizzi would have given rise to its being an unlawful tender process in breach of the relevant provisions of the Constitution, the PFMA and the Treasury Regulations. That process would have been facilitated by Ms Mokonyane's having assisted Bosasa in positioning themselves to have an unlawful and unfair advantage in securing the tender. This would have amounted to the unlawful facilitation of the tender. Does the fact that the unlawful facilitation was incomplete and unsuccessful change matters? There is no reason why it should. The initial steps were taken and were clearly unlawful. That is sufficient to bring the matter within the ambit of the unlawful facilitation component of TOR 1.4.

1029.11 The other aspect relevant to facilitation was what Mr Agrizzi ascribed to Mr Watson as the reason given by him for the conferral of extensive benefits by Bosasa on Ms Mokonyane. According to Mr Agrizzi, when he challenged Mr Watson as to the justification for continuing to make payments to Ms Mokonyane, Mr Watson responded that "she has a lot of clout" and "[w]e needed her support for the protection from the SIU investigation, the HAWKS and the NPA." Mr Agrizzi at that stage questioned whether they were indeed getting that protection. However, in the long run the fact of the matter is that, as pointed out earlier, the investigation and prosecution pursuant to the SIU report did indeed grind to a halt.

1030. What is also not in dispute is that Ms Mokonyane was at all material times a senior and influential person and office bearer within both the ANC and government. There is, however, no direct evidence of any particular steps taken by Ms Mokonyane towards stopping the investigation. However, the glaring question is what Bosasa was receiving in return for the multiple benefits bestowed upon Ms Mokonyane. The Watson family's long history with the ANC would have meant that they were well attuned to where best within the ANC and government, there was the greatest prospect of generating influence.

1031. All things considered, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that Ms Mokonyane was instrumental, along with the President, in stopping the investigation and prosecution pursuant to the SIU report, from proceeding. For the reasons already given in discussing Mr Zuma's role, that amounts to facilitation as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

1032. In her various positions in the Executive, Ms Mokonyane was subject to terms of the Constitution, her oath of office under the Constitution, the Executive Members Ethics Act, and the Executive Ethics Code.

1033. In terms of Section 96 of the Constitution, a member of Cabinet may not expose him/herself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between his/her official responsibilities and his/her private interests. Further, he/she must act in accordance with a code of ethics prescribed by national legislation, i.e., the Executive Members' Ethics Act and the Executive Ethics Code published in terms of section 2 of that Act. In respect of all the benefits conferred upon her by Bosasa she was in breach of her constitutional, legislative and ethical duties, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

1034. The Code and the Handbook also required Ms Mokonyane to disclose her financial interests including shares and other financial interests in companies. Ms Mokonyane admitted that she was a shareholder of Dyambu Holdings. Therefore, she had an indirect interest in Bosasa's business given that Dyambu Holdings held 10% of the shares in Dyambu Operations, which later changed to Bosasa Operations (Pty) Ltd. The evidence does not identify the period of Ms Mokonyane's shareholding with certainty. However, Mr Agrizzi stated that it was during approximately 2002/2003 at a time when she was the MEC for Safety and Security in the Gauteng Province. There is no evidence that Ms Mokonyane disclosed her interests in Dyambu Holdings during her tenure as MEC for Safety and Security in Gauteng in compliance with the Code and the Handbook.

1035. The facilitation provided by Ms Mokonyane in relation to the report did not benefit Bosasa within the meaning of TOR 1.4. However, it did benefit Ms Mokonyane herself in that she continued to receive benefits from Bosasa and efforts such as this one would probably have given the impression that she was attempting to look after Bosasa's interests.

1036. To the extent that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that Ms Mokonyane was instrumental in bringing the investigation and prosecution arising from the SIU Report to a halt, she would have benefited Bosasa and the persons associated with it that were implicated in the report, within the meaning of TOR 1.4.

1037. Importantly, in the event that Ms Mokonyane was to be prosecuted for corruption under PRECCA, the presumption in Section 24(1) would come into play, to the extent that there was no lawful authority or excuse apparent or suggested by Ms Mokonyane for her receipt of the gratification conferred upon her by Bosasa. Unless she is able in criminal proceedings to introduce evidence to establish a reasonable doubt in this regard, the evidence of the benefits conferred upon her (even if they exclude the allegations of the monetary payments) will be deemed by Section 24(1) to constitute sufficient evidence that the necessary quid pro quo was provided by her.

Ms Dudu Myeni

1038. Ms Myeni was the Chairperson of SAA. Although this is likely to have been a non-executive director role, by all accounts the extent of her involvement in the affairs of SAA meant that in practice she exercised an executive role. This would bring her within the meaning of an "employee of an SOE" as referred to in TOR 1.4, particularly on a purposive interpretation. It would also not be a strained interpretation for a chairperson of an SOE to be considered a public official.

1039. The evidence pertaining to Ms Myeni is in certain respects also relevant to TOR 1.1. In this regard she is a director of the board of an SOE as contemplated in that TOR.

1040. Much of the evidence against Ms Myeni remains unchallenged, given her refusal to answer most questions from the evidence leader on the basis that she might incriminate herself. The decision of the Constitutional Court in Secretary, Judicial Commission of Inquiry into allegations of State Capture makes it clear that claiming privilege against self-incrimination is not there for the asking. Ms Myeni was required to demonstrate how an answer to the questions in issue would breach the privilege. This she failed to do.

1041. Even if she had properly claimed the privilege, the consequence would still have been that the evidence in question was left unanswered for purposes of the Commission's findings. It would not prevent the Commission from proceeding based on the unanswered evidence to make its findings with reference to the terms of reference.

1042. Given the evidence that according to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Watson said that Mr Zuma confirmed receipt of the monthly cash amounts, it must be accepted that Ms Myeni was not benefitting personally from these payments, but they would certainly have boosted her position as Chairperson of the Jacob G Zuma Foundation and her ability to have a significant degree of influence over Mr Zuma. If she was remunerated for her work as Chairperson of the Foundation, the payments would have benefitted her indirectly insofar as the funds would have gone into the payment of her remuneration and that of the staff of the Foundation. However, there was no evidence that she was remunerated for her work on the Foundation.

1043. Similarly, she would not have derived direct financial benefits from the spending on the Mr Zuma's birthday parties. However, she would certainly have benefitted insofar as it was clearly her duty as chairperson to ensure that lavish birthday parties were provided for Mr Zuma. Bosasa's contribution would have been invaluable to her in successfully carrying out that responsibility. It would also have been invaluable in ensuring her continuing ability to influence the Mr Zuma and to benefit from his decision-making insofar as she herself was concerned. In any event, Section 3 of PRECCA criminalises the corrupt receipt of gratification "whether for the benefit of ... herself or for the benefit of another person."

1044. The evidence in relation to the handbag filled with cash was disputed by Ms Myeni, but the denial was a bare one and she put up no evidence to expand upon or explain her denial. She also resorted to the privilege against self-incrimination to avoid further questions on the issue. In the circumstances the gift of the handbag filled with cash is established on a balance of probabilities.

1045. Ms Myeni was unwilling to answer questions pertaining to the installation of the valuable security system at her home because of the privilege against self-incrimination. The evidence is uncontested, clear and supported by documentary evidence. The provision of this benefit is established at least on a balance of probabilities.

1046. Having regard to the foregoing, it is established in respect of Ms Myeni that there were attempts made through inducements and gain to influence both her, as chairperson of the Jacob G Zuma Foundation or as someone close to Mr Zuma and Director of an SOE and, through her, Mr Zuma, as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

1047. The evidence relevant to the enquiry into facilitation included the following:

1047.2 Ms Oberholzer's evidence was that the meeting in question was arranged by Ms Myeni. In confirmation of this, she put up an email dated 20 July 2014 from dudumyeni@telkomsa.net, seemingly addressed to Mr Watson and later the same day forwarded by him to Ms Oberholzer, which conveyed that they should rest assured, all was under control and that Ms Myeni was trying to set up the meeting for the 27th. Despite being faced with this evidence corroborating the allegation against her, Ms Myeni again refused to answer any questions on the email as she said that she did not want to risk incriminating herself.

1047.3 Mr le Roux confirmed Mr Agrizzi's evidence that Ms Myeni attended meetings at Bosasa's premises. He explained that he was instructed to delete security footage of Ms Myeni's visit to the premises together with Mr Zuma and Mr Bheki Cele.

1048. There was also important evidence pertaining to Ms Myeni's involvement in providing confidential documentation in relation to the investigation and potential prosecution of Bosasa, and persons associated with it, arising from the SIU report. The evidence before the Commission can be summarised as follows:

1048.1 Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mathenjwa was given primary responsibility for dealing with Ms Myeni on Bosasa's problems with the investigation and prosecution. Nonetheless, Mr Agrizzi said he was present at meetings where the investigation and contemplated prosecution of Bosasa was discussed with Ms Myeni and this led to the involvement of Mr Zuma directly.

1048.2 Mr Watson asked Mr Agrizzi to attend a meeting with Ms Myeni at the Sheraton Hotel in Pretoria regarding information on the Hawks investigation and discussions she had with the NPA. Mr Watson prepared the R300,000 in cash. When they arrived at the Sheraton Hotel, they were escorted to a private lounge area with stringent access control on a member's only basis.

1048.3 During this meeting, Ms Myeni indicated that she was trying to arrange that the investigation be terminated. She produced a police case docket that had purportedly been obtained from the NPA. She provided Mr Agrizzi with sight of it but insisted that Mr Agrizzi could not make copies. Mr Agrizzi, therefore requested that he be excused to study it and make notes in his journal.

1048.4 Despite the admonition from Ms Myeni not to take any photographs of the docket, Mr Agrizzi took a few photographs of the docket on his cell phone. The docket was placed on the carpeted hotel floor when Mr Agrizzi took the photographs.

1048.5 Mr Dutton confirmed that Mr Agrizzi had a series of photographs of documents which appear to be photographs of confidential documents of the South African Police Service's Anti-Corruption Task Team relating to the progress of the police criminal investigation into corruption allegations against Bosasa. These photographs were taken at the Sheraton Hotel.

1048.6 Mr Dutton explained Mr Agrizzi's description of the layout of the 6th floor of the Sheraton Hotel where he was alleged to have met Ms Myeni. Mr Dutton visited the Sheraton Hotel on 21 December 2018 and Mr Agrizzi's description of the 6th floor aligned closely to what Mr Dutton observed. In addition, he observed that the pattern on the carpet was identical to that featured in Mr Agrizzi's photographs.

1048.7 A document thus photographed by Mr Agrizzi was titled "ACTT Monthly Progress and Audit Report", which was generated by the police providing monthly reports on the status of the Bosasa investigation.

1048.8 An examination of the metadata of the photographs taken by Mr Agrizzi by the Commission's digital forensics team revealed that the photographs on Mr Agrizzi's phone were taken on 23 September 2015 at 10:37:06. The longitude and latitude co-ordinates of the location of the photograph are within the vicinity of the Sheraton Hotel.

1048.9 The hotel's general manager, Pascal Foquet, confirmed through hotel records that Ms Myeni had booked into the hotel on 22 September 2015 and there were no further transactions on her invoice after 24 September 2015. She had been accommodated in Room 616. From that the general manager had deduced that she had checked out on the date. The account was settled on 5 October 2015.

1048.10 Mr Dutton confirmed that the account for Ms Myeni's stay was paid off from the FNB account of one Nicole Stone and on top of the customer registration card it stated, 'Account Jacob Zuma Foundation'. Nicole Stone is a travel agent from either Richards Bay or Empangeni.

1048.11 The Commission's investigation team showed Mr Agrizzi's photographs to both General Moodley and senior State Adv De Kock who was originally the prosecutor assigned to the matter and they both advised that the documents appeared to be an ACTT progress report dated 24 August 2015. They confirmed that these documents were not publicly available and were confidential documents and correspondence between the police and the NPA.

1049. Despite facing the allegations and corroborating evidence referred to above and despite appreciating the implications of her refusal to answer questions on her evidence, Ms Myeni refused to answer questions regarding (i) the meeting of 23 September 2015 (ii) Mr Blake's evidence regarding payment in respect of her earlier stay at the Sheraton between 4 and 6 May 2014; (iii) handing over a police docket containing information regarding the investigation into Bosasa, all on the basis that she did not want to risk incriminating herself.

1050. The final evidence against Ms Myeni was that she arranged a meeting at ORTIA to enable Bosasa officials to meet the then CEO or acting CEO of SAA, Nico Bezuidenhout. It was stated that, during the pre-meeting, a tender for security services was discussed and Ms Myeni wanted Bosasa to investigate the possibility of taking over the security contract and the catering contract for SAA.

1051. Confirmation that the meeting took place at the Intercontinental Hotel at ORTIA and details of the meeting were provided in an affidavit from Mr Bezuidenhout. Despite this, Ms Myeni refused to answer any questions put to her because of his affidavit because of her concern that she could incriminate herself.

1052. There is more than sufficient evidence to support a finding on a balance of probabilities that Ms Myeni facilitated the meeting with Mr Zuma in relation to the oil and gas regulations. The question, however, is whether that amounts to the facilitation of the unlawful award of a tender as contemplated in TOR 1.4. There is insufficient evidence to sustain such a finding. The incident serves rather as evidence of the influence that Ms Myeni was able to exert over Mr Zuma and of the closeness of her association with him.

1053. Similarly, the evidence of Ms Myeni's and Mr Zuma's visit to the Bosasa office park is not a sufficient basis to find that Ms Myeni facilitated the award of unlawful tenders. However, the evidence pertaining to Ms Myeni making available to Mr Agrizzi confidential information belonging to the Hawks or the NPA in connection with the investigation and prosecution:

1053.1 Is compelling and, given the strong documentary and photographic corroboration, warrants a finding that these facts were established on at least a balance of probabilities

1053.2 Amounts to the corrupt provision by Ms Myeni of a quid pro quo for the inducements and gain provided to her; and 1053.3 Indirectly facilitated the unlawful award of tenders by ensuring that existing contracts were retained by Bosasa and an ostensibly clean record was maintained by it to secure further tenders from the state and SOEs.

1054. The evidence pertaining to the meeting with Mr Bezuidenhout is corroborated by him and is established on at least a balance of probabilities. Although nothing came of the meeting, had the contracts been concluded there would have to have been a tender process. By arranging the meeting long before any such tender process had commenced, Ms Myeni was giving Bosasa an unfair advantage. The conduct accordingly amounts to the facilitation of unlawful tenders, even if the facilitation was incomplete and did not bear fruit. As pointed out earlier, section 21(a) of PRECCA recognises the offence of attempted corruption.

1055. Based on the foregoing analysis, there was indeed the facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders by Ms Myeni as contemplated in TOR 1.4. That facilitation was intended to benefit Bosasa, a corporate entity doing business with government, and, potentially, SAA, which is an Organ of State. Ms Myeni benefitted as an individual, given the benefits she received. That requirement of TOR 1.4 is, accordingly, also satisfied in respect of Ms Myeni.

1056. Section 217 of the Constitution binds all organs of state. SAA is an Organ of State. In relation to both the unlawful giving of access to confidential documentation at the Sheraton Hotel and the meeting with Mr Bezuidenhout, Ms Myeni acted in conflict with section 217(1) of the Constitution insofar as it requires a system of procurement which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost effective.

1057. In addition, in sharing the information with Mr Agrizzi, her conduct frustrated the police and prosecution authorities in investigating and prosecuting corruption in relation to tender processes.

1058. Accordingly, the facilitation by Ms Myeni of the unlawful awarding of tenders constituted breaches of the Constitution and legislation.

1059. The evidence in relation to the giving and receipt of gratification by Ms Myeni in the form of receipt of the benefits found to have been provided, and the facilitation provided both in relation to the provision of confidential information pertaining to the investigation and the incomplete attempt to facilitate security and catering contracts with SAA, give rise to a prima facie case of corruption in terms of section 3 of PRECCA along with other statutory and common law crimes, including defeating the ends of justice.

1060. In engaging in the facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders in the respects identified, Ms Myeni clearly sought to benefit Bosasa and its associates and directors or employees potentially facing prosecution. She also sought to benefit herself insofar her work as chairperson of the Foundation was facilitated by the benefits conferred by Bosasa and to benefit Mr Zuma who was the beneficiary of Bosasa's lavish spending.

1061. In the circumstances, there was conduct on the part of Ms Myeni falling squarely within TOR 1.4.

Beneficiaries of the facilitation

1063. Clearly, Bosasa and the entities falling within the Bosasa group were the primary beneficiaries of the facilitation and they fall within the description of a corporate entity doing business with both government and organs of state. The facilitators and other individuals who benefitted have generally been identified during the preceding analysis.

1064. The question must, however, be asked whether the Watson family, as distinct from Bosasa, benefitted from the facilitation. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson made decisions which ultimately benefitted Bosasa, Mr Watson and his family. He also testified that Mr Watson was Bosasa.

1065. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Valence Watson and Mr Ronnie Watson would be present at various Bosasa meetings. Watsons' siblings (Mr Valence Watson, Mr Ronnie Watson, and Mr Daniel Watson) and his daughter Lindsay Watson were involved in Bosasa's affairs in one way or another including by:

1065.1 Facilitating the provision of various gratifications to public officials and employees of SOEs (which included the payment of cash, the use of a desktop computer, clothing, and the provision of the use of Mr Ronnie Watson's game farm)

1065.2 Arranging travel and accommodation for public officials

1065.3 Preparing fictitious documents and agreements to conceal the true situation; and 1065.4 Negotiating to conclude retention and similar agreements as well as intimidating, and, placing pressure on, Mr Agrizzi and other Bosasa employees to prevent them from reporting Bosasa's various unlawful activities. Jared and Roth Watson were also involved in various attempts to silence Bosasa employees.

1066. On a balance of probabilities, these family members' participation in conduct that was supportive of Bosasa's corrupt activities, suggests that they must have had an incentive through the derivation of benefits from Bosasa and its various enterprises.

1067. However, there was also evidence of specific benefits conferred on particular family members:

1067.1 There is evidence that houses constructed for Lindsay and Roth Watson were paid for by companies within the Bosasa group.

1067.2 Various interests were held by the Watson family in companies that were also alleged to have benefitted from the corrupt relationships established by the Watsons with various public officials, including Vulisango (Pty) Ltd, Inyanda Energy Projects (Pty) Ltd, Laidback Investments (Pty) Ltd, and O'Feh Investments (Pty) Ltd.

1067.3 Mark Taverner, Watson's brother-in-law, was also involved in various activities related to Bosasa. His companies not only supplied Bosasa (for which a benefit must have been received in return) but would also facilitate unlawful transactions for Bosasa.

1067.4 Mr Agrizzi described Mr Watson as the godfather of Bosasa. The evidence reveals that the Watson family was involved in Bosasa's affairs at a high-level, at times in the day-to-day activities as well as in exerting various forms of pressure or influence on others, to their and Bosasa's benefit.

1067.5 It was also clear from the evidence that the Watson family had established numerous personal relationships and friendships with Mr Zuma, members of the National Executive, public officials, parliamentarians and employees of SOEs. Usually, these relationships were used to leverage unlawful benefits for Bosasa and the Watson family.

1068. Accordingly, on a balance of probabilities, the Watson family benefited from the facilitation of the unlawful awarding of tenders, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

Conclusion and findings in relation to TOR 1.4

1069. Overall, the evidence shows that Mr Zuma, at least one member of his National Executive, public officials and the chairperson of an SOE breached the Constitution, legislation and ethical codes by facilitating the unlawful award of tenders by SOEs and organs of state to benefit the Watson family, Bosasa and its associated entities, the recipients of monetary and other illicit benefits in return for the facilitation, and the families of the recipients, particularly where family members were directly provided with benefits, as in the case of Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham, Mr Smith and Ms Mokonyane.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.5

1070. The focus of the enquiry required by TOR 1.5 is on whether there is evidence of corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by a particular category of public entities, being those listed in Schedule 2 to the PFMA, and, if so, its nature and extent. The entities in question are the "major public entities".

1071. This TOR is best analysed with reference to the evidence pertaining to the contracts concluded by Bosasa and its associated entities with ACSA and SAPO. The three questions raised may be considered together.

Contracts with ACSA

1072. Bosasa was awarded a tender in 2001 to provide protection and guarding services at ORTIA. Mr Agrizzi understood Bosasa still to have the contract when he testified at the Commission in 2019.

1073. According to Mr Agrizzi, various persons at ACSA were paid a cash amount monthly in return for facilitating the contract and its renewals. These persons included Thele Moema, head of risk at ACSA, Siza Thanda, head of security for ACS, and Reuben Pillay, 'Joe' Serobe and Mohammed Bashir (procurement officers).

1074. The payments were made over a period of a few years and would cease when the person left the employment of ACSA. Mr Agrizzi testified that he often visited ORTIA with Mr Gumede and that they would take grey security bags filled with money to give to certain people at ORTIA. Mr Agrizzi also testified that he had packed some of the money bags and had kept a record in this regard. The payments were still being made when Mr Agrizzi left Bosasa.

1075. Mr Agrizzi recorded some of the payments made to ACSA officials in his black book. Those parts of the black book which Mr Agrizzi was able to provide to the Commission reflected payments made through Mr Gumede to the following persons/entities, Bongi Mpungose – ACS, Jason Jason Tshabalala, and Mohammed Bashir.

1076. Mr Agrizzi's evidence implicating these persons is supported by his recordal of payments in the black book. Thele Moema, Reuben Pillay, and Johannes Serobe were each sent a Rule 3.3 notice by the Commission and failed to respond to it. Consequently, the evidence implicating them in the receipt of monies is not disputed.

1077. Bongi Mpungose, Jason Tshabalala and Mohammed Bashir were not sent Rule 3.3 notices by the Commission. In the circumstances, no adverse findings may be made against them.

Contracts with SAPO

1078. Mr Agrizzi testified that Bosasa made regular payments to the former head of security at SAPO, Siviwe Mapisa, and the former CEO, Maanda Manyatshe on a basis like that in respect of other recipients of cash inducements.

1079. In addition to the cash payments, Mr Agrizzi testified that Bosasa also provided them with premium gifts including pens, cufflinks, and watches. Mr Mapisa was also taken on hunting trips at Mr Ronnie Watson's game farm in the Eastern Cape. The cash payments and gifts were provided in exchange for their facilitation of the award of the SAPO security contract.

1080. Both Siviwe Mapisa and Maanda Manyatshe were sent Rule 3.3 notices by the Commission and failed to respond. Consequently, the evidence implicating them in the corrupt receipt of monies and gifts is not disputed.

Conclusion and findings in relation to TOR 1.5

1081. None of those persons implicated in the evidence in this section of the memorandum, who were issued with Rule 3.3 notices, responded to those notices. In the circumstances, the evidence in relation to them remains undisputed.

1082. Although the evidence is based on the single witness testimony of Mr Agrizzi, it is corroborated in some instances by the recordal of names in Mr Agrizzi's black book. The evidence also implicates Mr Agrizzi in criminal activity and is to his detriment, and it is unlikely that he would lie to prejudice himself. His evidence is also supported by the video evidence pertaining to the vaults and the safes where cash was stored and packaged for purposes of corrupt payments.

1083. The evidence establishes that, at least on a balance of probabilities, there was corruption in the award of contracts or tenders to Bosasa by Schedule 2 SOEs. The undisputed evidence was that the ACSA contract was unlawfully awarded in 2001 and was believed still to be in effect in 2019. The evidence of corruption was both for the facilitation of the original contract and the various extensions of the contract.

1084. Based on the evidence, the following employees of ACSA were, at least on a balance of probabilities, involved in the corrupt awarding of contracts or tenders to Bosasa. They are Thele Moema, Reuben Pillay, and Johannes Serebe.

1085. Further investigations should be undertaken to determine whether Bongi Mpungose, Jason Tshabalala, Siza Thanda and Mohammed Bashir were involved in the corrupt awarding of ACSA contracts or tenders to Bosasa. There is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case.

1086. Based on the evidence, the following employees of SAPO were involved in the corrupt awarding of contracts or tenders to Bosasa. They are Siviwe Mapisa and Maanda Manyatshe.

1087. Returning to the questions arising from TOR 1.5, the evidence establishes, at least on a balance of probabilities, that:

1087.1 There was corruption in the awarding of tenders in two SOEs that Bosasa had dealings with ACSA and SAPO; and

1087.2 The corruption involved the payment of unlawful gratification by way of ongoing monthly payments to various persons to ensure the grant and extension of the contracts to provide security services.

1088. An assessment of the extent of the corruption must await further investigation of the persons that did not receive Rule 3.3 notices. A total of five implicated employees have received Rule 3.3 notices and have not responded.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.9

1089. The focus of the enquiry required by TOR 1.9 is on corruption in the award of tenders by government departments, agencies and entities, as distinct from the major public entities. It also focuses on whether the relevant office bearers sought to benefit themselves, their family members or entities in which they had an interest.

1090. To a significant degree, the questions whether there was corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by government departments, agencies and entities and whether the corruption involved office-bearers seeking to benefit themselves, their family members, or entities in which they held a personal interest, have already been answered in the analysis with reference to other terms of reference, particularly TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. That already establishes the existence and very substantial extent of the phenomenon of corruption in relation to the awarding of contracts and tenders by government departments involving office bearers in the categories concerned.

1091. The analysis in this section will therefore focus on the nature and the extent of the corruption. The evidence reveals that that there was widespread corruption in the awarding of contracts and tenders to Bosasa and its associated business entities or organisations, by Government departments, SOEs, agencies and entities. Members of the National Executive, public officials and functionaries of various organs of state influenced the awarding of tenders to benefit themselves, their families or entities in which they held a personal interest.

1092. Mr Agrizzi's evidence suggested that the aggregate value of contracts awarded to the Bosasa Group of Companies by various public departments and entities between 2000 and 2016 was at least R2,371,500,000.00. Mr Agrizzi estimated that approximately R75,700,000 was paid out in bribes. These values do not include the value of houses built, fixtures and fittings as well as furnishings, motor vehicles purchased and travel expenses incurred. Mr Agrizzi's estimations must be treated with a measure of caution. However, even on that basis, there was systemic corruption on what is described above as an industrial scale in the forms contemplated in TOR 1.9. Corruption was central to Bosasa's business model.

1093. Mr Agrizzi, along with other witnesses, testified and demonstrated that Bosasa (and the Watson family) established a reasonably well-organised network of well-placed, well-connected and powerful people whose loyalty was secured with financial and other material incentives and bribes. It was through this network that they were able to promote and protect the private interests of Bosasa by irregular procurement and practices to extract money from the state in very substantial amounts. In Mr Agrizzi's experience, every one of the contracts in which Bosasa was involved was tainted with bribes and corruption. Where contracts were not awarded because of corruption, corruption would creep in once they had been awarded, to ensure their retention and their extension or renewal. These contracts spanned, at least, a 17-year period.

REFERRALS IN RELATION TO EACH OF THE TOR

1094. TOR 7 provides that the Commission shall, where appropriate, refer any matter for prosecution, further investigation or the convening of a separate inquiry to the appropriate law enforcement agency, government department or regulator regarding the conduct of a certain person(s).

1095. This section contains an overview of the findings according to the relevant TORs and identifies matters or persons for referral for prosecution, further investigation or the convening of a separate enquiry.

1096. It should be borne in mind that the primary standard of proof employed in the foregoing analysis was whether the evidence established the facts on a balance of probabilities. Where possible offences were considered, this was done based on whether or not a prima facie case existed or might be revealed through further investigation.

1097. Prosecutions, restraint and confiscation proceedings under Chapter 5 of POCA, preservation and forfeiture proceedings under Chapter 6 of POCA, and proceedings before regulatory bodies, each bear their own standards of proof, which may not align with those employed in the Commission. Additionally, self-incriminating evidence given in the Commission is inadmissible in other fora in terms of Regulation 8(2). Where a matter is referred below for prosecution or investigation, further investigation will obviously be required to ensure that sufficient evidence is gathered to meet the requisite standard of proof.

1098. It may be that where a matter is referred for prosecution or investigation, one is already under way. Nevertheless, for the sake of completeness, such persons are included in the referrals.

1099. Related to the referrals for investigation and prosecution, the Asset Forfeiture Unit within the Office of the National Director of Public Prosecutions should in each case investigate, and, where sufficient evidence exists, proceed in terms of chapter 5 or 6 of POCA, as may be appropriate.

1100. This would not apply where a special investigation unit has been established terms of the Special Investigating Units and Special Tribunals Act 74 of 1996 ("SIU Act") in respect of the particular matter in question. Where a special investigation unit has been established, proceedings should, where appropriate, be investigated and brought in the Special Tribunal established in terms of section 2(1)(b) of the SIU Act, for appropriate relief, including the recovery of damages or losses suffered by the relevant organ of state.

1101. The Secretary of the Commission, who is in a position akin to chief executive officer, must report knowledge or suspicion of an offence under Part 1, 2, 3 or 4, or Sections 20 or 21 of PRECCA, or the offence of theft, fraud, extortion, forgery or uttering a forged document, to the DPCI in terms of Section 34 of PRECCA. The making of a report in terms of section 34 is not a substitute for laying a charge with the SAPS.

1102. In addition, any offences or unlawful activities relating to serious, high profile or complex corruption cases arising from the work of the Commission should be reported to the Investigating Directorate of the NPA.

1103. On this basis, all referrals for further investigation or prosecution are made to the SAPS, the DPCI and the Investigating Directorate, whether or not this is expressly stated below. Referrals for prosecution are only made in instances where the evidence reveals strong prospects of a successful prosecution. Express reference is made to prosecution where this forms part of the referral. All other matters are referred for further investigation.

1104. Where a matter is referred to the SAPS, DPCI or the Investigating Directorate for investigation or prosecution, the referral is subject to regulation 8(2), so that self-incriminating evidence given in the Commission is not admissible in any criminal proceedings brought against that person. This will mean that in every matter that is referred to the SAPS, DPCI or the Investigating Directorate further investigation of their own will need to be done. It is therefore important that time and space be afforded the DPCI, the Investigating Directorate and the SAPS to complete these further investigations. Public clamour for immediate prosecutions will not be of assistance in the cause of bringing the Rule of Law to bear on past corruption. Rapid, poorly prepared prosecutions will not succeed and will undermine the achievement of the goal of a corruption-free society. Where a matter is referred for prosecution in this Part, it is recognised that the discretion in relation to the decision to prosecute will remain vested in the NPA. It must make its own assessment as to whether it has gathered sufficient evidence of its own to enjoy a reasonable prospect of a successful prosecution.

1105. The evidence reveals that Bosasa, its directors, employees and associates over an extended period of time made attempts through various inducements and forms of gain, including money and other forms of gratification as defined in section 1 of PRECCA, to influence office bearers in the categories contemplated in TOR 1.1.

1105.1 The evidence establishes a prima facie case of money laundering in terms of Section 4 of POCA against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution: Mr Angelo Agrizzi, Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder, Mr Carlos Bonifacio, Mr Jacques van Zyl, Mr Riaan Hoeksma, Mr Gregg Lacon-Allin, as well as the entities AA Wholesalers, Riekele Konstruksie, Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers, Lamozest, and Equal Trade 4 and Equal Food Traders.

1105.2 The evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption in terms of section 3 of PRECCA read with section 4 to 16 of PRECCA as relevant against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution: Mr Angelo Agrizzi, Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder, Mr Jacques van Zyl, Mr Johannes Gumede. Mr Papa Leshabane, Mr Thandi Makoko, Mr Leon van Tonder, Mr Richard le Roux, Mr Petrus Venter, Mr William Daniel Mansell, Mr Sesinyi Seopela, Mr Linda Mti, Mr Frans Vorster, Mr Carlos Bonifacio and Mr Riaan Hoeksma.

1106. Having regard to the evidence pertaining to the "war room" facilities to assist the ANC in the elections, the evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption in relation to contracts in terms of Section 12(2) of PRECCA against Messrs Gumede, Leshabane and Louis Vorster. In respect of them, the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution.

1107. The investigation should include the identification of the officials of the ANC that were involved in arranging the war room and further investigation of their conduct. There is a reasonable prospect that further investigation in that regard will uncover a prima facie case.

1107.1 The evidence establishes a prima facie case of fraud against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution: Mr Angelo Agrizzi, Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder, Mr Carlos Bonifacio, Mr Jacques van Zyl, Mr Greg Lacon-Allin, and Mr Riaan Hoeksma.

1107.2 The evidence establishes that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of money laundering, corruption and/or fraud against the following persons and the matter is accordingly referred for further investigation: Ms Carien Daubert, Ms Rieka Hundermark, Mr Gavin Hundermark, Mr Cedric Frolick, Mr Patrick Littler, Mr Danie van Tonder, Mr Ishmael Dikane, Mr Syvion Dlamini, Mr Trevor Mathenjwa, and Mr Ryno Roode.

1108. This must not, however, be taken as a finding by the Commission against any persons that did not receive Rule 3.3 notices.

1108.1 The evidence establishes a prima facie case of the failure to report suspicious or unusual transactions, in contravention of section 52 of FICA, against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution: Mr Angelo Agrizzi, Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder, Mr Carlos Bonifacio, Mr Jacques van Zyl, Ms Carien Daubert, Ms Rieka Hundermark, Mr Gavin Hundermark, Mr Johannes Gumede, Mr Papa Leshabane, and Ms Thandi Makoko.

1109. The evidence establishes a prima facie case of assisting another to benefit from the proceeds of unlawful activities, in contravention of section 5 of POCA, against Gregory Lawrence and in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution.

1110. The evidence establishes that Mr Petrus Venter was aware of the illegal transactions taking place at Bosasa and failed to report them. Further investigations should take place for a failure to comply with Section 34 of PRECCA and other relevant legislative requirements. The matter is referred to the SAPS for this purpose. The matter is also referred to SARS and the SA Institute of Tax Practitioners ("SAIT") for further investigation.

1111. The evidence establishes prima facie instances of various tax offences. These matters are referred to SARS for further investigation in conjunction with relevant law enforcement agencies.

1112. Messrs Agrizzi, van Tonder and Bonifacio are facing pending charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud. The matter is nonetheless referred to the SAPS, the DPCI and the Investigating Directorate, to ascertain whether those charges cover all instances of corruption revealed in the evidence before the Commission and, if not, for the charges to be expanded accordingly.

1113. The matter of forms of inducement or gain being paid to persons in the NPA for Bosasa to have been able to gain possession of confidential documentation is referred for investigation.

1114. Insofar as Messrs Wakeford and Papadakis are concerned, the evidence discussed in the analysis pertaining to TOR 1.1, particularly the email correspondence and the arrangements for communication with Mr Papadakis through Ms Engelbrecht, gives rise to reasonable grounds for suspicion that:

1114.1 Gratification as defined in section 1 of PRECCA, whether in the form of free cement deliveries or otherwise, was offered by Messrs Watson, Agrizzi and Wakeford on behalf of Bosasa, and accepted by Mr Papadakis, as contemplated in Section 3(a) of PRECCA, dealing with the general offence of corruption; and 1114.2 That this was done in order to influence Mr Papadakis to act in a manner that amounted to the misuse or selling of information or material acquired during the exercise, carrying out or performance of his powers, duties and functions arising out of his contractual and statutory obligations to SARS and the abuse of his position of authority at SARS, as contemplated in Section 3(i)(bb) and 3(ii)(aa) of PRECCA.

1115. In the circumstances, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case against Messrs Wakeford and Papadakis in respect of the offence of corruption in terms of Section 3 of PRECCA, and the matter is referred for investigation accordingly. Section 4 is also of potential application because Mr Papadakis would have fallen within the definition of a public officer in terms of the definition of that term in Section 1 of PRECCA, by virtue of his position in SARS.

1116. Insofar as Mr Wakeford is concerned, the email correspondence of 16 and 20 June 2011, alleged to pertain to a corrupt payment to the advisor to the then Minister of Correctional Services, must also be considered in the investigation. No findings are made in respect of the said advisor as no Rule 3.3 notice was issued to him.

1117. Insofar as Mr Mantashe is concerned, there is no evidence that, as Secretary-General of the ANC, he acted upon the inducement provided to him to influence public office bearers in the listed categories. However, the question arises whether the presumption in Section 24 of PRECCA could nevertheless be applied to him so as to justify an investigation or prosecution.

1118. In that regard there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that Mr Mantashe accepted or agreed to accept gratification as contemplated in Section 24(1)(a).

1119. With reference to Section 24(1)(b)(i), there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that Mr Mantashe did so from a person who sought to obtain contracts from public bodies. However, Section 24(1)(b)(i) requires that the person charged was serving in one or more of the public bodies concerned, so it would not apply to Mr Mantashe.

1120. With reference to Section 24 (1) (b) (ii), there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that Mr Mantashe received the gratification from a person concerned in business transacted by various public bodies, but he did not serve in any of them. Section 24 (1) (b) (ii) however also includes as the provider of the gratification a person who "is concerned . . . in any proceedings or business transacted before or by . . . the . . . political party . . . in which the person charged was serving as an official".

1121. Mr Vorster testified that in 2014 (this is while Mr Mantashe was serving as Secretary-General of the ANC) he was instructed by Mr Leshabane, amongst others, to set up the vacant half of the Kgwerano call centre for the ANC to run its war room prior to and during the national elections and that all related expenses were covered by Kgwerano. It was accepted by President Ramaphosa in his evidence that war rooms had been provided for the ANC by Bosasa. The question is whether this conduct falls within the quoted part of Section 24(1)(b)(ii). "Business" is defined in section 1 of PRECCA as "any business, trade, occupation, profession, calling, industry or undertaking of any kind, or any other activity carried on for gain or profit by any person within the Republic". The provision of the war rooms falls within the meaning of "any other activity" (emphasis added). Mr Leshabane in his capacity as Director of Bosasa did so to derive profit and gain for Bosasa in its contracts with various Departments and Organs of State. The word "proceedings" is not defined. However, setting up and operating a monitoring facility for elections would seem to fall within the meaning of the term "proceedings".

1122. That provides a sufficient statutory platform for the presumption to be engaged. It would then be incumbent upon the State in terms of the second part of Section 24 (1) to "take reasonable steps" to see whether or not it is "able with reasonable certainty to link the acceptance of ... the gratification to any lawful authority or excuse on the part of the person charged." Based on the earlier analysis, the Commission was not able to find a lawful authority or excuse for the security installations for Mr Mantashe. If the State's steps give rise to a similar conclusion, then proof of receipt of the gratification (in the form of the security installations) in terms of paragraphs (a) and (b) of Section 24 (1) becomes, in the absence of evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to the absence of lawful authority or excuse, proof of a quid pro quo on the basis set out in paragraphs (aa) to (dd) of section 24 (1).

1123. Section 25 of PRECCA is also of relevance in assessing the possible referral of the matter. In the circumstances, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case against Mr Mantashe in respect of the offence of corruption in terms of Section 3 of PRECCA, and the matter is accordingly referred for investigation.

1124. As far as Dr De Wee is concerned, it is not possible based on the evidence available at this stage to apply the presumption in Section 24 of PRECCA against him, because the evidence of gratification is uncorroborated hearsay.

1125. However, if the prosecution authorities were able to obtain admissible evidence of the gratification alleged by Mr Agrizzi to have been received by Dr De Wee, then there was, forthcoming from the documents referred to in the course of his oral testimony, evidence of his having acted in a manner that amounts to the illegal, dishonest, unauthorised, incomplete or biased exercise and carrying out of his powers, duties and functions arising out of a constitutional, statutory or contractual legal obligation. In plain language, there is some evidence of his possibly having provided a quid pro quo. This is so having regard inter alia to his having prima facie failed to alert the Bid Adjudication Committee to the two legal opinions, his involvement in the conclusion of a problematic contract with Bosasa or Sondolo IT that undermined its underlying tender process, and his involvement in continuing to transact with them after he had been confronted with their corruption by the relevant Parliamentary portfolio committee.

1126. In the circumstances, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case against Dr De Wee in respect of the offences in Sections 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA, and the matter is referred for further investigation accordingly.

1127. Insofar as Mr Nair is concerned, as pointed out above, there is no evidence that he acted upon the inducement provided to him. However, the question arises whether the presumption in Section 24 of PRECCA could nevertheless be applied to him to justify an investigation or prosecution.

1128. In that regard there is a reasonable basis for suspecting that Mr Nair accepted or agreed to accept gratification as contemplated in Section 24 (1) (a).

1129. With reference to Section 24 (1) (b) (i), there is a reasonable basis for suspecting that he received the gratification from a person, Sondolo IT, who holds a contract from a public body or institution, the DOJCD. However, Section 24 (1) (b) (i) has a further requirement that the person charged was serving as an official in the public body or institution – here the DOJCD. Does a magistrate serve as an official in the Department of Justice? As appears from the obiter remarks of Wallis JA in Reinecke, that is not a simple question, but it would appear that, notwithstanding the increased independence and severance from the public service brought about by the Magistrates Act No. 90 of 1993, magistrates remain employees of the DOJCD. It is not necessary for that determination to be made here. If referral for further investigation is appropriate, that aspect could be part of the investigation.

1130. That provides a sufficient statutory platform for the presumption to be engaged. It would then be incumbent upon the State in terms of the second part of Section 24(1) to "take reasonable steps" to see whether or not it is "able with reasonable certainty to link the acceptance of ... the gratification to any lawful authority or excuse on the part of the person charged." On the basis of the earlier analysis, the Commission was not able to find a lawful authority or excuse for the security installations for Mr Nair. If the State's steps give rise to a similar conclusion, then proof of receipt of the gratification (in the form of the security installations) in terms of paragraphs (a) and (b) of Section 24(1) becomes, in the absence of evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to the absence of lawful authority or excuse, proof of a quid pro quo on the basis set out in paragraphs (aa) to (dd) of Section 24(1).

1131. Section 25 of PRECCA is also of relevance in assessing the possible referral of the matter.

1132. In the circumstances, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case against Mr Nair in respect of the offence of corruption in terms of Section 3 of 8 of PRECCA, and the matter is referred for investigation accordingly.

1133. There is no need for the matter to be referred to the Magistrates Commission for investigation or any other steps as these are already underway. However, it is important that those responsible for the taking of any steps pursuant to this report draw the attention of the Magistrates Commission to its content insofar as it pertains to Mr Nair.

1134. Insofar as Mr Gingcana is concerned, there is also no evidence that he acted upon the inducement provided to him. However, the question arises whether the presumption in Section 24 of PRECCA could nevertheless be applied to him so as to justify an investigation or prosecution.

1135. In that regard there is a reasonable basis for suspecting that Mr Gingcana accepted or agreed to accept gratification as contemplated in Section 24(1)(a).

1136. With reference to Section 24 (1) (b) (i), there is a reasonable basis for suspecting that he received the gratification from an entity, Sondolo IT, who holds (or seeks to obtain) a contract from a public body or institution, PRASA. Section 24 (1) (b) (i) has a further requirement that the person charged was serving as an official in the public body or institution – here PRASA. Mr Gingcana was seconded as the acting Chief Procurement Officer of PRASA at the time.

1137. The presumption is thus engaged. It would then be incumbent upon the State in terms of the second part of Section 24 (1) to "take reasonable steps" to see whether or not it is "able with reasonable certainty to link the acceptance of ... the gratification to any lawful authority or excuse on the part of the person charged." Based on the earlier analysis, the Commission was not able to find a lawful authority or excuse for the security installations for Mr Gingcana. If the State's steps give rise to a similar conclusion, then proof of receipt of the gratification (in the form of the security installations) in terms of paragraphs (a) and (b) of Section 24 (1) becomes, in the absence of evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to the absence of lawful authority or excuse, proof of a quid pro quo on the basis set out in paragraphs (aa) to (dd) of Section 24 (1).

1138. Section 25 of PRECCA is also of relevance in assessing the possible referral of the matter.

1139. In the circumstances, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case against Mr Gingcana in respect of the offence of corruption in terms of Section 3 of PRECCA, and the matter is referred for investigation accordingly.

1140. Various office bearers in the categories contemplated by TOR 1.4 breached the Constitution, ethical codes and legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs and organs of state, in order to benefit Bosasa, its affiliates and individuals employed by or associated with it, the Watson family and the persons responsible for the facilitation.

1140.1 The evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption in terms of section 3 of PRECCA, ready with sections 4 to 16, against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution: Mr Linda Mti, Mr Patrick Gillingham, Mr Vincent Smith, Mr Mnikelwa Nxele, Ms Nontsikelelo Jolingana, Mr Josiah Maako, Ms Dikeledi Elizabeth Tshabalala.

1140.2 In addition, the following individuals from DCS must be further investigated: Kaslutho Maria Mabena; Shishi Matabella; Jeptha Mandla Mkabela; Dikeledi Tshabalala; Zach Modise; Mthokozeni Mollet Ngubo; and Winnie Ngwenya.

1141. Section 24 (1) of PRECCA creates a presumption facilitating the task of the state to prove that the gratification was received to achieve one or more of the aims as set out in the Act. These aims have also been characterised as the "quid pro quo". The presumption provides that, if it is proved that the gratification was accepted from another person who sought to obtain a contract, licence etc., it is presumed that the gratification was accepted in order to achieve one or more of the aims set out in the definition of the crime, provided:

1141.1 The State can show that despite having taken reasonable steps, it was not able with reasonable certainty to link the acceptance of the gratification to any lawful authority or excuse on the part of the person charged; and 1141.2 There is no evidence to the contrary which raises reasonable doubt.

1142. Based on our analysis above, there is sufficient evidence to establish that Mr Zuma, Ms Nomvula Mokonyane and Mr Makwetla (i) accepted gratification; (ii) from another person, i.e., Bosasa (or its directors or employees), which held and sought to obtain contracts with government.

1143. The same reasoning applies to the evidence against Ms Duduzile Myeni, who similarly (i) accepted gratification for herself and for the benefit of another, being the Jacob G Zuma Foundation, (ii) from another person, i.e., Bosasa or its directors or employees, who held and sought to obtain contracts with government.

1144. The state can likely show that, despite having taken reasonable steps, it was not able to link the acceptance of the gratification by Mr Zuma, Ms Nomvula Mokonyane, Ms Duduzile Myeni and Mr Makwetla to any lawful authority or excuse for receiving the gratification. This is because neither Mr Zuma, nor Ms Nomvula Mokonyane, Ms Duduzile Myeni nor Mr Makwetla provided evidence to the contrary to show a lawful authority or excuse for receiving the gratification, either at all or at a level that could give rise to a reasonable doubt.

1145. Section 24 (1) of PRECCA would, in the Commission's view, deem there to be sufficient evidence to establish that Mr Zuma, Ms Nomvula Mokonyane, Ms Duduzile Myeni and Mr Makwetla accepted the gratification from Bosasa and in doing so breached their Constitutional and legislative duties as well as ethical obligations in order to act in one or more of the "manners" in paragraphs (aa) to (dd) of the PRECCA, being the different statutorily recognised forms of quid pro quo.

1146. The matter is referred for further investigation of Mr Zuma (on the basis that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation with uncover a prima facie case), and for further investigation and prosecution of Ms Duduzile Myeni, Ms Nomvula Mokonyane and Mr Makwetla on charges of corruption in terms of Section 3 and/or 4 and/or 19 of PRECCA. Section 19 of PRECCA relates to interference in the investigation arising from the SIU Report.

1147. The evidence against Ms Duduzile Myeni is clearer in that she provided more than one quid pro quo in return for the gratifications provided to her by Bosasa and its directors or employees, as required by section 4 (1) (a) (i) of PRECCA. The identified quid pro quos included not only access to Mr Zuma but also providing Mr Agrizzi with confidential documents of the SAPS's Anti-Corruption Task Team relating to the progress of the police criminal investigation into corruption allegations against Bosasa.

1148. This evidence was corroborated with independent verification of the meeting at the Sheraton Hotel, its location, metadata of the photographs and nature of the documents. This was not challenged by Ms Duduzile Myeni in any meaningful way. On the evidence the conclusion is unavoidable that the only person who could have shown the document to Mr Agrizzi is Ms Duduzile Myeni. As to the purpose of being shown the document, there is a reasonable basis to conclude that this was to facilitate and assist in stopping the prosecution of Bosasa, its directors and employees. The matter is therefore referred for further investigation and prosecution of Ms Duduzile Myeni on charges of corruption and defeating the ends of justice or hindering or obstructing an investigation in terms of Section 19 of PRECCA.

1149. Messrs Vincent Smith, Linda Mti and Patrick Gillingham are facing pending charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud. The matter is nonetheless referred to the SAPS, the DPCI and Investigating Directorate, to ascertain whether those charges cover all instances of corruption revealed in the evidence before the Commission and, if not, for the charges to be expanded accordingly.

1150. The evidence establishes that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of corruption against the following persons in terms of Sections 3 and/or 4 and/or 7 and/or 12 and/or 13 of PRECCA, and the matter is accordingly referred to the SAPS, DPCI and Investigating Directorate for this purpose:

1150.1 Mr Norman Thobane and Ms Mamsi Nyambuse (DOJCD)

1150.2 M.S. Netshishivhe (Mpumalanga Department of Health)

1150.3 Mr Cedrick Frolick (MP); and

1150.4 Ms Lindile Mathshediso Kgasi and Ms Matshadisa Cordelia Mogale (North West DSD).

1151. Where any of the persons mentioned in the preceding paragraph did not receive Rule 3.3 notices, this must not be taken as a finding against them by the Commission.

TOR 1.5

1152. There was substantial corruption in the awarding of tenders and contracts to Bosasa by ACSA and SAPO. The corruption took the form of Bosasa through its directors and employees providing gratification in the form of cash payments to employees of ACSA and SAPO in exchange for the unlawful award of security contracts to Bosasa.

1153. In this regard, the evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

1153.1 Messrs Thele Lesetsa Moema, Reuben Pillay, and Mohapi Johannes Serobe (employees or former employees of ACSA); and 1153.2 Messrs Siviwe Luthando Bongani Mapisa and Maanda Benjamin Manyatshe (employees or former employees of SAPO).

1154. The evidence also establishes that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of corruption against the following persons for the facilitation of the unlawful award of a contract or tender and the matter is referred for this purpose: Ms Bongi Mpungose, Mr Jason Tshabalala, Mr Siza Thanda and Mr Mohammed Bashir (all employees of ACSA).

1155. Save in respect of Mr Siza Thanda, these individuals did not receive Rule 3.3 notices and this should not be taken as a finding against them.

1156. There was massive corruption in the awarding of tenders and contracts to Bosasa and its affiliates by government departments, agencies and entities. The corruption took the form of Bosasa through its directors and employees providing gratification in the form of cash payments and other material benefits to State office bearers as contemplated in TOR 1.9, in exchange for the unlawful award of tenders and contracts to Bosasa and its affiliates.

1157. The referrals pursuant to TOR 1.9 are all covered by TOR 1.1 and 1.4.

Instances not covered by TORs 1.1, 1.4, 1.5 and 1.9

1158. The evidence reveals unlawful activities not directly covered by the TORs detailed above. Those instances are detailed below and where appropriate, are referred for prosecution, further investigation or the convening of a separate enquiry to the appropriate body regarding the conduct of certain persons as contemplated in TOR 7.

1159. There is also a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of corruption against the following persons:

1159.1 Mr Simon Mofokeng, former General Secretary of CEPPWAWU for the acceptance of grocery items monthly to the value of R12,000 to R15,000 (for the offence of corrupt activities relating to the procuring and withdrawal of tenders in terms of section 13 of PRECCA); and 1159.2 Mr Sydney Mantata, who purchased and delivered the grocery items to Mr Mofokeng.

1160. Mr Agrizzi's evidence about the alleged participation of Adv Jiba, Adv Mrwebi and Ms Lepinka is hearsay. Adv Mrwebi did not dispute the allegations against him, but they remain hearsay. Adv Jiba resolved not to persist with her Rule 3.3 and 3.4 application and Ms Lepinka filed an affidavit in which she denied having received any money from Bosasa. However, it remains probable that some form of inducement or gain was paid to a person or persons in the NPA for Bosasa to have been able to gain possession of confidential documentation which they were not lawfully entitled to have in their possession. This matter is referred for further investigation on the basis that such investigation may uncover a prima facie case.

1161. There was evidence suggesting that Adv Simelane may wrongfully have assisted in closing the investigation into Bosasa. Adv Simelane was not issued with a Rule 3.3 notice. It is therefore important to note that no finding may in these circumstances be made against him. There is, however, a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case. The matter is accordingly referred for further investigation.

1162. There was evidence to suggest that several persons were involved in:

1162.1 The destruction of electronic data and files, as well as computer hardware, and documentation to prevent this evidence being seized by the SIU

1162.2 The destruction of computers and invoicing books from Blake's Travel

1162.3 The destruction of files through the faked server crash

1162.4 The deletion of files due to the SIU investigation

1162.5 The intimidation of potential witnesses.

1163. The persons implicated in this conduct were the following: Mr Angelo Agrizzi, Mr Johannes Andries van Tonder, Mr Leon van Tonder, Mr Matthew Robert Leeson (referred to by Mr Agrizzi as Max Leeson), Mr William Brander, and Mr Brian Blake.

1164. Mr Brian Blake disputes that computers were removed from Blake's Travel, destroyed and later replaced. Mr Blake's version is improbable considering the corroborating evidence of Messrs Agrizzi, van Tonder and van der Bank. This is particularly the case as Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder implicate themselves in criminal activity, to their own detriment. It is unlikely that they would lie to prejudice themselves. Matthew Leeson and William Brander failed to respond to Rule 3.3 notices issued by the Commission in February and March 2019, respectively and the evidence against them is undisputed.

1165. Accordingly, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the above conduct occurred and that the persons implicated are guilty of defeating or obstructing the course of justice; the intentional interference with, hindering or obstruction of the investigation of an offence in terms of section 19 of PRECCA; unacceptable conduct relating to a witness, to coerce a person to testify in an untruthful manner or to withhold information in terms of section 18 of PRECCA; and/or fraud.

1166. There is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case. These matters are accordingly referred for further investigation or prosecution.

1167. Having regard to the evidence pertaining to them, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation by the relevant professional bodies will reveal a prima facie case of professional misconduct on the part of the following persons or firms:

1167.2 Mr Petrus Venter, through an investigation by the SAIT

1167.3 The various attorneys whose trust accounts were used by Bosasa to make various unlawful payments, through an investigation by the LPC; and 1167.4 D'Arcy-Herrman, through an investigation by the Independent Regulatory Board for Auditors (IRBA).

1168. The Commission report must be made available to SARS so that it may exercise its investigative powers derived from the provisions of the Tax Administration Act to determine whether any tax offences were committed by Bosasa or its associates. In particular, the following issues are referred to SARS for further investigation:

1168.1 Whether Mr Papadakis breached his obligations in terms of the Tax Administration Act as a former official of SARS

1168.2 The failure to disclose income and false invoicing deriving from the various cash accumulation mechanisms developed and used by Bosasa, including the cost of benefits provided to various individuals and State functionaries through the "Special Projects Team" as operational costs to be deducted from income in Bosasa's tax returns

1168.3 The deduction of the invoices issued by Mr Mansell for "work" done as expenses

1168.4 Bosasa's utilisation of SeaArk's assessed loss, the existence of the assessed loss in BSCM and Bosasa Operations and the equipment write-offs; and

1168.5 Phezulu Fencing in respect of receipts being hidden under contingent liabilities in the balance sheet instead of the income statement to avoid paying tax of R10.3m.

CONCLUSION

1169. The foregoing evidence pertaining to Bosasa demonstrates vividly that its leadership, employees and associates were able to gain illicit control over the procurement processes of the DCS, other government departments and Organs of State, through the systemic and aggressive targeting of public officials with offers of gratification in the form of bribes and a range of other material benefits. As part of its strategy, it sought out officials across the different levels and Organs of the State, ranging from President Jacob Zuma at one end of the spectrum, to municipal officials and SOEs at the other end of the spectrum. Within that range it sought to identify individuals that wielded the greatest influence within the ruling party.

1170. Bosasa also set up a system whereby the gratification could be provided on an ongoing basis through the regular payment to numerous officials within a department or entity of cash bribes. This had the effect of sustaining the influence in a way that maintained an advantage in fresh tender and contract extension processes. It sought to eliminate the risk of whistleblowing. And it ensured the early provision of confidential information that would enable it to have an advantage in any tender process. It also targeted the investigative and prosecution processes, so that where its conduct came to the knowledge of the authorities, it would be able to snuff out the progression of any investigation or prosecution.

1171. A disturbing component of Bosasa's corrupt activities was its provision and operation of sophisticated war rooms to assist the ANC in the running of elections. This was clearly aimed at assisting the ANC in retaining its position as the majority party. The reason that it is a matter of grave concern is that it goes to the heart of the democratic process.

1172. The corruption-based business model developed by Bosasa also involved drawing in the entire leadership of Bosasa along with a wide number of senior and junior employees and influential associates and professional consultants of the company. That too eliminated or at least very substantially reduced the risk of whistleblowing.

1173. A tragic component of the system of corruption-based business developed by Bosasa, and in particular the late Mr Gavin Watson and Mr Agrizzi, is that they traded on the Watson family's "struggle credentials". There can be no doubt that the Watson family were a beacon of hope during the apartheid era. They bravely crossed the racial divide to play non-racial sport in a society aggressively focused on building impenetrable and oppressive legislative, social and economic barriers between the race groups in every walk of life. For their stance, the Watson family gained justifiable admiration.

1174. Sadly, however, it has become clear from the evidence herein, that the late Mr Gavin Watson perceived the potential for illicit economic gain to be derived from the influence the family had come to wield in the post-apartheid era. The evidence of Mr Vincent Smith is revealing in this regard. It demonstrated how a relationship forged in the struggle for democracy, could be manipulated and transformed into an instrument for corrupt gain. The influence derived from the family's role in the struggle also meant that they enjoyed a competitive advantage in knowing who within the ruling party wielded the greatest levels of influence and where optimal opportunities for gain were to be found.

1175. The answer to the first question as to whether State Capture ever existed, as far as the Bosasa evidence is concerned, is an unequivocal yes.

1176. As regards the second question as to whether State Capture still exists in South Africa, the Bosasa group of companies has been liquidated and is no longer operational. Prosecutions have commenced against several of the leaders and other employees involved. Mr Gavin Watson died tragically in an accident. Mr Agrizzi has cast his lot with the Commission and faces prosecution. All this will no doubt have impacted dramatically in eliminating much of the corrupt economic activity that was previously underway. However, it is unlikely that all the corrupt networks that supported the Bosasa empire have ground to a halt. Corruption skills and tactics will have been developed and are likely to be deployed again by some in the future. Many of the players will not have forgotten the influence that they are able to wield and the benefits that they can enjoy because of exerting that influence.

1177. That brings one to the third question as to the means of eradication of State Capture. Focusing on those that formed part of the criminal network associated with Bosasa, the only way of addressing this is through the widest possible investigations and prosecution of those involved. It is clear that a massive upscaling of the human and financial resources of the investigating and prosecuting authorities will be required to achieve this.

1178. However, the Bosasa evidence also provides a case study for considering interventions at the legislative, policy and governance levels aimed at addressing the phenomenon of corruption. The Commission's comprehensive recommendations in this regard must await the completion of the reports in respect of all its different work streams. Nevertheless, it is appropriate to make preliminary recommendations based on the Bosasa evidence. These include:

    1178.1 The draft National Implementation Framework towards the Professionalisation of the Public Service published by the National School of Government on 8 December 2020 presents a helpful start. It Advs for a responsive, meritocratic and professional public administration in the service of the people and is a step in the right direction in addressing corruption in the public service. It is imperative that this document is acted on and implemented with all due urgency. The Minister for the Public Service and Administration and the National School of Government ("NSG") should seriously consider the various contributions and recommendations made by stakeholders and interested parties in the finalisation of the national implementation framework. Specifically, the Minister and NSG should further develop the identified issues that the framework does not adequately address in consultation with stakeholders.

    1178.2 It is essential that every member of the national or a provincial legislature, every councillor in a municipality elected for the first time, and every manager in any government department, Organ of State or SOE appointed for the first time must within the first year after election or appointment, complete an accredited course in ethical governance and procurement law (accredited either by the Public Service Commission, the National School of Government or other relevant accreditation body). This should become a legislated requirement, with the penalty that failure to complete such a course will result automatically in the election or appointment to the position falling away as a matter of law. However, there is no need to await legislation to commence implementation.

1178.3 Appropriate refresher training at regular intervals, like continuing professional education in other professions, should also be legislatively provided for, with appropriate sanctions where the training is not completed.

1178.4 Regular integrity and competency tests must be implemented across the public service (like the regular integrity testing practice of the Asset Forfeiture Unit in the NPA) and this requirement must be supported by the introduction of legislation that makes the testing obligatory and provides the necessary legislative underpinning for it.

1179. Legislation must be introduced that prohibits any political party from operating a policy or system of deployment to any positions, managerial or otherwise, in government departments, organs of state or SOEs. The Bosasa evidence demonstrates that the system of deployment by a governing party creates targets for influence peddling and undermines the appointment of appropriately qualified personnel with values that arm them to resist corrupt approaches. The guiding criteria for appointments in these sectors should be confined to competence, a demonstrable commitment to excellence, an employment record that reflects unblemished integrity and the transformation of these sectors.

1180. As regards Bosasa's corrupt influence in respect of the electoral process in providing the election war rooms to the ANC, this may be addressed through the implementation of the Political Party Funding Act 6 of 2018 that came into effect on 1 April 2021. This Act regulates private and public funding of political parties and now makes it possible to know the sources of funding of political parties. The potential effect of this legislation would be to strengthen public confidence in South Africa's democratic political processes and improve transparency in relation to funding of political parties. The legislation should, however, be scrutinised to ensure that it would not allow the provision of facilities like the election war rooms to political parties by private parties benefitting from state contracts.

THE NATIONAL TREASURY

INTRODUCTION

1. This part of the report deals with the various attempts that were made by President Zuma, Minister Joemat Pettersson and Ms Dudu Myeni, the then Chairperson of the Board of South African Airways (SAA), to get the National Treasury to approve certain transactions that were not in the interests of the country or that were not financially affordable for the country or that might not have been objectionable in principle but were rendered objectionable by reason of certain terms and conditions to which the National Treasury was urged to agree.

2. The National Treasury, under, initially, Minister Pravin Gordhan as Minister of Finance from May 2009 to May 2014, under Minister Nhlanhla Nene as Minister of Finance from May 2014 to 9 December 2015 and, once again, under Minister Gordhan as Minister of Finance in his second term from 13 December 2015 to 31 March 2017 put up great resistance to repeated attempts by President Zuma, Ms Dudu Myeni and others to get them to engage in wrongdoing concerning various transactions.

3. The important features of the attempts to capture the National Treasury were:

   3.1 The offer of the position of Minister of Finance and money to Deputy Minister Mcebisi Jonas by the Guptas in return for him working with them

   3.2 The dismissal of Minister Nene as Minister of Finance on 9 December 2015

   3.3 The appointment of Mr Des Van Rooyen as Minister of Finance on 9 December 2015 to replace Mr Nene

3.4 The appointment by Mr Des Van Rooyen of advisors linked to the Guptas or their associates

3.5 The transfer of Mr Des Van Rooyen to the Ministry of Co-operative Governance and Traditional Affairs and the re-appointment of Minister Gordhan as Minister of Finance

3.6 The harassment of Minister Gordhan by the Hawks during his second term as Minister of Finance; and

3.7 The dismissal of Minister Gordhan and Deputy Minister Jonas on 31 March 2017 and Mr Gordhan's replacement by Mr Malusi Gigaba.

4. The transactions in respect of which Minister Gordhan and Minister Nene showed their resistance to wrongdoing were, collectively, the following:

4.1 The Nuclear Deal

4.2 the Airbus transaction at SAA

4.3 The Khartoum Route for SAA

4.4 The Petro SA transaction; and

4.5 The Denel Asia Venture.

MR FUZILE'S EVIDENCE

5. During at least part of the period of the attempts to capture the National Treasury, the Director-General of National Treasury was Mr Lungisa Fuzile. As Mr Fuzile's evidence was undisputed except in the respects in which it was disputed by Mr Des Van Rooyen, it is convenient to let Mr Fuzile tell the story through his statement submitted to the Commission which he confirmed under oath to be true and correct.

6. In his statement to the Commission, Mr Fuzile stated that, as the former DG of the National Treasury, "I have knowledge of projects and events, discussions and decisions that occurred during my tenure that have implications for the country or that impacted certain persons in consequential ways."

7. During his tenure as DG at the National Treasury, he witnessed the growing dissatisfaction by President Zuma with the National Treasury – in particular Minister Gordhan and Minister Nene. There were several issues that were central to this dissatisfaction. All of these issues either involved significant spending by the government or would place the fiscal and financial integrity of the government at risk. When these events are viewed together, they build a picture of how:

8. The Ministry of Finance and the Treasury became a stumbling block to the erosion (corruption) of due process in policy and decision making in the state:

8.1 The Ministry of Finance and Treasury (sometimes with support from some members of Cabinet and officials in relevant departments) played a role in stopping or delaying some of the (poor or bad) decisions that would have had dire consequences for South Africa, fiscally and otherwise, including by elevating the debt burden on future generations; and

8.2 In selected cases, processes of making decisions of government were changed or manipulated deliberately to get specific outcomes or decisions which were not in the national interest or the interest of the institutions concerned (in the case of SOEs). Had some of the decisions been taken and executed the country would most likely have been bankrupt at some point in the future.

The Role of the National Treasury

9. The Constitution sets out the role of the National Treasury in driving the budget process, procurement, borrowing, treasury norms and standards, the management of the National Revenue Fund, the division of revenue between the three spheres of government and overseeing financial management in all three spheres of government, including state-owned and public entities.

10. Whilst it is expected to provide objective and critical assessment of government proposals, and assess for any fiscal or long-term sustainability impact, it defers to the policies adopted by Cabinet, where such policies are legal.

11. Of direct relevance is section 217 of the Constitution which directs that organs of state must contract for goods and services ". . .in accordance with a system which is fair, equitable and transparent, competitive and cost-effective."

12. The Public Finance Management Act, 1999 (PFMA) is the law that sets out legal requirements on matters such as government guarantees and procurement. both of which are relevant to this submission.

13. The effect of the legislative framework that governs National Treasury is that it is required to oversee financial matters and fiscal sustainability of all organs of state to ensure that they comply with all relevant prescripts.

The budget process

14. According to Mr Fuzile, potentially the most important function of the Treasury is to produce an annual budget and to ensure that government always has money to deliver on its promises.

15. Over the years, concerted and deliberate effort went into developing mechanisms for ensuring alignment of the budget to the priorities as set by government as well as to ensure the necessary buy-in and ownership of this very important process.

16. Mr Fuzile indicated in his statement that there were problems unique to President Zuma's administration. What was unique was that:

    16.1 President Zuma's era was characterised by protracted constrained economic growth and poor revenue performance.

    16.2 The period was largely characterised by an unwillingness to face up to the realty that budgeting is about making hard choices. Treasury was repeatedly expected to just find the money to fund more and more new programmes. It became harder and harder to add new programmes without stopping others, and this caused resentment towards Treasury.

    16.3 What was largely a macroeconomic problem affecting the country was conveniently made out to be the fault of a few individuals, particularly the Treasury and those who served in it.

    16.4 Masked by the rhetoric of promoting transformation was an insidious objective of repurposing of the state to enable rent seeking.

Attempts to move the budget to the Presidency

17. Mr Fuzile indicated in the statement to the Commission that, in the second half of 2015, he began to hear rumours that President Zuma was very unhappy with the budget process and the budget, and that the budget process was not giving expression to the National Development Plan (NDP). In November 2015, he met Mr Khulekani Mathe who was working at the National Planning Commission (NPC) at the time. He told Mr Fuzile about discussions that had taken place at the Presidency and in the NPC about the budget process. In summary, it emerged that:

    17.1 There was wide sharing of sensitive budget documents with persons "outside" government and not involved in the budget process.

    17.2 The Minister of Finance's permission was never sought before sharing his department's information beyond the members of the Ministers' Committee on the Budget (MinComBud).

    17.3 These documents which were intended for MinComBud were inappropriately used to show misalignment between the budget and the NDP.

18. According to Mr Fuzile, in his statement to the Commission, Mr Mathe said that in the discussions that had taken place where President Zuma was involved, he had suggested that the Treasury was failing to align the budget to the NDP. Mr Mathe said the President asked the NPC to present him with evidence that confirmed that Treasury was failing him. Apparently, he used the metaphor that he "will shake the tree, if it fall, so be it".

Nuclear procurement

19. Mr Fuzile included a discussion of events around nuclear procurement in his statement to the Commission. Around September 2014, he received a call from the then DG of Energy, Ms Nelisiwe Magubane, asking for his advice on how to handle a part of a draft agreement between South Africa and Russia relating to nuclear cooperation that included proposed tax exemptions for the nuclear programme. Mr Fuzile's response to her was in two parts:

    19.1 First, Mr Fuzile gave her a preliminary view, namely that as a country South Africa did not like giving such exemptions as they compromise the integrity of the tax system.

    19.2 Second, Mr Fuzile expressed misgivings about the extent to which the process that was being followed was compliant with relevant South African legal prescripts and regulations of which Treasury is the custodian.

20. Having raised these concerns, Mr Fuzile asked that Ms Magubane to send a formal request for the advice or approval sought. Around 21 August 2013, the Department of Energy officials shared the draft agreement with officials at the National Treasury in order to get their inputs, specifically on the proposed tax exemption. However, when the detail of the agreement was reviewed, the National Treasury's concerns extended far beyond just this matter. Consequently, Mr Fuzile sent a detailed letter to Ms Magubane 13 October 2013 setting out all the issues, which included highlighting the requirement that the Department of Energy must adhere to the provisions of the Constitution, PFMA, Treasury Regulations, PPPFA, Broad Based Black Economic Empowerment (BBBEE) Act and Electricity Regulation Act when undertaking any procurement. Moreover, the importance of ensuring a proper public consultation process was underlined.

21. According to Mr Fuzile, from records that later emerged, it appears that the Minister of Energy went on to conclude the agreement with Russia despite the serious concerns raised.

The meeting with the President and the advisor

22. Mr Fuzile's then refers to events related to a meeting with the President. According to Mr Fuzile, one Friday during the second half of 2013 he received a call from Mr Dondo Mogajane. who was Mr Gordhan's Chief of Staff at the time, or Mr Gordhan to go to the then President's residence. Mr Gordhan and Mr Fuzile arrived at about the same time, as did Mr Senti Thobejane, who later introduced himself as advisor to the Minister of Energy and the President on energy matters. Mr Gordhan started to ask Mr Thobejane whether he knew why they were all there. The latter explained that he thought it was about nuclear procurement. That led to a conversation on the subject. The essence of that discussion was about:

    22.1 The fact that SA had technical capacity to operate nuclear reactors as reflected in the good record of Koeberg.

    22.2 The appropriateness of nuclear as a technology for SA in light of our country's rich endowment with uranium.

    22.3 The new generation nuclear reactors, and which country is the world leader in that kind of technology.

23. Mr Thobejane also explained the approach to procurement that was being contemplated by the Department of Energy which would entail a two stage process: 1. Stage one would be about deciding which countries would compete to supply reactors and that South Africa would sign bilateral agreements with those countries; and 2. Stage two would entail the evaluation of competing bids from the countries selected in the first stage.

24. According to Mr Fuzile he and Mr Gordhan had some reservations about the procurement approach that was contemplated and they signalled these concerns and the need to be meticulous in designing the process for procuring something as big as nuclear reactors.

25. When the President arrived, Mr Gordhan advised him that they had been there for some time and had discussed aspects of nuclear technology. The President retorted that he had wanted just that because the process had to move forward with urgency. Mr Gordhan then went on to make the following points:

    25.1 That if SA were to proceed with nuclear it would have to follow every rule in the book: Section 217 of the Constitution and all relevant laws and regulations governing procurement. He went on to caution that failure to follow due process would "... turn the arms deal problems into a Sunday school picnic"; and

    25.2 That Mr Thobejane and Mr Fuzile should exchange numbers so that they – and other relevant officials from Treasury and the Department of Energy – could meet soon to go through the nuclear procurement process in detail.

The Technical Task Team on Nuclear Procurement and the meeting of 8 December 2015

26. Mr Fuzile's statement then referred to the events following the establishment of a National Nuclear Energy Executive Coordinating Committee (NNEECC) in November 2011. The NNEECC was initially chaired by Deputy President Motlanthe. Later the Committee was converted into a sub-committee of Cabinet and President Zuma took over the chairing of the reconstituted Committee.

27. The NNEECC was supported by the Nuclear Energy Technical Committee (NETC). The technical committee had sub-committees whose composition depended on the work they were assigned and the relevance of this work to each department. National Treasury chaired a committee that dealt with finance and procurement matters, which had the Department of Public Enterprises (DPE) as the Deputy Chair. The Constitution and the PFMA together with its regulations prescribe a central role for National Treasury in these areas.

28. In December 2013, the Department of Energy submitted a draft feasibility study for the nuclear programme to the National Treasury for review. Following a review by the responsible officials, they informed Mr Fuzile that this did not constitute a proper, fully-fledged feasibility study, which still needed to be undertaken, and that amongst other aspects, the procurement strategy still needed to be clarified.

29. In June 2015, the Department of Energy presented Cabinet with a proposal to procure 9.6GW of nuclear energy. Given Eskom's inability to fund the programme, it was proposed that the South African Nuclear Energy Corporation (NECSA) replace Eskom as the implementing agent and the Department of Energy take responsibility for the procurement. Cabinet approved that NECSA become the implementing agent.

30. Although National Treasury was aware that nuclear procurement was being contemplated by government, it had not had prior sight of the memorandum on nuclear procurement. So, there had been no detailed work done by Treasury to estimate the affordability of the project and how it would be funded. This is in spite of the stipulated requirement that all Cabinet memoranda must have a section titled "Financial Implications". Under this heading Cabinet memoranda ought to state the cost of implementing what they are proposing and how the cost would be financed.

31. Consequently, Cabinet required that the Department of Energy and Treasury should undertake detailed work to estimate the cost of 9.6GW nuclear build, assess whether South Africa could afford it and how it could be funded.

32. Around mid-July 2015, Minister Nene returned from Ufa, Russia. and gave Mr Fuzile a report of what had transpired there between him, his colleague Ministers and President Zuma. It became clear that National Treasury needed to detail their concerns regarding the financial and fiscal feasibility of the nuclear programme more clearly.

33. Accordingly, Mr Fuzile asked Mr Dondo Mogajane (who headed the Public Finance Division which deals with the allocation of funding among national departments) to be the lead person for the discussion and Mr Michael Sachs (who headed the Budget Office which is responsible for settling the overall fiscal framework) to support him.

34. In September 2105, the technical team prepared a presentation to put before the two Ministers and to take to the sub-committee and ultimately Cabinet. The key aspects were the following:

    34.1 Given the very high upfront cost of nuclear (estimated to be between R576 billion to R1 trillion), the weak fiscal position of government, it was abundantly clear that SA could not afford 9.6GW worth of nuclear reactors at one go.

    34.2 If South Africa were going to go ahead with nuclear, National Treasury should instead recommend a phased approach to procurement whereby only 2.4GW would be procured in the first phase and that no public commitment should be made to procure 9.6GW because such a public pronouncement could be misconstrued to suggest that the country was about to buy something it could not afford.

    34.3 That construction should only begin once the fiscal position of the sovereign showed improvement, through the stabilisation of the national debt.

    34.4 That Cabinet needed to decide which entity would be the procurer and operator of the nuclear reactors.

    34.5 That a detailed procurement process/approach that was consistent with the Constitution and all relevant laws and regulations should be agreed upon upfront and all relevant documentation developed.

    34.6 The team also identified a number of risks that could hamper nuclear procurement.

35. While the Department of Energy colleagues had started the negotiations firmly believing that SA should make an upfront commitment to procure 9.6GW, in the end, National Treasury believed that they had come to accept the logic of Treasury's recommendation.

36. From that point onwards, things went quiet on nuclear for about two and half months until December 2015. On Monday 7 December 2015 Mr Nene, Mr Mogajane, Mr Sachs and Mr Fuzile went to brief President Zuma on national departmental allocations for the 2016 MTEF. The budget did not make any provision for nuclear build except for an allocation of R200 million to fund the technical work that was necessary to prepare for nuclear procurement.

37. A meeting of the Energy Security Cabinet Sub-committee that was chaired by President Zuma was scheduled to take place in the afternoon of 8 December 2015 at the President's official residence in Pretoria. The Department of Energy led with a presentation of what they claimed to be a joint Energy and Treasury recommendation to the meeting. This was not true. According to Mr Fuzile.

38. After the Department of Energy had finished the presentation, Mr Nene pointed out that the assumptions in relation to the exchange rate were very optimistic. It was presented as R10.00 to the dollar when in fact the exchange rate at the time was R14.57 to the dollar. He also pointed out that the concerns expressed by Treasury had not been included in the presentation. He then looked to Mr Fuzile to provide further input.

39. Mr Fuzile indicated that National Treasury's job was to advise, and members of the executive have the authority to decide. They can take the advice, modify it or ignore it. Before Mr Fuzile could say anything further. the Ministers across the table lamented that he was wasting the time of the meeting and that a decision had already been made.

40. President Zuma directed that Mr Fuzile should be allowed to respond to the questions Cabinet had previously asked. Mr Fuzile summarised his comments as follows:

    40.1 He pointed out that National Treasury was disappointed that what was presented by the Department of Energy was not exactly what they had discussed and agreed.

    40.2 In particular, he highlighted the following discrepancies:

        40.2.1 First, the modelling National Treasury had done led them to the firm conclusion that SA could not afford 9.6GW

        40.2.2 Second, while the cost could not be known with absolute certainty before financial close (that is, before a contract had been signed with a supplier), Mr Fuzile pointed out that the presentation had grossly understated the cost of nuclear by about 40%

        40.2.3 Third, informed by the above considerations, National Treasury had proposed that nuclear procurement should be undertaken in a phased manner, only committing to 2.4GW at a time; and 40.2.4 Fourth, National Treasury had recommendations about how procurement would best be run to mitigate the risk of litigation.

41. At that point the President turned toward Mr Fuzile and commented inter alia that "in other countries of the world Finance Ministers don't tell the President that there is no money. Their job is to find the money, so that what has been decided can be implemented, but alas this was not the approach of Finance Ministers in South Africa".

42. The meeting resolved to take the recommendation of the 9.6GW as presented by the Department of Energy to Cabinet the following day.

After the removal of Minister Nene

43. Mr Fuzile's statement to the Commission then deal with events after the removal of Minister Nene. During the course of 2015 a number of engagements took place with the Department of Energy (DOE) regarding the process for procuring the nuclear programme, which culminated in the Chief Procurement Officer (CPO) writing to the DOE setting out National Treasury's view on the proposed approach.

44. The DOE intended to undertake a government-to-government procurement via a two-stage approach: prequalification of bidders followed by a competitive closed bidding process. This implies that competition would be among the pre-selected bidders. According to the DOE, the prequalification was being done through vender parade workshops and the signing of intergovernmental agreements.

45. However, this approach was not in line with the principles of Section 217 of the Constitution, which requires a state institution to procure goods or services using a system that is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive, and cost-effective.

46. During 2016, a number of engagements took place between the DoE, the National Treasury and the CPO's office. In addition, two legal opinions were obtained. After initial resistance from the DoE, the Department shifted its approach towards an open competitive bidding process. Nevertheless, there were still concerns raised, which had not been addressed. These were:

    46.1 The legal competency and basis for the DOE to carry out the procurement on behalf of other SOEs that were to be implementing agents was not properly established.

    46.2 The DOE's procurement strategy lacked specificity around the requirement of localisation.

47. Using the funding that had been allocated in the 2015 MTBPS, the DOE had appointed advisors to assist them in developing a Request for Proposals (RFP). Although the advisors as well as National Treasury highlighted numerous gaps and weaknesses in the RFP documentation that the DOE had developed, it appeared determined to proceed regardless.

48. The engagements with the DOE came to an end, when in November 2016, Cabinet approved that Eskom be the owner, operator and procurer of nuclear energy. Shortly afterwards, the DOE gazetted a Section 34(1) determination providing for the procurement of 9.6GW of nuclear power by Eskom. Eskom indicated that they intended to issue the RFP. This was stymied by the legal challenge launched by Earthlife Africa, on which the courts eventually ruled in their favour, setting aside the determinations and intergovernmental agreements which had been entered into, as they were found to be unlawful and unconstitutional.

49. Mr Fuzile made the following conclusions with regard to the nuclear procurement process in his statement to Cabinet:

    49.1 It was the biggest ever financial commitment that the SA government was about to make, with an estimated cost of around R1 trillion. Yet there was a rush to sign the contract with the potential supplier even before SA had determined how to pay for it. Had it proceeded, nuclear would have led to excessive increases in electricity process for all users and would have further elevated the cost structure of the SA economy and eroded the competiveness of SA firms.

    49.2 The process had serious flaws which risked causing several government institutions and persons working for it to make an irrational and illegal decision with very serious consequences for their reputations.

    49.3 Even when there was a genuine effort to follow proper and due process, deliberate derailment and manipulation of the process was brought to bear.

    49.4 National Treasury's efforts were in vain, and the nuclear programme was adopted the next day at the last Cabinet meeting of the year. Coincidentally it was also the day that Mr Nene was fired.

The Engen-PetroSA deal

50. Mr Fuzile's statement then turned to the Engen-Petro SA deal. From about 2012, the Department of Energy had been exploring the possibility of having PetroSA acquire a substantial share or 100% of Engen. The rationale was that this would be in the strategic interest of SA. Engen was owned by a Malaysian company called Petronas.

51. As some of the correspondence between the Ministers of Finance and Energy show, this potential transaction had been a subject of discussion during a visit by former President Zuma to Malaysia during 2013. The processes pertaining to the transaction appear to have gathered some momentum following that visit.

52. During the first quarter of 2014, National Treasury received an application for a guarantee amounting to R13.4 billion from the Department of Energy to enable PetroSA to raise money to pay for an acquisition of 100% of the shares in Engen. The structure of the transactions was as follows:

    52.1 PetroSA was to acquire 100% of the Engen shares for a total enterprise value of R18.67 billion

    52.2 Petronas had accepted PetroSA's offer subject to a letter of guarantee being provided for 100% of the offer price and a fully committed funding plan being in place prior to executive definitive transaction agreements by 31 March 2014. This date was later extended to 18 April 2014

    52.3 A government guarantee of R13.42 billion was requested to cover the full purchase consideration, less PetroSA's equity contribution. It was envisaged that this guarantee would step down as the funding was secured. Should the envisaged funding not be secured, Government would remain liable for the shortfall. This would allow PetroSA to fulfil the condition set by Petronas

    52.4 PetroSA had identified SONANGOL as a potential equity partner which would acquire a 49% shareholding in a joint venture company that would hold 100% of the shares in Engen. The amount that SONANGOL was to contribute would be determined after a due diligence had been completed; and 52.5 At the time PetroSA had not yet secured any of the funding.

53. According to Mr Fuzile, some of the concerning matters about the proposed acquisition were that:

    53.1 PetroSA's balance sheet was relatively small with revenue stream neither buoyant not large enough to enable it to pay for Engen.

    53.2 From the correspondence received there was no evidence that a due diligence exercise had been done to allow PetroSA to ascertain the status of the business they were about to acquire.

    53.3 There had been a significant increase in the offers made by PetroSA to acquire the business from R17.38 billion to R18.67 billion, which was not economically justifiable. None of these offers was underpinned by a robust valuation based on a due diligence process.

    53.4 There was no support for PetroSA's ambitions to become a National Oil Company in the National Development Plan (NDP) or the Industrial Policy Action Plan.

    53.5 PetroSA asserted that there was a risk that the independent oil companies would divest from the market thereby creating a need for government to invest in order to ensure security of supply. However, the retail market was well serviced by existing, privately owned petroleum companies and there was little indication that they intended to divest.

54. On 31 March 2014, several officials of National Treasury and the Minister Gordhan joined colleagues from SARS to prepare for the press conference on the revenue collected for the financial year ending that day.

55. Minister Gordhan called Mr Fuzile aside and advised him that he had had a telephone conversation with former President Zuma about the Engen-PetroSA transaction. Mr Zuma was enquiring about the progress with the guarantee application lodged by Minister Martins. They repeated National Treasury's views about the transaction: that it would not be judicious to proceed with in the face of the risks National Treasury had identified.

56. A delegation comprising representatives from the CEF and PetroSA, including Mr Senti Thobejane, advisor to Minister Martins, Mr Tseliso Maqubela, the responsible DDG at the Department of Energy, Mr Sizwe Mncwango, the CEO of CEF and Ms Nosizwe Nokwe-Macamo, the CEO of PetroSA, met National Treasury on 7 April 2014 to explain the rationale for the deal and how it would be funded. The Treasury was represented at the meeting by Mr Thuto Shomang, who was the DDG responsible for Asset and Liability Management, Ms Avril Halstead who was responsible for overseeing the SOEs among others, and Mr Fuzile.

57. Some of the documentation that the delegation led by the Department of Energy brought included:

    57.1 Several letters mainly from international banks that were signalling willingness to fund the transaction subject to certain conditions. Contrary to the delegation's assertions, these did not construe an irrevocable commitment to fund the transaction.

    57.2 A letter from SONANGOL of Angola confirming that it would buy the 49% share as described above, subject to a due diligence being done.

58. With all of the above, National Treasury was not convinced that the deal was workable. It appeared extremely risky, and they communicated the same to Minister Gordhan.

59. Subsequent to that, several meetings and discussions took place between officials of Treasury and those of the Department of Energy to further examine the contemplated transaction in greater detail. Following these meetings, Minister Gordhan wrote to Minister Martins approving the guarantee to the total amount of R9.5 billion with several conditions intended to safeguard the national revenue fund and the interests of SA.

60. Just like the nuclear deal, this transaction reflects:

    60.1 The lack of due care when dealing with matters involving substantial sums of state funds and exposing the state to potentially huge fiscal risks.

60.2 A cavalier attitude to due process. Why was a transaction that ought to begin with a thorough and proper due diligence taken to the point of a near financial closure without a due diligence being undertaken?

60.3 The pressure brought to bear on Minister Gordhan (and possibly Minister Martins) to provide the guarantee was inappropriate, especially at a time when there was going to be a new Cabinet constituted after the elections on 7 May 2014, less than a fortnight after the guarantee was issued.

Matters relating to South African Airways

61. Mr Fuzile's statement then turned to the events during his tenure as DG of Treasury where he helped successive Ministers deal with issues related to SAA.

62. Mr Fuzile assisted the Ministers in evaluating the various applications from SAA in terms of section 54 (2) of the PFMA. National Treasury would undertake the analysis required to assess, amongst other things, the ability of SAA to honour its obligations as they pertain to transactions. This became increasingly important as the guarantee exposure to SAA was rising and any failure by the airline to meet its own obligations would have triggered a cross-default on the Arline's other obligations and a call on the government guarantees. It would also have had wider implications for the entire government by triggering some kind of "contagion" for other SOEs and government itself, including pushing up borrowing costs, making it more difficult to secure funding, etc.

63. National Treasury's monitoring of SAA intensified further after the executive authority (shareholder) responsibility was transferred from the Minister of Public Enterprise to the Minister of Finance through a Presidential minute of gazette on 19 December 2014 ostensibly because the business was experiencing financial challenges and needed to be under a department that better understood finance.

64. The assignment of SAA to the Minister of Finance meant that the Treasury was responsible for approving everything for which the airline needed shareholder approval. Two matters warrant special mention: 1. the application for the leasing of Airbus aircrafts; and 2. the appointment of the SAA board.

The application for the leasing of the Airbus aircrafts

65. In July 2015 SAA applied to the then Minister of Finance Mr Nene for approval to enter into operating leases on five A330 aircrafts instead of purchasing ten A320 aircraft. The aircraft purchase related to a contract concluded in 2002 and which, in the intervening period, had resulted in the purchase price becoming extremely onerous: having acquired the aircraft, SAA would have immediately had to write off an amount in the order of R1 billion because the purchase price far exceeded the market value of the aircraft. Treasury evaluated the deal and found it to be beneficial to the airline. The Minister duly approved the transaction.

66. On 29 September 2014, the Minister received a letter from the chairperson of SAA, Ms Dudu Myeni, seeking approval to pull out of the original deal and to enter into a new deal for a sale and lease-back of the aircraft through a local supplier.

67. The only explanation Mr Fuzile remembers was that this would prevent foreign exchange from flowing out of SA, which did not make sense at all: the local lessor would still have needed to purchase or lease the aircraft that were supplied to SAA, which would have resulted in a foreign currency outflow from the country.

68. The Minister decided not to approve the proposed amendment. If Airbus walked away from the swap transaction, then SAA would have been forced to pay the outstanding pre-delivery payments – something they were not in a position to do. This would have triggered a default by the airline on its government guaranteed obligations, requiring that government immediately repay the debt on SAA's behalf. Almost immediately after the Minister declined the amendment, he was removed on 9 December 2015.

69. For a very short time Mr Des van Rooyen was the Minister of Finance, but he too was removed and replaced by Minister Pravin Gordhan on 13 December 2015. On his reappointment Mr Gordhan had to take over from where Mr Nene had left. He decided to allow SAA one more opportunity to demonstrate the benefit of the alternative deal they had been proposing. Airbus had reluctantly agreed to allow additional time for consideration of the deal, but a decision had to be made by 21 December 2015.

70. On Wednesday 16 December, a group from National Treasury (including Mr Ismail Momoniat, Ms Avril Halstead and Mr Fuzile) met a team from SAA including the then acting CEO, Mr Musa Zwane, and the Acting CFO, Ms Phumzeka Nhantsi, to discuss the Airbus matter. After a detailed comparison of the two options that SAA had and taking due regard of the possibility that Airbus could have reverted to the original transaction to the disadvantage of SAA and SA, they agreed that the new deal had too many unknowns and was thus inappropriate.

71. On around 21 December 2015, Mr Fuzile received a call from Minister Gordhan. He told Mr Fuzile that he had received a call from then President Mr Zuma earlier asking him about the Airbus deal. Mr Gordhan and Mr Fuzile reflected that people were trying everything to push through something that did not make financial/business sense.

72. Around the same time there had been a threat that one member of the board (Ms Yakhe Kwinana) had resigned because Treasury was not agreeing to the deal.

The appointment of the Board of SAA

73. In October 2014, the Minister of Public Enterprises appointed what was intended to be an interim SAA board comprising of four non-executives.

74. The non-executive board members were Ms Dudu Myeni, the chairperson, Ms Yakhe Kwinana who was chairing the Audit Committee, Dr Tambi (an international aviation expert) and Mr Anthony Dixon. Mr Dixon resigned in November 2015. Treasury was concerned about the board being fully capacitated to execute its fiduciary duties.

75. When SAA was transferred to Treasury the board's term was due to expire in March 2015. One of the immediate tasks Treasury set out to do was to assist Minister Nene to appoint a full and competent board. This task proved very hard to execute. Treasury was agreeing with the Minister that unless the new board members were respected; with impeccable credentials it was going to be very hard to raise funding for SAA even with government guarantees. Treasury also emphasised that the lenders had lost all confidence in the remaining four and later three non-executive members of the board. Most credit facilities of SA were granted in anticipation and almost on condition that a new board would be appointed.

76. However, Mr Fuzile's understanding from Minister Nene was that the President was determined that Ms Myeni should continue to serve on the board.

77. A Cabinet Memorandum was to be tabled by the Minister Nene in Cabinet on 8 December 2015. In the Cabinet Memorandum, a new board for SAA was proposed which did not include Ms Myeni or any of the existing board members. Immediately after the Cabinet meeting where this proposal was to have been discussed Mr Nene was removed.

78. Minister Gordhan had to pick up from where Minister Nene had left the process. He had one or more discussions with the President on the matter of the SAA board. On one of those occasions he returned with what was a very firm indication that President Zuma was not going to agree to remove Ms Myeni from the board of SAA. The Minister Gordhan then instructed Mr Fuzile to liaise with Ms Lakhela Kaunda to compile a list of names from which a board could be constituted.

79. A series of meetings took place involving Mr Mogajane, Ms Kaunda and Mr Fuzile where various proposals of names for the SAA Board were made by both National Treasury and the Presidency. In the Cabinet Memorandum they recommended that the new board members be appointed for a three-year period, subject to annual review. However, in Ms Myeni's case, she had already served on the SAA board for seven years at that point; so, serving for a further three years would have resulted in her exceeding the nine-year threshold stipulated in the King Code of Corporate Governance. On this basis, Treasury motivated that her appointment be limited to only two years. The Board was appointed on 2 September 2016, with a clear decision from Cabinet that Ms Myeni would only serve one year on the board.

The social security grant contract

80. Another issue dealt with in Mr Fuzile's statement is the social security grant payment contract, which had been a subject of litigation over many years. It culminated in a number of court judgments, including one by the Constitutional Court in 2014 which declared the contract invalid.

81. At about the end of November, beginning December, 2016, the then Deputy Minister of Finance Mr Jonas and later the Minister of Finance Mr Gordhan alerted Mr Fuzile to what he understood to be a looming crisis; namely, that there was no firm arrangement made to take over the payment of social security grants when the invalidity of the contract resumed on 1 April 2017.

82. Mr Fuzile understand that this might have been brought to their attention by Mr Zane Dangor who was either DG of the Department of Social Development (DSD) or Advisor Minister Bathabile Dlamini herself. Mr Fuzile set up a meeting with Mr Dangor and the Deputy Governor of the Central Bank Mr Francois Groepe. From the Treasury's side, Mr Fuzile included Mr Dondo Mogajane (DOG: Public Finance) and Mr Momoniat (DDG: Tax and Financial Sector Policy) in the meeting. One if the options that had appeal was the option of getting most beneficiaries paid directly through banks rather than via an agent or a service provider. This option had appeal for two key reasons:

    82.1 About 60% or so of the recipients of grants had accounts with one of the banks.

    82.2 It also seemed highly feasible to negotiate a reasonable uniform fee or a special dispensation for SASSA card holders with the banks to enable the payment of grants through the national payment system (and the SARB was open to requests aimed at the enabling this).

83. There was always the very difficult part which related to the cash payments to people who do not have any account with any bank.

84. Treasury was clear that the final decision rested with relevant persons at SASSA.

85. Not very long after the meeting, the Minister Gordhan received a letter from Minister Dlamini which suggested by Treasury in what was the business of her portfolio.

86. The key areas of disagreement between National Treasury and Social Development related to the following:

    86.1 The appointment of a "committee of experts" separate from SASSA administration in a way that was subsequently found to be irregular

    86.2 The recommendations arising from this committee were very expensive and problematic, seemed to involve SASSA taking on the functions of banks, and did not seem feasible to implement by the time the CPS contract ended as legally required

    86.3 The reluctance to accept a significant role for the banking industry in the payment model despite the central role of the National Payment System in making payments

    86.4 The reluctance to seriously consider alternate practical payment options to take over from CPS which had been developed jointly with Treasury

    86.5 Criticism that the OCPO was finding SASSA procurement processes irregular

    86.6 Failure by SASSA to take sufficient practical steps to put a new payment system in place led by default to the extension of the contract with CPS; and

    86.7 The absence of a Board of SASSA and weaknesses in the SASSA Act which made it substantially dependent on the Minister was a key underlying governance problem.

87. At the beginning of 2017, three months before the expiry of the CPS contract's validity, there was no alternative in place to take over payment of social security grants. A real crisis was looming.

88. SASSA wrote to Treasury requesting approval to deviate from procurement processes and to extend the "soon to be invalid" contract with CPS. Treasury explained that it did not have the power/authority to override a Constitutional Court decision that rendered the contract invalid and had suspended its invalidity until March 2017. Treasury advised them to approach the Court and make a plea to extend the contract.

89. As the 31 March drew closer there was panic in government. Minister Gordhan and Mr Fuzile were under immense pressure to grant the exemption to SASSA to extend the contract with CPS for a further year. They made it clear that they would not act illegally and outside the powers and the authority of their positions. On 28 February 2017 SASSA instituted an urgent application with the Constitutional Court for an extension.

90. When asked by a journalist what would happen if grants were not paid after the 31 March 2017, then President Zuma said the journalist should watch what would happen to the persons who were supposed to ensure that grants were paid.

91. Needless to say, the Constitutional Court reluctantly extended the contract on the same terms and grants were paid. It was around the same time that Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas were removed from their positions.

The closure of the Gupta bank accounts

92. In April 2016, Oakbay Investments (Pty) Ltd, controlled at that time by the Gupta family, announced that its bank accounts had been closed. In a letter dated 17 April 2016, the CEO of Oakbay Investments, Mr Nazeem Howa, wrote to the Minister Gordhan stating that his only intention in his letters was "to hearing from you about any possible assistance you are able to offer".

93. The Minister and Mr Fuzile met with Mr Howa and Ms Ronica Ragavan (who he introduced as the CFO) on 24 May 2016 at National Treasury. Mr Fuzile pointed out to him that banks operate in a highly regulated environment, and a range of factors (including money laundering) could give rise to a bank's decision to close an account. Treasury pointed out that there are legal impediments to any registered bank discussing client-related matters with the Minister of Finance or any third-party, and that the Minister of Finance "cannot act in any way that undermines the regulatory authorities".

94. It became clear to Mr Fuzile that Oakbay (and the Gupta family) were afraid to go to Court as they did not want to be cross-examined on their suspicious transactions, and instead preferred to lobby the ruling party and the Presidency to force the banks to open their accounts.

95. It was clear to Mr Fuzile after the President set up the inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC) that the process was calculated to produce one outcome: the reinstatement of banking relationships for the Gupta family and their business. This disregarded the fact that the banks were enforcing the law. As Treasury pointed out to Mr Howa, the right place to ventilate his concerns were the courts of law. Indeed, the matter ended up there.

The Denel-VR laser deal

96. According to Mr Fuzile, another example which demonstrates the flouting of rules and manipulation of processes was where Denel (the 100% state owned arms manufacturer) entered into an arrangement with VR Laser Asia to form Denel Asia.

97. In October 2015, the National Treasury (through the Minister of Finance) received correspondence from the Denel Board Chairman, Mr Mantsha, which was couched as a pre-notification of the intention of forming a partnership between Denel and VR Laser Asia to form Denel Asia.

98. In December 2015, around the time of Minister Nene's dismissal and his replacement with Mr van Rooyen, the Chairman of Denel submitted a formal application for the approval of Denel Asia deal.

Toward the end of January, Treasury was surprised to learn via the media that Denel had formed Denel Asia without obtaining the requisite approval and the conditions of the guarantee. Subsequently:

98.1 A series of meetings were held between Denel officials and officials of the National Treasury. The meetings did not yield any positive outcome as they appeared determined to prove that they had complied with legal requirements and that Treasury was wrong.

98.2 Letters were also exchanged where National Treasury set out in detail the legal advice that it had received by way of explaining its position.

98.3 There were also some public spatswhich included an unprecedented attack by the Chairperson of Denel on the Minister of Finance.

MR JONAS'S MEETING WITH MR TONY GUPTA

99. Mr Mcebisi Hubert Jonas testified as follows regarding the circumstances surrounding an alleged bribe offered by a member of the Gupta family to him on 23 October 2015. Mr Jonas was appointed as Deputy Minister of Finance by President Jacob Zuma on 26 May 2014. Mr Nhlanhla Nene was appointed the Minister of Finance at the same time. Mr Jonas occupied the position of Deputy Minister of Finance until 31 March 2017 when he was dismissed together with Mr Pravin Gordhan. Mr Nene's term of office as Minister of Finance under President Zuma ended abruptly on 9 December 2015 under circumstances which caused much economic chaos in the country and reverberated throughout many parts of the world. Mr Nene's dismissal and the circumstances surrounding it are well known.

100. As at October 2015 Mr Jonas and Mr Fana Hlongwane had been friends for many years. Mr Fana Hlongwane was also a friend to Mr Duduzane Zuma (Mr D Zuma), one of President Zuma's sons.

101. Mr Jonas testified that on or about 27 or 28 August 2015 he received a call from Mr Hlongwane who told him that Mr D Zuma wanted to invite him to a certain awards ceremony. Mr Jonas met with Mr Hlongwane sometime in October 2015. Mr Jonas testified that on this occasion Mr Hlongwane told him that Mr D Zuma wanted to meet him. During that conversation, Mr Hlongwane told him that the Guptas were important to him. Mr Jonas testified that he told Mr Hlongwane that he would not like to be associated with the Guptas. Mr Jonas told the Commission that, nevertheless, he asked Mr Hlongwane to give him Mr D Zuma's number.

102. Mr Jonas said that on 17 October 2015 he and Mr D Zuma had their first conversation. Mr Jonas said that during that conversation Mr D Zuma invited him to the South African of the Year Awards hosted by ANN7 which was to be held on 18 October 2015. ANN7 was a television station that was owned or controlled by the Guptas. Mr Jonas testified that he informed Mr D Zuma that he would not be able to attend the function.

103. According to Mr Jonas, he and Mr D Zuma had further communication with each other on 19 October 2015. Mr Jonas testified that Mr D Zuma called him "about arranging a meeting". He told Mr D Zuma that he would be in Johannesburg later that week and that they could meet then.

104. Mr Jonas says that on Friday 23 October 2015 he received a call from Mr D Zuma and in that conversation, he told Mr D Zuma that he was going to be attending a meeting in Rosebank and they could meet briefly later in the afternoon before he flew out to Port Elizabeth. Mr Jonas testified that they then agreed to meet at the Hyatt Hotel in Rosebank.

105. Mr Jonas testified that when Mr D Zuma arrived at the Hyatt Hotel for their meeting, the two had a brief discussion, but Mr D Zuma "appeared quite nervous and spoke in very vague terms". Mr D Zuma said that the place was crowded and that he had important matters to discuss but that he wanted other people to join the discussion and that he wanted to drive to a more private place.

106. Mr Jonas and Mr D Zuma drove in Mr D Zuma's motor car to the Gupta residence in Saxonwold. Mr Hlongwane arrived at the same time as Mr Jonas and Mr D Zuma at the Gupta residence. Mr Jonas said that he, Mr D Zuma and Mr Hlongwane went into a lounge where they sat down and started chatting. Mr Jonas said that the three of them had not spoken for very long when one of the Gupta brothers walked into the room and sat down. Mr Jonas had not met any of the Gupta brothers before that day.

107. In his affidavit of August 2018 submitted to this Commission Mr Jonas said that it was Mr Ajay Gupta who was in that meeting but said that he could not exclude the possibility that it was Mr Rajesh Gupta. Mr Rajesh Gupta was the only Gupta brother who would have attended the meeting with Mr Jonas on 23 October 2015 if on that day there was a meeting attended by a Gupta brother, Mr Jonas, Mr D Zuma and Mr Hlongwane.

108. Mr Jonas related the discussion thus: Mr Gupta opened the conversation by saying that "we know you" and that he had been informed that Mr Jonas was being blackmailed by Mr Hlongwane. Mr Jonas responded by telling him that that was not true. Mr Gupta went on to say that they had been gathering intelligence on Mr Jonas and those closest to him. Mr Jonas said that Mr Gupta then said that, as far as he was concerned "this meeting never happened" and, if Mr Jonas were ever one day to suggest that that meeting ever took place, they would destroy his political career.

109. Mr Jonas also pointed out that Mr Gupta went on to suggest that he (Mr Jonas) was part of a faction or process within the ANC which sought to undermine the then President of the ANC, Mr Jacob Zuma. Mr Jonas said that at this stage he interjected and disputed that view and pointed out that he was nothing more or less than a part of the ANC and that his activities in the ANC and his work in Government had nothing to do with Mr Gupta.

110. Mr Jonas testified that he then asked Mr Gupta directly what the purpose of the meeting was. Mr Gupta, according to Mr Jonas, went on to say that the "old man" seemed to like him (i.e., Mr Jonas) and that they had called Mr Jonas to "check [him] out" and see "whether you can work with us". Mr Jonas told the Commission that Mr Gupta then told him that President Zuma was going to fire Mr Nene because he (i.e., Mr Nene) would not work with them (i.e., the Gupta family). Mr Jonas testified that Mr Gupta told him that "you must understand that we are in control of everything" and that "the old man will do anything we tell him to do". Mr Jonas said that Mr Gupta then told him that "the old man" intended appointing him as the Minister of Finance. Mr Jonas testified that he was "shocked and angered by this statement" and he told Mr Gupta that he was not interested in becoming the Minister of Finance.

111. Mr Jonas told the Commission that instead Mr Gupta emphatically said that Mr Jonas had to become the Minister of Finance because they wanted this. Mr Gupta told Mr Jonas that, if he worked with them, he would become very rich. Mr Gupta then told him that he could immediately offer him R600 million. He then pointed at Mr D Zuma and said that they had made him a billionaire and that he had bought a house in Dubai.

112. Mr Jonas stated that the Gupta brother went on to say that they worked closely with a number of people, including Ms Lynn Brown and Mr Brian Molefe and that, as a result of this, those people were protected. Mr Jonas went on to say that the Gupta brother said nobody would touch Mr Brian Molefe and he (i.e., Mr Jonas) would be safe if he agreed to work with the Guptas. Mr Jonas told the Commission that at that stage he said that he was going to leave and stood up to leave. He said that he was not interested in being the Minister of Finance.

113. Mr Jonas testified that Mr Gupta said that they had determined that the National Treasury was a stumbling block for their growth and that they wanted to "clean up Treasury".

114. Mr Jonas testified that the Gupta brother told him that when he was the Minister of Finance he would have to remove the then DG, Mr Lungisa Fuzile, the Head of Tax and Financial Sector Policy, Mr Ismail Momoniat, DDG, Mr Andrew Donaldson and the then Chief Procurement Officer, Mr Kenneth Brown from the National Treasury. Mr Jonas also said that Mr Gupta told him that they (i.e., the Guptas) would provide him with replacements for all the people he wanted to be removed and they would provide Mr Jonas with the necessary support including advisors.

115. Mr Jonas testified that he told Mr Gupta that he was under pressure in terms of time and encouraged Mr Gupta to set out "precisely what they did as that would enable him to take an informed decision".

He testified that he did this "as a provocation to seek to draw [Mr Gupta] out in the context of the unfolding state capture phenomenon that we were, at that point in time, trying to make sense of and to determine who was involved".

116. Mr Jonas told the Commission that Mr Gupta said that they were serious about offering him the R600 million and it would be deposited into an account of his choice or that they could open an account for Mr Jonas and he could "stash it in Dubai". Mr Jonas said that Mr Gupta then said that, to show that they were serious, he could "give [Mr Jonas] R600 000 now" and he asked Mr Jonas: "Do you have a bag or can I give you something to put it in". Mr Jonas said at this stage Mr Gupta seemed to want to show him the cash. Mr Jonas told Mr Gupta that he did not want money and that he had thought that Mr Gupta was going to tell him what it was that they were doing.

117. Mr Jonas testified that he then told Mr Gupta that he was in a rush to catch his plane but would be returning from the Eastern Cape on Sunday the following week and Mr Gupta could provide him with a list of what the Guptas did. Mr Gupta then told Mr D Zuma to make arrangements for Mr Jonas to come back to the Gupta residence the following Tuesday and that Mr D Zuma should tell Mr Jonas to bring a bag. Mr Jonas testified that at the end of the meeting Mr Gupta repeated his statement that they had information on him and that, if he suggested that the meeting had occurred, they would "kill" him. Mr Jonas was then driven to the airport.

118. Mr Jonas said that, due to the sensitive and threatening nature of what had transpired at the meeting, and because of the uncertainty of the events that were playing themselves out on nationally, he decided that he would discuss what had occurred with people he could trust. Later that day, Mr Jonas contacted Mr Nene and advised him that he had something serious to talk to him about. He stated that he also spoke to Mr Pravin Gordhan and asked if he could see him to seek his advice and guidance.

119. Mr Jonas testified that on Sunday 25 October he met with Mr Gordhan at the latter's official residence in Pretoria. Mr Gordhan confirmed in his testimony that they had met on Sunday 25 October 2015 at his home in Pretoria.

120. In the statement Mr Gordhan did not say that Mr Jonas told him that he had had a meeting at the Gupta residence and a member of the Gupta family had offered him the position of Minister of Finance if he would work with them and had offered him R600 million. Nor did Mr Gordhan say that Mr Jonas told him that a member of the Gupta family had said to him that if he worked with the Gupta family as Minister of Finance he would have to get rid of certain officials within National Treasury. Mr Gordhan also did not state that Mr Jonas told him that the Gupta family member told him that Mr Nene would be removed from the position of Minister of Finance.

121. In his statement of August 2018 Mr Jonas said that, given that Mr Gordhan's wife was present, he decided to provide Mr Gordhan with a high-level outline of what had happened. He also testified that he told Mr Gordhan that he thought that he should submit his letter of resignation the following day. Mr Jonas mentioned in his statement that Mr Gordhan suggested that he should not resign at that stage.

122. In his statement of 1 October 2018 and his oral evidence Mr Nene confirmed that on Sunday 25 October 2015 he and Mr Jonas agreed to meet on Monday, 26 October 2015 and that they did meet in the morning at National Treasury.

123. Mr Jonas testified that in the meeting he briefed Mr Nene as to what had happened at the Saxonwold meeting of 23 October 2015, including that he had been told in clear terms that he (Mr Nene) was going to be removed from office.

124. Mr Jonas testified that Mr Nene responded to this by saying that maybe he should resign. Mr Jonas said that, given the advice of Mr Gordhan he should not resign and they could "fight on" if only to hold the line for the finance department.

125. In his affidavit and evidence before the Commission, Mr Nene said that he heard for the first time that he would be removed from office when he met with Mr Jonas on the morning of 26 October 2015.

Mr Nene revealed that Mr Jonas told him about the offer made to him at the Saxonwold meeting, including the amounts of R600 million and R600 000 – and that he had rejected the offer. Mr Nene testified that Mr Jonas informed him that the Guptas were aware of an imminent Cabinet reshuffle about which there were rumours circulating in the media, which included names of certain Ministers, including Minister Nene.

126. Ms Mosilo Mothepu, former CEO of Trillian Advisory, disclosed information regarding misconduct on the part of the company, as well as its executives. The CEO of Trillian, Mr Eric Wood, and other employees allegedly had prior knowledge of the dismissal of Mr Nene as Minister of Finance and the appointment of Mr Des van Rooyen by President Zuma. Ms Mothepu testified that on 26 October 2015 Mr Wood informed her that Mr Nene would be dismissed as Minister of Finance. He informed her "that the new Minister would be more pliable, and he would approve various transactions that the old Minister was not approving", one being the Nuclear Deal.

127. Later that morning, Mr Wood sent an email to Ms Mothepu to which was attached a document which essentially outlined the initiatives that the new Minister of Finance was going to approve. There were about ten initiatives in the document as well as the potential fees that Regiments at the time was going to earn.

128. According to Ms Mothepu, Mr Tebogo Leballo, who was the financial director (more precisely CFO) of Regiments, told her a few weeks later that Mr Mohamed Bobat (then a "principal" at Regiments, reporting to Mr Wood) was going to be the new Minister's special advisor. According to Ms Mothepu, the purpose of placing Mr Bobat at the office of the new Minister of Finance was that Mr Bobat could provide Trillian with inside information on tenders, including pricing and technical specification.

129. Ms Mothepu stated that six weeks after Mr Wood had informed her that a new Minister would be appointed, Mr Van Rooyen was appointed as the new Minister of Finance.

130. There are at least four things that Mr Jonas told the Commission were said to him by Mr Gupta at the meeting of 23 October 2015 that seem to have subsequently been shown to be true. First, he said that the Gupta brother told him that President Zuma was going to fire Mr Nene as Minister of Finance. Mr Nene was fired about six weeks after the meeting. Second, Mr Jonas said that the Gupta family had made Mr D Zuma a billionaire. Mr D Zuma did not deny that as of 23 October 2015 he had been made a billionaire by the Gupta family. Third, Mr Jonas said that the Gupta brother told him that Mr D Zuma had already bought a house in Dubai. Mr D Zuma did not deny this in his oral evidence although he had denied it in an affidavit earlier on when he applied for leave to cross-examine Mr Jonas. Mr Jonas testified that the reason that the Gupta brother gave as the reason why President Zuma was going to fire Mr Nene as Minister of Finance was that he would not work with the Guptas which would have been an illegitimate and illegal reason for President Zuma to fire Mr Nene.

131. The reason advanced by President Zuma for firing Mr Nene did not make sense. He said that Mr Nene had been performing very well as Minister of Finance, but he had decided to dismiss him because the ANC Top 6 had decided that he should be deployed to a position in the BRICS Bank that did not exist yet, had not been advertised and which he had no authority to offer to anybody on behalf of the BRICS Bank.

132. Fourth, Mr Jonas testified that at that meeting the Gupta brother told him that "the old man will do anything we tell him to do", which has played out in many instances investigated by the Commission.

133. Furthermore, Mr Jonas told the Commission that Mr Gupta had told him that one of the people with whom the Guptas were working was Minister Lynn Brown. This Commission has already found that Ms Lynn Brown was working with the Guptas.

134. One of the things that Mr Maseko testified Mr Ajay Gupta had told him is that, if there was a Minister who was not co-operative, he would call President Zuma and the latter would "sort" them "out". In his interview with the Public Protector, Mr Maseko inter alia said that, after he had told Mr Ajay Gupta that things did not work the way he (i.e., Mr Ajay Gupta) wanted them to be done, Mr Ajay Gupta said: "No that is how the system works now. If there is a Minister who is not cooperative, I tell him, he sorts them out." The reference to "him" was a reference to President Zuma. What Mr Maseko told the Commission Mr Ajay Gupta said amounts to saying that the former President would do anything they wanted him to do.

135. It is accepted by all concerned that a meeting did take place at the Gupta residence attended by Mr Jonas. There are two disputed issues. The one is whether a Gupta brother attended that meeting. The second is what was discussed in that meeting. On the issue of what was discussed at the meeting, Mr Hlongwane and Mr D Zuma testified that the meeting was to discuss a rumour that Mr D Zuma had become aware that Mr Jonas was going around telling people that Mr Hlongwane was blackmailing Mr Jonas. Mr Hlongwane testified that he had heard about these allegations from Mr D Zuma and he had asked Mr D Zuma to convene a meeting involving the two of them and Mr Jonas to discuss the allegations. Mr Hlongwane said that at the Gupta residence Mr Jonas denied the allegation that he was telling people that Mr Hlongwane was blackmailing him. That is the only thing that Mr Hlongwane testified Mr Jonas said at the meeting. On Mr Hlongwane's and Mr D Zuma's version it appears as if the meeting must have lasted for only a few minutes because neither Mr Hlongwane nor Mr D Zuma was able to give any other details of what was discussed during the meeting. Why would they have taken the trouble to go and hold the meeting away from the Hyatt Hotel if all it was about was whether Mr Jonas admitted or denied the allegations?

136. So, the question arises: how long did the meeting last? If Mr Hlongwane's version is true, that means that for a long time the three sat in the meeting without talking. On Mr Jonas' version the meeting lasted as long as it did which was not a matter of a few minutes – but more than an hour because he and Mr Gupta had a lengthy discussion.

137. On the probabilities Mr Jonas' version is the truth. Mr D Zuma and Mr Hlongwane's versions are rejected as a fabrication.

138. Accepting Mr Jonas' version does not mean that his evidence was perfect. It was not. When one has regard to the evidence he gave before the Public Protector, it is clear that there are certain discrepancies between what he told the Public Protector and what he told the Commission; but the discrepancies do not affect the main pillars of his version. He had no reason to lie about what was discussed at that meeting whereas Mr Duduzane Zuma and Mr Hlongwane had a reason to lie because, if they admitted Mr Jonas' evidence, they would implicate not just Mr Tony Gupta in criminal conduct but possibly themselves, too.

MINISTER NHLANHLA NENE'S RESISTANCE

The nuclear deal

139. During Mr Nene's first term as Minister of Finance, President Zuma wanted the South African government to conclude a nuclear deal with Russia. Mr Nene said that preparations for a nuclear build programme had begun in 2011 when the Cabinet approved and implemented an Integrated Resource Plan (IRP 2010) which provided for nuclear power to contribute an additional 9.6 GW to the energy mix by 2030. The first new plant was to come online in 2013.

140. Mr Nene testified that, after the Department of Energy had provided National Treasury with a draft feasibility study for the new programme and that when National Treasury reviewed the feasibility study, it became apparent to him that, regardless of the underlying policy rationale for developing nuclear energy capacity, the costs associated with the programme were astronomical.

141. Mr Nene said that the funding model for the nuclear programme was central to the determination of affordability. He said that key issues were the fiscal affordability of the funding or guarantees to secure borrowing that would be required to finance the project and the impact on the economy of the electricity tariff required to repay the debt used to finance the project.

142. On 22 September 2014 the Minister of Energy, Ms Joemat-Petterson announced that Russia and South Africa had signed an intergovernmental framework agreement. Mr Nene said that that agreement laid the foundation for nuclear programme procurement. On 10 June 2015 the Minister of Energy tabled in Parliament five inter-governmental nuclear cooperation agreements that had been concluded with the Russian Federation, France, the People's Republic of China, the USA and South Korea for approval. On the same day the Cabinet took a decision that required the Minister of Energy, in consultation with the Minister of Finance and the NNEEC, as a matter of urgency, to present a memorandum to Cabinet that would deal with the financial implications, proposed funding model, risk mitigation, strategies for the nuclear build programme and the contributions by countries as contained in the inter-governmental agreements.

143. A BRICS Heads of State or government summit took place in Russia from the 8 - 9 July 2015. By the time of this summit the Minister of Energy and Mr Nene as Minister of Finance had not produced the memorandum that Cabinet had asked them to produce.

144. Ms Joemat-Petterson presented Mr Nene with a draft letter addressed to the Russian authorities for him to consider and sign. Mr Nene refused to sign the letter because he took the view that it would provide Russia with some form of guarantee on the nuclear programme. Ms Joemat-Petterson revised the letter and presented it to Mr Nene again. Mr Nene rejected the letter again. He did this because the financial and fiscal implications that he was concerned about remained.

145. Mr Nene testified that, as a result of his refusal to sign the letter, he was seen as the person standing in the way of the nuclear deal. He told the Commission that he was accused of insubordination, not only by President Zuma but also by some of his Cabinet colleagues. Mr Nene said that, as Minister of Finance, he was "responsible for ensuring the secure, accountable, sound, transparent, effective and efficient management of the country's public finances, sovereign debt and the economy." He pointed out that section 66 of the Public Finance Management Act provided that only the Minister of Finance had the power to enter into a transaction that would bind the National Revenue (i.e., the fiscus) to any future financial commitment.

146. This means that President Zuma expressed his dissatisfaction with Mr Nene about three months before the meeting that Mr Jonas attended at the Gupta residence on 23 October 2015 when he was told by a Gupta brother that Mr Nene was going to be fired.

147. Mr Nene testified that later he asked the DG of Treasury, together with other senior officials of Treasury, to form a joint task team with officials from the Department of Energy. Mr Nene stated that in September 2015 the joint task team provided him with its preliminary report on the fiscal and financial implications, funding model and risk mitigation for the nuclear build programme. In essence, the conclusion of the preliminary report was that, even under optimistic assumptions regarding the cost of the programme the government debt would grow exponentially. Mr Nene said that this would be "absolutely fiscally unsustainable".

148. Mr Nene told the Commission that, as a way of moderating the risks, the Treasury team recommended spreading the construction over a longer period of time, maintaining flexibility by not entering into any legally binding commitment beyond two units of nuclear power stations upfront and making 'stop-go' decisions based on an assessment of the progress in implementation, the economic environment, fiscal position and affordability. He said that the Treasury team managed to convince the officials from the Department of Energy that this was the way to go.

SAA

149. Another matter that may have been a factor in President Zuma's decision to remove Mr Nene is how Mr Nene had handled SAA's requests for guarantees and how he handled the Airbus contract.

150. Mr Nene testified that on 21 November 2014 the Minister of Public Enterprises at the time wrote to him requesting Mr Nene's concurrence for the issuance of a R6,488 billion perpetual going concern guarantee in favour of SAA. Mr Nene testified that at that time SAA's cash flow forecast showed that it would run out of cash by mid-January 2015 unless additional guarantees were provided. He said that this would have triggered a default by SAA on its guaranteed debt, requiring government to meet the obligations on SAA's behalf as well as negative economic impact and loss of jobs.

151. Mr Nene testified that on 22 December 2014 he issued the guarantee in favour of SAA in his new capacity as the Executive Authority for SAA. He said he did so after taking into account the recommendations of the Fiscal and Liability Committee of National Treasury. He said that in August 2015 – that is about nine months after Mr Nene had issued the guarantee – SAA once again applied for an additional guarantee of R5 billion in order for the airline to be able to finalise its financial statements.

152. Mr Nene stated that the Fiscal and Liability Committee recommended that he should not approve the issuance of that guarantee because of concerns that there was no financial case to support the issuance of the guarantee and that the governance challenges at SAA did not provide a basis for confidence that the airline would turn around within the projected timeframes.

153. Mr Nene testified that against the above background he wrote to Ms Dudu Myeni, the chairperson of the SAA Board, requiring that certain outstanding matters be finalised by 18 September. Concluding, those matters would have assisted in improving the financial performance of SAA. One of the matters was the conclusion of the Airbus contract. Mr Nene did not receive any response from Ms Myeni by 18 September 2015. Accordingly, on 28 September 2015 Mr Nene wrote again to Ms Dudu Myeni requiring that the outstanding matters be finalised the following day. Mr Nene was to table SAA's financial statements in Parliament by 30 September as prescribed by the PFMA. On 29 September 2015, Ms Myeni responded to Mr Nene's letter.

154. In 2002, SAA and Airbus had concluded a contract in terms of which SAA would purchase fifteen A320 aircrafts (A320s) from Airbus which was later (in 2008) amended to twenty. Ten had already been delivered between 2013 and 2015. The other ten were to be delivered between 2015 and 2017. However, SAA had subsequently concluded a new contract with Airbus with regard to the remaining ten in terms of which the agreement to purchase the remaining ten was cancelled and SAA would enter into operating leases of five long haul A330-300 carriers from Airbus. Airbus was going to refund SAA an amount of R1,3 billion which was made up of pre-delivery payments that SAA had already made in respect of the ten A320s. This refund would reduce the financial pressure on SAA's tight liquidity position. On 30 July 2015 Mr Nene had approved this agreement between Airbus and SAA.

155. Mr Nene testified that, after he had approved the operating lease in respect of the remaining ten A320s, Ms Myeni changed her position. She now proposed in effect that the operating lease transaction should not be proceeded with but that, instead, SAA should purchase the A330s from Airbus and then enter into a sale and lease-back agreement of the aircrafts with a local leasing company. Mr Nene responded to Ms Myeni's letter on 30 September 2015. Mr Nene testified that in that letter he told Ms Myeni that he would need an assurance that any such amendment would leave SAA in a better financial position than would otherwise have been the case if the swap transaction that he had approved had been proceeded with. He also testified that he told Ms Myeni in the letter that steps would have to be taken to mitigate any risks that could arise from the original swap transaction not being proceeded with.

156. Mr Nene also told Ms Myeni that, if there was a material amendment to the swap transaction he had approved, SAA would need to resubmit an application for approval in terms of section 54(2) of the PFMA. He required that the rationale for reconsidering the application as well as a comprehensive business case and the financial implication of the alternatives that were being considered be provided for his consideration.

157. Mr Nene testified that in October 2015 he became aware that Airbus was threatening to walk away from the swap transaction because of delays in its finalisation. He testified that if Airbus walked away from that transaction, it would have reverted to the original purchase agreement because that agreement was still in place. Mr Nene said that the consequence would have been that SAA would have had to pay the pre-delivery payments for which funds had not been secured. He said that SAA would also have had to recognise impediments that would negatively impact the financial performance of the airline – something that would not happen if SAA continued with the swap transaction.

158. Mr Nene testified that, following repeated entreaties, SAA submitted a "business case" on 9 November 2015. He said that, after reviewing the "business case", he wrote to Ms Myeni on 12 November 2015 indicating that the business case provided little in the way of concrete information that would be required to make an informed decision and requested additional details.

159. Mr Nene stated that during November 2015 it became evident, in the light of the National Treasury's review of the sale and lease-back proposal of SAA, that SAA had not demonstrated that there was certainty that the proposed amendments to the transaction structure would leave SAA in a better financial position than would have been the case under the swap transaction structure. In fact, there was even a significant risk that it would leave SAA in a materially worse off financial position. There was also a high probability of SAA defaulting on its government guaranteed debt which would have had severe consequences for the fiscus and the economy.

160. On 2 December 2015, Mr Nene decided not to approve the sale and lease-back proposal sought by SAA. Mr Nene publicly announced his decision in a statement on 3 December 2015.

The Khartoum route

161. Mr Nene testified that, by way of a letter dated 17 June 2015, Ms Myeni asked him to consider the outcome of a business case for SAA to open a new route from Johannesburg to Khartoum via Entebbe, Uganda. He said Ms Myeni's letter made it clear that President Zuma knew about the idea. He stated that the proposal was made in circumstances where the executive management of SAA did not agree with the proposal. Mr Nene decided not to support the proposal because a review of the letter from Ms Myeni and the business case showed that, if the proposal was accepted, SAA would incur losses in the first two years of operating such a route which was money that SAA simply did not have.

162. Mr Nene stated that his decision not to approve the Khartoum route and "other similar decisions frustrated Ms Myeni and President Zuma. He told the Commission that he suspected that this and other decisions he made contributed to President Zuma's decision to fire him.

Mr Nene's meeting with President Zuma and Ms Myeni

163. Mr Nene testified that he was extremely concerned by the leadership instability at SAA. He said that his concern increased from August 2015 when several senior executives were either replaced or resigned citing a breakdown of trust with the board.

164. Mr Nene testified that some time in November 2015 he was called to a meeting with former President Zuma and Ms Myeni. Mr Nene testified that he told President Zuma and Ms Myeni that he was of the view that Ms Myeni should be removed from the Board. He pointed out that under Ms Myeni's leadership the airline had persistently been in crisis and reckless action by the Board had repeatedly exacerbated rather than averted the crisis. Mr Nene told President Zuma and Ms Myeni that on a number of occasions this had meant that there was a material threat that the airline would default on its government guaranteed obligations which would have had negative consequences for the fiscus and the economy.

President Zuma's meeting with selected cabinet ministers on the nuclear deal On 8 December 2015

165. A meeting of all the Cabinet members whose portfolios were relevant to the nuclear deal was called by President Zuma for 15h00 on 8 December 2015. Mr Nene said that he and the Treasury officials were later advised that the meeting would take place at 16h00. He testified that, when he and Treasury officials arrived for the meeting just before 16h00, they found that a consultation had already taken place between President Zuma and Mr Nene's Cabinet colleagues, including Minister David Mahlobo, Minister Maite Nkoana-Mashabane, Minister Lyn Brown and Minister Tina Joemat-Petterson from which Mr Nene and his officials had been excluded.

166. During the part of the meeting attended by Mr Nene, officials from the Department of Energy presented the proposed nuclear programme to the President and other Ministers. Mr Nene stated that the presentation did not reflect the input from Treasury regarding the concerns with the feasibility of the programme and the possible escalated approach. He said that the Energy Department's assumptions were extremely optimistic with respect to the assumed construction cost and exchange rate implications.

167. Mr Nene testified that, after the presentation, President Zuma asked him whether he had anything to say in response. Mr Nene testified that he pointed out that the concerns of the National Treasury were not included in the presentation. He then suggested that the officials from the Department of Energy and from Treasury should finalise the presentation for the Cabinet meeting the next day.

168. Mr Nene testified that Mr Fuzile expressed serious concerns, at length, regarding the cost implications of the proposal and the failure by the Department of Energy to phase the construction over a longer period of time. Mr Nene testified the meeting of 8 December 2015 ended with a decision to proceed with the nuclear programme proposal by the Department of Energy despite the contrary views of National Treasury.

The cabinet meeting of 9 December 2015

169. The Cabinet minutes revealed that in short, and subject to some alterations, the Cabinet approved a proposal from the Department of Energy regarding the nuclear deal. Nothing was mentioned about a phased approach, or any compliance with the PFMA or a feasibility study. Cabinet decided that the Department of Energy should issue a RFP for the nuclear build programme, with the final funding model to be informed by the responses received.

170. The situation immediately prior to Mr Nene's removal from office was that the proposal was largely in the hands of the Department of Energy, and that to an extent and consistent with a pattern, that the concerns of Treasury had been ignored. In addition, notwithstanding Treasury's concerns, it was proposed to Mr Nene that he should enter into a binding agreement involving Russian supplies for the nuclear deal.

171. Mr Nene testified that on his way home from the Cabinet meeting he received a call from the President's office informing him that the President wanted to see him. He went back to the Union Buildings. He testified that in their brief meeting, President Zuma said to him that the ANC Top 6 had decided to deploy him to the Africa Regional Centre of the BRICS New Development Bank.

172. Mr Nene said that his response was to ask President Zuma as from when that decision would be effective, and President Zuma said that he was going to be making the announcement shortly. On his way home, Mr Nene sent Mr Fuzile a message which said: "the axe has fallen".

The impact of Mr Nene's dismissal on the financial markets

173. Mr Gordhan testified that the announcement of Mr Nene's dismissal resulted in a widespread public outcry. Civil society, organised labour and organised business groups criticised the decision, and demanded urgent corrective action by President Zuma.

174. According to Mr Gordhan, the devastating impact of the unexpected announcement on the South African economy is estimated to be approximately R500 billion. As commentators and market analysts had described, over two days the market value of the country's biggest financial and property shares fell by R290 billion. This figure excluded the remainder of the equities market that also was hard hit by the decision. South African bonds lost 12% of their capital value (R216 billion). The Rand depreciated sharply from R13.40 to R15.40/USD overnight.

175. Mr Mogajane testified that "the National Treasury had calculated, recognising all variables and noting pre-conditions that the so-called 'Nene Gate' cost 1.1% of GDP by the end of 2017, 148 000 jobs lost, and a reduction of R378bn JSE market capitalisation."

The true reasons for Mr Nene's dismissal

176. Mr Nene was dismissed in the early evening of Wednesday 9 December 2015 after a cabinet meeting. According to President Zuma the reasons were as follows:

    176.1 Mr Nene was removed as Minister of Finance because he was to be deployed to the position of the Head of Africa Regional Centre of the New Development Bank/BRICS Bank, which was to be based in Johannesburg.

    176.2 Nominations for the position referred to above had to be sent urgently to Shanghai and that is why Mr Nene had to be removed urgently from the position of Minister of Finance.

    176.3 Mr Nene had performed excellently as Minister of Finance.

    176.4 Mr Nene was the South African Government's candidate for the position of Head: Africa Regional Centre of the BRICS Bank.

    176.5 President Zuma and his National Executive fully supported Mr Nene's candidature for the position and they knew full well that he would excel and make the nation proud in that position.

177. Mr Nene stated in his affidavit dated 10 October 2018 and in his oral evidence that President Zuma's reasons for removing him were a "fabrication" because "the President had no authority to offer me a position or to deploy me to a position in BRICS Bank, nor could such an appointment be considered at that stage at least without due process, which also involves other member countries." Mr Nene went on to testify that no offer was ever made to him concerning the position of Head: Africa Regional Centre.

178. Mr Riaz "Mo" Shaik, who was GCEO of the BRICS Bank based in Johannesburg at the time of giving evidence before the Commission, gave evidence that corroborated Mr Nene's evidence that there were due processes that had to be followed before appointments were made at the BRICS Bank. Mr Shaik's evidence also reflected that President Zuma could not have had any power to deploy Mr Nene to the position in question.

179. In December 2015, Mr Gwede Mantashe, the Secretary-General of the ANC, Dr Zweli Mkhize, the Treasurer-General of the ANC, and Ms Jessie Duarte, the Deputy Secretary-General of the ANC, deposed to affidavits stating that at no stage did President Zuma ever discuss with them nor did the Top 6 ever agree that Mr Nene be removed as Minister of Finance and be deployed to the position of Head: Africa Regional Centre. President Ramaphosa also stated in his affidavit he furnished to the Commission that the Top 6 officials of the ANC never held a discussion to the effect that Minister Nhlanhla Nene should be removed from the position of Minister of Finance and be redeployed to the BRICS Bank.

180. The reason given by President Zuma for Mr Nene's dismissal must be rejected. The reasons why President Zuma dismissed Minister Nene is that he was not co-operating or working with the Guptas and he was resisting President Zuma's and Ms Dudu Myeni's attempts to get National Treasury to approve transactions or projects or measures that were not in the interests of the country.

APPOINTMENT OF MR DES VAN ROOYEN

181. On 9 December 2015 after President Zuma announced the removal of Mr Nene Mr Fuzile received a call from Mr Enoch Godongwana who said: "You are now going to get a Gupta Minister who will arrive with advisors".

182. Prior to his appointment as Minister of Finance, in his affidavit furnished to the Commission, Mr Van Rooyen said that on 9 December 2015 he met with President Zuma in Pretoria. President Zuma expressed an intention to appoint Mr van Rooyen to the position of Minister of Finance. On the same day former President Zuma announced the removal of Minister Nene from the position of Minister of Finance and Mr van Rooyen's appointment to that position. Mr Van Rooyen added that:

Prior to meeting the President, I had met no other individual who conveyed to me any information involving the decision to appoint me to the position of Minister of Finance. To be clear, I met no one from the Gupta family in which my potential or actual appointment to the position of the Minister of Finance was discussed. The allegation that I was appointed by the Guptas, or at their instance, is simply false.

183. In her "State of Capture" report the Public Protector wrote that her investigation revealed that Mr Des van Rooyen could be placed in the Saxonwold area on at least seven occasions, including on the day before he was appointed as the Minister of Finance. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr van Rooyen admitted that he visited the Gupta residence in Saxonwold on several occasions before his appointment, including on 8 December 2015. In fact, Mr van Rooyen testified that there were other meetings there that "went beyond just what is recorded in the Public Protector report."

184. Mr Van Rooyen maintained that he and Mr Tony Gupta had never discussed his appointment as Minister. What is interesting is that Mr Tony Gupta was the Gupta brother with whom Mr Jonas had had a meeting (together with Mr Duduzane Zuma and Mr Fana Hlongwane) at the Gupta residence on Friday 23 October 2015. He is the Gupta brother who had offered Mr Jonas the position of Minister of Finance and a bribe if he agreed to work with the Guptas.

185. Quite clearly, the discussion between Mr Jonas and Mr Tony Gupta on 23 October 2015 reveals that Mr Tony Gupta was looking for a person who would replace Mr Nene as Minister of Finance and, since Mr Jonas rejected his offer, it is logical to think that he would move on and look for someone else. The objective facts are that:

    185.1 On 23 October 2015 Mr Tony Gupta met with Mr Jonas, Mr Duduzane Zuma and Mr Fana Hlongwane and told Mr Jonas that Mr Nhlanhla Nene was going to be fired as Minister of Finance and asked him to agree to be Minister of Finance and to work with the Guptas which Mr Jonas rejected

    185.2 Mr Nhlanhla Nene was fired by President Zuma as Minister of Finance six weeks later and Mr Van Rooyen was appointed as Mr Nene's replacement; and

    185.3 Mr Van Rooyen visited the Gupta residence several times, including on 8 December 2015 which was one day before Mr Nene's dismissal and Mr Van Rooyen's appointment as Minister of Finance.

186. Given the above facts there is no way that it can be said that Mr Tony Gupta would not have discussed Mr Van Rooyen's appointment as Minister of Finance with him. It would make no sense. The probabilities are overwhelming that Mr Tony Gupta spoke to Mr Van Rooyen about his possible appointment as Minister of Finance.

Appointment of Mr van Rooyen's "Advisor" and "Chief of Staff"

187. By 11 December 2015 Mr Van Rooyen had decided that he would have Mr Mohamed Bobat as his advisor and Mr Whitley as his Chief of Staff. Mr Van Rooyen testified that his first encounter with Mr Bobat was in 2009. He said that he met Mr Bobat in a restaurant and they exchanged business cards.

188. According to Mr Fuzile, until a Minister is sworn in, s/he is a Minister-designate and cannot legally exercise the powers associated with the job. It goes without saying that no one can be an advisor to a Minister who is yet to take up his or her role formally.

189. Mr Fuzile also referred to the Dispensation for the Appointment and Remuneration of Special Advisors which directs that the Executive Authority must ensure that Special Advisors obtain the necessary security clearance before appointment. Any deviation from this must be submitted to the President. Ministers first have to consult with the department to determine whether there are funds to appoint an advisor. According to Mr Fuzile, failure to go through this step risks creating unauthorised expenditure.

190. It is clear that none of the above steps were taken into account when Mr Bobat was "appointed" as the advisor to Mr van Rooyen.

191. At the time of his appointment as advisor to Mr van Rooyen, Mr Bobat held a senior position at Regiments, which was headed by Mr Eric Wood. In his evidence, Mr van Rooyen said that he was unaware that Mr Bobat worked for Regiments until he met him at the Union Buildings and Mr Bobat brought this fact to his attention. If this is true (which is unlikely), then not only did Mr van Rooyen have no CV of Mr Bobat at the time of his decision to appoint him, but he had not even bothered to establish beforehand where Mr Bobat worked. Mr van Rooyen may or may not have known that Mr Bobat was employed at Regiments, but it is Mr Tony Gupta or one of the Gupta brothers who must have arranged for him to appoint Mr Bobat.

192. Mr van Rooyen testified that Mr Whitley was first introduced to him by Mr Malcolm Mabaso, who at the time was support staff to Minister Mosebenzi Zwane in a breakfast meeting that was held at Melrose Arch on 11 December 2015. Mr. Mabaso informed Mr Van Rooyen that Mr Whitley was looking for work and could be an asset in government if there were opportunities. Mr Van Rooyen testified that, after having a brief interview with Mr Whitley and on the strength of his qualifications and experience as set out in his CV he was content to offer Mr Whitley the position of Chief of Staff.

193. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr van Rooyen stated that he made the appointments of Mr Bobat and Mr Whitley because he was entitled to do so as the executive authority of a national Department in terms of section 12A of the Public Service Act 103 of 1994. Mr van Rooyen further testified that the legal and policy position governing the appointment of special advisors and Chief of Staff did not require the Minister to personally or intimately know the people that they were appointing.

194. Mr Whitley was informally appointed as Mr van Rooyen's Chief of Staff on 10 December 2015. Mr Fuzile, as the accounting officer, had not signed any papers appointing Mr Bobat to the position of advisor.

195. Although it needs to be determined whether or not Mr Van Rooyen's advisors were properly appointed or whether proper procedures were followed in their appointment, it emerged during Mr Fuzile's evidence that the real issue was not this but whether it was proper or lawful for them to start performing duties before they were properly appointed. The answer is, of course simple. It was not lawful or proper that Mr Van Rooyen's advisors started performing duties or started working before they were properly appointed. In fact, as it happened, the evidence heard by the Commission revealed that they unlawfully sent out of National Treasury some documents that were confidential. In the circumstances Mr Van Royeen's "advisors" were not supposed to start working until they were properly appointed.

196. Mr Fuzile testified that, on the morning of 10 December 2015, he observed that the Rand was taking a serious pounding and the stock market was shedding value at a pace he had not seen in a long time. Mr Fuzile said he called Mr van Rooyen and encouraged him to consider doing two things. The first was to come to the department early so that he could meet Mr Nene and they could address staff together so that the out-going Minister could say his goodbyes to the staff at National Treasury and the Minister-designate could introduce himself and essentially calm the staff down. The second was for Mr van Rooyen to seriously consider issuing a media statement as soon as he could because it was evident that the markets were reacting adversely to the untimely removal of Mr Nene.

197. Mr Fuzile testified that Mr van Rooyen turned down the suggestions and he sternly warned Mr Fuzile that the Treasury officials' tendency to issue statements had to come to an end. Put succinctly, Mr Fuzile was perturbed that the new Minister seemed oblivious to the near catastrophic consequences that had been triggered by the developments of the previous day and appeared not to appreciate that he, among others, had to do something to stave this off.

198. Mr Fuzile testified that at the swearing-in ceremony of the new Minister, the first person he found standing at the door was a person who introduced himself as Mr Bobat, the "advisor to Mr van Rooyen", whose appointment he had not approved. According to Mr Fuzile, Mr Bobat wasted no time in issuing instructions to him. Mr Bobat told Mr Fuzile to draft a statement that Mr van Rooyen would release after being sworn in. It was at this point that Mr Fuzile realised that Mr Bobat did not care about protocol and civilities and he appeared determined to assert some "authority" over him.

199. Mr Bobat also told the Communications Head, Ms Macanda, that from then onwards all communication would go through him. Mr Fuzile stated in his evidence that the communication policy of the Department did not provide for an advisor issuing instructions to officials on matters of communication.

200. Mr Fuzile said that Mr Bobat felt such a sense of authority and empowerment that he could issue instructions to anyone without first checking with the person on whose behalf he purported to act. Mr Fuzile said that Mr Bobat gave him an impression of being a law unto himself.

201. On 11 December 2015, Mr van Rooyen had an introductory meeting with the staff at National Treasury. According to Mr Fuzile, at this meeting, Mr van Rooyen stated that the officials had to work through his advisors. Thus, for the first time, to Mr Fuzile's knowledge, National Treasury officials would not have direct access to the Minister.

202. As already stated, Mr Bobat was employed by Regiments Capital and Trillian. In the brief time that Mr Bobat was at National Treasury, he shared classified information with people outside Government such as Mr Eric Wood.

203. No Minister would behave like this, arriving with advisors they did not know. The position is simply that the Guptas wanted Mr Van Rooyen to appoint Mr Bobat as his advisor. Mr Van Rooyen – himself having got the position of Minister through the Guptas or with their blessing – had to appoint advisors chosen by them. There is simply no doubt that Mr Van Rooyen was a Gupta Minister.

THE REAPPOINTMENT OF MR GORDHAN AS MINISTER OF FINANCE

204. In the evening of Sunday, 13 December 2015, Mr Gordhan met with President Zuma at Mahlamba Ndlopfu. At the meeting, President Zuma said that he believed that Mr van Rooyen was suitable for the Finance Minister position, but others held a different view and believed that, when markets re-opened on Monday, 14 December 2015, if Mr van Rooyen was still the Minister of Finance, the destruction already experienced on the previous Thursday and Friday would continue or could possibly even worsen. He indicated that he wanted Mr Gordhan to take up the position of Minister of Finance in order to calm the markets.

205. Mr Gordhan responded that there were other qualified individuals that President Zuma could consider for the post, such as Messrs Mcebisi Jonas and Jabu Moleketi. President Zuma indicated that neither of these suggestions was acceptable to him and he thought that Mr Gordhan should accept the position.

206. Mr Gordhan accepted his re-appointment as Minister of Finance. In agreeing to serve again as Minister of Finance, Mr Gordhan indicated to President Zuma that there were three matters at that time which concerned him. The three matters were:

    206.1 The ongoing dire financial predicament of SAA and, specifically, the role of the Chair of the Board, Ms Dudu Myeni

    206.2 The proposed nuclear procurement deal; and 206.3 Mr Tom Moyane's role at SARS as its Commissioner.

207. Mr Gordhan then assisted with the drafting of a media statement that was issued by the Presidency later that evening, which announced his re-appointment to the position of Minister of Finance.

208. Mr Gordhan dealt with a number of incidents or events which he said appeared aimed at forcing him to resign as Minister of Finance so that another Minister could be appointed who would allow the National Treasury to be captured.

209. Mr Gordhan saw this "set of events, combined with what is set out below"," as the beginning of what appeared to be a campaign to force" him "to resign as Minister of Finance and continue the efforts to capture the National Treasury thereafter". Mr Gordhan believed that his "re-appointment had thwarted these efforts" and that "Mr Nene was removed from the national executive for the same reason – to obtain full control of the Treasury."

210. Most of the evidence that was given by Mr Gordhan in regard to what he called the campaign aimed at forcing him to resign so that another Minister of Finance would be appointed was not disputed except to a limited extent by Mr Tom Moyane, dealt with in another Volume.

211. In his statement of 11 October 2018 to the Commission, Mr Gordhan said that shortly before his budget speech in Parliament, Major General Mthandazo Berning Ntlemeza, head of the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation, known as the "Hawks", requested and attended a brief meeting at the Treasury. Gen Ntlemeza advised Mr Gordhan that two investigations were ongoing: into SAfA and SARS. No details as to the substance, scope or progress of either investigation was shared with Mr Gordhan by Gen Ntlemeza in this short conversation.

212. Mr Gordhan added in his statement that he believed > that the capture of the Hawks under Gen Ntlemeza was central to the state capture project. This capture enabled the Hawks to be abused for political objectives through malicious law enforcement action and without regard for the impact that abuse of power would have on the integrity of the country, the economy or personally in the individuals, such as myself, who were targeted in this orchestrated campaign.

213. On or about 19 February 2016, in the week before the Budget speech, an envelope was hand-delivered to the Treasury at Gen Ntlemeza's insistence. This envelope contained 27 questions addressed to Mr Gordhan from the Hawks and demanding that they be answered by 2 March 2016. The questions related to the High Risk Investigation Unit within SARS, formed years earlier. Charges against Mr Godhan relating to that unit had been filed by Mr Moyane on 15 May 2015.

214. Mr Gordhan "arranged to visit the then President late that day to present the correspondence and questions from the Hawks to him and to ask him whether he was aware of, and agreed with, this law enforcement action against me." During that meeting, Mr Gordhan objected strongly about this persecution and asked former President Zuma whether political activists like him must now prepare to be eliminated during the democratic era even though they had survived the oppression of the Security Police in the apartheid era. In response, President Zuma merely flipped through the pages of the letter. He said he would discuss the matter with the then Minister of Police, Mr Nkosinathi Nhleko. Mr Gordhan received no further information from the former President in this regard subsequent to this meeting.

215. However, on Monday 22 February 2016, Mr Gordhan was requested to attend a meeting with Mr Gwede Mantashe, Ms Jessie Duarte and Mr Zweli Mkhize of the ANC. The 27 questions and this abuse of law enforcement for political objectives was discussed with them. The 27 questions were leaked to the media the day after the Budget speech. Mr Gordhan added in his statement that Minister Mahlobo and Minister Nhleko held a joint press conference on 2 March 2016, defending the investigation and the timing of the questions posed to him by the Hawks.

216. Following an extension on the deadline, Mr Gordhan answered all 27 questions and provided his responses to the Hawks.

217. In his statement Mr Gordhan referred the Commission to the contents of subsequent media reports that revealed that shareholders in Gupta-linked consultancy group Trillian, allegedly were warned in advance that Mr Nene would be fired as Finance Minister, and that Trillian planned to exploit access to the Treasury under Mr Nene's replacement, Mr Van Rooyen. Mr Eric Wood, Trillian's Chief Executive Officer at the time, denied the allegations, and suggestions that he, Trillian and other Gupta-connected individuals had profited from the market turmoil that followed Mr Nene's removal. Evidence provided by a Trillian whistleblower to the parliamentary inquiry into Eskom established that Mr Wood may have profited thanks to his prior knowledge of the removal of Mr Nene.

218. According to Mr Gordhan, Messrs Whitley and Bobat also were reported to have been present with Mr Van Rooyen at the Gupta family compound located in Saxonwold, in the days immediately preceding his appointment as Minister of Finance. A third individual, Malcolm Mabaso (said to be associated with the Guptas through former Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr Zwane) was also present with Mr Van Rooyen, though his precise role was unclear. Mr Gordhan pointed out that media report also revealed that Whitley and Bobat shared a confidential Treasury document with Gupta associates and executives, on or about 12 December 2015, prior to Mr Van Rooyen's removal.

219. According to Mr Gordhan, another decision which may have contributed to his eventual removal as Minister of Finance in March 2017, was revealed on 21 February 2016, when the Sunday Times newspaper reported that National Treasury had cancelled the Gupta-owned The New Age newspaper's sponsorship of, and participation in, the post-Budget breakfast briefing. This event was set to take place the morning following delivery of the Budget speech in Parliament (i.e., 25 February 2016). Ultimately, the broadcast rights for the breakfast briefing were allocated to two other media institutions.

220. Mr Gordhan also noted in his statement to the Commission that, on 16 March 2016, former Deputy Minister Jonas issued a statement confirming media reports that, in October 2015, he had been offered the position of Minister of Finance to replace Mr Nene, prior to Mr Nene's removal December 2015. Former Deputy Minister Jonas stated that the offer was made at a meeting at the Gupta family's Saxonwold compound by a member of the Gupta family, accompanied by Mr Duduzane Zuma and Mr Fana Hlongwane.

221. In this regard Mr Jonas contacted Mr Gordhan on Friday, 23 October 2015, requesting a meeting. He was visited by Mr Jonas on or about Sunday, 25 October 2015, at his Pretoria home. Mr Jonas appeared extremely distraught, upset and emotional. He seemed unable or hesitant, to disclose specific detail about had caused this ("perhaps due to the presence of my wife"). Mr Jonas told him that he wanted to resign. Mr Gordhan managed to dissuade Mr Jonas from resigning, advising him that it would not be in the best interests of the country for him to leave his position.

222. Mr Gordhan noted in his statement to the Commission that 2016 was a year marked by ongoing harassment and attempted distraction by law enforcement agencies, some media houses and a persistent social media campaign of fake news and personal attacks that appeared antagonistic towards him and the work being done by Treasury. He stated that he was the target of an orchestrated campaign that appeared aimed at forcing him to resign as Minister of Finance. The role of the public relations agency Bell Pottinger was central to this orchestrated campaign.

223. Mr Gordhan added that this orchestrated campaign against him and the National Treasury caused immense stress for him, former Deputy Minister Jonas, senior officials and their families. In response, they were repeatedly advised that they should not resign and to "hang in there." The sentiment seemed to be that they should not "make it easy for them" to get rid of those who were seen as obstacles to the state capture project and the looting of public resources.

224. In his statement to the Commission, Mr Gordhan drew attention to the blatant refusal by Mr Moyane to account to him as Minister of Finance on material issues (such as the operating model of SARS). He even refused to acknowledge Mr Gordhan's authority on what may appear to be petty issues, such as submitting his applications for personal leave to the Ministry (although during Mr Nene's time as Minister they were).

225. Mr Gordhan added that Mr Moyane made serious allegations against him and continued to refuse to accept that as Minister of Finance, he was accountable and answerable to Mr Gordhan for the performance of SARS. However, the former President did nothing to intervene in this deteriorating relationship, to facilitate adjudication of the dispute, or to resolve it in any other less formal way. It festered for many months, with Mr Moyane writing further letters about Mr Gordhan to President Zuma.

226. According to Mr Gordhan he faced further ongoing personal and institutional attacks, antagonism and an evident lack of accountability from Mr Moyane. Included here was the declaration of an inter-governmental dispute in terms of section 41 of the Inter-Governmental Relations Framework Act, 13 of 2005, by Mr Moyane at SARS against Mr Gordhan as a Minister of Finance on or about 14 April 2016.

227. Second, in or about 12 June 2016, the Minister of Social Development, Bathabile Dlamini wrote a lengthy letter to Mr Zuma seeking his intervention with regard to National Treasury's scrutiny of, and objections raised regarding the various systems for the payments of social grants and the implementation of policy by the DSD.

228. In addition, Mr Gordhan pointed out the important work that National Treasury was doing to amend the Financial Intelligence Centre Act caused acrimonious and personally insulting attacks on him and the officials of the Department from those opposed to the amendments. Most controversially, the amendments introduced additional scrutiny of the personal finances and transactions of so-called Politically Exposed Persons (and their families and associates), as well as a requirement to record the Beneficial Owners (the natural persons) of bank accounts.

229. Former President Zuma also delayed signing the amendments into law until litigation was commenced to force him to do so. No meaningful engagement occurred between the Presidency and National Treasury regarding any reservations that the former President may have had regarding the Bill. Media reports noted that he was lobbied to not sign it into law by critics and those that seemed opposed to National Treasury at the time. Eventually it was referred back to Parliament by the President in November 2016.

230. According to Mr Gordhan media outlets owned by the Gupta family (ANN7 in particular) launched several determined attacks on the FICA amendments. Commentators such as Mr Mzwanele Manyi and Mr Tshepo Kgadima of the Progressive Professionals Forum and Ms Danisa Baloyi of the Black Business Council were vocal critics of the amendments, and the provisions relating to PEPs in particular. At the Parliamentary hearings held in January 2017, these same critics objected to the Bill. Cabinet members in the Security Cluster also met with officials from National Treasury to raise their objections to the amendments as well. The Amendment Bill was eventually passed in May 2017 under Mr Gordhan's successor.

231. Mr Gordhan drew the Commission's attention to the announcement made on 11 October 2016 by the former National Director of Public Prosecutions, Adv Shaun Abrahams, that charges were to be brought against him, as well as former SARS Commissioner, Mr. Oupa Magashula, and former deputy SARS Commissioner, Mr. Ivan Pillay. The charges alleged fraud relating to Pillay's early retirement, which had been approved by Mr Gordhan and Mr Magashula in 2010. According to Mr Gordhan, subsequent media reports revealed that Adv Abrahams had met President Jacob Zuma, Mr Mahlobo, Justice Minister Michael Masutha and Social Development Minister Bathabile Dlamini at Luthuli House the day before his announcement, Adv Abrahams explained the meeting as being held to discuss student protests with ANC leaders, but, Mr Gordhan, added in his statement, it is unusual that the ministers of higher education, finance and police were not present if that was the subject of discussion.

232. Mr Gordhan pointed out in his statement to the Commission that the markets reacted to the announcement of Adv Abrahams in several ways, including: the Rand weakened by 3.9% against the US Dollar; yields on South African government bonds due rose to their highest level since 2 September 2016; the cost of insuring against non-payment of debt for five years using credit-default swaps, rose to the highest since July 2016; and banks stocks fell, wiping off almost R34 billion in value on the FTSE/JSE Africa Banks index.

233. In an about-turn days later, Adv. Abrahams announced the withdrawal of all of the charges on 31 October 2016, stating that he was then satisfied that the three accused did not have the intention to act unlawfully. This was a few days before Mr Gordhan's first scheduled court appearance. Various civil society organisations had mobilised in protest against the charges and in support of the accused. Both announcements were made amid allegations in the public domain that political motives were at play in the decisions to question and charge Mr Gordhan and his fellow accused, in what appeared to be yet another attempt to force him to resign, to create uncertainty and instability and ultimately, to enable the capture of the Treasury.

234. Another issue Mr Gordhan included in his statement to the Commission was the closure of the Gupta bank accounts. According to Mr Gordhan, in or about April 2016, Oakbay Investments (Pty) Ltd, controlled at that time by the Gupta family, announced that its bank accounts had been closed. At around the same time, Mr Nazeem Howa, the CEO of Oakbay, began to correspond with Mr Gordhan seeking his intervention to reverse these account closures. Mr Gordhan obtained legal advice that confirmed that it would be unlawful and improper for him to intervene in the private contractual relationship between a bank and its client. He conveyed this advice to Mr Howa, but he appeared undeterred and continued to request a meeting with Mr Gordhan. This meeting was held on or about 24 May 2016 in which it was explained to Oakbey the highly regulated environment in which banks operate and the requirements that they closely monitor and report on suspicious transactions in order to combat money laundering. An explanation was also given of the legal impediments to Mr Gordhan, or anyone else, intervening in the private contractual relationship between a bank and its clients. Mr Gordhan urged Mr Howa to approach the courts for relief.

235. Following a Cabinet meeting on 13 April 2016, at which Mr Gordhan was not present, a Ministerial task team was established to look into the issue of the closure of the Gupta bank account. Mr Zwane, Labour Minister Mildred Oliphant and Mr Gordhan were nominated for this task. Mr Gordhan questioned the purpose and seeming aim of the task team with his colleagues who were nominated to it. He explained the extensive global and domestic legal regulatory framework that governs the financial sector and cautioned that this framework needed to be understood and considered prior to any engagements with the banking institutions. His concerns were not addressed by the members of the task team. Mr Gordhan chose not to attend the meetings of the task team nor to participate in its actions. According to Mr Gordhan, Mr Zwane had the full backing and support of former President Zuma in pursuing the task team's objective of undermining and maligning the stance adopted by him and National Treasury to the closure of the bank accounts.

236. According to Mr Gordhan in his statement to the Commission, on or about 1 September 2016, Mr Zwane issued a media statement, purportedly on behalf of the task team announcing that it, through Cabinet, would recommend to former President Zuma that a judicial inquiry be established into the closure of the bank accounts of several Gupta companies by the major commercial banks in South Africa. This statement was effectively abandoned in the days that followed, with a statement issued by the Presidency to clarify that no such decision had been endorsed by Cabinet.

237. Mr Gordhan added in his statement that, on or around 14 October 2016, he launched a court application to seek declaratory relief regarding the limitations of his available powers to intervene in various decisions taken by several commercial banks to close the accounts held by Gupta-related firms. This application attracted further hostility towards him from supporters of the former President and the Guptas. Attached to the application was a certificate issued by the Financial Intelligence Centre certifying that it had received 72 Suspicious Transaction Reports from the various banks relating to suspicious account activity and transactions conducted using the bank accounts that had been closed.

238. Mr Gordhan's statement to the Commission then deals with the Nuclear Deal. Following Cabinet's decision on 9 December 2015 that the Department of Energy may issue the RFP for the nuclear programme, the engagements between National Treasury and the DoE during 2016 largely centred on the procurement process to be followed.

239. In June 2014, Eskom had written to the DoE indicating that the Board had decided not to provide funding for any new build projects beyond Medupi, Kusile and Ingula power stations due to the funding constraints Eskom was facing. As a consequence, the DoE had sought Cabinet approval for the South African Nuclear Energy Corporation SOC (NECSA) to replace Eskom as the implementing agent, i.e., the institution that would own and operate the nuclear power plants, with the DoE serving as the procuring agency.

240. Despite the fact that Eskom was experiencing severe financing challenges, its then CEO, Mr Brian Molefe, indicated its willingness and commitment to participate in the nuclear build programme. In November 2016, Cabinet approved that Eskom assume responsibility for procuring, owning and operating the nuclear power stations. In December 2016, Eskom issued a watered-down and non-binding general request for information (RFI) instead of the originally intended RFP.

241. Around the same time, the NGOs Earthlife Africa and the Southern Africa Faith Communities' Environment institute launched legal proceedings against the Minister of Energy, the President and Eskom (among others) challenging the determinations in terms of Section 34 of the Electricity Regulation Act that had been made by the Minister of Energy in 2013 and 2016, and the constitutionality of the tabling by the Minister before Parliament of three intergovernmental agreements during 2015. This stalled progress on the nuclear programme.

242. Shortly after Mr Gordhan was replaced as Minister of Finance, the Cape High Court ruled that the nuclear cooperation agreements with the USA, Russia and South Korea were unconstitutional and unlawful, and that the ministerial determination for a 9.6 GW nuclear new-build in South Africa was invalid.

243. Mr Gordhan's statement then turns to his removal as Minister of Finance. According to Mr Gordhan, he, former Deputy Minister Jonas and the DG, Mr Fuzile, were in London on a business trip when, on the morning of Monday, 27 March 2017, he received an SMS from Dr Cassius Lubisi, the DG in the Presidency. The message requested that he, former Deputy Minister Jonas (who had not left South Africa yet) and Mr Fuzile return to South Africa immediately.

244. On the same day, former President Zuma reportedly informed senior leaders of the South African Communist Party (SACP) that he intended to remove Mr Gordhan and former Deputy Minister Jonas and referenced a purported "intelligence report" accusing Mr Gordhan and others of conspiring with foreign forces against him as President. Mr Gordhan flew back to South Africa that evening, arriving back on Tuesday morning, 28 March 2017.

245. Tuesday, 28 March 2017 was the day that the court application regarding the closure of the Gupta businesses' bank accounts in South Africa by several of the major banking institutions was set to commence argument in the Pretoria High Court. On the same day, Mr Fuzile and Mr Gordhan met with the former Secretary-General of the ANC, Mr Mantashe, at Luthuli House to obtain clarity about their positions. None was forthcoming. During that meeting with Mr Mantashe, he informed Mr Gordhan that former President Zuma had met with the ANC's Top 6 officials on the previous day, Monday, 27 March 2017. The same fake "intelligence report" had been presented to them, but it had been rejected by those in the meeting. Mr Mantashe then told Mr Gordhan that Mr Zuma told them that, regardless of the "intelligence report", his relationship with him had irretrievably broken down. Mr Mantashe recounted that Mr Zuma had indicated that it was unusual that the Minister, Deputy Minister and DG were all out of the country at the same time. Mr Mantashe indicated to Mr Gordhan that Mr Zuma would prefer it if he would resign, rather than him having to fire Mr Gordhan.

246. According to Mr Gordhan on Thursday, 30 March 2017 the SACP issued a media statement recording that it had been informed by Mr Zuma that Mr Gordhan was to be replaced as Minister of Finance. The statement recorded that the SACP objected to this intended reshuffle. That evening, former President Zuma announced that both Mr Gordhan and former Deputy Minister Jonas, and several others, including Ministers Hanekom and Ramatlhodi, were removed from their positions. Mr Gordhan became aware of his removal when the President made his announcement of the reshuffle, which was broadcast on television. Mr Gordhan had no contact with the former President regarding his decision to remove him as Minister of Finance.

247. According to Mr Gordhan, the global ratings agencies expressed their immediate concern at these developments. For example, on Monday, 3 April 2017, Moody's Investors Services announced that it had placed the Baa2 long-term insurer and senior unsecured bond ratings of the government of South Africa on review for downgrade, that review was said to be prompted by the "abrupt change in leadership of key government institutions" and would "allow Moody's to assess these risks and if the changes in leadership signal a weakening in the country's institutional, economic and fiscal strength". On the same day, Standard & Poor's downgraded South Africa's ratings to 'BB+' from 'BB-' and the long-term local currency rating to 'BBB-' from 'BBB' in a reflection of their "view that the divisions in the ANC-led government that have led to the changes in the executive leadership, including the finance minister, have put policy continuity at risk. This has increased the likelihood that economic growth and fiscal outcomes could suffer". On 7 April 2017, Fitch Ratings also downgraded South Africa's Long-Term Foreign- and Local-Currency Issuer Default Ratings to 'BB+' from 'BBB'. These downgrades were made in light of its view that "the cabinet reshuffle, which involved the replacement of the finance minister, Pravin Gordhan, and the deputy finance minister, Mcebisi Jonas, is likely to result in a change in the direction of economic policy."

248. Following his removal as Minister of Finance, Mr Gordhan was a member of the parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Public Enterprises that held an inquiry into state capture at various SOCs, including Eskom, Transnet, PRASA and Denel. His experience in the Portfolio Committee's inquiry into Eskom, in particular, revealed the extent of the manipulation of the Boards of the SOCs, their management, and the abuse of the contracts and procurement processes for corrupt and unlawful ends. This pillage was replicated and became prevalent in other SOEs as well. Mr Gordhan stated in his statement to the Commission that he believed > that this hollowing out of the governance structures of SOCs was a direct consequence of the state capture project and was aimed at facilitating their plunder. One can observe how the methodology was perfected at one SOC and then replicated at others as the state capture project was rolled out.

249. Mr Gordhan returned to Cabinet on 26 February 2018 as Minister of Public Enterprises under President Cyril Ramaphosa.

250. What has been done above is to provide Mr Gordhan's evidence as he set it out in his statement or affidavit without analysis. What follows hereunder is the analysis of that evidence and other evidence in so far as it relates to Mr Gordhan's resistance to wrongdoing, his dismissal and the determination of President Zuma's reasons for Mr Gordhan's dismissal.

THE DISMISSAL OF MR GORDHAN AND MR JONAS AND MR GORDHAN'S REPLACEMENT BY MR MALUSI GIGABA

251. Mr Gordhan's evidence indicates that he was told that on either 27 or 28 March 2017 there had been a meeting of the ANC's top 6 officials and that at this meeting President Zuma had told the other officials that he intended to drop him from his Cabinet. In the affidavits provided by Mr Gwede Mantashe, Ms Jessie Duarte and Dr Zweli Mkhize to the Commission about that meeting, these officials stated that President Zuma told them that he was in possession of an intelligence report which was to the effect that Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas were undertaking or were going to undertake the overseas trip in order to lobby international bodies against the South African government and economy.

252. The three ANC officials referred to above stated in their affidavits that President Zuma did not share the intelligence report with them. In his affidavit to this Commission President Ramaphosa said that President Zuma showed them the intelligence report on which he was relying to fire Minister Gordhan and Deputy Minister Jonas. President Zuma said that in any event, irrespective of the reliability or otherwise of the intelligence report, his relationship with Mr Gordhan had irretrievably broken down.

253. Mr Zuma fled the Commission before he could give evidence about his dismissal of Minister Gordhan and Deputy Minister Jonas and before he could be questioned on his reasons for the dismissals, including on whether he did say to the ANC Top 6 that his relationship with Minister Gordhan had irretrievably broken down. Therefore, he has not substantiated any allegation that his relationship with Mr Gordhan had irretrievably broken down. President Zuma may well have been using that as an excuse to get rid of Minister Gordhan as Minister of Finance or as Minister so that he could appoint a Gupta associate in his place.

254. The question remains: why did President Zuma dismiss Minister Gordhan at the time he did and, in the manner in which he did?

255. In their affidavits to the Commission, Mr Gwede Mantashe, Ms Jessie Duarte and Dr Zweli Mkhize confirmed that President Zuma informed the Top 6 of the ANC that he intended to appoint Mr Brian Molefe as Mr Gordhan's replacement. These three officials said that the Top 5 rejected the idea that Mr Molefe should be appointed as Mr Gordhan's replacement and they asked Mr Zuma to reconsider the matter.

256. Ultimately President Zuma dismissed Mr Gordhan and appointed Mr Malusi Gigaba as Minister of Finance. President Zuma also dismissed Mr Jonas at the same time as Deputy Minister of Finance. A day or two after Mr Gordhan's dismissal, the then Deputy President of the ANC and of the country, Mr Ramaphosa, was interviewed by journalists and asked to comment on the dismissal of Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas by President Zuma. President Ramaphosa told the media that President Zuma had told the officials of the ANC that he intended to remove Minister Gordhan and Deputy Minister Jonas from their positions because he had obtained an intelligence report to the effect that they were going to use their trip overseas to lobby foreign governments against the South African government. President Ramaphosa explained to the journalists that he had strongly disagreed with President Zuma on the dismissal of the Minister and Deputy Minister and had rejected the intelligence report on which President Zuma relied.

257. Mr Zuma did not place before the Commission any evidence that could have shown that, indeed, he had an authentic and credible intelligence report on which he relied to dismiss Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas. Nevertheless, the Commission heard evidence from Dr Dintwe, who was the Inspector-General of Intelligence at the relevant time and who investigated the existence of this alleged intelligence report after he had received complaints from the Democratic Alliance (DA) and the South African Communist Party (SACP).

258. Dr Dintwe testified that President Zuma was apparently the only person who was in possession of the intelligence report. Dr Dintwe said that he made numerous requests to President Zuma for a copy of that intelligence report. He testified that, despite President Zuma promising to provide Dr Dintwe with a copy of such report, he had not done so by the time he resigned as President of South Africa on 14 February 2018 and never thereafter provided Dr Dintwe with a copy of the report.

259. The question that arises is: why would President Zuma have relied on a fake intelligence report to fire Minister Gordhan and Deputy Minister Jonas? The answer is: because he had to find a pretext to get them out of the way so that his and the Guptas' agenda, including the capture of the National Treasury, could be pursued. The Guptas were very determined to capture the National Treasury before President Zuma's second term of office expired and there was by then more or less just over a year left before the expiry of his second term. There was no time to waste. They knew, too, that he was not going to stand for the position of President of the ANC in the ANC's elective conference in December 2017.

260. The position is, therefore, that President Zuma had to rely on a fake intelligence report because he needed an excuse to get rid of Minister Gordhan and Deputy Minister Jonas. The purpose of his decision to remove these two was to pave the way for the appointment of a Minister of Finance who would cooperate with the Guptas in the corrupt agenda that they were all pursuing. In that agenda the capture of the National Treasury was central. All the evidence points to this reason and this reason alone for Mr Gordhan's and Mr Jonas' dismissal.

261. In substantiation of the conclusion in the preceding paragraph the following can be said:

261.1 President Zuma and the Guptas must have been really under pressure to have agreed that Mr

Gordhan be re-appointed as Minister of Finance to replace Mr Des Van Rooyen and must have wanted him out of that position as soon as possible.

261.2 President Zuma had intended to replace Minister Gordhan with Mr Brian Molefe who, by his own admission before the Commission, was a friend of the Guptas.

262. President Zuma was prevented by the ANC officials from appointing Mr Brian Molefe as Mr Gordhan's replacement but, when he realised that he could not appoint Mr Brian Molefe, the Guptas must have told him to appoint another friend of theirs because he then turned to Mr Malusi Gigaba and appointed him as Mr Gordhan's replacement. So, if the ANC officials thought that they would prevent President Zuma from appointing a friend of the Guptas by preventing the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe as the Minister of Finance, they were mistaken. The Guptas gave President Zuma another one of their friends to appoint, namely, Mr Malusi Gigaba and he appointed him. Although Mr Gigaba was also a Gupta associate, it does not appear that he was able to do much for the Guptas as Minister of Finance.

263. Had it not been for the fact that at the end of 2017 the ANC would have an elective conference where Mr Ramaphosa would stand as a candidate to take over from Mr Zuma, more damage could have been done to the National Treasury under Mr Gigaba than may have been done. Mr Gigaba was dropped from Cabinet and President Ramaphosa returned Mr Nhlanhla Nene to the position of Minister of Finance.

264. To summarise, President Zuma dismissed Minister Gordhan because of his resistance to wrongdoing and because he wanted to appoint a Minister of Finance who carried the blessings of the Guptas. Mr Gordhan was not his preferred choice. He was forced by circumstances to appoint him. He still wanted to please the Guptas by appointing someone that they were happy with. That is why he wanted to appoint Mr Brian Molefe as Minister of Finance. When President Zuma was prevented by the ANC's Top 5 from appointing Mr Brian Molefe as Minister of Finance, he appointed another friend of the Guptas as Minister of Finance. That was Mr Malusi Gigaba.

265. In conclusion on the topic of the attempted capture of the National Treasury it is appropriate to say that the fact that the Guptas and President Zuma failed to capture our National Treasury even after relentless attempts to do so over a long period of time is due largely to the Ministers of Finance that South Africa had during those years, namely Minister Nhlanhla Nene and Minister Pravin Gordhan, the men and women at National Treasury, including Mr Fuzile who was the Director-General ,and his team of senior officials who, in the interest of the country, put up serious resistance to President Zuma's and the Guptas' attempts. The country should be grateful to all of them.

266. Civic organisations, journalists, NGOs, the opposition political parties in Parliament and the people of South Africa in general who staged marches and demonstrations to protest against the Guptas and President Zuma's role in state capture must all be commended and the country must be grateful to all of them. Certain individuals within the ANC also made their voices heard and they played an important role as well.

267. South Africa's National Treasury nearly fell into the wrong hands, particularly during the difficult four days in December 2015 following Minister Nene's dismissal and Mr Des Van Rooyen's appointment as Minister of Finance. Mr Des Van Rooyen, Mr Bobat and Mr Whitley were already inside the country's National Treasury. Mr Bobat and Mr Whitley had begun to send National Treasury's confidential documents to the Guptas and their associates outside of National Treasury. It is almost a miracle that the National Treasury was saved from the tentacles of the Guptas.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority should give consideration to instituting criminal prosecutions against Mr Rajesh Tony Gupta for bribery/corruption arising out of his conduct in offering Mr Mcebisi Jonas millions of Rands if he agreed to be Minister of Finance and to work with the Gupta family.

EOH HOLDINGS AND THE CITY OF JOHANNESBURG

INTRODUCTION

1. EOH is a unique case. Among all the companies that have been mentioned in the proceedings of the Commission, EOH alone proactively approached the Commission to be given the opportunity to disclose publicly what wrongdoing had taken place within its ranks. It sought also to explain what it has already done, and what it proposes to do, to make reparation for such wrongdoing and to prevent similar wrongdoing occurring in future.
2. Since the appointment of Mr Stephen van Coller as CEO of EOH in September 2018, Mr van Coller and the Board of EOH have presided over a process where ENS Forensics have been appointed to conduct independent and unfettered investigations into EOH's historical involvement in irregular and corrupt procurements practices. EOH has committed itself to making the results of these investigations public and to assist regulatory and law enforcement authorities with their investigations into matters that were revealed by the ENS Forensics investigations.
3. Primary credit for the attitude taken by EOH must be given to Mr van Coller. At the time of his appointment in 2018, he was aware of adverse media reports relating to EOH. His response to these reports was to investigate whether they were substantiated. When it became clear that there was substance to several of these reports, he put in place a wide range of measures:
    3.1 To investigate the full extent of wrongdoing within the ranks of EOH
    3.2 To draw the wrongdoing to the attention of the authorities
    3.3 To engage the affected organs of state so as to reach agreement on the payment of compensation by EOH to make good the harm that they had suffered as a result of wrongdoing by EOH executives; and
    3.4 To make appointments and establish structures within EOH that would provide safeguards to prevent future repetition of the wrongs committed by individuals associated with EOH.
4. This chapter focusses only on the historical facts concerning EOH's involvement in irregular procurement practices. Before addressing these facts, it is important to emphasise that all of the cases EOH supplied ongoing assistance to the Commission in its investigations of these matters. No other company has been of greater assistance to the Commission.
5. The Commission commends EOH, Mr van Coller and the Board of EOH for taking the approach that they have taken in this regard. The Commission also emphasises the importance of distinguishing:
    5.1 On the one hand, between EOH as a company and the individuals who historically controlled EOH and engaged in corrupt and irregular procurement processes; and
    5.2 On the other hand, the need for EOH to make full reparation to affected organs of state, and the need for appropriately targeted punitive measures by the NPA and regulatory authorities.
6. EOH should not be allowed to retain the benefits of historical corrupt and irregular procurement practices. Under the leadership of Mr van Coller and its current Board, EOH does not seek to do so.
7. The following is examined:
    7.1 The recurrent themes shown by EOH's investigation into corrupt or irregular public procurement
    7.2 Two specific City of Johannesburg contracts which EOH irregularly influenced through improper payments and donations; and

7.3 The attempt by Mr Jehan Mackay to manipulate his relationship with Mr Zizi Kodwa, currently Deputy Minister of State Security who was not directly involved in government at the time, to distort public procurement practices.

THE ENVIRONMENT IN WHICH WRONGDOING WAS FACILITATED AT EOH

8. In his evidence, Mr van Coller elaborated on the general environment in which wrongdoing was allowed to thrive at EOH. He identified six broad features in this regard:

   8.1 Opaque delegations of authority (DOA) with significant responsibilities granted to a few executives

   8.2 Artificial/ inflated software licence sales

   8.3 A succession of apparent tender irregularities

   8.4 the use of politically connected "intermediaries" who are suspected to have been used as introducers and sales agents

   8.5 Payments made to subcontractors in circumstances where there was no evidence that work was done by these subcontractors; and

   8.6 Inappropriate gifting, sponsorships and donations.

9. The absence of an appropriate delegation of authority framework meant that several key executives of EOH were effectively given a free hand to take significant executive decisions without any oversight or check on their authority.

10. A recurrent feature of the irregular procurement in which EOH had been involved was the over-invoicing of public sector clients and the inflation of prices to those clients with the collusion of individuals within the relevant organs of state. To illustrate this theme, Mr van Coller referred to two Microsoft licensing deals with the Department of Defence and an SAP licensing agreement with the Department of Water Affairs. In these cases, with the collusion of individuals within the relevant organs of state, EOH was able to bypass procurement procedures of the State Information Technology Agency (SITA) and to sell directly to Departments. It then charged for more licences than it delivered at a rate per licence that was significantly higher than it would have been able to charge had it been subjected to competitive procurement processes administered by SITA.

11. Other repeated tender irregularities which Mr van Coller identified were:

    11.1 A succession of sole source public procurement contracts of which EOH was the beneficiary

    11.2 Cases where EOH employees were allowed to frame the terms of a tender and thus to tailor those terms to the advantage of EOH; and

    11.3 Cases where EOH put in bids for tenders at below cost so that it could win the tender and be appointed in the expectation that, once it was in place, it would be allowed to change the terms of its appointment and inflate the contract.

12. Another familiar theme to which Mr van Coller testified was the use of politically connected intermediaries and sub-contractors as conduits for kickbacks. EOH's public sector contracts regularly involved commission payments to "introducers", substantial payments to sub-contractors who appeared to have performed no material work on contracts and "teaming agreements" that were not linked to any particular work, but which served as the justification for multi-million Rand payments out of the proceeds of public sector contracts. EOH was able to identify R865 million that it spent on arrangements of this nature.

13. The last general theme named by Mr van Coller in relation to irregular procurement was EOH's payment of donations to the ANC, suspicious personal and organisational sponsorships and excessive entertainment amounts to influence procurement practices.

14. The evidence of Mr van Coller in relation to donations and sponsorships was amplified by that of Mr Powell. Mr Powell showed that EOH and its former executive, Mr Jehan Mackay, had paid tens of millions of rands in:

    14.1 Direct payments to individuals holding office within the ANC

    14.2 Direct donations to the ANC; and 14.3 The payment of ANC expenses through intermediaries and "sub-contractors".

PART A: THE IMPROPER RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN EOH AND MR GEOFF MAKHUBO

15. Tactical Software Solutions Managed Services (Pty) Ltd (TSS Managed Services) is a company acquired by EOH in 2011. TSS Managed Services was renamed EOH Afrika (Pty) Ltd. Prior to the EOH acquisition, TSS Managed Services was owned by Mr Jehan Mackay and his father, Mr Danny Mackay. Mr Jehan Mackay was the Managing Director of TSS Managed Services when it was acquired by EOH and he remained in that position after the acquisition.

16. Mr Patrick Makhubedu had been employed within the TSS Group prior to the EOH acquisition in 2011. His employment was transferred to EOH on 1 March 2014. From that date, Mr Makhubedu was employed by EOH as a Business Development Executive focusing on the public sector and working closely with Mr Jehan Mackay. Mr Makhubedu had a close personal relationship with the late Mr Geoff Makhubo who became the Mayor of Johannesburg. He and Mr Makhubo were partners in several private companies with Mr Reno Neil Barry, a former Group Financial Manager at Tactical Software Solutions (Pty) Ltd, a company owned by Messrs Jehan and Danny Mackay but not acquired by EOH. Mr Barry also supplied accounting services to entities in which Mr Makhubo and Mr Makhubedu were interested.

17. Mr Makhubedu aided EOH to procure several contracts worth hundreds of millions of rands from the City of Johannesburg. Mr Makhubedu resigned from EOH on 11 March 2019, the day before he was called to an interview with ENS Forensic Services about some of the public sector contracts he had assisted EOH to procure.

18. The entities in which Mr Makhubedu, Mr Makhubo and Mr Barry had interests were:

    18.1 Molelwane Consulting CC (Molelwane), an entity owned by Mr Makhubedu and his mother. It received payments from TSS Managed Services and loans from Mfundi Mobile Networks (Pty) Ltd (Mfundi Mobile), an entity whose directors were Mr Barry and Mr Mongezi Duma, a former Tactical Software Solutions Group Financial Analyst.

    18.2 Mfundi Mobile which concluded a "teaming agreement" with the SAP Services Business Unit of EOH Mthombo (Pty) Ltd (EOH Mthombo). As shown below, this "teaming agreement" appears to have been a cover for Mfundi Mobile to make payments for the benefit of Mr Makhubo and the ANC in return for the grant of contracts to EOH by the City of Johannesburg.

    18.3 Prime Molecular Technologies (Pty) Ltd (Prime Molecular), an entity whose directors were Mr Makhubedu and Mr Barry. It apparently served as a conduit for EOH by paying R70 000 to Molelwane.

19. Prior to its acquisition by EOH, TSS Managed Services entered into a "teaming agreement" with Molelwane. The agreement appointed Mr Makhubedu as the contact person for TSS Managed Services in relation to the agreement. It had an effective date of 1 October 2009 and described a range of services that Molelwane was to provide for TSS Managed Services: business advisory services, business development services, advisory services and change management services. At the time of the conclusion of the teaming agreement, Mr Makhubo was not yet an executive of the City of Johannesburg, but he was Treasurer of the Greater Johannesburg Region of the ANC. He took office as MMEC for Finance in the City of Johannesburg in May 2011 and occupied that position until the ANC lost control of the City after the municipal elections in August 2016.

20. In the course of 2012 EOH paid R1.35 million to Molelwane.

21. Over the period of the "teaming agreement" with Molelwane, EOH concluded the following agreements with the City of Johannesburg:

    21.1 COJ A387, a contract awarded to TSS Managed Services for ICT LAN and WAN services with a tender award value of R38.4 million and to EOH Mthombo for ICT Security Services with a tender award value of R26 million. The tender was awarded for a two-year period from December 2010 to November 2012 but was thereafter irregularly extended on several occasions.

    21.2 COJ A472, a contract awarded to EOH Mthombo for SAP Support Services. The tender was awarded for 4-year period from 2012 to February 2016 but was thereafter irregularly extended on several occasions. It appears that Mr Makhubo was involved in preventing a new SAP Support Services tender being advertised to replace COJ A472 when its term expired. In the context of the contract a range of suspect payments were made by EOH to third parties who appear to have performed no work on the contract.

22. In addition to the above contracts, the Commission heard detailed evidence in relation to two contracts in respect of which Messrs Makhubo, Makhubedu, Barry and Mackay appear to have conspired corruptly to procure the appointment of SAP by the City of Johannesburg:

    22.1 The first was a contract awarded to SAP without any competitive procurement process on the basis of an unsolicited proposal for the upgrading of the City's Network and Security Infrastructure.

    22.2 The second was the contract awarded to SAP under tender COJ A647, an upgrade contract for the period June 2016 to June 2019.

PART B: 2014 NETWORK AND SECURITY INFRASTRUCTURE UPGRADE CONTRACT

23. The detailed chronology in relation to the Network and Security Infrastructure Upgrade project is as below:

    23.1 On 16 April 2014, EOH submitted an unsolicited proposal for the upgrading of the City's Network and Security Infrastructure.

    23.2 The price in the unsolicited proposal was R106 185 395.36 inclusive of VAT. 23.3. On the same day EOH Managed Services donated R3 million to the Greater Johannesburg Region of the ANC. A letter acknowledging receipt of the donation and thanking EOH Managed Services was addressed by Mr Makhubo to Mr Makhubedu.

    23.3 On 6 August 2014, Mr Makhubo emailed Mr Makhubedu asking for a donation to cover the accommodation costs related to the Regional ANC Youth League relaunch that was due to take place that weekend. An accommodation invoice issued to the ANC for R582 100 was attached to the email of Mr Makhubedu.

    23.4 On the same day, Mr Makhubedu forwarded the email to Ms Rene Jonker who was one of the divisional finance directors within the EOH Group, who replied that she would make the payment the following day.

    23.5 On 7 August 2014, TSS Managed Services transferred the amount of R R582 100 into the bank account of the ANC Greater Johannesburg Region.

    23.6 On 8 August 2014, Mr Makhubo, in his capacity as Regional Treasurer of the Greater Johannesburg Region of the ANC addressed a letter to Mr Jehan Mackay in his capacity as Executive Director of EOH Mthombo soliciting a donation to the ANC Greater Johannesburg Region. A detailed breakdown of expected expenses aggregating to R6 180 000was attached to the letter.

23.7 On 20 August 2014, Mr Makhubedu paid R20 527.30 to the Sandton Convention Centre on behalf of the ANC. The payment was made from the account of Prime Molecular and proof of payment emailed to Mr Makhubo on the same day.

23.8 On 22 August 2014, Mfundi Mobile paid R70 000 to the ANC and Mr Makhubedu emailed proof of payment to Mr Makhubo.

23.9 On the same day, Mfundi paid Molelwane R80 000. Prior to the payment the credit balance in the account of Molelwane was only R621.45.

23.10 In his internal management accounts for Mfundi, Mr Barry reflected the payments to the ANC and to Molelwane a "costs of sales" on "sales" by Mfundi to EOH.

23.11 Another "cost of sales" on "sales" by Mfundi to EOH was a R1 200 000 payment by Mfundi to Mr Makhubedu in August 2014, which payment corresponded exactly with a "special invoice" issued by Mfundi to EOH in June 2014.

23.12 On 27 August 2014, Mr Makhubedu emailed to Mr Makhubo the EOH unsolicited proposal, 16 April 2014, for the upgrading of the City's Network and Security Infrastructure.

23.13 Mr Makhubo had no business involving himself in procurement matters, particularly not unsolicited proposals from an entity from which he had recently solicited substantial donations for the ANC.

23.13.1 Mr Makhubo did not deny receiving the unsolicited proposal from Mr Makhubedu but could provide no explanation for why it was sent to him.

23.13.2 Mr Makhubo was aware from the evidence of Mr Powell that he would be questioned on his receipt of the unsolicited proposal from Mr Makhubedu. Yet in the six months after the evidence of Mr Powell and before his own evidence, he claimed not to have raised this issue with Mr Makhubedu. He could provide no explanation for his failure to do so.

23.14 On 29 August 2014 Mr Makhubedu emailed to Mr Makhubo an invoice issued by TSS Managed Services to the City for R106 185 395.36 for the Upgrading of Network and Security Infrastructure.

23.15.1 Did not deny receipt of the invoice

23.15.2 Could provide no explanation as to why the invoice had been emailed to him by Mr Makhubedu; and

23.15.3 Could provide no explanation for his failure to confront Mr Makhubedu on the issue of the invoice either in 2014 or in the 6 months before his evidence at the Commission when the evidence of Mr Powell would have refreshed his memory in relation to the invoice.

23.16 On 1 September 2014 at the instruction of Mr Makhubedu Mr Barry transferred R100 000 into the account of Molelwane providing for the funds to be cleared immediately.

23.17 On 9 September 2014 Mr Makhubedu reminded Mr Makhubo of the donations made by EOH to the ANC by emailing Mr Makhubo drafts of donation receipt letters to be placed on an ANC Greater Johannesburg Region letterhead, signed and returned to EOH Managed Services. The letters were dated 19 June 2014 although they were still in draft form on 9 September 2014. They reflected the following donations:

23.17.1 A donation of R151 000 made on 11 November 2013

23.17.2 A donation of R2 million made on 13 December 2013; and

23.17.3 The donation of R3 million, discussed above, which was made on 16 April 2014, the date of the unsolicited proposal.

23.18 On 12 September 2014 the City issued a payment order directing immediate payment to TSS Managed Services of the amount of R109 737 278.52 in respect of ICT Infrastructure Network WAN and LAN services.

23.19 The amount of R109 737 278.52 was slightly over the price of R106 185 395.36 in the unsolicited proposal and the invoice emailed from Mr Makhubedu to Mr Makhubo.

23.20 On 15 September 2014 Prime Molecular paid R70 000 to Molelwane.

23.21 Also, on 15 September 2014 Mr Makhubedu emailed to Mr Makhubo a draft of a letter of award from the City to TSS Managed Services referring to the (unsolicited) proposal from TSS Managed Services for the provision of Network Infrastructure and Security Services. The draft letter was framed as a letter from the City addressed to Mr Makhubedu on behalf of TSS Managed Services. It stated the following:

> We have pleasure in advising you that after careful consideration of the proposals received and the evaluation thereof, your proposal has been successful and that you have been nominated as the preferred supplier for the Upgrading of the City of Johannesburg Network and Security Infrastructure. Your participation in this tender process is highly appreciated.

23.22 Mr Makhubo did not deny receiving this blank letter of award, but could provide no explanation as to why Mr Makhubedu, being an EOH executive and not a City official, would have drafted such a letter, still less as to why Mr Makhubedu would have emailed the letter to him. He also could not explain why he had not confronted Mr Makhubedu in relation to the prima facie improper blank letter of award.

23.23 On 18 September 2014 Mr Ebrahim Laher of EOH emailed Mr Makhubedu to brief him as to the needs of EOH in relation to City of Johannesburg IT contract issues in advance of Mr Makhubedu's "meeting now with Geoff". "Geoff" appears to be a reference to Mr Makhubo.

23.24 On the same day Mr Makhubedu sent to Mr Jehan Mackay and Ms Rene Jonker a request from the Tshwane ANC Regional Secretary for a donation of R300 000.

23.25 On 19 September 2014 Mr Makhubo emailed to Mr Makhubedu a request for financial assistance in relation to the ANC Greater Johannesburg Region regional conference. His request included a breakdown of conference costs aggregating to R4 300 000. Mr Makhubedu sent the request to Mr Jehan Mackay and Mr Ebrahim Laher on 20 September 2014. Mr Jehan Mackay responded by asking by when the required funds were needed.

23.26 On 20 September 2014 TSS Managed Services paid R570 000 to Molelwane.

23.27 On 2 October 2014 TSS Managed Services transferred R1.5 million into the bank account of the Greater Johannesburg Region of the ANC. Mr Makhubedu emailed Mr Makhubo proof of payment of this amount on the same day.

24. The evidence described above leads inexorably to the conclusion that Mr Makhubedu, Mr Barry and Mr Makhubo conspired to ensure acceptance by the City of the 16 April 2014 unsolicited proposal from TSS Managed Services for the provision of Network Infrastructure and Security Services to the value of over R100 million.

    24.1 The improper process involved repeated payments to Mr Makhubo's entity, Molelwane, from EOH entities or indirectly through Mfundi or entities of Mr Makhubedu to whom Mfundi had paid R1 200 000 as a cost of sales on an Mfundi EOH special invoice.

    24.2 It also involved regular donations to the ANC from the same sources, both in the form of direct donations to the ANC and in the form of payment of expenses on behalf of the ANC.

25. There is reason to believe that Mr Jehan Mackay and Mr Ebrahim Laher were also party to this improper process.

26. Mr Makhubo is now deceased. However, the EOH parties to the prima facie corrupt arrangements between the City and TSS Managed Services are not. The Commission accordingly recommends that:

    26.1 The law enforcement agencies investigate the City's 2014 award to TSS Managed Services of a contract for the Upgrading of the City of Johannesburg Network and Security Infrastructure with a view to the prosecution of Mr Makhubedu, Mr Barry, Mr Jehan Mackay, Mr Ebrahim Laher and any other suspects identified in the investigation on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted.

PART C: THE CITY OF JOHANNESBURG A647 SAP UPGRADE CONTRACT

27. The detailed chronology in relation to the award to EOH of the COJ A647 SAP upgrade contract is as follows:

    27.1 On 2 November 2015, Mr Nyiko Mutileni of EOH emailed Mr Jehan Mackay to inform him that the City had issued a tender for the relevant services. In his email, Mr Mutileni said: "I have also notified Mr Makhubedu because of Geoff's influence". "Geoff" appears to be a reference to Mr Makhubo.

    27.2 On 13 November 2015, Mr Mutileni forwarded to Mr Jehan Mackay an email from Lerato Ngwenya of the City of Johannesburg soliciting donations from EOH in relation to a promotional campaign run by the City.

    27.3 On 20 November 2015, Mr Laher emailed Mr Asher Bobot, the Group CEO of EOH, to inform him that the tender was now out. He wrote:

        > Am meeting with Parks people tomorrow afternoon. Have spoken to Pat and Jehan and will manage that angle separately. Am hopeful we will know more after tomorrow.

    27.4 The references to "Parks", "Pat" and "Jehan" appear to be references to Mr Parks Tau (the then Mayor of Johannesburg), Mr Makhubedu and Mr Jehan Mackay.

    27.5 On 1 December 2015, Mr Laher wrote to the team working on the tender to give an update on the talks relating to the consortium that EOH was seeking to establish. In his email, he said: "I have asked Ashley to contact KPMG as per Pat's conversation with Geoff". Once again, the references to "Pat" and "Geoff" would appear to be references to Mr Makhubedu and Mr Makhubo.

    27.6 Mr Laher responded on 2 December 2015. He wrote with self-conscious euphemism: "Ebs/Pat we need a number urgently that can be allocated for goodwill :) to the organisation".

    27.7 On 1 February 2016, Mfundi paid R200 000 to Molelwane. Prior to the payment, the balance on the Molelwane bank account was R63.19.

    27.8 On 2 February 2016, Mr Laher emailed the EOH team expressing his concerns in relation to the pending tender. He wrote:

        > COJ - am very concerned about the City allowing people to reprice - seems to be a way to catch us out on scope. We need to be careful here. Actions - I will meet with Geoff.

    27.9 On 25 April 2016 Mfundi paid Molelwane R50 000. Prior to the payment, the balance on the Molelwane bank account stood at R617.77.

    27.10 On 30 April 2016, Molelwane invoiced TSS Managed Services for R500 000 plus VAT in respect of LAN and WAN services. The ENS Forensics team that has been given unfettered access to the records of EOH has not been able to find evidence of any work that was done by Molelwane for EOH that could relate to the invoice.

27.11 On 17 May 2016, Mr Mutileni sent to Mr Laher a request for sponsorship of a project run by Ms Pilisiwe Tau, the wife of the then Johannesburg Mayor, Mr Parks Tau, which project would take students on a trip to New York.

27.12 On 19 May 2016, Mr Makhubo emailed Mr Bobot, copying Mr Makhubedu, with a request for donations for the ANC Greater Johannesburg Region municipal election campaign. Attached to his letter was a budget of R50 million.

27.13 On 25 May 2016, Mr Makhubedu emailed Ms Jonker instructing her to pay the R500 000 Molelwane invoice as soon as possible.

27.14 On 26 May 2016, the invoice was queried by Mr Rob Godlonton, an EOH Executive, in an email to Mr Peter Wynne of EOH. Mr Wynne responded: ED [enterprise development] for City of Joburg. It was budgeted for in the financial year 16 numbers. I asked Rene for a schedule at the time of ED payments budgeted when we compile the budgets then if the amount is in the budget I do not ask any further questions.

27.15 On 26 May 2016, Mr Makhubo emailed Mr Makhubedu, Mr Laher and Mr Jehan Mackay to ask for feedback in relation to his ANC donation requests.

27.16 On 30 May 2016, TSS Managed Services paid R570 000 (R500 000 plus VAT) to Molelwane. Prior to the payment, the balance on the Molelwane account stood at R268.48.

27.17 On 31 May 2016, Mr Makhubo transferred R200 000 of the TSS Managed Service payment out of the Molelwane account and into his personal account.

27.18 On 2 June 2016, the Executive Adjudication Committee addressed a letter to EOH Mthombo informing them that their bid for the A647 Contract had been successful. The letter of award provided for an aggregate contract price of R404 million.

27.19 On 27 June 2016, EOH Mthombo ordered (ostensibly for itself) R204 095 worth of computer equipment from its Infrastructure technologies division.

27.20 On 30 June 2016, a delivery note was issued in respect of the computer equipment. Although the delivery note reflected that the equipment was going to be delivered to EOH Mthombo, the delivery address was the address of the ANC Greater Johannesburg Region and the note showed that it was for the attention of “Geoff or Justice”. The cell phone number given on the note for “Geoff or Justice” was the cellphone of Mr Makhubo.

27.21 On 29 June 2016, EOH Mthombo issued a purchase order for R 512 000 for payment to Serendipity Tours of New York travel expenses related to the project of Ms Tau in respect of which the City had solicited funds from EOH.

27.22 On 19 July 2016, Mfundi issued invoices to EOH taken together amount of R16 million plus VAT. Mfundi accounted for the R16 million in its internal accounts as income from “Sales - COJ SAP Support Special” .

27.23 Mfundi then went ahead to spend at least R15 439 068 of the R16 million to pay election expenses incurred by the Greater Johannesburg ANC on its municipal election campaign. On 6 July 2016, Mr Barry emailed Mr Makhubedu a detailed reconciliation of the expenditure of the R15 439 068. The reconciliation was headed “Mfundi Mobile Expenses ANC - GM”. It appears that the reference to “ANC – GM” is a reference to Geoff Makhubo. This can be inferred from the fact that the majority of the expenses reflected on the reconciliation can be linked to emails sent by Mr Makhubo to Mr Makhubedu requesting EOH to pay the ANC expenses in question, and the list also includes travel expenses for Mr Makhubo himself.

28. The evidence described above suggests that Mr Makhubedu, Mr Barry, Mr Makhubo, Mr Jehan Mackay, Mr Laher and Mr Mutileni conspired to procure the improper award to EOH Mthombo by the City of the COJ A647 SAP contract worth R404 million.

28.1 The improper process involved repeated payments to Mr Makhubo's entity, Molelwane, from EOH entities or indirectly through Mfundi out of amounts which Mfundi accounted for as income from "Sales - COJ SAP Support Special".

28.2 It also involved regular donations to the ANC from the same sources, both in the form of the direct donation of computer equipment to the ANC by EOH Mthombo and in the form of payment of election expenses of the ANC by Mfundi out of the R16 million paid to Mfundi by EOH Mthombo and accounted for by Mfundi as income from "Sales - COJ SAP Support Special".

29. Mr Makhubo is now deceased. However, the remaining parties to the prima facie corrupt arrangements between the City and EOH Mthombo are not. The Commission accordingly recommends that the law enforcement agencies investigate the City's 2016 award to EOH Mthombo of the COJ A647 SAP contract with a view to the prosecution of Mr Makhubedu, Mr Barry, Mr Jehan Mackay, Mr Laher and Mr Mutileni and any other suspects identified in the investigation on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted. PART D The Attempt by Mr Jehan Mackay to manipulate his relationship with Mr Zizi Kodwa to Distort Public Procurement Practices.

30. Mr Ncediso Goodenough "Zizi" Kodwa has been Deputy Minister in the Presidency responsible for State Security since 5 August 2021. At the time of the events covered herein, Mr Kodwa was not a public official but was an employee of the ANC and its spokesperson.

31. Over the period 28 April 2015 to 2 February 2014, EOH related entities and Mr Jehan Mackay made aggregate cash payments in the aggregate amount of R1 680 000 to Mr Kodwa and another R30 000 for his benefit.

32. Included within this aggregate amount was an amount of R1 million which, according to Mr Kodwa, was loaned to him by Mr Jehan Mackay for the purposes of buying a Jeep motor vehicle which was bought on 6 June 2015. Although Mr Kodwa is clear that this amount was a loan, the transaction reference on the Tactical Software Solutions statement for the account from which it was paid, described the R1 million payment as "NG KODWA (ANC DONA-JM)". This suggested that Tactical Software Solutions had been informed that the million Rand payment was a donation to the ANC, or possibly to Mr Kodwa himself.

33. In addition, Mr Jehan Mackay and EOH related companies paid hundreds of thousands of rands for luxury rental accommodation for Mr Kodwa. Mr Kodwa testified that he was unaware that the accommodation in question was rental accommodation and that he believed that the properties in question were owned by Mr Jehan Mackay.

34. Mr Kodwa testified that all of the aggregate R1 710 000 payments were made at his request, by or on behalf of Mr Jehan Mackay, at times when he was in financial difficulties. On his own version, Mr Kodwa has never been in a position to repay Mr Jehan Mackay the amounts of the loans advanced to him and has not repaid any of these amounts. However, he insists that they were not payments made as a quid pro quo for any assistance on his part. In particular, he denies that the payments and the luxury accommodation were in any way related to the procurement of government contracts by EOH or related companies.

35. Alongside the benefits Mr Jehan Mackay provided to Mr Kodwa, he also regularly engaged with Mr Kodwa in relation to substantial donations to be made to the ANC by the EOH group. Thus Mr Jehan Mackay and his PA, Charze Gordon, addressed emails to Mr Kodwa:

35.1 On 5 August 2015 inviting Mr Kodwa to send a letter to EOH requesting a R1 million donation in the form of a sponsorship "whatever the purpose"

35.2 On 11 and 12 August 2015, in connection with the payment by EOH Mthombo of R1 million to the Elections Agency apparently on behalf of the ANC

35.3 On 30 September 2015 and 1 October 2015, asking Mr Kodwa's views in relation to a request for a R704 250 donation by way of direct payment of accommodation costs incurred by the Eastern Cape ANC; and 35.4 Between 8 December 2015 and 18 January 2016 in connection with an EOH donation to the ANC in the form of 2500 printed ANC T-shirts.

36. Whatever the subjective intentions of Mr Kodwa, it is clear that Mr Jehan Mackay was attempting to buy influence by making the "loans" that he made to Mr Kodwa and by providing Mr Kodwa with luxury accommodation. Mr Mackay repeatedly attempted to engage Mr Kodwa in relation to pending EOH Group tenders:

36.1 On 14 July 2015 Mr Jehan Mackay addressed an email to Mr Kodwa in relation to a Department of Home Affairs tender. He wrote as follows:

> I hope you good. If it's possible please can you ask the chair to look into DHA RFB 1303/2014 there are games being played. Initially we were number 1 then Pandelani and the head of procurement decided to re-evaluate the bids and now it seems we are disqualified. The total value is about R360million. Also please don't forget to talk to the regional funding coordinator to understand what their funding requirements are.

36.2 This request to "as the chair to look into" the disqualification of EOH from the tender was made barely a month after Mr Kodwa had bought his Jeep with the R1 million loan from Mr Mackay. It also insinuated that Mr Mackay might be holding out the prospect of a large donation to the ANC as a quid pro quo for Mr Kodwa's requested intervention.

36.3 When the offending tender was later cancelled, thus freeing up EOH to compete for the work again, Mr Mackay forwarded the letter of cancellation to Mr Kodwa by email on 2 November 2015.

36.4 Mr Mackay also forwarded to Mr Kodwa internal EOH correspondence of 30 September 2015 to clarify whether the Eastern Cape ANC request for the R704 250 donation discussed above, was a request for a quid pro quo against grant of a pending EOH tender in joint venture with ELCB for an Eastern Cape Provincial Government document management contract.

36.5 Mr Mackay billed R656 200 spent on luxury accommodation for Mr Kodwa as an expense relating to "Project Ingrid" which was the "enterprise development" contribution linked to the SASSA EOH Oracle tender.

36.6 Mr Mackay's R1 million loan / donation to Mr Kodwa was also billed to "Project Ingrid" suggesting that it was an expense relating to the SASSA EOH Oracle tender.

37. Mr Mackay's apparent attempts to induce Mr Kodwa to interfere with procurement processes in the interests of EOH appear prima facie to contravene section 3(b) of the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004.

38. Although the Commission has seen no evidence to show impropriety on the part of Mr Kodwa in relation to the attempts by Mr Jehan Mackay to induce him to interfere with procurement processes in the interests of EOH, it is important to point out that the Commission was not able, due to time constraints, to investigate what Mr Kodwa may or may not have done. It would not be difficult for an influential or important figure in a political party that is the majority party in a municipality to influence either officials within such a municipality or councillors of such municipality to influence relevant officials within the municipality. This point is made here in general, not necessarily suggesting that the Commission is aware of any evidence that Mr Kodwa did or did not influence anybody to do anything improper or unlawful. However, as Deputy Minister for State Security, Mr Kodwa now finds himself in an impossible position.

38.1 Mr Kodwa is beholden to Mr Mackay to whom he owes more than R1.7 million rands. On his own version, this is a debt which he cannot immediately repay.

38.2 If the recommendations of this Commission are implemented, Mr Mackay will be the subject of multiple criminal investigations.

38.3 It is untenable for the Deputy Minister of State Security to find himself in a position where he is beholden to a suspect in multiple criminal investigations.

39. The Commission accordingly recommends that:

    39.1 The law enforcement agencies investigate the attempts of Mr Jehan Mackay described above to induce Mr Kodwa to interfere with procurement processes in the interests of EOH with a view to the prosecution of Mr Jehan Mackay and any other suspects identified in the investigation on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted.

    39.2 The President reconsiders the position of Mr Kodwa as Deputy Minister of State Security having regard to the fact that Mr Kodwa appears to find himself in a position where he is beholden to Mr Jehan Mackay.

ALEXKOR

INTRODUCTION

1. Various allegations have been made of state capture at Alexkor Ltd (Alexkor) and its associated entities. Only two witnesses testified before the Commission in relation to Alexkor, namely: 1. Mr Gavin Craythorne, a marine mining contractor and a founding member and office bearer of the Equitable Access Campaign (EAC); and 2. Mr Albert Torres, a director of Gobodo Forensic and Investigative Accounting (Pty) Ltd (Gobodo), which was appointed by the Department of Public Enterprises in July 2019 to investigate the relationship of Alexkor and its marine mining contractors.

2. During the course of its investigation into state capture at Alexkor, the Commission issued several Rule 3.3 notices and requests for information to various implicated and interested parties in relation to the evidence presented. This resulted in the Commission receiving more than twenty statements, requests for additional information, applications for specific directives and applications to cross-examine witnesses, amounting in total to about 8000 pages of documentary evidence. Unfortunately, the constraints of time and resources made it impracticable for the Commission to formally admit this voluminous information to the record and to afford all the implicated and interested parties an opportunity to testify or to cross examine any witness. As a consequence, the Commission is not in a position to make definitive findings with regard to all relevant matters concerning state capture at Alexkor. There is however sufficient evidence in relation to certain matters that give rise to reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing that justifies recommendations for further investigation by the law enforcement agencies and the board of Alexkor and its associated companies.

BACKGROUND

3. In 2003 the Constitutional Court[6] held that the Richtersveld Community had been in exclusive possession of the land related to this matter before the Commission prior to and after its annexation by the British Crown in 1847 and had the indigenous rights to use its water, to use its land for grazing and hunting and to exploit its natural resources above and beneath the surface. The relevant colonial legislation, the Crown Lands Acts of 1860 and 1887 did not extinguish the land rights of the Richtersveld Community. The Precious Stones Act, however, provided that all occupants of the land except registered surface owners lost their right to occupy and exploit the land. This legislation accordingly did not recognise indigenous ownership. The Constitutional Court held that Richtersveld Community was entitled to restitution of ownership of the land and to the exclusive beneficial use and occupation thereof.

4. Subsequent to the decision of the Constitutional Court a settlement agreement was concluded between the Richtersveld Community, Alexkor and the government on 22 April 2007 and made an order of court. In terms of clause 8.3 of the settlement it was agreed that a joint venture would be pursued between Alexkor and the Richtersveld Community, styled the Pooling and Sharing Joint Venture Agreement (PSJV). It was agreed that Alexkor would retain its marine mining rights, but would transfer its land mining rights to a company formed by the Richtersveld Community, the Richtersveld Mining Company (RMC), to be exploited by them jointly. Alexkor would hold 51% of the shares in PSJV and that RMC would hold the remaining shares (49%).

5. The PSJV was established in April 2011 and mandated to conclude marine mining contracts on behalf of Alexkor and land mining contracts on behalf of RMC. The PSJV does not itself conduct mining operations and all its land, beach and marine mining operations are conducted by contract miners.

6. The joint operations of the PSJV are conducted by an executive management team under the control of a joint board, with three directors representing Alexkor and three directors representing the RMC. The deed of settlement was later supplemented by a further agreement referred to as "the unanimous resolution". In terms of paragraph 6.1 of the resolution, the joint board is responsible for: i. the prospecting and mining for precious stones in the pooled operations area; ii. the "carrying out of the recovery and sale, at the highest prices possible, of precious stones produced from the pooled operations areas.; and iii. carrying out all ancillary and incidental activities for those purposes. The chair of the joint board of the PSJV is always the chair of Alexkor. The CEO of the PSJV reports to the CEO of Alexkor.

7. In his submission to the Commission, Mr Craythorne alleged that there was state capture at Alexkor and the PSJV by the Gupta racketeering enterprise and persons associated with it. The Commission accordingly conducted a preliminary investigation into the allegations of state capture pursuant to its Terms of Reference 1.1 and 1.6.

8. Mr Craythorne's submission was supported in some respects by the forensic investigation conducted by Gobodo and the investigation conducted by Mr Dekker, who is employed by the Commission as a forensic accountant. Mr Dekker performed an analysis of the business and trading activities of Alexkor, the PSJV and Scarlet Sky Investments 60 (Pty) Ltd (SSI), which in 2018 changed its name to Alexander Bay Diamond Company (Pty) Ltd (ABDC). SSI was appointed by the PSJV in 2015 to market and sell all the diamonds produced by the PSJV. The evidence reveals that SSI had links to the Gupta enterprise through its main shareholder, Mr Kuben Moodley. It was a dormant company with no diamond licence or track record in the diamond industry.

9. The DPE also commissioned Fundudzi Forensics (Fundudzi) to conduct an investigation in 2018 into numerous allegations levelled against the DPE and in particular into the appointment of Mr Trevern Haasbroek as a non-executive director to the Alexkor Board by Ms Lynne Brown when she was Minister of Public Enterprises. In addition, the CEO of the PSJV, Mr Mervyn Carstens contracted Mr James Allan to conduct an independent review and audit of the process from sourcing (mining) the diamonds through to the sale point. This investigation was finalised in May 2019. Neither Fundudzi nor Mr Allen testified before the Commission.

THE THESIS OF STATE CAPTURE AT ALEXKOR

10. The thesis advanced by Mr Craythorne is that there was an orchestrated plan of state capture of Alexkor and the PSJV with two specific aims. The first was to implement a plan to diversify the mining operations of Alexkor, which had hitherto been restricted to diamond mining, to include coal and lime mining in order to supply coal to Eskom pursuant to contracts from which the Gupta enterprise could benefit. This would have excluded the Richtersveld Community from the business of Alexkor as its joint venture with Alexkor in terms of the settlement agreement is limited to its diamond assets. The second objective was for SSI to assume exclusive control of the sale of the diamonds of the PSJV, allegedly for the illegitimate benefit of the Gupta enterprise.

11. The process for the repurposing of Alexkor to coal mining was commenced with the assistance of the two Ministers of Public Enterprises appointed by former President Zuma, Mr Malusi Gigaba and Ms Lynne Brown, who both made significant appointments to the boards of Alexkor and the PSJV after they took office, and then announced the new strategic direction for Alexkor to diversify from a diamond mining concern into the production of coal and lime to supply Eskom. Subsequently there was engagement between executives of Alexkor with Regiments Capital (Pty) Ltd (Regiments), the company aligned with the Gupta enterprise that played a key role in state capture at Transnet and Eskom discussed in other volumes of this report. However, no firm contractual arrangement appears to have been concluded between Alexkor and Regiments. SSI, as just mentioned, was then appointed to control the valuation, sale, beneficiation and marketing of the diamonds of Alexkor and the PSJV.

12. The investigators of the Commission have established by means of cell phone records that the key executives and senior employees of Alexkor and the PSJV had links or contact with associates and role players of the Gupta enterprise in the relevant period.

13. Former President Jacob Zuma appointed Mr Gigaba as Minister of Public Enterprises on 1 November 2010 after he dismissed Ms Barbara Hogan as Minister for opposing the appointment of Mr Siyabonga Gama as the GCEO of Transnet. Mr Gigaba appointed Mr Rafique Bagus as chairperson of the board of Alexkor in September 2012. He was previously the Chief Executive of Trade and Investment, South Africa and DDG of the Department of Trade and Industry. Mr Bagus' cell phone records reflect that he made regular telephonic contact with associates of the Gupta enterprise. He had contact with: i. Mr Iqbal Sharma 60 times between the periods between 2008 and 2013; ii. Mr Ashu Chawla eight times between 2008 and 2013; iii. Mr Ajay Gupta 26 times between July 2015 and March 2016; and iv. Mr Rajesh Gupta seven times between May 2015 and March 2016. Mr Bagus also attended the notorious Gupta wedding at Sun City in May 2013.

14. On appointment as chairperson of Alexkor, Mr Bagus immediately began with the new strategic direction of diversification of Alexkor into coal mining. He was also instrumental in awarding the tender to SSI.

15. On 7 September 2012, at a Special General Meeting with the newly appointed board, Mr Gigaba mandated the board to prioritise the recruitment of a new CEO and ensure that the matter was finalised within three months. The board appointed Mr Percy Khoza as CEO of Alexkor on 4 March 2013. Prior to his appointment at Alexkor, Mr Khoza was a General Manager at Optimum Colliery. The corrupt purchase by Tegeta of Optimum, a company associated with the Gupta enterprise, is the subject of investigation before the Commission. Mr Khoza was evidently recruited in order to pursue Mr Gigaba's agenda to diversify Alexkor into coal mining.

16. Mr Mervyn Carstens was appointed as CEO of the PSJV by the PSJV board in August 2012. Mr Carstens was a mining executive with over thirty years' experience in the mining industry, working for De Beers, Anglo American and Trans Hex. He played an important part in the irregular appointment of SSI. His cell phone records reflect at least 107 calls with Gupta associates He was in contact with Mr Kuben Moodley 97 times between September 2015 and May 2017. Mr Carstens was also in contact with Mr Shane, another Gupta associate, approximately 10 times between February and July 2016.

17. Ms Zarina Kellerman was appointed on 1 October 2013 as the Chief Legal Officer of Alexkor and remained in the position until 2 November 2015. It was during her period at Alexkor that SSI was awarded the contract to be the sole agent to sell and market Alexkor's diamond production. Despite the fact that SSI had no diamond license and Mr Kuben Moodley, the majority shareholder in SSI, had no diamond industry background, Ms Kellerman verified the bid of SSI as being compliant with the legal requirements. Ms Kellerman's cell phone records indicate that she had regular contact with Mr Moodley. She made 479 calls to Moodley with a total call duration of 24 112 minutes between August 2015 and April 2018. After Ms Kellerman resigned from Alexkor on 2 November 2015, she was appointed as an adviser to the Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr Mosebenzi Zwane from April 2016 to March 2018 and acted as secretary to Zwane's Inter-Ministerial Committee Inquiry into the closure of the Gupta bank accounts by various commercial banks. Ms Kellerman has confirmed that she assumed the position with Minister Zwane at the suggestion of Mr Moodley.

THE ROLE OF REGIMENTS AT ALEXKOR

18. Shortly after the announcement by Mr Gigaba that Alexkor would be expanding into the coal business to supply Eskom, Regiments (a key player in the Gupta enterprise) started engaging with Kellerman and Khoza at Alexkor. On 1 October 2013, Mr Jonathan Loeb of Regiments sent an email to Mr Khoza, which in relevant part read:

> Please see attached for your review a draft NDA [Non-Disclosure Agreement] between Regiments and Alexkor. Please distribute to your team as I did not receive email addresses. If you're comfortable with the document as is, please fill in the blank spaces, sign and scan back to me for counter-signature. Should you have any comments or proposed edits, please mark these up on the document. Once finalised, we would be in a position to receive and review the master coal supply agreement.

19. On the same day, Mr Khoza forwarded the email with the attached NDA to Ms Kellerman. On 3 October 2013, Ms Kellerman corresponded with Mr Loeb and copied to Mr Wood and Mr Gebreselasie of Regiments, and Mr Khoza, about amendments to the NDA and provided him with the proposed Master Coal Supply Agreement between Alexkor and Eskom, the receipt of which Mr Loeb acknowledged and undertook to keep confidential.

20. Both parties signed the NDA on 3 October 2013. Paragraph 2 of the non-disclosure agreement reads:

    20.1 The parties are in discussion regarding the potential provision of financial and advisory and other services to Alexkor by Regiments.

    20.2 It is inevitable that in relation to the above each party will disclose confidential information to the other party. The parties thus herein agree on the terms and conditions of disclosure of confidential information.

21. On 7 October 2013, Mr Gebreselasie of Regiments sent an email to Ms Kellerman, which he copied to Mr Khoza, Mr Wood, and Mr Loeb which reads:

> As promised, we are in the process of preparing the RFP document for the panel of financial services providers. We will be able to send it to you before close of business today. Can you please forward me your standard adjudication template and standard scorecard if you have any? Your prompt response is highly appreciated.

22. Ms Kellerman responded at once by attaching a RFP for the Land Rehabilitation Plan, intended to serve as a template or prototype to assist Regiments in drafting the RFP for the Financial Services Panel.

23. Two days later, on 9 October 2013, Mr Gebreselasie sent an email to Ms Kellerman, copied to Mr Khoza of Alexkor and Mr Mohohlo, Mr Pillay and Mr Wood of Regiments, attaching the RFP for the Financial Services Panel.

24. On 14 January 2014 Ms Kellerman sent an email to Mr Wood and Mr Loeb of Regiments stating the following:

> I trust that you are well and that 2014 will be a blessed year for you. I have left a message for you at the office. We will be putting out the tender shortly for financial advisors but for now, I am advised that we require your assistance on something specific. As a result, I attach a standard consulting agreement. Have a look at it and we can hopefully finalise this by email. But you are welcome to contact me on my mobile. We will require you to tender in the normal course and if you are successful, a more detailed agreement will follow. Let me have your comments.

25. The next day, 15 January 2014, Loeb sent an email to Mr Wood, Mr Pillay and Mr Gebreselasie of Regiments about a fee proposal for Alexkor. The standard rates table referred to in the email included hourly rates as follows: i) Analyst R3333; ii) Senior Analyst R4167; iii) Corporate Financier R3333; iv) Senior Corporate Financier R4167; v) Due Diligence Analyst R3000; vi) Senior Due Diligence Analyst R4167; and vii) Mining Expert R5000. The Department of Public Service and Administration (DPSA) issues guidance on hourly fee rates to be used when contracting contractors. The hourly DPSA rates recommended for consultants, with effect from 1 April 2013 until 31 March 2014, prescribed a maximum fee of R3156 per hour. Most of the rates proposed by Regiments thus exceeded the maximum DPSA rates and were questionable.

26. On the same day Mr Wood emailed Mr Salim Essa (a key associate of the Gupta enterprise) attaching a fee proposal for Alexkor. Evidence discussed in other volumes of this report has proven that Mr Essa had an arrangement with Regiments in which he or shell companies forming part of the Gupta enterprise received up to 50% of fees paid to Regiments by state owned companies. The email read: "Hi Salim, Fee proposal as discussed, please give me a ring once you have gone through the contents."

27. Later that day, Mr Wood sent an email to Ms Kellerman stating:

> Post our meeting with Humphrey and the team yesterday, we have put forward our thoughts on the fee structuring as detailed below. It does appear difficult to fit this approach into the consulting agreement you sent me yesterday, but would be happy to discuss and expedite in the most efficient manner.

28. Ms Kellerman replied by email on 16 January 2014 stating:

> Thank you for your email and our discussion yesterday. We have now had an internal meeting on this and from our side, we would like to engage you on the valuation and DD [due diligence] at this time only. This will give us time to work through the tender and will assist in curbing Board approvals. In this regard, we can then look at a general consultancy agreement. I would just need to get an indication from you on anticipated man hours. If you are happy with this, could someone from your legal team send a marked-up consultancy agreement for consideration and finalisation? Looking forward to your urgent response on this.

29. Mr Wood responded immediately to Ms Kellerman stating that Regiments was happy to proceed on this basis and undertook to get the team to "mark-up" the consultancy agreement.

30. On 16 January 2014, Mr Loeb sent an email to Ms Kellerman including a copy of Regiments' standard consultancy agreement and stating:

> Please see attached our mark-up to the consultancy agreement including our best estimates of fees per transaction. Please note that our internal legal is still reviewing the agreement and will revert with comments during the course of tomorrow. In the interim, we can proceed based on the attached.

31. The unsigned consultancy agreement attached to Mr Loeb's email provided that Regiments was to be appointed for the period 13 January 2014 to 31 March 2014 or until such time as the contractual duties of Regiments were fulfilled. The contract made provision for renewal and extension by agreement at the discretion of Alexkor. The remuneration payable under the contract was in terms of the fee proposal put forward by Mr Loeb and Mr Wood in the preceding email correspondence. The expected total fee payable was R986 668. It is not clear from the consultancy agreement whether the envisaged contractual performance related to the refocusing of Alexkor into coal and lime mining.

32. There is no evidence before the Commission showing that the contract was eventually concluded between Regiments and Alexkor or of the work performed by Regiments under this contract or of any fee paid to it for such work.

33. After Alexkor advertised the tender for the Financial Services Panel in January 2014, Regiments prepared and presented its own proposal to Alexkor. There is an unsigned letter on record dated 31 January 2014 from Mr Wood addressed to Ms Kellerman attaching a proposal for Regiments to be appointed to the Financial Services Panel of Alexkor.

34. Several companies tendered to be on the panel. It seems Regiments could have been successfully nominated with a number of other bidders. However, it is not clear from the presentation document if Regiments was in fact at any point appointed to the panel. On 21 August 2014, the board decided to place a moratorium on tenders for the Financial Services Panel.

35. While there is no evidence that a consultancy contract was in fact concluded with Regiments or about the nature of the services (if any) provided by or fees paid to Regiments, there were evidently regular engagements between Regiments and Alexkor. Mr Bishop has examined cell phone records which indicate that executives at Alexkor had ongoing contact with staff at Regiments and other well-known Gupta associates over a sustained period of time. However, there is no evidence about the content of these calls or if they were contemporaneous with any relevant transaction involving Alexkor or any company associated with the Gupta enterprise.

36. In the final analysis, the role actually played by Regiments in the attempted state capture of Alexkor has not been sufficiently clarified. The relationship between Regiments and Alexkor requires further investigation and no finding of any specific wrongdoing can be made in that regard.

THE IRREGULAR APPOINTMENT OF SSI

37. In early 2016, the Audit and Risk Committee of Alexkor (ARC) conducted a review of the appointment of SSI as the marketing agent for the PSJV's diamonds. The report sets out the following timeline of events leading to the appointment.

    37.1 On 21 October 2013, the PSJV technical committee raised a concern with management regarding the manner in which diamonds were marketed and the prices obtained in the market by the then service provider, Diamond Marketing Consultants (DMC), which had been appointed before the land claim. During 2013, the PSJV's marine diamond production traded on average at 30.2% below the market. The committee advised management to request approval from the board to appoint a new service provider on a trial basis to decide whether there would be an improvement in pricing. On 23 October 2013, the PSJV management team obtained approval from the PSJV joint board to appoint a new service provider on a trial basis. On 1 January 2014 management appointed Diamond Realisations t/a Fusion Alternatives (Fusion) and cancelled the marketing and sales agreement with DMC. On 16 April 2014, the PSJV joint board gave approval for the management team to begin a tender process for the appointment of a permanent service provider to take the place of DMC.

    37.2 An RFP was published on 31 October 2014. The RFP invited qualified parties to present innovative proposals for enhancing the revenue of the mine through the marketing and post extraction treatment, processing and beneficiation of diamonds extracted in the Richtersveld. The RFP indicated that post the land restitution claim, the PSJV planned to produce in excess of 70 000 carats per annum and that it was necessary to develop and implement a strategy to introduce viable and economically sustainable activities in the Richtersveld that extend beyond primary minerals extraction activity. The RFP aimed at post-mineral extraction services contributing to additional economic benefit for the members of the Richtersveld community that rely on the primary extraction activity for their economic survival. The PSJV intended to leverage its position as primary producer of diamonds to participate in post extraction treatment, processing and beneficiation of its produce that would deliver added benefits to the PSJV and the Richtersveld community.

    37.3 In terms of the RFP, the bidders were required inter alia to implement processes that would achieve continuous improvements of prices for the PSJV produce. To that end the bidders had to show an ability to provide all resourcs including inter alia "legal entities including permits and licences to conduct the business of trading in and/or processing of rough diamonds and/or polished diamonds". Interested bidders were required to formally submit an expression of interest by 7 November 2014, to attend a compulsory briefing on 10 November 2014 and to submit a formal written proposal by 24 November 2014.

    37.4 Nine interested companies, including SSI, submitted written expressions of interest to participate in the tender. SSI's expression of interest dated 6 November 2014 indicated that the directors of SSI were Mr Daniel Nathan and Mr Kuben Moodley, an associate of the Gupta enterprise. At that date, the sole director of SSI was Ms Hazel Ammann, a shelf company stand-in. Company records show that Mr Nathan and Mr Moodley in fact only became directors on 4 December 2014. SSI's own company structure shows that they became shareholders on 20 November 2014 through their respective companies Daniel Nathan Trading (DNT) and Kimomode (Pty) Ltd. Hence, until 4 December 2014, the date upon which Mr Moodley and Mr Nathan officially became directors, SSI was a shelf company. The date upon which they became directors was eleven days after the official closing date of 24 November 2014 for formal written proposals. Mr Moodley, the purported 60% BEE shareholder of SSI, had no diamond industry background at all.

38. Even though there were only seven bids, Mr Carstens, the CEO of the PSJV, outsourced the short-listing of bids to Gamiro Advisory Services, a company controlled by Ms Heather Sonn. Ms Sonn, together with Mr Christo Wiese of Trans Hex later played a part in Alexkor's plans to diversify into coal.

39. Gamiro shortlisted three companies, namely SSI, CS Diamonds and Diamond Realisations (Fusion), who were all invited to make further presentations to the tender committee. Fusion, the incumbent service provider, scored the highest with 75 points; SSI came in second with 71.5 points; and CS Diamond third, with 67 points. SSI was shortlisted although it held no diamond license and Gamiro had awarded it zero points for the licence requirement. Mr Nathan's company, DNT, however, did have a diamond licence, but this could not legally be used by SSI.

40. Various licences are required by players in the diamond industry in terms of the Diamonds Act. Section 19 prohibits the sale of unpolished diamonds and provides that no person shall sell any unpolished diamond unless he or she is: i. a producer; ii. has manufactured that diamond if it is a synthetic diamond; iii. is a dealer; or iv. is the holder of a permit referred to in section 26(h). Section 20 prohibits the purchase of unpolished diamonds and provides that no person shall purchase any unpolished diamond unless he or she is a licensee or is the holder of a permit referred to in 40(1)(b). Section 44 prohibits the utilisation of unregistered premises as a diamond trading house and provides that no person shall use any premises as a diamond trading house unless he or she holds a diamond trading house license and those premises are registered in terms of the Diamonds Act.

41. Mr Bishop and Mr Dekker both maintain that SSI did not comply with these provisions. Any person convicted of contravening section 19 or section 20 of the Diamonds Act is liable to a fine not exceeding R250 000, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding ten years, or to both such fine and imprisonment. A contravention of section 44 of the Diamonds Act carries a penalty of a fine not exceeding R50 000, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding two years, or to both such fine and imprisonment. The South African Diamond and Precious Metals Regulator (SADPMR) has confirmed that SSI had no licences and instead improperly relied on the licence of DNT.

42. Gamiro was aware that SSI had no diamond licences as evident from the fact that it awarded it no points for diamond licences. SSI should have been disqualified at this stage as a diamond licence was a minimum requirement of the RFP.

43. The final selection was conducted on 11 December 2014, at Alexkor's office in Johannesburg by a tender committee comprising: Mr Bagus, Mr Duncan Korabie and Dr Roger Paul. All three scored SSI the highest. Despite all three adjudicators awarding SSI the highest points, there was a significant lack of clarity about its proposal and what exactly SSI had committed to in terms of funding, pricing, beneficiation and community investment.

44. SSI's original proposal was to procure rough diamond production through an outright purchase of production at the price determined by an independent diamond valuer. This was curious in that the RFP was intended to introduce a new system different from the outright purchase arrangement that had hitherto prevailed under Diamdel (De Beers), the erstwhile service provider. The SSI proposal also indicated no cost for handling the rough diamonds as it was an outright purchase. This model was not the preferred model of the PSJV which should have resulted in disqualification. SSI was at some stage allowed to change its proposal to the selling of rough diamonds through an auction process to the highest bidder and to include 1.5% handling fee for handling the rough diamonds. This is a sign that SSI was favoured. There are accordingly reasonable grounds to believe that the outcome of the tender process was a foregone conclusion and not in accordance with section 217 of the Constitution requiring a fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective tender process.

45. The PSJV awarded the tender to SSI on 27 February 2015 notwithstanding that it failed to meet the specified minimum requirements of the tender, more particularly in that SSI had: i. no track record in the diamond industry; ii. no experience in trading in diamonds or in cutting and polishing rough diamonds; iii. no cutting or polishing factory; iv. no licence to buy rough diamonds; v. no licence to sell rough diamonds; vi. no licence to cut and polish rough diamonds; vii. no diamond trading house licence; and vii. no BEE certificate. These were all minimum requirements for the tender; thus, to repeat, SSI's bid was non-responsive and should have been disqualified at the outset.

46. Having won the tender, SSI went from being a dormant shelf company to suddenly appearing on the local diamond trading scene as the PSJV's new marketing and sales service provider, taking delivery of its first tranche of multi-million rand rough diamonds on 15 March 2015. The business address of SSI is the physical address of Mr Nathan's company, DNT and Knox Titanium Vault Company (Knox). Mr Moodley and his wife, as well as other Gupta associates such as Mr Anoj Singh, the former GCFO of Transnet, had personal safety deposit boxes at Knox, which were subject to search and seizure orders by the Commission in 2019 and in respect of which there is a reasonable suspicion that they were used to deposit cash bribes received from the Gupta enterprise.

47. The agreement to sell the diamonds and the eventual sale of them (at a value of almost R2 billion) by the PSJV and the purchase of them by SSI probably constituted criminal offences in terms of sections 19, 20 and 21 of the Diamond Act punishable by a fine not exceeding R250 000, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding ten years, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

48. As mentioned, the SADPMR has confirmed that SSI has never applied for a diamond trading house licence. It instead used the licence of DNT to trade the PSJV diamonds from inception of the contract. The decision of the three members of the tender committee, Mr Bagus, Dr Paul and Mr Korabie, to award the tender to SSI committed the PSJV to a course of criminal conduct. There are accordingly reasonable grounds to conclude that they were in breach of their fiduciary duties as contemplated in section 76 of the Companies Act to advance and protect the interests of the PSJV. Likewise, there are also reasonable grounds to believe that in making the recommendation to the board of the PSJV, the members of the tender committee deliberately made a misrepresentation to the actual or potential prejudice of the PSJV and thereby committed fraud. Similarly, it must follow that there are strong grounds to believe that SSI may have been unlawfully in possession of rough diamonds and each sale by the PJSV to SSI was in contravention of the Diamonds Act. It will therefore be recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of these persons on a charge of fraud and contraventions of the Diamonds Act.

49. Mr Dekker pointed to other possible irregularities by SSI. He alleged that ABDC (the erstwhile SSI) acquired a back-dated diamond trading house licence on the pretext of a name change when no licence was ever conferred to or in the name of SSI and without having to satisfy the requirements of legislation. Mr Nathan is alleged to have informed the SADPMR that the name of his company DNT (which had a licence) was changed to ABDC and thus in this manner he was able to obtain a licence for ABDC (SSI). This information was false in that SSI (which had no licence) and not DNT was the company that changed its name to ABDC. There are therefore reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Nathan, or other employees of SSI (ABDC) an/or DNT wilfully furnished information to the SADPMR or made a statement which was false or misleading and thus contravened section 86 of the Diamonds Act. Accordingly, it is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution for contravention of this provision.

50. The award of the tender to SSI was perhaps illegal for another reason. About five months prior to the award of the tender to SSI, on 4 September 2014, just before the publication of the RFP, the Western Cape High Court declared that certain persons (Dr John Bristow, Mr Duncan Korabie, Mr Willem Vries and Mr Dennis Farmer) purporting since 22 November 2013 to be the directors of RMC (Alexkor's partner in the PSJV), had been unlawfully appointed directors of RMC. The court reinstated Mr Craig Matthews as the sole director of RMC. On the same day, Mr Matthews wrote to Alexkor and the CEO and secretary of the PSJV informing them that Dr Bristow, Mr Korabie, Mr Vries and Mr Farmer were not directors of the RMC and could not serve as representatives of RMC on the PSJV.

51. On 11 September 2014, Mr Bagus replied to Mr Matthews claiming incorrectly that as neither Alexkor nor the PSJV were party to the litigation the court order was of no consequence to them and that an appeal had been lodged against the order. Ms Kellerman reiterated that position in a letter dated 7 November 2014. Subsequent correspondence shows that an appeal was not prosecuted and had lapsed in early 2015. Despite the clear illegality, Mr Bagus, Mr Korabie and Dr Paul (the members of the tender committee) recommended the award of the tender to SSI. In consequence, when the PSJV concluded the contractlwith SSI on 4 March 2015, its board was in all probability improperly constituted and thus the validity of the contract is in question. There are also reasonable grounds to believe that some of the board members of the PSJV acted in breach of their fiduciary duties and Mr Bagus, Mr Korabie and Dr Paul possibly acted in contempt of the court order. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of these persons on a charge of contempt of court.

52. In addition, there is a debate about whether Ms Kellerman and Mr Carstens misrepresented to the board that a due diligence was conducted prior to the award of the tender to SSI.

53. Some months after the contract was concluded with SSI, on 11 September 2015, RMC submitted a complaint to the Public Protector about the irregular awarding of the contract to SSI. The author of the complaint on behalf of RMC was Mr Korabie, one of the directors who had sat on the tender committee and scored SSI 100 points. In the complaint, Mr Korabie referred to a conversation he had with Mr Bagus on 17 December 2014 in which he was requested to approve the conditional appointment of SSI. Mr Bagus later confirmed to the ARC that the reason he sought conditional approval was to ensure that all concerns of the tender committee were addressed even though SSI had attained the highest score. Mr Korabie maintained in his complaint that it was a condition of the award that a due diligence be done, but that this appears not to have been done. SSI was a shelf company and there was insufficient information about who its directors were. Mr Korabie concluded that SSI had been created specifically for the purposes of the tender and the condition of its approval had not been fulfilled as it was not subjected to a proper due diligence process.

54. In November 2015, following a meeting with the Minister of Public Enterprises, RMC agreed not to proceed with the complaint to the Public Protector and for the matter to be investigated internally by the ARC.

55. The ARC report (dated 29 February 2016) records that on 18 December 2014 SSI was informed that the tender was conditionally awarded subject to a due diligence and verifications process. It noted that the due diligence was done by the CEO, Mr Carstens, and the verification was done by Ms Kellerman, the Chief Legal Officer. According to the ARC report, the due diligence report ("Annexure S" of the ARC report) was finalised and circulated to the board members on 29 January 2015 and the tender was awarded to SSI on 27 February 2015 subsequent to the completion of the due diligence and verification process. The ARC concluded that the CEO of the PSJV, Mr Carstens, did "a proper due diligence on all the technical aspects and submitted the report to members of the tender committee in an email dated 29 January 2015".

56. The document referred to as Annexure S, the email of 29 January 2015, is short email and addressed a handful of issues. It is doubtful that it constituted an adequate due diligence for a tender to market diamonds valued in excess of R2 billion.

57. The issue of the adequacy of the due diligence was not explored meaningfully during Mr Craythorne's testimony. He testified that he had seen no evidence of a proper due diligence report and suggested that the ARC report was trying to pass off the perfunctory email of 29 January 2015 from Mr Carstens as a due diligence report. He added that the due diligence appears to have been restricted to a few technical aspects and this was insufficient especially in the absence of SSI having the relevant diamond licences.

58. The ARC report does not deal specifically with the question of licences, presumably because that issue was not raised in the complaint to the Public Protector. The ARC appears to have relied simply on the assurance that Ms Kellerman had done the necessary verifications, which, given that there were no valid licences, she clearly had not.

59. The Gobodo investigation concluded that no due diligence had been performed and that Mr Carstens had misled the board in that regard. Mr Torres of Gobodo confirmed in his testimony to the Commission that the award to SSI was conditional upon the performance of a due diligence. Gobodo interviewed Mr Carstens who told it that a due diligence had been done and that he had informed the board accordingly. Gobodo then repeatedly requested a copy of the due diligence report and was unable to obtain one. This suggests that beyond the email, no proper due diligence was performed. This position is corroborated by what Mr Raygen Philips, the company secretary, told Mr Torres during the course of the Gobodo investigation. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr Torres stated:

> Well Mervin Carstens the CEO actually wrote an email to Board members confirming that he had conducted a due diligence and based on that they accepted it and awarded the contract to SSI... Right from the beginning of our investigation the due diligence report was one of the things that we asked them for. Eventually right at the end they confessed and said, the company secretary actually, Raygen Phillips, said look no due diligence was done... but the email said I have conducted the due diligence.

60. This evidence is prima facie evidence, giving rise to reasonable grounds to believe, that Mr Carstens and Ms Kellerman may have made a significant misrepresentation to the board and possibly have committed the offence of fraud. Ms Kellerman and Mr Carstens in affidavits filed with the Commission strongly deny that and put up the email of 29 January 2015 in support of their claim that a due diligence was in fact done. Accordingly, it will be recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to determining whether fraud was committed in this instance.

61. The insufficiency of the due diligence and verification exercise, if only the absence of the relevant licences, also brings into question whether the members of the ARC (Ms M Lebhobye, Mr T Haasbrook and Mr V Bansi) conducted their investigation with the required diligence and fidelity in accordance with their fiduciary duties.

62. Moreover, the ARC did not thoroughly investigate all the allegations made in the complaint to the Public Protector. The RMC specifically challenged the regularity of the appointment of SSI. Yet in its report the ARC recorded that it had "no response" to this key allegation. It likewise failed to deal meaningfully with the allegations that SSI: 1. was a shelf company without any history in the diamond industry; 2. provided no beneficiation of the diamonds for the benefit of the community; and 3. did not comply with BBBEE legislation. On the basis of its incomplete and unsatisfactory investigation, the ARC concluded that there had been no fundamental breach of procurement procedures in the award of the contract to SSI. The conclusions of the ARC on the basis of its wholly inadequate investigation are mostly unsustainable.

63. The award of the tender to SSI, according to the ARC report, was ratified via a round robin resolution by Mr Bagus, Dr Paul, Ms Z Ntsangula, Mr W Vries and Mr J Bristow. In the complaint to the Public Protector, RMC maintained that Mr Bristow was never appointed by it to the tender committee. His appointment as a director of the board of the RMC, like Mr Korabie's appointment, according to the judgment of the Western Cape High Court, was unlawful and invalid.

64. The contract with SSI was extended shortly after the ARC report was finalised in February 2016 following a tender process conducted in March-June 2016, which according to Gobodo was also attended by irregularities in relation to the short-listing and scoring of bidders that favoured SSI. The contract with SSI was eventually terminated by the PSJV on 11 August 2020 and the parties remain in a contractual dispute. There is no evidence that SSI supplied any meaningful beneficiation services, a key aim of the contract which was intended to benefit the Richtersveld Community.

The allegations regarding the valuation of the diamonds sold to SSI

65. The contract between the PSJV and SSI provided that all diamonds produced by the PSJV were to be marketed and sold by SSI at the highest prices obtainable. The diamonds were sold from the premises in Houghton, where Knox Vaults is situated. According to Mr Craythorne, after the involvement of SSI in the value chain, the price received for the Alexkor diamonds decreased significantly to the detriment of the members of the joint venture, the private mining contractors and the Richtersveld community. He claimed that during 2015, the PSJV's marine diamond production traded at 47.1percent below the market. However, it should be kept in mind that during 2013, prior to the appointment of SSI, the PSJV's marine diamond production traded at 30.2% below the market.

66. The valuation process for the Alexkor diamonds when SSI was the marketing agent was evidently problematic for several reasons. The gravel mined by the private contractors was delivered to two diamond recovery plants at Alexander Bay for batch processing by the contractors with officials from the PSJV. The diamonds recovered by each contractor were counted, weighed and documented. After being sorted into parcels of equal size diamonds, they were sent to Johannesburg where they were cleaned, sorted and valued by Mr Nathan and Mr Horne of SSI. Valuation of the smaller diamonds was not done on an individual basis. The diamonds were sorted by taking a sample divided into categories and a valuation placed on each category. Mr Nathan would then arrive at a weighted average value for the sample and a weighted average for the category. The diamonds were then sold in mixed and single parcels. After the sale, each producer would receive the average price per carat for the contributions they made towards the total weight of each of the various assortments/lots. The special stones over 6.8 carats were sold individually and producers only received price information on the special stones they produced.

67. Mr Craythorne alleges that the PSJV diamonds have been undervalued over the years to the detriment of Alexkor, the Richtersveld community and the private diamond contractors. This he alleges was achieved by: i. undervaluing the diamonds mined by the private contractors at the mine; ii. undervaluing the diamonds sold to the SDT and for beneficiation; and iii. manipulating the tender process to ensure that the diamond parcels are sold to the local diamond traders at reduced prices for on-sale to international buyers at substantially higher prices. He referred also to four corrupt methods used to deprive the producers of fair diamond prices: 1. switching - which involves the swapping out of high-grade stones and replacing them with low grade stones of the same weight; 2. cherry picking - which involves the removal of the highest quality diamonds from the various categories of mixed diamonds prior to the auction, which brings down the price of tender bids dramatically; 3. sawn kap theft - which involves the theft of diamond offcuts, known as "sawn kaps," which arise when the shape of a diamond is such that it would be more profitable to saw a diamond in two and the smaller offcut is written off as waste and then sold as a cut (but not polished) stone; and 4. tender collusion - which involves collusion between the buyers who attend the diamond auctions and the auction service provider.

68. Prior to the dispatch of diamonds by the PSJV to SSI, the quantity of diamonds (carats) to be dispatched were determined by an inexperienced valuator, Ms Adams, who calculated the carat weight of the diamonds from which she estimated the value of diamonds sent to SSI for insurance purposes. Ms Adams did not take into consideration the colour, clarity and cut of the diamonds, which are crucial elements in ascertaining the value of the diamonds produced.The value of a diamond is influenced by four factors, i.e. a diamond of better colour, clarity and cut will obtain a higher value than a diamond with a lesser colour, clarity and cut of the same size or carat.

69. On receipt of the diamonds by SSI, processes were in place to ensure that the total weight in carats dispatched from the mine by the PSJV coincided with the weight in carats received by SSI. There was no similar mechanism to determine that the value of the diamonds dispatched, in terms of carat, colour, clarity and cut, were the same as those received. This is because it was only on receipt of the diamonds in Johannesburg by SSI that the diamonds underwent a process of cleaning. The diamonds were valued by Mr Nathan (diamonds larger than 2.5 carats) and Mr Horne for the smaller diamonds, only after the diamonds had been cleaned. There was no independent valuation by a person representing the PSJV at this stage, leaving the determination of value solely to Mr Nathan or SSI.

70. As the diamonds were not properly valued prior to their dispatch from the PJSV, there was a risk that the diamonds could be undervalued by Mr Nathan to his advantage or that of the buyers and to the prejudice of the mining contractors. This is the nub of Mr Craythorne's complaint. There was also the risk of the diamonds being substituted with lesser value diamonds of the same carat weight, but of inferior quality, prior to their valuation. The PSJV had no control over the profitability of its own business as it relinquished control of the valuation of its produce to an outside party with conflicting interests.

71. Following cleaning and valuation, the diamonds were sorted for sale according to the contract with SSI which required 10% to be set aside for sale to the State Diamond Trader (SDT), 5% be made available for beneficiation purposes and the remainder (85%) be set aside for sale in a closed tender process, the integrity of which Mr Dekker regarded as questionable. The auction process on line allegedly put Mr Nathan in a position of knowing the top three bidding prices and the true value of the diamonds (having himself valued them) and thus he could inform potential bidders of high value diamonds being sold at below market prices. It was further alleged that SSI did not market the diamonds aggressively thus allowing for possible abuse, which Mr Nathan denies.

72. Mr Craythorne maintains that in his opinion the Alexkor diamonds were marketed by SSI at between 30-40% of their true value between 2015 and 2018. Mr Craythorne was not qualified as an expert witness before the Commission and given his financial interests cannot fairly be considered as independent. However, Gobodo performed a comparison of the USD selling price per carat between SSI and two price indexes, the Zimnisky and Bloomberg Prices Indexes. It concluded that for the period 2015-2017 the Zimnisky average USD selling price for the period was 12.27% higher than the SSI selling price and the Bloomberg average USD selling price for the period was 9.47% higher than the SSI selling price. For the period 2017-2018 the Zimnisky average USD selling price for the period was 22.08% higher than the SSI selling price.

73. In view of the incomplete evidence before the Commission, it is not possible at this point in time to offer a full explanation for the price differentials or to make a definitive finding of any wrongdoing on the part of SSI and Mr Nathan in the sale and marketing of the diamonds. Nonetheless, it remains incumbent on the board of Alexkor and the PSJV to decide if true and fair value was received for the sale of diamonds to SSI in the period 2015-2019.

74. Mr Dekker also performed an analysis of the monthly registers of SSI, required in terms of section 57 of the Diamonds Act. The registers reflected that several different names were entered as the diamond trading house licence holder, namely Daniel Nathan Trading CC; Daniel Nathan Trading House; Alexander Bay Diamond Company Trading House; and Alexander Bay Diamond Company. This gives rise to reasonable suspicion of a misrepresentation having been made to the SADPMR by the executives or employees of SSI, as the diamonds were in fact traded by SSI, an unlicensed trader. The incomplete evidence does not permit the making of a definitive finding in this regard, but the matter requires further investigation with a view to possible prosecution by the law enforcement agencies for a contravention of section 86(c) of the Diamonds Act, which provides that any person who falsely gives himself (sic) out to be a holder of a licence under the Act shall be guilty of an offence.

75. Mr Dekker also compared the purchases of diamonds declared by SSI in its registers to the diamonds delivered to SSI by the PSJV in the PSJV registers between May 2015 and July 2019. The PSJV recorded sales to SSI of 253 507.78 carats, with a value of approximately R1.737 billion. The SSI register however recorded a purchase of 253 311.63 carats, with a value of approximately R1.732 billion. Thus, the SSI register failed to account for 196.15 carats valued at R5.136 million. Mr Dekker accordingly recommended that this difference should be further investigated to determine if any crime was committed and to establish whether the PSJV had a cause of action for recovery of the alleged underpaid amount.

76. Mr Nathan, in an affidavit filed with the Commission, but which was not admitted on the record, disputes Mr Dekker's calculation. He maintains that Mr Dekker ignored the fact that SSI was entitled to 1.5% commission on the sales price of the diamonds sold on auction and that DNT (notably not SSI) bought a portion of the diamonds from the PSJV for beneficiation purposes which was paid separately (presumably by DNT) to the PSJV. He maintained that if the commission payable by the PSJV to SSI is subtracted and the amount paid by DNT for the diamonds to be beneficiated was added back there was no shortfall. Mr Nathan provided no arithmetical calculations or relevant documentation in support of this particular contention. There is no sign in the registers of any purchases made by DNT from the PSJV. Moreover, because of the time constraints facing the Commission, Mr Dekker was not afforded an opportunity to respond to the allegation that he had made a miscalculation and neither Mr Dekker nor Mr Nathan testified before the Commission. Nevertheless, given the serious nature of the alleged theft or fraud, further inquiry into the matter is needed and it will be recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to a possible prosecution.

77. Mr Dekker also alleged that SSI underpaid the PSJV an amount R1.718 million in relation to a sale of parcel 248. Mr Nathan denied this in his affidavit. He maintained that 86.94 carats of the shipment were removed and sold to DNT for beneficiation purposes. In support of his version he annexed an invoice from the PSJV to SSI (not DNT) in the amount of approximately R2.368 million, which does not correspond with the alleged missing value. This matter too requires the law enforcement agencies to conduct such further investigations as may be necessary.

78. In its report Gobodo indicated that SSI had failed to disclose to it the full identity of the buyers of the rough diamonds sold by it in the auctions. There has been some suggestion (though no clear evidence) that some of the buyers may have had links with the Gupta enterprise. Gobodo consequently recommended that further investigation be conducted to identify the buyers of the rough diamonds and the related prices for the rough diamonds to ensure that the buyers had the required licences and that the sales had been registered with the relevant authorities in accordance with the provisions of the Diamonds Act.

79. It will accordingly be recommended that the SADPMR conduct an inquiry in terms of section 79 of the Diamonds Act to determine if all the buyers to whom SSI sold rough diamonds were in possession of the requisite licences as contemplated in Chapter IV of the Diamonds Act; and, where appropriate to refer any possible contraventions of sections 18, 19, 20 and 21 of the Diamonds Act to the law enforcement agencies for any further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of such persons for offences under the Diamonds Act or any other law.

THE PROPOSED DIVERSIFICATION OF ALEXKOR INTO COAL MINING

80. On 13 September 2013, the Deputy Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Bulelani Magwanishe made the following media statement:

> I'm pleased to announce today, that the board has responded with a game changing strategy that has a well-crafted compelling value proposition that . . . positions Alexkor as a world-class mining company with aspirations to respond to the immediate needs of the country.
> Our own analysis shows that Eskom will start experiencing coal supply shortages by 2018. The state has to move fast to avert an energy crisis. Electing to enter coal mining, will fundamentally change the value proposition of Alexkor to the people of South Africa.
> Alexkor's new strategy provides the state with a significant lever in engaging with coal majors, who are mainly multinationals, with a narrow responsibility to the country's economy. Alexkor is expected to be a vanguard for transformation in the coal mining sector, as the government's call for transformation in the sector has effectively gone unheeded.
> Black emerging miners are still battling to gain a footing in the sector. Alexkor will partner emerging black, women, youth-owned miners through offering the necessary technical and business expertise to enable graduation of these miners from emerging to established, realising the objectives of the Eskom Emerging Miners Strategy, which as a department we have championed.

The repositioning of Alexkor satisfies another policy imperative. The Minister of Public Enterprises (Mr Gigaba) mentioned during his 2013 Budget Vote speech: the push for SOC-to-SOC collaborations. A year ago an Alexkor-Eskom collaboration at such a strategic level was inconceivable. Now we are at the threshold of shaping the future of this country; and Alexkor is on the verge of finding its place into South Africa's future sustainable growth story. Alexkor is also looking at high grade limestone supply to assist Eskom with its flue gas desulphurisation plants, and transportation cost is a major component of the price of burnt lime and leveraging SOC infrastructure will provide a cost advantage. The company's diversification strategy will ensure that it explore mining opportunities on the African continent.

81. Business Day reported on 16 September 2013 that Alexkor, which at that stage did not have any coal prospecting or mining properties, appeared to be duplicating the mandate of state-owned coal mining company, African Exploration Mining and Finance Corporation (AEMFC), which produced coal for Eskom from the Vlakfontein mine near Wltbank, and was planning expansion. Answering questions at a press briefing after Alexkor's Annual General Meeting on 13 September 2013 in Pretoria, Mr Magwanishe denied that there was a potential conflict between Alexkor and AEMFC.

82. Alexkor's new coal strategy was a radical departure from the past and was supposedly aimed at transforming Alexkor into a diversified mining company that would ensure the long-term sustainability of mining operations.

83. Corporate documentation produced by Alexkor during 2013-2016 in relation to its strategic objectives and business development discuss the plan to exit diamond mining and to diversify to coal mining. However, no evidence was presented to the Commission of any practical steps taken by Alexkor or other interested parties to give effect to those objectives and plans during that period. As discussed earlier, some attempt was made to on-board Regiments as a financial adviser on the project in 2014, but the evidence is insufficient to determine what role (if any) it played in effecting the new strategy.

84. A few years later, on 8 May 2017, a memorandum of understanding (MOU) between IPC Beneficiation (Pty) Ltd (IPC) and Alexkor was signed. The MOU stated that a new company would be established and that the shareholding would be Alexkor- 55% and IPC- 45%. It was provided that a new company (Alexcoal) would enter into logistics and supply agreements with WesCoal and Nungu Mining, for the supply of washed coal to Eskom. On 20 October 2017, Ms Hantsi Matseke, the then chairperson of Alexkor and the PSJV wrote a letter about the establishment of Alexcoal to Ms Lynne Brown, the Minister of Public Enterprises, in which she acknowledged the Minister's conditional approval to proceed with the negotiations with IPC.

85. The Commission's investigating team maintain that the entire coal deal was a strategy of the Gupta enterprise to position itself to control Alexkor coal business, which consisted of IPC, WesCoal and Nungu Mining. This is clear from a bulletin, dated 27 January 2015,l released by a company associated with the Gupta enterprise, namely Centaur Holdings Ltd based in Dubai. The company states on its website that it has interest in developing coal properties in South Africa. Its key shareholders are Mr Aakash Garg Jahajgarhia, who is married to the daughter of Mr Anil Gupta. Centaur claimed to have signed a $100 million (R1.4 billion) revolving credit facility with an anonymous Dubai based family (possibly the Guptas) to expand its natural resources projects in South Africa. It also contributed towards the R2.15 billion purchase price of Optimum Coal Holdings by Tegeta Exploration & Resources, a subsidiary of Oakbay Investments, part of the Gupta enterprise.

86. The Centaur bulletin announced that Centaur had completed a funding package for IPC. Under the terms of a cooperation agreement, Centaur agreed to provide secured capital to expand IPC's existing opencast mining operations at the Nungu Colliery. Evidence before the Commission reveals that plans were already afoot in August 2014 to acquire the Nungu concessions that would form part of the new Alexcoal. An email to Mr Tony Gupta from Mr Ravindra Nath of Oakbay on 28 August 2014 indicates that the Gupta enterprise was involved with Nungu and there was a plan to conclude a coal supply agreement with Eskom.

87. In his evidence before the Commission Mr Craythorne raised another possible dimension and rationale for the plan of Alexkor to diversify into coal. He maintained that with the appointment of Mr Gigaba as Minister of Public Enterprises in late 2010, "a process of twin state capture began". At the same time SSI was appointed and the Minister announced the diversification into coal, other companies Trans Hex, and Questco, a corporate adviser, devised a plan to persuade Alexkor to dispose of its diamond assets in the region and to diversify into coal. He claimed that these persons, aligned with executives in Alexkor and the PSJV, intended to: 1. take management control of Alexkor's marine diamond operations; 2. construct a false narrative about the future mining potential of the marine mining rights, by telling all stakeholders that the diamond resource would be depleted within five to ten years, while simultaneously stripping the assets of Alexkor; and 3. purchase Alexkor's marine diamond operations and take over the 51% stake in the PSJV.

88. This plan, Mr Craythorne said, was given traction when Mr Gigaba repurposed the Alexkor board in order to implement his "Emerging Black Coal Miner Exit Strategy." Mr Craythorne claims the plan led to Alexkor diverting significant and vital financial resources away from the operations of the PSJV in order to diversify into coal - a mandate that he contends was irrational (given the lack of funding) and extremely harmful to the Namaqualand economy. It was also contrary to the true mandate of Alexkor and the PSJV. Mr Craythorne provided no evidence of the nature and value of the resources that were diverted for this purpose. 89 The evidence upon which Mr Craythorne relied to advance this particular thesis consists of a document prepared by Questco for a presentation to Alexkor in August 2014. The document begins with the following statement:

> Questco understands that Alexkor has recommended that the Government... exits from all diamond mining interests and pursue opportunities relating to strategic minerals. This presentation proposes mechanisms by which this exit may be achieved in an orderly manner and sustainable value created for all stakeholders. This presentation follows initial meetings with Percy Khoza and his team, and provides more detail in respect of the concepts discussed at this meeting. The concepts set out in this presentation are high level in nature and assumptions made are subject to further discussion and verification – we look forward to further engagement in this regard.

89. The document found the mechanics of the plan to be the winding up of the PSJV and the exit by government from Alexkor in exchange for cash and shares. Alexkor and RMC would receive shares in Trans Hex in exchange for winding their diamond interests into Trans Hex, which would hold 100% of Alexkor land and marine assets.

90. According to Mr Craythorne, the central aim of the Questco/Trans Hex plan was to acquire Alexkor's' marine diamond assets at a reduced value by: i. winding up the PSJV and populating the executive management structure with Trans Hex proxies; ii. understating the true value of the marine diamond assets; and iii. ensuring the costs of acquisition of the assets are minimal by creating "a false sense of low value regarding the assets and a high level of owner fatigue."

91. There is no evidence before the Commission of any practical steps that were taken between 2014 and 2017 to implement the Questco proposal. However, the plan to diversify into coal was discussed by the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Public Enterprises on 16 November 2016 when Alexkor presented its 2015/16 Annual Report, where scepticism was expressed about the plan and its financial viability.

92. Mr Craythorne seems to have taken up the Questco issue in 2017 and this generated a letter dated 9 March 2017, addressed to the marine contractors (including Mr Craythorne) by Ms Matseke, the chairperson of Alexkor and the PSJV, which in relevant part reads:

> It has come to the attention of Alexkor that certain rumours are being spread... which are without any factual basis and devoid of truth. These untrue rumours are: a) that Alexkor intends to sell off its marine assets; b) that Alexkor is negotiating with two potential purchasers for the marine assets; and c) that the potential purchasers will take over all mining activities in the marine area, with the result that all the current marine mining contracts would be terminated.
> On behalf of Alexkor, I state categorically that these rumours are false and without any factual basis.

93. There is no coherent evidence before the Commission confirming that the Questco plan, conceived eight years ago in 2014, has been implemented in any way or that any person associated with it acted illegally or improperly. Mr Craythorne states in his affidavit that the plan is "for all practical purposes is a reality, as the entire Northern Cape is under the direct control of Trans Hex, or its proxy management team in the PSJV – a situation which has enabled Trans Hex and Alexkor to deny the longstanding mining contractors access to all the Northern Cape shallow water concessions.." The statement is short on details, but also reveals Mr Craythorne's partisan concern to advance the interests of his constituency.

94. Given the insufficiency of the evidence, and the fact that those who proposed the Questco plan have not had an opportunity to present evidence about it, the Commission is not in a position to make any findings about its legitimacy or of any wrongdoing or impropriety related to it.

95. In 2018 the Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Gordhan placed a moratorium on the coal acquisition plans by Alexkor and the proposed coal strategy came to a halt. In the final analysis nothing material came of the plan.

96. While the information regarding the proposed diversification is revealing in some respects of the modus operandi and intentions of the Gupta enterprise in relation to Alexkor, and adds to the overall picture of state capture, the limited investigation which the Commission was able to conduct and the evidence in relation to the proposed diversification of Alexkor did not disclose any specific offences on the part of the executives and board members of Alexkor in relation to the plan to diversify into coal mining. The available information nonetheless adds to the body of evidence that some at Alexkor had aligned themselves with the project of the Gupta enterprise. A fuller investigation may well reveal criminal conduct on the part of those involved.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

97. On 12 September 2019, an Administrator of Alexkor was appointed to assume the positions of executive chairperson of Alexkor and the PSJV and inter alia to undertake an extensive review and analysis of the events that took place.

98. In the light of the preceding discussion and analysis the following recommendations are made:

    98.1 It is recommended that the board of Alexkor conduct a full investigation into any contract with and fees paid to Regiments to determine the precise nature of any services rendered by Regiments and whether Alexkor received full consideration and value.

    98.2 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, ABDC, Mr Daniel Nathan and the directors and employees of SSI, ABDC or any associated company on charges of contravening sections 18, 19, 20, 21, 44 or other relevant provisions of the Diamonds Act.

    98.3 It is recommended that the board of Alexkor and the PSJV investigate whether Mr Bagus, Dr Paul and Mr Korabie (the members of the tender committee) were in breach of their fiduciary duties as contemplated in section 76 of the Companies Act by making a misrepresentation to the board regarding SSI's compliance with the tender requirements with a view to an application to declare them delinquent in terms of section 162(5)(c) of the Companies Act.

    98.4 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Bagus, Dr Paul and Mr Korabie (the members of the tender committee) for fraud or a contravention of section 214(1)(b) of the Companies Act by deliberately making a misrepresentation regarding SSI's compliance with the tender requirements.

    98.5 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of any director, executive or employee of SSI (ABDC) an/or DNT for a contravention of section 86 of the Diamonds Act by wilfully furnishing false information to the SADPMR or making a false or misleading statement in relation to the right of ABDC to obtain a diamond licence.

98.6 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Carstens and Ms Kellerman for fraud or a contravention of section 214(1)(b) of the Companies Act for making a misrepresentation to the board that a proper due diligence was performed prior to the award of the tender to SSI.

98.7 It is recommended that the board of Alexkor and the PSJV investigate whether Mr Carstens and Ms Kellerman were in breach of their fiduciary duties as contemplated in section 76 of the Companies Act by making a misrepresentation to the board regarding the performance of a due diligence on SSI with a view to an application to declare them delinquent in terms of section 162(5)(c) of the Companies Act.

98.8 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Bagus, Mr Korabie, Dr Paul and other persons who purported to function as board members of the PSJV for contempt of the court order issued by the Western Cape High Court on 4 September 2014.

98.9 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, Mr Daniel Nathan Trading CC, Daniel Nathan Trading House, Alexander Bay Diamond Company Trading House, Alexander Bay Diamond Company, and the directors, executives or employees of these companies, for a contravention of section 86(c) of the Diamonds Act, by falsely giving out in the registers of SSI that such persons were holders of the required licence when the diamonds were in fact traded by SSI, an unlicensed trader.

98.10 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, or any director, executive or employee of SSI, on any relevant charge in relation to diamonds of 196.15 carats valued at R5.136 million allegedly not accounted for in the SSI register.

98.11 It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, or any director, executive or employee of SSI on any relevant charge in relation to an alleged underpayment to the PSJV of an amount of R1.718 million in relation to a sale of the diamonds in parcel 248.

98.12 It is recommended that the SADPMR conduct an inquiry in terms of section 79 of the Diamonds Act to determine if all the buyers to whom SSI sold rough diamonds were in possession of the requisite licences as contemplated in Chapter IV of the Diamonds Act; and, where appropriate to refer any suspected contraventions of sections 18, 19, 20, 21 or other provisions of the Diamonds Act to the law enforcement agencies for any further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of such persons for offences under the Diamonds Act or any other law.

FREE STATE ASBESTOS PROJECT

INTRODUCTION

1. The Commission has heard evidence and considered documentation relating to a project in the Free State Province that came to be known as the “Asbestos Audit and Eradication Project”, which claimed to audit the presence of asbestos in housing yet failed to provide any benefit to any resident of that Province other than two businessmen and certain high-ranking government officials.

2. The conceptualisation and implementation of this project suggests that it was a scam of considerable complexity from its inception. There is every indication that this asbestos audit was always intended to unlawfully benefit a business consortium and that those financial benefits were extended to at least the relevant senior provincial officials and the Director-General (DG) of the National Department of Human Settlements.

3. Preliminary investigations suggest that at least one of these businessmen engaged in financial transactions with politically connected individuals, although investigation has not revealed what reciprocal benefits, if any, were rendered or anticipated in return by these individuals.

4. Because of the apparently irregular and possibly criminal transactions identified during the investigation by the Commission, a full examination of the evidence is undertaken in what follows below before conclusions and final commentary are offered.

OVERVIEW OF THE FREE STATE ASBESTOS CONTRACT, BUDGET AND WORK

5. The following facts are undisputed and provide an outline of how a contract was concluded during 2014 between the Free State Department of Human Settlements (the Department) and the Joint Venture (JV) entity known as Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd (Blackhead) and Diamond Hill Trading 71 (Diamond Hill) (the JV), its implementation and associated costs.

6. Out of the blue, an unsolicited commercial proposal, dated 28 May 2014 and emanating from the JV, was received at the offices of the Department. The proposal was titled “Audit, Handling of Hazardous Material, Removal and Disposal of Asbestos-Roofed Houses”. The Proposal from the JV attached a “scope of work” which included “physical door to door counting, safe removal and disposal of Asbestos-Contaminated Building Rubble and asbestos sheets from various townships across the Free State Province”.

7. Mr “Tim” Mokhesi, Head of Department (HOD), wrote to Mr Thabane Zulu, the DG of the National Department of Human Settlements (the National Department), Ms Mary-Anne Diedericks, the Acting HOD of the Gauteng Department of Human Settlements (the Gauteng Department) and the Free State Provincial Treasury (FS Treasury) to obtain approval and authorisation in terms of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 for Blackhead to conduct the “Asbestos Audit and Eradication Project” in the Free State.

8. Ultimately, on 1 October 2014, Mr Mokhesi wrote to Mr Edwin Sodi, Director and CEO of Blackhead, appointing “Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd Joint Venture” to perform “the audit and assessment of asbestos, handling of hazardous material, removal and disposal of asbestos-contaminated rubble and replacement with SABS approved materials in the Free State Province”.

9. The Service Level Agreement (SLA) entered between the Department and the JV described the “Project” as an appointment to “assess/audit houses roofed using asbestos material, handling and disposal of asbestos sheets to an approved, designated disposal site”.

10. The Instruction to Perform Work (IPW) was signed by Mr Mokhesi on behalf of the Department on 2 December 2014. It was divided into Phase 1 and Phase 2 and specified the price to be R850.00 (excluding VAT) per housing unit for the JV to “Audit, Assess and GPS all pre-1994 government housing units in the Province”. The duration of the performance of the job was from 1 December 2014 to 31 March 2015.

11. Payment was to be made in four tranches:

    11.1 Forty% of 50% of the total project cost (R51 million excluding VAT) was payable on commencement (1 December 2014) subject to submission of a valid tax invoice and valid tax clearance certificate

11.2 Sixty% of 50% of the total project cost (R76 million excluding VAT) was payable “as progress certificate No. 2 on or before the 1 March 2015”

11.3 Sixty percent of 50% of the total project cost (R51 million excluding VAT) was payable per progress certificate No. 3 on or before 1 May 2015; and

11.4 Sixty percent of 50% of the total project cost (R76.5 million excluding VAT) was payable per progress certificate No. 4 subject to submission of the final project report on or before 1 June 2015.

12. It appears to be common cause that the role of Diamond Hill was to “unlock opportunity” through networking with politicians and state officials in the Free State to procure business opportunities and contracts; that the role of Blackhead was to act as a “middleman” and that the work itself was outsourced in the following way: the JV subcontracted to Mastertrade, Blackhead to Zenawe; and Mastertrade to the Ori Group.

Project reporting

13. Four reports were submitted to the Department – 1. a preliminary report dated 4 December 2014; 2. a Final Audit Report dated 2 February 2015 (with a later version of the same Final Audit Report dated 13 February 2015); 3. the Report of Houses to be Prioritised dated 25 February 2015; and 4. a Remedial Report dated 2 September 2016, and a presentation was made to the Department giving an overview of the Project.

14. The first Final Audit Report (Final Report) submitted by the JV to the Department on 2 February 2015 purports to have been prepared by Mr Mpambani of Diamond Hill. The Final Report stated that the JV was appointed to “assess and quantify the entire stock of low density residential housing roofed with asbestos in the Free State Province with the ultimate aim of eradicating these roofs” and that their assessment “would enable the Department to formulate a plan to replace the affected roofs”. The Final Report claims to have “walked” 617 093 stands in five district municipalities of which +/- 302 000 stands were captured electronically, and of which 36 344 units were found to contain asbestos. The Final Report further quotes the costs for the removal of asbestos roofs, demolition and reconstruction of houses and renovation of houses in the region of R3.8 billion excluding VAT.

Project implementation

15. Inspections and approvals were meant to have been conducted. A representative of the Department’s Project Management Unit (PMU) should have conducted spot checks but, in the case of this Project, these inspections were done visually and there was no testing of or on the asbestos itself. The Chief Engineer for the PMU, Mr Thabiso Makepe, would have confirmed whether or not the work had been done. Mr Makepe confirmed that the Finance Unit would not pay an invoice if there had been no verification of such work by the PMU. Mr John Matlakala, Head of Procurement for the Department, stated that the CFO, Ms Nyana Leuna, was the person who approved the JV’s invoices.

16. The SLA was to the effect that the sum of R850.00 was to be paid for each housing unit; the total sum claimed was R255 million.

17. Several invoices were submitted and paid. The Department paid the total sum of R230 million into the First National Bank account in the name of the JV. From this JV bank account, funds were transferred to:

17.1 Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd in the total amount of R70 863 000.00

17.2 606 Consulting Solutions (an entity owned by Mr Mpambani) in the total amount of R112 955 500.00; and 17.3 Mastertrade (one of the subcontractors) in the total amount of R36 483 597.90.

The Auditor-General

18. The Auditor-General (AG) prepared a report on the Department, which was released on 1 July 2015. Firstly, the AG noted that he was "unable to obtain sufficient appropriate audit evidence for commitments disclosed in Note 20 to the financial statements as the Department did not maintain accurate and complete records of the contractual information used to determine commitments". Secondly, the AG found that he could not obtain "sufficient appropriate audit evidence that all contracts were awarded in accordance with the legislative requirements". The AG continued "... the department incurred irregular expenditure of R80 965 000 (2014: R858 934 000) during the year under review as the department did not design and implement a policy relating to housing contracts that will address the constitutional requirement of fair, equitable and transparent procurement processes."

The Report of the Public Protector

19. A complaint was lodged with the Public Protector, then Adv Thuli Madonsela, on 22 October 2015 by Ms L Kleynhans, a Democratic Alliance Party Member of the Free State Provincial Legislature, concerning the contract between the Department and the JV (the Service Provider). The PP summarised the complaints as follows: "In the main, the complaint was that the contract for the eradication of asbestos roofed houses in the Free State was irregularly awarded to the Service Provider as it was contrary to Regulation 16A6.6".

20. The Public Protector investigated, firstly, whether or not the Department followed proper procurement processes in awarding the contract to the Service Provider and whether such conduct was improper and unlawful, and constituted maladministration. Secondly, whether the services provided were cost-effective and whether the Department received value for money in the execution of this contract. Thirdly, whether the advance payment made to the Service Provider was irregular and whether the invoices in respect of which the Department made payment complied with the legislative prescripts.

21. The full Report of the Public Protector was issued on 30 March 2020. The Report dealt with the issues set out below.

Whether the Department failed to follow proper procurement processes

22. The Public Protector found that there were irregularities and improprieties in the awarding of the contract for the eradication of asbestos roofs in the Free State Province to the Service Provider as:

    22.1 The Department participated in an expired contract of the Gauteng Department and did not conduct a due diligence investigation before participating in this contract. The Department was in possession of the Gauteng Department's SLA, which had clearly expired. This amounted to improper conduct as envisaged in section 182(1) of the Constitution and maladministration as envisaged in section 6(4)(a)(i) of the Public Protector Act, 1994.

    22.2 The Department created the impression that they participated in a contract concluded by another state institution (the Gauteng Department) while the services were not the same as specified in the existing contract and the price was also higher. This was in contravention of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 and amounted to improper conduct and maladministration.

    22.3 Further, the submission made by the Service Provider was in fact an unsolicited proposal that should have been dealt with in terms of Treasury Practice Note No. 11 of 2008/2009. The Practice Note required the Department to issue a Request for Qualification (RFQ) to test the market for the existence of other private entities capable of providing the product or services. The failure to issue an RFQ was in contravention of the Practice Note and the Department's SCM Policy. It was further in contravention of Regulation 16A.9 and amounted to abuse of the procurement system, and improper conduct and maladministration.

    22.4 The discrepancies between the services to be provided in the unsolicited proposal, the SLA and the letter of appointment created the impression that the appointment was for the assessment, removal of the asbestos material and replacement of asbestos roofs, while the SLA referred only to assessment and removal. The IPW (Instruction to Perform Work) was issued only for the assessment. The SLA was in contravention of the Department's SCM policy as it was not an accurate reflection of the terms and conditions reflected in the unsolicited proposal or appointment letter. This was in contravention of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 and amounted to improper conduct and maladministration.

22.5 In addition, the PP found that Mr Mokhesi as the Accounting Officer (AO) did not comply with section 38 of the of the Public Finance Management Act (PFMA). He failed to execute his fiduciary duties in terms of the PFMA and the Department's SCM Policy, and his conduct amounted to gross negligence in terms of section 86 of the PFMA. This conduct amounted to improper conduct and maladministration.

Whether the services provided were cost-effective and whether the Department received value for money in the execution of this contract

23. The Public Protector found that the allegation that the services provided were not cost-effective and that the Department did not receive value for money was accurate.

24. The HOD told the PP that he was unaware that the Service Provider had subcontracted the contract. However, if the HOD had acted on the AG's Report released on 31 July 2015, the further payments of R139 million would have been avoided. The omission by the HOD to act on the AG's report amounted to gross negligence in terms of section 38 read with section 86 of the PFMA.

25. He failed to execute his fiduciary duties in terms of the PFMA and the Department's SCM Policy. This conduct amounted to improper conduct as envisaged in section 182(1) of the Constitution and maladministration as envisaged in section 6(4)(a)(i) of the PPA.

Whether the advance payment made to the service provider was irregular and whether the invoices which the Department made payment on complied with legislative prescripts

26. The Public Protector found that Treasury Regulations do allow for advance payments on contract amounts if required by the contractual arrangements with the supplier. The contract signed between the Service Provider and the Department clearly provided for an advance payment of 40% of 50% of the contract price.

27. However, as the contract was irregularly concluded, the advance payment was irregular, which confirmed the AG's finding.

28. The invoices submitted by the Service Provider to the Department did not comply with the legislative prescripts and the payment of these invoices by the Department was therefore irregular. This conduct amounted to improper conduct and maladministration.

Remedial action of the Public Protector

29. Adv Madonsela took the remedial action described below in accordance with the provisions of section 182(1)(c) of the Constitution:

29.1 The Premier of the Free State (Mr Ace Magashule) was directed to take appropriate steps to ensure that the conduct of the AO/HOD and the Director: SCM were investigated in terms of Section 84 of the PFMA, and that the conduct was reported in terms of Section 86 of the PFMA to the SAPS and to the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation (DPCI or "Hawks").

29.2 The HOD (Mr Mokhesi) was directed to take the appropriate steps to ensure that the conduct of the Director: SCM (Mr John Matlakala) is investigated in terms of Section 84 of the PFMA; to take the appropriate steps to ensure that the Department's SCM Policy is amended to correctly reflect the legislative prescripts; and to take appropriate steps to ensure that officials are properly trained in the SCM legislative prescripts.

The work of the Commission

30. After studying the Report, Findings and Recommendations of the Office of the Public Protector, the Commission arranged for further investigations of the various interactions, transactions and payments prior to and pursuant to this contract between the Department and the JV. In the course of these investigations, statements and affidavits were obtained from, among others, Mr Mokhesi, the HOD; Mr Thabiso Makepe, Acting Chief Director of the Department's PMU; Mr John Matlakala, Director: SCM in the Department; Ms Margaret-Ann Diedericks, Acting HOD: Gauteng Department; Mr Peane Edwin Sodi, Director and CEO of Blackhead and also a Director of the JV; Mr Thabane Wiseman Zulu, DG: National Department; Mr Abel Manyike, Director of the Ori Group and of Ori Services; and Mr Sydney Radebe, Director of Mastertrade.

31. Thereafter, evidence was heard from several of the individuals involved in or with knowledge of the contract, namely, Mr Mokhesi; Mr Zulu; Mr Sodi; Mr Manyike; and Mr Jacobus Carel Roets, Occupational Hygienist.

32. This Report relies on the affidavit and evidence of Mr Roets, the Occupational Hygienist, who identified himself as an expert for purposes of assisting the Commission in understanding, not only the dangers of asbestos, but also the outcomes of this asbestos audit and assessment by providing a detailed critique in his written affidavit and giving evidence to the Commission.

33. Mr Sodi informed the Commission that Mr "Igo" Colin Mpambani was murdered in 2017 and was, therefore, unable to give evidence to the Commission on the background to the Proposal which bears his name, as also all other documents that apparently or allegedly emanate from him.

34. This report by the Commission examines the evidence, apparent anomalies, irregularities or improprieties, and comments on that evidence with regard to the conclusion of the contract, its implementation and payments made in terms of the contract. This Report also examines the evidence concerning certain payments made to 'secret' beneficiaries. Finally, it comments on the overall implications for good governance, compliance with the precepts of the South African Constitution, and the responsibility of this Commission in establishing whether or not there have been instances of state capture, corruption and fraud or other irregularities contemplated in the TORs of the Commission.

NETWORKING FOR OPPORTUNITY

35. Mr Sodi had been involved in an asbestos audit project in Gauteng province, and it was agreed that Mr Mpambani would use his network of contacts in the Free State province to try to unlock a similar opportunity in the Free State.

36. Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani established the JV. In terms of the JV agreement, each party would perform their own work and profits would be shared on a 50-50 basis between them. Mr Sodi said that he knew that Mr Mpambani had never done this type of work before and had no expertise and, accordingly, Mr Sodi "did not anticipate that he was going to bring any meaningful resources to the project". Mr Sodi explained that he understood Mr Mpambani's role was to engage with the relevant officials and ensure that the JV was awarded the contract.

37. The Proposal was submitted to and subsequently accepted by the Department. Mr Mokhesi's attitude suggests that he had prior knowledge of the arrival of the written Proposal and saw no need for any investigation or discussion on the need for or the value of the proposed project. It also suggests that Mr Mokhesi had no concern as to the costs involved, where funds might be found and what other projects would have to be abandoned or discontinued. Thus, merely on receipt of the Proposal and without further ado, Mr Mokhesi already had a view that monies should be paid over to the JV for the purposes set out in the Proposal, and Mr Mokhesi's only interest was in finding the method for implementation of the project. Mr Matlakala's response to the Proposal was similar to that of Mr Mokhesi.

38. It is clear that the initiative for this project came not from the communities, Legislature, or other governing bodies in the Free State, but from Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani who were "highly networked" and able to "unlock opportunity".

The unplanned project

39. An Occupational Hygienist, Mr Roets, submitted an affidavit (as an expert) and gave evidence to the Commission. His evidence is that there are serious health hazards arising from the presence of asbestos in the structures, fittings and furnishing of many houses in South Africa. These dangers were reflected upon by all witnesses and confirmed by various officials.

40. The Free State Government had not chosen to allocate funds in 2014 (or before then) for the eradication of asbestos from state-erected or -financed housing in the Province. It would appear that there were other more urgent demands to which taxpayer funds were to be allocated. Accordingly, no projects had been contemplated, discussed, approved, budgeted or organised either to audit and assess the presence of asbestos in the Free State as at 2014, or to remove and dispose of this hazardous substance.

41. It should therefore have come as a surprise to officials employed in the Department when a Proposal arrived from a JV for the "Audit, Handling of Hazardous Material, Removal and Disposal of Asbestos-Roofed Houses".

42. Despite the absence of any provision for such a project, this Proposal was approved, although this was subject to Blackhead securing the necessary funds for this project. Mr Sodi identified the lack of funds as one of the obstacles that needed to be overcome. The solution to the immediate lack of funds was to be found in the basis on which the JV offered to fund the Project, in that the Proposal stated, "we have pleasure in submitting our request to be appointed on risk basis. . . .". The response from Mr Mokhesi, indicating a desire to make the appointment, was to state that the appointment of the JV "will be subject to your company securing funds to roll out the project in line with your proposal".

43. The JV never did any work or utilised any resources "on risk", however. It was paid from the outset. The SLA provided for a prepayment of some R51 million on signature. Mr Mokhesi's intention was to implement the Proposal within weeks, without investigations, discussions or negotiations. Mr Mokhesi tried to defend his determination to fund this project on two grounds. Firstly, that the Matjhabeng Local Municipality had already requested the Department to do an assessment of housing roofed with asbestos and that this had been done and the asbestos removed. However, this explanation was contradicted by the inclusion of this same housing in the Matjhabeng Municipality in the contract which Mokhesi ultimately concluded with the JV. Secondly, Mr Mokhesi claimed that the Department had already advertised for qualified asbestos removal contractors to register on the database of the Department. He said that, thereafter, information from the JV audit was made available to the Department to obtain donor funding to implement the removal of the offending material. However, this claim was contradicted by his statement that "the Department will at the right time advertise for [the removal phase] of the project to be undertaken."

44. Furthermore, Mr Thabiso Makepe, Chief Engineer at the Department's PMU, and Mr Matlakala of the PMU stated that, before the contract was concluded with the JV, no enquiries were conducted with local municipalities to find out if there were any records of houses containing asbestos.

45. In short, no attempt was ever made by any officials in the Department to ascertain whether or not the national and international health concerns surrounding asbestosis were of practical or overwhelming significance in the Free State Province that needed immediate and costly attention.

46. The absence of funds was corroborated by Mr Sodi who testified that Mr Mpambani had told him that the Department wished "to implement this programme, however it was not in their budget for that financial year". Mr Mokhesi was clear that there was no allotted budget for this project but described how the funds would be found from "within the very same budget, projects not performing". This is the reason why it was necessary for him to approach Mr Zulu at the national Department with a motivation for a revised business plan. Mr Zulu confirmed that "there was no provision in the (Free State) budget for the execution of this particular business plan."

47. Mr Sodi explained that the JV had received feedback that it "will be appointed". However, in his testimony to the Commission, he was unable to explain what the result would be if the JV had used its own funds to render services.

48. Mr Zulu told the Commission that the money for the Project was to come from the Free State Department, but he gave no indication that he was ever advised which other projects or programmes were to be abandoned or have their budgets reduced to accommodate this unexpected new project costing some R253 million. Mr Mokhesi suggested that the monies might have come from other underperforming projects„ but gave no indication of which projects were underperforming, how selection would be made between projects to be deprived of funds, or which projects did eventually have their budgets reduced or discontinued. There was no indication that any such consultation, discussion, assessment or evaluation took place. Finally, there is no suggestion that, even if this asbestos audit was thought to be of value, consideration was given to postponement of the project which could then take place in another financial year or budget cycle.

49. In addition, there was no consideration of what the scope of the task would be - how many municipalities, houses, units would be included, what distances would have to be travelled, what records already existed indicating the extent or otherwise of the problem of asbestos, what other similar projects had been undertaken in any other provinces and with what result, and with what further endeavour and cost. This Proposal existed in a total vacuum as to need, current approved projects and budgets, extent, outcome or value to the Province.

50. It was up to the AO/HOD to process this Proposal. Section 36(2)(a) of the PFMA provides that the HOD must be the AO for a department. Mr Mokhesi was at all relevant times the HOD and the AO for the Department.

51. Mr Matlakala made it clear that he "did not participate in any way, shape or form in recommending the appointment of the Joint Venture, as such recommendation was not even solicited from me". He did, however, state that he was "responsible for putting all the necessary documents in place for the eventual appointment" of the JV.

No competitive bidding process

52. The unsolicited Proposal emanating from the JV had not resulted from an open and competitive bidding process. Nevertheless, on presentation of the Proposal, there were already indications that it was favourably received and that efforts were being made to ensure its acceptance and implementation.

53. An "unsolicited proposal" is defined in National Treasury Practice Note No. 11 of 2008 (the Practice Note) issued in terms of the PFMA as "a proposal/concept received by an institution outside its normal procurement processes that is not an unsolicited bid."

54. If an unsolicited proposal is received, the Department, is required to issue a Request for Qualification (RFQ) to test the market. Only if there is no response to the RFQ may an institution enter into direct contractual negotiations with a proponent outside of a tender process. Should there be a response from the private sector to the RFQ, then the ordinary competitive bidding process must be followed by the Department.

55. In fact, the Department's SCM Policy prescribes that, if the Department decides to proceed with the unsolicited proposal, the AO must negotiate an unsolicited proposal agreement, the sole purpose of which is to guide the process in terms of the Practice Note.

56. The Department did not issue an RFQ. It made no enquiries to test whether or not "the market", i.e., the private sector, contained other businesses capable of providing either or both of the audit and assessment of asbestos, and the removal and disposal of asbestos as proposed in the JV's Proposal. That would have meant going public and entering the light of day with a competitive bidding process known to all, where service providers, the scope of work and the costs involved would all have been subject to scrutiny and evaluation. Instead, a means was found by Mr Mokhesi, to conclude a contract for the audit and removal of asbestos without opening up the Project to competitive bidding in a transparent manner.

Purported reliance upon Treasury Regulation 16A6.6

57. In certain circumstances and subject to certain conditions, processes are lawfully available to circumvent the requirement for open and public competitive bidding for State contracts. Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 provides:

> The accounting officer or accounting authority may, on behalf of the department, constitutional institution or public entity, participate in any contract arranged by means of a competitive bidding process by any other organ of state, subject to the written approval of such organ of state and the relevant contractor.

58. Essentially, this regulation allows one state body to participate in a contract arranged by another state body with similar needs.

59. Mr Mokhesi entered into a series of approaches purporting to procure the participation of the Department in a contract concluded by the Gauteng Department. All this was done in terms of the supposed authority of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6.

60. Mr Mokhesi sought to rely upon an earlier appointment of Blackhead to the Gauteng Panel of Professional Resource Teams (PRT) in the Gauteng Department, which appointment had been confirmed by the national Department in April 2014. This contract had been extended by the Acting HOD: Gauteng Department, Ms Diedericks, to 31 August 2014. The correspondence by which Mr Mokhesi sought to both ensure and confirm this extension of the Gauteng contract to the Free State was all initiated after Mr Mokhesi advised Mr Sodi on 19 June 2014 that the Free State wished to "extend" the Gauteng contract to the Free State.

61. On 15 July 2014 Mr Mokhesi wrote to Ms Diedericks asking for approval, in terms of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6, for the Free State Department to participate in the Gauteng contract to which Blackhead had been appointed. That contract had been for the assessment of the prevalence and existence of asbestos in low cost housing in the Gauteng Province and did not include the removal and disposal of asbestos. In her letter dated 4 August 2014, Ms Diedericks confirmed that she had granted "approval for the Free State Department to participate in the contract arranged by means of a competitive bidding process from the database of the Gauteng Department for Professional Resource Teams where Blackhead Consulting Pty Ltd was appointed from." Ms Diedericks thus granted approval for the Free State to participate in the Gauteng contract to which Blackhead was a party. She did, however, alert Mr Mokhesi that the Gauteng Department's "data base will lapse at the end of August 2014".

62. The approach by Mr Mokhesi of 19 June 2014 to the DG of the national Department regarding the "Appointment PRT to Departmental Panel", and Mr Zulu's response of 3 August 2014 under a similar heading, was not the approach and response which purported to or sought to trigger implementation of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6.

63. Rather, this was the process purportedly utilised by the Free State Department to overcome both the behind-the-scenes negotiations of Mr Mpambani, which precluded a competitive bidding process, and the absence of allocated funds in the Department's budget. However, even a cursory examination of the documents shows that the sub-regulation was not applicable and could not assist Mr Mokhesi in his endeavours to confirm the appointment of the JV to a contract as envisaged in their Proposal.

64. It was suggested to the Commission that one organ of state or department is permitted to participate in the contract of another department or organ of state that has been produced by means of a competitive bidding process. A new contractual relationship is not formed. It is no more than an expansion of an existing contract, done by way of addendum, enabling participation of an additional department or organ of state in the existing contract, which therefore must presuppose that the same parties, services, price and terms continue.

65. The Public Protector was, however, persuaded that this was "an unsolicited proposal and not a participation contract". A participation contract (utilising Treasury Regulation 16A6.6), according to the Public Protector, "requires the same service provider, the same services and the same price. The Department could also not demonstrate any benefit as required by Treasury Regulation 16A6.6".

66. Perusal of the documentation alone indicates that Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 could not be utilised by the Free State Department to participate in an existing contract in Gauteng. The contract in Gauteng had lapsed and was no longer available for participation by the Free State. The proposed Free State service provider was not and never had been an approved service provider on any database. Neither was Diamond Hill. The agreed contract price in Gauteng was R650.00 per house, while the proposal in the Free State was for R1 350.00 per house. The service to be provided in Gauteng was for only the assessment of asbestos in houses, while the Proposal in the Free State was for both audit and assessment, and removal and disposal of asbestos. So, on the face of the documentation alone, it was never permissible for the Department to attempt to utilise Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 to enter into a contract with the JV for which there had been no competitive and transparent bidding process.

Was this incompetence, negligence or deliberate malfeasance?

67. Officials involved in this project sought to explain their reliance upon the applicability of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 by asserting that they, at all times, believed that it was appropriate to exercise the provisions of this Regulation so as to render this unsolicited and private Proposal, and the resulting contract, regular and lawful. They stated on oath that they knew of the relevant legislation, regulations and practice arising from their knowledge of the Constitution, the PFMA, the Treasury Regulations, as well as their own experience. None claimed to have been unaware of the procedures to be followed. In fact, the use of, and reference to, the relevant legal provisions governing their conduct, the reliance upon earlier appointments and approvals, the phrasing of documents and the existence thereof, all point to knowledge and experience and competence in the process being undertaken.

68. Neither competence nor negligence are in question. However, the context within which the 'errors' were committed and the overwhelming nature thereof lead inexorably to the view that an agenda was being pursued which saw Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 as a ruse behind which to operate, rather than a legitimate lawful procedure.

69. At each stage of the process there was deceit. There was the obfuscation as to the identity of the parties, unconcern whether correspondence dealt with appointment to a Panel or participation in a contract, disregard for the lapse of, and, therefore, absence of any contract in Gauteng in which the Free State could legitimately participate, and officials' neglect of the different terms and conditions of the separate contracts. All this suggests more than mere inattention, incompetence and negligence on the part of those who purported to rely upon Treasury Regulation 16A6.6.

    69.1 Firstly, there was selective misinformation as to the identity of the party to the contract with the Department. When there was no need to rely upon Treasury Regulation 16A6.6, the JV was named and referred to, but on the two occasions when there was a need to comply with the requirements of the Regulation, the existence of the JV was concealed and reference was made only to Blackhead. Both Mr Matlakala and Mr Mokhesi knew, at all times, that a JV was involved.

    69.2 Secondly, it is indisputable that Mr Mokhesi knew the procedures that would have to be followed if he were to ensure a speedy conversion of this Proposal into a contract. He contacted Ms Diedericks for approval in terms of the Regulation and Mr Zulu for approval for deviation from the Provincial budget.

70. The undated SLA was entered into by "Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd Joint-Venture" (represented by its CEO, Mr Sodi), which agreement defines the "service provider" as "Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd and Diamond Hill Trading 71 (Pty) Ltd Joint-Venture". Though not signed by Mr Mokhesi or any representative of the Department, Mr Mokhesi did not deny this SLA and reliance was placed on it to process payments by the Department.

71. The subcontractors who did the work, Mastertrade and the Ori Group, knew from the outset, as early as August 2014, that it was the JV that had been appointed by the Department. Mr Mokhesi made an important admission before the Commission. He agreed that the reason why the JV was introduced so late in the process was that, had it been introduced upfront, there would have been no question of any transfer or extension of a contract from Gauteng to the Free State. Mr Zulu was adamant that the proposed participation of the Free State Department in the Gauteng contract had nothing to do with the national Department. He pointed out that "the HoD Free State possessed the locus standi ...".

72. Mr Zulu was not concerned that it was he, in his capacity as DG, who had also given permission for the Free State Department to participate in the Gauteng contract. He interpreted his subsequent comments regarding procedures and costing as providing advice. However, he was obliged to agree that one "cannot extend membership of a panel [one can] only extend a particular contract".

73. Throughout this time, there can be no doubt that Mr Mokhesi, Mr Matlakala and all those involved in concluding this contract and implementing it, knew that the JV was involved. Accordingly, by the time Mr Mokhesi was asking the DG for approval of the deviation from the business plan and also professing to seek approval of the participation of the Department in the Gauteng contract, neither the membership of Blackhead in the PRT nor the contract itself was still operative. Thus, by the time Mr Mokhesi appointed the JV on 2 December 2014, the membership of Blackhead on the Gauteng PRT database had already lapsed.

74. The only conclusion that can be drawn from the undisputed facts, documented in correspondence and confirmed in the evidence of Mr Mokhesi and Mr Sodi, is that these two persons, one contracting on behalf of the Department and the other on behalf of the JV, both knew at all times that Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 was not available as a means to legitimise the contract that they both wished to secure without any competitive bidding process, and that they both took steps to conceal the inconvenient facts when they used that Regulation. This was neither incompetence nor negligence, but knowing, deliberate and planned circumvention of lawful processes requiring competitive bidding.

Deviation from the Free State budget

75. Approval had to be obtained for funds to be reallocated from the Provincial budget for this new and unplanned project. Changes to the existing and approved business plan and budget of the Free State Department required the approval of Mr Zulu, DG in the national Department. As Mr Zulu explained in his evidence, > before any project can proceed at provincial level, it requires the approval of its business plan by the national department" and "should there be a deviation, ... you will require the approval of the national department. ... All business plans approved first at a provincial level and then submitted at national level for confirming the availability of the budget are aligned with the existing budgets.

76. In the absence of any information on the urgency of the project, needs analysis, projects to be financially affected and future plans, it would not be possible for the Free State budget and this particular business plan to be reviewed by the DG.

77. Against this background, Mr Zulu wrote back to Mr Mokhesi on 12 August 2014. His letter has a similar title "Reference appointment PRT to Departmental Panel" and reminds the Free State HOD that Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 allows the Free State to participate in the Gauteng contract. Mr Zulu adds the cautionary note that "This will however mean that the said company was properly appointed having followed the due procurement processes". He also cautioned "that the Free State Department ... will be held liable for any financial implications or operations of the service provider. If need be you may have to revise your current business plan accordingly, so as to be in line with National Treasury Regulations in order to achieve the objective".

78. However, in November, Mr Mokhesi wrote again to Mr Zulu, forwarding a supposedly revised business plan and requesting a most urgent response, asking for "priority" attention and even setting a date by which approval had to be granted. On receipt of the revised business plan on 26 November 2014 by email, Mr Zulu requested Mr Mokhesi to provide his office with a motivation "why his request should receive priority". Mr Mokhesi submitted the motivation the next day, asking for authorisation by close of business that same day. The motivation laments the plight of poor persons living in dilapidated houses containing asbestos, refers to the Constitution, suggests global warming is relevant, and states there had been an informal study in the Free State on asbestos and housing. The motivation also stated that the objectives of the project were twofold – to audit and assess houses in the Free State, and to remove and dispose of asbestos. He provided the cost of the project as being R850 per house, which is represented as including all costs associated with the removal and disposal of asbestos. Nowhere did Mr Mokhesi indicate why he had asked for "priority" attention and response. Mr Mokhesi failed to indicate the number of houses to be assessed, that the sum of R850 covered only one part of the project which he claimed to have two objects (both audit and assessment, and removal and disposal), or even to indicate the total cost of the project.

79. In the absence of any mention of the total cost of the project (whether for audit and assessment only (R850 per house), or audit and assessment, and removal and disposal of asbestos (R850 plus R32 760 per house) no-one would have any idea of the funding required for this Project, the adjustments which would be needed to be made in the Free State budget, where the money could or would be found, what other programmes or business plans had or were to be abandoned, and what needs analysis could be done. The sum of R255 million was not mentioned anywhere in correspondence with the DG.

80. Mr Mokhesi gave Mr Zulu no reason why this unexpected project should be addressed as a matter of urgency, what it would cost, whether there were funds available and what the impact would be of utilising those funds.

81. Mr Mokhesi's conduct was deceitful. He suggested that the Project was two-fold and that both phases of the Project would (supposedly) cost R850 per unit in their entirety. There was no mention of the total cost. Mr Mokhesi failed to indicate that he had already appointed the JV to perform only one portion of the Project – the audit and assessment – and that he and the JV knew the total cost was R255 million. There was no motivation to secure approval for deviation from the allocated budget. This supposed procedure was all about ticking boxes to secure some correspondence that appeared to permit a deviation from the provincial budget already allocated.

Recording of reasons for deviation from competitive bidding process

82. It is only when "it is impractical to invite competitive bids" that Treasury Regulation 16A6.4 can be applicable (emphasis added). The Regulation provides:

> If in a specific case it is impractical to invite competitive bids, the accounting officer or accounting authority may procure the required goods or services by other means, provided that the reasons for deviating from inviting competitive bids must be recorded and approved by the accounting officer or accounting authority.

83. The AO is granted this discretion to deviate from inviting competitive bids only when the precondition of the impracticality of so doing is met and when there has been compliance with the compulsory requirement of having had the reasons for deviating from competitive bids "recorded and approved".

84. Since the Department had not invited competitive bids and apparently had no intention of following a competitive bidding process Mr Mokhesi, was required by the Regulation to submit to Mr Zulu the reasons why it was not practical to invite competitive bids for the proposed Project. Mr Zulu, as DG, had to record and approve such deviation. Although Mr Mokhesi sought approval in terms of Regulation 16A6.6, he did not refer to Regulation 16A6.4. He did not mention the absence of a competitive bidding process. He did not state that it was impractical to invite competitive bids or attempt to explain or justify why it was impractical. In short, Mr Mokhesi did not even pretend to comply with Treasury Regulation 16A6.4 and Mr Zulu ignored the requirements of a competitive bidding process.

85. On a full consideration of all the evidence, there can be no doubt that this asbestos contract was not entered into in a regular or lawful manner. Reliance on Treasury Regulation 16A6.6 was always misplaced and the requirements of Treasury Regulation 16A6.4 were not fulfilled. No justification has been offered why there could be no public, transparent and open competitive bidding process. It can only be concluded that the breaches and omissions of lawful procedure were deliberate and intentional.

86. The value of competitive bidding for the state was completely ignored in pursuit of this one opportunity that Mr Mpambani had 'unlocked' for himself and Mr Sodi.

THE CONTRACT AND ITS TERMS

Identity of the service provider

87. It is undisputed that the service provider in this SLA was the JV. As already noted, no-one in the Department had done any investigation of the existence, experience or registration of Diamond Hill, or whether it was a service provider on any database in any province. There was not even any attempt to ascertain whether or not Diamond Hill existed or had ever done any work in any field at all. There was no proof of SARS registration or provision of a tax clearance certificate. The tax clearance certificate of Blackhead had been attached to the Proposal and it was current. However, Mr Matlakala admitted that he had not conducted any due diligence on Diamond Hill.

88. As noted earlier, there was also no due diligence enquiry at all into the JV as the Service Provider by anyone in the Department.

Capacity, experience, qualifications and accreditation of the service provider

89. The Commission's investigators made enquiries with the South African National Accreditation System (SANAS) and ascertained that none of those who did any of the work and certainly not Blackhead, or Diamond Hill or their JV was ever accredited by SANAS, let alone accredited for testing for the presence of asbestos.

90. There was no enquiry into whether or not Blackhead or Diamond Hill had qualifications, accreditation, or expertise in the Scope of Work which the JV proposed. While the Instruction to Perform Work (IPW) of 2 December 2014 was in respect only of "Phase 1 – Audit and Assessment of Asbestos of Housing Units", there was no enquiry concerning how or by whom or with what skills or experience this audit and assessment would be carried out.

91. The JV had offered to perform several activities which, according to the Proposal itself, necessitated dealing with a highly dangerous material, asbestos. Knowledge of the hazards and the need for compliance with legislation and regulations are to be found in the Scope of Work set out in the Proposal, which refers to the Occupational Health and Safety Act and Regulations 85 of 1993 (OHSA). It further specifies that the cost quoted would include submissions, notifications, contracting, supply of documentation, personnel and equipment pertaining to legislation and regulations.

92. In his evidence, Mr Roets highlighted that he had never heard of or come across entities called Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd, Diamond Hill Trading 71 Pty Ltd, Mastertrade 232 Holdings or the Ori Group in the assessment and quantification of asbestos industry.

93. Mr Roets explained that business entities that handle asbestos-contaminated materials (ACMs) should be accredited in terms of SANS/ISO 17020. To obtain and maintain this accreditation, an accreditation body performs tests in accordance with the said standard on a regular basis. Such entities should also be approved by the Approved Inspection Authority (AIA) registered with the division within the Department of Employment and Labour specialising in occupational hygiene. In terms of OHSA, it is required that anything in the workplace that can cause ill-health or adverse health effects to humans needs to be assessed by an AIA who can assess and quantify hazardous chemical substances in the workplace, including the existence of asbestos.

94. Mr Roets explained further that "if renovation, demolition and/or removal is planned on ACMs the law requires that a Registered Asbestos Contractor (RAC) be contracted to do the asbestos work. The RAC must remove asbestos in accordance with the Regulations and in line with an Approved Plan of Work". An AIA must be involved in air monitoring and have oversight of any asbestos maintenance or removal activities.

95. The SLA specifically stated that:

> The SERVICE PROVIDER undertakes that: 4.2.2 they have all the necessary experience skill and capability to render the services in accordance with the requirements and expectations of the DEPARTMENT.

96. However, the officials contracting the JV never bothered to verify that the Service Provider did indeed possess the necessary skills and expertise to undertake the work. On the contrary, it is undisputed that they had no training, qualifications, expertise, accreditation, experience or knowledge of working with asbestos. The discrepancies in official documents attempt to confuse. For example, the appointment letter of 1 October 2014 clearly included the "removal and disposal of asbestos" and the undated SLA also includes "removal and disposal of asbestos". However, the Instruction to Perform Work (IPW) of 2 December 2014 was only in respect of what was called "phase 1 – the audit and assessment" and did not include what became known as phase 2 – the removal and disposal of asbestos.

97. It would appear to be on the basis that 'phase 2' was not implemented, that Mr Sodi and Mr Mokhesi suggest that skill, expertise, training and accreditation for the removal and disposal of asbestos never became a requirement for either Blackhead or Diamond Hill. However, the JV proposed to do the "removal and disposal of asbestos", and they accepted instructions and appointment to do so. They seek to rely upon the one aberration – the IPW of 2 December 2014.

98. There can be no doubt that Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani knew that they were offering to do a task requiring their JV to work with hazardous materials, as their Proposal clearly indicated. Mr Sodi made no pretence before the Commission that he conducted business by purporting to have the capacity, expertise, skills to perform a task and only then to procure "specialists" to do the work. He was simply a 'project manager' who added his cost to that of the specialist. Ultimately, Mr Sodi conceded the wrongdoing in failing to disclose the JV's lack of skill, qualification or accreditation.

99. According to Mr Roets, the phrase "audit and assessment" in the JV's Proposal and in other documents was not clearly defined. This meant that the deliverables from the Project were also not defined. Legally, assessing asbestos is defined as identifying where asbestos is, estimating the quantity, assessing the form of the asbestos, assessing the potential exposure risk, and evaluating the control measures in place to minimise the risk of asbestos fibre release. The JV's Proposal proposes to "Audit and Assess" ACMs in low-cost housing in the province, while under the heading "Objective" all that is mentioned is counting houses with asbestos roofs. These are clearly two different activities.

100. As regards the scope of work, Mr Roets noted that the IPW clearly calls for the JV to audit and assess houses for asbestos in the whole of the Free State Province. Audit and assess, in terms of legislative requirements, means an inventory, which includes information such as where, what, quantity, type, condition and potential exposure risk of the asbestos products in each house. A document like this would have served as a Bill of Quantities and guidance for future tenders / contractors to submit a costing for the eradication phase of the project, where they could have had a clear picture of what exactly needed to be done to eradicate asbestos in the Province.

101. The JV's Proposal was titled "Request for Appointment on Risk: Audit and Assessment, Handling of Hazardous Material (Removal) and disposal of Asbestos-Contaminated Rubble in the Free State Province". The JV requested to be appointed for the following: "Assessment/Audit of houses roofed using Asbestos material. Handling and disposal of Asbestos sheets to an approved, designated disposal site". The next paragraph read: "The scope of the work entails the physical door to door counting, safe removal and disposal of Asbestos Contaminated Building Rubble and asbestos sheets from various townships across the Free State Province." The Objective of the project was stated to be two-fold: "Quantify the number of houses roofed with asbestos sheets, and Remove and Dispose [of] asbestos to an approved and accredited site."

102. Thereafter, correspondence, memoranda and contractual documents continued to repeat that this was an "Asbestos Eradication Project". Notably, there were only three departures from this approach. First was the letter from Mr Mokhesi to Ms Diedericks, which sought approval for the Free State to participate in the Gauteng project (which was only that of audit and assessment) in terms of Treasury Regulation 16A6.6. Second was the correspondence to and from Mr Zulu, which referred only to the appointment of a Professional Resource Team. Third was the IPW of 2 December, which work was now identified as "audit, asses and GPS all pre-1994 Government issued housing".

103. The Commission found that it was not only the substance of the work to be done which chopped and changed depending on audience; it was also the amount of work to be done that appears somewhat uncertain. The IPW referred to a sum of money (R255 million) and that "up to" 300 000 housing units were to be accommodated within this sum. However, the JV instructed Mastertrade to audit only 150 000 units. Mastertrade instructed the Ori Group to audit 300 000 units

The budget and costing – "Total project cost"

104. The JV's Proposal set out the rates to be charged for the work proposed to be done. These were specified as "R1 350 per house ex[cluding] VAT for door-to-door assessment, R32 760 ex[cluding] VAT for removal and disposal". There is no correspondence indicating the basis upon which the quoted rate was reduced, but it appears from the Letter of Appointment of 1 October 2014 that the rates for both audit and assessment, as well as for removal and disposal of asbestos, had been reduced to the sum of R850 per house. The same scope of work appears in the SLA. The motivation to the DG of 28 November 2014 advised that the rate was R850 per unit to audit and assess for asbestos, and to remove and dispose of the asbestos. Mr Mokhesi said the reason for the reduction in rate was that the "Department found [the proposed rate] to be unaffordable".

105. However, the IPW specified that the price would be R850 excluding VAT for the JV to "audit, assess and GPS all pre-1994 government housing units in the Province". In short, the reduced rate of R850 was sometimes intended to cover the cost of both audit/assessment and removal/disposal of asbestos, whilst on one other occasion the documentation indicated R850 for the audit and assessment only.

106. The total sum of R255 million was never mentioned to the national Department when the deviation from budget was under discussion. However, the IPW of 2 December 2014 made it clear that work was to be done within this total sum up to a maximum of 300 000 units.

"On risk"

107. The JV proposed that it be appointed "on risk" to carry out the project. This arrangement was confirmed by Mr Sodi to the Director: SCM in the Department. Mr Sodi explained the concept of requesting to be appointed on a risk basis. He was told by Mr Mpambani that although the Free State Department desired an asbestos audit to be conducted in their province, there was no budget within the Department to perform an audit of this nature. Mr Mpambani also said that, in order to have some funds allocated, the Department would have to include the asbestos audit in their business plan in order to make provision for it in the budget. This process would take time. Ultimately, the budget was made available, the JV was appointed to conduct the asbestos audit and the JV was paid, albeit not the full amount. The JV was, however, prepared to start the work, and did in fact do so, working on a risk basis until the business plan was approved and provision had been made in the budget for the asbestos audit.

108. In short, Mr Mpambani and Mr Sodi as the members of the JV seemed to feel that this "at risk" offer was merely a means of waiting out the period until funds were allocated or made available.

109. In his affidavit, Mr Mokhesi claimed that the Department had advertised for donor funding for the removal of asbestos and he thought that the JV would be able secure donor funding for the Asbestos Eradication Project. However, no such advertisement or approach to donors was ever provided to the Commission and there is no indication why any donor would wish to fund the work of Blackhead or Diamond Hill, which were commercial enterprises.

110. However, within weeks, Mr Mokhesi had approached Mr Zulu seeking approval for funds to be reallocated from the Provincial budget for this new and unplanned project, because to find the funds for this Asbestos Project proposed by the JV, changes would have to be made to the Department's existing and approved business plan and budget.

111. Mr Mokhesi wrote to the Free State Provincial Treasury in September 2014 informing it of the Department's intention to procure a contract currently secured by the Gauteng Department. The only request made of Treasury was that "your guidance and approval is hereby sought to ensure that the Free State Department ... has observed all Treasury Regulations before it enters into [an SLA] with the company, Blackhead Consulting Pty Ltd JV". No information was provided or questions asked regarding funds or budgets, and no financial issues were raised.

112. The response from the Provincial Treasury was no more than a handwritten note to the effect that "the accounting officer [AO] has the power of approval provided that he has satisfied himself/herself that the SLA processes were duly followed and they comply with the legislation". Since the AO, Mr Mokhesi, had made no substantive request, there was no substantive answer that Treasury could give.

113. Accordingly, by the time the Letter of Appointment dated 1 October 2014 was sent to the JV, there was no mention of any need for the JV to find funding or for it to commence the project "on risk". The Letter of Appointment referred to the need to sign an SLA and that the JV would be issued with an IPW.

114. The cost per unit fluctuated. The lack of care in clarifying the cost of the Project suggests that cost per unit was not that important and, furthermore, that it was the transfer of funds on any basis that was the purpose of the enterprise. The costing given from time to time was merely a moving target of "opportunity". No one appears to have scrutinised the costing at all.

115. This complete disregard for the need to undertake a due diligence exercise to ascertain the identity, expertise and capacity of the service provider, coupled with lack of concern about the task which the service provider was to implement, plus the haphazard costing, suggests that this entire Asbestos Eradication Project was a mere façade to provide a conduit for funds to be transferred from the taxpayer and the Department to Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani.

116. Since there was obviously no provision in the Provincial budget for the R255 million that this project would cost the fiscus, the first strategy adopted was for the JV to propose that it would undertake the Project on an "on risk" basis. Mr Mokhesi furthered this pretence by immediately confirming his interest in appointing the JV on condition that it would take responsibility for sourcing funds and covering the costs of the project. No one was capable of explaining why or how or from whom the JV would source funds for a Provincial project. It would appear that "on risk" were no more than two useful words to provide cover for the absence of an allocated, approved and official budget until such time as Mr Mokhesi had been able to secure deviation from that budget and simply transferred funds from one project to this new Asbestos Eradication Project. The money was always going to be found.

117. The fault line running throughout the conception, negotiation, grant (and eventually implementation) of this contract is the avoidance of a competitive bidding process. This Project was conceived and arranged in secrecy. There was similar secrecy in the allocation of the contract. There was no publication of the details of the Project and request for quotations. Businesses and entities involved in this type of work had no knowledge of the existence of the Project. As the subcontractors told the Commission, they had no opportunity to put in competing bids. Similarly, the Department avoided any opportunity to test the market to ascertain the variations in costing of such a Project.

118. What the JV did was to act as middleman and add its "mark-up" as Mr Sodi described it. The Project was always going to cost more than it should have because the JV could add no value but existed to take a cut out of taxpayers' money. From beginning to end, the Asbestos Eradication Project in the Free State was inimical to and designed to avoid and subvert the provisions of Section 217 of the Constitution, that, when an organ of state "contracts for goods or services, it must do so in accordance with a system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective."

Execution of the Asbestos Eradication Project

119. The JV itself did not perform any of the work on the Asbestos Project but outsourced to subcontractors. Mastertrade appears to have been the main subcontractor which, in turn, subcontracted the Ori Group. Another entity, Zenawe, provided some technical services.

120. The evidence of those who actually did the work that was carried out is instructive because it reveals the true costs of this Asbestos Project, the extent to which there was no interrogation of costing by the officials in the Department, the use of 'middlemen' and 'project managers' to increase the cost of taxpayer-funded projects that are carried out under the supposed authority of state officials. This evidence also pertains to the need for and the value of any work actually done in this Asbestos Eradication Project.

121. All documents including the SLA are silent on the fact that the JV always intended to and did use subcontractors to perform the work on this Project.

Work done

122. Both Mr Radebe (Mastertrade) and Mr Manyike (Ori Group) set out in detail in their affidavits what work was entailed when an asbestos audit and assessment, and an asbestos removal process, was conducted. Mr Radebe made it clear that the remedial work involved in the asbestos removal process required the "expertise of an engineer" and other specialists.

123. The details of the work done in this Free State Asbestos Project can be briefly summarised. Aerial photographs of relevant areas in the Free State were viewed in order to identity areas where asbestos roofed houses were located; thereafter, on-site verification was needed to confirm this desktop analysis. One hundred and eighty-four fieldworkers were hired from local communities to do physical inspections of houses; more senior staff, such as quality assurers, assistant, district and senior project managers and a GIS specialist were hired. The fieldworkers were trained over a period of four hours on how to identify asbestos, how to identify cracks, type of material used to build walls, if a house was plastered, type of roofs, and type of house. Fieldworkers were supplied with Samsung or Huawei tablets to enable them to take pictures, geo-reference and fill in questionnaires.

124. A software programme with several applications for management and business purposes was used to assist the field workforce to improve accuracy and currency of spatial data.

125. Fieldworkers audited 302 644 houses over the period November 2014 to February 2015, taking images and completing questionnaires. These were all then synchronised and processed, and quality-controlled. Individual reports were processed for each house. GPS coordinates for houses containing or suspected of containing asbestos were logged.

126. Fieldworkers did not enter a house suspected of being roofed with asbestos, but recorded, from outside the house, observations on the physical condition of the house, whether linked to asbestos or otherwise. The audit was not to identify houses which might contain asbestos inside (fascia boards, pipes, etc.) because that is the responsibility of municipalities and not of the Department.

127. The fieldworkers were matriculants who could read and write and could “demonstrate understanding”. It was estimated that these fieldworkers would take no more than five minutes to audit one house and each fieldworker would be paid R6.50 per house.

128. The procedure for the audit was for the fieldworkers to take a photograph of the house, record the GPS coordinates, record the structural damage to the house and upload the information to the cloud via their iPads. This information was then to be analysed by project managers and incorporated into a report for the Department.

129. The Final Report presented by Mr Mpambani on behalf of Blackhead dated either 3 or 15 February 2014 contains many annexures (photographs and maps), and the value thereof will be discussed later hereunder.

Competitive bidding and cost

130. Fundamental to this Free State Asbestos Project from the outset was the need to avoid any open or transparent process to conclude the contract and implement it. The impact of this fundamental flaw in the entire Project is to be found in the evidence of both Mr Radebe and Mr Manyike.

131. Mr Radebe described how Mastertrade had acted as a sub-contractor for another company performing asbestos audits. At the time - 2012/2013 – Mr Radebe said that Mastertrade had “audited about 280,000 houses/units”. Mastertrade never received contracts from Government and, as a general rule, Mastertrade “normally act as a sub-contractor on Government contracts”.

132. Mr Manyike told the Commission that this was the third or fourth such project in which he had been involved. Had the Department invited open bids, he would have tendered for the job but, as a medium-sized company, he would have “partnered with someone with financial muscle” because Government looks at the financial position of those who tender and Ori Group could meet every requirement “but the down payment and guarantee”. His experience is that medium-sized companies “like us . . . somehow we get squeezed out”.

133. Mr Manyike said that, although he was aware of how much “consultants charge to get this” and he “was aware of the rate which was offered by Gauteng”, he would “always charge 10% of their amount – for me it is fair and then it is profitable”. Mr Manyike said that he could charge “between ten to 50% of what Gauteng paid [f]or the Free State. . . . [and] I will still make a profit”. He told the Commission that he was paid R147.36 per house to conduct the audit and assessment and “I was comfortable with that R21 million”.

134. Avoidance of an open competitive bidding process enables exactly that which appears from this Asbestos Contract between the JV and the Department. Not only is no careful consideration given to the need for, or outcomes or value of such a project, but the cost to the taxpayer balloons to the greatest extent possible without regard to any real expense or value.

135. Both Mr Mokhesi and Mr Sodi conceded that the use of “middlemen” who added their “mark-up” added no value and only increased the cost of the project.

136. Mr Manyike reckoned that the actual work he did cost him about R10 or R11 million. He was to be paid R21 million, which left him with what he considered to be a “fair” profit of about R11 million. Mr Radebe was paid R44 million, of which he says his expenses were R27 million, leaving him with a profit of R17 million. Mr Radebe included the cost of Mr Manyike in his calculations, which means that the total expended between the two of them (via Ori Group and Mastertrade) is claimed to be a total of about R27 million. It should be noted that no or insufficient documentation exists to support any such total expenditure.

137. The JV was to be paid R255 million by the Department, from which it paid the subcontractors R44 million to execute the project. Their total profit would be in the region of about R210 million.

138. When it was pointed out to Mr Mokhesi that the company which tenders for government work and then subcontracts it out at a much lower price makes a huge profit merely for intervening as the contracting party, even he was obliged to admit to the Commission that “contractors are becoming very creative”.

Oversight

139. The Commission was told of certain of the procedures which are required to be followed by the Department. They involve inspections, approvals, invoices, verification of such invoices, and payments. It does not appear that all, or any, were followed as required.

140. Mr Matlakala stated that it was the CFO, Ms Leuna, who approved the invoices submitted by the JV, but that she was not the one who certified that the work had in fact been performed. He stated, “the end-users for each Project Management Unit [PMU] are the ones who must confirm ... whether the work has been done” and stated that he thought the person involved in the Asbestos Audit was Mr Makepe.

141. Mr Makepe, Chief Engineer for the PMU, stated that the > PMU staff monitors projects undertaken by the Department .... These are mainly the construction of houses (RDP houses) and installation of water and sewer networks, etc. The PMU handles the execution of projects by reviewing/inspecting the work done by service providers for compliance with technical standards and specifications as well as programme (delivery times) and budgets.

142. A representative of the PMU should conduct spot checks of the work being done. It appears that these were done only visually and there was no testing of or on the asbestos itself. It cannot, therefore, ever be stated that any or no asbestos was ever found on those units identified as being roofed with asbestos.

143. Mr Makepe believed that there may have been four or five feedback meetings with project managers from the JV, but the dates, times, attendance, documentation submitted, or discussions which ensued, are not apparently recorded in any minutes. There is thus no proof at all that such meetings ever occurred, or the outcomes thereof.

Schedule of payments

144. The IPW dated 2 December 2014 from Mr Mokhesi to the JV set out the period of appointment as 1 December 2014 to 31 March 2015, the requirement for a completion report and details as to when and in what amount the percentages of the total project cost would be payable.

145. Mr Makepe confirmed that the Finance Unit would not pay an invoice if there had been no verification of such work by the PMU. The PMU had to first certify or verify the work for compliance and milestones achieved. Only then would the Finance Unit consider effecting payment. Every claim for payment had to be accompanied by a report and detailed verification.

146. The JV relied upon the documentation submitted by the Ori Group to Mastertrade, which then passed it on to the JV. However, the documentation does not always tally. In fact, the costing by Mastertrade of expenses of some R27 million has not been substantiated. Moreover, VAT returns have not been furnished.

147. Blackhead submitted a tax clearance certificate when it submitted the Proposal. Diamond Hill and the JV did not. However, by the time that invoices supposedly from the JV were being presented and payments were flowing from the Department, it appears that not even Blackhead was in possession of a valid tax clearance certificate – the certificate attached to the Proposal was dated 26 January 2014 and expired on 28 January 2015, and no new or valid certificate appears in the documentation.

148. Reports were seldom, if ever, prepared and presented. When they were prepared, they provided insufficient detail to establish the justification for payment; the information contained in them did not always correlate with the amounts claimed. There is therefore doubt as to the veracity of the claims of work done and the cost thereof.

149. The Department's CFO, Ms Leuna, furnished payment documents to the Public Protector, Adv Madonsela. The Public Protector found that the invoices submitted to the Department and on which payments were made were completely deficient in every respect.

150. Mr Mokhesi's response to the OPP was merely to state "being not responsible for the accounting side of things it should surely have been the responsibility of the Finance Department to identify the irregularity in the invoices." It would appear from this response that Mr Mokhesi was either completely ignorant of his duties as HoD or chose to deliberately ignore his responsibilities as the Department's AO. Mr Matlakala stated that the CFO was the person who approved the invoices submitted by the JV and that he did not as a general rule become involved in payment of vendors.

151. On 31 July 2015 the AG released his report for the 2014/2015 financial year. The AG declared that the contract concluded by the Department with the JV was irregular. Notwithstanding this decision and public advice that the contract for the Asbestos Eradication Project had been irregularly procured, the Department continued to make further payments. A total of R139 million was paid by the Department after the Free State AG had stated that the contract was irregularly procured.

The prepayment

152. Treasury Regulation 15.10.1.2(c) provides that > sound cash management includes – (c) avoiding prepayments for goods or services (i.e. payments in advance of the receipt of the goods or services) unless required by the contractual arrangements with the supplier.

153. The issue of payments was not addressed by Mr Mokhesi at all. There is no indication why it was ever necessary or considered advisable to make an advance payment in any amount at all, let alone R51 million, to the JV before they had even supposedly commenced work on the project.

154. Mr Mokhesi told the Commission that there were no prepayments and that "all payments made were effected after services has been rendered in the project. This also applies to the initial payments that were made to the JV". His view is that where a contract mandates payment in advance of work being done, then such payment is not an advance payment but compliance with the terms of the contract.

Invoices, certification and payments

155. There were invoices apparently not linked to payments, and some payments were made without the required progress report or certificate, or the required signatures. Other irregularities included invoices submitted by the JV without provision for VAT, numbering of invoices was not properly sequenced, and contained only one-line 'descriptions' with no evidence of detailed cost breakdowns or any other support justifying submission of the invoice and payment thereof. Mr Makepe certified only some R142.5 million of the R230 million paid by the Department to the JV. In respect of even those payments that were certified by Mr Makepe, there is inadequate documentation indicating the basis for such certification.

156. Mr Manyike claimed that four reports were submitted to the Department: a preliminary report dated 4 December 2014, a Final Audit Report dated 2 February 2015, a Report of Houses to be Prioritised dated 25 February 2015, and a Remedial Report dated 2 September 2016, as well as a presentation made to the Department on 23 June 2015.

The final report

157. The Final Audit Report was submitted by the JV to the Department on 2 February 2015 with a later version of the same report dated 13 February 2015. This latter report claims to have been prepared by Mr Mpambani. The Final Report of 2 February 2015 is 55 pages in length and includes illustrative photographs of houses and maps. The purpose of the Report is stated to be to make information available to the Free State Provincial Government regarding the number of houses that contain asbestos roof sheeting and to give an indication of the structural status of the units per stand.

158. Costs of replacing asbestos roofed houses with concrete tiles or with roof sheets are given, with budget allocations per district municipality. The Report concludes with advice where it will be best to commence implementation, which would take place over a period of four financial years.

159. The Final Report of 25 February 2015 purports to provide information on the foundations of housing structures, defects on walls and roofing. This Report then continues with the advice on the construction of foundations, the differential settlement and excessive movement of foundations, the danger of walls collapsing, structural cracks and the number of houses presenting a possible danger to occupants. Unsurprisingly, the recommendation which follows is to remove asbestos sheeting, demolish certain houses and replace them with structures of a certain quality.

160. The JV quoted in the region of R3.8 billion excl. VAT for removal of asbestos roofs, demolition and reconstruction of houses, and renovation of houses.

161. It is undisputed that no asbestos has been removed from the roofs of houses in the Free State. Indeed, the opinion was expressed that no asbestos had been removed from any houses anywhere in South Africa by any Provincial or National Department.

162. As there has been no actual removal and disposal of asbestos from homes in the Free State, it is necessary to examine the audit and assessment carried out in this R255 million Asbestos Eradication Project to determine whether value is to be found in various reports presented to the Department.

163. Having considered the details of Mr Roets' analytical report, the evidence established that the audit and assessment had been undertaken without the requisite knowledge and skill, and had therefore produced little information of practical value upon which the Department could take action. As a result, at most 10% of the funds paid by the Department had secured any value for money for the Department.

164. Much of the information in the reports was either inaccurate, irrelevant or already publicly available. No details were provided on the condition of the asbestos and potential risk of exposure. No accurate information was given on how much asbestos is in each dwelling or in total. In order to proceed to the eradication phase of the project, the audit and assessment process will need to start again from scratch. In this regard, even R20 million for the work conducted would not have given the Department value for money.

165. Mr Manyike was given the opportunity to study the report prepared by Mr Roets and respond to it, but he did not ultimately contest Mr Roets' evidence.

Assessment of the evidence

166. The origins of this contract between the JV and the Department were reliant upon the complete absence of a competitive bidding process. The outcome in the implementation of the contract is that the service providers, the scope of work, the execution, the cost and the payments are all equally and fatally compromised.

167. There was no due diligence by the Department. This was a project entered into in secrecy and without transparency and consultation. It was also a contract concluded and implemented in great haste. There was thus no deliberation on the purpose of, the need for or the outcomes expected from such an asbestos project. There was no regard for the identity, skills and capacity of the service provider. There was no real interest in or care for the terms of the contract, the actual work to be done or its cost. There was no oversight of the implementation of the work purported to be done.

168. The disregard for the most important substance of the contract - the need and purpose, the work to be done, the cost of the work - all suggests that the officials did not have real interest in any outcomes to be gained by the Department from this contract.

169. With such lack of interest in the contract and lack of oversight of its implementation, it is unsurprising that the Department failed to enquire or chose not to notice the arithmetical discrepancies in the actual cost of the work and the various amounts paid to all those who benefited from the contract.

170. The actual cost of the work done appears to have been no more than about R15 million, while the Department handed over R230 million in taxpayers' money and was prepared to pay R255 million.

171. Profits were pocketed by all concerned. That the calculations of payments and profits are only approximations is an indictment of the Department. Full records of all estimated costings and budgets do not apparently exist for any party. There is apparently neither documentation nor proof of all expenditure from or by any party. The invoices reveal nothing. This suggests that this project was, from beginning to end, not intended to be one for proof of value and expenditure in production of value, but merely a project for extraction of and payment of money to the JV by the Department.

172. It should be mentioned that the demise of Mr Mpambani and his inability to assist the Commission either with documents or personal testimony is not the source of the problem. Mr Mpambani was only one individual in a JV comprising a registered company doing billions of Rands in business. That JV and all its constituent parts had a duty and obligation to keep full and proper records of all business dealings and financial transactions.

173. Mr Sodi's protestations of reliance upon Mr Mpambani and ignorance about detail are unconvincing. His explanations are not persuasive and his excuses do not ring true. Mr Sodi lacked credibility and was dishonest in his evidence in a number of respects.

174. The Department continued upon its pursuit of failure when there was no regular and documented inspection of work done, no scrutiny of reports presented, no demand for information when incomplete invoices were presented. Instead, payments were made almost upon demand.

175. That payments continued to be made months after the office of the AG had flagged this Asbestos Project on 1 July 2015 and had attempted to curtail further expenditure of taxpayer's money on it, speaks to more than just lack of care and incompetence. It is a clear expression of deliberate disregard for instruction by the office of the AG.

176. Such conscious and calculated avoidance and flouting of all legislation, regulations, protocols and procedures from the moment of receipt of the Proposal to these final payments made to the JV suggests malfeasance on the part of officials in the Department in collusion with the JV.

COST OF BUSINESS SCHEDULE - SECRET BENEFICIARIES

177. A spreadsheet entitled "Cost of Business" contains a schedule of payments to various entities or persons some of which or whom are identified only by initials. Against each name is recorded a sum of money in Rands ranging from R1 million to R10 million. The "Total Cost of Business" amounts to the sum of R82 608 567.90. The Project Value is recorded as R235 000 000 against which this Total Cost of Business amount as scheduled is set off, resulting in "Project Value-Cost of Business" of R172 391 432.10. From this "Project Value" amount, R86 195 716.05 is allocated to Blackhead and Diamond Hill.

178. The schedule continues with three columns entitled "1st payment", "2nd payment" and "3rd payment". Against all but three of the names, sums are identified under one or more of those columns.

179. Mr Sodi explained that he and Mr Mpambani discussed the preparation of this document, which was to set out the costs of the Project. After the discussion, Mr Sodi left his office for another meeting in the boardroom and, in his absence, Mr Mpambani then prepared this "Costs of Business" schedule on Mr Sodi's computer. The purpose of the spreadsheets, says Mr Sodi, was to indicate "how much the project is going to bring in revenue". Mr Mpambani then told Mr Sodi that he had emailed the spreadsheet from Mr Sodi's computer to his own because he had further work to do on the document.

180. On 28 March 2015, Mr Mpambani sent an email to Mr Sodi, asking him to note that the payments highlighted in yellow are the ones for Sodi to "take care of" and the rest would be dealt with "as discussed". Mr Mpambani said that he had "effected the payments in two batches". In his evidence to the Commission, Mr Sodi said that he recalled receiving this email.

181. Mr Sodi told the Commission that he had no knowledge of this spreadsheet and had learned about the schedule only during discussions with the Commission's investigators. Mr Sodi said that he was surprised to see that he was getting the sum of only R86 million when he had expected to receive R103.5 million.

182. The "Cost of Business" spreadsheet indicates payments made to Mastertrade (R44 million), Zwane (R1.5 million) and Mr Steve Motau (R1.2 million).

183. Mr Sodi denied any knowledge of the other payments reflected on this "Cost of Business" schedule. He stated that "no money should have gone to any other person" and that there was "no-one else who was paid from the funds that went into our account, not a single individual. There's no payments that were paid from the Joint Venture because I was the signatory to the account."

184. The identities of the people who were paid because of their legitimate contribution in the Asbestos Audit were revealed in the Schedule. However, there were also payments that were made to individuals or entities that were identified only by initials, such as "TZ", "TM", "AM", "JT" and others.

185. It was put to Mr Sodi that a businessman such as himself would have been interested in the costs incurred by the business, but he merely responded, "I didn't pay attention".

186. In response to the proposition that, as a businessman, the revenue minus costs and ultimate profits were an important calculation and to see to it that they had been properly done, Mr Sodi agreed that the calculations were important to him. He repeated that all costs were going to be deducted from profits, expanding that "in accordance with the JV agreement we had signed, that we would subtract the cost and the expenses of the project and whatever then remained would have been split equally between Blackhead and Diamond Hill".

187. When asked why those payments were not paid out of the bank account of the JV if such payments related to the cost of the business, Mr Sodi could respond only that "I did not pay attention to that email, I did not see the part where he said the one[s] highlighted in yellow must be paid by you". Mr Sodi stated, "I did not look at the spreadsheets", but did not explain when it was put to him that it was improbable that he would not scrutinise the very document containing income, expenses and profits of the JV.

188. Mr Sodi told the Commission that he knew of no person with a legitimate claim to any payment. Unfortunately, his business partner appeared to know several people who were to be paid more than R25 million from their JV business about whom Sodi supposedly knew nothing. It was pointed out to Mr Sodi that the only persons whom he knew were those persons whose payments appear to be legitimate business expenses, but that he did not know even one of those whose payments were suspect. Mr Sodi responded that "maybe this guy had his own arrangements which he did not disclose to me". The difficulty with this response, as pointed out to Mr Sodi, is that it appears that Mr Mpambani did not intend to conceal these other payments from Mr Sodi. After all, Mr Mpambani had discussed the schedule with him, prepared the document on Mr Sodi's computer, returned the completed schedule to Mr Sodi and an accompanying email with advice regarding responsibility for the payments. Mr Sodi agreed that it would seem that there was no attempt at concealment by Mr Mpambani. Mr Sodi also agreed that that there was an intention on the part of Mr Mpambani to conceal the identity of persons to whom payments were being made [by the use of initials only], and reasonable to conclude that Mr Mpambani contemplated illegitimate payments to people involved in the project.

189. The Commission concludes that Mr Mpambani, representing one party to the JV, prepared the schedule setting out the Costs of Business to the JV and that this schedule was sent to, received by and known and understood by Mr Sodi, representing the other party to the JV.

Beneficiary "TZ"

190. One set of initials are those of "TZ" against whom the spreadsheet schedule of the "Cost of Business" records the sum of R10 million. The additional sum of R1 million is also recorded under each of the three payment columns.

191. The only conclusion which the Commission can reach is that Mr Sodi's explanation of his indebtedness to Mr Thabani Zulu in the amount of R604 000 by reason of purchases of alcohol at Mr Zulu's TZ Lounge is pure fabrication. That fabrication was tendered on a haphazard and facile basis to attempt to explain the payment by Mr Sodi of R600 000 to the SMD motor dealership on behalf of Mr Zulu. The need to justify the payment is in order to try to remove this payment from the ambit of the granting of the Asbestos contract in the Free State between the JV and the Department.

192. Mr Sodi agreed that the involvement of Mr Zulu in the Asbestos contract was necessary because he needed to approve the budget adjustment and that he knew that the role of Mr Zulu was to make sure that the contract obtained approval and that the funding for the contract became available. In short, Mr Sodi agreed that the approval of Mr Zulu was essential for the JV to obtain both the Asbestos contract and the R250 million the JV was to be paid.

193. Both Mr Sodi and Mr Zulu admitted that they had known each other for several years before the contracting of the JV. They agreed that they had become friends. It is notable that Mr Zulu saw no impropriety in agreeing to Mr Mokhesi's proposals concerning Blackhead although he was both a supplier of alcohol to Mr Sodi and considered them to be friends. Yet, when questioned by the Commission's investigators, Mr Sodi denied any knowledge of any person with the initials "TZ", although at the Commission hearing he agreed that he knew someone with those initials who had been involved in facilitating the Asbestos project and to whom he had made payment.

194. The payment of some R600 000 supposedly to settle a debt for alcohol purchases is without doubt a fiction. Mr Sodi and Mr Zulu asked the Commission to accept that Mr Sodi purchased alcohol of a superior quality and price from a township lounge that is said to operate on an informal basis. The alcohol was either delivered by Mr Zulu or taken away by Mr Sodi, depending on who gave evidence, but neither provided details or any evidence that such purchases were ever made.

195. No explanation was ever offered as to why the DG of the national Department, based in Pretoria, always managed to be at the TZ Lounge in a Pietermaritzburg township when Mr Sodi passed by and wanted to purchase alcohol.

The Maserati - R1 million

196. On 26 May 2015 the sum of R1 million was transferred from Blackhead's bank account to the bank account of SMD Trading Group. The credit description of the recipient is referenced as "Thabani Zulu". SMD confirmed that the payment was made for a Maserati for a Mr Mabheleni Ntuli.

197. Mr Sodi was not asked at any hearings of the Commission about this payment of R1 million by Blackhead to SMD for and on behalf of Mr Ntuli. However, the chain of connections between Messrs Ntuli, Sodi and Zulu was slowly and reluctantly revealed to the Commission by Mr Zulu. Regrettably, neither Mr Sodi or Mr Zulu revealed more about their connections with Mr Ntuli and why Mr Ntuli received the benefit of R1 million under the rubric of a payment involving Mr Zulu. One cannot help but strongly suspect that this may well have been another kickback/payback for Mr Zulu's benefit but further investigation will be necessary. The Commission's investigators tried to locate Mr Ntuli over a long period, but without success.

Beneficiary "TM"

198. One set of initials are those of "TM" against whom the spreadsheet schedule of the "Cost of Business" records the sum of R5 million. The additional sum of R1 million is also recorded under the 1st and 2nd payment columns and R500 000 under the 3rd payment column.

199. On 2 April 2015 the sum of R650 000 was transferred from Blackhead's bank account to a trust account that belongs to a firm of attorneys in Bloemfontein carrying out conveyancing work. A conveyancer from the firm transferred a residential property situated in Bloemfontein to the Likemo Family Trust. The transfer was registered on 29 January 2016. The purchase price of the property was R1

640 000. The sum of R650 000 from Blackhead was paid as the deposit and the balance was funded by a mortgage registered over the property for the sum of R1 million.

200. Mr Nthimotse "Tim" Mokhesi is the founder, a Trustee and a beneficiary of the Likemo Family Trust, which was formed on 4 May 2015. Mr Mokhesi signed the offer to purchase the property and all conveyancing documents on behalf of the Family Trust.

201. On examination of the evidence and the testimony, the explanation offered by both Mr Mokhesi and Mr Sodi for the payment of this sum of money is so incomprehensible that it must be rejected as false.

202. Despite the sworn statements of both Mr Sodi and Mr Mokhesi that they had neither procured nor received any benefit or advantage for Mr Mokhesi as the Department's HOD by reason of or any way linked to the grant of the Asbestos contract, the inevitable conclusion is that Mr Mokhesi is the "TM" identified in the Cost of Business Schedule.

203. Every effort was made to conceal this transaction because it so clearly constitutes a benefit given by Mr Sodi to Mr Mokhesi. The efforts at concealment ranged from formation of the family trust, departure of Mr Mokhesi from the Trust as a trustee, and preparation of a fake document pretending to be a record of a commercial investment opportunity rather than merely a gift to a senior government official.

204. That both Mr Sodi and Mr Mokhesi knew that what was being done was irregular and unlawful is found in their initial denials of any financial benefit to Mr Mokhesi. When confronted with the documentation made available to the Commission, they hastily and unwisely colluded in the concoction of the commercial investment opportunity document. Mr Sodi had to agree that Mr Mokhesi was an essential cog in the JV Project, while Mr Mokhesi conceded before the Commission that he had made no disclosure of this benefit. It is recommended that Mr Sodi, Blackhead and Mr Mokhesi be criminally charged for corruption regarding this transaction.

THE "COST OF BUSINESS" SCHEDULE – FURTHER SECRET BENEFICIARIES

205. Included in the payments identified as a "cost of doing business" are other individuals whose identities are sometimes concealed and who do not, on the face of it, appear to be persons or entities who provided goods or services for the Asbestos Eradication Project.

206. The Commission examined the evidence of Mr Sodi and others to ascertain why such payments were made by Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani to these persons. These payments can be examined and evaluated only from the perspective of Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani, since the recipients of these funds have not had the opportunity to confirm receipt, the purpose they each had in receiving such payments, their understanding of the reason for the transfer of funds to them, whether or not they did or did not consider themselves indebted to Mr Mpambani or Mr Sodi in any way, and whether or not they reciprocated before, during or after the lifetime of the Asbestos contract by providing services to Mr Mpambani or Mr Sodi in any way.

Beneficiary "AM"

207. One set of initials is "AM" against whom the spreadsheet schedule of the "Cost of Business" records the sum of R10 million, and the additional sum of R1 million is recorded under each of the three payment columns. Mr Mxolisi Dukwana, former MEC of Economic Development in the Free State, informed the Commission that Mr Mpambani was in constant communication with persons in the office of Mr Ace Magashule, then Premier of the Free State, and that, each time payment was advanced to the JV, requests were forwarded to Mr Mpambani "resulting in the latter making payments as requested or instructed by Magashule".

208. Mr Dukwana said that Mr Mpambani paid various monies for and on behalf of university students at the behest of Mr Magashule.

209. Mr Sodi told the Commission that he was unable to confirm these payments and he again stated that he could not have "guessed" who the person was identified only as "AM" and that he would not speculate that the initials "AM" referred to the Premier of the Free State.

210. Mr Dukwana identified payments made at the request of Ms Refiloe Mokoena who had been an acting judge of the High Court in the Free State Province.

211. Ms Mokoena confirmed two requests for financial assistance were made to Mr Magashule, that she received the funds, and that she was an acting judge during the period when she sent an email regarding the funding and when the payments were received from Mr Mpambani and from Bombanero Investment.

Beneficiary "MEC"

212. The initials or title "MEC" was found in the Cost of Business Schedule. There is no indication which of several positions of MEC in the Free State Province may or may not be associated with this reference in the schedule prepared by Mr Mpambani and approved by Mr Sodi. However, one MEC in the Free State province is linked with another payee on the Mpambani schedule, namely, Kingdom Impact General Trading.

213. Payments to Kingdom Impact do not appear on the Cost of Business Schedule prepared by Mr Mpambani and approved by Mr Sodi, but investigations have discovered some payments in the books of their companies.

214. Kingdom Impact, having received funds from 605 Consulting, then transferred funds to a firm of conveyancers for the purchase of a property in Welkom for the sum of R950 000, which property was sold four months later for a greatly reduced price of R650 000 and registered in the name of "Beyoboss", an entity of which Ms Mathatho Leeto, former MEC for the Free State Department of Sports, Arts, Culture and Recreation, was a member. Mr Sodi was not asked about this payment to Kingdom Impact and he denied any knowledge of any MEC to whom any payments were made.

215. The sum of R100 000 was also transferred from 605 Consulting to Evolution Pot described as "school fees donation", which Ms Leeto identified as a donation to her foundation by Mr Mpambani.

Beneficiary "JT"

216. The initials "JT" appear in the Cost of Business Schedule. There are payments totaling R3 858 159.70 recorded in respect of entities or an individual with such initials and Mr Sodi gave evidence to the Commission that payments were indeed made to Mr Jimmy Tau by Blackhead.

217. There are several difficulties in accepting the explanation by Mr Sodi for any payments made to Mr Jimmy Tau that were included in the "Cost of Business" expenses of the Asbestos Audit.

218. Payments were made through a number of corporate entities controlled by Mr Tau. Such payments were identified by Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani as a cost of the business of the Asbestos Audit, but every effort was being made to conceal the connection between Tau and the Asbestos Audit. Even before the Commission, Mr Sodi was still determined to distance Mr Tau from the Asbestos Audit. All these factors suggest that both Tau and these entities were no more than conduits for payments to an entity or individual with a real but illicit connection to the Asbestos Audit.

219. Scrutiny of records revealed that in September 2015 the sum of R200 000 was paid by El Jefe to Hotel and Tourism Investments (Pty) Ltd with the transaction described as "NPM". Two days later on 16 September 2015 there was a further payment of R200 000 to Hotel and Tourism.

220. The SIU advised the Commission's investigators that these payments were made towards the travel costs of Ms Nomvula Paula Mokonyane (the former Minister of Water Affairs and Sanitation) and her daughter. Ms Mokonyane had been the MEC for Human Settlements in Gauteng Province when Mr Sodi was granted the Asbestos Audit contract for Soweto.

SECRET BENEFICIARIES – POLITICALLY CONNECTED PERSONS

221. Investigations revealed that there were more individuals who or entities that were recorded in the financial records of the JV and in the records of Blackhead and of Diamond Hill as having been paid monies during the financial years under investigation. On the face of it, they did not appear to be persons or entities that provided goods or services towards the Asbestos Eradication Project, or where the motivation or reasons for such payments are surprising.

222. Amongst the many individuals or entities to whom such payments were made or whose names are recorded against certain payments, are those discussed briefly below. The identity of the payee or the notation in financial records indicating reference to such person was recorded by the payor – i.e., Mr Sodi or Mr Mpambani through Blackhead or 605 Consulting, respectively.

223. The extent to which investigations have uncovered all such payments is unclear. The Commission was unable to investigate all bank accounts, all payments that appear to be inadequately substantiated or unsubstantiated and pursue all payments that may have been to third party intermediaries or to politically connected persons.

224. Mr Sodi was asked to explain some of the payments and he did so while giving evidence. As already indicated, those persons have not had the opportunity to explain to the Commission whether or not they know of their receipt of the funds, why they received such funds, their understanding of their relationship between themselves and Mr Sodi, and whether or not there were any obligations placed upon them arising from their receipt of the funds.

225. Questions immediately arise in respect of the motivation of Mr Sodi or Mr Mpambani in making payment to these individuals or entities, and the motivation of such persons in receiving these funds. There are also questions as to any reciprocal contribution made by each one of these individuals or entities to either Mr Mpambani or Mr Sodi or their business enterprises in relation to this Asbestos project or any other commercial endeavour.

226. The Commission has not heard evidence from any one of these beneficiaries. Although the Commission issued section 3.3 notices to each of them inviting them to give an explanation to the Commission, none of the recipients of these funds have provided any information. Therefore, no findings can be made in respect of their receipt of the funds. The Commission has not made any enquiry as whether or not disclosure has been made by these persons to SARS or any ethics authority in respect of these receipts.

227. The Commission can have regard only to the stated position of Mr Mpambani and Mr Sodi as businessmen whom, it is common cause, believed it was necessary to "unlock opportunity" by going "to the decision makers". The Commission must examine the evidence of Mr Sodi and others to ascertain why such payments were made by Mr Sodi and Mr Mpambani to these persons, particularly when their contribution to the Asbestos Project is unclear.

228. Some of these persons to whom payments were made or whose names were identified by Mr Sodi or Mr Mpambani as being connected with such payments, are "politically exposed persons or entities" or government officials.[7]

Kingdom Impact General Trading: R1 990 000.00

229. The evidence before the Commission is that Mr Mpambani was not engaged in any engineering business of any sort. There is no evidence that Kingdom Impact provided any services or performed any work for the JV in connection with the Asbestos Audit. Yet, two payments were made from 605 Consulting to Kingdom Impact: R1 million for "consulting services" in December 2014 and R990 000 for "professional engineering services" in August 2016.

[7] A 'politically exposed person' or PEP is the term used for an individual who is or has in the past been entrusted with prominent public functions in a particular country. See https://www.fic.gov.za/Pages/FAQ.aspx?p=3#:~:text=A%20politically%20exposed%20person%20or,functions%20in%20a%20particular%20country

230. A former director of Kingdom Impact, Ms Thulisiwe Kareli, used to work in the procurement division of Centlec. Other board members of Centlec were Mr Mokhesi (HOD of the Department), Mr Kenosi Moroka (Chairperson of the "Ace Magashule Foundation") and Mr Isaac Seoe (a director of Samba, of which Ace Magashule was also a director).

231. Mr Sodi gave no information to the Commission as to the nature of the professional engineering services provided by Kingdom Impact to the JV in respect of the Asbestos Audit or in respect of which the payments were made.

Collin Pitso: R6 505 250.00

232. Mr Sodi eventually confirmed that Mr Pitso was Chief of Staff to former Gauteng MEC Nomvula Mokonyane and then to her as Minister, but was quick to add that "that is not the case anymore". Mr Sodi was uncertain about several details of the payments to Mr Pitso; he undertook to check, but failed to provide any further details. What may be relevant is that Mr Sodi made payments of a great deal of money to the chief of staff of the MEC in Gauteng who enabled Mr Sodi to enter into an asbestos audit in that province.

Bongani More: R7 492 806.13

233. Mr Sodi avoided answering the question why payment of about R7.5 million was made to Mr More, providing only vague and unconvincing responses.

Diane / Anoj Singh: R10 000.00

234. Mr Sodi told the Commission that he had "no idea" why any payment had been made to Mr Anoj Singh.

Linda Ngcobo: R2 079 627.00

235. Mr Sodi explained the payment to Ms Ngcobo on the basis that she "is a friend of mine" and dismissed her employment in administration of Gauteng Housing as "used to be but not anymore". He explained to the Commission that this was "a loan to Linda, after she left, she was struggling". Not only was she a friend, but "we are exploring business opportunities together".

236. Mr Sodi was not pressed on details of the loan, whether or not it was secured by a loan agreement or any security, or the terms of repayment of such loan, but it is strange that a loan should be in such a specific, and not a rounded, amount as was identified by the Commission's investigators.

Paul Mashatile: R371 553.37

237. Mr Sodi told the Commission that these were payments "made directly to the ANC" and speculated that this "could be to pay for a venue, to assist with payment for salaries".

238. Mr Sodi offered no explanation why donations to a political party were not made through the official channels and administrative structures of the party. The ANC has an office of the Treasurer-General, bank accounts, offices and staff who would receive donations, provide receipts in respect thereof, record such donation in the accounts of the organisation and deposit the funds into the appropriate bank account of the organisation. He did not suggest any reason why payment had been made to one specific individual.

Pinky Kekana: R170 000.00

239. Mr Sodi described Ms Kekana as "someone I consider a sister" but offered no reason why he should be making payments to her.

Thulas Nxesi: R45 000.00

240. Mr Sodi told the Commission that there were two payments, one of which was paid to a school and one was for accommodation "for underprivileged kids".

241. Should Mr Nxesi, a former school teacher and subsequently a national Minister, have been soliciting donations for schools or children, then it is surprising that Mr Sodi did not establish the identity of the school and its bank account or the relevant provincial departmental account for the funds to be appropriately deposited therein.

Zizi Kodwa: R174 760.00

242. Mr Sodi informed the Commission that "Zizi is a friend I have known for a number of years" and acknowledged that "he is currently deputy minister of intelligence". The explanation given by Mr Sodi was that > this was payment that I made for him as a friend where he requested assistance on a number of times, he will say we have not been paid on time this month from Luthuli House or there is delays in payment... he would ask for assistance because maybe he has got debit orders that have to go through...

Zweli Mkhize: R6 500 000.00

243. Mr Sodi told the Commission that these were payments to the ANC and, according to Mr Sodi, "went directly to the ANC account". He went on to say that "that particular individual was the Treasurer-General of the ANC at the time ... he was the one who approached me at the time to ask for assistance and that is why his name is used as a reference".

244. Mr Sodi told the Commission that a total sum of a little more than R3.5 million was paid for and on behalf of the ANC, with "some payments made directly to the ruling party and some [of] it to service providers". The payments, all made from Blackhead's bank account, were used to purchase ANC T-shirts or to pay volunteers and other such expenses. Mr Sodi elaborated that "from time to time I have made donations to the ANC" and that these were "substantial amounts".

Doing business or concealed business with politically connected persons

245. Mr Sodi informed the Commission that, during the period 2014/2015, Blackhead had a turnover of over a billion Rand and agreed that this company had received payments from the Department of Human Settlements in excess of a billion Rand up to 2019.

246. On Mr Sodi's own version, Blackhead is heavily invested in conducting business with government at a provincial level. The Commission has no information of business interaction with government at a municipal or local level. Mr Sodi asserted his loyalty to the ANC and so justified his purported generosity to that political organisation, whether his donations were made to the organisation's official and administrative structures, or to individuals or in cash.

247. There are many difficulties in comprehending the nature of the open-handed assistance given by Mr Sodi to this political party. Firstly, he does not identify the funds as going to the political party but to individuals who are members or office bearers thereof, or who occupy government positions. Secondly, there is no indication that the political party ever received these payments or acknowledged such receipt.

248. Mr Sodi's method of bookkeeping and financial records therefore mean that Mr Mashatile (R370 thousand), Mr Nxesi (R45 thousand) and Mr Mkhize (R6.5 million) are all tarred with the possibility that they received funds not intended for themselves, failed to obtain full records from the ANC or the schools, and failed to furnish these to Mr Sodi. Alternatively, Mr Sodi's method of record-keeping exposes Messrs Mashatile, Nxesi and Mkhize to the suspicion that they may have received these funds in their personal capacity and that could lead to the question what each may have offered Mr Sodi in return.

249. Mr Sodi's generosity to friends is also problematic. These payments are made from business accounts in the name of business entities controlled by Mr Sodi. Where he made payments to friends such as Bongani More (some R7.5 million), Linda Ngcobo (some R2 million), Pinky Kekana (R170 000), Zizi Kodwa (R170 000), they are not distinguished as personal loans to friends, which cannot therefore be deducted from business income as business expenses. These payments supposedly fall into the category of personal income of Mr Sodi himself, which he can freely dispose of as loans to friends.

250. The issue is not merely one of tax compliance. The difficulty is that no reliance whatsoever can be placed upon Mr Sodi's business records. He has no records worth the paper on which they may have been written. Accordingly, Mr Sodi was unable (despite being given the opportunity by way of postponements) to produce written agreements, invoices, schedules of payments or other financial documentation that would even begin to explain any of the payments made to any of the beneficiaries named above.

251. Such accounting and administrative disarray has several results. Not only is there great possibility for mismanagement of the businesses and even greater likelihood of being unable to be tax compliant, but there is also every opportunity to conceal payments, whether or not legitimate.

252. Furthermore, as Mr Sodi has acquired his great wealth and ability to make such loans or donations to "friends" by reason of his business interests, which include extremely lucrative contracts with government departments, there can only but be great concern over such "loans" or assistance given to "friends" who occupy influential positions in government. These payments were made to persons who were sometimes directly involved in the geographical area, the political domain and the business arena in which Blackhead, Sodi and Mpambani were operating. Mr More (housing in Gauteng), Mr Ngcobo (housing in Gauteng), Mr Kekana (Limpopo roads) are amongst those who had and may still have great influence over the award or facilitation of government contracts, especially when fair and transparent processes are not followed.

253. The payments supposedly made to Mr Jimmy Tau are one example. The Tau entities received monies from the payments made by the Department, and transfers to the Tau entities are supposedly dependent upon the Asbestos Audit. The transfers to the Tau entities are identified by Mr Mpambani as being a "cost" of the Asbestos Audit and Mr Sodi has not only seen that "Cost of Business" schedule but has also authorised payments from the bank accounts of his businesses to the Tau entities. There can be no doubt that there is a connection between these transfers to the Tau entities and the Asbestos Audit. Yet Mr Sodi is determined to distance Mr Tau from the Asbestos Audit. He claims that Mr Tau is retained as a business consultant but can produce no agreement to that effect. He claims that Mr Tau provided services on another project but is unable to identify that project, provide any invoices from Mr Tau or explain why the transfers were made from the Asbestos Audit funds and not those of the other project.

254. Through a maze of various entities and bank accounts, payments turn out to have been made to a third party to meet costs incurred by the former MEC for Housing in Gauteng and subsequently Minister of Water and Sanitation, Ms Nomvula Mokonyane. The evidence before the Commission is that Ms Mokonyane was personally involved in deciding upon the Asbestos Audit in Gauteng, the contract for which was given to Mr Sodi and his business. Ms Mokonyane has not had the opportunity to respond to this information, but Mr Sodi has been questioned on this matter. His answers have been unconvincing. His financial records fail to assist; in fact, they are the source of his own undoing.

255. Furthermore, payments identified as being connected to Mr Collin Pitso, former chief of staff to Ms Mokonyane, are rather desperately sought by Mr Sodi to be characterised as in respect of payments to a construction company. Questions arise whether or not the construction company is a cut-out or intermediary for payments between Mr Sodi and Mr Pitso, or between Mr Sodi, Mr Pitso and another unidentified person, such as Ms Mokonyane. Again, neither Mr Pitso nor Ms Mokonyane have had the opportunity to respond to any suspicions. Further, the Commission's investigators have not examined the banking records of either Mr Pitso or Ms Mokonyane or of their relatives to ascertain whether or not any of Mr Sodi's or Mr Mpambani's generosity was received by them. However, Mr Sodi business methods and accounting records may have exposed irregular or corrupt business practices and may have unfairly raised suspicions about innocent and uninvolved persons. At the very least, Mr Sodi and his companies and Mr Mpambani and his companies are not compliant with either tax or accounting practices as required by the law.

256. Similarly, Mr Sodi attempts to explain away transfers of funds to persons such as Mr Bongani More (some R7.5 million) because Mr More is a business partner but fails to indicate the identity of or the nature of the business, the reason for the transfer of funds to Mr More, or what business purpose was achieved by such payments. No partnership agreements or corporate documentation was forthcoming, no business plan, no budget, no record or business activity.

257. Likewise, when Mr Sodi identifies funds as being linked to Mr Pitso (R6.5 million) and then says that he was using the services of a construction company with quite another name, it is unlikely that there is a business relationship with that other construction company. No invoices, contracts or receipts were produced indicating any lawful cause for payment to the construction company. Sodi said he merely used Mr Pitso's name as a reference when paying millions to Mr Pitso's father for construction work.

258. Both Mr More (Housing in Gauteng) and Mr Pitso (Housing in Gauteng and chief of staff to Ms Mokonyane) may have influence over policy and administrative processes and decisions. There is every possibility that payments of funds directly to such persons or through third parties would lead to allegations of improper relationships between a businessman such as Mr Sodi, and government employees such as Mr More and Mr Pitso. Mr Pitso and Mr More have not had the opportunity to explain how they viewed their relationship with Mr Sodi. This Commission can examine the evidence on transfer of funds only in the light of the explanations offered by Mr Sodi. These explanations are singularly unconvincing and, in the absence of any supporting evidence, cannot be believed.

259. The result is that the Commission is left with the view that Mr Sodi made generous payments through his business bank accounts to obtain access, secure influence and retain connections with a number of individuals at provincial and national levels of government. Whether or not such payments were intended by Mr Sodi to obtain an immediate direct benefit in return, or to create obligations for the future, this would unquestionably indicate an appetite on the part of Mr Sodi for some form of state capture. Such a consistent course of action would indicate that a business person made payments to persons who occupied political leadership positions or were employed as government officials with both the intention and the result of obtaining private benefit for himself or his businesses.

Mr Edwin Sodi and Mr Thabani Zulu: The payment of R600 000

260. The evidence presented before the Commission is such that Mr Sodi and Mr Zulu, who was the DG of the national Department of Housing, may well be guilty of corruption in that the amount of R600 000 that Mr Sodi or his company, Blackhead, gave to Mr Zulu by paying for his motor vehicle at SMD Trading Group in Ballito, KZN. It may well have been a bribe or a reward to Mr Zulu for his role in facilitating the award of the asbestos contract by the Free State Department to his company or to the JV.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Conclusions

261. What is of particular relevance to the work of the Commission is the questionable way in which the services of the JV were procured, at grossly inflated cost, and for little benefit to the Province and particularly its poorer inhabitants. Rather, a few private individuals benefited from the transaction. The evidence presented further indicates that these individuals included government officials as well as private individuals, some of whom in turn may have made payments to the ANC. In particular, the following pattern of state capture can be identified.

An approach is made by private individuals to a government department

262. In this instance, the approach was unsolicited and the work to be done was not part of the Department's budgeted business plan. Legislative frameworks support public-private partnerships and provides for access to government funds for implementation of innovative ideas that solve societal problems. This participation is guided by the Constitution, applicable legislation, primarily the PFMA, and Treasury Regulations. In this matter, the private individuals who approached the Department, together with the responsible government officials, failed to implement the policies and regulations for fair participation in competitive bidding processes. Their unlawful and unethical conduct has been to the detriment of the Department and the poor people of the Free State who depend on government housing provision.

Through unlawful and unethical conduct, officials undermined the relevant procurement prescripts to facilitate procurement opportunities for personal gain

263. Officials in collusion with private individuals utilise their good understanding of key Treasury Regulations (Regulation 16A6.6 and Regulation 16A6.4) to intentionally circumvent competitive bidding processes and use deceit to enable approval of project budgets. This corrupted environment caused serious financial losses for the state and negatively impacted on smaller actors in the industry. Competitive bidding is necessary for enabling South Africa to realise its National Development Plan (NDP) goals, including "inclusive development".

The Department did not receive value for money from the supplier

264. Poor project management in the Department allowed the service provider to manipulate the scope of work and the pricing of the project. The price charged was more than ten times the actual cost of the work contracted for, and the outcome of the work will require that the audit be implemented again in order to generate, among others, an accurate and complete bill of qualities, before the removal of asbestos-containing materials can take place. Since the Department evaded the standard requirement to test the market for available skills and capacity in this industry, government missed the opportunity to engage the most productive service provider for its needs.

Money was paid by the service provider to officials in provincial and national departments in suspicious-looking payments and gratuities around the time of the transaction

265. In this case, money was paid by Mr Sodi to a dealership for a vehicle for Mr Zulu, ostensibly in discharge of a debt owed to a business owned by Mr Zulu's wife. Mr Sodi also paid money directly to a conveyancer as a deposit for a house to be bought by Mr Mokhesi's family trust. Such deposit was paid prior to the deed of sale being signed and prior to the coming into existence of the trust, and ostensibly as part of a business transaction from which Mr Mokhesi would benefit. These transactions show the ease with which gratuities / inducements / rewards paid to officials may be concealed. They also show how unaccountable private agencies such as banks, estate agents and motor dealerships were used to conceal questionable transactions. Addressing such malfeasance and other manifestations of state capture require a coordinated response by the government and private business.

The service provider made further payments to the ruling party and to politically exposed persons around the time of the transaction

266. In this case, Mr Sodi paid in excess of R10 million to the ANC between 2013-2018 and made several other payments to politically exposed persons (PEPs). Mr Mpambani also made various payments on request from the Office of the Premier of the Free State. Although the Commission's investigation focused on one province in South Africa, the transactions permeated several provinces in the country.

267. Different levels of leadership in the country have been either directly involved or implicated. South Africa will benefit from a public service culture that is based on an ethical and principled code of conduct applicable across different spheres of government, to elected representatives and public servants, and to the public and private sectors. Further, members of the ruling party have been identified as direct beneficiaries of questionable transactions, and the ruling party itself as a recipient of forms of sponsorship and support by the service provider to government. The ruling party and all political parties that may hold power at some stage in one or more sphere of government need to implement sustainable measures that will insulate themselves from such malfeasance.

Recommendations

268. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should conduct further investigations into whether or not the payment made by Mr Sodi or his company, Blackhead, to SMD Trading Group in connection with the purchase of a Maserati, was a bribe or reward for Mr Zulu, through Mr Ntuli, for Mr Zulu's role in the facilitation of the award of the Asbestos contract to the JV. The Commission has a suspicion that this may well have been the case but ran out of time and did not finalise its investigation in this regard.

269. It is recommended that the NPA seriously consider preferring criminal charges of corruption against either or both Mr Sodi and his company Blackhead, as well as against Mr Mokhesi, who was the HoD of the Free State Department of Human Settlements, in connection with the payment by Blackhead or Mr Sodi of an amount of R650 000.00 towards the purchase of the property situated in Bloemfontein. The Commission is satisfied that this payment was made as a reward or inducement or both to Mr Mokhesi in connection with his role in facilitating the award of the Asbestos contract to the JV, or as a reward for or inducement for the payment by Mr Mokhesi's Department to the JV.

FREE STATE R1 BILLION HOUSING PROJECT

INTRODUCTION

1. As stated in the introduction of the Terms of Reference (TOR) of this Commission, the Commission was appointed to investigate matters of public and national interest concerning allegations of state capture, corruption, and fraud. TOR 1.9 provides for an expansive interpretation of the nature and extent of corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by government departments, agencies, and entities. The second question posed is "whether any member of the National Executive (including the President), public official, functionary or any organ of state influenced the awarding of tenders to benefit themselves, their families or entities in which they held a personal interest".

2. The overwhelming number of cases/issues brought before the Commission dealt with allegations of the corrupt awarding of contracts to the Gupta family businesses by government entities, and other corrupt activities of organs of the state and state officials. However, the Public Protector (PP) investigation that gave rise to this Commission also gave rise to investigations into the alleged improper conduct of members of the executive, thus invoking the Executive Members' Ethics Act 82 of 1998 and the Executive Ethics Code read with section 6 of the Public Protector Act 23 of 1994. Other allegations of corruption were investigated in terms of the provisions of the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004, such as the alleged offer of ministerial positions by the Gupta family. The Free State R1-billion housing issue properly fits into the category of "alleged improper conduct in state affairs" because of evidence of the illegal awarding of contracts and the potential for corruption that might have existed because of this illegal activity.

3. This matter refers to the illegal advance payments made by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to building contractors and suppliers of material for a project to build houses from the R

1.42 billion it had been allocated for the construction of low-cost housing in the Free State during the 2010/2011 financial year.

4. At that time, although the national norm for a low-cost house was R 50 000 to build a 40 square metre house, in the Free State the norm had been increased to a house of 45 square metres for the same fixed price. A settlement was reached with the contractors to the effect that those contactors who had already been appointed would automatically qualify for contracts to build the larger houses for R 72 000, while other contactors could also submit bids for a new tender to build the larger 50 square metre houses at the same cost per house.

5. After the public tender closed on 16 April 2010 and the Bid Adjudication Committee (BAC) had met on 28 July 2010, it was discovered at this meeting that the validity period of the tender had lapsed, and the tender was cancelled. A decision was taken by the BAC to establish a database of contractors which included all those who had submitted bids or tenders, including compliant and non-compliant and even disqualified bidders, instead of putting out another tender.

6. The Department's Exco took a resolution on 30 July 2010 that construction of houses should begin, and on 10 September 2010, an allocation list of 106 contractors drawn from this database was signed by the Free State MEC for Human Settlements.

7. A threat early in 2010 from the National Department of Human Settlements to withdraw unspent money from Provincial Departments that was earmarked for the delivery of houses to indigent people and to renovate badly constructed RDP houses was followed on about 14 October 2010 by the raising of an alarm by the National Department about significant problems with the expenditure and housing delivery in four provinces, including the Free State, against their monthly delivery targets.

8. The situation in the Department in October 2010 was that no houses had been built at that stage and no contractors had been appointed as service providers.

9. The first response of the Free State Department was to initiate a so-called Expenditure Recovery Plan (ERP) in October 2010. This consisted of no more than setting out management processes and targets. Unfortunately, these were later deemed to be unduly optimistic and unrealistic and were never actually achieved. The ERP was rejected at a meeting of TechMinMec on 29 October 2010 and a MinMec meeting on 19 November 2010.

10. The second response was to introduce an Advance Payment Scheme (APS) from late October 2010 and implement it from November 2010. This Scheme involved payments by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to suppliers of materials who effectively then channelled funds to those contractors who were to build housing in the Free State.

11. Both these programmes – the ERP and APS – were to be implemented by entities and persons who were not placed on a Provincial database after an open and transparent process of advertisement and application, evaluation and selection. Instead, this cohort of contractors consisted of entities which had been successful and others that had failed the original selection process, had never applied to be on the official database or had no experience in building. Political considerations are openly acknowledged to have played a major role in their appointment as contractors.

12. A Memorandum on the APS was produced on 25 November 2010, and, according to the Auditor-General (AG), approximately R 500 million was paid by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to service providers between November 2010 and February 2011 pursuant to this scheme. However, despite claims to the contrary, there is very little evidence before the Commission that any significant number of houses were built during this period.

13. On 9 December 2010, the Minister of Human Settlements addressed a letter to the MEC for the Free State Department informing him that the Department had achieved a spending rate of 21%, which was below the benchmark of 58%, at the end of October 2010, and as a consequence the Minister was giving notice of the intention to withhold the sum of R 263 million from the Department's 2010/11 allocation and to reallocate it to other provinces that were in need of additional funding and had demonstrated a good spending performance.

14. On 12 January 2011, the Provincial Department was informed by the National Department of Human Settlements that a portion of its allocated budget would be re-allocated, to which the Department responded with a media statement on 20 January 2011 to the effect that it had spent 78% of its budget and was on track to spend 100% by the end of the financial year.

15. In February 2011, the Minister of Human Settlements instructed officials of the Free State Department to cease making advance payments, but these payments continued. The AG investigated the APS and concluded that the money spent resulted in fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

16. The Special Investigations Unit (SIU) investigated the issue of advance payments in 2013/2014 and reported its findings in 2015, which included unauthorised expenditure made through this scheme, contravention of the Constitution and of sections of the PFMA by entering into agreements with service providers under this scheme, and the commission of criminal offences arising from these.

17. Disciplinary procedures were instituted in the Department and several officials were placed on suspension in 2012, before being formally charged with misconduct on 21 January 2013. The Disciplinary Hearing was chaired by Advocate E S J Van Graan SC, whose written judgement dated 30 April 2015 resulted in six officials being dismissed. These were Ms D Y D Mokhele (Chief Director, Housing Programmes), Mr Mphikeleli Kaizer Maxatshwa (Chief Director, Housing Development, Planning and Research), Mr Kabelo William Koloi (Director Project Management and Technical Services), Mr L S Ndenze (Director, Informal Settlements and Land Tenure), Mr M C Twala (Director, Housing Special Programmes), and Ms N D Makhaotse (Director, Housing Subsidy and Development), while the then Free State MEC, Mr Mosebenzi Zwane, was promoted to further positions of political leadership and the HOD, Mr Mpho Mokoena, transferred from the Department of Human Settlements to a position within a municipality.

18. The evidence before this Commission is neither contentious nor disputed in any real sense. The proposal for such an APS, and the design and implementation thereof owe everything to an incompetent MEC and senior officials.

19. All witnesses were determined to lay blame for non-compliance with policy, unlawful expenditures, irregular procedures, and total departmental failures at the door of either the MEC or senior officials in turn. Each is to blame.

20. The MEC openly proclaimed his ignorance and failure to acquaint himself with the barest of understanding of the work of the Department under his political leadership. The DG was supine in the extreme and chose to blame the MEC and his alleged fear of the MEC for his own professional and occupational incompetence. Other officials at the level of DDDG were equally pathetic in their lack of spine in relation to the DG.

21. It is unfortunate that those persons who were disciplined and whose employment was terminated were staff who were not able to challenge the DG or the MEC. The sharks got away while the small fish have been devoured.

HOUSING PROVISION

The regulatory framework for the provision of housing

22. A number of those who deposed to affidavits summarised the principles of the Division of Revenue Act (DORA) insofar as this pertains to funding of housing and the process of compiling provincial and national business plans for housing.

23. Municipalities identify their low-cost housing needs, prepare a business plan for such and then apply to the Provincial Department of Human Settlements (DOHS) for necessary funding. The Provincial Department then performs a needs-analysis and development readiness in respect of the application by the municipalities, which results in the compilation of a housing allocation list, which records the number of low-cost houses to be constructed in the area of jurisdiction of each municipality, approved by the DOHS. The housing allocation list forms the basis of the business plan which, once approved, forms part of the National Housing Subsidy Scheme ('the HSS') established in terms of the Housing Act 107 of 1997.

24. Included in the provincial business plan would be information such as the number of units to be constructed, the identity of those responsible for title deeds and training which would be conducted, and whether or not funds would be transferred to municipalities should they have capacity to perform the work themselves. This provincial business plan is then forwarded to the National Department of Housing and consolidated with all other plans for approval by National Treasury. Organs of state involved in government housing projects are obliged to feed information about their housing projects into the HSS and to use the scheme as a project management tool to record milestones against which contractors are entitled to receive part payment (dependent upon completion of those milestones) of the agreed contract price.

25. These milestones for payment in respect of government housing projects are completion of the foundations (phase 1), completion of the wall plate (phase 2), and completion of the housing unit (phase 3). They correspond with the agreed payment plan in terms of the standard building contract used by the Free State Department of Human Settlements.

Execution of the provincial and national low-cost housing plan

26. The South African Constitution determines the standard against which all processes and policies relevant to the procurement of housing must be evaluated and against which administrative action pursuant thereto must be judged. Section 217 of the Constitution deals with "Procurement" and states that:

    (1) When an organ of state in the national, provincial or local sphere of government, or any other institution identified in national legislation, contracts for goods or services, it must do so in accordance with a system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective.

    (2) Subsection (1) does not prevent the organs of state or institutions referred to in that subsection from implementing a procurement policy providing for— (a) categories of preference in the allocation of contracts; and (b) the protection or advancement of persons, or categories of persons, disadvantaged by unfair discrimination.

    (3) National legislation must prescribe a framework within which the policy referred to in subsection (2) must be implemented. [Sub-s. (3) Substituted by s. 6 of the Constitution Seventh Amendment Act of 2001.]

27. Contractors are appointed after a tender has been published and applications from prospective service providers are received. The then Free State Chief Director: Housing Development, Planning and Monitoring, Mr Maxatshwa, explained that the tender process mainly focused on selecting and approving building contractors who satisfied the compliance criteria and had proven track records for building low-cost housing (i.e. contractors who complied with functionality requirements) – so-called "'experienced building contractors" – while the Head of Department, Mr Mokoena stated that the Free State Department of Human Settlements utilised a system "whereby we graded our contractors in terms of competency/performance", which "made sure that those contractors who always delivered on their contracts were the ones that received the big allocations for the constructions of houses."

28. The materials to complete the various milestones are provided by the appointed contractors, whose work is then inspected by the Free State Department of Human Settlements. Inspections are carried out by an engineer appointed by the contactor, a technical official from the Department, a building inspector of the relevant municipality and often a representative of the National Home Builders Registration Council.

29. All contractors' work must be certified as complete before information can be fed into the HSS so as to trigger an interim payment obligation. When the construction work is of the required standard, the official of the Department of Human Settlements certifies the claim form and issues it to the contractor (also known as a Technical Analysis System Report, TASR), which entitles the contractor to receive the agreed payment for the milestone which has been completed. The contractor submits that TASR to the Financial Unit of the Department of Human Settlements which processes the payment request against the information recorded on the HSS.

30. As Mr Maxatshwa confirmed to the Commission, "there is an elaborate system of checks and balances for the proper expenditure of payment for low-cost housing on the one hand and for the proper construction under supervision of low-cost housing on the other hand".

31. Funding is allocated to Provincial Departments of Human Settlements each financial year for construction of low-cost housing by National Treasury. The process of allocation takes place in terms of the Division of Revenue Act (DORA).

32. This allocation is subject to the satisfaction of conditions, which include delivery targets. Where allocated funding is not spent by a province during a financial year, then the National Department notifies this province that further transfers of funds will be withheld and that funds will be re-allocated elsewhere. Such re-allocation of funds might also reduce the allocation of funds to the underspending province in the following year.

33. This process was explained to the Commission by officials such as the HOD, Mr Mokoena, and Mr Maxatshwa, Deputy DG, within the Free State Department of Human Settlements who both understood the policy and the practice thereof.

THE CREATION OF A DATABASE OF SERVICE PROVIDERS

34. The Free State Department of Human Settlements was allocated a budget of R 1.42 billion in the 2010/2011 financial year for the construction of low-cost housing in the Free State.

35. Mr Mmuso Tsoametsi, DDG in the Free State Department of Traditional Affairs and alleged former Advisor to the MEC, Mr Zwane, at the time, gave an overview of the problems which emerged at the beginning of the 2010/2011 financial year. However, it is possible that he misstated the years in which these events occurred. He stated that there were elections in April 2009 and that "normally during the transitional period between the old regime and the new regime is when problems with the underspending of DORA funding happens. This is exactly what happened in 2009/2010". He explained that the "old regime" had a business plan for RDP houses but when the new Premier (Mr Ace Magushule) took over in 2009 he had to implement his election manifesto which included, inter alia, the construction of bigger RDP houses. Accordingly, an announcement made by the Premier during the 2010 State of the Province Address, according to Mr Tsoametsi, "changed the whole landscape of RDP houses in the Free State" and the old business plan could no longer be implemented.

36. In his State of the Province Address on 26 February 2010, then Premier Magashule announced that RDP houses would now be 50 square metres in size. Mr Maxatshwa stated that it was this announcement by the Premier which led to disputes with contractors who had already been appointed to build houses of 40 square metres at a fixed price of R 50 000 and who were now expected to build larger houses for the same contract price. According to Mr Tsoametsi, the upshot of the new specifications announced by the Premier was that new contractors had to be appointed and the Department had to come up with a new strategy as to how the DORA funding would be spent.

37. A settlement was subsequently reached with contractors where it was agreed that contractors could tender to build the larger 50 square metre houses at the cost of R 72 000 per house. Those contactors who had already been appointed to build 40 square metre houses for R 50 000 would automatically qualify for contracts to build the larger houses for R 72 000.

38. It became necessary for a new tender to be published. The public tender closed on 16 April 2010 and the BAC met on 28 July 2010. However, it was discovered at this meeting that the validity period of the tender had lapsed. The minutes of the BAC record the recommendation that "different databases be consolidated and used as a source of service providers". The minutes specifically state that, amongst the databases to be consolidated is "the list of suppliers who tendered for this tender". Mr Maxatshwa stated that this resolution was approved by the HOD, Mr Mokoena, who was also the accounting officer of the Free State Department of Human Settlements.

39. It would appear that this database had over 300 names and was confirmed by the MEC, Mr Zwane, to include bidders who were qualified, bidders who had been disqualified and bidders who were unable to continue with the process. This means that anyone who applied to be appointed as a contractor, irrespective of whether or not they were tax compliant, experienced in building, or financially viable would be placed on this "consolidated database" even though he or she or it may be totally incapable of building houses for the Department. The only requirement for being placed on the database would be the submission of an application pursuant to the advertising of the public tender.

40. In fact, what is recorded is that 105 bidders were disqualified for basic bid compliance, and 104 were disqualified because they did not meet the minimum functionality threshold; while 28 bids from established contractors and 81 bids from emerging contractors qualified to be evaluated on price.

41. A comparison between the record of the Bid Evaluation Committee (BEC) and the list of respondents to the 2016 High Court application of the Free State Department of Human Settlements to set aside contracts shows that some contractors who later received contracts in this matter indeed were deemed to be disqualified by the BEC. For example, Jore Construction CC was disqualified because its National Home Builders Registration Council (NHBRC) registration had expired but was clearly awarded contracts as it is listed as the 2nd Respondent, as well as in National Urban Reconstruction and Housing Agency (NURCHA) reports mentioned below.

42. In a version put forward in Mr Zwane's second appearance before the Commission, he confirmed that there were previous contractors appointed to a database. Then the dispute with the contractors arose, and they began the processes that would give them a new list. Mr Zwane confirmed that that new process was the same process as the one that gave them 361 bids (according to the minutes). He also confirmed the sequence of events that led to a consolidated list of qualified and disqualified bidders and those from other databases and that the tender process continued until 28 July when it was finally abandoned.

43. In other words, Mr Zwane's version on his second appearance was that the tender process described above, which ran from April to July 2010, would have been for the creation of a database, and not for specific work to be allocated. On this version, the open tender process that took place in April-July 2010 was meant to facilitate a new database that could be used by Mr Zwane for the following five years. Mr Zwane's version on this appearance was that officials had assured him that it was lawful to award contracts to those on the database after the tender process had collapsed.

44. According to Mr Mokoena, the purpose of the database from the Department's perspective was to keep a list of qualified contractors who may be alerted to relevant tender advertisements as and when they appeared. Tenders were advertised around four weeks prior to the closing date, and there was a risk that the Department would not receive bids from qualified contractors. The database was introduced to alert qualified contractors when tenders were open in order to ensure high quality bids were received from qualified contractors.

45. The benefit to a contractor of being on the database was therefore that they would receive communication from the Department when a tender relevant to their skills was advertised. But those contractors would still need to submit a bid and have that bid evaluated against all other bids to be eligible to have the work allocated to them. According to Mr Mokoena, it would have been irregular for a contractor on the Department's database to be allocated projects without going through the further tender process which involved submitting a bid for a specific housing project in terms of section 38(1)(a)(iii) of the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 (PFMA).

46. After the Chair probed him for clarity, Mr Zwane said that his understanding is that a list/database is compiled after a competitive bidding process, and that list would be used until it expires after five years. Mr Zwane claims that he questioned this process when he arrived in the Department, and he was told that this process is used to "save time".

47. On the 1 August 2010, the Exco of the Free State Department of Human Settlements took a resolution that construction of houses should begin. The "allocation list" of 106 contractors was signed by Mr Zwane, the MEC, on 10 September 2010.

THREATS OF BUDGET RE-ALLOCATION

48. The Free State Department of Human Settlements failed to meet delivery targets with the result that budgeted funds were not expended. The pending consequences were that there would be withholding of funds, reallocation of the budget in the 2010/2011 financial year and a reduction of the budget in the succeeding financial year.

49. The then HOD of the Free State Department of Human Settlements, Mr Mokoena, told the Commission that by October 2010 they had not built any houses, and that only a few sites had foundations because they did not have service providers appointed yet as contractors. The result was that no more than 10% of the housing budget had been spent.

50. Mr Zwane confirmed that in 2010 there was a threat from the National Department of Human Settlement to withdraw the unspent money that was earmarked for the delivery of houses to indigent people and to renovate the RDP houses that were badly constructed and unsuitable for human occupation.

51. Mr Zwane states that "on and about the 14th October 2010 the National Department of National Housing raised an alarm about significant problems with the expenditure and housing delivery in four provinces including Free State against their monthly delivery targets".

52. Mr Zwane told the Commission that on 18 October 2010, the Minister of Housing held a conference with all MECs of the nine provinces "to raise lack of delivery and under-expenditure and the under-performing provinces were asked to submit recovery plans showing how they intend to prove expenditure and delivery."

53. According to Mr Mokoena, the National Department of Human Settlements informed them that they were being down-scheduled in terms of their performance and will as a result receive notice that a particular amount will be withdrawn from their budget and given to other provinces that are performing, unless they present a plan.

54. Mr Mokoena stated that the National Department had already withheld an amount of R 263 million that was due to the Free State in terms of the allocated budget, but the National Department was now threatening to withdraw the entire allocated budget if it was not spent on housing.

55. Both Mr Maxatshwa and Mr Zwane confirmed that the National Department had requested the Provincial Department to come up with a recovery plan to spend the unspent budget before the new financial year and to build houses during the remaining months of December 2010 to March 2011.

THE EXPENDITURE RECOVERY PLAN

56. Pursuant to queries from the National Department, what came to be known as the "Expenditure Recovery Plan" (the ERP) was designed and implemented in response to correspondence from the then National DG, Mr Thabane Zulu, and from then Minister Mr Tokyo Sexwale, demanding action.

57. The MEC told the Commission that his understanding of the Recovery Plan was "how we are going to recover from the slumber that we are in as a province". Mr Zwane told the Commission that he arranged a meeting with all officials and requested them to come up with a recovery plan to submit to the Minister. He did not take any part in development of this plan. Mr Zwane recalls no meetings in respect of the ERP Plan but told the Commission that "we had two, three meetings on the suggested opinion".

58. The content of this Plan was set out in a presentation containing a "10 Point Plan on Expenditure". The presentation notes are undated. The document was apparently created after a "war room" had been set up to monitor and implement expenditure on this ERP which was nothing more than simple outline of a normal programme to ensure delivery on a project. In addition, in October 2010, a set of cash flow projections was also prepared, which supposedly represented the completion of several thousand houses at a total cost of R1 billion (one billion Rand). These projections identified milestones of foundations, wall plates, and the completions of units.

59. Mr Mokoena commented that the projections were made with the understanding that they were going to speed up in terms of "getting our capacity". He further stated that the cash flow projections were no more than an impractical map of how the budget could be spent, rather than a realistic set of targets for completion before the financial year end. He further described the expenditure of some R500 million on supply of materials to contractors as "unfocused", "impractical" and "unrealistic" and stated that it was not ever believed that it would result in the building of the units set out in these cash flow projections. The Plan was only ever about making payment to suppliers of material without expecting any milestones of completed foundations, wall plates and actual units to be delivered. This was confirmed by Mr Tsoametsi, which he blamed on capacity shortages and the fact that the department was "in transition".

60. Mr Zwane conceded to the Commission that the ERP presentation and the cash flow projections were ambitious and that he would have preferred one which was more specific. He also confirmed that in hindsight he could see that the ERP had "loopholes": He claims to have asked officials if the plan was realistic and whether he could hold them accountable for it, and they agreed. He did not ask how it would be achieved, only for their assurance that it would be achieved. Mr Zwane saw the ERP document as pushing officials and everybody harder to achieve.

61. The ERP was first presented at the Technical Ministerial Member Executive Council meeting on 29 October 2010 by Mr Maxatshwa on behalf of the HOD, Mr Mokoena, who had tendered his apologies. They were instructed to revise the plan and present a revised ERP to the November technical MINMEC. The ERP plan was subsequently presented to the Technical Ministerial Member Executive Council meeting of 18 November 2010. Again, Mr Mokoena tendered his apologies.

62. The aim of the ERP was to dissuade the National Department from removing funds from the Free State Department. Mr Mokoena conceded to the Commission that this was a misrepresentation but was unable to explain why such misrepresentation was made.

63. It is apparent to the Commission that the ERP presented to TechMinMec and MinMec and the National Department and former Minister Tokyo Sexwale, was an attempt by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to resolve its non-delivery and underspending challenges. However, it operated in parallel with the undisclosed scheme of advanced payments of which the National Department and the Minister were not informed and which was not publicly presented by the Free State Department as the real solution to the underspending problem.

THE ADVANCE PAYMENT SCHEME

64. It would appear that there is agreement from all concerned that the Advanced Payment Scheme (APS) was first discussed by the MEC and officials in the Department at a departmental meeting in their Bloemfontein offices in October 2010. Present at this meeting were Mr Gift Mokoena, Head of Department, Mr Seipati Dlamini, Chief Financial Officer, Local Government and Human Settlements, Ms Mamiki Mokhele, Chief Director, Mr Mmuso Tsoametsi, Deputy Director General, Mr Kaizer Maxatshwa, Deputy Director General, Mr Kabelo Koloi, Director Project Management and Technical Services, and Ms Innocentia Motaung, personal assistant to the MEC.

The content of the advanced payment scheme

65. The Advance Payment System (APS) was supposedly based upon existing National and Provincial protocols and requirements. Mr Mokoena, the HOD, explained that the process involved the Department entering into a contract with the contractor, who then contracted with a supplier of material who would provide him or her with a quote/invoice for the material. The contractor would then present this quote or pro forma invoice to the Department, which would then advance the monies to the contractor based on this quote or invoice. The contractor would then settle his debt with the supplier of materials once the Department had paid the contractor. These contracts, the tripartite agreement and the supply cession agreement, plus the invoice from the supplier to the contractor, would be handed to the New Material Cession Milestone Management branch of the Free State Department of Human Settlements, who would capture the beneficiaries, the contractor and the suite of documents. The documents would then be handed to the financial branch for payment.

66. Since the very nature of this system involves payments made in advance prior to completion of any of the Housing Subsidy System milestones, according to Mr Maxatshwa, the payment would have to be recorded on the system against one of the milestones notwithstanding that work had not been completed or "without the material having in fact been supplied to the contractor". Mr Zwane told the Commission that the plan did indeed involve buying material for building projects from suppliers and paying for those in advance (as stated by Mr Maxatshwa) but pointed out that the background of the plan was clear: that "advance payment will [only] be made where necessary" and that his interpretation was there would be instances where there was no advance payment.

The creation of the Tsoametsi memorandum

67. An internal memorandum dated 25 November 2010 was prepared and purports to emanate from Mr Tsoametsi as Deputy Director General and is titled "Approval for entering into material supplier agreement to support contractors".

68. Mr Tsoametsi stated that the result of the meeting in Welkom with contractors and suppliers and the Builders Market with officials from the Department was that it was his responsibility to "give meaning to the decisions taken at the Welkom meeting". He claims that the memorandum is "a combination of the outcome of the Welkom meeting, my own research and because of my interaction with the Contractors and Suppliers".

69. Firstly, he went into the website of the National Department and looked at policy issues and took note that it was said that, since 1994, well-resourced and well-capacitated contractors have pulled out of providing support for government with the result that this creates opportunities for small, medium and micro enterprises (SMME) contractors lacking capacity. Mr Tsoametsi took the view that "in my mind the same statement that was said by the contractors is now contained in a government policy". Secondly, Mr Tsoametsi investigated "contractor development or contractor support" and came across a "partnership established by Human Settlement Department of Gauteng" with whom he made contact. He was referred to the Gauteng legal section who explained the tripartite agreement which they utilised and which was forwarded to him. Thirdly, Mr Tsoametsi told the Commission that he contacted the entity known as NURCHA, who referred him to a Mr Coetzee who explained that NURCHA managed such a programme through a "partnership with material suppliers".

70. Mr Tsoametsi explained to the Commission that he felt he had "three outcomes" – support for contractors, partnering with material suppliers and a tripartite agreement. This resulted in Mr Tsoametsi preparing his memorandum for consideration by the HOD. He described how he approached a material supplier in Bloemfontein to find out if they would be interested in "my suggested model" and thereafter discussed the memorandum with the legal advisor of the Department, the late Mr Gordon Taka. He did not discuss the memorandum with any other legal advisor or legal department. Once the memorandum was prepared, Mr Tsoametsi addressed it to Mr Mokoena, who approved it. He knows that the MEC saw the document and that it was shown "to all officials in the DHS tasked with coming up with a solution to the underspend".

The purported reason for the advanced payment scheme – the Christmas holidays

71. One of the reasons the MEC, Mr Zwane, gave for the advance payments and the cession agreements was the pending Christmas shutdown by contractors. Yet, this is clearly incorrect. The Advance Payment Plan was presented by Mr Zwane to his officials in October. It was revealed to TechMinMec and MinMec during October and November. it was revealed to the National Department in December. It was not a response to the Christmas holiday closure. It was a response to the year-long failure of his Department to do the required work and produce results.

The purported reason – "Saving time"

72. Mr Mokoena explained that the APS meant that "we should start buying material from suppliers for projects". According to Mr Mokoena, Mr Zwane held the opinion that "by doing this, the contractors would save a lot of time and that this would enable them to concentrate on the construction of the houses". It is difficult to understand that the saving of time was of paramount importance to the MEC. What was under threat was the underspending of the budget of the Free State Department of Human Settlements. Funds had already been withheld, there were threats that funds already allocated to the Free State would be reallocated elsewhere and this would impact upon allocation of funds in the forthcoming financial year. This was a budgetary, not a delivery problem.

The ostensible reason for the advance payment scheme

73. The Commission was told time and again of the lack of expertise within this "new" Department. The Bid Evaluation Committee (BEC) and the Bid Adjudication Committee (BAC) had found the entire process of proceeding with the housing programme by way of public tender would affect the ability of the Department to build houses in the financial year. The solution was one born of desperation because if the Provincial Department failed to build houses and spend the monies allocated to it by the National Department then the MEC would have political egg on his face, the HOD would be seen to be incompetent and all the officials within the Department would be seen to be ineffectual.

74. The result was an advance payment plan to spend money so that the Department would seem to be using the budget allocated to it and thus would be presumed to be building houses. This was a fraud perpetrated upon, at the very least, the National Department of Human Settlements, designed to deceive then Minister Sexwale that the Free State Department was doing its job and getting houses built when that was certainly not the case.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE ADVANCE PAYMENT SCHEME

Briefing sessions and signing of contracts

75. Mr Maxatshwa described the process during which the MEC led "briefing sessions" district by district with contractors to whom the process was explained. According to him, contractors wanted the department to come and sign the first contract that allocates them work, and the second contract, tripartite and a cession agreement at the same time for this scheme to happen in any way. According to Mr Maxatshwa, the tripartite agreements with contractors and suppliers were signed on behalf of the Free State Department by the then HOD, Mr Mokoena, and sometimes by Mr Tsoametsi, Deputy Director General in the Free State Department of Traditional Affairs and alleged Advisor to the MEC at the time, while the cession agreements were signed by Mr LS Ndenze (Acting Director of Legal Services) or Mr Tsoametsi.

Exemplars of contracts with contractors, suppliers, cessions and payments

76. During November and December 2010, several contracts were signed with contractors. The contractors then visited municipalities to obtain details of where houses were to be constructed. Thereafter, the contractors provided the Department with invoices/quotes from the suppliers of materials. The Department then paid, in advance, for the materials which were to be sourced by the contractor from the supplier of materials based on these invoices.

77. Mr Mokoena states more than once in his affidavit of 11 November 2019 that he had his doubts or reservations about the authenticity of the invoices provided. In his evidence to the Commission, he said that he had reservations "because I knew when it comes to invoices you can never be sure about any invoices that we are getting because some invoices will be inflated, the prices will be changed from area to area, from region to region" with the result that "I had a fear that we were not going to be able to control that because if we have enough stuff [sic] we have enough technical people".

78. According to Mr Mokoena, leave for most of the employees in the Department was cancelled over the December 2010 holiday season "as per the instruction of the MEC". However, Mr Mokoena had booked a holiday on a cruise ship and had appointed Mr Maxatshwa as the acting HOD of Human Settlements during his absence. This appointment did not please the MEC and so, according to Mr Mokoena, the MEC appointed Ms Mokhele as acting HOD of Human Settlements with the result that there were two acting HODs during Mr Mokoena's absence.

79. There is a paucity of reliable evidence revealing the full nature of implementation of this Advance Payment Scheme. However, certain information is available which enables assessment of the implementation of the scheme. This is addressed by two witnesses below.

Hardware Mecca – Mr Duart Valks

80. Mr Duart Valks is a shareholder in Hardware Mecca (Pty) Ltd. Mr Valks apparently caused an affidavit to be prepared in response to certain questions from investigators pertaining to payment of the amount of some R 4 million received by Mecca Hardware from Robs Bricks (Pty) Ltd. This affidavit is neither signed nor sworn.

81. Valk set out that he was approached by contractors over the period November to December 2010 to supply material and was requested to provide a "quote/pro-forma invoice for the material they would require for the constructing of their allocated houses/units or certain phases of their allocated houses". Since the financial system of Hardware Mecca could not issue pro-forma invoices, quotes were issued and invoices were specially created for "stock purposes because once I issue an invoice, the system will record the transaction as stock leaving my business which was not the case".

82. Mr Valks was then approached by Mr Koloi of the Free State Department of Human Settlements to go to Bloemfontein where Mr Ndenze, Acting Director of Legal Services of the Department at the time, presented him with building supply agreements and cession agreements prepared by the Department, which he signed. After such signatures, the Department made advance payments to Hardware Mecca in respect of Group Two Business Enterprise, GT Molefi Construction, Mgiftana Trading Enterprise, Harakisha Building Construction, Momoxa Business Enterprise, Ntoloane Construction, and Abuja Construction. The details of the amounts of such payments are set out at paragraph 11 of the unsigned affidavit.

83. Mr Valks stated that he had known Mr Blacky Seoe from Robs Bricks as a client of Hardware Mecca, that Hardware Mecca had purchased Seoe's brick-making factory in about 2012, and that Robs Bricks had an account with Hardware Mecca which received numerous payments from Robs Bricks. Mr Valks understood that Robs Bricks had obtained a contract with the Department of Human Settlements for the construction of one hundred RDP houses. Similarly, Hardware Mecca also engaged with Robs Investment Holdings (Pty) Ltd for which an account was opened. Since the liquidation or insolvency or placement into business rescue of the Seoe enterprises, Hardware Mecca has lost a considerable sum of money by reason of non-payment for materials supplied.

GT Molefe – Ms Mofedi Nkabinde

84. Ms Nkabinde is the owner of a building contractor, GT Molefe, which had been operated by her late father and had previously been appointed as a service provider for large building projects. In 2009, G T Molefe was appointed for the delivery of 500 units in QwaQwa; but subsequently this appointment was changed to 300 units in QwaQwa and 200 units in Harrismith. Ms Nkabinde was subsequently informed telephonically by Mr Maxatshwa that the Free State Department of Human Settlements would be making advance payments to suppliers for delivery of material. Mr Maxatshwa requested Ms Nkabinde to obtain a pro forma invoice from a supplier to that effect. Ms Nkabinde obtained such a document from Mr Valks of Hardware Mecca, and when this was produced both she and Mr Valks were required to sign contracts. She advised that she asked Mr Valks to make payments to certain of the suppliers of G T Molefe on her behalf with the advance payments which Hardware Mecca had received.

85. In oral testimony, Mr Mokoena went further and alleged that three contractors – Allitory, Koena Property Developers and Raloto Properties – were close to Mr Zwane because they were from Mpumelelo where he comes from. When the Premier would sporadically announce allocations for "Operation Hlasela", the programme of action of the Free State government at the time, they would be allocated to these three contractors, for example in Harrismith, Senekal and Vrede, and he thinks these three contractors were also allocated the restitution housing project. According to Mr Mokoena, he and his team did not know most of the contractors on Mr Zwane's 106 list. He confirmed further that there were 40-45 names on the list that he had never seen before, and the list included some contractors who had been judged as incompetent in the bidding process. When he raised his concerns with Mr Zwane, Mr Zwane allegedly told Mr Mokoena that he would go to ground to speed up the process. He was not amenable to changing names on the list.

The number of contractors, the number of houses built

86. The Free State Department of Human Settlements furnished a list to the Commission in February 2020 indicating that 112 building contractors entered into agreements with the Department.

87. Mr Mokoena told the Commission that over the period November 2010 to February 2011 an amount of approximately R500 million was paid out by the Department in pursuance of this ERP. Anything between 21, 23 and 33 suppliers of building materials were paid.

88. Between 21,050 and 14,769 RDP houses were to be constructed by the appointed contractors. A further schedule indicates 20,950 RDP houses were to be built in the 2010/2011 financial year. The average cost per unit was in the region of R72 000.00. From the information supplied there is neither consistency nor accuracy in respect of the number of units per municipality or per contractor or per supplier, nor is there any certainty in respect of the cession amounts per supplier or contractor. Data available to the Auditor General reveals that some R7 million was paid by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to Robs Bricks. Mr Seoe confirmed that this sum of R7 million was for the supply of material to the Free State Department of Human Settlements. Although payment was made on 20 December 2010, Mr Seoe confirmed that Robs Bricks only commenced with work in 2012.

89. Particular attention was paid by the Commission to Robs Bricks and Robs Construction which appear to be in association with Robs Investments Holdings of which Mr Blackie Seoe was the sole director. Robs Construction received allocations although that company had not participated in the open tender process nor was it on the database. Mr Zwane confirmed that he knew Mr Seoe. Mr Maxatshwa told the Commission that, on various occasions, he observed that "nothing is happening on site". He said that the war room had knowledge that "material had not been supplied and payment has been advanced already." Mr Maxatshwa told the Commission that the MEC, Mr Zwane, "knew it was not working because of the reports" received by the war room.

90. Without giving exact figures, then MEC Zwane continued, even in September 2019, to claim in his affidavit that he was "overseeing the construction of these houses" and that he "saw positive steps taken by the contractors". He believes that he handed over approximately fifty houses and there were, according to him, "many structures which were on foundation stages, wall level milestones and roof level milestones which would have been completed had they been further two to three months". In the statement made by the Department on the 26 January 2011, it was claimed that it had expended 78% of its budget, a claim Mr Zwane disassociated himself from, but also claimed that he had no reason not to believe it. Evidence, however, indicate that the provision of housing in the Free State was singularly unsuccessful under Mr Zwane's leadership.

91. The former DDG, Mr Maxatshwa, states that materials were not supplied. As of 23 April 2012, little of the advance payments had been converted into certified progress in the construction and completion of built houses. For instance, Robs Bricks had been given R7million while only 27.5% or R 1,922,922.52 had been converted into certified progress. Similarly, Dumansi Trading CC had been given R72,876,947.95 while only 54.9% of the value had been converted into progress. Rich Reward (Pty) Ltd had been given R 72,876,947.95 while only 41% had been converted into certified progress. Hardware Mecca had been given R 46,237,855.48 of which only 56.5% had been converted into certified progress. It is estimated that only 64.8% of the R 531,552,897.22 the Department had paid to suppliers had been converted into certified progress.

DEVELOPMENTS

93. Notwithstanding the introduction and implementation of the Advance Payment Scheme, the National Department of Human Settlements nevertheless reallocated an amount of R 263 million from the Free State Department. It was also pointed out that this reallocation would have affected the ability of the Free State Department of Human Settlements to honour its financial commitments. Such reallocation occurred after disclosure of the APS.

Interventions and remedial consequences

Provincial and National Treasury

94. Mr Maxatshwa told the Commission of a meeting with the Provincial Treasury attended by himself, Mr Mokoena and the then CFO, Mr Danny Hattingh. There, Mr Mokoena "presented the monitoring of expenditure" and it was clear "the department was in serious trouble". Mr Maxatswha said that Mr Mokoena reported on expenditure and the Advanced Payment System and "National Treasury said: look, we are not for the idea". Absent minutes of any meeting, the Commission cannot know if Mr Maxatshwa's reference to a meeting with National Treasury is confused or conflated with Mr Mokoena's meeting with former Minister Sexwale. It is probably a separate meeting since Mr Maxatshwa is unlikely to have forgotten the attendance of either MEC Zwane or Minister Sexwale. There were thus likely to have been two meetings on a national basis – the one with the Treasury and the other with the Minister.

The Minister of Human Settlements

95. On 12 January 2011 the then Minister of Human Settlements, Mr Sexale, advised the HOD of the Provincial Department, Mr Mokoena, that the period provided for the Province to respond to the Minister's letter of 9 December 2010 and to "furnish ... reasons as to why the allocation should not be withheld" had expired with the result that the relevant sections of DORA would be applied and R263 million was being removed from the Free State 2010/2011 allocation and would be reallocated to other provinces. As a result, "no transfers will be made to your province during the months of February and March 2011". A media statement dated 18 January 2011 headed "R483 million in low-cost housing grants to be removed from under-performing provinces" was issued by the office of the Minister.

96. The response of the Free State Department of Human Settlements was to issue its own media statement on 20 January 2011 which stated that "the Free State Department of Human Settlements will not underspend funds allocated for human settlement development in the current year", advising that there had been challenges but that "this was corrected in November last year through the Expenditure Recovery Programme (ERP)".

97. During February 2011, then Minister Sexwale, and the National DG, Mr Thabane Zulu, called a meeting with the Free State Department seeking an explanation for the advance payments which had been made. Present were Mr Zwane, Mr Mokoena, Mr Tsoametsi, and Ms Debbie Hattingh who had been appointed as CFO of the Free State Department Human Settlements. Mr Mokoena initially told the Commission that the Minister wanted to talk about "this delivery model that we were implementing," but later amended this to "the prepaying of material". He recalls that the Minister "said that he heard that we were paying in advance and that same must be stopped as it is illegal and it could not happen while he is the Minister of HS." The MEC said that they had a document showing that it was legal to make the advance payments, but the Minister insisted that payments be stopped. In his evidence to the Commission, Mr Mokoena was specifically asked if the MEC referred to any document in his engagement with the Minister and Mr Mokoena replied in the negative. Only when prompted did he say that he had "inferred" that the MEC was referring to the Tsoametsi memorandum.

98. Mr Mokoena gave an undertaking to the Minister that "we would stop with the advance payments" by the end of February 2011. Mr Maxatshwa was not present at this meeting, but told the Commission that Mr Mokoena briefed the staff on what had happened at the meeting with the Minister. However, he stated that payments continued "because on the HSS system they were still running those particular payments."

Disciplinary proceedings

99. Resulting therefrom, six officials in the Free State Department of Human Settlements were investigated and dismissed whilst others were 'redeployed'. Those persons who were disciplined and dismissed included Ms DYD Mokhele, Mr Mphikeleli Kaizer Maxatshwa, Mr Kabelo William Koloi, Mr LS Ndenze, Mr MC Twala, and Ms ND Makhaotse.

100. Many of those involved in the design and execution of the APS in the Free State Department directly ascribed responsibility to others, speculated on the motivations of those persons whom they blamed for the scheme, and accused certain persons of deliberate acts of malfeasance. Mr Maxatshwa has continued to assert that the findings of the disciplinary enquiry were unfair and stated that he is challenging his dismissal. Mr Koloi also asserts that his dismissal was unfair and is being challenged.

101. The Commission has been provided with the transcript of the disciplinary enquiry and copies of all documentary evidence. The written judgment of Advocate Van Graan SC, Chairperson of the Disciplinary Hearing, dated 30 April 2015 deals with the allegations against each of the employees and the evidence against them, which included details of the ERP and the APS. The nine charges against these employees included allegations of a process of facilitation of advance payments to material suppliers contrary to legislation and the Housing Code, cession agreements with the object of facilitating irregular advance payments, signing or verification of contractor claim forms contrary to legislation and policy, manipulation of HSS data, and receipt of monies into private banking accounts (Mr Twala only).

102. Mr Zwane, and the HOD, Mr Mokoena, escaped any adverse consequences, while it was their subordinates who were subjected to lengthy and gruelling disciplinary proceedings and ultimately suffered the sanction of dismissal. Mr Zwane was promoted while Mr Mokoena was transferred from the Department of Human Settlements to a position within a municipality.

Auditor-General

103. The Auditor-General investigated and concluded that the Free State Department of Human Settlements had made payments to contractors under this APS in the sum of R 481,466,806. The AG concluded that the money spent "resulted in fruitless and wasteful expenditure". It was pointed out that houses to the value of approximately R 597 364 could not be physically verified while an amount of R 217 399 was paid for housing units not completed.

Open Waters report

104. Open Waters Advanced Risk Solutions (Pty) Ltd was approached by the Free State Department of Human Settlements in 2012 to conduct a forensic investigation into housing contracts. The Open Waters report concluded that the cessions between contractors and material suppliers created over-payments "as the full contract amount and material costs were paid for the same site. The claim would be processed and negative payments made against the beneficiary and milestones where the over-payment took place", and "the cession agreements resulted in bulk payments being made to Material Suppliers and goods or services being supplied and required manipulation of several administrative, financial and procurement processes".

NURCHA Finance Company

105. The NURCHA Finance Company (Pty) Ltd was contracted by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to investigate and analyse the Department's housing projects. Its report, dated May 2013, categorises projects according to their performance. Of the listed categories, Category C represents contractors who have performed poorly, while Category D represents contractors who have vacated their sites without completing their work. Notable inclusions in the Category C table include Friedshelf/ Ubuhlebethu JV, Jore Construction, Raloto CC, Rob's Construction and Thotelo Bogolo.

Special Investigations Unit

106. The Special Investigations Unit (SIU) investigated irregularities in respect of advance payments made by the Free State Department of Human Settlements. Amongst the findings of the SIU in its report published in 2015 were that:

    106.1 The Free State Department of Human Settlements paid R 831,836,048 as advances during both the 2010/2011 and 2011/2012 financial years. These advance payments were made in contravention of sections 15(2), 16(2) (c) and 33(1) (a) of the Division of Revenue Act (DORA)

    106.2 The accounting officer, Mr Gift Mokoena, acceded to the cancellation of Tender LGHB01/10/11 on 30 July 2010 and entered into agreements with service providers in contravention of the provisions of section 217 of the Constitution and section 38(1)(a)(iii) of the Public Finance Management Act (PFMA); and

    106.3 Mr Mokoena had committed a criminal offence in terms of section 86(1) of the PFMA by reasons of his contravention of sections 38(1)(a)(iii), 38 (1)(c) (ii), 38 (1) (g) and 38(1)(i) of the PFMA and recommended that the matter be referred to the National Prosecuting Authority.

Litigation

107. The Free State Department of Human Settlements brought a review application against 106 respondents in the Bloemfontein High Court (case number A 241/2016) to set aside the agreements entered into between the Free State Department of Human Settlements and the respondents on the grounds of the unlawfulness of those agreements. The relief sought was granted on 26 August 2019. Mr Nthimotse Mokhesi, successor to Mr Mokoena as Head of Department, deposed to the founding affidavit and gave evidence to the Commission on the content of that affidavit. His founding affidavit relied upon the Report prepared by the SIU and the evidence presented at and the results of the disciplinary proceedings.

108. The judgement of Loubser J and Pohl AJ was handed down on 28 August 2019 and sets outs that the allocation made by the National Treasury to the Free State Province for low-cost housing in terms of the Division of Revenue Act (DORA) could only be used for that purpose. The Judgment refers to the APS as "this illegal scheme" and went on to conclude that "the impugned agreements are clearly and indisputably unlawful and the payments made in lieu thereof, must be declared unlawful by this Court."

109. It appears that a total of R631,447,607.19 has been reclaimed by the Free State Department of Human Settlements. It is unknown to the Commission how much money has actually been recovered from contractors or suppliers.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

No tender process or competency grading of contractors

110. As indicated above, the Free State Department of Human Settlements did not go out on tender on this housing project and, in the absence of a tender process, contractors were not graded in terms of competency or performance and large allocations were sometimes awarded to contractors with little or no experience. Mr Mokoena did not recognise the first six contractors as having been previously used by the Department, but who according to him, had been allocated between 500 and 600 houses. He claims that he asked the MEC, Mr Zwane, why so many units or houses were being allocated to "contractors we do not even know". However, he states that the MEC was adamant that these were the contractors to be used.

111. In his supplementary affidavit, Mr Mokoena states that the housing allocation list should be compiled through "proper procurement processes" by officials in the Department and then "forwarded to the MEC for final approval only since the MEC did not (normally) take part in the allocation of housing projects to contractors. However, in his evidence to the Commission Mr Mokoena said that the MEC did have the power to allocate because "it is the executive authorities' power". He explained that a list of contractors would be prepared, and the departmental officials would make recommendations to the MEC who would then make final allocations. However, this practice which was followed under the previous MEC was not followed with Mr Zwane as MEC "because he said he was going to do it himself" and he "came with his own list". The result was that the appointment of contractors did not follow proper procurement processes and resulted in the Department awarding contracts to contractors who had never constructed an RDP house "based on the instruction of the MEC."

112. Mr Mokoena believed that at least three of the contractors, Allitory, Koena Property Developers and Raloto Properties, were close to Mr Zwane because Mr Zwane called Mr Mokoena personally to ensure that payments to these contractors were expedited. None of these three contractors had previously submitted bids for low-cost housing. Mr Mokoena also suggested that Mr Zwane was close to these contractors because they came from the same geographical area and because Mr Zwane would announce allocations under other projects to these contractors. However, there was little detail in these claims to be able to base any findings thereon.

113. Mr Maxatshwa states that the reasons for publication of the new tender included that "the preferred contractors of the Premier and the MEC" had to be accommodated on the list or database of approved contractors but gave no basis for this allegation. However, Mr Maxatshwa told the Commission that it should have been the HOD who would tell the MEC that the appointment of contractors was an operational matter dealt with by the department's officials.

114. Mr Zwane told the Commission that the list of 106 contractors was approved "'at the end of June" and was at pains to stress that "EXCO approved and requested that building of houses should start in earnest". It was quite difficult to extract a clear narrative from his attempt at explaining the existence of this list. However, he did say "when I arrived at the department there was a list that was there and that list was not developed by me. To my best recollection ... that list was supposed to be used for 2010/2011". It was stated by Mr Zwane that this was not the list of 361 people/entities which emerged from the incomplete tender process. It appears that Mr Zwane confused the list from July 2010 of 361 contractors with the 10 September 2010 list of 106 persons/entities signed by himself.

115. However, the one clear answer given by Mr Zwane to the Commission concerning the list dated 10 September 2010 was that this list was an outcome of these processes that they had talked about and that he did not, to his recollection, instruct anybody how to compile a list. In part, he explained that this was a list from the past, in part it was a list he sent to the EXCO on 30 June 2010, and that it was a list created pursuant to a process followed up to 28 July 2010. At best, "the list was brought to me by the accounting officer. So I approved, yes." It appears that the continued reference to EXCO having seen this list was because "it will give me comfort that we have done accordingly with what we needed to do."

116. In the course of his evidence to the Commission, Mr Zwane was confronted with the fact that the list which he had taken to the EXCO was a different list from that resulting from the open tender process which had closed on 16 April 2010. It was suggested to Mr Zwane that this could perhaps be called a "parallel process" with which he did not disagree. Ultimately, in response to a question from the Commission – "did you go to EXCO with a list of contractors at a time when the open tender process was still ongoing and said to EXCO here is a list of companies that I want you to approve who must construct houses?" – Mr Zwane was able to respond with a simple "yes Chair". He then explained that there was "overlapping of allocations." He remained adamant that his list was "a product of a database formulated by my predecessor".

117. Ultimately, for Mr Zwane what was important was neither the open and transparent tender process nor the experience or competence of the contractors but that "we had all agreed . . . that we must try and transform the patterns of economy in the Free State and . . . open up for new entrants, women, young people, those who were disabled. . . ".

118. Mr Zwane denied the evidence of Mr Mokoena that he, Mr Zwane, had said "this is my list and I have the power to allocate," and the evidence of Mr Mokoena and Mr Maxatshwa that Mr Zwane made allocations of contracts to contractors and suppliers.

119. Mr Tsoametsi alone appeared to comprehend the distinction between "leadership and direction that will come from an MEC" and "administrative implementation" which would be provided by the HOD and "which under normal circumstances will . . . develop a database". He stated at his disciplinary enquiry that it was the MEC who would make allocations and to the Commission he elaborated that this was done "after the HOD has consulted with the MEC and then there is this list that has been approved. . . ".

The advance payment scheme

120. Both Mr Mokoena and Mr Maxatshwa explained that the then MEC, Mr Zwane, stressed that the plan would lead to more speedy building of houses. According to Mr Mokoena, Mr Zwane held the opinion that "by doing this, the contractors would save a lot of time and that this would enable them to concentrate on the construction of the houses" because "service providers cannot be held up in terms of getting on the ground, getting on site to start working faster". This was confirmed by Mr Maxatshwa who said stated that "Mr Zwane expressed the opinion that the scheme would save a lot of time for the contractors and would enable them to concentrate on the construction of the low-cost housing and enable them to work throughout the builders' holidays".

121. Both Mr Mokoena and Mr Maxatshwa claim that the APS was entirely the brainchild of the MEC who would brook no discussion of the scheme nor opposition thereto. According to Mr Mokoena, Mr Zwane introduced the scheme as one that would "prevent the National Department of HS from reclaiming the unspent DORA-funding for housing units money". Mr Maxatshwa stated that "the MEC advised those present that he had come up with a plan to prevent the National Department of Human Settlements from reclaiming the unspent DORA-funding for housing units". This was confirmed by Mr Koloi, that it was the MEC who "introduced" the plan to make advance payments, although he does not elaborate that the MEC would entertain no debate thereon.

122. According to Mr Zwane, the issue of advance payments arose as a result of a meeting with contractors in Welkom in late October 2010 where the contractors pointed out that the builders' holiday was approaching and work would have to stop because there was no material. A suggestion was made that contractors would work over weekends and during the holidays, suppliers should supply the material during the December/January holidays and then the Department should "bring its part". The details were not finalised at the meeting. Mr Zwane told the Commission that he had not properly

"processed" the implications of the suggestions made at the Welkom meeting before the meeting in Bloemfontein. He thus asked raised the question: "why can we not help the contractors by availing the material to them"? One way of so doing would be by purchasing the materials while another way would involve the Department negotiating and standing as guarantor for the contractors. Mr Zwane accepted that whichever option was implemented would involve the Department incurring a financial obligation to enable the supply of materials. He told the Commission that "somebody raised an issue that the issues of advanced payment has been done by NURCHA in one of their projects" at this meeting.

123. Mr Zwane says that he then requested two officials, Mr Mokoena and Mr Tsoametsi, to "go and develop a document that I called an opinion". He says he called this document "a legal opinion" because Mr Tsoameti has a legal background. Mr Zwane told the Commission that the reasons given by Mr Mokoena and Mr Mxatshwa for the creation of the APS, namely, to avoid forfeiting money to the fiscus was "never brought to my attention." He claimed that "our main aim as a politicians seated here – my main concern was not money. My main concern was the people who were promised houses and money was there for them to at least have a shelter and those people are going to lose. And in so saying I thought that officials would do their best to achieve what we could achieve".

124. Mr Zwane explicitly disputed the evidence of both Mr Mokoena and Mr Maxatshwa that the plan for advance payments originated from himself. He then elaborated that there were "lawyers, people who have done masters in urban planning", "people who are responsible as accounting officers", who are all the people who "are supposed to advise me" and questioned how such people could tell the Commission that they had acted on the basis of a proposal by himself, "a layman". At most, he asked a question whether contractors could be helped with materials. He conceded to the Commission that it was possible that his question as conveyed may have appeared to the officials as a proposal.

125. Mr Tsoametsi confirmed events at the meeting with contractors in Welkom and as a result of which he told the Commission that "the MEC asked the question: why can we not support contractors and get material for them? Because it is clear that if we are able to meet them halfway, they would be able to participate in this or that. And we will be able to go a long way in delivering on the commitments that we have made". Mr Tsoametsi stated that he now had the responsibility to give meaning to the decisions taken and thus he produced the memorandum dated 25 November 2010.

126. Mr Tsoametsi explained to the Commission that his brief was specifically to "go and to investigate this advanced payment and not to determine its legality ... it was not said that I should go and investigate whether it should be right". Mr Tsoametsi appears to have disavowed the task of exploring the lawfulness or otherwise of such a plan. However, when questioned at the Commission he did say that his mandate was to investigate whether this scheme would be "within the policy" and answered in the affirmative when asked whether he was to ascertain whether it was "a wise thing to do."

127. Mr Mokoena stated that immediately after the meeting convened by Mr Zwane at which the Advance Payment Plan was proposed, he requested a private meeting with the MEC in the boardroom where he claims to have pointed out among others that policies and procedures do not provide for advance payments and that it was illegal. According to him, Mr Zwane responded by threatening him with termination of employment if Mr Mokoena refused to implement the plan.

128. Mr Mokoena described the cession agreements with contractors as being needed to "legitimise the advance payments". Mr Maxatshwa agrees that the Advance Payment System emanated from Mr Zwane, was designed in detail by Mr Tsoametsi and was approved by the HOD, Mr Mokoena. Mr Maxatshwa is determined to exonerate himself from all blame in this scheme. As he says in his affidavit, Mr Mokoena "implicated me of wrongdoing, which is without merit", and he is challenging termination of his employment by the Department.

129. Mr Zwane stated in his September 2019 affidavit that a legal opinion was sought with regards to the APS from the Legal Department of the Provincial Human Settlement and had been advised positively to this effect. However, he did not provide the Commission with a copy of such legal opinion and did not provide the name of the person or persons in the Legal Department who authored the opinion or the manner in which the "legal opinion" was given.

130. Mr Bertus Venter, Legal Advisor in the Office of the Premier deposed to an affidavit in which he stated that neither he nor any of the other State Law Advisors in the Office of the Premier provided a legal opinion on the issues of the initial transfer of the money to the building material suppliers nor were they ever requested to do so.

131. Mr Zwane attached a document, identified as MJZ04, to his affidavit which he stated, "is the memo from Directorate of Legal Services of the Department of Human Settlement". Since this document is dated 25 November 2010, this memorandum was obtained after Mr Zwane made the proposal to his officials and staff and after there were supposedly objections or hesitancies regarding his proposed scheme on the grounds that it would be illegal. Mr Zwane did not accept that there was any disagreement with the proposed advance payment scheme save that there was concern about the legality of the process. He denied that he threatened that Mr Mokoena should tender his resignation if he did not agree with the plan. He suggested that if Mr Mokoena was so "scared of me" he would not have gone on holiday when no one else was permitted so to do.

132. Mr Zwane did not receive reports that the Tech MinMec meeting felt that the APS was non-compliant and that the province was therefore advised not to enter into a tripartite agreement with beneficiaries. Insofar as the existence of risks intrinsic to any scheme of advance payments, Mr Zwane was only prepared to concede that such risks became known to him when the existence of such risks "'was brought to me at some stage". Mr Zwane claimed that, prior to receipt of the Tsoametsi memorandum dated 25 November 2010, he had no appreciation or notion of any risk, financial or legal or otherwise, to the Department should this Scheme be implemented.

133. That Mr Zwane, entrusted with overall responsibility for ensuring that houses were built and lives improved through responsible use of taxpayers' money, gave no attention to the risks inherent in an advance payment scheme is extraordinary. Either he has no concept of business or management or finance and was therefore completely unsuited to occupy the position of an MEC. Or he was blithely unconcerned with the manner in which taxpayers' money was spent and the services which might or might not have been forthcoming and was therefore reckless in occupation of the position of MEC.

134. It is possible that Mr Zwane is correct in saying that a broad mandate to Mr Tsoametsi on the feasibility of the APS would necessarily involve consideration of the risks – financial and legal - of such a scheme. However, if he had asked for and expected such an opinion, then he would immediately have noticed that the memorandum presented to him did not comply with his instructions and that there is no reference to the Housing Act, housing policy, DORA, or the interactions and engagement with the National Department.

135. The Department employs legal advisors, but these were not consulted because "it was not my task as an MEC to go and get the details and things of the research that I said must take place." In this approach, Mr Zwane is probably correct. It was not for the MEC to procure a comprehensive legal opinion from the relevant personnel in his Department. But he failed to instruct his HOD, Mr Mokoena, to obtain a 'legal opinion' and gave no satisfactory reason for this failure.

136. Before the Commission, Mr Zwane disputed the lawfulness of this advance payment scheme and referred to the PFMA or other legislation to that effect. He abandoned that line of argument and reverted to "it will be unfair of this Commission to want to say now as a layman politician there I should have taken responsibility" when the Accounting Officer had signed this document. When it was pointed out to him, yet again, that he exercised oversight over the Accounting Officer, he responded that he would have been berated by the Commission had he employed external persons to advise him on the exercise of his oversight.

137. In his first affidavit, Mr Maxatshwa makes it clear that the HSS policy framework did not provide for advance payments and that the contractor was ordinarily responsible to source and pay for his [or her] own building materials and would only be paid on completion of the agreed milestones. Mr Maxatshwa told the Commission that, Mr Zwane, in answer to the objections raised, "responded that he was advised of the lawfulness of his plan, because of the fact that an advance payment system had been used in other provinces".

138. Mr Tsoametsi disputes Mr Mokeona's recollection of events at this meeting that Mr Zwane had referred to practices in other provinces, particularly Gauteng because the Gauteng experience only came about as a result of his desktop research after the meeting. Mr Tsoametsi did not recall any challenges to the legality of the scheme being raised at this meeting, nor the MEC stating that he had been advised that the scheme would be legal. However, Mr Tsoametsi did confirm that he had contacted NURCHA whom he understood had implemented such a programme in the Free State and the Gauteng department who had confirmed such a programme and had a copy of their contracts that were sent to him.

139. Mr Zwane contends that he was the one who had said legal soundness of advance payment should be investigated and when the opinion dated 25th November was brought to him and he saw it had been signed and approved by the Accounting Officer, he assumed that it was legal.

The Tsoametsi memorandum

140. Mr Mokoena alleges that Mr Zwane similarly threatened him with termination of employment when he refused to sign the memorandum presented to him by Mr Tsoametsi. Mr Mokoena effectively relies upon his own ignorance and lack of spine to explain away his signature on a document which he acknowledges he should never have signed.

141. Mr Mokoena's evidence as to the reason for the creation of the Tsoametsi memorandum does not really bear scrutiny. This was quite clearly never intended to be a document advising anyone on the lawfulness of the APS. Mr Tsoametsi was not a legal advisor. The memorandum makes no reference to legislation, regulations or housing policy. This is a purely technocratic description of the means whereby the scheme will be implemented. The evidence of Mr Tsoametsi as to his research and reasons therefore is clear and should not be disbelieved. Mr Mokoena's protestations that he was alert to issues of lawfulness and that his interjections querying legality gave rise to the Mr Tsoametsi memorandum are unsupported by the evidence. The only reason why Mr Mokoena would wish to disavow his signature to the memorandum is because the memorandum is only concerned with implementation of the APS. There is no record whatsoever that Mr Mokoena disagreed with the scheme.

142. Mr Mokoena was HOD and should he have had any doubts about the lawfulness of the proposed advance payment scheme then he would have been perfectly within his rights to have contacted the legal advisor to the department and required a legal opinion to be prepared and furnished to him. As Mr Tsoametsi pointed out to the Commission: "If the HOD had issues with Legal Service, the opportunity that availed it could have requested the head of legal or requested the office of the Premier to provide him with that".

Reporting to TechMinMech and MinMec

143. Neither Mr Zwane nor Mr Mokoena were present at the meetings in October or November 2010. Mr Maxatshwa presented the APS to the meeting, and it was he who learnt of the view that advance payments would be unlawful. Mr Maxatshwa belabours the absence of Mr Zwane and Mr Mokoena at the TecMinMec and MinMec meetings. This is immaterial as he was prepared to attend the meeting on behalf of the department where he spoke and made presentations. There is no basis on which Mr Maxatshwa can suggest dereliction of duty or deliberate attempts to avoid being party to any presentation or discussion of the plight of the Free State Department of Human Settlements because they were "together at the NCOP which was held in QwaQwa" at the time".

144. Mr Maxatshwa claims that after the TecMinMech meeting in October where he was advised that advance payments as contemplated by the MEC would be unlawful, he immediately telephoned Mr Mokoena "in order for him to discuss this with Mr Tsoametsi and Mr Zwane on whose instructions the Advance Payment System was being researched and designed." In his affidavit, Mr Maxatshwa does not indicate whether he contacted Mr Mokoena or has any knowledge whether or not anyone else was advised of the TechMinMech response to the proposed scheme. He also fails to give any indication of the response of Mr Mokoena (or anyone else) to this news. However, to the Commission,

Mr Maxatshwa made it clear that he did speak to Mr Mokoena and that his expectation was that Mr Mokoena will relay the information to the MEC.

145. Mr Maxatshwa does, however, state that Mr Mokoena was fully informed of the view of the National Department regarding the intended advance payments, but that Mr Tsoametsi nevertheless went ahead to produce the memorandum which was approved by Mr Mokoena as HOD.

Absence of controls and certification of work done or materials supplied

146. In the normal course, the standard arrangement between the Department and building contractors contained the safeguard that a contractor would source materials for which he or she would have to pay as the contractor proceeded with each stage of the building process. There would thus be an incentive on the part of the contractor to ensure that all materials had been delivered and in the correct quantities because the contractor would only recover his or her expenditure from the Department upon completion of each of the agreed and inspected and certified milestones. This safeguard did not exist under the APS since materials were supplied and invoiced and payment made by the Department without any need for any milestone to be achieved at all.

147. Interestingly, Mr Mokoena, in justifying his concerns about the existence or accuracy of invoices, told the Commission "because we were still a new department. . . . we did not have sufficient staff, sufficient capacity that could...." verify delivery of materials. This suggests that he feels vindicated in his claimed opposition to this ERP or APS because absence of capacity meant that there were inadequate checks and supervision emanating from the Department.

Implementation and payments

148. Mr Maxatshwa was appointed one of the Acting Heads of Department in December 2010 but suggests that this was done by Mr Mokoena to escape responsibility for implementation of the scheme. Mr Maxatshwa, like Mr Mokoena, also seems to have entered into the realms of conspiracy theory. Mr Mokoena suspected that others conspired behind his back with the MEC to plot the introduction of the APS, while Mr Maxatshwa suspected that Mr Mokoena took leave in December to make him responsible for that which took place during December 2010. Notably, the bulk of the payments to contractors were made during the absence of Mr Mokoena while he was away on cruise in December 2010 and were approved by the other Acting HOD, Ms Mokhele.

Continuing with the advance payment scheme

149. Mr Mokoena states that he had given then Minister Tokyo Sexwale an undertaking that the advance payments would cease by the end of February 2011. However, he claims that some two weeks after the meeting with the Minister, Mr Zwane insisted that Mr Mokoena continue with the advance payments and Mr Mokoena speculates that this is because the MEC had made promises to certain contractors from whom he was expecting kickbacks. However, Mr Mokoena did not comply with the instruction of the MEC and the MEC took the matter no further.

150. When challenged at the Commission hearing that all other officials were perhaps awaiting direction and leadership from himself as HOD, Mr Mokoena conceded this was "a possibility" but immediately pointed out that the CFO knew more about supply chain management and issues of procurement and "even from that side I didn't get any support". To the end, Mr Mokoena portrays himself as the lone upholder of the regulations and the law and a victim. When Mr Maxatshwa was questioned at the Commission hearing about Mr Mokoena's version that it was only he who said that the advanced payments would be illegal, Mr Maxatshwa stated that the majority of those present at the meeting were not in agreement with the MEC. This was confirmed by Mr Tsoametsi who told the Commission that other people raised issues of legality in the meeting, and that Mr Mokoena did not actually challenge the legality of the proposed APS but "raised the view that the legalities need to be look into."

151. Mr Maxatshwa stated that the APS continued under the new HOD, Mr Tim Mokhesi, when he replaced Mr Mokoena as Head of Department. Mr Zwane told the Commission that he did not recall the February 2011 meeting with the Minister of Human Settlements. He denied that he had told Mr Mokoena to continue to make the advance payments pointing out that he left the Free State department in the second week of February 2010.

152. Mr Zwane informed the Commission that he only learnt of the existence of the Housing Act 107 of 1997 in about June-August 2010 when he had been MEC for Human Settlements for about a year. He was adamant that he had familiarised himself with the provisions of the PFMA and thus informed the Commission that "I had gathered sufficient information that will make me be able to lead effectively and do what I was supposed to do." Mr Zwane also stated that he was not aware of the procurement policy in 2010 and that he was unaware that he was obliged in terms of section 7(4)(a) of the Housing Act to establish a panel of persons (including experts) to advise him on any matter relating to housing development.

153. It would seem that Mr Zwane had never occupied any position of responsibility as an employee or official which required skill or knowledge or expertise of him in that salaried position. His career was based on political connections or influence which enabled him to advance through the ranks of political deployees. Mr Zwane's evidence to the Commission is very clear that in his own view he was not required to have any understanding of the details of the work being undertaken by the Department of Human Settlements or comprehension of the implications of that which is being done by the Department under his political control. He repeats his reliance upon officials to do what needs to be done in accordance with protocols and the law, and his expectation that those with experience and education will know what to do and will act in accordance with policy, protocols and the law. His was not an administrative function. In this he is partially correct.

154. Mr Zwane perceived his role as being that of a political master who relayed political considerations and concerns to and from EXCO where the Premier and other MECs met. In this perception he is also partially correct. However, the relevant legislation dictates that the MEC who must know the National Housing Policy and must ensure that the Provincial Housing Programme is consistent therewith. It is the MEC who must know the Housing Code and must be familiar with its prescripts. Only with that knowledge and comprehension can an MEC approve any projects undertaken by the Provincial Department of Human Settlements, determine Provincial Housing Development Priorities, apply procurement policy and administer the assets of the Department.

155. Mr Zwane does not seem to have understood that the position of MEC is also a job with responsibilities and duties and summarised his understanding of his own position for the Commission when he stated: "... I was an MEC that followed the prescripts of the law as much as I could understand them and it is clear that I could not read this law because at that particular time I did not know about it".

The "capacity gap" of a department in transition

156. Mr Mokoena told the Commission that the Free State Department had failed to perform because it was trying to do that "with less capacity because we're only about one year old". He further stated that they had advertised the tender, closed the tender, followed all the processes only to find out it had taken too long and the validity period had expired. Other reasons were that some contractors had taken the department to court, resulting in additional delays, as well as the fact that they had too many tenders coming in that had to be processed, causing further delays. Mr Tsoametsi similarly told the Commission that the Department was "a department in transition and not well-capacitated department". He also cited the litigation initiated by contractors against the department.

157. Mr Zwane told the Commission that at the time the Department was facing a crisis as contractors and material suppliers were about to close down for their annual shutdown. In order "... to alleviate this problem we had to negotiate with the contractors to work throughout their shutdown period and this was during this discussion that most of the contractors had raised the issue of lack of capacity especially in regard to the finances to fund material of acquisition".

Incompetence

158. The Free State Department of Human Settlements was staffed by persons who were supposedly qualified according to their curriculum vitae, yet their manner of doing their jobs and performing the duties for which they were paid salaries was appalling. Each person who gave information to the Commission relied upon "lack of capacity" for what was identified as a complete absence of work actually carried out on the ground.

159. One instance of such myopia is the media statement issued by the Free State Department of Human Settlements on 20 January 2011 in response to the notification of cessation of funding from the Minister. In hoping to "set the record straight", the Department's media statement is replete with jargon and wishes and gives no indication of comprehension of the nature of the problem indicated by the National Department or any real and concrete means of resolving the problem.

160. The solutions announced by the Free State Department are the introduction of the Expenditure Recovery Programme which is nowhere actually detailed or explained. The content thereof might be those actions claimed in the media statement as set out below:

    160.1 First, "a dedicated call centre was set up to deal with daily monitoring of progress and strict adherence to delivery schedules and project plans by contractors and material suppliers". This appear to be no more than a substitute for boots on the ground implementing delivery and planning.

    160.2 Second, "blockages and challenges were reported to the Head of Department and the MEC on a daily basis." Nowhere is there any indication that the Head of Department or the MEC had managed to deal with such blockages or challenges and how this was done and why it could not have been done before.

    160.3 Third, the establishment of high-level teams, which were dubbed "The War Room", consisting of people with skills, capacities and responsibilities. The tasks they carried out and how this had enabled new solutions to the continuing problems is never identified.

    160.4 Fourth, although "a decision was taken to continue with the work of building houses during the December holidays including on weekends", no detail is given as to what each official was doing and why their presence meant that more houses were constructed.

    160.5 Fifth, "During a meeting with representatives of the National Department, the Free State Department committed to report on the expenditure on a fortnightly basis, which was honoured." The media statement promises dedication and lack of holiday breaks, but little else.

161. The only basis on which any blame can attach to the Premier for the failures of the Department of Human Settlements is that there appears to have been an absence of consultation and discussion with the Department and no regard to the impact the announcement in the State of the Province address would have on processes already underway for the provision of housing. Clearly, the Department was taken unawares and that led to abandonment of the process of appointment of contractors and delays in the commencement of the building programme. However, it is also clear that the absence of any leadership from an MEC who was out of his depth, had no regard for his legislated duties, was totally ignorant of his entire portfolio and chose to remain so uninformed, played an important part in this debacle and was damaging for the Department.

162. Those officials who deposed to affidavits or who gave evidence in person to the Commission chose to present themselves as passive and supine persons without any backbone or ability to stand up for their professional status or the Department for which they worked.

163. To the extent that there were claims of threats of losing jobs there is nothing to support such allegations. Any threat of termination of employment could easily have been countered by lodging a grievance internally, or should such threats materialise, approaching the courts or the CCMA.

164. It is difficult to comprehend that Mr Mokoena did not approach the legal advisors in the Department for a legal opinion. No other opinion had been produced. It was the responsibility of the HOD to procure one.

165. When Mr Mokoena signed the memorandum dated 25 November 2010 which had been prepared by Mr Tsoametsi, he either did not read the document or he knew that the document did not explore the legalities of the plan which had been proposed. Instead, Mr Mokoena simply signified his approval of the memorandum. Mr Mokoena was either very lazy indeed or very stupid or quite eager to see the APS implemented.

166. Mr Maxatshwa understandably is distressed that Mr Mokoena escaped any sanction while he was dismissed from his employment. Similarly, Mr Tsoametsi continues to work in the Free State government. One must therefore view Mr Maxatshwa's averments against Mr Mokoena with some caution. However, it is not unlikely that Mr Maxatshwa did contact Mr Mokoena to inform him that the APS had been met with disapproval at the Tech MinMech meeting. His task was to inform the meeting of the ERP; but he also informed the meeting of the APS. The response of the meeting was of great importance. This was of such moment that it should have followed that Mr Maxatshwa made immediate contact with Mr Mokoena. His evidence is that of a single witness only. But, subsequent to the meeting, it is hardly possible that the response of the meeting was not brought to the attention of Mr Mokoena. And the minutes of meetings support Mr Maxatshwa's version.

Politics

167. Paid employees who have since been penalised for their involvement in the Advance Payment Scheme feel that they were merely following the instructions of their political masters who appear to have escaped being penalised. Mr Mxatshwa states in response to questioning that "I have no doubt that the concept and design of the Advance Payment System was approved by and implemented with full knowledge of Mr Magashule, Mr Zwane and Mr Mokoena."

168. If then MEC Zwane was not as ignorant as he claimed then it must be that he did indeed propose the APS, that he did claim to have a legal opinion which stated such a scheme to be lawful, and that he did place names on the database and instruct these persons or entities to be given contracts without going through the public tender process.

Policy, legislative and procedural compliance

169. None of the witnesses who gave evidence to this Commission suggested that the process whereby this Advance Payment Scheme was envisaged or implemented in the Free State met the prerequisites of section 217 of the Constitution.

170. The creation of and use of a list of persons or entities to be the recipients of the housing programme did not meet any requirements for the introduction of a database or tender system which was "fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective". Other than the say-so of the MEC that persons who were disadvantaged in some way or another were included on the list, no "procurement policy" as envisaged in subsection (2) was ever developed and certainly not a policy which was implemented in accordance with national legislation.

171. There was no compliance with the Division of Revenue Act 1 of 2010 ('DORA") section 15(1) that stipulates that an allocation made by National Treasury "may only be utilised for the purpose stipulated in the Schedule concerned . . . ". The Commission has not been furnished with the relevant schedule.

172. All the Commission has been informed is that an allocation was made by National Treasury to the Free State Department of Human Settlements to build houses. Payments were made to materials suppliers. The Commission does not know if the allocation from National Treasury ever specified or would ever specify that it was building contractors who were to be paid and not materials suppliers.

173. The Commission cannot conclude that the prescriptions in respect of advance payments are of application. First, there is no evidence that the advance payments which were made by the Free State Department were made to entities not envisaged or specified by the National Treasury when making the allocation to the Free State. Second, there is no evidence that the advance payments made by the Free State were not consistent with the budget.

174. Only if the above requirements are satisfied would it have been necessary for the receiving officer to certify, in terms of subsection (c) (i), to the National Treasury that the transfer "is not an attempt to artificially inflate its spending estimates and that there are good reasons for the advance payment. . . " and then for the "National Treasury to approve the advance payment. . . " as provided for in subsection (c) (ii).

175. Where it was put to various of the witnesses that procedures and policy were not followed and that there had not been compliance with legislation, the questions were generally phrased as a failure to observe the requirements of the legislation, procedure or policy. Witnesses may sometimes have agreed to a failure to comply with legislation, policy or procedures. However, the level of ignorance of the witnesses as to the most basic of their departmental duties and their apparent lack of knowledge of the legislation, policy and procedure coupled with their confusion, fuzziness and fumbling of even the most basic of questions and propositions, suggest that it would be unwise for the Commission to accept the agreement of these witnesses to the propositions put to them when they were in the witness box.

SECRET BENEFICIARIES OF THE ADVANCE PAYMENT SCHEME

176. The beneficiaries of the work of the Free State Department of Human Settlements were intended to be those living without or in inadequate housing in the Free State. Instead, building contractors and suppliers of materials have received payments from the Department without delivering either materials or completed homes.

177. In addition, those involved in the APS speculate or allege that other persons, civil servants or politicians, have received benefits by reason of their involvement in this scheme. Furthermore, investigations by the Commission have revealed benefits accruing to employees or politicians. Necessarily, all allegations and suppositions must be viewed with great caution. Sometimes what has been claimed is no more than speculation.

Mr Ace Magashule

178. Mr Mokoena believes that Mr Magashule must have been aware of the advance payments because Provincial Treasury would normally brief the Premier of the Province on expenditure and programmes of this nature. Furthermore, Mr Mokoena alleges that Mr Zwane was very close to Mr Magashule and that Mr Zwane was involved in the entire project.

179. Mr Mokoena refers to one Rochelle Ells who received a number of contracts to build houses in Kroonstad and believes that she was close to Mr Magashule, which view he holds because Mr Zwane, according to Mr Mokoena, told Mr Mokoena that Mr Magashule told Mr Zwane that Else should be appointed and her claims for payment expedited.

180. The late Mr Mohlouoa Isaac Seoe of Robs Investment Holdings (Pty) Ltd was a co-director with Mr Magashule in Sambal Investments (Pty) Ltd. Mr Seoe apparently prepared an affidavit on certain of his business dealings to be prepared before his death. But that affidavit has not been deposed to by himself. In this unsigned affidavit, Mr Seoe sets out that he was the sole shareholder in Sambal and that "Mr Magashule used to be a director of Sambal". He states "in this regard it should be mentioned that I have known Mr Magashule for a very long time and as a result I approached him to become a director of Sambal. After a short stint as a director of Sambal, Mr Magashule decided to rather pursue a political career which he did. The latter being the reason for Mr Magashule's resignation as a director of Sambal"."

181. Mr Seoe's unsigned statement is incomplete. However, there is information on properties owned by Sambal as well as Robs Properties and the existence of lease agreements with the Free State Provincial Government. Mr Seoe, in his unsigned and incomplete statement, states that "from time to time I will get a phone call and it could possibly also be emails from the Premiers office . . . requesting me to provide funding for student fees. I cannot remember the exact details but I think I made an amount of R200,000.00 available in this regard for various students".

182. Mr Seoe also referred to having been shown a document where Mr Mtwentula on behalf of Robs Investments sent a proof of payment to the personal assistant of the Premier, Ms Cholota, confirming proof of payment to Sedtrade. Mr Seoe was asked to comment thereon and stated that he had discussed the document with Mr Mtwentula who could not explain why this email "landed up in the Premiers office".

183. A payment was apparently made from Rob Investment Holdings to an entity identified as SUD Trade and proof of such payment was copied to Ms Cholota in the office of the Premier who acknowledged such payment. The details of such payment and the details of the proof of payment have not been furnished to the Commission.

184. Mr Mtwentula confirmed that Mr Seoe, the CEO of Robs Investment Holdings (Pty) Ltd, furnished him with the email address of the PA to the Office of the Premier as well as "a specific gmail account" on a piece of paper and instructed Mr Mtwentula to "send the email to those addresses". Mr Mtwentula's affidavit does not detail the content or nature of this email. However, by reference to the preceding two paragraphs it may be inferred that he is referring to "a specific proof of payment that was sent to the PA of the previous Premier of the Free State, Mr Ace Magashula" because he states that "I have been requested to make comment" thereon. According to Mr Mtwentula, he did not know the recipient of the email address and this was the only occasion such a request was made of him.

185. The difficulty with Mr Mokoena's speculation about Premier Magashule is that he also states that he "tried everything in my power to discuss the matter with the Premier, to no avail", in that he was unable to meet with Mr Magashule despite several attempts. In other words, the HOD and Accounting Officer never briefed Mr Magashule on the APS which then begs the question on what basis Mr Mokoena can speculate that Mr Magashule had knowledge of the scheme.

186. Furthermore, Mr Mokoena seeks to rely on that which he claims he was told by Mr Zwane concerning Rochelle Ells. He has no first-hand knowledge thereof and is merely repeating hearsay and gossip which he claims comes from Mr Zwane.

187. Mr Mokoena stated to the Commission that the APS was raised in a meeting of the EXCO, the Executive Cabinet Meeting of the MECs, with the Premier. He claims to have been present at that meeting. but gives no date, no time, no written minutes. Mr Mokoena conceded that he had not written reports on the ERP.

Mr Mosebenzi Zwane

188. Mr Mokoena alleged in his evidence that Mr France Mokoena from Koena Property Developers is close to Mr Zwane, both being from Phumelela (the spelling of the name of property company is dubious). Koena received a contract under another entirely different scheme from the Free State Department of Human Settlements to construct 500 houses in Matjabeng. However, Koena did receive a contract under this APS to build 1400 houses.

Mr Mmuso Tsoametsi

189. Mr Tsoametsi was asked at the Commission about the Trans-Makwena and Makwena Property Developers and explained that, while he was in the Department of Agriculture in 2011, he learnt that the company was looking for assistance with implementation of a project. He, Mr Tsoametsi, made a proposal to Makwena Properties to the effect "we will bring together a pool of capacity with different knowledges and then implement your project".

190. Mr Tsoametsi registered a family trust, the Kopana Family Trust, which acted as a sub-contractor to build 500 RDP houses for Makwena Property Developers. According to Mr Tsoametsi, at the time the contract was terminated, the Kopana Family Trust "had 300 foundations" and "on the ground we have 128 completions". In addition, "we had material that we had bought that were onsite to the value of R 600,000". Mr Tsoametsi told the Commission he perceived no conflict of interest in doing business with an entity which had been awarded contracts to build houses by the Free State Department of Human Settlements. It was put to Mr Tsoametsi that the concern was his conflict of interest because he was operating on both sides of the fence in that he was dealing with the principles governing procurement and expenditure of public monies on the one hand and yet benefitting from it on the other hand. Mr Tsoametsi responded that he had not been involved in the selection of contractors, that by the time of implementation of contracts he had left the Department of Human Settlements and was employed in the Department of Agriculture and that the contract with which he was involved did not receive any advance payments.

191. There is no evidence before the Commission that Mr Tsoametsi was involved in the allocation of any contracts and the evidence is that Mr Tsoametsi had left the Free State Department of Human Settlements by February 2011. He was a subcontractor to an entity which had been allocated one or more contracts. There is no evidence that Mr Tsoametsi utilised any knowledge or influence obtained during the course of his employment to prefer or benefit the contractor, Makwena Property Developers. It is difficult to see what conflict of interest existed at the time that Mr Tsoametsi approached the contractor or performed work for them.

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

192. The substratum to all evidence before the Commission has been the announcement by the Premier of the Free State Province that the Department of Human Settlements would build bigger houses, which decision resulted in increased costs of building, adjustments to Departmental budgets, rendering nugatory the specifications of the tenders which had been advertised and in respect of which applications by contractors had been made. The result was that the work of the BEC and BAC could not proceed as, inter alia, the tenders had expired.

193. The MEC and the officials within the Department appeared incapable of taking the decision to publicly extend the validity of the period of the tenders or of the tenders themselves, of informing the National Department and the Minister of the situation and seeking agreement for an extension of the period within which funds allocated to the Free State Department could be expended. The MEC, HOD and all officials appear to have been taken by surprise by the announcement of the Premier and then flummoxed by the response of the contractors.

194. In the absence of strong leadership by the MEC and firm management by the HOD, the process of open and public tenders, creation of a properly assessed database and allocation of contracts to qualified and experienced contractors was simply abandoned. Instead, a database of disqualified, non-compliant, incompetent entities was created and utilised to implement the advance payment scheme.

195. Responsibility for the conception of the advance payment scheme must lie with both the political head of the Department, Mr Zwane, and the administrative head of the Department, Mr Mokoena.

196. Mr Zwane claims total ignorance of procedures and process and reliance upon others for all functions entrusted to himself as MEC. He exhibited no shame or embarrassment in presenting himself to the Commission as a person ignorant of the basic responsibilities of an MEC. Mr Mokoena claims total subservience to the will of the MEC and inability to take management responsibility or action when appropriate.

197. The truth probably lies somewhere in between. Mr Zwane wanted to please all political masters – from the Free State Premier and all political committees within the Free State to the Minister at national level. He was prepared to do anything to achieve this while failing to understand or implement even the most basic of responsibilities entrusted to him in his capacity as MEC. Mr Mokoena wanted to please the MEC and, failing to carry out basic management or technical duties, sought to blame the MEC for all that was done by himself and others.

198. Both Mr Zwane and Mr Mokoena were incompetent and showed themselves to be utterly without concern for relevant legislative and policy provisions as well as fundamental management practices.

199. Disciplinary action was taken against the least responsible officials, whilst the MEC was transferred to other political positions within the Free State and then to the National level and the HOD continued in Free State government.

200. It may well be that persons and entities who were placed on the database ultimately utilised for execution of the APS were friends, cronies, relatives, benefactors, business or other associates of persons within the Free State Department of Human Settlements. But no clear or proven information to this effect has been furnished to the Commission.

201. Speculation by dissatisfied or aggrieved personnel is no more than that. There is no evidence before the Commission to implicate any of those persons involved in the APS in any criminal or civil wrongdoing. That all are guilty of flouting regulations and policy is undeniable. But there is no evidence that the Premier, the MEC, the HOD or any other official benefitted from the APS.

202. At the end of the day there has been a total failure of proper administration in the Free State Department.

203. That Mr Zwane should ever have been selected to serve in the position of MEC in a provincial department of such importance is both surprising and unfortunate. He made it quite clear to the Commission that he had no real intention of understanding his role, learning his duties, becoming informed of the full nature of his responsibilities. He was unashamed of his ignorance and brazen in his determination to allocate full responsibilities to educated persons surrounding him.

204. The calibre of personnel employed in senior positions in the Free State Department is disquieting. Many of them hold relevant qualifications for the positions in which they were employed. Others hold qualifications which should have enabled competency to emerge. Instead, from the HOD to those DDGs who gave evidence, there has been no indication of professionalism.

205. The HOD, Mr Mokoena, failed in every respect. From the initial failure to build houses and expend funds, the abandonment of a properly functioning database for contractors, the introduction and then implementation of the APS his performance was abysmal. He presented a nonsensical series of stories of threats from the MEC to justify his own incompetence. He was a senior civil servant who could not give direction to his political leader. He did not even try to take any of several available steps to avert disaster. He could have contacted the DG in the National Department. He could have contacted National Treasury. He could have sought and obtained a legal opinion.

206. The DDGs, Mr Maxatshwa and Mr Tsoametsi, observed what was happening with the silence of the lambs. All merely followed orders.

207. That these officials had all worked mainly (only in one case is there indication of work outside the province) in the Free State suggests that each knew well the power of political patronage, the need to never rock any boats, and the requirement to satisfy political and government masters in a small pond. None gave any indication of the ability to, or the experience of making independent decisions or taking an independent view of affairs. Certainly, none challenged wrongdoing when they saw it or were asked to participate therein.

208. The apathy is remarkable. Obedience to elders, subservience to the more powerful, and meekness in meetings are apparently the hallmarks of senior employees in the Free State government. Witnesses exposed themselves as obsequious to all above them.

209. Lack of real expertise, commitment to a taxpayer funded life in government employment, dependency upon political networks, and reliance upon more senior officials in all departments for employment are all factors which contribute to a lack of confidence and professional self-esteem. These are amongst the reasons for simply following orders as appears to have been the case.

210. No real evidence of personal enrichment has been exposed. The only enrichment has been in the receipt of monthly salaries by the many persons with grand job titles and few real responsibilities who failed to implement them with honesty, competence or integrity.

211. The following recommendations are made:

    211.1 Comprehensive written records should be kept of all instructions issued in relation to procurement, and in relation to the execution of government projects

    211.2 Detailed and accurate minutes should be kept of all meetings held by executive and administrative committees within provincial government, and these should be properly preserved. Technology allows minutes to be stored in an environment which is tamper proof

    211.3 In all cases of procurement, a legally qualified official should be required to provide advice on the legality of the procurement process, and any amendments thereto or deviations therefrom; and 211.4 The absence of comprehensive consequence management should be corrected.

ESKOM

INTRODUCTION

1. As per the TOR of the Commission, this section deals with evidence and findings regarding Eskom Holdings SOC Limited (Eskom) and certain of its subsidiaries and divisions.

2. The report begins by outlining the scope of evidence and by presenting the evidence of Mr Jabu Mabuza. It proceeds to deal with the appointment of the 2014 Eskom Board, the suspension of four Eskom executives, the appointment of Mr Mosebenzi Zwane as Minister of Mineral Resources, the acquisition of Optimum Coal Mine by Tegeta, the Brakfontein Colliery, Huarong Energy Africa, and Eskom and McKinsey-Regiments-Trillian. The presentation of key findings and recommendations concludes the report. Reference is made to the Public Protector's report ("State of Capture") and to the Commission's Terms of Reference (TOR), while throughout there is discussion and evaluation of the evidence presented.

The scope of the evidence

3. The evidence can be determined from the contents in the SoCR, and that of Eskom's Chairperson during 2018, Mr Jabulane Albert Mabuza, through submission of a written statement sworn on 16 January 2019, and oral testimony to the Commission.

Evidence of Mr JA Mabuza

4. Eskom is a major public entity in terms of Schedule 2 of the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 (PFMA). The main business and objective of Eskom is to provide electricity and related services including its generation, transmission, distribution, and retail sale.

5. Eskom is a public company as per the terms of the Eskom Conversion Act 13 of 2001 and the Companies Act 71 of 2008. The sole shareholder of Eskom is the government. Under Eskom's Memorandum of Incorporation, the Government as the sole shareholder, acting through the Minister of Public Enterprises, has the exclusive power to appoint Directors of Eskom pursuant to the provisions of s 66 (4) (a) (i) of the Companies Act and s 63 (2) of the PFMA.

6. On 19 January 2018, a largely new Board of Eskom was constituted. Several challenges faced this Board. Many of these challenges had been identified in the qualified audit presented in relation to operations at Eskom for the financial year ending 31 March 2017 as having been due to incompleteness of the irregular expenditure information in terms of PFMA requirements; the many allegations of financial mismanagement and corruption against executives and senior management; and a myriad of other issues related to lapses in governance processes and other internal controls.

7. These factors, amongst others, led to deteriorating levels of confidence of financial markets in Eskom, resulting in constrained access to funding. Eskom suffered a liquidity crunch, giving rise to serious concerns regarding the entity's long term financial viability. Eskom needed to raise loans of R20 billion for the period 1 February 2018 to 31 March 2018 after having had no access to funding since July 2017. The Going Concern status required Eskom to be both liquid and solvent to avoid the risk of triggering defaults on existing funding facilities.

8. Many of the challenges within Eskom arose from the corruption perpetuated by Eskom's own executives and managers, most notably in procurement processes. In Mr Mabuza's graphic phrase, he learnt that "the name is corruption, but the game is procurement".

9. Taking the above into account, Eskom committed to probity checks, which required the disclosure of potential conflicts of interest and evaluations of potential conflicts in relation to specific large value transactions by Eskom's assurance and forensic department, as well as a wide-ranging requirement of disclosure by executives and employees. Board members and employees may not be involved in bidding for Eskom tenders and Eskom employees were subjected to lifestyle audits.

10. Furthermore, numerous employees were subjected to disciplinary action where it was possible. In many instances, disciplinary action was frustrated by the employee resigning before or during the disciplinary process. Where it was considered appropriate, Eskom laid charges with the SAPS.

11. Eskom's procurement policy allowed for contracts for various services and products which had been concluded, to be modified or expanded without adequate oversight and scrutiny. By 28 August 2018, 1 049 cases of allegedly improper modifications or expansions had been identified and reported to the 2018 Board. Most of these cases have been finalised. The overhaul of Eskom's procurement policy was underway when Mr Mabuza made his statement.

12. Mr Mabuza identified the following transactions as warranting the attention of the Commission. These are:

    12.1 The contracts with New Age Media (Pty) Limited

    12.2 Eskom's business dealings with Tegeta from approximately 2013, as well as Tegeta's acquisition of Optimum Coal in 2015/2016 and Eskom's further dealings with companies in the Optimum group

    12.3 The propriety of the dealings of Mr Matshela Koko, Mr Anoj Singh, Ms Ayanda Nteta, Mr Edwin Mabelane, Ms Susan Daniels, Ms Maya Bhana (Naidoo) and Mr Brian Molefe, all erstwhile Eskom employees in relation to dealings between Eskom and Tegeta, Optimum Coal and their associated companies

    12.4 The contracts between Eskom and McKinsey and Company Africa (Pty) Limited and Trillian Management Consulting (Pty) Limited and their associated companies

    12.5 The contracts between Eskom and its subsidiary ERI and Impulse International (Pty) Limited

    12.6 The appointment of accountants Nkonki Inc as a subcontractor by KPMG

    12.7 The contracts between Eskom and Huarong Energy Africa Limited relating to funding from Huarong Asset Management

    12.8 The propriety of the dealings of the late Dr Baldwin (Ben) Ngubane, a former Chairman of the Eskom Board, then Minister of Public Enterprises Lynne Brown, Mr Sean Maritz and Mr Anoj Singh, both erstwhile Eskom employees in relation to Huarong; and 12.9 The contract between Eskom and Dongfang for the Duvha Unit 3 Recovery Project.

THE APPOINTMENT OF THE 2014 ESKOM BOARD

13. The Commission obtained cell phone records of Mr Salim Essa and Minister Lynn Brown. These showed that from November 2014 to March 2015 there had been several calls made between Mr Essa and Minister Lynn Brown. November 2014 was the month prior to the appointment of a new Board of Directors for Eskom.

14. On 10 December 2014, Cabinet approved the appointments of the following Non-Executive Directors to the Eskom Board: Mr Zola Andile Tsotsi (reappointment as Chairperson); Ms Chwayita Mabude (reappointment); Mr Norman Tinyiko Baloyi; Dr Pathmanathan Naidoo; Ms Venete Jarlene Klein; Ms Nazia Carrim; Mr Romeo Kumalo; Mr Mark Vivian Pamensky; Mr Zethembe Wilfred Khoza; Dr Baldwin Sipho Ngubane; and Ms Devapushpum Viroshini Naidoo. Mr Giovanni Michele Leonardi and Ms Mariam Cassim were appointed on 25 May 2015. These two board members were appointed to replace Mr Zola Tsotsi and Mr Norman Baloyi, who both lost their places on the board.

15. Some of these newly appointed board members were serving for the first time on a board and / or an SOE board and indicated that they had become aware of the call for nominations either through a newspaper advertisement of the DPE or through a nomination from someone they knew. The names of these persons were not on the database of the DPE for suitable persons to be considered for appointment on SOE boards. Minister Brown failed to consider persons on the DPE database and preferred instead to have an advertisement published calling for nominations.

16. During her evidence before the Commission on 19 March 2021, Ms Brown seemed unsure about what course she had taken in this regard but proffered an explanation that she "thought the advert was a good idea to add to the database" as, in her view, the database did not give the desired effect. This is ironic given the concern raised by Mr Simphiwe Makhathini that the proposed persons essentially lacked the necessary skills to address the challenges faced by Eskom at the time.

17. On the conspectus of all the evidence Ms Lynn Brown's posture of innocence must be rejected. The evidence clearly shows that she was part of a scheme to capture Eskom. Her responses above are inconsistent with the contents of her affidavit that she signed on 9 August 2020 In that affidavit she sought to create the impression that she followed a DPE process when appointing board members of SOEs and that her appointment of the December 2014 Eskom Board would have followed the same process and not deviated from it.

18. In the Fundudzi report, reference was made to Ms Lynn Brown's written response in which she said: "the administration of Boards was managed by the Legal and Governance Unit in DPE. They had procedures and manuals for the appointment of Boards. I inherited the procedure and simply adhered to it." Based on her responses referred to above, Ms Lynn Brown clearly did not follow that DPE procedure, which she criticised as failing to yield the desired effect. Accordingly, she has given contradictory versions on what procedure or process was followed to appoint new members of the Board of Eskom.

19. The former Public Protector's "State of Capture" report stated that the Board of Eskom appointed in December 2014 consisted predominately of individuals with direct or indirect business or personal relations with Mr Duduzane Zuma (former President Zuma's son), the Gupta family and their related associates, including Mr Salim Essa.

Mr Roman Khumalo

20. Mr Roman Khumalo was appointed to the Eskom Board on 11 December 2014. He resigned on 12 April 2016. During the period 11 January 2013 to 15 February 2016, Mr Kumalo was in communication with Mr Tony Gupta fifty-eight times and eighty times with Mr Essa. In addition, there is evidence of at least four mobile communications between him and Mr Atul Gupta between 3 November and 2 December 2015. Mr Khumalo admitted the communications with Mr Tony Gupta but maintained that no mention was made of Eskom or any other matter relating to Eskom during those communications.

He denied ever speaking to Mr Atul Gupta. He said that he may have telephoned Mr Essa but does not recall having a meaningful discussion with him.

21. Mr Kumalo, CEO of Vodacom Africa at the time, had never served on an SOE board prior to his appointment to the Eskom Board. Despite numerous attempts made by the Commission to get him to testify, he did not do so, but submitted an affidavit, in which he explained that he was the CEO and a full-time employee of Vodacom at the time, running all of Vodacom business in Africa. He said that he was not allowed to sit on any other boards because Vodacom was a listed entity. He had to obtain approval from Vodacom to serve on the Eskom board.

Mr Zola Tsotsi

22. Mr Zola Tsotsi was the Chairperson of the 2011 Eskom Board. On 10 December 2014 he was re-appointed as a member and Chairperson of the 2014 Board of Eskom.

23. Mr Tsotsi described three occasions on which he was summoned by Mr Tony Gupta to the Gupta home, twice in Saxonwold and once in Constantia, where Mr Tony Gupta asked him to use his influence to get certain things done in Eskom. On one of those occasions Mr Tsotsi went to the Guptas' compound in Saxonwold and Mr Tony Gupta showed him transcripts of a chat group of Eskom board members talking about Eskom matters. Mr Tony Gupta said that he was showing Mr Tsotsi the transcripts to demonstrate to him that the Guptas had their sources of information.

Dr Ben Ngubane

24. Dr Baldwin Sipho "Ben" Ngubane was a board member of Eskom from 11 December 2014 until 12 June 2017 when he resigned as a member of the Eskom Board.

25. Once at Eskom, Dr Ngubane seems to have kept his connection with Mr Salim Essa. Insofar as Mr Salim Essa is the person behind the email address infoportal1@zoho.com, referring to himself as "Business Man". This is detailed later in this summary.

Mr Zethembe Khoza

26. Mr Zethembe Khoza was a board member of Eskom from 11 December 2014 until 19 January 2018, when he resigned as a member of the Eskom Board.

27. Mr Khulani Qoma, a former Eskom General Manager: Office of the Chairman, provided the Commission with an affidavit. In his affidavit, Mr Qoma proffers that on 17 June 2017, during a meeting at Mr Khoza's Durban residence, Mr Khoza shared with him that Minister Brown was captured and that she took instructions from the "G-brothers", which Mr Qoma understood to be the Gupta brothers. Furthermore, Mr Khoza also stated in relation to the new Eskom board announced on 23 June 2017, that they were "... abantwana besikole", meaning that they were "... school children" and had been appointed by the G-brothers. He stated that:

    27.1 Dr Ngubane had called a Board meeting to discuss allegations against Mr Koko with the Board, who were ready to suspend him, during which Mr Khoza claimed that he (Mr Khoza) snuck out of the meeting and alerted a Gupta brother of the impending suspension. After this, Dr Ngubane received a telephone call from Minister Lynn Brown, who instructed him to cancel the suspension of Mr Koko, to which Dr Ngubane obliged; and 27.2 During a subsequent meeting between Dr Ngubane, Ms Daniels and Mr Qoma, Dr Ngubane confirmed to them that he had received a call from Minister Lynn Brown the evening he met with the Board to discuss Mr Koko's suspension and that she had instructed him not to suspend Mr Koko.

28. During the period 28 March 2015 to 5 November 2016, he communicated six times with Mr Salim Essa and twice with Mr Tony Gupta, although he denied making these calls.

Mr Norman Baloyi

29. Mr Norman Baloyi was on the Eskom Board from 11 December 2014 until 22 April 2015, when he was removed by Minister Lynn Brown. Mr Baloyi is not listed in the director's profiles for either the 2015 or 2016 reports.

30. From the evidence before the Commission, in the meeting of the Board of Eskom on 11 March 2015, it seems that Mr Baloyi expressed opposition to the suspensions of the four executives. A month later he was removed from the board in very unusual circumstances.

Ms Chwayita Mabude

31. Ms Chwayita Mabude served on the Eskom Board from June 2011 until 23 June 2017.She was one of two members of the 2011 Bard who were re-appointed to continue in the 2014 Board.

32. According to the Shadow World Investigations report, Ms Mabude was the owner of Innova Management Solutions (Innova), an entity that appeared to have been managed by Mr Salim Essa and Mr Ashok Narayan; and monies received from the Free State Department of Agriculture were laundered onto Innova, which then laundered the monies through to Aerohaven and Gateway Limited, both Gupta entities.

Ms Nazia Carrim

33. Ms Nazia Carrim was a board member of Eskom from 11 December 2014 until 1 July 2016. During the period 24 May 2012 to 30 June 2017, she communicated six times with Mr Tony Gupta and twenty-two times with Mr Salim Essa.

34. Ms Carrim does not deny the communications in relation to Mr Salim Essa and offered possible reasons for those communications, which reasons range from Mr Essa conveying condolences to her on one occasion, and, on another, her congratulating Mr Essa on his birthday. During 2014 she invited by either Mr Essa and/or his wife to occasionally have dinner at Mr Essa's house, and on another occasion, Mr Essa calling to obtain legal advice for Mr Duduzane Zuma. Ms Carrim has also confirmed that her husband is related to Mr Salim Essa.

Ms Venete Jarlene Klein

35. Ms Venete Klein was a member of the Eskom Board from December 2014 until 2017.

36. The Commission identified that R150 000.00 had been paid by Saamed Bullion (Pty) Ltd (Saamed), an entity identified by the Commission to have been used by the Guptas or entities associated with the Guptas as a money-laundering vehicle for funds derived from corruption to Centuria 400 (Pty) Ltd (Centuria 400), an entity owned by Ms Klein.

37. In her response to questions put to her by the Commission regarding the above payment, Ms Klein responded by way of a statement that Centuria 400 was an entity she used in running her consulting services. She stated that Mr Riaz Abu approached her entity regarding consulting work where her advice and expertise was required. She said that she had no knowledge of any links Saamed had with the Guptas.

Ms D Viroshini Naidoo

38. Ms Devapushpum Viroshini Naidoo was a board member from December 2014 until 2017.

39. It has been independently confirmed by the Commission that Ms Viroshini Naidoo is the spouse of Mr Kuben Moodley, a known Gupta associate and former advisor to Minister Zwane.

Dr Pat Naidoo

40. Dr Pat Naidoo was a member of the Eskom Board from 11 December 2014 to 21 January 2018.

Mr Mark Vivian Pamensky

41. Mr Pamensky was a member of the Eskom Board from 11 December 2014 until 25 November 2016. He shared a common directorship with Mr Salim Essa in Yellow Star Trading 1099 (Pty) Ltd briefly during 2005.
42. During his concurrent directorships of ORE and Eskom, ORE owned Tegeta Exploration and Resources (Pty) Ltd (Tegeta), which acquired Optimum Coal Holdings (OCH) from Glencore.
43. During the period 31 January 2008 to 21 June 2017, he communicated 1169 times with Mr Essa, 106 times with Mr Atul Gupta, twice with Mr D Zuma and 43 times with Mr Rajesh Gupta. Many of these communications were confirmed in the #GuptaLeaks.
44. Mr Pamensky responded as follows to the above:
    44.1 He admitted his relationship and association with Mr Salim Essa, which he said commenced in 2003
    44.2 Although he attended the Gupta wedding in Sun City on 02 May 2013 as a Blue Label Telecoms representative, he had not met the Guptas before then, until he was invited to Saxonwold by Mr Rajesh Gupta in June 2014
    44.3 He later became a non-executive director of ORE at the request of Mr Atul Gupta
    44.4 The calls between him and Mr Salim Essa would have related to their association and friendship
    44.5 The calls between him and the Guptas would have been confined to his role at ORE and "possibly mooting business prospects that however never materialised"
    44.6 Mr Duduzane Zuma was a director of Shiva Uranium (Pty) Ltd (Shiva Uranium), which owned ORE, and Mr Pamensky would have "had limited interactions with him, in that capacity"
    44.7 He admitted to having "had associations with each of the people identified in Mr Nombembe's affidavit"; and 44.8 He admitted to email correspondence above and referred to affidavits to which he previously deposed and his evidence led at the Commission in this regard.

Mr Geovanni Michele Leonardi

45. Mr Leonardi, a Swiss national, was appointed to the Eskom board on 25 May 2015. He resigned on 19 January 2018.
    45.1 Mr Leonardi's CV was sent by Ms Kim Davids, personal assistant to Ms Brown.
        45.1.1 There is no evidence that Mr Giovanni was subjected to a shortlisting, screening and vetting process as required by the DPE processes for the selection of members of Boards of state-owned entities.
        45.1.2 It is evident that Mr Giovanni's CV was sent to Ms Kim Davids in connection with his possible appointment to the Eskom board.
        45.1.3 Given what this Commission has uncovered about Ms Lynn Brown and her interactions with the Guptas and their associates, there is no doubt that Ms Brown knew about Ms David's interaction with Mr Salim Essa via the "infoportal" email address.
        45.1.4 In her response to questions relating to Mr Giovanni's appointment on the Eskom board, Minister Lynn Brown indicated that "Like other names, Giovanni Leonardo's name came to me as part of a list in the normal course of the process. I had some doubts, but after looking at the CV, I thought international electrical expertise would be valuable."

45.1.5 Mr Giovanni's appointment as an Eskom board member did not follow the Department's procedures as indicated by Minister Lynn Brown, also confirmed by Fundudzi's investigation.

Ms Mariam Cassim

46. Ms Cassim was appointed to the Board on 25 May 2015 and she resigned in 2017.

47. Ms Cassim was not called to give evidence before the Commission. However, there is considerable evidence of telephone calls between Ms Cassim and Messrs Ajay Gupta and Tony Gupta during the period 13 March 2015 to 19 December 2015. In all, there were ten such conversations, eight of which were initiated by Ms Cassim.

48. Ms Cassim has admitted the calls. Her explanation is that she was networking with these persons by means of brief calls asking them how they were doing and congratulating them on developments in their business and so on, merely in order to stay in contact.

49. This explanation is implausible. On 13 March 2015, just two days after the four executives were suspended, Ms Cassim had two conversations with Mr Ajay Gupta, at 15h05 and 15h45, for 60 and 30 seconds respectively. On 28 November 2015, which was at a time when Tegeta was arranging to use Eskom money to pay for Tegeta's purchase of Glencore's coal interests, Ms Cassim called Mr Tony Gupta twice without connecting. Then Mr Tony Gupta called Ms Cassim back and they spoke for 254 seconds. On 30 November 2015 Ms Cassim called Mr Ajay Gupta and then Mr Tony Gupta. She spoke to them, respectively, 233 and 263 seconds. On 19 December 2015 Mr Ajay Gupta called Ms Cassim and they spoke for 27 seconds. Thereafter, there were no calls at all between Ms Cassim and the Guptas.

50. Once one rejects Ms Cassim's explanation for her calls to the Guptas, there is strong correlation between Ms Cassim's contact with the Guptas and the timing of transactions that were initiated to benefit the Guptas.

The composition of the committees of the 2014 Board

51. In May 2014 Ms Lynne Brown was appointed as the Minister of Public Enterprises. A new Board of Directors was appointed in December 2014. Mr Zola Tsotsi had been appointed as Chairperson of the Eskom Board that served from 2011 to 2014. When the next Board was appointed in December 2014. Mr Tsotsi was re-appointed as the Chairperson of the Board. Ms Chwayita Mabude was the only other member of the 2011-2014 Board reappointed to the 2014 Eskom Board.

52. Mr Zola Tsotsi as the Chairman of the 2014 Eskom Board was responsible for the composition of the committees of the Board and was busy with it in December 2014 when he engaged Minister Lynne Brown, as she was responsible for the statutory committees, namely, Audit & Risk and Social & Ethics.

53. Mr Tsotsi testified before the Commission that in December 2014, after the appointment of the 2014 Board of Eskom, he received an email from Mr Salim Essa, whom he knew, which contained Mr Salim Essa's proposed composition of various committees of the Board. In other words, this email had names of which members of the Board should be members of the various committees of the Board. Mr Tsotsi testified that Mr Salim Essa asked him to send that list to Minister Brown. In his initial evidence Mr Tsotsi testified that he ignored Mr Essa's list. However, when shown, during his subsequent testimony before the Commission, the spelling errors on some of the names that could not have been made by a person familiar with the names, Mr Tsotsi suddenly changed his version and said that he did send Mr Essa's list to Minister Brown. Asked whether he sent it to Minister Brown as his list or as Mr Essa's list, he conceded that he did not inform Minister Brown of anything that would have suggested to her that the list was not his list. This means that Mr Tsotsi did what Mr Essa had asked him to do, namely, to send Mr Essa's list to Minister Brown as if it was Mr Tsotsi's list. Mr Tsotsi testified that later he sent a revised list of his own to Minister Brown.

54. Minister Brown was provided with Mr Tsotsi's affidavit of 13 February 2020 and was requested to offer her own version in respect of Mr Tsotsi's evidence that she colluded with the Guptas' and Mr Essa in the appointment of the Board committees. Minister Brown vehemently denied any association with Mr Essa and the Guptas and categorically stated that Mr Essa and Mr Tony Gupta were never at her residence either individually or together, but she did not deny that she had a meeting with Mr Tsotsi.

55. Minister Lynn Brown maintained this version when she gave evidence before the Commission. She elaborated that her official residence had a security register or control point that would have information of all guests and persons attending her residence. However, interestingly, Minister Lynn Brown did not provide any evidence of these registers or control access which could have contradicted Mr Tsotsi's evidence about having found Mr Salim Essa and Mr Tony Gupta at Minister Lynn Brown's residence. Instead, she stated that Mr Zola Tsotsi should provide the date as to when he attended at her residence and then the information could be retrieved.

56. Mr Tsotsi seems to have been a weak person who did not stand up for proper governance when he ought to have done so. After realising the interference of Mr Essa and Minister Brown regarding the allocation of the 2014 Eskom Board members to Committees of the Board, he not only acquiesced in it but actually facilitated the implementation of Mr Essa's interference in the affairs of the Eskom Board.

The Fundudzi report on the composition of the 2014 Eskom Board

57. In the Fundudzi report titled "Forensic Investigation into various allegations at DPE" and dated July 2019, the following is stated in relation to the appointment of the 2014 Eskom Board and the composition of the various Eskom board committees:

    57.1 Ms Cassim and Mr Leonardi were only appointed to the Board on 25 May 2015. As a result of these appointments, the composition of the Board committees would be revised. There is evidence that infoportal1@zoho.com recommended individuals for various positions on Eskom Committees.

    57.2 Based on their review of the Eskom draft resolution and the infoportal1@zoho.com email dated 6 March 2015, the Fundudzi report determined that at least three members recommended by infoportal1@zoho.com were appointed to various committees as reflected in the draft resolution

    57.3 The individuals proposed on the Eskom committees by infoportal1@zoho.com were communicated to the Eskom board for implementation.

    57.4 Dr Ngubane was recommended by infoportal1@zoho.com to be the Chairperson of the Board Tender Committee. This means that he was recommended by Mr Salim Essa. According to a memorandum dated 9 April 2015 from Ms Motsoai to Minister Lynn Brown, Dr Ngubane was removed from the Board Tender Committee by virtue of his appointment as the interim Chairperson of the Eskom board.

THE SUSPENSION OF THE FOUR ESKOM EXECUTIVES

58. On 26 February 2015, former President Zuma intervened in Eskom's corporate governance through giving a direction to an official in the Department of Public Enterprises (DPE) whose political head at the time was then Minister of Public Enterprises, Ms Lynne Brown. President Zuma directed the official in the DPE to instruct Mr Tsotsi, the then Chair of the Eskom Board, to postpone a Board meeting called for the following day:

    58.1 The official conveyed the instruction to Mr Tsotsi, who obliged and postponed the Board meeting to 9 March 2015.

58.2 On 6 March 2015, Ms Dudu Myeni called Mr Linnell, a trained Zimbabwean lawyer turned consultant who she had consulted before, to a meeting on the same day at official residence of President Zuma in Pretoria. This is known as the "Pretoria Meeting".

58.3 At the Pretoria Meeting, Ms Myeni asked Mr Linnell about the possibility of holding an inquiry into Eskom's internal affairs and suspending certain top executives for the duration of the proposed inquiry.

58.4 Mr Linnell informed Ms Myeni that the inquiry could be held and the executives could be suspended. Furthermore, he indicated that that he was prepared to manage the suspension process and the inquiry.

58.5 Ms Myeni then called Mr Linnell and Eskom Chair, Mr Tsotsi, to a meeting at the residence of President Zuma in Durban on 8 March 2015. This is known as the "Durban Meeting".

58.6 Ms Myeni, Mr Linnell and Mr Tsotsi discussed the proposed inquiry and the suspension of certain Eskom executives at the Durban Meeting. President Jacob Zuma joined the meeting at a later stage and the discussions continued. It was decided that three Eskom executives would be suspended. These executives were the CEO, Mr Matona, the Group Executive: Group Capital, Mr Marokane, and the Group Executive: Technology and Commercial, Mr Koko.

58.7 Mr Tsotsi was instructed to seek Board approval for the scheme. President Zuma undertook to garner support for the scheme from Minister Brown.

58.8 On 9 March 2015, at the Eskom Board Meeting, Mr Tsotsi put the scheme for the inquiry and the suspensions of, at that stage three, executives before the Board. Mr Tsotsi said that the scheme had the support of President Zuma.

58.9 The Board declined approval for the proposed inquiry and suspensions without more information and deliberation. The Board meeting was adjourned to 11 March 2015 for further discussion and for the Board to receive the views from Minister Brown.

58.10 The Board reconvened on 11 March 2015, where Minister Brown addressed the members. She then left the meeting but waited at Eskom's offices in case there was further need for her. The Board discussed the proposed inquiry and the suspensions of the three executives. Although there were concerns around the rationale of the proposed inquiry and the suspensions, in the end all the Board members present approved the inquiry in principle and directed that the suspensions proceed.

58.11 The suspension procedures were implemented by a Committee of the Board called the People and Governance Committee (P&G) on the same day. During this Committee's deliberations, the name of a fourth executive to be suspended, CFO Ms Molefe, was included.

58.12 The P&G Committee approved the suspension of the four executives on that day and prepared "pre-suspension" letters for signature and delivery to the executives. Through the pre-suspension letters, the four executives were invited to provide reasons as to why they should not be suspended.

58.13 P&G interviewed the four executives to be suspended, confirmed their suspension, and by close of business on 11 March 2015 the four executives were suspended.

59. While the events described above were in play, a separate process also played out. Herein there is a dispute on the evidence:

59.1 Three Eskom officials described how Mr Koko called them to attend separate meetings at Melrose Arch. The three officials said that they attended such meetings on 9 and 10 March 2015. Mr Essa, a Gupta associate, had offices in Melrose Arch.

59.2 According to the three Eskom officials, Mr Koko and Mr Essa had advance notice of the suspensions, including Mr Koko's own suspension. Two of them described how they were taken to meetings in Mr Essa's office, made to relinquish their cell phones and were questioned by Mr

Essa with the apparent acquiescence of Mr Koko about, respectively, the procedure at Eskom regarding suspensions and whether the Eskom official being interviewed would be prepared to act in the place of one of the executives to be suspended.

59.3 Mr Koko denied the interviews, although he admitted meeting one of the three witnesses at Melrose Arch, and another at a different place.

60. There is no direct evidence of the origin of the scheme to suspend the executives. The first act demonstrated in furtherance of the scheme was the intervention of President Zuma on 25 February 2015, when he called then acting DDG in the DPE, Ms Matsietsi Mokholo, and instructed her to direct the then Chairperson of the Eskom Board, Mr Tsotsi, to postpone the Board meeting scheduled for the following day.

61. The weight of this evidence is reinforced by the conduct of then Minister of Public Enterprises, Ms Brown as testified to by Ms Mokholo: in the manner in which Minister Ms Brown submitted to the direction to meddle in Eskom's operational affairs when told by Ms Mokholo what had transpired between herself and President Zuma; and in the manner in which Minister Brown then actively engaged herself in shaping Board opinion on the topic, refusing to leave the Board meeting after being advised twice by Ms Mokholo to do so and then staying at Eskom to be there "if needed".

62. Ms Mokholo was an impressive witness. In short, she came to the Commission to tell the truth and succeeded in doing so, with clarity.

63. A second such act was the conduct of Ms Dudu Myeni in taking an active role in first recruiting Mr Nick Linnell, a legally trained corporate consultant, to coordinate the inquiry, which ultimately led to the suspensions.

64. It is unclear whether Mr Linnell took steps to achieve the precautionary suspensions for a legally improper motive. He seems to have equated these suspensions with the kind of suspension imposed on a person facing disciplinary charges. It also seems that the provisions within Eskom's policies, referred to in passing in the evidence, were framed to cater for the situation where an employee is to face charges. Those involved in the decision-making in this regard at either the Durban or Pretoria meeting, as well as at Eskom, did not appreciate the internal policy prescriptive, and as such this was not elucidated in the evidence.

65. Mr Linnell sought to obtain legal advice at every step in the work of the Commission. His attitude was demonstrated by the evidence he gave when asked if he had any concerns about the Durban meeting, its venue and who was at the meeting. His evidence demonstrated a lack of concern with proper conduct, most notably the presence of the then President Zuma at the meeting.

66. A third such act is the Durban meeting held on 8 March 2015. Mr Linnell may well be mistaken about the presence of Mr Jabu Maswanganyi (although this is not wholly relevant), however the most important question is whether President Zuma was there. We have Ms Myeni's statement that President Zuma was not there. I think that this evidence must be characterised as a lie. Not only did Mr Linnell and Mr Tsotsi both say that President Zuma was present, but their evidence is powerfully corroborated by the documents that were generated almost contemporaneously by Mr Linnell, the conduct of Mr Tsotsi in the Board meetings that followed and the proven conduct of President Zuma in his telephone conversation with acting DDG Mokholo on 26 February 2015.

67. The emphasis on the suspensions at the two meetings organised by Ms Myeni - the Pretoria and the Durban meetings - is extraordinary. If these two highly placed state actors, Ms Myeni and President Zuma, were motivated in the first instance by the desire to correct what was wrong in Eskom, there would not have been such emphasis on suspensions. Why was it necessary to target top executives, against whom there was no evidence of complicity in what had gone and was going wrong at Eskom? Mr Linnell said that experience had taught that such executives could thwart the proper conduct of the inquiry or subordinates could be reluctant to come forward. But that justification (flimsy in the present context) does not explain the haste with which these suspensions were decided upon and executed. Surely the first thing to do is set up an inquiry.

68. Why Ms Myeni and President Zuma acted as they did in early March 2015 can only be explained by the two of them. Ms Myeni is an unreliable witness. She must have denied the presence of President Zuma at the Durban meeting to shield him from the consequences of the plot. Furthermore, it is indicative of the impropriety of the plot: why else would she falsely deny that he was there? As for President Zuma, it is highly unlikely that a credible explanation would have been forthcoming from him even if he had testified.

69. Given the relative status and political power residing in President Zuma and Ms Myeni respectively, the only reasonable inference is that Ms Myeni was doing President Zuma's bidding. She summoned Mr Linnell to meetings first at President Zuma's Pretoria residence and, thereafter, to the President's Durban residence. She reported to President Zuma the progress of her discussion with Mr Tsotsi and Mr Linnell shortly before and in preparation for President Zuma's joining the meeting. She lied about the presence of President Zuma at the Durban meeting. It made no sense to involve President Zuma in the discussion unless the plot Ms Myeni proposed was one of which President Zuma approved. The call to acting DDG Mokholo shows that President Zuma was driving the plot at government level. Why else would President Zuma intervene in something as relatively inconsequential as the date of an SOE Board meeting?

70. Eskom Board Chairperson at the time, Mr Tsotsi, is seemingly a weak person who did not stand up for proper governance when he ought to have done so. After voicing weak objections to the suspension regime, he not only acquiesced in it, but actively facilitated its execution. He did not seek independent legal advice, even though that would readily have been available to him. Although the evidence in this respect is vague, he seems to have implied at the Board meeting on 11 March 2015 that the Board would be justified in suspending the four executives on the ground of misconduct, although no Board member could say what the nature of this misconduct was.

71. It is also remarkable that no Eskom Board member or official considered whether it was permissible to suspend an executive just because of a generalised, speculative fear that the executive might somehow interfere with the proposed inquiry or, if the suspensions were for misconduct, suspend otherwise than in contemplation of disciplinary proceedings against the executive.

72. In the first instance, only three executives were to be suspended, namely those individuals identified at the Durban Meeting. The fourth person to be suspended was identified at a meeting of the People and Governance committee (P&G) of the Eskom Board. This happened immediately after the Board meeting on 11 March 2015, which then Minister Brown attended. There is some evidence that Minister Brown identified the fourth individual, the CFO Ms Molefe for suspension during this P&G meeting. The evidence, however, is not consistent and there are no reliable contemporaneous documents in this regard.

73. None of the Eskom decision makers opposed this extraordinary addition to the list of those to be suspended. Although Directors Baloyi, Klein and Naidoo voiced their concerns, they went along with the majority in the end. In addition, Director Klein took an active role in the charade by which the executives were invited to advance reasons why the committee should not do what they had already decided to do.

74. Except for Mr Koko, the other three executives were paid substantial sums of money to leave quietly rather than demand their reinstatements. This reinforces the proposition that there was a faction within Eskom which wanted those executives removed and out of the proverbial way.

75. A key question is thus also, with what purpose did President Zuma and Ms Myeni devise and execute the plot to suspend the four Eskom Executives? This is answered below.

Mr Molefe and Mr Singh

76. Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Anoj Singh were parachuted into Eskom from Transnet. Although in all comparable appointments a process was followed, in the case of Mr Molefe and Mr Singh, no such process was followed. The evidence is consistent that Mr Molefe particularly was regarded by those in the decision making class as something of a prodigy and that there was a belief in those circles that, if anybody could fix Eskom, Mr Molefe was the person who could do so. At the time load-shedding and Eskom's very bad financial state and the very poor level of maintenance of Eskom's power plants was big news and the government was facing heavy criticism from the public.

77. There is, however, other evidence which demonstrates both that Mr Molefe and Mr Singh took decisions to the advantage of the Guptas and that under Mr Molefe's leadership, Eskom's fortunes appeared on the face of it to be on the rise as load-shedding was reduced. It is quite possible that both narratives are true: that many of the decision-making elite believed that Mr Molefe was the right, indeed the only, man for the job, and, that others saw that this was an opportunity to get a man who they thought would favour the Guptas into the job. It is also possible that Mr Molefe himself made decisions which favoured the Guptas.

78. It is necessary to refer to the evidence of five further witnesses. These are Ms Suzanne Daniels, Ms Nonkululeko Dlamini (formerly Veleti) Ms Tsholofelo Molefe, Mr Abram Masango and Ms Nonhlanhla Kraai.

79. Ms Daniels testified that on 9 March 2015 she was called to a meeting with Mr Koko at Melrose Arch, where Mr Essa, a prominent Gupta associate, had offices. She said she told Mr Koko that she had waited for a long time in a restaurant at Melrose Arch for him to arrive. When he arrived, he paid her bill and took her to a suite of offices where she was required to hand in her cell phone for safekeeping. Thereafter, Mr Essa introduced himself to her as the advisor to Minister Brown. A short meeting followed at which Ms Daniels, Mr Essa and Mr Koko were present. Ms Daniels said that Mr Essa asked her how one would go about suspending executives at Eskom. She said that Mr Essa proceeded to say that four executives namely Mr Matona, Mr Marokane, Ms Molefe and Mr Koko (who was present at the meeting between Ms Daniels and Mr Essa) would be suspended and that some of the executives to the suspended would not return to Eskom at the end of their suspension.

80. Mr Koko admitted that he met Ms Daniels at Melrose Arch but did not take her to meet Mr Essa. Ms Daniels was an unimpressive witness. She was subsequently dismissed from the employ of Eskom for what was found at a disciplinary inquiry against her to be four counts of gross impropriety in a corporate sense. Had her evidence stood alone, one would not have formed a view adverse to Mr Koko's version. However, her evidence does not stand alone. There is powerful corroboration for her version.

81. Ms Nonkululeko Dlamini is a chartered accountant. In 2015 she was employed at Eskom in the position of General Manager: Finance for the Group Capital Program, reporting to Ms Molefe, the CFO of Eskom. She testified that during the week of 9 March 2015 the group of nine or ten Eskom employees reporting to Ms Molefe held a finance strategy session at an Eskom facility in Midrand, which was scheduled for two full days. She further testified that on the first day of the session, 9 March 2015, Ms Dlamini walked back from lunch with Ms Molefe and others when she received a call from Mr Koko. Mr Koko asked Ms Dlamini to meet him urgently at Melrose Arch. Ms Dlamini asked Ms Molefe if she could leave the strategy session and attend the meeting with Mr Koko. Ms Molefe declined this request because Ms Dlamini was needed at the strategy session. Ms Dlamini then told Mr Koko that she was unable to join Mr Koko's meeting because she was in a meeting herself. Mr. Koko requested her CV and asked to meet her between 17h30 and 18h30. They met that evening at a KFC or a McDonald's. Mr Koko said that he had still not received her CV. He gave Ms Dlamini an alternative email address. Ms Dlamini asked Mr Koko why he wanted her CV. He said that he wanted it because there was a possibility that she could be asked to act as Financial Director. He did not say who had requested her CV. At the time, she was not aware of the issues around the proposed inquiry and the suspensions. The meeting lasted about twenty minutes. Mr Koko did not tell her whom she would have met if she had gone to the meeting in Melrose Arch and she did not ask.

82. Mr Koko's version was put to Ms Dlamini. His version held that Ms Dlamini was a colleague and a family friend. Mr Koko said that he called her on 10 March 2015, and they met for dinner in the evening in Midrand. Mr Koko denied that he called her to come to Melrose Arch. According to Mr Koko, both Ms Dlamini and he were very surprised when she was appointed as acting CFO / Financial Director after Ms Molefe's suspension.

83. Ms Dlamini denied that she met Mr Koko for dinner. On 12 March 2015, Ms Dlamini was appointed acting CFO/Financial Director. She acted in that position until she resigned from Eskom on 1 May 2015 with effect from the end of her notice period on 31 July 2015.

84. Ms Dlamini submitted an affidavit from Ms Molefe. In this affidavit, Ms Molefe confirmed Ms Dlamini's version of what took place on 10 March 2015. Ms Dlamini was an impressive witness. Her evidence, corroborated by that of Ms Molefe, shows that Mr Koko did indeed invite Ms Dlamini to meet him at Melrose Arch. Where Mr Koko's version conflicts with the version of Ms Dlamini, Mr Koko's version must be rejected as false.

85. This conclusion is supported by Mr Masango's evidence. He, too, testified that Mr Koko called him to a meeting at Melrose Arch. Mr Masango stated that at this meeting Mr Koko disclosed the ploy to suspend four executives. Mr Masango, too, was required to hand in his cell phone before the meeting with Mr Essa began. Mr Masango testified that his meeting with Mr Koko and Mr Essa was on 10 March 2015. As was the case with previous meetings of this nature, the purpose of the meeting was to inform Mr Masango of what was to happen, and to elicit Mr Masango's consent to act in the place of one of the executives to be suspended. Mr Koko denied that he called Mr Masango to a meeting at Melrose Arch and that he and Mr Essa met with Mr Masango. Mr Koko accused Mr Masango of fabricating this story of a meeting. However, Mr Koko failed to give a reason why Mr Masango would have fabricated this story against him specifically, because, in Mr Koko's own version, he and Mr Masango were close and on good terms. Mr Koko sought to say that Mr Masango falsely implicated him the meeting because he (Mr Koko) had laid a criminal complaint against Mr Masango relating to corruption. However, when questioned about this in detail, Mr Koko indicated that this only occurred in 2017, two years later.

86. Mr Masango's evidence is also strongly corroborated by the evidence submitted by Ms Nonhlanhla Kraai, who testified convincingly that Mr Masango did not arrive for a meeting she was to hold with him on that day. He could not be contacted, and his phone was on voicemail. This statement corroborates Mr Masango's evidence that he was required to hand over his cell phone before he went into the meeting with Mr Koko and Mr Essa. Ms Kraai went on to concur with Mr Masango's explanation for his failure to make the meeting with Ms Kraai. Ms Kraai testified that Mr Masango said that he had been at a "strange meeting with a short Indian man" at which he was told that he was going to be made the Acting General Executive: Group Capital.

87. The evidence of Ms Daniels, Ms Dlamini and Mr Masango proves two things conclusively. Firstly, that there was a ploy to remove from Eskom certain executives who occupied strategic positions, whom the Gupta family believed would not co-operate in their plan to capture Eskom and loot its coffers, and to replace them with officials who would co-operate with them. Secondly, that Mr Koko was an integral component of the Guptas' strategy to capture Eskom. President Zuma and Ms Myeni were witting participants in the ploy to oust the four Eskom executives and, thus, witting participants in the Guptas' larger scheme to capture Eskom.

88. On the evidence, this was not the only time that Mr Essa knew in advance what personnel changes were to be made in the Eskom executive. There is the evidence of Mr Henk Bester, who testified that in 2014 Mr Essa told him that Mr Molefe was going to become the Eskom CEO. According to Mr Bester, Mr Essa's motive in disclosing this to him was that he wished to demonstrate to Mr Bester the reach and extent of the Guptas' power or influence in state affairs.

89. Viewed in the correct context, either the suspension of Mr Koko was a ruse or the Gupta family agreed to allow Mr Koko to keep his job in return for the services he was to render. What the Gupta family hoped to achieve by having Mr Koko suspended is not elucidated by the evidence. In December 2015, Mr Koko and Mr Singh played a crucial role in obtaining the approval of the Eskom Board to a substantial pre-payment to Tegeta. The Guptas must have known that the money they would have to pay out to obtain the control of Optimum Coal Mine would leave them short of liquid cash. Even without the benefit of hindsight, it is probable that the Gupta family would have known that Eskom was their best source of cash in the short term to fund Tegeta's purchase of Glencore's South African coal interests.

90. A key component from the onset was the suspension of executives. The primary purpose was to install Mr Molefe in Eskom as its CEO. This is because those who devised and implemented the scheme believed that Mr Molefe would favour the Gupta family and channel Eskom resources to them.

THE APPOINTMENT OF MR MOSEBENZI ZWANE AS MINISTER OF MINERAL RESOURCES

91. Prior to September 2015 Mr Mosebenzi Joseph Zwane had been confined to local and provincial government. From May 2009 to March 2011 Mr Zwane was MEC for Human Settlements. From March 2011 to April 2013, he was MEC for Agriculture and Rural Development. From April 2013 to June 2015, he was MEC for Economic, Small Business, Tourism and Environmental Affairs. From June 2015 to September 2015, he was MEC for Agriculture and Rural Development. Mr Zwane not distinguish himself as an MEC, he in fact performed very badly. When he was MEC for Agriculture, he initiated and oversaw what has since become known as the Estina or the Vrede farm debacle. Despite this, he joined the National Assembly in September 2015 as an ANC Member of Parliament. Within two weeks or just after two weeks of becoming an MP, Mr Zwane was appointed as Minister of Mineral Resources after President Zuma had moved Minister Ngoako Ramatlhodi from the Department of Mineral Resources to the Ministry of Public Service and Administration.

92. The question that arises about President Zuma's decision is why he chose Mr Zwane above all the eligible ANC Members of Parliament for this position. The answer is that there was nothing and there could not have been anything that President Zuma could possibly have thought Mr Zwane could do better than all the other 200 ANC Members of Parliament in terms of performing the legitimate, constitutional and legal duties of Minister of Mineral Resources. Instead, there was every reason to believe that Mr Zwane should not have been allowed to continue as an MEC after the Vrede Farm / Estina debacle that he oversaw. The ANC ought not to even have allowed him to be a Member of the Provincial Legislature, after that dismal performance. Yet, the ANC allowed him to not only continue as a member of the Provincial Legislature and as an MEC but they allowed him to be made MEC for Human Settlements after he had performed as poorly as he did as MEC for Agriculture. As MEC for Human Settlement, he performed even worse than he had done as MEC for Agriculture.

93. Out of all evidence heard by the Commission that may be relevant to Adv Ramatlhodi's removal as Minister of Mineral Resources and the appointment of Mr Zwane as Minister of Mineral Resources the only reason that presents itself as the most probable reason is that the Guptas wanted Mr Zwane for Minister of Mineral Resources and President Zuma also wanted somebody that had the blessing of the Guptas and who would co-operate with the Guptas. Minister Ramatlhodi had consistently refused to have anything to do with the Guptas and was not prepared to do any favours for the Guptas. President Zuma and the Guptas wanted someone who would advance the Guptas' business interests and those of Mr D Zuma.

94. The evidence before the Commission reveals that there was a strong connection or relationship between Mr Zwane and the Guptas. This is dealt with below.

    94.1 During or about October 2011, when Mr Zwane was the MEC for Agriculture and Rural Development, his department concluded a contract with Nulane Investments 204 (Pty) Ltd (Nulane), a company whose sole director was Mr Iqbal Sharma (Mr Sharma), a known associate of Mr Salim Essa and the Guptas.

    94.2 During or about June 2012, in the same capacity, Mr Zwane admittedly promoted and initiated the establishment of a mega Vrede Integrated Dairy Project, with Estina (Pty) Ltd (Estina) as the service provider, a company whose sole director was Mr Kamal Vasram, an IT salesman with no farming experience, with a cost to the Free State government of approximately R280 million, from which the Guptas benefited.

    94.3 Mr Zwane was instrumental in at least the first prepayment of R30 million to Estina, an amount believed to have been used to pay the R30 million bill for the Guptas' wedding at Sun City in April / May 2013; not long after the conclusion of the contract with Estina, Mr Zwane and his local Gospel choir undertook a trip to India in October 2012 which was paid for by the Guptas or their entities or associates. The choir's itinerary included a lunch at Mr Gupta's house on 16 October 2012.

94.4 During or about March 2013, again as MEC for Agriculture and Rural Development, Mr Zwane provided an official invitation to a Minister in India that was used to facilitate the landing of an aircraft at the Waterkloof Air Force Base, in Pretoria, with guests for the Gupta wedding at Sun City; during 2013 and 2014, Mr Zwane undertook overseas trips to India, Dubai and Switzerland with, inter alia, Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Salim Essa.

94.5 Prior to his appointment as a Member of Parliament, Mr Zwane was invited to several meetings with Mr Tony Gupta in the period 2012 to 2014; also prior to his appointment by President Zuma as Minister of Mineral Resources on 23 September 2015, Mr Zwane seems to have been vetted by the Guptas, as a copy of his CV was sent to Mr Tony Gupta on 1 August 2015 who then forwarded it to Mr D Zuma, President Zuma's son.

94.6 As the Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr Zwane appointed Gupta associates as his special advisors, namely Mr Kuben Moodley and Mr Malcolm Mabaso; Mr Zwane abused his position by intervening in negotiations to secure the acquisition of Glencore's OCH/OCM by the Gupta-owned company, Tegeta; and on his watch as the Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr Zwane's special advisors have according to Mr David Msiza, the Chief Inspector of Mines at the DMR, acted on his instructions to cause notices to be issued against Glencore-owned mines to suspend their mining licences, thus hampering mining operations and putting the mines under financial strain; Additionally, Mr Zwane was assisted by the Guptas and their associates in preparing his media statements and responses to questions raised by journalists; those who assisted him include Mr Tony Gupta, Mr Howa, D. Zuma and the Gupta-hired PR firm, Bell Pottinger.

94.7 During 2016, after the banks had closed the bank accounts of the Guptas, Mr Zwane as chairperson of the Inter-Ministerial Committee, played an active role in seeking to put pressure on the banks to reopen the bank accounts of the Guptas and issued a media statement in which he misrepresented what Cabinet had decided.

94.8 When Mr Zwane met with Mr Glasenberg in Switzerland at the beginning of December 2015, he introduced Mr Salim Essa to Mr Glasenberg as his advisor when this was not true and the only reason he did so is that he sought to assist the Guptas to conclude a deal with Glencore with regard to their acquisition of OCM.

95. In the light of the above it can safely be concluded that Mr Zwane was a "Gupta Minister" in the sense that he must have been appointed at their instance or request or with their blessing.

TEGETA'S ACQUISITION OF OPTIMUM COAL MINE

96. Optimum Coal Holdings (Ltd) (OCH) was formed on 15 March 2006 as a BBBEE coal mining and exploration company and acquired control of Optimum Coal Mines (Pty) Ltd (OCM) which by then owned the Optimum Mine. In the period 2011 to 2012, Glencore acquired control of OCH and, accordingly, OCM.

97. Apparently, there had been disputes between Eskom and Glencore's predecessors on the quality of coal. Following Glencore's acquisition of its interest in OCH, these differences, particularly in relation to sizing and quality of the coal supplied to Hendrina, persisted between OCM and Eskom.

98. During this period, approximately half of OCM's coal was supplied to Eskom. The price at which OCM sold coal to Eskom pursuant to the CSA was significantly below the cost of production.

99. The CSA contained a "Hardship Clause", which provided for arbitration in certain specified circumstances which defined the concept of hardship. OCM considered that its obligation to supply Eskom at prices below its cost constituted hardship as contemplated by the CSA. On 12 December 2013 the parties concluded an arbitration agreement, under which they submitted the issue around pricing to arbitration.

100. The mine made a significant loss under Glencore's control. This was because Glencore had become party to the CSA with Eskom, which obligated Glencore to supply coal to Eskom at its Hendrina power station at prices far below the market rate.

101. Optimum Mine's supply of coal was commercially vital for Eskom because Optimum's coal could simply be loaded on conveyers at the mine and directly unloaded at the power station. Eskom would be forced to pay for road haulage if coal was sourced from alternative providers, which would significantly raise the price to Eskom.

102. Prior to the events of 2015, Eskom and Glencore were caught in a protracted dispute over coal pricing. However, the dispute was eventually settled and the coal supply from the Optimum Mine to Hendrina power station continued without interruption.

103. A substantive dispute about whether the coal price should increase (and by how much) developed between the parties. By early 2015 it appeared that significant progress had been made toward resolving the dispute. Glencore provided confidential information to Eskom for this purpose. This enabled Eskom to evaluate the commercial worth and production capacity of the Optimum Mine with far greater accuracy than, say, one of Glencore's competitors could have done. The parties to the CSA had from time to time modified the terms of the CSA by addenda. They had concluded three addenda and had cooperated in drawing up a draft fourth addendum. The terms of the proposed settlement were approved by Eskom's executive procurement committee. This level of approval was subject to the consideration of Eskom's Board's procurement committee, which was scheduled to meet on 15 April 2015.

104. On 17 April 2015, then Minister Brown, announced that Mr Brian Molefe was seconded from Transnet to Eskom as CEO. He became the CEO of Eskom three days later on 20 April 2015. Following his appointment as CEO, the terms of the settlement negotiations between Glencore and Eskom changed drastically. Mr Molefe insisted that Eskom would hold Glencore to the terms of the CSA and would not agree to an amendment thereof. Mr Molefe terminated the negotiations with Glencore. There is a dispute between the Glencore witness, Mr Ephron, on the one hand and the Eskom witnesses, Mr Molefe and Mr Koko, on the other hand. Glencore argued that Eskom's intransigence led to the breakdown in the negotiations. The Eskom officials argued that Glencore was unreasonable in its demands. It is not part of the Commission's TORs to decide who was right and who was wrong in this regard.

105. Glencore continued to fund the Optimum Mine and supplies to Hendrina were not interrupted, even though the standoff with Eskom continued.

106. The Gupta family, through their company Oakbay, started negotiating with Glencore to buy the Optimum Mine from 1 July 2015 onwards. Glencore initially showed no interest in Oakbay's propositions.

107. Given that the negotiations with Eskom had broken down, Glencore put its subsidiaries Optimum Coal Mine (Pty) Ltd (OCM), which directly owned the Optimum Mine, and Optimum Coal Holdings Ltd, (OCH) into business rescue on 31 July 2015. OCH held the shares in Glencore's South African coal interests and was thus the immediate holding company of OCM. At the end of July and August 2015, Eskom withheld payment for coal delivered that month from OCM. The business rescue practitioners (BRPs) threatened to terminate the coal supply. This sharply focussed the commercial limits of Eskom's strategy, whatever might have been its legal strengths: without coal from the Optimum Mine, Eskom would be put to enormous additional expense at a time when it was in financial peril and load-shedding was a constant threat. Eskom was acutely aware of the political pressures that the governing party would face if it allowed the situation to develop.

108. Eskom's commercial predicament was identified in a memorandum dated 17 November 2016 and signed by the General Manager: Coal Operations, Mr Mazibuko, and the Chief Procurement Officer: Group Commercial on behalf of Mr Koko to which the Commission was referred by the witness, Mr

Opperman. The memorandum concluded in paragraph 10 that if Eskom decided to implement the existing agreement, the entity would have to charge Optimums shortfall, and as such, there is a high probability that this would cripple the company and lead to liquidation. Therefore, it made business sense to keep Optimum afloat and supply Eskom at current terms and conditions.

109. On 3 September 2015, after Mr Molefe and Mr Koko met the business rescue practitioners, Eskom undertook to negotiate further with Glencore, which for its part, undertook to fund OCM and the supply of coal resumed.

110. Negotiations between Glencore and Oakbay resumed. On 22 September 2015 President Zuma appointed Mr Mosebenzi Zwane as Minister of Mineral Resources, replacing Mr Ramatlhodi. The evidence given by Mr Ramatlhodi reveals that he was a Minister who had repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the Gupta family. The evidence led in this Commission demonstrated overwhelmingly that Mr Mosebenzi Zwane was a Gupta associate, and, in all probability, he was appointed to the position of Minister of Mineral Resources because former President Zuma and the Gupta family wanted a Minister in that position who would facilitate the implementation of the Gupta agenda.

111. Mr Joel Raphela, a DDG in the Department of Mineral Resources and Energy (DME), contacted Mr Ephron in November 2015 to request a meeting at Melrose Arch. At this meeting Mr Raphela indicated that the sale of all OCM and certain other affiliate companies of OCM should be considered, as opposed to just OCM. At that stage, the deal on the table was confined to OCM. While it was not unusual for the DME to take an interest in transactions in the mining industry that were subject to their approval, Mr Ephron found it surprising that Mr Raphela appeared to have detailed knowledge of Glencore's negotiations with Oakbay.

112. On 24 November 2015 a progress meeting was called with Eskom. This meeting was attended by Mr Blankfield on behalf of Glencore, the Business Rescue Practitioners (BRPs), Mr Howa, Mr Chawla and Ms Ragavan on behalf of Oakbay and Mr Koko, Ms Suzanne Daniels, Mr Edwin Mabelane and Ms Ayanda Nteta on behalf of Eskom. Mr Koko chaired the meeting and minutes of the proceedings were taken. Mr Koko stated that Eskom expected OCM to honour the CSA until 2018 and that Eskom would not waive any penalties. Mr Koko further stated that Eskom would not provide consent to any transaction with Oakbay unless the transaction extended beyond OCM to include all assets of the OCH Group, including OCH's interest in the Richards Bay Coal Terminal and Koornfontein. Mr Koko required Glencore to state by the end of that weekend whether this would be acceptable.

113. Mr Koko's stated reason for insisting on a sale of OCH's interest in the Richards Bay Coal Terminal and Koornfontein was that, without such a sale, OCM would not be a viable business. Mr Ephron considered that Mr Koko's position had some merit, but noted it was the same message that he had received from the DME earlier that month. Since a transaction with Oakbay appeared to be the only option at that stage, Glencore agreed to engage further with Oakbay in respect of a transaction for all the assets of OCH.

114. A representative of Minister Zwane contacted Mr Glasenberg on 24 November 2015 to arrange a meeting between them. The meeting was scheduled for 1 December 2015.

115. Mr Ajay Gupta met with Mr Ephron on 25 November 2015 and made a third offer on behalf of Oakbay to acquire all the shares held by OCH in OCM and OCH's other subsidiaries for a purchase price of R1 billion. As this would result in a shortfall of some R1.5 billion, which Glencore would have had to fund, Glencore declined the offer. Mr Ephron conveyed the rejection of the offer to Mr Ajay Gupta at a meeting on 26 November 2015. On the same day a section 54 notice was issued by the DME to Koornfontein Mine (controlled by Glencore), directing the withdrawal of all employees from the underground mine and terminating of the use of certain equipment. Between 25 and 30 November 2015, further s 54 notices were issued to other mines in which Glencore had an interest.

116. These s 54 notices effectively halted all mining operations at the affected mines. The notices flagged issues that were not serious and that could have been easily addressed without any negative impact on mining operations. It was not common practice for multiple s 54 notices to be issued to a single operator over such a short period of time.

117. A credible body of evidence shows that Eskom officials provided Mr Essa with confidential information, thus giving him, and therefore the Gupta family, an unfair advantage that enabled them to adjust their dealings with Glencore. Email was one means through which information was transferred. An email address infoportal1@zoho.com, belonging to an alias "Business Man" existed to which Ms Daniels, Dr Ngubane and Mr Koko, among others, sent confidential documents. While there is some degree of certainty that the person with the alias "Business Man" was Mr Essa, there were also suggestions that "Business Man" was not a single individual. This, however, is improbable and the evidence is contradictory.

118. Eskom officials who conceded that they had sent Eskom's confidential information to "Business Man" maintained that it was indeed Mr Richard Seleke, and as such, there was no breach of confidentiality as Mr Seleke was a DG of the Department of Public Enterprises. However, it is important to note that some of the emails received by Eskom officials from this email address or sent by certain Eskom officials to this email address were sent before Mr Richard Seleke became the DG.

119. Mr Koko (representing Eskom), Mr Marsden (representing the BRPs), Mr Blankfield and Mr Ephron (representing Glencore) met on 1 December 2015 at Eskom's offices. Mr Ephron informed Mr Koko that Glencore had rejected Oakbay's offer and would continue to support OCM, resulting in both OCM and OCH being discharged from business rescue. Mr Koko was asked if he was pleased with the decision, to which Mr Koko replied that he was as OCM would be honouring the CSA. Mr Koko informed Mr Anoj Singh, Eskom's CFO of the outcome of the meeting.

120. Then Minister Mosebenzi Zwane travelled to Zurich, Switzerland to meet Mr Glasenberg. They met on 1 December 2015, where Mr Zwane urged Glencore to sell Optimum Mine to the Gupta family. Mr Zwane stated that he had used government resources to advance the interest of these private individuals as he feared that OCM would go into liquidation and thousands of jobs would be lost. However, he must have known that Glencore had by the time of this meeting decided to fund OCM. Mr Glasenberg informed Mr Zwane of this at their meeting.

121. Following the meeting with Eskom on 1 December 2015, Mr Ephron and Mr Blankfield were in the Eskom parking lot, when Mr Ephron received a phone call from Mr Glasenberg to inform him that Minister Zwane had indicated that Mr Tony Gupta wanted to meet on 2 December 2015 in Switzerland and that Mr Ephron had to join the meeting. Accordingly, Mr Ephron travelled to Zurich, Switzerland that day.

122. On 2 December 2015, meetings regarding OCM were held. The first part of the meeting was attended by Minister Zwane, Mr Essa, Mr Tony Gupta, Mr Glasenberg, and Mr Ephron. Minister Zwane opened the meeting, stressing the importance of job security in the mining sector and highlighting a concern that the mines should not enter a liquidation process. For Minister Zwane, the best outcome was for Glencore and Oakbay to reach an agreement. He then left the meeting. It is important to note that by this stage there was no serious risk of liquidation for OCM as Glencore had decided to continue funding the mine. Minister Zwane was informed of this on 1 December 2015, a day prior to the meeting. There was no need at all for Minister Zwane to spend an extra day in Switzerland and attend a further meeting to make the same point. The reason Minister Zwane attended the meeting on 2 December 2015 was to emphasise to Glencore that the South African government supported the Oakbay offer to Glencore.

123. The rest of the meeting addressed the terms on which the Gupta family would acquire Glencore's coal interest in South Africa. Glencore and Oakbay agreed in principle that Tegeta would buy Glencore's South African coal interest, including its rights in relation to the Richards Bay coal terminal for R2.15 billion cash. This was a much higher offer by Oakbay than previous offers.

124. Mr Koko engaged with the DDG of the DME, Mr Raphela to "persuade" the DME to pressurise Glencore to sell to Tegeta between 2 and 8 December 2015. Mr Koko drafted a formal letter dated 7 December 2015. An informal email exchange between Mr Koko and Mr Raphela showed that Mr Raphela was given a draft of the letter Mr Koko intended to send to the DME. Mr Koko asked Mr Raphela to approve the contents of the letter. As per the letter dated 7 December 2015, Mr Raphela, formally wrote as the DG of the DME to Mr Koko to commit the Department to fast tracking the necessary mining licences to Tegeta to enable it to mine OCM's mines and invited Eskom to provide for a pre-payment to Tegeta to assist it with "financial provision ... estimated at R1.7 billion".

125. After a little more than a week, after Eskom refused to negotiate meaningfully with Glencore, senior executives managed to secure a telephonic meeting with the Investment and Finance Committee of the Eskom Board on the evening of 9 December 2015. Mr Molefe, Eskom CEO, was off ill. Mr Singh, and Mr Koko made a written submission which was signed on 8 December 2015 and presented to the committee.

126. The Board was asked to urgently authorise a "pre-purchase" to the value of R1.68 billion by "Optimum Coal Mine (Pty) (Ltd)", as represented by the "proposed owners of OCM". Ms Klein, Mr Khoza, and Dr P Naidoo, as members of the IFC considered this proposal. Mr Pamensky, the Chair of the IFC Committee recused himself.

127. All members of the IFC were confused as to whether the pre-payment was to benefit Glencore or the proposed new owners. It is also telling that nowhere in the submission document was there any reference to Tegeta or Oakbay or the Guptas, who by that stage had achieved a great measure of notoriety in the eyes of the South African public.

128. On 9 December 2015 the IFC approved a resolution authorising CEO Brian Molefe, CFO Singh, and Group Executive: Generation, Mr Koko, to negotiate and conclude a pre-purchase agreement with the "proposed owners of OCM". In fact, if what was meant in the submission document was a long-term coal supply agreement, and the prepayment against coal committed to be delivered from Optimum, this never materialised. Instead, Eskom provided Tegeta with a guarantee for the sum expressed in the submission document, i.e., R1.68 billion. ABSA issued a guarantee to Tegeta against the risk that Eskom would not make the proposed R1.68 billion pre-payment. It seems that Tegeta did not ever use the guarantee, probably because of the way events turned out.

129. The facts are that Eskom approved the issue of the guarantee against the risk that Eskom defaults on the pre-payment. The contractual framework between Eskom and Tegeta for the issue of the guarantee is yet to be found. The pre-payment was in fact never made although those responsible for the payment of some R700 million to Tegeta in April 2016 claimed that the latter payment was justified by the authorisation in December 2015 to affect a pre-payment of R1.68 billion.

130. The BRPs approved the sale to Tegeta and on 10 December 2015 a written sale of shares and claims agreement was concluded between OCH (OCM's direct holding company), Tegeta, Glencore International AG and Oakbay. On 6 January 2016, the BRPs confirmed the sale of OCH's shares and requested regulatory consent to the transaction from the DME. The conditions in the agreement were fulfilled on 8 April 2016 and the transaction was implemented. On 31 March 2016, the business rescue plan for OCH was published and then approved on 8 April 2016.

131. Mr Essa called Mr Ephron to inform him that Tegeta was short of R600 million to pay the purchase price of R2,15 billion under the sale of shares agreement during the week of 4 April 2016. He asked that Tegeta be allowed to pay the balance of R600 million from the revenue derived by Oakbay from coal sales to Eskom. Glencore declined this request. On 11 April Mr Howa, the Tegeta CEO, repeated that Tegeta was R600 million short. He asked Mr Marsden, one of the BRPs, to approach the banks which funded OCM with the request that these same banks finance the Gupta family's purchase of Glencore's South African coal interests. The banks declined to provide finance.

132. It is thus proven that Minister Zwane, Mr Molefe, Mr Koko and Mr Anoj Singh made themselves complicit in knowingly assisting the Gupta family to acquire the Optimum Mine, and ultimately, all of Glencore's coal interests in South Africa. What has occurred demonstrates an act of state capture. What follows shows that substantial moneys were then misappropriated from Eskom to enable the Guptas to implement the sale of shares agreement.

133. The suggestion that the April 2016 payments to Tegeta constituted pre-payments against coal supplies is untenable. The money was, to the knowledge of all the executive actors concerned, not intended to be used procure coal for delivery to Eskom. Instead, the money was intended to be used, and was used, to pay for the shares in the companies holding Glencore's South African coal interests, which the Gupta family had bought but were financially unwilling or unable to pay in full.

134. The unlawful conduct of Eskom officials is confirmed and aggravated by their behaviour thereafter in swiftly settling the dispute which had so bedevilled relations between Eskom and Glencore for a fraction of the sum for which Eskom had been holding out against Glencore. Although Eskom had strenuously demanded and held out for some R2.1 billion in penalties from Glencore, this claim was settled with Tegeta, the new Gupta-controlled owner of Optimum Mine for R577 million, of which Tegeta only had to pay R255 million on 14 March 2017. Furthermore, although Tegeta was obliged to provide Eskom with a guarantee for amounts which might be owed under the assigned CSA to Eskom, no guarantee of any commercial value was supplied.

135. A central question arises as to how the Gupta family raised the shortfall in the purchase price that they needed to take control of the Optimum Mine. The following explanation shows that they got the monies from Eskom.

136. Mr Snehal Nagar is a chartered accountant, who had been employed by Eskom as a Finance Business Partner: Primary Energy since about 2008. On 12 April 2016, he received an email from Ms Ayanda Nteta, the Head of the Fuel Sourcing, part of Eskom's primary energy division, entitled "As discussed". Mr Nagar could not recall any relevant discussion. Attached to the email was a pro forma invoice for coal dated 12 April 2016, referring to order number 194 and addressed by Tegeta Exploration and Resources (Pty) Ltd (Tegeta) to Eskom, in the sum of R659 558 079,38. Eskom did not customarily make any payments on a pro forma invoice.

137. On 13 April 2016, Mr Nagar received a phone call from Ms Maya Naidoo (formerly Bhana), his line manager at the time. Ms Naidoo told Mr Nagar that payment of the invoice was urgently required by 14h00 that day. She further stated that the invoice had been approved by Eskom's Board Tender Committee (BTC). She told Mr Nagar that Eskom's Treasury and Shared Services Teams were "on board or would be on board" to enable payment. Mr Nagar asked Ms Bhana for the necessary documentation. Mr Nagar had never known of any payment on such an urgent basis.

138. Further to this, on the same day, Mr Nagar received documents via email from Ms Naidoo, which included an extract from the agreement between Eskom and Tegeta regarding coal supply. On the face of it, that agreement had been concluded on the same day, i.e., 13 April 2016. Mr Nagar also received a copy of a resolution of the shareholders of Tegeta pledging its shares to Eskom as security for the pre-payment. The pledge of shares was manifestly worthless, in commercial terms. The email from Ms Naidoo requested payment of the amount mentioned as well as two other Tegeta invoices. She further informed Mr Nagar that the necessary resolution of the BTC would be provided by Ms Susan Daniels from Eskom's Legal Department. Ms Daniels supplied a copy of a resolution of the BTC. The request to Mr Nagar amounted to an instruction.

139. The extract from the BTC minutes held on 11 April 2016 at 21h00 via teleconference was signed by Ms Daniels as the Eskom company secretary and provided approval for the pre-purchase.

140. Procedurally, Eskom's systems require that a purchase request be made and signed by a purchase requester within Eskom. The purchase request would go to the requester's manager and then to the management accountant. Therefore, Eskom's systems necessitated a purchase requisition for the transaction to be created against the contract in question. There was not enough time before the deadline imposed by Ms Naidoo to load this new contract onto their accounting system. The payment was processed against another contract with Tegeta relating to the Koornfontein Mine after Ms Naidoo's signature on the payment control sheet had been obtained. Mr Nagar and his assistant then loaded the correct contract onto their system and amended the transaction details on the system a few days later to reflect the correct position.

141. The BTC resolution was, therefore, designed to approve Eskom's conclusion of short-term contracts with, amongst others, Tegeta, to supply coal to Arnot Power Station and to make pre-payments to secure the supplies. Mr Koko was authorised to give effect to the resolution. Eskom paid Tegeta the amount of R728 281 861.16 in respect of the three invoices.

142. The large amount was presumably a pre-payment. While Eskom had previously made such pre-payments as an investment in the financial stability of the supplier, those had been made in respect of long-term supply contracts only. In comparison, the Tegeta contract was for five months only. The circumstances of the pre-payment to Tegeta were therefore unusual. Nevertheless, Mr Nagar effected the payment on the strength of the invoice, the approval form signed by Ms Naidoo and the supporting contract.

143. One can conclude that the characterisation of the payment as a pre-payment for coal supplies was a sham. The context in which it was made, its timing, and the urgency with which it was processed all demonstrate that the payment was not made with the purpose of furthering the interests of Eskom. It was made with the purpose of ensuring that the Gupta family's deal to acquire the Glencore coal interests did not fall through due to lack of finance on their part. All those Eskom officials who were party to or facilitated the acquisition by bringing pressure to bear on Glencore to dispose of its coal interests to the Guptas and were party to or facilitated payment of this very large sum of monery are prima facie guilty of theft and ought to face criminal charges.

144. Excluded from the roster of Eskom officials who ought potentially to face criminal charges on this count is Mr Nagar who, on the evidence before the Commission, can legitimately claim that he was following what he regarded as lawful instructions.

145. An issue emerged from the affidavits and testimonies of Minister Ramatlhodi and DG Ramontja, of the DME on the one hand, and Dr Ngubane and Mr Molefe on the other. This relates to a meeting held between these four men where the question of Glencore's mining licenses was discussed. The Minister and DG say that Dr Ngubane called the meeting to persuade Minister Ramatlhodi to suspend all Glencore's mining licenses. Dr Ngubane and Mr Molefe, however, said that Minister Ramatlhodi had suspended Glencore's licenses and the purpose of the meeting was to persuade Minister Ramatlhodi to withdraw the suspensions.

146. The background to this issue is that a stoppage was imposed at Glencore's coal mines arising from a dispute over retrenchments. The issue might very well turn on what precisely the official act was that resulted in the stoppage, when the meeting took place and when the stoppage was lifted. Two versions regarding the lifting of the stoppage were presented in evidence: 7 August and 11 November 2015. If the stoppage was lifted before the meeting took place, then the Ramatlhodi version might well be the more probable. If the stoppage was lifted after the meeting, the Ngubane and Molefe version might be more probable.

147. Dr Ngubane's evidence shows that the entire Eskom Board subordinated their fiduciary duties. The Board attacked Mr Tsotsi who, although he displayed weakness and lack of leadership, was similarly doing President Zuma's bidding against his better judgment. The grounds on which they attacked Mr Tsotsi were that he had proposed Mr Linnell to conduct the enquiry without following procurement processes, advocated for the four executives to be suspended or to step aside and had unilaterally nominated the people to act in the place of the four executives after their suspension.

148. However, these grievances do not address the heart of the matter: that the entire Board chose to subordinate their fiduciary duties to the wishes of government officials. It seems likely that the Board chose to make Mr Tsotsi a scapegoat to mask their own contumacious dereliction of duty. It seems likely that some of the Board members actively sought to promote the interests of the Gupta family, rather than those of Eskom. However, the quality of the evidence is such that it is very difficult to say which of the Board members, with the exception of Dr Ngubane, actively worked against Eskom and which just through ineptitude failed to protect Eskom's interests.

149. When Eskom fell into crisis in 2014-2015, it was clear that the elite who controlled the public entity regarded Mr Molefe as an exceptional talent. Mr Molefe, a complex character, must have been aware of the esteem in which he was held. When he testified, his political views on economic matters, which he was eager to divulge publicly, put him sharply in the camp of those who condemn the perceived dominance of so-called white companies (a phrase Mr Molefe used in his evidence) in our economy. There is no reason to doubt his sincerity when he said he believed that Eskom's plight could have been solved, and the country's woes alleviated, by placing Eskom's coal requirements in the hands of numerous small black suppliers. His hostility to President Ramaphosa and to Mr Pravin Gordhan was manifest.

150. However, it seems that Mr Molefe really is, as he believes, a competent executive. His evidence of the improvement of Eskom's fortunes while he was its CEO and thereafter was not disputed. It is hard to believe that a man with so much self-belief was simply, as others were, a mere proxy of the Gupta family. He believes, with some justification, that his career path was not contingent upon anybody's patronage and that his own abilities and reputation had carried him to the heights on which he stood in 2015.

151. Mr Molefe saw Glencore as a malevolent influence on the broader politics of the country and Eskom specifically. Mr Molefe maintains that Glencore funded a press campaign to promote a 'mythical' narrative of state capture to distract attention from the true case of state capture disclosed before the Commission. He quite crudely used the Commission as a public platform to air his views and, possibly to detract from his own involvement in the coordinated action to loot state coffers.

152. It is factually correct to state that Mr Molefe and the Gupta family, specifically Mr Atul Gupta, are friends. He often visited their family home in Saxonwold. It is not necessary to examine the Public Protector's evidence of telephone records, which Mr Molefe claims are inconsequential, to reach this conclusion. We have Mr Molefe's own admission that he and the Gupta family were friends.

153. Considering Mr Molefe's fierce ideological hostility towards Glencore, it is not surprising that he viewed Glencore's predicament with the coal price at which they were supplying the Hendrina power station from the Optimum Mine as Glencore's own fault and not necessarily something which justified an increase in the coal price under the hardship provisions in the Coal Supply Agreement. This hostility potentially clouded his judgement when he concluded that Glencore's "fault" meant that it was not going to be awarded an increase in the pending arbitration. However, it is difficult to believe him when he said that Eskom had contingency plans in place to eliminate adverse consequences flowing from a cessation in supply from the Optimum Mine.

154. Optimum Mine and Hendrina are uniquely connected by a conveyor belt system which moves coal directly from the mine to the power station. If that supply stopped, Eskom would not only have to source new supplies on the open market but would also have to absorb a component of transport costs for every ton of material purchased. Mr Molefe's assertions to the contrary can be dismissed as mere bluster.

155. To further support this conclusion, one only needs to consider the urgent request to approve the pre-purchase of coal from OCM (as controlled by Tegeta) made under the signatures of Mr Singh and Mr Koko, or his representative, in their submission dated 8 December 2015 to the Eskom Board. There, the risks are described as an "erratic display of business instability [which] has compromised the security of supply to the Hendrina Power Station in the short to medium term". Therefore, the risk was serious enough for it to be brought to the attention of the DME. Both Mr Singh and Mr Koko described the prospect of Optimum ceasing to supply coal to Hendrina as having potentially grave consequences for Eskom.

156. As indicated above, Mr Molefe was away from work for medical reasons at this juncture. There is, however, a suggestion that, when he returned to work, he reprimanded those who had authorised the pre-payment to Tegeta or took any steps to deploy the other resources which he had insisted in his evidence justified his heavy-handed approach to the negotiations with Glencore.

157. Upon Mr Molefe joining Eskom in 2015, the Optimum Mine penalty dispute was close to settlement. He proceeded to take immediate steps to end all meaningful settlement negotiations. It can be reasonably concluded that his meetings with Glencore officials were for form alone. He testified, without contradiction, that he had legal advice that he could compel Glencore to continue delivering at the uneconomic R150 per ton. At a purely contractual level this may be correct. However, any commercial lawyer would have told Mr Molefe that OCM could escape any such liability to deliver by recourse to winding up or business rescue.

158. There is no suggestion that Mr Molefe, or anyone at Eskom, warned the Gupta family that they would be subjected to the same inflexible standards imposed on Glencore. Mr Molefe claims that he only learnt of Oakbay's approach to Glencore in November 2015, when negotiations were at an advanced stage.

159. While audacious, it not implausible that Mr Molefe's assertion that Glencore did business with the Gupta family because, strategically, Glencore chose to do business with them rather than anybody else. Its motive, according to Mr Molefe, was to bring the Guptas into Eskom's orbit and, by so doing, infect Eskom with the public opprobrium the alleged "myth" that the state capture narrative would bring. This must be nonsense. Firstly, Mr Molefe himself effectively eliminated Pembani from the contest to acquire OCM. Secondly, because the state capture narrative has been shown by the evidence led before this Commission not to be a myth, but firmly grounded.

160. One cannot conceive that the Gupta family would not have discussed their plans to take over OCM with their friend, Mr Molefe. Firstly, they were friends with common interests. Secondly, and most importantly, any rational basis for the acquisition would be destroyed unless, after they had taken over OCM, Eskom sharply reduced its penalty claim and accepted a sharply increased coal price. That is exactly what happened.

161. Before Tegeta took over OCM, a reduction in coal price materialised. In due course, the penalty all but evaporated. There is insufficient evidence to link Mr Molefe directly with either the payments or the agreed reduction in penalties. However, the point is that the Gupta family could not have risked the substantial funds needed for the acquisition unless they had received the requisite assurances before they committed themselves.

162. This effectively constitutes an act of state capture, despite Mr Molefe's added motive to wrestle control from OCM, whom he saw as proverbial medieval robbers, and place it in the hands of those he believed, at some stage, to have South Africa's interests at heart.

163. This begs the question: Is Mr Molefe guilty of criminal offence? As the law stands, there is doubt that it does. Mr Molefe was not shown to have had any part in the payments of the more than R700 million to Tegeta in the circumstances described. He was not even examined on the question. One can conclude that there is no ground on which Mr Molefe can be held criminally liable for the payments. However, what society can hold him liable for is that he enabled the Gupta family to capture Eskom. In doing so, he disregarded Eskom's interests and advanced those of the said family.

164. There is no direct evidence that Mr Pamensky was appointed to the Eskom Board to serve the interests of the Gupta family. The Gupta "familial" relationships with others can be described as entirely transactional; therefore, the probability that Mr Pamensky was brought into Eskom to provide the Gupta family with inside information is high. There is no evidence to that effect, but it is not improbable that a man with Mr Pamensky's qualifications would be appointed to the Eskom Board unless through powerful influence to get him appointed. He was appointed to the Board in December 2014.

165. The only real evidence that bears upon this topic is the two emails Mr Pamensky wrote to Mr Atul Gupta on 22 November 2015 and 10 December 2015.

166. The first, dated 22 November 2015 is curious: "...[P]lease ensure that a condition precedent [in the agreement] is that the R2bn claim from Eskom is withdrawn or it becomes the seller's problem". It is strange that Mr Pamensky would presume to give his Chairman an instruction related to something that did not concern him. (Mr Pamensky said he had only read about this in the press). Therefore, a central question is why Mr Pamensky would assume that the Gupta family would not have considered the enormous, deal-breaking issue of the penalty claim when they entered their deal. The explanation that this transaction would come up in the investment committee to which Mr Pamensky had been appointed is unconvincing. A discussion about the deal and its parameters within the committee would perhaps have been appropriate; but not an instruction out of the blue by a subordinate to the chairperson. The likely explanation is that Mr Pamensky knew much more about the OCM deal than he would admit.

167. To substantiate this conclusion, is the email dated 10 December 2015, in which Mr Pamensky wrote: "Congratulations (Mazeltov) on a brilliant and well thought out, planned and strategised acquisition of the Optimum Group of companies". Mr Pamensky could not have known that the acquisition had these attributes; unless he had been privy to the machinations by which it was set up and executed.

168. The opinion on Mr Pamensky's character as a witness is torn. It is unclear whether Mr Pamensky was a true insider who falsely portrayed himself at the Commission as a genial, disinterested Director of ORE and Eskom; and an individual anxious to cooperate with the Commission to the best of his ability. Alternatively, he might merely have served as a sycophant, seeking to advance a not very distinguished corporate career by associating himself with people he thought were powerful, well-connected, and shrewd. It is unclear whether he made a strategic decision to distance himself from the Gupta family and portray himself as a victim because he saw that it had all gone wrong. Perhaps there is other evidence which bears upon this question.

The evidence of Minister Lynn Brown

169. Ms Lynne Brown's testimony was characterised by her inability to remember pertinent facts and to pass the decision-making buck to officials in the DPE or to the Eskom Board. If it is true that she left the decision-making to others, it might show that, while she might have been a less than conscientious Minister, she was not captured by the Guptas.

170. When asked about the Board meeting of 11 March 2015, where the plan for an inquiry into Eskom's affairs was mooted, Minister Brown admits that she was in favour of such an inquiry, if it was independent. While the Board members saw her address to the Board as support for the idea that the executives should be suspended, they for their parts concede that Minister Brown did not actually say that the executives should be suspended. One Board member said that Minister Brown implied that Board members should read between the lines. As such, there was a perception that she was advocating for the suspensions. It appears that all concerned in that decision, including Minister Brown, were trying to read between the lines of everyone else's remarks to support the majority position, whatever that turned out to be.

171. However, there is evidence to support the assertion that Minister Brown was complicit in the ploy to replace four executives with Gupta nominees. Before the Board meeting Minister Brown and President Zuma had a telephone discussion on the topic of Eskom. She owed her Ministerial job to President Zuma and a reading of her character revealed she would have wanted to give President Zuma what he wanted and would certainly not have taken any position she understood to be contrary to his wishes. However, the evidence does not go far enough. There is no evidence of the contents of that discussion, and one cannot say it is proved that President Zuma conveyed to Minister Brown his wish that the executives should be suspended. It might have suited President Zuma not to tell her that part of the plan and to leave the implementation of the suspensions to Mr Tsotsi and such other Board members who knew that the suspensions were part of the plan.

172. In short, the evidence does not justify the conclusion that Minister Brown was proven to have expressly advocated for the position that the executives should be suspended. There is no evidence to show that Minister Brown received money which Mr Tony Gupta described as being paid to all those that helped his family. This counts in her favour. However, it is important to note that the Gupta family did not use the influence they undoubtedly had to replace her with another more willing advocate to misuse the position and powers to advance their interests. The mere fact that a captured person was left in his or her position might be adequate reward in certain instances.

173. The decisive factor in determining whether Minister Brown was a conscious agent of state capture is the analysis of her cell phone records.

174. On 12 March 2015, Minister Brown and Mr Howa or Mr Atul Gupta had a conversation for 48 seconds. Minister Brown initiated the call. She suggested that the conversation might have been about a certain breakfast event. This conversation took place on the day after the Eskom executives were suspended. It would have been an extraordinary coincidence if Mr Howa or Mr Atul Gupta discussed a breakfast event with Minister Brown during this crucial phase of the plan to capture Eskom.

175. The evidence of telephone conversations between Minister Brown and the user of the cell phone belonging to Mr Salim Essa, and, therefore, probably between Minister Brown and Mr Essa, is of a different calibre. The evidence of Ms Brown before the Commission was unequivocal: she did not know Mr Salim Essa and had never spoken to him. However, the records show that she had a total of eight telephone conversations with the user of Mr Essa's cell phone, and therefore Mr Essa, totalling more than 23 minutes. Each of these calls was probably initiated by Mr Essa. Furthermore, Mr Essa probably tried to initiate twelve additional calls, but was unsuccessful. The telephone conversations between Minister Brown and Mr Essa are recorded as having taken place during the period 24 November 2014 to 19 March 2015, after which no more attempts were made from Mr Essa's cell phone to contact Minister Brown.

176. In response, Ms Brown, in an affidavit signed 20 July 2021, stated that she did not know Mr Salim Essa and cannot recall the telephone conversations. She does not dispute that she had conversations with Mr Essa. There is not an innocent explanation for the fact that Ms Brown talked on the telephone with Mr Essa while she was Minister of Public Enterprises on eight occasions. These conversations took place during the period that the Gupta family were affecting their ploy to capture Eskom. This necessitated establishing a Board which would not resist the Guptas' capture initiative and removing those officials who might resist the Gupta capture. That was the period during which the cell phone conversations between Minister Brown and Mr Essa took place. Four such conversations took place on 24 November (two conversations within less than half an hour), 29 November and 1 December 2014, when the appointments to the new Board were being made.

177. One can therefore reject Ms Brown's assertion that she cannot remember the conversations. This can be construed as a deliberate untruth. A key question is thus why she would lie about her cell phone conversations with Mr Essa? The only reasonable conclusion is that she was a witting participant in the Guptas' schemes to capture Denel and Eskom.

The evidence of Ms Daniels

178. It is unclear how early Ms Daniels became embroiled in state capture. Undoubtedly, she knowingly advanced the project to capture Eskom. She did so by sending confidential Eskom material to "Business Man" at the email address infoportal1@zoho.com. She abused her position to cause Eskom to pay substantial legal fees for Dr Ngubane, amounting to R806 425.71, relating to a matter which took place well before Dr Ngubane became associated with Eskom and, as such, had no bearing on Eskom's interests. She allowed herself to be used to enable payments to Trillian, which she knew to be legally unjustified. She motivated the appointment of McKinsey and Company, pursuant to a sole source process when she ought to have known that an open competitive process was required. She was party to the approval of a payment by Eskom of R134 million that she knew to be unlawful. She was party to the creation of documents which created the cover for paying Tegeta R700 million ostensibly as pre-payments for coal supplies to Eskom. This was to enable the Guptas to raise the shortfall in their resources which they needed to pay the purchase price on their transaction by which they bought Glencore's South African coal interests

179. It is therefore dangerous to rely on her uncorroborated evidence to make any factual finding, unless such a finding is supported by strong probabilities. One can corroborate Ms Daniels evidence regarding her meeting with Mr Koko and Mr Essa at Melrose Arch in March 2015. Two impressive witnesses, Ms. Dlamini and Mr Masango support this, and in turn, these two witnesses are supported by other credible witnesses.

180. Professor Louwrens, an IT expert, analysed metadata associated with the pre-suspension letters sent to the four suspended executives. Professor Louwrens' evidence demonstrates that Ms Suzanne Daniels and Mr Salim Essa worked on these letters. While it is possible that some malicious person altered the metadata to reflect these names, it is a small probability. One can therefore conclude that Ms Daniels probably drafted the letters. It was her function to do so and the metadata records that she was the creator of all four letters. It is probable that Mr Essa worked on the documents created by Ms Daniels.

181. Thus, one can conclude that Ms Daniels allowed herself to be enlisted in the Gupta family ploy to capture Eskom.

The evidence of Mr Koko

182. Mr Koko was exceptionally argumentative, verbose, and repetitive. He used the Commission as a platform to air his grievances against the media. He repeatedly insinuated that Glencore was in league with President Ramaphosa to advance their interests to the detriment of Eskom and South Africa. He continually attacked persons and institutions critical of him. He regarded the opportunity given to him to testify as a proverbial duel between himself and the evidence leader.

183. There are established considerations that can be used to judge Mr Koko's evidence. Firstly, at the conclusion of the Durban meeting attended by, amongst others, President Zuma, and Ms Myeni, they had accepted the strategy of the proposed enquiry into the affairs of Eskom and the immediate suspension of Eskom executives. Secondly, between 9 and 10 March 2015 Mr Koko called Ms Dlamini, Mr Masango and Ms Daniels individually to a meeting at Melrose Arch with the purpose to meet Mr Essa at his offices there. They were required to hand over their cell phones. In the presence of Mr Koko, the inquiry into the affairs of Eskom and the suspension of four Eskom executives was disclosed to the attendees. Ms Dlamini and Mr Masango were each asked if they would take up an acting appointment in the place of one of the persons to be suspended. Ms Daniels was asked about the procedure for suspending executives at Eskom. Mr Koko denied that there were any such meetings with Mr Essa, or about the forthcoming suspensions. As there are three witnesses to the Melrose Arch meetings, one cannot believe Mr Koko's testimony.

184. It is important to establish whether Mr Koko received a reward for his actions in advancing the Gupta family's ploy. Between December 2015 and January 2016, Mr Koko and his family travelled abroad, first to Bali, Indonesia, and then at least some of his family went to Dubai before returning to South Africa. However, the documentation in this regard is equivocal. It seems as if Mr Essa was at pains to create a paper trail linking Mr Koko's travel financially to Sahara, a Gupta business.

185. What is not of concern is whether Mr Koko and his family travelled; rather it is whether the Gupta family and Mr Essa paid for Mr Koko and his family's travel. Mr Koko produced evidence that he and his family paid for their travel. The evidence in this regard was contained in an email dated 3 March 2021 from Vanessa De Stefano of Thompsons t/a The Travel House to Khomotso Koko in which she recorded having received two payments from FNB from someone on behalf of Mr or Mrs Koko for R113 000 on 17 November (2015) and R270 800 on 25 November (2015). It is an extraordinary coincidence that Mr Koko could take his whole family overseas after being so helpful to the Gupta family. The air tickets alone cost over R300 000. However, the evidence does not justify the conclusion that the Gupta family paid for the tickets or indeed for any part of the excursion.

186. One may allege that the apparent duplication of payments is evidence of money laundering. However, it is not established that Mr Koko was a conscious party to any such criminal conduct.

187. One also needs to consider the evidence of the emails linked to the infoportal1@zoho.com email address. It is established that Mr Essa used this email under the alias he gave himself or used, namely "Business Man", Businessman, business man, or businessman. The username is user generated and may be changed by the user at will. A correspondent writing to infoportal1@zoho.com could on his or her system choose to link any display name chosen to this or any other email address. This is so well known that I think the Commission can take "judicial" notice of it.

188. However, it was not established whether Mr Essa was the only person who used this email address. Any person who knew the email password in the server to which it was associated could open an email account on his or her own device using the email address infoportal1@zoho.com and assign his or her own username to the account. That account could as easily be “Business Man” as any other username. What is certain, however, is that the address was not used by Dr Ngubane, Ms Daniels, or DG Seleke.

189. Mr Koko maintained that Ms Daniels deceived him into believing that when he wrote to “Business Man” at the email address infoportal1@zoho.com, he was, in fact, writing to Dr Ngubane. Considering Mr Koko’s proven participation in the ploy to oust the four executives, one cannot believe Mr Koko’s evidence in this regard. Mr Koko, consistent with his decision to become a Gupta agent, was feeding Mr Essa with information to enable the Gupta family to advantageously position themselves in relation to Eskom’s affairs in general, and, specifically, to take over of Glencore’s coal interests. Email evidence demonstrates this.

190. Mr Koko’s participation in the ploy to capture Eskom through removing four executives and installing Molefe and Mr Singh is, however, different. Mr Koko might have seen this scheming as a campaign in which he enlisted the Gupta family rather than the other way around. But in that regard, one can conclude that Mr Koko has been proved to have been complicit in the capture of Eskom by the Guptas.

191. Mr Koko denied ever having telephonic communication with Mr Essa or any of the Gupta brothers. The Commission obtained records as evidence of calls passed between cell phones used by Mr Koko and his wife, on the one hand, and Mr Essa and Mr Atul Gupta, on the other hand. This evidence was put to Mr Koko in a directive issued in terms of Reg 6 (10) of the Regulations of the Commission. In response to this, on 28 July 2021 Mr Koko, in an affidavit, repeated his denial of any telephonic communication with Mr Essa or any of the Gupta brothers and added: “The same applies to my wife”. Between 30 March 2015 and 16 May 2016 there were calls between Mr Koko’s and Mr Essa’s cell phones.

192. Mr Koko’s 6th affidavit signed on 27 July 2021 repeats old evidence, but also presents new information. It is exceptionally argumentative and difficult to summarise:

    192.1 Mr Koko alleges that President Ramaphosa exerted pressure on the Eskom Board and was captured by third parties.

    192.2 Furthermore, he denies the Gupta family’s or their associates capture of Eskom. Mr Koko states that he was unaware of anything in relation to state capture at Eskom. He maintains that he acted in the best interests of Eskom, referencing five instances where he refused to agree to arrangements that might have been in the Guptas’ interests.

193. Mr Koko pointed to the draft suspension letters created by Ms Daniels on 10 March 2015 and saved by Mr Essa on the same day. He denies any involvement in the suspension letters but cannot explain how one of the predecessors to the suspension documents, relating to the Sekhasimbe suspension, was found on his computer. No conclusions adverse to the witness were drawn from this evidence.

194. He further asserts that Mr Linnell’s evidence contradicts the “narrative" of conspiracy to suspend four executives. This is because Mr Koko was “central to Mr Tsotsi’s thinking regarding who had to be suspended”. Furthermore, Mr Matona and Mr Marokane “were suspended for their association with [Mr Koko]”. However, Mr Tsotsi merely implemented an instruction from President Zuma as to who had to be suspended.

195. Mr Koko devoted considerable time and energy to making the case that Glencore received preferential treatment as a coal supplier to Eskom. He attempted to cast doubt on Mr Ephron’s version that Glencore had only publicly available information regarding the OCM CSA with Eskom. He produces no evidence in support of that argument, merely asserting that Mr Ephron’s version is so highly improbable that it must be false.

196. Mr Koko further argues that Eskom legitimately refused to settle with Glencore in relation to the penalty and coal price increase issues. It is not possible to determine to what extent, if at all, Eskom was justified in its decision not to settle with Glencore. What is clear is that the decision to hold out for the full penalty and to refuse any coal price increase was not adhered to once the Guptas, through Tegeta, took control of the Optimum Mine.

197. Mr JA Bester, who was involved in the Glencore negotiations as an Eskom representative, contradicts much of what Mr Koko says in relation to Glencore's alleged preferential treatment received. It is futile to analyse their points of disagreement.

The evidence of Mr Anoj Singh

198. Between 2014 and 2017, Mr Singh appears to have travelled to Dubai, often with his partner, now wife, Ms Naik on seven occasions. One of these trips, he said, was on official business for Transnet, and as such the public entity paid. The others were private trips, all booked through Travel Excellence. In each case, Travel Excellence charged the ticket to the account of Mr Essa and the fee due was thereafter paid in cash. It is accepted that one of the journeys was made on behalf of Transnet. The issue was whether Mr Singh paid for the other tickets booked for him from his own funds.

199. Mr Singh admitted that he, and occasionally Ms Naik, were beneficiaries of the other tickets booked. He stated, however, that he did not know why the tickets were charged to Mr Essa's account. He said he always paid for these tickets in cash or in some other electronic form. He could not produce any records to substantiate his version. He claimed that he no longer had access to his accounts because of SARS interventions. This is an inadequate excuse for not producing proof. He could easily have brought the records to the Commission under subpoena, but his legal representative, so vociferous in other aspects, was curiously supine in this regard.

200. Questions of affordability of these trips, given Mr Singh is an employee in the public sector is crucial. This is especially so, as Mr Singh had paid cash for these trips, there needs to be a record of where this cash came from. Mr Singh was not examined on these questions. Furthermore, why were the tickets charged to the account of Mr Essa unless Mr Essa was to be responsible for the payments?

201. There is sufficient evidence to conclude, on the balance of probabilities, that Mr Essa funded the tickets. If that is so, then the tickets must have featured as rewards for services rendered, i.e., for promoting the Gupta family's interests in relation to Transnet and Eskom.

202. The April 2016 payments of R700 million is a cause of concern. One cannot accept that these were pre-payments for coal to be delivered. Once it is accepted that Messrs Molefe, Koko, and Singh were Gupta agents, prepared to do the Guptas' bidding when called to, then the possibility that any of them did not know that the money was required to complete the purchase of shares transaction is small. There is no suggestion that any of them was misled as to the true purpose for which the money was needed.

203. One can therefore only conclude that Mr Singh was guilty of the theft of this money from Eskom by false pretences. He led Eskom, through the officials who processed the payments, to believe that the payments were pre-payments for coal, when in fact they were needed to enable the Guptas to complete and save the share transaction.

The evidence of Mr Zwane

204. Many emails submitted as evidence demonstrate that Mr Zwane had an improper relationship with the Gupta family. One can only infer that that he was an agent in their state capture schemes. The broad difficulty with this evidence is that while inferences may be drawn from the content of emails, there is little or no direct evidence of Mr Zwane's improper involvement in their schemes. For example, regarding the inference properly arising from an email that Mr Zwane attended a Gupta wedding in December 2013, Mr Zwane denied that he attended any Gupta wedding. The emails in that regard certainly show that the Gupta family invited and wanted Mr Zwane to attend the wedding. But they do not show that Mr Zwane attended the wedding, and no witness came forward to say that Mr Zwane was in fact there.

205. Mr Zwane invited Mr Yadav, a minister in the government of Uttar Pradesh, to visit South Africa in March 2013. The invitation was extended after the South African Minister of Defence did not authorise an aircraft bringing guests to the Gupta wedding from India to land at the Waterkloof Air force Base. Through untoward dealings, the Gupta family received permission from the Chief of State Protocol, Mr Koloane, for the aircraft to land at the base. Mr Yadav was apparently a Sun City wedding guest. The suggestion is that the presence of this personage and perhaps other Indian officials on the flight was part of the ploy to get the flight landed at Waterkloof Air Base.

206. As demonstrated through an email exchange on 11 March 2015 between two employees of Sahara Computers, the letter of invitation to Mr Yadav was settled by Sahara Computer officials. This letter was sent to Mr Zwane for reproduction on his official letterhead and sent to Mr Yadav. The difficulty is that two drafts of the letter of invitation were presented with this evidence, one dated 8th and the other dated 11th March 2015. There is no evidence identifying the letter that was sent by Mr Zwane. If Mr Zwane's letter predated 11 March 2015, then the force of this contention will be much diminished.

207. Email evidence also shows that Mr Zwane travelled to Dubai and Delhi in September 2014, and that Sahara Computers arranged and paid for this trip. An itinerary was put to Mr Zwane showing that his tickets were booked for the same trip as undertaken by Mr Tony Gupta, Mr Essa, and Mr Rajesh Gupta. Mr Zwane said that he did not remember seeing Mr Tony Gupta on the flight. All these people followed the same itinerary, from Dubai to India to Dubai to Zurich to Dubai to South Africa.

208. Some context is also needed regarding the purpose of Mr Zwane's travels to Zurich, Switzerland in December of 2015.

209. On 1 August 2015, a businessman, Mr Oupa Mokoena of Koena Consulting and Property Developers, emailed Mr Tony Gupta the CV of Mr Zwane. Tony Gupta forwarded the email, with the attached CV, to Mr Duduzane Zuma. Mr Zwane was sworn in as a member of the National Assembly on 2 September 2015. Although he had virtually no experience in national government and none in mining affairs, President Zuma appointed Mr Zwane as Minister of Mineral Resources on 22 September 2015. Given Mr Zwane's proven track record of receiving largesse from the Gupta family, the inferences are irresistible that the Gupta family persuaded President Zuma to appoint Mr Zwane to this ministerial portfolio. It must have been clear to Mr Zwane that he was required to use this influential portfolio to help the Gupta family capture Glencore's coal interests.

210. The choice of his advisors further reinforces this. Mr Zwane appointed Mr K Moodley and Mr M Mabaso, both with proven business links to the Gupta family, but with little or no qualification to serve as advisors to the Minister of Mineral Affairs.

211. It is important to remember that in this context a proven technique the Gupta family uses is to have highly placed public and government officials on hand when seeking to enlist support for their schemes, and so that they can demonstrate their power and reach. This is evident in that Mr Tony Gupta often brought Mr Duduzane Zuma to meetings with third parties, even though Mr Duduzane Zuma did not contribute much value to these meetings.

212. One can thus conclude that the evidence proves that Mr Zwane improperly promoted Gupta interests while he was an MEC in the Free State and as Minister of Mineral Affairs was a willing and conscious participant in the Guptas' capture of Eskom.

BRAKFONTEIN COLLIERY

213. On 10 March 2015, Eskom concluded a Coal Supply Agreement with Tegeta for the supply 13,950,000 tons of a blend coal, from Tegeta's Brakfontein Colliery (the Brakfontein Colliery). The agreed contract price was R3.7 billion for a ten year period (1 April 2015 – 30 September 2025). Of relevance is the fact that the mine was owned by Tegeta, a Gupta-owned entity, whose directors were, amongst others, Ms Ragavan, Mr Ravindra Nath and Mr Ashu Chawla.

214. From around 2011, Tegeta (and its predecessor, Idwala Coal Crypts [Pty] Ltd) approached Eskom several times to get coal supply contracts; first from their Vierfontein Colliery (Vierfontein) and later from their Brakfontein Colliery. According to Mr Johann Bester, the then General Manager for Fuel

Sourcing within the Primary Energy Division (PED) at Eskom, Vierfontein was considered an unsuitable supplier due to environmental compliance issues. Furthermore, Eskom's coal procurement team were wary of how they dealt with Tegeta. This was because they were aware the company was linked to the Guptas, and there was political pressure to engage with them that "may have come from above."

215. Around 2012 initial approaches were made to Eskom to contract for coal from the Brakfontein mine. However, Tegeta's name was not used, but rather entities using the names "Goldridge", "Arctos" and "Idwala Crypts". Mr Johann Bester termed these entities as "frontmen". Eskom was unable to continue negotiations with Brakfontein, due to non-compliance with water licence requirements. However, on 22 December 2014 a water use licence was signed off for Brakfontein.

Internal pressure on Eskom officials

216. In March 2014, Mr Johann Bester was required to urgently call the entire Primary Energy Division (PED) team together to meet the then Eskom Board Chairman, Mr Tsotsi. This was in spite of some of his team members being located across Mpumalanga which meant that they would struggle to get there that day. Mr Tsotsi apparently berated the team for 20 minutes, complaining about two issues: (1) they were frustrating black-owned transporters and putting Eskom at risk, and (2) they were frustrating emerging miners.

217. Mr Bester testified that, when they exited the meeting, the then Head of PED, Ms Kiren Maharaj, informed him that there was a lot of toxicity amongst the Executive team at that stage and that they had to be very careful. Mr Bester mentioned that Ms Maharaj was very principled and would not soften her demands for coal transport cost savings, which made for many enemies. She would later be pushed out of Eskom, with none other than Mr Koko as the driving force behind her forced exit.

218. Mr Bester stated that Ms Daniels informed him that Mr Tsotsi was unhappy with the progress on the Coal Supply Agreement for Tegeta / Brakfontein as well as the cost savings that Ms Maharaj wanted to secure on coal road truck transporting. Mr Bester described that he and his colleagues were "gobsmacked as to the complete lack of respect for proper protocol" and that it was abnormal for a chair to address staff directly.

219. Mr Koko testified that Ms Daniels also came to him and said that the contract that Mr Tsotsi told staff they were delaying was the Tegeta-Brakfontein contract. Mr Bester recalled that, when Mr Vusi Mboweni took over as Acting Head of PED, he attempted to interfere with the progress of technical teams in coal sampling and site visits. Mr Bester had counselled him that the teams should be allowed to do their job and was concerned about the impact of applying such pressure on them.

Eskom's Primary Energy Division

220. Critical responsibilities of Eskom's PED include, inter alia, coal sourcing which falls under the Coal Operations division (Coal Operations). Within Coal Operations there is a division known as Fuel Sourcing, which is responsible for coal procurement. Once coal has been procured and the contracts signed, the said contracts are handed over to Coal Operations for management.

221. Coal Operations is responsible for managing coal contracts. By way of example, Coal Operations ensures that the coal procured and delivered at the relevant power stations meets the specifications for the said power stations as per the coal contracts signed between Eskom and the service providers. PED was then a division of Group Technology and Commercial, headed by Mr Koko from 2014.

222. In 2011, Ms Maharaj was appointed the Divisional Executive of PED. Following her suspension in July 2014, Mr Koko asked Mr Mboweni, then Senior General Manager: PED, to act in her position. Mr Matjila, the then-acting Group CEO telephoned Mr Mboweni with the same request Mr Mboweni accepted, effective 07 August 2014.

Tegeta's offer and negotiations with Eskom in 2014

223. Following numerous failed attempts 2012 to secure coal supply contracts, Tegeta approached Eskom in 2014 with an unsolicited offer to supply coal. Various meetings ensued between Eskom's officials and representatives of Tegeta, in the name of Goldridge Trading (Pty) Ltd, who had advised that Goldridge was the owner of the Brakfontein mine through Tegeta. Tegeta later explained that Goldridge was not the owner of the mine, but a contractor at Brakfontein.

224. About six meetings were convened between May 2014 and January 2015 before concluding the Coal Supply Agreement on 10 March 2015.

225. Dr Ayanda Nteta chaired the meetings on behalf of Eskom that took place in 2014. She was accompanied by various Eskom officials at each meeting. Mr Nath and Mr Satish Mudaliar represented Goldridge / Tegeta. These meetings focused principally on the evaluation and assessment of Tegeta's documentation relating to its unsolicited offer to supply coal to Eskom in order to determine what Tegeta's coal service entailed and whether it was aligned with Eskom's coal quality and quantity. The 2014 negotiations led to a formal offer letter from Tegeta, submitted to Dr Nteta, on 23 September 2014. The 2014 meetings and negotiations, including the formal offer Tegeta made in September 2014 (which is more fully considered below), all took place in circumstances where the Eskom officials were failing to comply with Eskom's policies.

Procedural flaws

226. The procurement of the coal supply from Brakfontein Colliery was secured by means of an unsolicited offer outside of a competitive tender process. This process, although permissible in terms of the Eskom Procurement and Supply Management Procedure: 32-1034 (the procurement procedure), had to comply with clause 3.4.5.8 of the Procurement Procedure which required unsolicited offers to be referred to the Supplier Development and Localisation (SDL) Department for supplier pre-qualification and registration. Only once evaluated and pre-qualified would the supplier be given a vendor number confirming registration on the Eskom supplier database allowing it to be considered for any future tenders/enquiries.

227. Further, the procurement procedure enjoined Eskom employees approached with an unsolicited offer to immediately refer the supplier to the SDL Department within the Group Commercial Division to engage in this registration process without further representation, engagement or commitment.

228. Dr Nteta and team did not comply with these Eskom policy requirements were as she and her team failed to refer Tegeta's unsolicited offer to the SDL Department for supplier pre-qualification and supplier registration, without making any further representation, engagement or commitment to Tegeta. Dr Nteta and her team engaged Tegeta, ultimately committing Eskom to Tegeta's unsolicited offer with referral for pre-qualification and registration.

229. Eskom officials asserted that the Tegeta offer was negotiated and accepted pursuant to a mandate to negotiate and conclude contracts on a medium-term basis for the supply and delivery of coal to various Eskom power stations for the period October 2008 to March 2018, dated 11 September 2008 (2008 Medium Term Mandate), as well as the Board Tender Committee decision on 03 December 2010 to extend and expand that mandate to contract for the life of the mine, extend current contracts and confer powers on the Divisional Executive, PED, with powers to sub-delegate and to execute the Board Tender Committee decision (2010 Medium Term Mandate Extension).

230. In terms of the above position, Eskom introduced a "medium-term mandate" in 2008 that allowed coal to be procured until 2018 on a one-to-one basis, as opposed to an open tender process. In 2010 the term was extended to apply to the remaining life of the mine, in certain cases. The Board Tender Committee essentially gave upfront approval to do this after there were coal shortages in 2008 that contributed to load-shedding. This apparently led to blanket emergency procurement provisions being instituted.

231. The Mid-Term Coal Supply Strategy and the 2010 Medium Term Mandate Extension specified Contracting Principles and Standards for the negotiating teams and coal supply agreements and standards for the processing of contracts in the areas of, inter alia, legislative compliance, coal quantities, coal qualities, price and contract price adjustments. In terms of these principles, Eskom was precluded from contracting with suppliers who did not operate legally. Suppliers were required to give warranties that they had sufficient coal reserves to meet contractual quantities. A supplier's stockpiles needed to be pre-certified and its coal had to comply with the coal quality requirements specific to the power station. Suppliers had to commit to Eskom's Coal Quality Management Procedure (CQMP) and Eskom had the right to monitor and audit compliance with the CQMP on a monthly basis. An Eskom-appointed independent laboratory would do an analysis of the contractual samples.

232. During the negotiations, the Eskom officials raised concerns regarding Tegeta's mining activities taking place in close proximity to a stream that was a sensitive environmental area. Eskom officials requested Tegeta to provide an authorisation from the relevant authorities allowing mining to take place through a wetland and diversion of a stream. Tegeta acknowledged that mining was taking place very close to a stream and that it had been fined for contravening environmental regulations. However, Tegeta subsequently sought to change this position by explaining that the mine referred to was Vierfontein and not Brakfontein.

233. Eskom engaged Tegeta until 22 December 2014 on their proposal and subsequent written offer in September 2014. At this time, Tegeta did not have a water use licence and could therefore not conduct mining activities. The Department of Water and Sanitation determined that Tegeta had failed to comply with certain conditions of their water license after the Water Use License was issued. When Eskom requested a recently mined sample for quality testing, Tegeta officials explained that the mining was suspended to sell the existing stockpile before recommencing any mining. Its explanation for the suspension of mining was questionable.

234. The size of Tegeta's stockpile was estimated at 70,000 to 75,000 tons. Eskom officials expressed concern with Tegeta's coal quality throughout the negotiations. Eskom required the supply of a total quantity of 65,000 tons of a blend of Seam 4 Lower (S4L) and Seam 4 Upper (S4U) coal for its Majuba Power Station. Eskom's chemical test results of Tegeta's coal samples showed that both S4U and the blended product (of S4U and S4L) did not meet specifications. Only S4L was compliant, but for other Eskom power stations and only marginally for the Majuba Power Station. However, if only S4L could be used, the resource estimate was insufficient to sustain the quantity required for the Majuba Power Station over the life of the contract.

235. Despite the above issues, Eskom officials negotiated a price with Tegeta for both S4L and the blended product, even though the blended product was not suitable for Eskom's Majuba Power Station. Tegeta had initially requested R17 per Gigajoule (GJ) for S4L and R15/GJ for the blended product, which Mr Bester regarded as too high when compared to other coal suppliers for similar specification coal. Tegeta's revised offer was R13.50/GJ on a five-year contract, supplying 65 000 tons per month from Brakfontein. This revised offer was made at the meeting of 30 January 2015 to which Eskom agreed, with a proposed start date of 01 April 2015, but subject to a successful combustion test. Tegeta never passed the test.

236. The final conclusion of the agreement was on 10 March 2015, with different terms regarding contract price, contract duration and coal quantity.

Tegeta's first written offer to Eskom

237. On 23 September 2014 Tegeta submitted what it called a commercial offer to Eskom, by email from Mr Mudaliar to Dr Nteta (also referred to by her previous surname "Ntshanga"). This offer followed the meeting held on the same day, 23 September 2014, and was in a letter signed by Mr Nath.

238. During October 2014 Tegeta made a last-ditch attempt to have S4U coal samples accepted by Eskom. The alleged new samples still failed the chemical analysis test. On 06 November 2014 Mr Nath sent an email to Dr Nteta in which he inquired if Eskom had finalised reviewing the master Coal Supply Agreement. Dr Nteta replied the next day, on 07 November 2014, providing Tegeta with a template of a Coal Supply Agreement for its input, and explaining that the provision of the template did not in any way create an obligation on Eskom's part to purchase the coal from Tegeta, either then or in the future. Dr Nteta maintained this position before the Commission and explained that she provided the template to Tegeta "so that they could familiarise themselves with it as new suppliers to Eskom". However, Ms Daniels said that it was irregular for Eskom to provide an editable version of the template to a supplier for input. Ms Daniels said that a Coal Supply Agreement could be shared only after it had been finalised and in a PDF format.

239. Mr Bester explained that the Brakfontein contract was a relatively small medium-term contract of 10 years or less. He said that ordinarily, the managers themselves would be able to conclude negotiations for such a contract but in this case the negotiations apparently proved difficult and protracted. This apparently moved Mr Mboweni to instruct Mr Bester to intervene and conclude the negotiations with Tegeta by the end of the week ending 30 January 2015, the previous negotiations meeting having taken place on 23 January 2015.

240. Dr Nteta arranged for Mr Bester to meet with Mr Nath on Friday 30 January 2015. The meeting was convened at Eskom. Mr Bester said that he found it unusual for PED to meet suppliers in the Executive Suite when there was no Eskom executive involved. This suggested to him that "Tegeta was clearly getting special treatment" and that "the stakes were high". Mr Mboweni had told Mr Bester not to agree to a price higher than R15 a GJ; and in the meeting Mr Bester offered the Tegeta representatives R12.50 a GJ. In response to Mr Bester's offer, Mr Nath and his team excused themselves from the meeting to make a call to Tegeta's board of directors to obtain a mandate to adjust their initial coal price of R17.00 p/GJ. Mr Bester went back to his office.

241. Before the meeting could reconvene, Dr Nteta informed Mr Bester that there had been "a lot of shouting" at the Executive Suite between senior Eskom management, and that "people were very upset". At resumption of the meeting, Tegeta made a counter-offer of R13.50 per GJ, which Mr Bester accepted, for a five-year contract to commence on 01 April 2015.The conditions included BEE compliance, compliance with technical coal requirements and a combustion test, compliance with all Eskom policy and procedures (including Vendor registration) and Eskom having a right of first refusal to additional coal from Tegeta's adjacent property (called Brakfontein Extension Colliery) that was still being developed. All this was confirmed in Mr Bester's letter to Mr Nath dated 12 February 2015.

Tegeta's increased offer

242. Email exchanges between Mr Nath and Mr Rajesh "Tony" Gupta show that they were not happy with Eskom's stance in refusing to commit to a 10-year contract and responded by email dated 13 February 2015, addressed to Dr Nteta. In the said email, Mr Nath made certain statements and proposals to have the offer amended. He explained that Tegeta required a 10 year contract in order to satisfy its funders, as Tegeta's loan period was going to be for more than seven years; that Tegeta would in the initial five years of the Coal Supply Agreement supply 65,000 tons from Brakfontein Colliery and in the remaining five years, supply coal from Brakfontein Extension Colliery. He proposed, inter alia, the following changes to Mr Johann Bester's offer of 12 February 2015, which were all later accepted by Eskom:

    242.1 Changing the Coal Supply Agreement term from 5 years to 10 years (clause 10.4 of the Coal Supply Agreement).

    242.2 Supplying coal from both the Brakfontein Colliery and Brakfontein Extension Colliery (clause 2.1.37 of the Coal Supply Agreement).

    242.3 Keeping the coal quantity at 65 000 tons p/m from April 2015 to September 2015 but increasing it to 100 000 tons p/m from October 2015 to September 2020, when the Brakfontein Extension became operational. Eskom increased the quantity to 113 000 tons p/m (clause 10.4 of the Coal Supply Agreement); and requirements and confirmation that Brakfontein Extension could produce saleable tons prior to the contract being extended to 10 years (under clause 14 of the Coal Supply Agreement).

    242.4 Deleting one of the conditions in Mr Bester's letter requiring compliance with Eskom's technical

242.5 Mr Bester relented and agreed to all the changes proposed by Tegeta and, in fact, offered more.

243. On 10 March 2015, Mr Mboweni signed the Coal Supply Agreement on behalf of Eskom and Mr Nath signed it on behalf of Tegeta.

244. Mr Bester testified that Eskom's coal supply agreements were long and complex, and that normally he would not expect a new counterparty to sign within three months because they were not experienced with the contracts. Mr Johann Bester believed that the pressure on Mr Mboweni was coming "from above".

245. The Coal Supply Agreement was thus concluded despite the following:

245.1 No financial assessment had yet been done on Tegeta when the contract was signed on 10 March 2015. In fact, KPMG compiled a financial assessment just a month later in April 2015, which stated that Tegeta: "is not relatively sound enough financially to be awarded a contract of R4.3 billion for the supply of coal to Majuba Power Station over a period of ten years". Mr Mashigo, former Acting Head of PED, confirmed that the assessment should have been done beforehand, and had that been done, the contract would "definitely not" have been entered into. It is notable that Tegeta did indeed stop supplying coal to Eskom in February 2018, as it was placed under business rescue, only three years into the 10-year contract.

245.2 In addition, the mining right for Brakfontein (not the extension) was due to expire in October 2020, well before the expiry date of the 10-year contract, that is, 31 March 2025.

245.3 The mining right for the Brakfontein Extension Colliery was valid from March 2014 to March 2024, but was not yet being mined at that time nor was the coal tested to establish what kind of coal quality Eskom would receive and whether it was suitable for Eskom's Majuba Power Station.

245.4 The Brakfontein coal had previously been subjected to technical tests and failed these initial tests, save for the S4L coal, which was found to be suitable for use only at certain power stations.

246. Mr Bester observed that the date when the Coal Supply Agreement was signed, 10 March 2015, was the day before four Eskom senior executives were suspended.

Brakfontein coal still fails the test

247. The Coal Supply Agreement was subject to a condition that Tegeta conduct a successful combustion test by 16:00 on 31 March 2015. However, this was not done, and it appears that no one at Eskom checked this, including Mr Bester, who stated in his affidavit that he and Eskom Legal had incorporated conditions into the Coal Supply Agreement in order to protect the entity. He resigned from Eskom on 20 July 2015, the day when Mr Koko returned from suspension.

248. Clause 10.2.1 of the Coal Supply Agreement specifically required Tegeta to have completed and reported a successful combustion test by not later than 31 March 2015, failing which the remaining provisions of the Coal Supply Agreement would never become effective. The net result is that, in the absence of compliance by Tegeta (or waiver by Eskom, for which there is no evidence that Eskom did exercise), the Coal Supply Agreement never came into effect.

249. Mr Gert Opperman explained during his evidence that the usual approach was for a combustion test to be done before signing a coal supply agreement to check that the coal was of a suitable quality for the power station intended to be contracted for. It is unusual, he said, to put a condition precedent in a contract that by a certain date and time such a test needs to have been done. The test had to be done prior to signing of a coal supply agreement in order to determine the suitability of the coal prior to the conclusion of the agreement. All the due diligence that needed to be done in order to sign a new contract with a mine is the responsibility of the Fuel Sourcing team in PED. Only once the contract is signed and ready for implementation, does it get handed over to the contract management team.

250. Eskom's failures did not end there. Eskom also failed to enforce a clause marked 22.10 (immediately under clause 23) of the Coal Supply Agreement. This clause required drainage tests to be conducted by not later than 30 days after the first Delivery of Contract Coal. This was important to determine the Equilibrium Moisture content of coal and the stockpile drainage period required for coal to attain such Equilibrium Moisture. The first delivery of coal from Brakfontein was on 07 April 2015. The minutes of the monthly technical liaison meeting dated 13 May 2015 show that a date for drainage tests still needed to be scheduled. This meant that Eskom and Tegeta had failed to conduct drainage tests within 30 days after first delivery of coal. Mr Mashigo confirmed in his affidavit that the test was abandoned after inconclusive results.

251. Eskom failed to enforce clause 22.2 of the Coal Supply Agreement, which required the supplier to have acceptable auto-mechanical sampling equipment for the purposes of sampling and analysing coal to determine its quality. The auto-mechanical sampling equipment was not available for a period of more than 12 months from 1 April 2015. The minutes of the monthly technical liaison meeting dated 10 February 2016 confirm this non-compliance.

252. Eskom failed to strictly enforce clause 14 of the Coal Supply Agreement, which required that "Contract Coal to be supplied from both Brakfontein and Brakfontein Colliery Extension must at all times comply with Eskom's technical and coal supply agreements." The clause provided further that "if these requirements do not render compliance for supply to Majuba Power Station, Eskom reserves the sole and exclusive right to call upon a material breach, as provided for in this Agreement." Despite delivery of non-compliant coal by Tegeta, Eskom failed to exercise this right.

253. Eskom continued, after the conclusion of the Coal Supply Agreement, to conduct coal analysis and combustion tests in respect of the blended coal samples that Tegeta proposed to supply to Eskom. This was after various coal analysis results, in June 2014 and October 2014, in respect of the same blended coal samples, had indicated that the blended coal was not suitable for Majuba Power Station. Presumably, Eskom wanted to find justification for concluding the Coal Supply Agreement in respect of the non-compliant blend product. 41. Two technical tests were conducted, and the results recorded in two reports, one dated 12 March 2015 and the other April 2015. The March report concluded that sending a mixed Brakfontein S4U/S4L blend to, inter alia, Majuba Power Station was not recommended, as there was a high probability that the mix would frequently exceed Majuba rejection specifications. The April report also recommended that only S4L be sent to Majuba Power Station and not the S4U.

254. The above demonstrates that Eskom, acting in patent breach of the Coal Supply Agreement, allowed Tegeta to make deliveries of blend coal without prior confirmation that the coal was compliant with Eskom's quality specifications. The full combustion test that would have determined the quality of the coal and its suitability to the Majuba Power Station was not done, as required by clause 10.2 of the Coal Supply Agreement and was ultimately removed as a condition of the contract. On 20 April 2015 Mr Gert Opperman took over as the contract manager for the Brakfontein supply to Majuba Power Station.

Removal of combustion test requirement

255. Just a little over a month after the Coal Supply Agreement came into effect, Eskom and Tegeta agreed to amend the coal quality specifications in the Coal Supply Agreement and effected the amendment by way of a First Addendum to the Coal Supply Agreement. The agreement was reached in a letter signed by Mr Bester on 12 May 2015. A comparison of this letter with Mr Bester's letter of 12 February 2015, reveals that a clause requiring "full combustion tests to be conducted on all proposed coal prior to delivery and acceptance by Eskom" was omitted from his letter of 12 May 2015. The clause had been included in the original contract using double asterisks and a footnote; but now was excluded.

256. When asked about this exclusion or omission of the clause, Mr Bester said that he could not recall the instance specifically and speculated that "there may not have been a specific intention to remove that clause", if the intention was simply to replace the table of quality specifications. Notably, another clause that used a single asterisk and a footnote had not been removed. This may point to the removal of the clause, requiring full combustion tests prior to delivery and acceptance of coal by Eskom having been intentional. This clause was important to protect Eskom.

Tegeta seeks an amendment to supply more coal

257. Tegeta approached Eskom to start providing more coal than was originally contracted for within three months of the contract. It proposed supplying 200,000 tonnes more coal p/m from October 2015 to the end of the contract. The offer was made by letter dated 19 June 2015, following a meeting Tegeta and Eskom had on the same day. In the letter, Tegeta requested to be informed of Eskom's acceptance of its offer and quite tellingly stated, "to facilitate us to order for the required equipment and development infrastructure accordingly". Quite clearly, Tegeta lacked adequate resources to comply with all of the terms of the Coal Supply Agreement, as is evident from the exposition above.

258. In response to Tegeta's offer, Dr Nteta emailed to Mr Nath a letter signed by Mr Bester on 24 June 2015. That letter stated as its purpose the recording of some of the material terms that were agreed at the meeting of 19 June 2015. The letter mentioned that coal would be supplied from Brakfontein Colliery Extension, and, from October 2015, the volume increased to 200 000 tonnes per month. Significantly, it also stated that the coal "must comply with the relevant Eskom specifications and will be determined once the full combustion test is successfully completed for the proposed product". The letter repeated the requirement under the 'Contract Conditions' that the coal supplied "must comply with Eskom's technical requirements and Eskom's coal supply requirements, including but not limited to Eskom's full combustion test", failing which or if the requirements do not render compliance for supply to Eskom, Eskom shall outright reject the proposal and no modification of the coal supply agreement shall be entered into. Mr Opperman stated he was not involved in this, despite being the manager of the contract.

259. Mr Bester's letter was emailed by Dr Nteta to Mr Nath on 24 June 2015 at 09h27. Mr Nath forwarded it to Mr Rajesh "Tony" Gupta on the same day at 10:07, along with a draft letter noted "as discussed".

260. At 10h20, on 24 June 2015, Mr Nath replied to Ms Nteta by email in which he thanked her for Mr Bester's letter, but stated: "However, from our bankers' purposes we need (sic) letter on the enclosed lines. Kindly help in this regard."

261. Attached to his email was a draft of Tegeta's preferred version of the letter it would like to receive from Eskom. It was abnormal for Eskom to receive drafts of its letters from suppliers. Tegeta's draft letter removed key aspects of Mr Bester's letter above that were meant to protect Eskom, principally that the proposed coal would be subject to a full combustion test successfully completed, the requirement for compliance with all policies and procedures, as well as compliance with governance processes, and that additional volume would only be taken if needed by the relevant power station. Tegeta's draft also removed a provision that the proposed terms were subject to a duly signed modification to the current agreement.

262. On 25 June 2015, Mr Bester signed another letter premised on the new version of Tegeta's aforesaid draft. Mr Bester claimed not to remember why he had signed the letter.

263. According to Mr Opperman, it appears that, at the time of both the June letters, and even by October 2015, the Brakfontein Colliery Extension was not yet being mined, nor had it been tested for coal suitability. He said that, had he been involved, the suitability of the coal would have been a concern to him, because an immediately adjacent colliery, Kuyasa, had a high sulphur content. However, when Kuyasa supplied Majuba, it had the advantage of being able to use a particular rail service, whereas Brakfontein had to make more use of road delivery of the coal via trucks and was more expensive. Mr Mashigo further confirmed that the coal quality of Brakfontein Colliery Extension was never tested.

264. The Fundudzi Investigation Report has made the following findings, especially against Mr Bester:

    264.1 Mr Johann Bester's conduct was irregular because he allowed Tegeta to dictate the terms of the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement to their benefit and to Eskom's detriment. Mr Bester claims that he did his best to protect Eskom but with all the constant pressure "it may appear as if I went soft"

264.2 Tegeta secured a ten-year Coal Supply Agreement, whilst a five-year contract with an option for another five years would have been in Eskom's interest

264.3 Tegeta was allowed to proceed with the contract despite a critical condition precedent the non-satisfaction of which would have resulted in no agreement coming into effect. Tegeta received the benefit of no one following up on the condition precedent

264.4 Tegeta managed to dictate a further extension of the agreement in terms that were favourable to its bankers and less favourable to Eskom. Mr Bester agreed with the above during his testimony before the Commission

264.5 Mr Bester may have received gratification for changing the conditions of the coal supply agreements, which he denied by explaining that he would not have moved to resign if that was the case, as he would have been in a good position; and 264.6 Mr Bester was accused of breaching Section 34 of the PRECCA by not reporting the corruption that was evident to have occurred in relation to the contract. Mr Bester responded that the contract was not in itself fraudulent or corrupt. He had no intention of doing anything corrupt, and there were processes in place that should have checked on specific conditions that needed to be considered. Mr Johann Bester claimed that if everything had been implemented in accordance with the terms of the contract, there would have been no fraud. He attributed his signing of the letter drafted by Tegeta to his frustrations in working at Eskom under the new senior executives that had taken over.

265. Mr Bester resigned on 20 July 2015, following a conversation with Mr Koko that he says had left him uncomfortable. According to Mr Bester, on his first day back from suspension, Mr Koko made inquiries about OCM as well as another project called "New Largo". Mr Bester stated in his affidavit to the Commission that he felt Mr Koko was asking for too much detail for someone at his level of seniority and told Mr Koko he was uncomfortable continuing the meeting with him. He resigned after this meeting.

Laboratory tests for quality compliance

266. As is apparent from the above, Eskom was obligated to procure coal of specific quality suitable for its Majuba Power Station. Thus, Eskom continued to subject coal from the Brakfontein mine to constant inspection and sampling to ensure that it complied with Eskom's technical requirements. As it was entitled to do, Eskom procured services of various service providers to test and transport coal to its various power stations. Amongst the service providers appointed by Eskom to provide laboratory and coal transportation services were Sibonisiwe Coal Laboratory Services CC (Sibonisiwe), SGS Services South Africa (Pty) Ltd (SGS) and the South African Bureau of Standards (SABS).

267. Between March and April 2015 SGS was the nominated laboratory responsible for the analysis of Brakfontein coal samples. From 24 May 2015 to 30 August 2015, Eskom appointed Sibonisiwe as a nominee laboratory for the analysis of Brakfontein coal. Sibonisiwe reported on its coal analysis results to Eskom for the period 23 July 2015 to 25 August 2015 and showed that the coal was non-compliant with Eskom's specifications.

268. Dr van der Riet, a Coal Special Scientist working for Eskom's Research, Development and Testing Division, was seconded to an acting managerial position in PED to assist them deal with coal supplies that were under-specification and partly responsible for load-shedding at Eskom's power stations. Dr van der Riet passed away after he had submitted his affidavit to the Commission but before the evidence on Brakfontein was presented. Had he not passed away, he would certainly have given oral evidence before the Commission.

269. During his secondment between 1 July 2015 and 31 August 2015, Dr van der Riet was informed by his Quality Assurance (QA) staff that coal qualities from Brakfontein, which had been fair up until July 2015, had deteriorated, whilst tonnages delivered had increased substantially. Apparently, 50% of stockpiles had been rejected during this period. On 25 August 2015 Mr Mboweni informed Dr van der Riet that Brakfontein Colliery had laid a complaint that the laboratory monitoring Eskom's coal quality, viz. Sibonisiwe, had requested a bribe; it had been alleged that "a certain white woman", employed by an Eskom-nominated laboratory, had demanded a bribe from Brakfontein's representatives to change their coal analysis results.

270. Apparently, this was reported by one of Brakfontein's representatives, Mr Jacques Roux, directly to Mr Koko, and Mr Koko was reported in the Fundudzi Report to have confirmed that much. Mr Koko told Dr van der Riet that he wanted the allegation investigated immediately and findings reported back to him. Mr Mashigo remarked that it was "very, very unusual" for such an issue to be escalated to this level and would normally be handled by the contract manager and quality advisor at Eskom. In his affidavit to the Commission, Mr Masuku of Sibonisiwe, indicated that Sibonisiwe did not have an employee that fitted the description referred to above. The allegation of bribery was likely a ruse by Mr Koko and Tegeta, as it will become apparent below. It was a calculated manoeuvre on their part to get rid of Sibonisiwe and replace it with a third party that could provide positive test results of the coal supplied from Brakfontein.

271. Whilst Dr van der Riet and his team conducted their investigation, Mr Koko called Mr Masuku to his office for a meeting on 28 August 2015 and interrogated him regarding the test results that his laboratory was producing on the Brakfontein coal. The full details of this meeting are captured in the relevant pages of the Fundudzi Report and attached to Mr Masuku's affidavit to the Commission. The details reveal much about Mr Koko's deep interest and involvement in the matter all in favour of advancing the interests of Tegeta. According to Mr Masuku, Mr Koko introduced himself and asked why Mr Masuku was fighting with the Gupta family, to which Mr Masuku responded that he did not understand the question and that he did not even know who the Guptas were.

272. Mr Koko then inquired whether Mr Masuku knew who the owners of the Brakfontein Colliery were, and when Mr Masuku said he did not know, Mr Koko informed him that the Gupta family owned the Colliery. Mr Koko then told Mr Masuku that he was fighting with the Gupta family by providing unfavourable coal analysis results on the Brakfontein coal, allegedly because Mr Masuku wanted to solicit a bribe from the Gupta family. Mr Masuku responded that he was not soliciting a bribe from anyone and reiterated that he did not know the Guptas. He also informed Mr Koko that he (Mr Masuku) had no knowledge of the coal quality specification parameters detailed in the contracts between Eskom and its coal suppliers.

273. Mr Koko requested a break from the meeting, while they waited for the comparison of Sibonisiwe's coal analysis results with those of SGS's and reconvened at 3pm to discuss the results. When the meeting reconvened at the agreed time, Mr Koko made a phone call to one Mr Sam Phetla, who had been appointed together with Dr van der Riet and requested him to bring the results to his office, which he did. The comparison was only in respect of the total sulphur parameter and showed that Sibonisiwe's total sulphur results were similar to those of SGS, a matter that seemed to make Mr Koko unhappy. In response to these allegations, Mr Koko denied that he made threats to Mr Masuku and said that present at the meeting was also Dr van der Riet and Ms Charlotte Ramavhona. It was agreed that samples from the stockpiles at Brakfontein mine that had failed prior tests had to be taken under controlled circumstances for separate analysis at Eskom, Sibonisiwe and SABS laboratories.

274. Dr van der Riet denied that he was present at the said meeting and indicated that Sibonisiwe could not have done coal sampling, as they were not contracted to provide that service. Sibonisiwe was doing coal analysis for Eskom. Mr Masuku has also denied Mr Koko's evidence that Dr van der Riet and Ms Ramavhona were present at the meeting, and as already stated, also said that no samples were delivered to Sibonisiwe for testing. Mr Koko's version of the meeting must therefore be rejected as false.

Results of Dr van der Riet's investigation

275. According to Dr van der Riet, he and three of his colleagues concluded their investigation and reported their findings, which they personally relayed in a meeting at Megawatt Park, to Mr Koko and the then Head of Legal, Ms Daniels. The findings were that coal quality delivered from Brakfontein had been deteriorating. A plan was then devised to retest the samples at another laboratory run by SABS. This was done, and test results from SABS were communicated by Dr van der Riet to Mr Koko on 28 August 2015.

276. Whilst the Sibonisiwe laboratory had failed 15 out of 30 coal consignments in August 2015, the SABS laboratory results showed that 29 of the 30 samples should have failed. Therefore, on either Laboratory's test results, Brakfontein coal was non-compliant.

277. Mr Koko instructed Dr van der Riet and his colleagues, Ms Ramavhona and Mr James Mudau to organise for a re-sample and analysis of the Brakfontein coal that had previously failed minimum specification requirements. An arrangement was made with the Brakfontein Colliery manager for this purpose to have the analysis done on 29 August 2015, with Dr van der Riet and Mr Mudau scheduled to personally witness the sampling and testing.

278. Mr Koko has confirmed his instruction for SABS to conduct resampling of the Brakfontein coal and that he had made it clear to Dr van der Riet and Ms Ramavhona that the analytical process needed to be transparent and above board and had directed the two to "have 'hold points' and 'witness points' where all parties were present and instructed the team to have traceability so that the prepared coal sample would not be compromised". However, Mr Koko would soon make an about turn and telephoned Dr van der Riet to inform him that they were not to be involved in witnessing the sampling. Dr van der Riet stated in his affidavit to the Commission that Mr Koko's instruction was in contravention of Eskom's CQMP which required the Employer (Eskom) to witness any sampling. When he advised Mr Koko of this, Mr Koko suggested that the sampling exercise should go ahead, but that another sampling would take place the next week in the presence of Eskom representatives and Mr Koko. Dr van der Riet states in his affidavit that he received a telephone call from Mr Koko on 29 August 2015, the same day when the resampling was scheduled to take place, informing him that Brakfontein had requested Eskom to cancel the scheduled visit.

279. When confronted with these facts, Mr Koko said that he was not aware that Dr van der Riet and Ms Ramavhona were scheduled to visit Brakfontein mine on 29 August 2015 to witness the resampling process. Had he been aware of such a visit, he said, he would have supported it. He denied issuing Dr van der Riet, Ms Ramavhona and their team with an instruction not to visit Brakfontein mine for resampling purpose. Dr van der Riet maintained his version and there is no reason to suggest that he would have contrived such an elaborate story. Thus, Mr Koko's denials are to be rejected.

280. On the evening of 30 August 2015, a progress report with the resampled stockpile analysis results was sent to Mr Koko, with a preliminary finding that the coal was in fact fit for purpose. Dr van der Riet stated in his affidavit to the Commission that this should have been a cause for considerable concern, as no Eskom officials were present to witness the resampling. He could, therefore, not vouch for the validity of the results. On 31 August 2015 Mr Mboweni asked Dr van der Riet to prepare and handover an investigation file at a meeting scheduled for the morning of 1 September 2015. The file that was prepared included an affidavit and a CCTV footage from SABS Laboratory that alleged that the Brakfontein Colliery manager, Mr Roux, together with a relative, had forcefully gained entry to the laboratory on the morning of 30 August 2015 and confronted staff there who were working 'overtime' on the sample analysis. The colliery manager had attempted to exert undue influence on the laboratory staff to change their results to show that the coal was fit for purpose. 69. The Commission had made requests to obtain the investigation file, including the CCTV footage referred to in Dr van der Riet's affidavit but to date the information has not been made available.

Mr Koko suspends coal supply from Brakfontein

281. On 31 August 2015 Eskom sent a letter suspending coal supply from Tegeta's Brakfontein mine, due to apparent "great concern" over stockpiles that had been coming from the mine between July 2015 and August 2015. Mr Gert Opperman was not involved although he says he was aware of quality issues. Mr Koko issued the suspension letter, allegedly as a precautionary measure in order to enable Eskom to investigate the causes of inconsistencies in the coal quality management processes. Fundudzi has reported that Mr Koko also said that Eskom noted a significant increase in the number of out of specification coal stockpiles that came from the Brakfontein mine during July 2015 and August 2015. However, the suspension was a sham, as Mr Koko would lift it only five days later, on 5 September 2015, without any tests having been conducted on the Brakfontein coal between 31 August 2015 and 05 September 2015. Thus, the reason for the suspension was not fulfilled. In fact, it was Mr Koko himself who thwarted the investigation, by placing on suspension for no valid reason Eskom officials who were to conduct the investigation.

282. On 1 September 2015, when Dr van der Riet arrived at Eskom to meet Mr Mboweni, in order to hand over the investigation file, he was served with a notice of intention to suspend, signed off by Mr Koko. Three other colleagues of his, viz. Ms Ramavhona, Mr Phetla and Ms Siphelele Ngobeni, were served with similar notices. Mr Koko stated that they "may have committed a serious misconduct by amongst others inconsistency in the management of the coal quality assurance process," and that Eskom had decided to investigate the alleged misconduct. The letter came from Mr Koko and not from Mr Mboweni, despite Dr van der Riet and the three officials reporting directly to Mr Mboweni.

283. It is worth noting that at this time Dr van der Riet and Ms Ramavhona were also in the process of investigating the inconsistencies in the test results issued by Eskom's contractual laboratories and those issued by a laboratory contracted by the Brakfontein mine. Dr van der Riet explained in his affidavit that from July 2015, when the tonnages from Brakfontein increased but the quality deteriorated, the Eskom geologist opined that the S4U coal accounted for this deterioration as it was considered to be too low to meet Eskom's specifications.

284. It is, therefore, reasonable to conclude that it was this investigation that Mr Koko, acting in concert with Tegeta, sought to circumvent. It is significant that Mr Koko's unsigned letter of intention to suspend Mr Phetla, dated 31 August 2015, was emailed by Mr Koko to the email address infoportal1@zoho.com on 21 September 2015, without any message in the body of the email. Mr Koko's engagement with this email address, used by Mr Salim Essa, a close associate of the Gupta brothers, permeates all his involvement in matters relating to transactions between Eskom and Tegeta. He facilitated the capture of Eskom by the Guptas and their associates.

285. The reference in Dr van der Riet's affidavit to Mr Mudau as having been one of persons suspended is an error. The fourth person suspended was Ms Siphelele Ngobeni, who was also a geologist. The suspension of Dr van der Riet and his three colleagues was, in fact, effected on 8 September 2015, and thus ended the investigation.

Brakfontein coal supply continues

286. Following Mr Koko's lifting of the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement suspension, a further sample of the Brakfontein coal was taken and tested on 6 September 2015 at an Eskom laboratory, which differed markedly from that of the sample of 29 August 2015. Laboratory specialist, Dr Chris Van Alphen Chief Advisor Eskom Research, Testing and Development Division, subsequently advised that the two samples could not have come from the same mine, and further that the sample of 29 August 2015 did not in fact come from Brakfontein Colliery.

287. During this time, on or about 7 September 2015, Mr Gert Opperman received an email from a representative of Tegeta, with results from a SABS test attached. Mr Opperman testified that he then received a phone call from Mr Roux (who was at this stage COE of Tegeta), asking whether they could dispatch the stock to Majuba Power Station. According to Mr Opperman, one of the quality parameters on the stockpile did not meet the contractual specifications which meant that in terms of the contract the coal would be called "Reject Coal".

288. Mr Opperman testified that he responded to Mr Roux highlighting that he did not "have authority to make a decision to dispatch this coal, I cannot do it and I immediately told him you cannot dispatch this coal ... you need to either declare a dispute or you need to reprocess the coal, you have got only one of those two options." Mr Opperman further testified that Mr Roux was not pleased with this response and that the call was "disconnected". However, soon thereafter, Mr Opperman indicated that he received a phone call from Mr Koko asking him to please engage with the Majuba Power Station to accept the coal. Mr Opperman indicated that he was very surprised to have heard from Mr Koko and he considered it to be an instruction requiring him to perform outside the mandate of the contract. Mr Opperman was not happy about approving coal of the incorrect specification to be pushed through. He sought advice from his immediate manager, Mr Ncube, who agreed with Mr Opperman that out-of-specification coal should not be accepted but felt that they should do what Mr Koko had asked, as it was his instruction. Mr Opperman then called the power station; he claimed he did not pressure them but relayed Mr Koko's instruction, and also gave them his opinion. The power station agreed to accept the coal.

289. Mr Opperman testified that he did not resist Mr Koko because he had a very threatening management style, and there was an "atmosphere" at Eskom where people would get suspended or dismissed, and there was much discussion about this "in the corridors".

Cancellation of arrangement to audit Brakfontein certification process

290. On 7 October 2015 Mr Ncube sent a letter to Mr Roux from Tegeta requesting their cooperation with an independent audit that Eskom was arranging of the coal pre-certification process at Brakfontein Colliery. This was as a result of both Mr Opperman and Mr Ncube's continued concerns over the quality of the coal provided, and also a requirement from an audit report by one of the testing laboratories. Following this, Mr Opperman proceeded to engage with various teams on site, however, during this period Tegeta began making changes at Brakfontein, such as terminating certain laboratory services.

291. On 19 October 2016, Mr Ncube instructed Mr Opperman to send a letter to Mr Roux cancelling the audit. Mr Opperman claimed Mr Ncube said he was instructed to cancel it. Mr Opperman claimed that he did not feel he could resist because "it was just such difficult circumstances you know being under this management of this Executive Team and what was happening at that moment in time. It was difficult."

Eskom relocates the testing of Brakfontein coal to Kendal Power Station

292. From 22 October 2015, Eskom relocated the testing of coal quality from Brakfontein to Kendal Power Station Laboratory, after terminating their contract with SABS laboratories. This was on instruction from Mr Koko to the Head of Majuba Power Station, a Mr Christopher Nani. Kendal Power Station was not an accredited laboratory in accordance with the Coal Supply Agreement and did not comply with the ISO Standard. On enquiring with his General Manager, Mr Mazibuko, Mr Opperman learnt that prior to this change, Mr Koko had the view to move the payment point for coal supply agreements to power stations, so that the power station could analyse the coal and Eskom make payment based on the quality parameters reported by the power station. Although Mr Opperman said he took comfort in the fact that Kendal Power Station laboratory was an internal Eskom laboratory and would look after Eskom's interests, it was still in breach of the Coal Supply Agreement for it to do the testing of the Brakfontein coal. The Coal Supply Agreement required Eskom to appoint an independent laboratory that was independent and ISO accredited.

293. Mr Kwenzokuhle Magwaza, one of Eskom's senior managers at the time, also gave evidence of his encounter with Mr Koko on the issue above. On 21 October 2015, at around 07h30 while driving to work, he received a call for the first time from Mr Koko summoning him to Mr Koko's office. Mr

Magwaza said that when he came to Mr Koko's office, he was not offered a chair and Mr Koko berated him and expressed displeasure about "not just you [meaning Mr Magwaza], but people in PED, who are fighting other people's battles."

294. Mr Magwaza testified that he felt threatened as Mr Koko talked about why he had not yet suspended him (Mr Magwaza). He said that Mr Koko proceeded to give him instructions to use Kendal Power Station Laboratory to do further analyses of Brakfontein samples, which Mr Magwaza said was out of the norm as it was not accredited. He was also asked to remove Ms Viloshnee Moodley from her acting role of Middle Manager: Quality Assurance, which Mr Magwaza did. Ms Moodley had suspended a service provider, Mpumamanzi, from the Brakfontein mine and replaced it with another. Mr Koko told Mr Magwaza that he wanted that decision reversed.

295. Kendal Power Station Laboratory then continued to do the sampling from October 2015 until the end of the contract, and would only fail 3% of the Brakfontein stockpiles, compared to 23% by the accredited labs used before Kendal Power Station Laboratory took over.

296. Based on the affidavit provided by Mr Sethowa, a Supervisor: Coal Chemical Services at Kendal Power Station, the Kendal Power Station laboratory had only obtained their SANAS 17025 accreditation during October 2017, long after they had started testing the Brakfontein coal.

297. Another notable issue is that the CQMP, which is a standard schedule to Eskom Coal Supply Agreement's and sets out the requirements and process for coal testing, was only signed off during September 2015, months after the Coal Supply Agreement had been concluded and Tegeta had been delivering coal. Mr Magwaza also made the following points in his affidavit:

    297.1 During September 2015, Mr Mboweni had called him around 18h00 to come through to Mr Koko's office

    297.2 Mr Mboweni was working with Dr Nteta on responding to questions raised by a journalist on the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement and had requested Mr Magwaza to provide assistance

    297.3 Mr Koko then entered the room and requested to know why the CQMP had not yet been signed. Although Mr Mboweni attempted to intervene and inform Mr Koko that Mr Magwaza had recently assumed the role and would not have any knowledge thereof, Mr Koko interjected, stating "Chief, am I allowed to talk to you or ask you a question?", to which Mr Magwaza indicated that he did not know why the CQMP had not yet been signed; and 297.4 Mr Magwaza signed off on the CQMP on 30 September 2015.

Tegeta requests Eskom to accept more non-compliant coal

298. On a subsequent occasion, Mr Opperman again received a phone call from Mr Roux (date not specified), regarding a stockpile that was out of specification. Mr Opperman testified that this incident was similar to the one already referred to above, in September 2015, in that Mr Roux once again requested Mr . erman to organise that the stockpile be accepted by the Majuba Power Station, contending that "you did it the previous time so why not do it again?". Mr Opperman again told him he did not have the power to authorise it and, thereafter, as before, he received a phone call from Mr Koko requesting him to engage the power station to accept it.

299. Mr Opperman engaged Mr Ncube, who again proposed that he follow the instruction. Mr Opperman then engaged the power station, but internal deliberations amongst the power station management did not result in their outright approval. Instead, there were a lot of engagements between the power station manager, Mr Makwaye, and more senior colleagues at Eskom headquarters (Mr Mashigo) before they would acquiesce. From Mr Opperman's evidence, it seems that Mr Makwaye left the Majuba Power Station not too long after this.

Mr Brian Molefe's awareness of the matter

300. In his evidence before Parliament to the suspension of Tegeta's contract to supply coal from Brakfontein mine on 31 August 2015 due to quality issues, Mr Brian Molefe indicated that the "Guptas were very angry with us". He stated that the Gupta family had requested meetings and engaged in phone calls disputing the quality of the coal they supplied as a political ploy where "the people that are saying there is not of good quality have been paid by the opposition and people that don't like them."

National Treasury declines Eskom's request to increase value of Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement by R2.9 billion

301. Combustion tests of coal coming from Brakfontein Colliery Extension were conducted, which concluded that there were quality issues, and that more data and information would be required before procuring from the Brakfontein Extension to any power station. Yet, it was shortly after this that Eskom (in particular the Fuel Sourcing team) sought to extend the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement to include the Brakfontein Colliery Extension.

302. On 8 August 2016, Mr Ncube sent a submission to the Board Tender Committee. The submission included a motivation for procuring 10.8 million tonnes from Brakfontein Colliery Extension – as opposed to other suppliers. The comparison of costs included showed that coal from Brakfontein by rail was in line with the price of other suppliers, while by road it was the highest price. However, the plan was to use rail transport. Mr Opperman, however, asserted that coal from Brakfontein would be a 50/50 split, and in the earlier stage more likely to be two thirds rail, one third road.

303. A letter was sent on 19 August 2016 to National Treasury requesting permission to do so, as a National Treasury Circular issued in April 2016, required that any amendments of above 15% of the value of existing agreements required prior approval of the National Treasury. Eskom was seeking to increase the contract by R2.9 billion, which was 77% of the original contract value (of R3.79 billion). It is notable that in Eskom's letter, a claim was made that the coal reserve had been validated by Eskom and met the contract's quality and quantity requirements, which was not true.

304. National Treasury rejected the request on the grounds that there was a question over the quality of the coal. Eskom responded that a new auto-mechanical sampling system had been installed and would be commissioned within three months. However, Mr Mashigo stated that this was only done much later, in January 2017. In November 2016, the coal from Brakfontein Extension was tested again, and Eskom's technical team concluded that it was not suitable for the Majuba, Tutuka or Matla Power Stations. It is notable that the technical report contains the phrase, "if Eskom is already contractually obliged to take this coal" and then continues to provide a warning on the risk that would need to be managed. However, it would have been irregular for Eskom to have contracted for coal before its technical department had confirmed its suitability, according to Mr Opperman. Treasury never approved the extension of the contract.

Brakfontein mine fails to deliver and puts Eskom at risk

305. In terms of a letter from Eskom, dated 29 November 2017, addressed to Mr George van der Merwe, Chief Operating Officer of Optimum Coal Holdings, Brakfontein Colliery had undersupplied Eskom by around 265,000 tonnes of coal in the October 2016 to September 2017 period. According to Ms Singh, a management accountant employed at Eskom, for February 2018 to December 2018, a penalty amount of R531 million was calculated on the shortfall experienced, a period during which Tegeta was in business rescue. The sudden commencement of this business rescue did not give Eskom sufficient time to find an alternative supplier. Procurement processes only resulted in an alternative contract by October 2018.

306. Majuba Power Station received out of specification coal from Brakfontein for a significant amount of time, as well as undersupply in terms of tonnes of coal delivered. This had the impact of lowering Majuba's coal stockpile to below ten days at one time, whereas it required 40 days' worth to maintain security of supply. Twenty-four of the 30 days that were missing was due to Tegeta's undersupply. This put power supply from the station at risk should there have been an interruption.

307. Mr Bester believed that the Brakfontein contract, although concluded under pressure, did not compromise Eskom. In his view, it was only when Mr Koko suspended those trying to implement the conditions of the contract that Eskom was compromised. He believed that "the system wasn't broken", but people such as Mr Koko compromised it, as well as Mr Mboweni, who "appeared powerless to push back" and would try to avoid being accountable and responsible by refusing to sign things and delegating his authority either to people such as Mr Bester to get contracts done or to the Board Tender Committee to sign them off. Mr Bester himself had confessed to having been too soft to Tegeta's demands and/or to internal pressure.

HUARONG ENERGY AFRICA (PTY) LTD

308. In 2015, Eskom entered into an agreement with China Huarong Asset Management Co. Ltd (China Huarong). China Huarong is a majority state-owned financial asset management company domiciled in China. China Huarong approached Eskom with an unsolicited proposal to grant USD1.5 billion (approximately R25 billion) so that Eskom could build or refurbish power stations (capital projects).

309. In 2015 Mr Rajeev Thomas, a representative of a firm called Tribus (Pty) Ltd (Tribus), approached Mr Andre Pillay, General Manager and the Head of Eskom Treasury, with an unsolicited proposal to provide Eskom with technical solutions to assist Eskom with its capital expansion program. In plain English, Mr Thomas was a money broker, who offered for a fee to put Eskom in touch with lenders who would agree to lend money to Eskom.

310. After a couple of engagements, Mr Thomas approached Eskom on behalf of a consortium of Tribus and China Huarong Asset Management Co. Ltd (China Huarong). China Huarong operates in the field of asset management. China Huarong, too, offered to provide capex solutions to Eskom.

311. Negotiations progressed. A company was incorporated in South Africa for the specific purpose of doing this business with Eskom and was called Huarong Africa (Pty) Ltd (HEA). A group of officials within Eskom and a group in and around HEA tried to engineer a situation by which Eskom paid an enormous raising fee up front and then would have recourse only against HEA for payment of the loan. Fortunately for South Africa, this scheme was thwarted by an official in Eskom and officials in the National Treasury.

312. The best option for Eskom when it received a proposal such as that submitted by Tribus was to issue a Request for Information (RFI) or Proposal (RFP) to test whether there were more advantageous options available to Eskom in the market. Eskom was looking for innovative funding that did not utilise government guarantees and should be greater than R15 billion. It was important that, in acquiring such innovative funding, Eskom did not trigger events of default in relation to its current debt which then stood at around R420 billion. Because Eskom is a state owned entity, equity or capital funding was not an option. Eskom was looking for reputable organisations with funding track records that could be implemented within a reasonably short term.

313. At the time, Eskom had a funding plan. This included raising finance through domestic and international bonds, commercial paper loans and development finance institutions like the World Bank and the African Development Bank. Some multilateral institutions also provided funding, as did export credit agencies. In addition, there were structured products, which were innovative funding sources available in the market from time to time.

314. Eskom received twelve responses to its requests: from ABSA, Deloitte Capital, HEA, Wave, J P Morgan, Nedbank, Peu Capital Partners and Total Utilities Management Services, Regiments, Rand Merchant Bank, Standard Chartered, Superstars Group and Afriset Investments. HEA was incorporated for the specific purpose of doing this business with Eskom. As part of their responses, the firms provided non-binding term sheets, which were the frameworks of the terms on which they were prepared to do business.

315. The term sheet submitted by HEA offered to provide approximately USD 1.5 billion; and for a facility fee of 1.6% of the programme value, an annual fee of 0.8% of the funds made available and a cancellation fee of 2%.

316. In December 2016, Mr Anoj Singh, to whom Mr Pillay reported and to whom he had in the normal course reported the responses to the requests, contacted Mr Pillay. He told Mr Pillay that Mr Thomas had asked that Eskom sign a non-binding term sheet as a demonstration to his partners that he had a good working relationship with Eskom. Mr Pillay was not comfortable that the term sheet be signed as it was not common for Eskom to sign such documents. Mr Pillay raised his concern with Mr Anoj Singh, who responded that it was just a term sheet.

317. Mr Anoj Singh and Mr Thomas then proceeded to sign the term sheet on 20 and 21 December 2016 respectively. The document stated in terms that the contents did not bind the parties, except for clauses 17 and 18, which provided for confidentiality between the parties, no entitlement of the one to act as agent for the other and a declaration that the governing law was the law of South Africa.

318. The usual authorisation process within Eskom was not followed and Eskom's legal department was not consulted.

319. From 8 to 13 January 2017, Mr Anoj Singh, together with Mr Pillay, Mr Prish Govender and Mr Poobie Govender, met in Beijing, China with representatives of HEA, namely Mr Thomas, Mr Rex Madida and Mr Wim Terblanche. Following that meeting, Mr Anoj Singh asked for an Investment and Finance Committee submission to inform the board of the HEA proposal and approve a mandate to negotiate and conclude a financing agreement with HEA for loan transactions of R1.5 billion and R6 billion.

320. During the meeting in China, Mr Pillay formed the impression that Mr Anoj Singh was rather disapproving of the proposed transaction. Later, Mr Pillay came to believe that this was a sham to allay Mr Pillay's concerns and that Mr Singh had his own agenda. During that meeting, Mr Pillay met Mr Madida, who introduced himself as a deployee of the ANC.

321. After the meeting, there was an exchange of correspondence between Mr Pillay and Mr Thomas. Mr Pillay wrote that the proposal was subject to Eskom's own internal analysis and that he would have to secure board approval for them to go forward with the proposal. The loan was offered at LIBOR rate (London Interbank Offered Rate) of about 3% plus 7.2%, that is, about 10.2%.

322. This was not simply a financing proposal, which fell within the jurisdiction of the board's Investment and Finance Committee. It was also linked to a capital programme and therefore needed the approval of the Board Tender Committee. The Investment and Finance Committee resolved on 3 February 2017 that a team - which included Mr Pillay - could negotiate but not conclude the financing agreement with HEA.

323. These contemplated transactions would have had to fall within the Eskom five-year corporate plan, which was at that time still being developed. Eskom was assisted in the preparation of its corporate plan by teams from McKinsey and ostensibly Trillian. However, a board member, Mr Khoza, who chaired the Board Tender Committee, told Mr Pillay that if the HEA proposal was brought before the Board Tender Committee that body would approve the proposal.

324. Mr Pillay became concerned that the HEA proposal was being considered outside of the Eskom Treasury. He raised this concern with Mr Singh, who told Mr Pillay that he had been busy with other things and so had allocated the matter to Mr Prish Govender to deal with. He also gave as a reason for Eskom Treasury not being involved that Eskom Treasury already had a huge responsibility for raising funding for Eskom. Mr Pillay found this reason superficial.

325. A few days before 14 March 2017, Mr Anoj Singh told Mr Pillay that he had been contacted by an HEA representative with the request that the term sheet be signed, in effect with the clause relating to its non-binding effect removed, but still subject to Eskom board approval and to be superseded by a formal Asset Loan Framework Agreement (ALFA). This was not a normal procedure in Eskom. Mr Pillay feared that if a binding term sheet were signed, the fees would be payable to HEA. Such term sheet was signed by Mr Anoj Singh on behalf of Eskom on 14 March 2017 and by Mr Chen Jianbao on a date not stated in the document. The signed term sheet left no doubt that it was designed to create binding obligations.

326. The signed term sheet was not referred to the Eskom legal department and Mr Singh was made aware of Mr Pillay's reservations regarding the document. Mr Anoj Singh's attitude was that the document was not binding.

327. It is difficult to understand the belief allegedly held by Mr Singh that the term sheet was not binding because its first paragraph begins:

> The parties agree that this term sheet shall create legally binding obligations on each party and shall be in full force in effect upon its signature until such time as the asset loan agreement and the other related definitive agreements are concluded between the parties.

328. However, Mr Pillay, who was not a lawyer, considered it possible that certain other provisions in the signed term sheet led Mr Singh to believe that, despite the first paragraph, the document was, nevertheless, not binding. Mr Pillay also believed that Mr Singh would sign this latest term sheet regardless of what Mr Pillay might say.

329. At that stage, Mr Pillay was relying on the help and advice furnished by a firm of lawyers called White & Case. White & Case advised in writing in an opinion dated 12 March 2017 that the latest term sheet contained several important terms that were onerous and were expressed to be binding and should therefore not be signed in its present form.

330. Mr Pillay discussed the White & Case opinion with Mr Singh, who was in London with Mr Pillay and attended a meeting to discuss the concerns raised by White & Case in their opinion.

331. At that stage, Mr Koko was the acting Group CEO of Eskom. According to Mr Pillay, Mr Koko's attitude was also that the latest term sheet was to be signed.

332. Mr Pillay pointed out to Mr Singh that, according to Eskom Treasury, due process precluded Eskom from contracting on an RFI and required an RFP process. An RFP then went out to the market on 13 March 2017. The RFP process was, however, inconsistent with the process agreed in the latest term sheet. Nevertheless, HEA responded to the RFP.

333. Mr Singh left Eskom in July 2017 and Mr Calib Cassim (Mr Cassim) was appointed acting CFO. Mr Pillay conveyed his concerns about the HEA transaction to Mr Cassim, who agreed with Mr Pillay.

334. Certain approvals were made conditions of the latest term sheet. One of these conditions was South Africa Reserve Bank (SARB) approval. The SARB gave its approval on 4 August 2017 on certain of its own conditions, including that no upfront payment of any fees be paid by Eskom. In addition, the conditional nature of the SARB approval required that the promised funds be placed in Eskom's account before the final agreement, the ALFA, could be signed.

335. On 14 August 2017 Mr Pillay received a copy of a memorandum of that date addressed by Ms Palacios, the Eskom Legal Corporate Specialist, to Ms Suzanne Daniels. The memorandum recommended against proceeding with the HEA project without favourable legal advice and queried why Eskom officials had signed the latest term sheet against legal advice and without following proper process.

336. On 15 August 2017 Mr Pillay, as head of Eskom Treasury, submitted a memorandum to the Board Investment and Finance Committee seeking a mandate to conclude the financing arrangement with HEA.

337. After considerable interactions at a technical level within Eskom, the Investment and Finance Committee resolved on 26 October 2017 to approve the HEA transaction subject to numerous conditions. At this stage, Mr Sean Maritz had been appointed acting Group CEO on 6 October 2017 in the place of Mr Johnny Dladla. On 20 October 2017, Mr Maritz, Mr Cassim and Mr Pillay met with HEA representatives. Mr Pillay indicated during the meeting that the signing of the ADFA with HEA would not be a solution given Eskom's liquidity constraints.

338. The usual procedure following an RFP would have been for an independent valuation of the various proposals. This step was not taken. However, several of the proposals received were shortlisted for further consideration. One of these was the HEA proposal. While Eskom was considering these proposals, which were long term proposals, to operate largely over fifteen years, HEA suggested that Eskom enter into a short-term transaction with HEA, to operate for between three and five years. This was considered to be urgent because of Eskom's liquidity problems and the fact that the RFI process had not been followed.

339. Eskom then made a proposal for short term financing to HEA. HEA responded that the proposal was not achievable because its implementation would require a government guarantee. Nevertheless, at its meeting on 27 October 2017, the Investment and Finance Committee resolved that Eskom Treasury negotiate a short-term facility up to a maximum of R2 billion for six to twelve months with HEA. At the same time, the RFP process continued.

340. A board meeting was held on 27 October 2017. Mr Maritz and Mr Khoza did not attend this meeting as they were meeting with the Minister. The board resolved at this meeting to approve the HEA short-term facility subject to certain conditions but no authority was given to proceed with the HEA long term facility.

341. On his return, Mr Maritz demanded to know why the HEA long-term facility was not signed. Mr Pillay sent Mr Maritz all relevant documents and explained that, as due process had not been followed, the contract for the long-term facility could not be signed. Mr Maritz responded that he was, nevertheless, going to sign.

342. Mr Maritz then proceeded to go against the Board's decision or advice and signed the documents for the HEA long-term facility. Nothing further was then done about the HEA short-term facility. Although the RFP process continued, HEA was treated preferentially by Eskom.

343. The next day, an informal meeting took place, convened by the company secretary, and attended by Messrs Maritz, Khoza, Cassim, Sathiaseelan Gounden (the Chairman of Audit and Risk), Dingaan Simphiwe (Mr Simphiwe), the Chairman of the Investment and Finance Committee, and Mr Pillay.

344. At this meeting, Mr Maritz stated that he had been to see the Minister (Ms Brown) and the Minister had said it was acceptable for him to sign. Mr Pillay responded, in effect, that the Minister did not have the power to authorise Mr Maritz to sign. This was the province of the Board. If the long-term facility proceeded, it would amount to fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

345. HEA then submitted an invoice dated 2 November 2017 to Eskom for the development fee amounting to USD 21,888,000, inclusive of VAT. Mr Pillay gave instructions that the invoice was not to be paid as the agreement underlying the invoice was not valid. Towards the end of December 2017, the HEA representatives submitted an updated ALFA to Mr Maritz for him to sign. Mr Maritz signed the updated ALFA. Shortly thereafter, HEA submitted an invoice for payment.

346. Mr Pillay asked Mr Maritz why he was so anxious to get the HEA ALFA signed. Mr Maritz said that Mr Khoza was putting pressure on him. Mr Pillay heard Mr Khoza and Mr Madida of HEA discussing the transaction over the telephone in vernacular. On another occasion, Mr Khoza called Mr Pillay to his office to warn him that Mr Maritz did not like working with Mr Pillay and warned him (Mr Pillay) to be careful and that he was not cooperating with Mr Khoza and Mr Maritz.

347. Mr Pillay was called to Mr Maritz's office. Mr Maritz told him that he had a whistleblower report that Mr Pillay had received a bribe for R5 million from some Russian company, which had built Mr Pillay a house in Plettenberg Bay. Mr Pillay did not see the alleged report and no such allegations were ever lodged with Eskom.

348. When Mr Pillay became aware that Mr Maritz was going to sign the agreement with HEA, a few days before the contract was signed, he went without an appointment to the office of the Director-General (DG) of the National Treasury, Mr Dondo Mogajane, waited in his office and, when the DG had a few minutes to spare, reported the facts of the HEA transaction to him. Mr Pillay felt that he could not safely report his concerns to the Eskom chair or any of the board members. They then followed a process by which Eskom formally applied for SARB approval to demonstrate that it was following process while privately the Eskom officials, including Mr Pillay, informed the National Treasury officials that permission should not be granted. On 4 August 2018, the SARB approval previously granted to Eskom was suspended.

349. Eskom informed HEA that it would not pay its invoices and that it would litigate the matter if necessary. An investigation into the transaction by attorneys BGB was commissioned. During that process, Mr Maritz resigned on 1 March 2018.

350. The fees provided for in the several contractual documents were never paid. This led to hostility between Mr Pillay and Mr Thomas.

351. It seems clear on the evidence before the Commission that certain Eskom officials conspired with Mr Thomas and certain individuals outside Eskom to bind Eskom to a transaction pursuant to which Eskom would pay out a very substantial sum of USD 21,888,000 as a raising fee before any money had been raised and paid to Eskom. The strong probability is that HEA had no ability to advance billions of US dollars to Eskom. If that happened, Eskom had no recourse and, if it had paid the raising fee of USD 21,888,000, it would have been unlikely to recover any part of that sum. All those Eskom officials who pressed for the raising fee to be paid are prima facie guilty of fraud because they sought to induce Eskom to act to its enormous financial prejudice, representing that this transaction was regular and in Eskom's interests but well knowing that such representation was false.

352. In the end, Eskom did not suffer the huge financial prejudice contemplated by those who promoted this scheme. That Eskom was saved from this financial disaster is due to the courageous actions of Mr Pillay in evading bureaucratic entanglement and reporting the facts of the scheme to the highest officer in the National Treasury, who then promptly took steps to protect the country's money.

353. Although Eskom did not pay out the raising fee to HEA, it is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority consider the facts of the case with a view to holding those responsible criminally liable.

354. It is important not to get bogged down in detail in relation to this transaction. There was considerable evidence about bureaucracy, process and personal conflict within Eskom, and between Mr Pillay and Mr Thomas of HEA. However, the essence of the matter is that Eskom was seeking to raise money from outside its usual institutional sources in circumstances in which it would not need to provide a government guarantee to the lender.

355. Loan procurement differs from most other types of procurement because the product offered by the lenders was identical: money almost invariably measured, whatever the source and whoever the supplier, in US dollars. What differed was the rate of interest, the fees paid to the middleman or broker and the terms on which the transaction was to be concluded, in particular how loan money was to be paid to Eskom, how it was to be repaid and what would happen if Eskom defaulted.

356. Viewed from this perspective, it is extraordinary, even inexplicable, that Eskom could ever have considered approaching the HEA transaction on the basis that it offered a unique supply that could not be replicated by any other market participant. Absent a cogent reason for pursuing the HEA transaction with such unusual enthusiasm, it is probable that for one reason or another, the officials in Eskom who supported this transaction in its original form wished to prefer HEA over any other potential lender in this class.

357. The most obvious shortcoming in the HEA proposal related to the upfront fee structure. The term sheets which formed the basis for the transaction were exceptionally vague about the source of the funds which were to constitute the product supplied. HEA itself was a company specially created for the HEA transaction. Its parent company was said to be China Huarong, based in China, with assets under management in excess of R2 trillion. The proposal by HEA embodied in the signed term sheet was said to be part of the overarching master ALFA to be concluded between HEA (or its nominee) and Eskom as an asset refurbishment / creation programme value initially of USD 1.5 billion. There was no specific commitment as to how much money was to be paid to Eskom, on what dates it would be paid, and who was liable to Eskom to pay it.

358. Against that background, the once-off facility fee of 1.6% of the amount of the programme value, payable on the signature of the ALFA, is commercially outrageous. This would have committed Eskom to an upfront payment of 1.6% of USD 1.5 billion, which equates to approximately USD 24 million, before a single cent had entered the coffers of Eskom.

359. It is little wonder that the Eskom Treasurer, Mr Pillay, resisted this aspect of the transaction so strongly. It remains unexplained why the then CFO, Mr Singh, who signed the term sheet, and the acting Group CEO, Mr Maritz, who signed the ALFA, should have promoted the transaction so unreservedly.

360. There does not appear to have been any justification for the signing of the term sheet. Signing the term sheet was not in accordance with Eskom's usual practice and it is difficult to see what benefit there was in legally committing Eskom to its terms. It seems as if the purpose in signing the term sheet was to push Eskom closer to HEA and afford HEA preferential treatment over its competitors for Eskom's business.

361. It does not appear to be in dispute that no Board approval was provided for the conclusion of the HEA transaction. This alone rendered the signed contract with HEA invalid. Fortunately, the invoice submitted by HEA was never paid and the HEA transaction therefore caused Eskom no direct loss.

362. Nevertheless, it would appear that there is at least a prima facie case of attempted theft or fraud against Mr Anoj Singh, who signed the term sheet, and Mr Maritz, who signed the contract documents on the strength of which the invoice for USD 21,888,000 was submitted to Eskom. A similar case could be made against Mr Thomas of HEA.

Suspensions and Tegeta issues

363. The evidence proves a scheme by the Guptas to capture Eskom, cause the suspension of the four executives under the guise of an enquiry into the affairs of Eskom, install the Gupta family's selected officials in positions of influence in place of the four suspended executives, and divert Eskom's assets to the financial advantage of the family. Mr Salim Essa, President Zuma, Ms Dudu Myeni, the late Dr Ben Ngubane, Mr Mark Pamensky, Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Anoj Singh, Ms Suzanne Daniels, Mr Matshela Koko and Mr MJ Zwane were persons proven knowingly to have assisted the Gupta family.

364. There were indeed attempts made to influence Eskom employees and the Board of Eskom, most notably by President JG Zuma, Minister L Brown, Ms D Myeni, Mr AZ Tsotsi, Mr B Molefe, Mr A Singh, Mr M Koko and Ms S Daniels in order to benefit the Gupta family and their associates such as Mr S Essa.

365. The Commission investigated the concerns raised by the Public Protector in paragraph 4 of her report relating to the acquisition of Glencore's South African Coal interests and the channelling of funds from Eskom to the Gupta family to pay for that acquisition. The Commission found the Public Protector's concerns to be substantially justified.

ESKOM AND McKINSEY-REGIMENTS-TRILLIAN

366. This section of the report deals with the evidence regarding two transactions between Eskom and McKinsey & Company, as well as payments made pursuant thereto. The two contracts were purportedly concluded with McKinsey in September 2015 and January 2016 respectively, one relating to the Corporate Plan and the other to the Top Engineers Programme. The 2015 contract was concluded for a duration of six months but endured only for a period of about four months. The 2016 contract, known as the Master Services Agreement (MSA), aka Service Level Agreement (SLA), was intended to operate for three years, but Eskom decided to terminate it about five months into the period, in June 2016. On closer scrutiny, both these contracts involved a scheme designed to benefit Trillian Management Consulting (Pty) Ltd, a wholly owned subsidiary of Trillian Capital Partners (Pty) Ltd, in which Mr Salim Essa, a close associate of the Gupta family, had majority shareholding of 60%.

367. The Regiments and Trillian consultancies appear as implicated parties throughout many of the state capture investigations. Both were very small local companies doing advisory work largely of a financial and management consultancy nature, where Mr Eric Wood featured prominently as a Director. He appeared to have a strong working relationship with Mr Essa. Mr Essa was referred to as a "rainmaker" because he allegedly secured contracts with SOEs. Mr Wood led a division of Regiments that had been partnering with McKinsey to procure work with SOEs, and which transferred officially on 1 March 2016 into Trillian, whose main shareholder was Mr Essa.

368. McKinsey & Company Africa and Regiments had a history of working together at Transnet since 2012, predating the work they undertook together at Eskom from 2015. The Transnet evidence is thus important to understand and identify patterns that may have continued into the Eskom space. McKinsey and Regiments also partnered to secure contracts at SAA through a corrupt relationship between Regiments and an SAA official. In total, McKinsey was paid just under R1.9 billion with regards to contracts shared with Regiments or Trillian at Eskom, Transnet and SAA.

369. Once Regiments became involved as McKinsey's Supply Development Partner (SDP) at Transnet there was a succession of sole-source contracts awarded to the McKinsey-Regiments consortium from 2013 to 2015, with exponential (70%) escalation in fees. McKinsey landed seven contracts at Transnet, with the same consortium, within eighteen months. At Eskom, McKinsey's earnings dwarfed previous earnings at Transnet (or previously at Eskom), at over R1 billion in under a year.

370. In 2014, Regiments tried with only limited success to get consulting work at Eskom. Pressure was applied by then Public Enterprises Minister Malusi Gigaba's advisor, Mr Thamsanqa Msomi, on Eskom's new Group CFO, Ms Tsholofelo Molefe, who had been appointed into that position in January 2014, by complaining to her that there was insufficient transformation in the award of Eskom contracts, that he hoped she would improve the situation. He then arranged for her to meet a supposed aggrieved supplier, which turned out to be Mr Salim Essa. However, he was not actually an aggrieved party, but was attempting to use access to the CFO to create a relationship that would be useful to secure contracts. This strategy did not work with Ms Molefe, who referred Mr Essa to the relevant tender processes and did not entertain Mr Msomi's further approaches either.

371. However, a new situation was contrived where Mr Essa would return at a very opportune moment to conveniently offer the services of Regiments Capital. According to Ms Molefe, a financial sustainability plan developed by her was deemed insufficiently robust by Eskom Chair Mr Zola Tsotsi, who said that Minister Brown demanded a more robust plan to be submitted within three months.

372. In response, Mr Colin Matjila, then Acting GCEO organised to meet with Ms Molefe out of the office where he suggested she make use of an external service provider. Pursuant to this suggestion, Mr Matjila introduced Mr Essa to Ms Molefe at a privately arranged meeting at Monte Casino and Mr Essa offered the services of Regiments Capital. Following this, it appears Mr Matjila pushed hard to get a contract signed off for Regiments, whilst Ms Molefe resisted taking up their services because of the lack of a competitive tender process, as well as her perception that they were over-priced.

373. Additionally, the work offered by Regiments was not the revised financial sustainability plan that Mr Tsotsi demanded, but was limited to outlining a few initiatives that could be taken to unlock cash in Eskom's balance sheet; which was work that Ms Molefe felt Eskom had the capacity to do. She indicated that Regiments delayed in submitting its proposal, and ultimately submitted an agreement (not a proposal) for Eskom to sign. She would not succumb to Mr Matjila's pressure for her to sign the agreement, much to his annoyance. The deadlock was only broken by the Board giving a mandate in writing to Ms Molefe that Regiments was permitted to test the viability of their proposed financial options for Eskom in a high-level desktop exercise, for which Regiments was paid R1 million.

374. It is noted that Ms Molefe was suspended the next year, in March 2015, on spurious grounds, and then enticed to exit the organisation, which she did.

Large contract for Regiments and McKinsey in 2015

375. Regiments and its off-shoot company, Trillian, found it much easier to get work at Eskom from 2015, and on a far greater scale. As they did at Transnet, Regiments partnered again with McKinsey on the same basis for contracts at Eskom and were utilising the services of Mr Salim Essa as a 'Business Development Partner', to land contracts in return for a large share of the fees earned. Ms Mosilo Mothepu, a former senior employee of Regiments, testified how the company had struggled to get government contracts when she first worked there in 2007 to 2010, but when she returned in May 2015, this had changed dramatically with the assistance of both Mr Essa and Mr Kuben Moodley. Ms Mothepu testified that if ever someone at Regiments was having a problem, they would call Mr Essa and "it would happen".

376. Significantly, Mr Ian Sinton of Standard Bank testified that in a meeting with Regiments' Directors, Mr Niven Pillay and Mr Litha Nyhonhya, both confirmed that McKinsey had offered to partner with Regiments on an expected project at Eskom, on the same terms of McKinsey's projects at Transnet, i.e., that Regiments would earn 30% of all revenue from the project, but that it would have to pay 30% of this to Mr Essa. In addition, Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Anoj Singh, the Group CEO and CFO at Transnet respectively, who had been key in securing the McKinsey and Regiments team contracts at Transnet, and moved over to Eskom during the course of 2015 to occupy the same crucial positions, initially in acting capacities, before being made permanent. The Eskom evidence on the "suspensions" matter detailed above shows how it appears that these positions were deliberately vacated to make way for these new executives.

377. McKinsey had been sending "unsolicited" proposals to Eskom in 2014 and early 2015, offering to continue working on the 'Top Engineers' programme that it had developed for Eskom, which involved training a cohort of Eskom engineers to provide an in-house consulting capacity rather than outsource the service. Eskom had not taken up this offer, with the reasons given largely as funding constraints. McKinsey and Regiments then jointly submitted a proposal to Eskom on 20 April 2015 titled "Building an Internal Consulting Unit for Eskom by driving savings and unlocking cash". The work areas proposed included: creating an internal consulting unit based on the previous Top Engineering Programme; interventions to reduce expenditure on procurement; "balance sheet optimisation" to unlock cash for Eskom; and assisting with "unlocking funding sources" for Eskom to improve its financial position. The services would be provided on an 'at risk' basis, where payment would be based on a percentage of the "savings" deemed to have been achieved for Eskom, and supposedly this would make the programme 'pay for itself' rather than require a budget from Eskom. Dr Alexander Weiss, the senior partner at McKinsey who served as Co-Lead of the Client Service Team at Eskom, indicated that Eskom had suggested this approach. According to Mr Mabelane, the idea originated from Mr Koko who wanted to replicate McKinsey's alleged success in a previous programme elsewhere within Eskom. The training programme was code named "Top Engineers Programme".

378. Evidence shows that McKinsey and Regiments held extensive consultations with Mr Singh in the months prior to Mr Singh's start date at Eskom. Both McKinsey's senior partner, Dr Alexander Weiss, and Mr Singh, describe these consultations as helping to 'on-Board' Mr Singh and Mr Molefe because of McKinsey's supposed extensive insight into Eskom. However, it is strange that outsiders should take it upon themselves to 'on-Board' anyone when surely this is the role of Eskom and those who deal with the issues at hand, to which McKinsey would not be privy.

379. Regiments were present at these meetings allegedly to provide the 'financial component' of these briefings. It is, however, arguable that Regiments' relative lack of experience with Eskom would give them even less grounds to on-Board anyone for their role at Eskom. If the explanation of the 'on-Boarding' does not hold water, then Ms Mothepu's evidence would be correct that the real purpose was to discuss McKinsey and Regiments' proposal on the MSA and possibly reach an understanding with Mr Singh ahead of any formal decision by Eskom, conduct which is irregular and impermissible. Regiments' presence would then make more sense if it were there to present itself as McKinsey's intended Supplier Development & Localisation (SDL) partner at Eskom. Former Regiments employee, Ms Mothepu, confirms that these were consultations regarding a proposal by McKinsey and Regiments to offer services to Eskom, at which she was present, and which were held off-site, in a secretive fashion and code-named 'Project Pandora'. It appears Mr Singh was giving extensive direction to McKinsey and Regiments to work on their proposal and required them to do preparatory work for him.

Messrs Singh's, Koko's and Molefe's relationships with Guptas and associates

380. The parallel relationship between Mr Singh, Mr Molefe, and Mr Koko with the Guptas provides important context against which the events in this report took place. Mr Singh admits to making between 10 and 12 visits to the Guptas in Saxonwold, and to having met with Mr Essa a few times since 2012 or 2013. Evidence shows that during 2014 and 2015, Mr Singh made numerous trips to Dubai, where flight bookings were charged to the account of Mr Essa and paid for with large amounts of cash that were delivered to the travel agency, Travel Excellence. The Guptas, Mr Essa and close associates were often shown to be in Dubai at the same time, and on occasion even on the same flight as Mr Singh. Moreover, records show numerous other implicated persons in state capture in Dubai at the same time.

381. Mr Koko claims not to have known Mr Essa in 2015, however there is evidence of numerous emails he forwarded from July to December 2015, to an alias Business Man at an email address, infoportal1@zoho.com, found to have most probably belonged to Mr Essa. Similarly, there is evidence that Mr Koko took a trip to Dubai in January 2016, where Mr Essa appeared to arrange and pay for his flights and visa, and one of the Gupta's close business associates, Mr Ashu Chawla, organised the hotel stay. Ms Sameera Sooliman, an employee of Travel Excellence, indicated that the company offers a 14-day credit facility to its good or longstanding clients, one of which was Mr Salim Essa who frequently requested bookings to be made for other people. He had a standing account with Travel Excellence and travel bookings made at his behest for other people would be allocated to his account as the guarantor for such bookings.

382. Mr Molefe admits to having had many interactions with the Guptas for social and private business initiatives he wanted to pursue. He claims not to know Mr Essa, despite testimony that Mr Essa spoke of a decision to make Mr Molefe the "boss" of Eskom when he was still at Transnet. Drivers for Mr Molefe and Mr Singh testified at how large bags of cash were transferred to them when visiting the Guptas in Saxonwold, or which appeared in the trunks of their vehicles after visits there.

Eskom disregards the requirement for National Treasury approval

383. A submission dated 13 May 2015, prepared by Mr Edwin Mabelane, the Acting Group Executive of Technology and Commercial and Chief Procurement Officer, requested that the Eskom Board authorise for negotiations to take place to appoint McKinsey as a partner for the development of the new Internal Consulting Unit on a sole source, 'at risk' basis for consulting services aimed at achieving cost savings for Eskom. Mr Molefe approved the submission on 13 May 2015, and the Eskom Board Tender Committee (BTC) approved it by round robin on or about 6 July 2015, as follows:

No	Committee Member	Date
1	Mr Zethembe Khoza (Chairperson)	1 July 2015
2	Ms Chwayita Mabude	6 July 2015
3	Ms Nazia Carrim	3 July 2015
4	Ms Viroshini Naidoo	6 July 2015

384. The revised round robin document to be signed by BTC members is dated 6 July 2016. It is unclear how Mr Khoza and Ms Carrim signed off for approval on 1 and 3 July 2015 respectively on a document that was only submitted to the BTC on 6 July 2015.

385. A justification for using sole sourcing to procure McKinsey as the service provider for the contract were set out in a "Sole Source Justification" by Mr Prish Govender on 18 May 2015, approved by Mr Edwin Mabelane on the same day, and then reviewed by Ms Suzanne Daniels on 26 May 2015, who then prepared a Memorandum in support of the justification. The justifications were said to relate to McKinsey's unique intellectual property over the 'Top Engineers Programme', its unique insights into Eskom because of previous work, and that an in-depth analysis showed there was only one supplier, viz. McKinsey, in the market capable of delivering what Eskom required. However, the justification of the sole source basis was questionable, as there are numerous, large and experienced consulting firms in South Africa that could have competed for this 'turnaround' type of consulting work. If the motivation was that McKinsey was uniquely positioned to deliver because of their previous Top Engineers work for Eskom, then it would not make sense that any of it could be outsourced to another party, such as Regiments or Trillian, nor could this reasoning apply to all the other elements of the contract that had nothing to do with the Top Engineers programme.

386. The justification for using an 'at-risk' approach to the contract remuneration was heavily disputed within Eskom and was clearly unlawful. Mr Molefe has justified the 'at-risk' approach saying that Eskom was carrying very high costs for external consultants, and that McKinsey would help to develop an internal consulting capacity within Eskom from which there would be huge savings, and from which McKinsey could be paid thus not requiring any upfront cash outlay. However, the risk-based approach was not permitted under Treasury Regulations, and the fees that could be charged were neither quantified nor capped. Such a system could easily be abused. Eskom's own 'Directive for the Implementation of the National Treasury Cost Containment Instruction and Government Gazette' (7 July 2014), sets out how Eskom would comply with and implement the Cost Containment Measures of the 2013/2014 Note, with clause 2.2.2.3 setting out that the rates at which consultants are to be remunerated must not be higher than those set out by a particular list of authorities.

387. Mr Ismail Mulla of Eskom Corporate Finance: Internal Consulting Unit had explicitly called for work to be done to establish the case for whether an internal consulting unit was needed, and to determine the best strategy and partner by which this should be delivered ("Briefing Note" to Mr Mabelane, 2 June 2015). Mr Mulla thus rejected Mr Mabelane's proposal. Nonetheless, in a letter dated 29 June 2015, the Acting GCFO, Ms Nonkululeko (Veleti) Dlamini, approved the request for the development of 'Top Engineers Programme' into an Internal Consulting Unit, but subject to conditions which included setting aside budget for the project for three years and compliance with National Treasury Instruction in relation to consultant rates and "if alternative methodology such as incentive-based is used, need to verify that it is allowable within the rules of National Treasury". The Eskom executives (driving the process) failed to comply with any of these conditions. Mr Aziz Laher, the Group Compliance Manager and PFMA corporate specialist at Eskom, repeatedly raised the need to apply for a deviation from National Treasury in September 2015 to several Eskom officials including Mr Koko, Mr Prish Govender, Ms Maya Bhana (Mr Singh's Office Manager) and Mr Charles Kalima. Mr Koko has stated clearly to the Commission that he was aware that a risk-based contract was not permitted by National Treasury regulations, and that he was advising other colleagues not to make use of it. However, the evidence shows that he was opposed to Mr Laher's advice and questioned why Mr Laher was holding up his with the view that a deviation application was required. Despite these internal warnings, negotiations by Eskom's top executives over McKinsey's proposal proceeded.

Eskom's executives involved in the MSA

388. It appears that from Eskom's side, Mr Mabelane, Mr Prish Govender, Mr Singh and Mr Molefe were involved in the negotiations. There is conflicting evidence as to whether or not Mr Koko was also involved. Ms Mothepu says he was, at least insofar as Regiments is concerned, as will be shown below. Dr Weiss says he was not, but that McKinsey began discussions on the Top Engineers programme with Mr Koko in his capacity as Group Executive for Technology and Commercial.

389. Indeed, Mr Koko came back from his suspension to be part of the Steering Committee that was established to oversee the implementation of the MSA. The Board resolution of 6 July 2016 specifically gave him, as the Group Executive: Technology and Commercial, the mandate to lead the negotiations. Mr Koko, who occupied the position, was on suspension and Mr Mabelane was acting in his place, but Mr Mabelane states that he handed over to Mr Koko on Mr Koko's return on 20 July 2015 and it was after this that negotiations started. Mr Koko denies he was involved in the approval process or in the negotiations, because he claimed they were completed by the time he returned from suspension.

390. Mr Koko has also relied on a statement by Dr Weiss as evidence of him not having been involved in the negotiations. However, from 20 July 2015, Mr Koko began sending emails with documents relating to these negotiations to infoportal1@zoho.com, believed to be the email address of Mr Salim Essa. This included an email containing Eskom's negotiating position for the MSA, the Top Engineers programme and online vending.

391. According to Ms Daniels, Mr Koko had a list which he discussed with her and told her that it was part of his instructions from "his principals". The list contained transactions that appear to be areas of existing or potential contract work with Eskom with estimates of "revenue" for each transaction, and with handwritten notes on it which Mr Koko says are his. Some of the notes on the list are worth mentioning, such as "give me a fixed price, I give you the partner", which Mr Koko says relates to the New Largo Mine that Anglo-American was building for the Kusile Power Station. He admitted he was stating who he thought should be subcontracted as a BEE partner

392. This is contrary to Mr Koko's evidence that Eskom never got involved in directing who should be a subcontractor. The other note is 'Zestlor', an entity that belongs to Mr Salim Essa's wife. When asked about Zestlor, Mr Koko could not recall why he had written this on the list. From Mr Holden's report it is apparent that Zestlor was one of the entities used by the Guptas to launder money.

393. Indeed, McKinsey and Regiments did get contract work for these items. Mr Koko denies that he was pursuing the matters on the list, because they do not fall within the scope of the division he headed. However, the presentation made at the first Steering Committee meeting on 9 February 2016 shows that Mr Koko was responsible for, inter alia, "Completion of the Duvha Insurance claim" and the "Master Vending Agent". When confronted with this presentation, Mr Koko's response was that it was an error for his name to be shown. However, there is no explanation why that error was never corrected. It is significant that the SteerCo presentation document was provided by Mr Singh as part of his evidence to the Commission, and he does not point to any errors in the document.

394. Ms Mothepu was one of Regiments' representatives on the SteerCo established by Eskom's executives to oversee the implementation of the MSA. Ms Mothepu sent at least seven emails to Mr Koko on matters relating to the MSA. The fee arrangement between McKinsey and Regiments under the MSA was envisaged to be 70% for McKinsey and 30% for Regiments.

395. However, Regiments was supposed to lead its own financial transactions with Eskom, called "Balance Sheet Optimisation and Cash Unlocking Initiatives", for which it would earn 95% of the fees on this portion of the work, with McKinsey only earning a 5% administration fee. This is exactly the type of work that Regiments had proposed to Ms Tsholofelo Molefe in 2014 when she was the FD, following a meeting with Mr Salim Essa, arranged by Mr Colin Matjila, at Monte Casino in Johannesburg. On that occasion, Regiments did not succeed in obtaining a contract it had wanted from Eskom. This time around, in December 2015, it seems they did, in collaboration with the new management at Eskom, under Mr Molefe and Mr Singh.

396. Significantly, the items of work for Regiments under 'Balance Sheet Optimisation and Cash Unlocking Initiatives' included:

	Ms Mothepu's affidavit	Last proposal emailed to Mr Koko
1	Insurance claims management for the Duvha Unit 3 Recovery Project	Insurance claims management for the Duvha Unit 3 Recovery Project
2	Rebuild – Duvha Unit 3 Recovery Project to recover the 600MW capacity loss	Rebuild – Duvha Unit 3 Recovery Project to recover the 600MW capacity loss

11	Hybrid Capital Issuance	Hybrid Capital Issuance

397. One of the emails from Mr Koko to Business Man on Saturday, 08 August 2015 at 22:20, related specifically to online vending, and attached a Submission Document signed by Mr Koko himself as Group Executive on 8 August 2015. In fact, the three emails that Mr Koko sent to Business Man on 20 July 2015, all related to the development of the Top Engineers Programme and the appointment of McKinsey as a consultant. This could certainly not have been communications with Dr Ngubane, who has in any event denied ever receiving such emails from Mr Koko. Mr Koko sent these emails to Business Man during the course of the MSA negotiations.

398. The negotiations with McKinsey recommenced on 28 July 2015, eight days after Mr Koko's return from suspension. Mr Koko, as a member of the Steering Committee, was the Eskom lead official responsible for completion of the Duvha insurance claim and to advise on the appointment of the Master Vending Agent. Mr Singh was the Eskom lead official in the Issuance of Hybrid Capital, arrangement of long-term debt facilities, arrangement and negotiation of working capital facilities, and the sale of Eskom Finance Company, all items identified by Ms Mothepu as falling under Regiments' portion of the work. Ms Mothepu has identified some of these items as initiatives that were added to the MSA original proposal by Mr Koko and Mr Singh, such as online vending, Duvha 3 insurance claim and rebuild, and the Hitachi Insurance settlement, as mentioned in an exchange of emails between herself and Mr Koko and Mr Mabelane on 30 November 2015 (copied to Eric Wood, Vikas Sagar, Asanda Smith, Faheema Badat, Grant Joseph and Mahommed Bobat).

399. Mr Koko sought to dispute these emails on the basis that the matters referred to in the emails did not fall under his division. He sought to contend that the email of 30 November 2015 was addressed not to him, but to his PA. His denials do not make sense because it is inconceivable that Ms Mothepu would have written as she did if she had not had any prior discussions with Mr Koko on matters referred to in her emails.

400. The evidence around the purported conclusion and termination of the MSA shows otherwise. The unjustified and irregular payments made to Trillian after approval by SteerCo all stand in stark contrast to his own portrayal of an innocent man. Mr Koko colluded and collaborated with his colleagues and external parties, such as Mr Salim Essa and Mr Eric Wood, to siphon money out of Eskom to Mr Essa's entity, Trillian.

401. On behalf of McKinsey, Dr Weiss and Mr Sagar led the negotiations from May to October 2015, with a final workstream regarding the Balance Sheet Optimisation still being negotiated by Regiments, led by Mr Eric Wood, into November 2015. On 21 October 2015, the BTC approved a submission authorising the Eskom team to conclude the negotiations of the MSA. The submission to the BTC was signed off by Mr Charles Kalima, Mr Govender and Mr Koko on 6 October 2015. Permission for the sole source and at-risk based contracting approaches had still not been sought or achieved, although the submission states that it may be required. Mr Koko has stressed that he knew it was required and had insisted that the submission stress this point. At the meeting, Mr Neo Tsholanku, Head of Legal, apparently advised the BTC that this was required.

402. The submission states that if the contract value exceeded R1.2 billion then it would need to be reported to the Minister of Public Enterprises. This was never done. The MSA was described as having an "R0.0" costed budget, reflecting that it was supposed to be 'self-funding' from savings that were to be made, and never attempts to provide a valuation or to place a cap on the payments that could be made under the contract. This contravened National Treasury regulations. Most extraordinarily, the submission sought approval for a R475 million down-payment to be made upfront to McKinsey, despite the lack of budget and the fact that the risk-based approach was supposed to mean that payment would only be made if Eskom realised actual savings. Further, this meant that Eskom would be making payment without having received any service yet from McKinsey.

403. With no contract and only an acceptance letter in place, McKinsey began working on the Turnaround Programme from January 2016. Regiments were not part of any formal arrangement, yet according to Ms Mothepu, Mr Singh told them that he would undertake to get the necessary approvals from National Treasury and that he wanted them to work concurrently whilst this took place; which it appears McKinsey and Regiments did from around November or December 2015. Moreover, Mr Koko also appears to have informed them that Eskom had requested the National Treasury to approve their "confinement" appointment.

404. Approval was never sought nor obtained from the National Treasury for the MSA as demonstrated in email correspondence.

405. It is no insignificant matter that Dr Wiess says he understood from his McKinsey colleagues that Mr Singh had spoken positively about engaging Regiments at Eskom based on his experience with their work at Transnet. When confronted with this evidence, Mr Singh, clearly unable to maintain a consistent version, firstly denied that he had recommended Regiments to McKinsey, but later conceded that he would have done so and that this was "a normal thing to happen". The minutes of a special Board meeting held on 10 September 2015 reflects the resolutions to appoint McKinsey & Company as a sole partner and duly authorising the Group Executive: Technology and Commercial to delegate further and take necessary steps to effect this resolution.

406. There were further legal difficulties with the Corporate Plan Contract, namely that National Treasury's approval process required the end-user to do a gap analysis before considering the appointment of a consultant. However, Ms Mothepu has testified how Eskom's own teams had the expertise and skills to perform the duties that Regiments and later Trillian were to perform. Mr Amankwah also confirms in his affidavit that Eskom had internal resources and personnel who were experienced in such matters. It was therefore unnecessary for Mr Singh and Mr Koko to have McKinsey and Regiments appointed to render services in relation to the Corporate Plan.

407. Mr Koko signed the acceptance letter on Eskom's behalf on 29 September 2015, but Mr Mabelane purported to sign the contract only on 4 May 2016 – well after services were purportedly delivered and payment made. In any event, Mr Mabelane failed to properly sign the contract where he was required to sign, and only signed the Schedule of Deviations. As a result, the purported services were rendered without any valid contract in place. Eskom required McKinsey to have an SDL partner, but no partner was named in the contract. McKinsey chose to have Regiments work on aspects of this contract, presenting them as their SDL partner, but had no subcontracting agreement with Regiments.

408. The R30.6 million paid to Trillian was apparently not just for the Funding Plan work, but for the overall Corporate Plan work, and according to Mr Singh represents 30% of the just under R100 million contract. Moreover, it appears it was Regiments, not Trillian that did the Corporate Plan work, between October and December 2015, in addition to the Funding Plan work of January/ February 2016.

409. The Board had approved the request for a contract duration of eight months. However, the purported contract was concluded for a duration of six months, from 1 October 2015 to 31 March 2016. This period was still cut short, as the contact endured only until February 2016. Despite the shortened duration, McKinsey was remunerated as if the contract had run for the entire eight-month period. McKinsey was paid R78.6 million and Trillian (not Regiments) was paid R30.6 million, despite the fact that Trillion only had two employees at the time and neither of them had done billable work for Eskom during this time. Mr Wood himself would only officially leave Regiments by end February 2016 and join Trillian on 1 March 2016.

410. The invoice dated 31 January 2016, was sent from Trillian to Mr Singh directly by email dated 3 February 2016, to which was also attached a covering letter dated 29 January 2016, (bearing the signature of Ms Goodson, who claims that it was her electronic signature that was used, and she is did not draft the letter). The letter indicated that Trillian did not have the "balance sheet available to furnish its share of the "down-payment guarantee required on the Eskom/McKinsey mandate" and proposed that the requirement for Trillian to lodge such guarantee be waived. Additionally, it was stated that "Trillian needs to be in a position to invoice Eskom directly simultaneously with McKinsey for all fees on contracts where McKinsey is appointed to lead and Trillian is the Supplier Development partner". This was based on the rationale that if Trillian had to invoice McKinsey only after McKinsey had invoiced Eskom, there would be "significant cash flow pressure for Trillian".

411. A letter written by McKinsey Senior Partner, Mr Vikas Sagar, on 9 February 2016, to Mr Prish Govender of Eskom, authorised direct payment to Trillian, the subcontractor. However, this letter has been denounced by McKinsey as containing inaccuracies and, therefore, misleading. McKinsey has especially rejected the assertion that Trillian was its sub-contractor on the Corporate Plan and tendered evidence that after it investigated the matter it emerged that the letter was prepared at the request of both Eskom and Trillian, and that it initiated a disciplinary action against Mr Sagar, who was dismissed. He lodged an internal appeal against his dismissal but resigned before the appeal could be dealt with.

412. Mr Singh sought to contend that Eskom had a policy allowing direct payment to sub-contractors in certain conditions to ensure sub-contractors got paid their due, but never produced a copy of such policy. Ms Jainthree Sankar, Senior Manager in Contracts Management at Eskom, has confirmed in an affidavit to the Commission that Eskom's procurement and SCM policies contain no clause for direct payment to sub-contractors. Mr Koko was adamant that no such policy as alleged by Mr Singh existed and that he had refused to approve the payment of the R30.6 million invoice, because Trillian had no contract with Eskom, and that it was McKinsey who had to arrange payment to Trillian based on whatever relationship there was between them.

413. Mr Singh appears to have been aware that Regiments was working on the Corporate Plan in December 2015; but he has sought to argue that he thought Regiments were seconding staff to Trillian. However, Mr Singh admits he had no evidence at any point that this was in fact the case, or evidence that Regiments were sub-contracting their work to Trillian. Mr Singh ultimately asserts that he never approved the Trillian invoice, which he merely sent it on for verification and payment by others, thus seeking to pass responsibility on to others.

414. It is inconceivable that Mr Singh would even forward the invoice for processing when he knew or ought to have known that Trillian was not a subcontractor to McKinsey and that it certainly did not have a contract with Eskom. A very telling comment relayed by Mr Andre Pillay, former Head of Eskom Treasury, is that apparently Mr Eric Wood once boasted to him that they could be given any work at Eskom, even sweeping floors, and Mr Anoj Singh would find a way to pay them.

415. On or about 14 April 2016, Trillian was paid R30.6 million, under the guise that it was McKinsey's BBBEE partner, when in fact it was not, as McKinsey had officially rejected Trillian as an SDL partner, and Eskom and Trillian knew this as from 30 March 2016.

416. By January 2016, not only were the National Treasury and shareholder approvals for the MSA outstanding, but the contract for the MSA also appears not to have been in place. According to Dr Weiss, he received the contract, for signature on behalf of McKinsey, only towards the end of September or early October 2016. The contract purports to show Mr Mabelane as having signed for Eskom on 7 January 2016, and Dr Weiss on 11 January 2016.

417. The long delay in receiving the contract and then the back-dating of the signing is of enormous significance. Firstly, it meant that McKinsey began working with no contract in place, and thus they and any partner working alongside them had no legal basis for doing the work. Secondly, Eskom was permitting and facilitating McKinsey and Trillian to begin working, under the pretext that Eskom required urgent assistance, whilst knowing that there was no contract in place and that huge resources were being deployed by McKinsey. Mr Singh and other Eskom executives have denied knowing that the contract with McKinsey was not yet in place.

418. However, there are numerous references in both internal Eskom documents, Steering Committee documents and correspondence between Mr Singh himself and McKinsey that indicate that this was indeed still an outstanding matter. In a letter to Dr Weiss dated 19 February 2016, Mr Singh refers to the 'proposed contract' and lists items that remain to be resolved so that the signing of the 'proposed contract' can take place. Dr Weiss responded by letter dated 25 February 2016 also referring to the Top Consultants Programme as "our proposal to serve Eskom", with a clear indication that the contract had not yet been concluded, much less with a BBBEE partner.

419. The following month, McKinsey ultimately informed Eskom, by letter dated 30 March 2016, that it would not partner with Trillian. This letter also makes it plain that the MSA had yet not been concluded as at that date, referring to it still as "the draft of the Services Level Agreement between Eskom and McKinsey". The letter indicated that Trillian had failed to meet a set of criteria and that the partnership had not been approved by McKinsey's global risk and legal teams.

420. Eskom, particularly Mr Singh, appears to have supported the switch to working with Trillian. Most importantly, however, was that McKinsey's corporate governance would not allow a contract to be forged with Trillian before a due diligence was performed on the company, and when this was done unfortunately Trillian failed, as Mr Salim Essa's ownership was identified and he was flagged as a Politically Exposed Person (PEP). Further, as apparent from Dr Weiss' letter, Trillian repeatedly failed to provide the required information, including confirmation of the company's BBBEE status, despite McKinsey's numerous requests.

421. At the end of March 2016 when McKinsey officially informed Eskom of their rejection of Trillian as an SDL partner, according to Ms Mothepu, Mr Singh was very upset about this and begged McKinsey to reconsider, but Mr Singh denies this.

422. Nonetheless, the Transnet evidence shows how Mr Singh and Dr Wood (under Regiments) continuously contrived to work closely together under a series of irregular contracts. In fact, Mr Yeboah-Amankwah of McKinsey has stated that when McKinsey was looking for a BEE partner to work with at Transnet, after their first choice was not possible, Mr Singh had suggested Regiments. Indeed, Mr Singh appears to have played a key role in negotiating for a McKinsey-Regiments contract at Eskom even when he was still at Transnet. Mr Singh was already working with Dr Woods' team (as Regiments) during 2015, under a second small fixed-price contract (in regard to the Corporate Plan) that was put in place with McKinsey, presenting themselves as McKinsey's SDL partner.

423. The modus operandi of Regiments and thereafter, Trillian, across many SOEs is that Mr Salim Essa was essentially the "rainmaker" who would secure a contract with an SOE or a state entity for a major contracting party in return for Regiments/Trillian being sub-contracted as their BEE partner. Mr Essa wielded influence over certain top executives at the SOEs and in return he received a large share of Regiments/Trillian's earnings. Indeed, emails show Mr Essa was being sent important insider information from Mr Koko in 2015 on the MSA and other related matters at Eskom.

424. Most crucially, there is email evidence of Mr Essa needing a fee arrangement to be settled with McKinsey, through Mr Sagar, before he could set up a particular meeting for McKinsey at Eskom with 'Brian' (Molefe), in November 2015. This shows that (1) Mr. Sagar knew that Mr Essa was behind Trillian; (2) Mr Essa was involved in arranging meetings for Mr Sagar and Dr Weiss to meet Mr Brian Molefe; (3) Mr Sagar dealt directly with Mr Essa in relation to the proposed appointment of McKinsey and Trillian at Eskom; (4) Mr. Essa had some influence over Mr Molefe and Mr Sagar and was trying to exploit that influence in relation to McKinsey's position at Eskom, and (5) this was a favour being offered on condition of a favourable fee split for Trillian.

Purported termination of MSA

425. On 7 June 2016, the day of the third SteerCo meeting, being a meeting after Eskom had been informed of McKinsey's decision not to partner with Trillian, the Eskom executives convened a closed session meeting, chaired by Mr Singh. As per the minutes of the closed meeting, the session was convened at Mr Singh's request apparently to raise concerns about the sole source method which they themselves had used to appoint McKinsey to the MSA.

426. The reason given for termination was a complete farce, as Mr Koko and Mr Singh proceeded in September 2015 to compile a motivation for sole sourcing, despite Eskom Internal Consulting Unit's advice, back in June 2015, that a sole source for the scope of work proposed for McKinsey was unjustified, as McKinsey was not the sole provider of consulting services in the market. Therefore, this could not have been the real reason for termination of the MSA. It is reasonable to conclude that the termination was underpinned by these executives' disappointment by McKinsey's decision not to subcontract their friend (Mr Essa)'s company, Trillian.

427. Owing to the premature termination of the contract concluded to run for three years, payments to McKinsey (and Trillian) could not have been based on realised savings, as was envisaged by the risk-based appointment, and such payments would have no legal justification, as the MSA had not been concluded. In fact, the MSA was never concluded, as it was "terminated" before McKinsey could sign off on it. Therefore, in recommending compensation to McKinsey, the executives were acting in blatant violation of Eskom's interests and incurred fruitless and wasteful expenditure in breach of the provisions of the PFMA.

428. The submission was presented to the BTC at its meeting of 21 June 2016. Only an extract of the minutes has been obtained, signed by Ms Daniels on 8 November 2016, recording the BTC's resolution for termination of the MSA. However, the Eskom executives issued McKinsey with a letter of termination on 16 June 2016, five days before the abovementioned BTC meeting. There had been no Board decision on 9 June 2016 terminating the MSA. Mr Mabelane says reference to this date stemmed from his understanding from Mr Singh and Mr Govender that the Board had given the green light to have the contact cancelled. But this cannot be true as from the evidence it is apparent that all these executives acted in such close collaboration with each other that Mr Mabelane would or ought to have known that there was no Board decision at the time when he issued the termination letter.

429. Four days later, Mr Mabelane addressed another letter to McKinsey, dated 20 June 2016, in which he, once again, advised McKinsey that "based on the Board decision to cancel the contract, Eskom would reimburse McKinsey for the costs up to and until 8 August 2016". This was also prior to the BTC meeting on 21 June 2016, without any guarantee, objectively speaking, that the BTC would approve the termination. Therefore, at the time of Mr Mabelane's two letters to McKinsey, the purported decisions to terminate the MSA and to compensate McKinsey were made, not by Eskom's Board or BTC, but by the Eskom executives who served on SteerCo.

430. On 21 June 2016, Dr Weiss responded to Mr Mabelane by noting the decision to terminate but rejecting the offer to reimburse McKinsey on a cost basis only. McKinsey adopted this attitude despite knowing that it had not signed the MSA; which only happened in early October 2016, when Dr Weiss received a copy from Mr Mabelane and backdated it to 11 January 2016. Dr Weiss says that at that stage he did not even expect any further payment from Eskom, and yet he went along and McKinsey issued an invoice which Eskom paid on 22 February 2017. It is significant that in his affidavit, Dr Weiss states that by early June 2016 McKinsey and Eskom had not decided on any alternative SDL partner, and in fact never did, until Eskom's purported termination of the MSA.

431. Despite McKinsey and Eskom officials working for two months on a new contracting approach to the SDL partnering, whereby McKinsey would pay a range of alternative BEE contractors, Eskom executives on SteerCo decided to "terminate" the contract, by letter dated 16 June 2016, signed by Mr Mabelane, even before they could obtain a BTC approval for termination. This negates the urgency and importance of the case that had been argued for sole-sourcing McKinsey to assist Eskom, and the significant investment of time by numerous Eskom officials, including the top executives, to negotiate over the proposal. The official reasons given to the BTC very opaquely referenced concerns about the "mechanics" of the turnaround programme that McKinsey had not addressed, and there was reference to a concern that National Treasury was starting to review Eskom's contracts with McKinsey. Indeed, according to Mr Singh, the National Treasury scrutiny was triggered by an audit finding over the use of sole-sourcing and the lack of a quantifiable value to the contract with McKinsey, which could trigger a finding of 'irregular expenditure'.

Eskom provides unlawful settlement payments to McKinsey and Trillian

432. Eskom then set about compensating not just McKinsey, but also Trillian, for the time spent on the Turnaround Programme, as well as compensation for the early cancellation. Between August 2016 and February 2017, Eskom made total payments of just under R1.6 billion to McKinsey and Trillian for a purported MSA contract that was backdated after termination. The various payments are shown in the table below:

Date	Supplier Name	Value (Excl. VAT)	Value (Inc. VAT)
12-Aug-2016	Trillian Management Consulting	R99 353 100,00	R113 262 534,00
12-Aug-2016	Trillian Management Consulting	R107 200 000,00	R122 208 000,00
15-Aug-2016	McKinsey & Co	R596 951 648,25	R680 524 879,00
20-Dec-2016	Trillian MC	R134 123 548,47	R152,760, 000.00
22-Feb-2017	Trillian MC	R154 677 525,69	R176,332,379,29
Total		R1 397 504 748.25	R1 593 155 413.01

433. The executives did not provide any breakdown on how any of the alleged amounts were arrived at. The MSA entitled McKinsey to a 10.55% fee in respect of "Recurring Realised Impact Amounts" and 10.8% in respect of a "Once Off Realised Impact Amount". The alleged potential liability of R2.84 billion, equates to about 15.27% of the alleged R18.6 billion said to have been achieved. Thus, this amount of R2.84 billion, claimed to be inclusive of payment to the BBBEE partner, was simply made up to instil fear and mislead the BTC. The MSA was a nullity from inception and McKinsey had no BBBEE partner entitled to any payment from Eskom. The BTC does not seem to have cared about these realities, not even enquired about who the undisclosed BBBEE partner was. Its resolution simply reproduced the wording of the submission for approval of the BTC. The resolution was signed by Ms Daniels on 8 November 2016. The alleged reinvestment does not make sense and has not been explained.

434. Further payments were made in December 2015 and February 2017, as per the table above. These payments were made in the face of both internal and external advice to Eskom that this would be potentially unlawful and that there had been little value added by Trillian. Oliver Wyman and Marsh (OWM), international consultants who had been hired by Eskom in November 2016 to do a technical review of the MSA, gave an assessment of the claimed value and payments due on the work done on the MSA by the time of the termination, and advised against any payments to McKinsey and Trillian pending a legal review of the MSA and contracting process of the overall programme.

435. OWM were particularly critical of the 'gain share' calculation of the work performed by Trillian at Majuba Power Station. OWM issued a draft report on 9 December 2016, followed by a final report on 15 December 2016, recommending a legal review in both reports before any further payment is made to McKinsey and its BBBEE partner (which McKinsey did not have).

436. However, on 13 December 2016, prior to OWM's final report, the BTC met and approved a further payment of R134 million (excluding VAT) to Trillian. At this meeting, Mr Zethembe Khoza (BTC Chairperson) and Ms Daniels (the Company Secretary) falsely informed the BTC that Cliff Dekker Hofmeyr (CDH) had done a legal review and concluded that Eskom should seek settlement with McKinsey. Eskom nevertheless made payment of R152.7 million (including VAT) to Trillian on 20 December 2016.

The invoice from Trillian was authorised for payment by Mr Prish Govender and Mr Mabelane, who both signed their approval on 14 December 2016.

437. On 8 February 2017, the BTC approved another payment of R460 million to both McKinsey and Trillian in full and final settlement of all claims in terms of the MSA. This approval was also made without Eskom having received a legal review on the MSA. CDH had, in fact, not yet finalised its legal review, and only submitted its memorandum on 17 February 2017, in which it raised concerns regarding the conclusion of the MSA. It would appear that CDH was not aware that the contract had also been back-dated, after it had been "terminated", as CDH had apparently been given a limited set of documents and information to scrutinise at the time.

438. It is necessary to refer to certain events prior to CDH's preliminary legal review on 17 February 2017. On or about 12 February 2017, Ms Daniels asked CDH to draft for Eskom a settlement letter with McKinsey. CDH provided a draft letter on 15 February 2017 by email to Ms Daniels and Mr Govender. On 17 February 2017, Mr Mabelane signed the letter as a settlement agreement between Eskom and McKinsey. McKinsey countersigned on the same day. Also on the same day, McKinsey issued an invoice to Eskom, addressed to Mr Prish Govender, for a final settlement amount due of R348 067 620.72.

439. Trillian, on the other hand, had already issued its invoice of R176 332 379.29 to Eskom two days earlier, on 15 February 2017, even before the purported settlement agreement could be signed. The invoice was addressed to Mr Mabelane. These invoices were approved for payment by both Mr Govender and Mr Mabelane and payment made to McKinsey and Trillian on 22 February 2017. Therefore, when the final legal review from CDH was received on 28 February 2017, the water under bridge had already dried up. The collusion and corruption on the part of Eskom executives, with external third parties (Trillian and McKinsey), was blatant.

Implicated parties

440. The focus will primarily be on the Eskom executives who carry a large responsibility for the MSA. Mr Singh, Mr Molefe and Mr Koko are all central to the origin and furtherance of a scheme at Eskom, designed to exploit Eskom and benefit Mr Salim Essa's company, Trillian. The so-called "on-Boarding" meetings McKinsey and Regiments had with Mr Singh and Mr Molefe, from May 2015, just shortly after Mr Molefe's arrival at Eskom but long before Mr Singh could be seconded to Eskom, presented key moments at which the scheme was conceived and hatched, based on the McKinsey/Regiments model of operation at Transnet with which both Mr Singh and Mr Molefe were familiar.

441. Therefore, the allegation that Mr Singh, and perhaps Mr Molefe, would have introduced Regiments at Eskom is not at all far-fetched. In fact, on the evidence, it is profoundly reasonable to conclude that he did. To that end, Mr Molefe and Mr Singh pursued "negotiations" with McKinsey and Trillian through secret, off-site meetings to agree to work on a range of issues together before any formal contracting processes even began. This would eventually result in them and other Eskom officials, e.g., Mr Kalima, Mr Govender, Mr Mabelane and Mr Koko, taking part in signing off on submissions to obtain Board approvals for the contracting process which they knew was irregular and unlawful.

442. Correspondence from McKinsey on the proposal to render financial work at Eskom places Mr Koko in the picture of negotiations of both the MSA and the 2015 contract in relation to the Corporate Plan. The evidence of Mr Mabelane is to the effect that the idea to employ McKinsey to develop an Internal Engineering Consulting Unit was the brainchild of Mr Koko.

443. From McKinsey's proposal on the finance work, it is apparent that both Mr Koko and Mr Singh would have commenced discussions and negotiations with McKinsey on both the MSA and the Corporate Plan even before April 2015. As the proposed work activities could allegedly not all fit under the MSA, these executives contrived another means, i.e., the Corporate Plan, to facilitate a quick appointment of McKinsey, on a sole source basis, with a last minute requirement to subcontract 30% of the contract value to a Black owned supplier.

444. It is no surprise that the submission to the BTC was prepared by both Mr Koko and Mr Singh, as parties to the negotiations, and Mr Koko signed off on the Acceptance Letter to McKinsey. It soon transpired that the Black-owned supplier was Regiments, which Mr Singh had spoken positively about and recommended to McKinsey. Mr Essa was, according to Ms Mothepu's evidence, a business development partner to Regiments. He secured government contracts for Regiments, and indeed tried to do so in 2014 at Eskom but fell short. The R30.6 million payment by Eskom in respect of the Corporate Plan followed Mr Essa to Trillian. There was no justification for this payment, nor for the "belief" that Regiments or Trillian was a BBBEE partner to McKinsey. This was corruption, plain and simple.

445. Mr Mabelane and Mr Govender were complicit in the scheme, as they both approved Trillian's R30.6 million invoice for payment directly to Trillian. Mr Govender was also one of the three Eskom officials who signed off on Mr Koko and Mr Singh's submission to the BTC. Mr Govender participated in formulating flawed justifications for the sole sourcing of the MSA, with Mr Mabelane and Ms Daniels supporting this.

446. Mr Koko, Mr Singh and Mr Molefe were present at Board meetings where the potential irregularities of the sole-sourced 'at-risk' contract and the need for National Treasury approvals was discussed, yet Board approvals to proceed with contracting process was requested and obtained, nonetheless. Mr Koko provided confidential information on Eskom's negotiation position on the MSA to "Business Man" (Mr Essa) and took instructions from external parties on additional items to be included under the scope of the MSA, so that the extent of contracting work would be expanded.

447. Mr Koko put pressure on Eskom managers not to hold up the finalisation of the MSA despite lack of Treasury approval. Mr Koko, Mr Singh, Mr Molefe, Mr Prish Govender engaged McKinsey and Trillian to begin working before the contracting process was complete. Mr Singh, Mr Koko and Mr Mabelane, were all complicit in the false statement of Mr Govender that Treasury had approved Eskom's risk-based appointment of McKinsey.

448. Mr Mabelane, without negating that Mr Koko and Mr Singh were both complicit in his conduct, signed off on an acceptance letter for McKinsey without having obtained approval for deviation. Mr Mabelane and Mr Singh concealed the fact that the contract was not signed in January 2016 and was only signed and back-dated much later, after its purported "termination".

449. Mr Singh, Mr Mabelane and Mr Govender, when the hiring of Trillian as McKinsey's BBBEE partner did not materialise, were part of cancelling McKinsey's contract. Mr Singh and Mr Molefe are responsible for allowing payment of invoices that should not have been paid; the payments were unlawful due to the flawed contracting process and involved overpayment to Trillian and McKinsey.

450. Mr Zethembe Khoza and Ms Daniels lied to the BTC at its meeting on 13 December 2016 that a legal review had been obtained advising Eskom to agree to a settlement with McKinsey, when no such review had been received. The conclusion is inescapable that both Mr Khoza and Ms Daniels would either have been part of or, at least, aware of the scheme above perpetrated against Eskom by Mr Koko, Mr Singh, Mr Molefe, Mr Mabelane and Mr Govender.

451. Consequently, the purported conclusion of the MSA and subsequent termination thereof were all a sham, in which Mr Molefe, Mr Koko, Mr Singh, Mr Mabelane and Mr Govender were the primary role-players. The submission, titled Feedback Report, prepared and presented by Eskom executives (Mr Kalima, Mr Govender and Mr Koko), for the conclusion of the MSA was all premised on false and misleading information; the result of a carefully orchestrated and well thought through plan. These executives purported to conclude the MSA, following a process they knew was irregular, and terminated it on spurious grounds even before it could be concluded and before the BTC could approve a decision to terminate it. They offered payment to McKinsey and its "BBBEE partner", Trillian, prior to a BTC decision on the matter, whilst knowing that McKinsey did not have a BBBEE partner, and that Trillian was not McKinsey's BBBEE partner. The MSA (like the 2015 contract) was a charade designed to siphon money out of Eskom to third parties, particularly Trillian. Eskom's money was expended on a contract that never existed. The expenditure was blatantly wasteful and the irregularities pertaining thereto gross.

452. Similarly, in regard to the Corporate Plan, the Eskom executives committed gross irregularities and breaches of the law. Mr Koko and Mr Singh championed negotiations with McKinsey, even before Mr Singh was seconded to Eskom, and ultimately prepared a submission to the Board motivating for an appointment of McKinsey under the guise that there was 'urgent finance and strategy work' to be done and only McKinsey had the 'know-how' to render the service, when according to Eskom's Internal Consulting Unit, this was not the case. Mr Koko and Mr Singh pursued a sole-sourcing contract without obtaining permission from National Treasury for a deviation and where there appeared to be no justifiable case for the work to be done under the contract.

453. Mr Mabelane and Mr Prish Govender acquiesced in the conduct of Mr Koko and Mr Singh in the pursuit of McKinsey's appointment and were thus complicit in the furtherance of a scheme calculated to exploit Eskom financially. Mr Koko signed the Acceptance Letter with McKinsey for the contract, and Mr Mabelane purported to sign the contract well after its end date and, in any event, failed to append his signature on the right place, such that the contract never came into effect. Mr Singh engaged Regiments to conduct work for Eskom when Eskom had no contract with Regiments.

454. Mr Singh, as the GCFO, allowed payment of the R30.6 million invoice directly to Trillian that was unwarranted, as Trillian did not conduct work for Eskom and did not have a contract with Eskom or McKinsey.

455. Another disturbing factor is the apparently fraudulent nature of the invoice sent by Trillian to justify their R595 million share of the settlement. According to Ms Mothepu, the calculations involved grossly inflating the time Trillian employees spent at Eskom, such as allocating 180 days to her, which was not physically possible as she was only with Trillian Financial Advisory for four months and did not even spend all of her working hours on Eskom. In total, R14.7 billion of Eskom's contracts are calculated to have been afflicted by state capture according to the Flow of Funds' investigation and, of this, McKinsey's MSA and Corporate Plan contracts account for R1.1 billion, and related payments to Trillian account for R595.2 million from these two contracts.

456. All the above mentioned individuals colluded together to ensure that at least two large contracts were irregularly awarded to McKinsey and their development supplier, which was intended at first to be Regiments and then Trillian. Substantive payments were made unlawfully and irregularly to these parties, who benefitted unduly at the expense of Eskom.

457. Despite these events and other allegations of corruption becoming public knowledge, the former (2014) Eskom Board and senior executives repeatedly denied wrongdoing and even actively intervened or stopped Eskom from taking the necessary legal steps to review and set aside these contracts and their associated payments. The corporate governance failures inherent in these events triggered, amongst other things, a qualified audit report, a backlash from Eskom's creditors, severe liquidity problems that threatened Eskom's ability to generate electricity to the South African community and downgrades of Eskom's credit rating.

KEY FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The recovery programme of the 2018 Board

458. The late Mr Jabu Mabuza, who was the Chairman of the 2018 Eskom Board, concluded his evidence with the observation that there had previously been within Eskom a culture of corrupt practices, mismanagement and malfeasance that had been inculcated within Eskom by certain individuals over a period of time. The issues of impropriety within Eskom seemingly extended beyond the matters under investigation by the Commission. This was clearly a pervasive culture and was sanctioned from within the Board, the executive and senior management.

459. The 2018 Board concluded that it had to strike a balance between dealing with the past irregularities which it found at Eskom and building a capable, strong organisation able to carry out its public mandate. The recovery programme in the wake of the qualified audit for the year ended 31 March 2017 was a key part of Eskom's efforts to rectify past irregularities.

460. This recovery programme saw a greater number of irregularities surface as the 2018 Board came to understand that: procurement processes and people were at the centre of the challenges; internal controls had not been effective; the system and practices were not set up for proper accountability and consequence management; some of Eskom's policies were too vague and lent themselves to loopholes that could be abused; and there had been lapses in governance because the roles of the shareholder, the Board and the executive often overlapped and flouted best corporate governance practices. Any process of renewal and ridding the organisation of impropriety, whether state capture-related or not, needed to adequately address these deficiencies.

Recommendations

461. The Eskom Board is encouraged to continue with its efforts to strike a balance between dealing with past Eskom irregularities and building a capable, strong organisation able to carry out its public mandate and to take its rightful place in the international family of similar organisations as it once did in the past.

462. The Board should report regularly to the Executive Authority and Parliament on the effectiveness of the recovery programme.

463. In addition to its reporting on the effectiveness of the recovery programme and other reporting responsibilities that are required by the Companies Act and the PFMA, the Eskom Board should particularly conduct (at least annually) an in-depth and objective evaluation of Eskom's application of the King IV principles.

464. The outcome of such objective evaluation of the effective application of the King IV principles at Eskom should be reported to the Executive Authority and Parliament, and published in the Eskom Integrated Report and on the Eskom website for public information.

465. The Eskom Board should re-evaluate the effectiveness of the Eskom Anti-Corruption Strategy, including consequence management for non-compliance and for unethical and poor performance. The Board should formalise and institutionalise the standard operating procedures relating to the implementation of the Anti-Corruption Strategy and take effective and appropriate disciplinary steps against anyone who:

    465.1 Contravenes or fails to comply with a provision of any laws

    465.2 Commits any act which undermines the financial management and internal control of the public entity; and 465.3 Makes or permits irregular expenditure or fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

The appointment of the 2014 Eskom Board

466. The evidence proves a scheme by the Guptas to capture Eskom, install the Guptas' selected officials in strategic positions within Eskom as members of the Board, the committees of the board and the executives, and then divert Eskom's assets to the Guptas' financial advantage. Central to the Guptas' scheme of state capture was President Zuma, whom the Guptas must have identified at a very early stage as somebody whose character was such that they could use him against his own people, his own country and his own government to advance their own business interests. President Zuma readily opened the doors for the Guptas to go into the SOEs and help themselves to the money and assets of the people of South Africa.

467. It is clear that from quite early in his first term President Zuma would do anything that the Guptas wanted him to do for them.

468. It is also quite clear that during President Zuma's term of office certain decisions which were supposed to be made within Government were made outside of Government and not with his party, the ANC, but with the Guptas.

469. This scheme frequently entailed communication among Minister Lynn Brown, her personal assistant and Mr Salim Essa, the owner of the "Business Man" email address.

470. In addition, a conclusion can be drawn that there was a relationship and communication between the Gupta network and a number of Eskom Board members.

Recommendations

471. The way members of Boards of state-owned companies are appointed cannot remain as it has been during all the years covered by the investigation of the Commission. The same applies to the appointment of CEOs and CFOs of these companies. The evidence heard by the Commission has revealed quite clearly that part of the reason why some of the state-owned companies have performed as badly as they have concerns the calibre of some of the people who are appointed as members of the Boards of these companies or who were their CEOs and CFOs.

The suspension of senior executives and appointment of acting executives

472. The evidence of Ms Daniels, Ms Dlamini and Mr Masango as a whole proves two things conclusively: firstly, that there was a scheme to remove from Eskom certain executives who occupied strategic positions whom the Gupta family believed would not co-operate with them in their plan to capture Eskom and steal taxpayers' money and to replace them with officials who would co-operate with them; and secondly, that Mr Koko was an integral component of the Gupta family's strategy to capture Eskom. Former President Zuma and Ms Myeni were witting participants in the scheme to oust the relevant Eskom executives and thus witting participants in the Gupta family's larger scheme to capture Eskom.

473. Following a Board meeting on 11 March 2015 addressed by Ms Brown, processes within Eskom were then put into operation by which first one, then three, then four officials were notified that the Board had decided to suspend them, but that the Board would hear them on the question of why they should not be suspended. These proceedings were conducted with extraordinary haste. By close of business on 11 March 2015, the processes by which the four executives were suspended had been completed.

474. It is plain that Mr Koko's suspension was a ruse. The Guptas and their associates must have identified Mr Koko much earlier as someone who could work with them to advance their capture of Eskom and, therefore, their business interests. They knew that, after the suspension, he would be allowed back at Eskom and they could rely on him. As it turned out, on the first day he was back at work, namely 20 July 2015, he came with a list of entities that he told Ms Daniels he received from his "principals", and he wasted no time in sending emails to Mr Salim Essa at the infoportal address. In the rest of 2015 and beyond Mr Koko continued to act in the interests of the Guptas and their associates in a number of instances rather than in the interests of Eskom.

475. The suspension of executives was a key component of the scheme from the outset. The only proper conclusion to be drawn is that the proposed inquiry was intended to act as cover for the suspension of the four executives. The primary purpose of the scheme was to install Mr Brian Molefe as Eskom's CEO and Mr Anoj Singh as the financial director because those who devised and implemented the scheme believed that Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Singh would favour the Gupta family and channel the resources of Eskom towards the Gupta family.

476. Members of the Eskom Board took part in the decision to suspend the executives because some must have known that it was part of the Gupta scheme and were happy to advance the agenda of the Guptas, while others may have simply done so to do the bidding of President Zuma and Ms Brown and not because they regarded the suspensions as in the interests of Eskom. Those Board members, with the exception of Mr Baloyi, therefore breached their fiduciary duties to Eskom.

Recommendations

477. Many decisions made by the 2014 Board of directors of Eskom were in breach of their duty in terms of section 50(1) and (2) as well as section 51 of the PFMA, including the decision to suspend the executives and the decision to push three of those executives out of Eskom and to pay them millions of Rands. The amounts paid out to the three executives were in the region of R18 million. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) consider the evidence that has already been collected by the Commission and the transcript of the evidence led in the Commission and allow such further investigations as may be necessary to be conducted with a view to the criminal prosecution of all the people still alive who were members of the 2014 Board who made or supported the decisions made by that Board in breach of section 50(1)(a) of the PFMA, including the decisions referred to above.

478. It is recommended that, in so far as this has not been done, serious consideration be given to instituting legal proceedings against all members of the 2014 Eskom Board, except Mr Baloyi, to recover all the financial losses that were suffered by Eskom as a result of decisions taken by the 2014 Board against the interests of Eskom.

479. On the evidence, it is clear that Adv. Ramatlhodi was moved from the portfolio of Mineral Resources to that of Public Service & Administration because he refused to co-operate with the Guptas and in regard to matters affecting the Guptas.

480. Viewed in its proper context, it is plain that he was removed from the position of Minister of Public Service & Administration because he did not support Mr Manyi's appointment as Director-General of the Department of Mineral Resources and would not agree to table a memorandum to Cabinet on the appointment of Mr Manyi.

481. It is quite clear on the evidence that Mr Mosebenzi Zwane was appointed Minister of Mineral Resources because the Guptas wanted him to be appointed to that position or because of his connection with the Guptas.

482. In relation to TOR 1.3, the appointment of Mr Zwane as a member of the National Assembly was preceded by the exchange of his CV between, inter alia, Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Duduzane Zuma (the son of former President Jacob Zuma).

483. Mr Zwane's appointment by virtue of his association with the Guptas is reinforced by the identities of the two persons whom he appointed as his advisors after he was appointed as Minister. The two persons were Mr Kuben Moodley and Mr Malcolm Mabaso, both of whom were proved to have business links with the Guptas.

484. In relation to TOR 1.8, though the appointment of advisors is restricted to the Ministry of Finance, there is no reason why it should not extend to other Ministries, such as the Department of Mineral Resources, implicating Mr Zwane in his appointment of advisors.

485. In relation to TOR 1.4, Mr Zwane facilitated the unlawful awarding of tenders or contracts by Eskom to the Gupta family.

Recommendations

486. It is recommended that Mr Zwane be investigated for misconduct in relation to TOR 1.4 and 1.8 above and that appropriate sanction be imposed.

The acquisition of Optimum Coal Mine (OCM) by Tegeta

487. The characterisation of the payment as a pre-payment for coal supplies was a sham. This is confirmed by the findings of a cash flow analysis, which show that the R659 million was paid towards the acquisition price of OCH by Tegeta, as was the R1.68 billion guarantee, which was used to prove to OCH bankers that Tegeta was good for the acquisition price. The context in which these payments were made, their timing and the urgency with which they were processed all demonstrate that the R659 million payment and the R1.68 billion guarantee were not made with the purpose of furthering the interests of Eskom. These were made with the single purpose of ensuring that the Guptas' deal in terms of which they acquired the Glencore coal interests did not fall through for want of finance on the part of the Guptas.

488. Once it is accepted that Messrs Molefe, Koko and Singh were Gupta agents, prepared when they were called on to do the Guptas' bidding, then the possibility that any of them did not know that the money was required to complete the purchase of shares transaction is small. There is no suggestion that any of them was misled as to the true purpose for which the money was needed.

489. There are therefore reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Anoj Singh may be guilty of the theft of this money from Eskom by false pretences or fraud, in that he led Eskom, through the officials who processed the payments, to believe that the payments were in the nature of pre-payments for coal, when in truth and fact they were needed to enable the Guptas to complete and save the share transaction. However, whether he is criminally guilty will be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction.

490. There are reasonable grounds to believe that all those Eskom officials who were party to or facilitated the acquisition by bringing pressure to bear on Glencore to dispose of its coal interests to the Guptas and were party to or facilitated payment of this very large sum of R659 million and the R1.68 billion guarantee may be guilty of theft and ought to face criminal charges.

Recommendations

491. All those Eskom officials who were party to or facilitated the acquisition by bringing pressure to bear on Glencore to dispose of its coal interests to the Guptas and were party to or facilitated payment of the sum of R659 million and the R1.68 billion guarantee are prima facie guilty of theft and ought to face criminal charges for such corruption-related conduct.

492. It is also recommended that the NPA should consider possible criminal prosecution of the members of the 2014 Board of Directors who supported the decision to pay this money on the grounds of breach of their obligations imposed on that Board by sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA.

493. The recommendation for criminal charges is particularly applicable to Messrs Singh and Koko, who by false pretences led Eskom, through the officials who processed the R659 million payment, to believe that the R659 million payment was in the nature of pre-payment for coal, as was the R1.68 billion pre-payment, later converted into a guarantee, when in truth and fact they knew that the prepayment and the guarantee were needed to enable the Guptas to complete and save the sale of share transaction.

494. Money laundering transactions need to be pursued further by the law enforcement agencies for further investigation and prosecution.

The irregular supply of coal to Eskom from Tegeta's Brakfontein Colliery

495. It is considered that the following parties are implicated in wrongdoing in regard to the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement: Mr Matshela Koko; Mr Vusi Mboweni; Dr Ayanda Nteta; Mr Ravindra Nath of Tegeta; Mr Jacques Roux of Tegeta; and Mr Tony Gupta of Tegeta.

496. Prima facie the evidence before the Commission, it may be concluded that:

    496.1 The Eskom officials listed above breached or violated legislation and Eskom policies by facilitating the unlawful awarding of the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement to Tegeta

    496.2 Their conduct in awarding the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement to a Gupta-owned entity, Tegeta, was vitiated by irregularities, corruption and undue influence; and 496.3 Their conduct involved abuse of position of power and undue influence on subordinates in order to unduly benefit the Gupta family in the retention of the Brakfontein Coal Supply Agreement with Tegeta; and their conduct potentially caused financial prejudice and loss to Eskom by virtue of non-compliant procurement of coal, thereby potentially causing Eskom to incur losses from sub-optimal power generation and / or impacting negatively on the Majuba Power Station generation infrastructure.

Legislative provisions breached

497. Eskom is a major public entity listed in Schedule 2 of the PFMA and is thus bound by the provisions of the PFMA.

498. Section 57 of the PFMA places certain obligations on officials of public entities.

499. The implicated Eskom officials listed above have prima facie acted in breach of section 57 of the PFMA in that they appear to have:

499.1 Failed to safeguard the financial interests of Eskom; and 499.2 Failed to take effective and appropriate steps to prevent irregular expenditure and fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

Recommendations

500. It is recommended that the NPA should consider the criminal prosecution of Mr Koko, Mr Mboweni, Dr Nteta and Mr Roux for possible contraventions of the PFMA and policies of Eskom.

501. Further, it is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should consider further investigation into determining whether the implicated parties acted in breach of the provisions of PRECCA (section 3 and / or section 4, section 12(1), and section 21).

The Huarong transaction

502. The attempt to commit Eskom to a contract with HEA providing for an upfront payment of a raising fee of some USD 24 million before any money was allegedly raised to lend to Eskom amounts to corruption.

503. It is little wonder that the Eskom Treasurer, Mr Pillay, resisted this aspect of the transaction so strongly. It remains unexplained why the then CFO, Mr Anoj Singh, who signed the term sheet, and the acting Group CEO, Mr Maritz, who signed the ALFA, should have promoted the transaction so unreservedly.

504. There does not appear to have been any justification for the signing of the term sheet. Signing the term sheet was not in accordance with Eskom's usual practice and it is difficult to see what benefit there was in legally committing Eskom to its terms. It seems as if the purpose in signing the term sheet was to push Eskom closer to HEA and afford HEA preferential treatment over its competitors for Eskom's business.

505. It does not appear to be in dispute that no Board approval was provided for the conclusion of the HEA transaction. This alone rendered the signed contract with HEA invalid. Fortunately, the invoice submitted by HEA was never paid and the HEA transaction therefore caused Eskom no direct loss.

506. Nevertheless, it would appear that there is at least a prima facie case of attempted theft or fraud against Mr Singh, who signed the term sheet, and Mr Maritz, who signed the contract documents on the strength of which the invoice for USD 21,888,000 was submitted to Eskom. It is possible that a similar case could be made against Mr Thomas of HEA.

Recommendations

507. It is recommended that the NPA consider criminal prosecution of at least a prima facie case of attempted theft or fraud against Mr Anoj, who signed the term sheet, and Mr Maritz, who signed the contract documents on the strength of which the invoice for USD 21,888,000 was submitted to Eskom.

508. The NPA should consider a similar case to be made against Mr Thomas of HEA.

The McKinsey, Trillian and Regiments contracts

The McKinsey and Eskom "contract"

509. The evidence above shows that, despite McKinsey and Eskom officials working for two months on a new contracting approach to the SDL partnering, in terms of which McKinsey would pay a range of alternative BEE contractors, Eskom executives on SteerCo decided to "terminate" the contract, by letter dated 16 June 2016, signed by Mr Mabelane, even before they could obtain Board Tender Committee approval for termination on 21 June 2016. This negates the urgency and importance of the case that had been argued for sole-sourcing McKinsey to assist Eskom and the significant investment of time by numerous Eskom officials, including its top executives, to negotiate the proposal.

510. The official reasons given to the Board Tender Committee opaquely referenced concerns about the "mechanics" of the Turnaround programme that McKinsey had not addressed, and there was reference to a concern that National Treasury was starting to review Eskom's contracts with McKinsey. Indeed, according to Mr Anoj Singh, the National Treasury scrutiny was triggered by an audit finding over the use of sole-sourcing and the lack of a quantifiable value to the contract with McKinsey, which could trigger a finding of "irregular expenditure" and appears to have made Eskom executives nervous.

Trillian and Regiments' work on the MSA / Turnaround programme

511. What actually took place with regard to Trillian's and Regiments' involvement was the following:

    511.1 On the "Procurement" work stream, Trillian made use of Cutting-Edge Commerce (Pty) Ltd, a subsidiary of the Gupta's Sahara group of companies, which had seven employees working at Eskom, who apparently presented themselves as Trillian employees.

    511.2 On the "Generation" work stream, Trillian brought in E-Gateway, a company that consisted of a few individuals brought in from abroad (United Arab Emirates and India).

    511.3 On the Majuba site, there was one E-Gateway individual deployed as a technical expert, who stayed less than a month before being asked to leave, as it was said that he was unable to add much value. Another individual claimed by Trillian to be working on site was never seen by the senior site manager; and a third apparently did little more than arrange some meetings. For all this, Trillian charged R100 million. Moreover, it is not clear why these E-Gateway personnel were even on site when Eskom had said they already had sufficiently qualified and experienced engineers and technical personnel.

    511.4 Indeed, Ms Goodson confirmed that Trillian did not have the capacity to do the work and made use of sub-contractors on the Turnaround programme (MSA).

512. Trillian did not participate in the remaining two work streams, "Primary Energy" and "Claims". Nevertheless, Regiments did work on the "Claims" work stream, and there is particular mention of the online vending initiative and insurance claims. However, according to Ms Mothepu, Eskom already had sufficient in-house expertise to manage these, and Eskom officials were already working on all these initiatives, some of which were near completion, whilst Regiments was not necessarily knowledgeable in these areas and apparently had to be briefed and guided by Eskom officials.

513. The only area where Trillian appears to have had expertise was in financial transactions, such as loan negotiations. However, here again, Eskom's large Treasury division was capable of doing the work itself.

Eskom provides settlement payments to McKinsey and Trillian that are unlawful

514. Eskom then set about compensating not just McKinsey, but also Trillian, for the time spent on the Turnaround programme, as well as providing compensation for the early cancellation. Between August 2016 and February 2017, Eskom made total payments of just under R1.6 billion to McKinsey and Trillian for a purported MSA contract that was backdated after "termination".

515. The R1.1 billion that McKinsey received between the MSA settlement and 2015 contract payments was nearly ten times what it had earned from Eskom in previous years.

516. Regiments was not paid for the work it had done under the Corporate Plan. Payment went to Trillian. All the payments to Trillian were approved and effected despite the fact that:

    516.1 Eskom did not have a contractual relationship with Trillian

    516.2 McKinsey had, with Eskom's knowledge, terminated any consideration of Trillian becoming its subcontractor or BBBEE partner under the MSA; and 516.3 Eskom policies and procedures did not provide for direct payment to subcontractors.

Eskom and McKinsey-Regiments-Trillian

MSA

517. Messrs Singh, Molefe and Koko were all central to the origin and furtherance of a scheme at Eskom, designed to exploit Eskom and benefit Mr Salim Essa's company, Trillian. The so-called "onboarding" meetings McKinsey and Regiments had with Messrs Singh and Molefe, from May 2015, just shortly after Mr Brian Molefe's arrival at Eskom but not long before Mr Anoj Singh could be seconded to Eskom, presented key moments at which the scheme was conceived and hatched, based on the McKinsey / Regiments model of operation at Transnet, with which both Mr Anoj Singh and Mr Brian Molefe were familiar. Therefore, the allegation that Mr Anoj Singh (and perhaps Mr Brian Molefe) would have introduced Regiments at Eskom is not at all far-fetched. In fact, on the evidence, it is palpably reasonable to conclude that he / they did.

518. To that end, Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Anoj Singh pursued "negotiations" with McKinsey and Trillian through secret, off-site meetings to agree to work on a range of issues together before any formal contracting processes even began. This would eventually result in them and other Eskom officials, for example, Messrs Kalima, Govender, Mabelane and Koko, taking part in signing off on submissions to obtain Board approval for a contracting process which they knew was irregular and unlawful.

519. From McKinsey's proposal on the finance work, it is apparent that both Mr Koko and Mr Anoj Singh would have commenced discussions and negotiations with McKinsey on both the MSA and the Corporate Plan even before April 2015. As the proposed work activities could allegedly not all fit under the MSA, these executives contrived another means, that is the Corporate Plan, to facilitate the quick appointment of McKinsey, on a sole source basis, with a last-minute requirement, but arguably key to the scheme, to subcontract 30% of the contract value to a black-owned supplier.

520. It is no surprise that the submission to the Board Tender Committee was prepared by both Mr Koko and Mr Singh, as parties to the negotiations, and that Mr Koko signed off on the acceptance letter to McKinsey. It soon transpired that the black-owned supplier was Regiments, which Mr Anoj Singh had spoken positively about and recommended to McKinsey. Mr Salim Essa was a business development partner to Regiments. He secured government contracts for Regiments, and indeed tried to do so in 2014 at Eskom but fell short. The R30.6 million payment by Eskom in respect of the Corporate Plan followed Mr Salim Essa to Trillian. There was no justification for this payment, nor for the belief that Regiments or Trillian was a BBBEE partner to McKinsey. This was corruption, plain and simple.

521. Mr Mabelane and Mr Govender were complicit in the scheme, as they both approved Trillian's R30.6 million invoice for payment directly to Trillian. Mr Govender was also one of the three Eskom officials who signed off on Mr Koko's and Mr Anoj Singh's submission to the Board Tender Committee.

522. Mr Govender participated in formulating flawed justifications for the sole-sourcing of the MSA, with Mr Mabelane and Ms Daniels supporting this.

523. Messrs Koko, Singh and Molefe were present at Eskom board meetings where the potential irregularities of the sole-sourced "at-risk" contract and the need for National Treasury approvals were discussed, yet Board approval to proceed with the contracting process was requested and obtained, nonetheless.

524. Mr Koko provided confidential information on Eskom's negotiation position on the MSA to "Business Man" (alias Mr Salim Essa) and took instructions from external parties on additional items to be included under the scope of the MSA, so that the extent of contracting work would be expanded.

525. Mr Koko put pressure on Eskom managers not to hold up the finalisation of the MSA despite lack of Treasury approval.

526. Messrs Koko and Singh engaged McKinsey and Trillian to begin working before the contracting process was complete.

527. Messrs Singh, Koko and Mabelane were all complicit in the false statement of Mr Govender that National Treasury had approved Eskom's risk-based appointment of McKinsey.

528. Mr Mabelane signed off on an acceptance letter for McKinsey without having obtained approval for deviation; however, Mr Koko and Mr Anoj Singh were complicit in his conduct.

529. Messrs Mabelane and Singh concealed the fact that the contract was not signed in January 2016 and was only signed and back-dated much later, after its purported termination.

530. Messrs Singh, Mabelane and Govender, when the hiring of Trillian as McKinsey's BBBEE partner did not materialise, were involved in cancelling McKinsey's contract.

531. Messrs Singh and Molefe were responsible for allowing payment of invoices that should not have been paid - which payments were unlawful becasue of the flawed contracting process and involved excessive overpayment to Trillian and McKinsey.

532. Mr Khoza and Ms Daniels lied to the Board Tender Committee at its meeting on 13 December 2016, claiming that a legal review had been obtained advising Eskom to agree to a settlement with McKinsey when no such review had been received. The conclusion is inescapable that both Mr Khoza and Ms Daniels would either have been part, or at least aware, of the above scheme perpetrated against Eskom by Messrs Koko, Singh, Mabelane, Govender and Molefe.

533. Consequently, the purported conclusion of the MSA and subsequent termination thereof, in which Messrs Koko, Singh, Mabelane, Govender and Molefe were the primary role-players, were a sham. The submission, titled "Feedback Report", prepared and presented by Eskom executives (Messrs Kalima, Govender and Koko) for the conclusion of the MSA was all premised on false and misleading information - the result of a carefully orchestrated and well-conceived plan. These executives purported to conclude the MSA, following a process they knew was irregular, and terminated it on spurious grounds even before it could be concluded and before the Board Tender Committee could approve a decision to terminate it. They offered payment to McKinsey and its "BBBEE partner", Trillian, prior to a Board Tender Committee decision on the matter, whilst knowing that McKinsey did not have a BBBEE partner, and that Trillian was not McKinsey's BBBEE partner. The MSA (like the 2015 contract) was a charade designed to siphon money out of Eskom to third parties, particularly Trillian. Eskom's money was expended on a contract that never existed. The expenditure was blatantly wasteful and the irregularities pertaining thereto gross.

Corporate Plan

534. Similarly, in regard to the Corporate Plan, the Eskom executives committed gross irregularities and a breach of the law.

535. Messrs Koko and Singh championed negotiations with McKinsey even before Mr Anoj Singh was seconded to Eskom, and ultimately prepared a submission to the Board motivating for an appointment of McKinsey under the guise that there was "urgent finance and strategy work" to be done and that only McKinsey had the “know-how” to render the service, when according to Eskom’s Internal Consulting Unit, this was not the case.

536. Messrs Koko and Singh pursued a sole-sourcing contract without obtaining permission from National Treasury for a deviation and where there appeared to be no justifiable case for the work to be done under the contract.

537. Messrs Mabelane and Govender acquiesced in the conduct of Messrs Koko and Singh in the pursuit of McKinsey’s appointment and were thus complicit in the furtherance of a scheme calculated to exploit Eskom financially.

538. Mr Koko signed the Acceptance Letter for the contract with McKinsey, and Mr Mabelane purported to sign the contract well after its end date and, in any event, failed to append his signature in the right place, such that the contract never came into effect.

539. Mr Singh engaged Regiments to conduct work for Eskom when Eskom had no contract with Regiments.

540. Mr Singh allowed payment of the R30.6 million invoice directly to Trillian, which was unwarranted as Trillian did not conduct work for Eskom and did not have a contract with Eskom or McKinsey.

Further considerations

541. Another disturbing factor is the fraudulent nature of the invoice sent by Trillian to justify their R595 million share of the settlement. According to Ms Mothepu, the calculations involved grossly inflated time that Trillian employees spent at Eskom, such as allocating 180 days to her, which was not physically possible as she was only with Trillian Financial Advisory for four months and did not even spend all of her working hours on Eskom.

542. In total, R14.7 billion of Eskom’s contracts are, according to the "Flow of Funds" investigation, calculated to have been afflicted by state capture, and of this McKinsey’s MSA and Corporate Plan contracts account for R1.1 billion, with related payments to Trillian from these two contracts accounting for R595.2 million.

543. All of the abovementioned individuals colluded to ensure that at least two large contracts were irregularly awarded to McKinsey and their development supplier, which was intended at first to be Regiments and then Trillian. Substantive payments were made unlawfully and irregularly to these parties, who benefitted unduly at the expense of Eskom.

Exposure of irregularities

544. Despite these events and other allegations of corruption becoming public knowledge, the 2014 Eskom Board and senior executives repeatedly denied wrongdoing and even actively intervened or stopped Eskom from taking the necessary legal steps to have these contracts reviewed and set aside by a court and to recover associated payments. The corporate governance failures inherent in these events triggered, amongst other things, a qualified audit report, a backlash from Eskom’s creditors, severe liquidity problems that threatened Eskom’s ability to generate electricity to South Africa, and downgrades of Eskom’s credit rating.

545. Things only changed when new leadership took over at Eskom from 2018. This included a new Board, appointed in January 2018, with Mr Jabu Mabuza appointed as Chair, and an Acting Group CEO, Mr Hadebe. In March 2018 Eskom went to court to have the two contracts and resultant payments of around R1.6 billion to McKinsey and Trillian set aside. The High Court in Gauteng concluded that both the MSA and the 2015 contract had not been validly concluded, and that there was no legal basis for the payments to McKinsey and Trillian, which had to be returned. McKinsey had already decided to repay the monies – around R1 billion, whilst Trillian refused, with the matter becoming entangled in further court proceedings. Eskom subsequently obtained an order, on 9 March 2020, for the final winding up of Trillian.

546. The conduct of the Eskom executives contravened the National Treasury Instruction 1 of 2013/2014, included in Eskom's own Procurement Policy, which provided that it was mandatory for accounting officers and accounting authorities of public entities listed in Schedule 2 of the PFMA to implement the cost containment measures referred to in paragraph 4 of the Treasury Instruction.

547. Paragraph 4 of the National Treasury Instruction provided, inter alia, that public entities could only contract consultants after a gap analysis had confirmed that the public entity concerned did not have the requisite skills or resources in its full-time employ to undertake the assignment in question. The failure by Eskom executives to comply with these provisions constituted a breach of the law and was therefore unlawful.

548. The 2014 Eskom Board failed to exercise their fiduciary duties and prevent financial prejudice to Eskom, as required in Sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA. They instead allowed irregular procurement in breach of both the law and Eskom policies, and allowed irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure in the face of legal instruments that enjoined them to act otherwise. The Board members acted unlawfully and committed financial misconduct, as envisaged in section 83 of the PFMA. 87. Eskom officials also acted in breach of section 57 of the PFMA.

Recommendations

549. The Eskom executives used their positions of authority and power within Eskom to benefit Trillian - a corrupt activity under the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act No. 12 of 2004. Messrs Molefe, Singh and Koko all benefited from the Guptas and / or Mr Salim Essa in various forms, Messrs Koko and Singh from an Eskom perspective and Mr Molefe as already covered in other reports. This may have constituted the criminal offence of corruption. The conduct of Eskom officials, therefore, implicated several provisions of the Commission's Terms of Reference, namely TOR 1, TOR 4, TOR 5 and possibly TOR 6 (corrupt and irregular awarding of contracts to benefit the Gupta family or their associates) and TOR 9 (corruption to benefit the officials involved).

550. This conduct implicates TOR 1, in that some form of inducement or gain was offered to and received primarily by the three main executives at Eskom (Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Anoj Singh and Mr Koko), which would have served to influence them to act in the manner referred to above. TOR 4, regarding beach of the Constitution and legislation through the facilitation of unlawful awarding of contracts to McKinsey, is also implicated by the appointment of McKinsey on a sole-source basis, in breach of section 217 of the Constitution, the National Treasury Instruction and Eskom's Policy on Cost Containment Measures. Also relevant are the provisions of TOR 5, TOR 6 and TOR 9 regarding corruption in the awarding of contracts by public entities either to benefit the Gupta family and their associates and / or to benefit Eskom individual officials involved in the transactions. Rampant corruption is evident in the awarding of contracts and approval of payments to McKinsey and its BBBEE partner, Trillian, in circumstances described in this report.

551. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should conduct such investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution by the National Prosecuting Authority of the former Eskom officials referred to above who are implicated in the facilitation of unlawful contracts, corruption and financial misconduct and breaches of the PFMA. It is also recommended that legal steps be taken by Eskom to recover from members of the 2014 Board and the former Eskom officials referred to above all losses that Eskom suffered as a result of their unlawful conduct.

552. Criminal prosecution should be extended to the 2014 Eskom Board, who failed to exercise their fiduciary duties and prevent financial prejudice to Eskom as required in Sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA. They instead allowed irregular procurement in breach of both the law and Eskom policies, and allowed irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure in the face of legal instruments that enjoined them to act otherwise. The Board members acted unlawfully and committed financial misconduct, as envisaged in section 83 of the PFMA. Messrs Molefe and Singh were ex officio members of the Board and therefore equally responsible for the Board's various breaches of its fiduciary duties.

STATE SECURITY AGENCY

INTRODUCTION AND CONTEXT

1. The South African State Security Agency (SSA) is the department of government with overall responsibility for civilian intelligence operations. It is mandated to provide government with intelligence on domestic and foreign threats or potential threats to national stability, the constitutional order and the safety and well-being of South African citizens.
2. The evidence relating to state capture, corruption and fraud at the SSA can be seen within the context of evidence that has been brought before the Commission on Law Enforcement Agencies (LEAs). LEAs perform a range of functions falling under various government departments – Police, Justice, Finance, Defence, and Intelligence. The SSA evidence focuses on the intelligence arm of the state, as the SSA is the primary intelligence service.
3. The SSA evidence has shown how vulnerabilities in the regulatory framework make the intelligence services especially susceptible to unlawful abuse by senior public officials and unethical conduct of officials for improper political and personal gain.
4. In particular, the sensitive and sometimes secret nature of intelligence operations carries a heightened risk of corruption as operational funds are not subject to the same level of scrutiny as other public budgets, but an overreliance on classification of documents has hindered full disclosure of relevant information to the Commission.
5. The SSA evidence, accordingly, also highlights the critical role of oversight bodies mandated by the Constitution, including the Inspector-General of Intelligence (IGI), the Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence (JSCI), and the Auditor-General of South Africa (AG).
6. LEAs with policing and prosecutorial functions also form part of the accountability structures which should act as a check on the intelligence services. Evidence of criminality which occurred at the SSA and which has been the subject matter of evidence before the Commission was handed over to the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigations (DPCI) and the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) The role of LEAs thus remains relevant to the SSA evidence, albeit in this case that their contribution has been one of conspicuous absence.
7. The centrality of the SSA evidence is borne out by the establishment of this Commission of Inquiry. The evidence suggests that this Commission may not in fact have been necessary if the SSA had detected, fully investigated and countered state capture as a threat to our constitutional order when the concerns about state capture first appeared.

Terms of Reference: The SSA and state capture

8. The SSA evidence is central to the Commission's mandate to inquire into allegations of state capture, corruption and fraud. The evidence falls squarely within Terms of Reference (TORS) 1.1., 1.5 and 1.9. The essential questions to be answered are as follows:
   - 8.1 What is the link, if any, between the activities of the SSA and allegations of state capture?
   - 8.2 Did the SSA during the period under review enable corruption?
   - 8.3 Did the SSA, during that period, promote the alleged project of state capture?

8.4 Can it be said that the capacity and resources of the SSA were unlawfully appropriated, under a veil of secrecy?

9. The conclusion is that the SSA evidence shows that the actors in question weakened and misdirected the security services under their control. They appropriated state funds to subvert the institutions established to protect the constitutional order and the safety and well-being of South African citizens. Their activities also constituted the beginnings of a broader project to protect, enable and promote a particular political faction and its members' political and personal interests.

10. This summary will describe how the SSA is implicated in state capture in terms of:

10.1 State capture as a manifestation of intelligence failure

10.2 The protection of the enablers of state capture

10.3 Pervasive corruption and the abuse of state resources; and 10.4 A self-standing project of state capture.

Evidence

11. In terms of how the SSA evidence was prepared, this summary contextualises the witnesses' evidence and highlights the challenges that the Legal Team and investigators encountered in the process of gathering and presenting this evidence before the Commission. The summary presents this evidence in terms of: the High Level Review Panel on the State Security Agency; the Project Veza investigation by the SSA; the Inspector General of Intelligence (IGI); challenges of declassification and disclosure; and attempts to block evidence from being led at the Commission's hearings.

High Level Review Panel (HLRP) on the State Security Agency

12. Dr Sydney Mufamadi testified in his capacity as Chair of the HLRP appointed by President Cyril Ramaphosa in 2018. The Panel was established to enable the reconstruction of a professional national intelligence capability for South Africa that would respect and uphold the Constitution and the relevant legislative prescripts.

13. The two HLRP objectives were, firstly, to assess what had happened at the SSA during the period under review and secondly, to evaluate the oversight mechanisms, their adequacy, where they may have been circumvented, and how it was possible for such circumvention to have been done. In particular, the HLRP aimed to understand the nature of the operations conducted by the Chief Directorate: Special Operations (CDSO – which is the covert operational structure of the SSA) and other units of the SSA, how these operations were executed, and how funds in relation thereto were spent and accounted for.

14. The HLRP submitted its report to the President in December 2018. A redacted version of its report was subsequently released to the public, and the Commission had full access to the unredacted report, though the full report remains classified.

15. Following engagement with the Presidency, the Legal Team and investigators requested the DG of the SSA to declassify certain parts of the unredacted report that were relevant to Dr Mufamadi's evidence. Subject to a few qualifications, the DG declassified certain chapters and limited annexures – but not all that he was requested to declassify.

16. A revised version of the HLRP report was compiled for the purposes of Dr Mufamadi's evidence. The revised HLRP report comprises two parts:

16.1 The declassified chapters from the unredacted report (subject to certain qualifications); and 16.2 The remaining chapters in the redacted version of the HLRP report.

Project Veza investigation by the SSA

17. The Commission's Legal Team and investigators engaged directly with the SSA, focusing on the SSA's internal investigation, known as "Project Veza". Project Veza investigated irregularities and criminality arising from contraventions of the SSA's governance, operational and financial prescripts from 2012 to 2018. The investigation focused on units within the SSA – chiefly the projects conducted by the CDSO, the Cover Support Unit (CSU), and operations conducted from the office of the DG.

18. Mr Y failed to provide evidence because of illness. Ms K testified in his place and provided a supplementary affidavit, with additional information about events which occurred after the first round of SSA-related evidence was presented to the Commission in January 2021. This evidence includes allegations that there had been attempts to shut down the Project Veza investigation.

The Inspector General of Intelligence (IGI)

19. Section 7(8)(a) of the Intelligence Oversight Act 40 of 1994 requires the IGI to consult with any of the responsible Ministers and the President prior to disclosing any information obtained from a Head of a Service or any employee of a Service. Pursuant to this provision, the incumbent IGI, Dr Setlhomamaru Dintwe, consulted with the respective Ministers of the SAPS, State Security, and Defence and Military Veterans as well as with President Ramaphosa. The consultative process was completed, and the IGI decided which information he could properly disclose to the Commission.

20. An accusation was made that the IGI had disclosed information to the Commission prior to the commencement of the consultative process. This fact was, according to Dr Dintwe, used by the three Ministers to lodge a complaint against him with the President and to recommend his suspension. He then received a letter from the President informing him that this complaint had been referred to the Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence (JSCI). The evidence confirmed that information was released to the Commission before the consultation procedure commenced. However, this was not necessarily unlawful.

21. Dr Dintwe appeared before the JSCI, but the Ministers did not pursue the matter further because of technical considerations.

Challenges of declassification and disclosure

22. While the Commission had constructive engagements with both the Presidency and the Acting DG of the SSA, Mr Jafta in preparing evidence, it encountered challenges in relation to declassification and disclosure of SSA documents and information.

23. In both the investigation and preparation of evidence, the Commission has sought to handle the SSA evidence with the sensitivity that it deserves. Accordingly, the importance of protecting the identities of SSA members and operatives, as well as the Agency's approach to its work, was acknowledged.

24. The evidence of Dr Dintwe shows that the intelligence services refused to declassify many documents for no justifiable reason and that documents remained classified to avoid embarrassment and to protect senior officials. It has been the experience of the Commission that an overreliance on classification has hindered full disclosure of relevant information to it – which is dealt with in detail below.

Attempts to impede evidence from being led at the Commission's hearings

25. During the week in which the SSA evidence was first led in January 2021, and the then Acting DG of the SSA, Mr Jafta, was due to give evidence, there was an intervention from the then Minister of State Security, Ms Ayanda Dlodlo. Minister Dlodlo's legal representative on record, Advocate Dumisa Ntsebeza, intimated that the Minister "did not intend to compromise on national security".

26. Advocate Marumo Moerane, on behalf of Mr Jafta, indicated that giving evidence would not threaten or compromise national security. The Commission's Chairperson agreed, pointing out that the general powers in the Intelligence Services Act 65 of 2002 did not provide for the evidence not to be led and hence the application was dismissed.

27. In an affidavit dated 17 November 2021, Minister Dlodlo defended her actions on the following basis that classified evidence should be protected:

    27.1 Mr Jafta had failed to inform her which members (including former SSA members) would be testifying at the Commission.

    27.2 Mr Jafta failed to disclose what information had been shared with the Commission or to provide details regarding the security clearance of SSA members who would be testifying at the Commission.

    27.3 There were witnesses who did not obtain the requisite consent to testify before the Commission.

    27.4 Classified information of national security was disclosed during the Commission process.

LEGISLATIVE AND REGULATORY FRAMEWORK: DOCTRINAL SHIFTS

The "new" intelligence dispensation

28. The constitutional transition in 1994 brought in a new intelligence dispensation consistent with a paradigm shift in global thinking on security following the end of the Cold War. A more holistic understanding of "human security" emerged that includes the complex nature of threats to stability and development. Democratic human security not only concentrates on traditional military security matters but deals with issues that affect the wellbeing of people. The intelligence services, like any structure of government, primarily serve the interests of the people.

29. The new concept of "human security" embedded in the Constitution is understood as the security of the citizen, free from fear or want. This has many dimensions, including economic security, food security, personal security, and political security. The aim is the creation of a societal environment that is free from violence and instability, while engendering respect for the rule of law and human life. The constitutional framework of human security explicitly seeks to protect the intelligence services from politicisation and abuse. Parliament exercises oversight over the security services.

30. Chapter 11 of the Constitution sets out the governing principles for national security and provides for the establishment, structure and conduct of the security services, comprising intelligence, defence and police.

The White Paper on Intelligence and legislation

31. The White Paper on Intelligence 1994 provides a policy framework for the establishment, principles and functioning of the intelligence services in a democratic South Africa. It sets out the mandate of the civilian services (domestic and foreign) as the provision of an effective, integrated and responsive intelligence machinery that can serve the Constitution and the government of the day through the timeous provision of relevant, credible and reliable intelligence.

32. The National Strategic Intelligence Act 39 of 1994 outlines the mandate of the intelligence services. In terms of this Act, only the intelligence divisions of the SANDF and the SAPS, as well as the civilian intelligence services (namely the SSA), may conduct intelligence functions.

2009 Presidential Proclamation

33. In answer to the question, "What went wrong?" the HLRP report offered some insight.

34. On 11 September 2009, former President Jacob Zuma issued a proclamation in terms of which he established the SSA – an amalgamation of the National Intelligence Agency (NIA), which dealt with domestic security, and the South African Secret Service (SASS), which dealt with foreign security.

The designation of the civilian intelligence organisation (as amalgamated) as the SSA echoed the pre-1994 mindset of the warfare state. It is noteworthy that this change was made without reference to Parliament and the attendant public consultation required by the Constitution, and Parliament did not question these constitutional missteps (breach of section 209(1)) of the Constitution which established a Ministry of State Security that usurped the role of the Legislature.

VULNERABLE FEATURES OF THE REGULATORY FRAMEWORK

The susceptibility of intelligence agencies to politicisation

35. The principle of political neutrality is embraced by various legislative precepts including the White Paper 1994. Section 199(7) of the Constitution entrenches this principle of political neutrality by prohibiting security services and its officials from allowing the political preferences and interests of any party from influencing the functions of these services. Section 10(4)(b) of the Intelligence Services Act places a duty on the DG of the SSA to ensure compliance with this constitutional imperative of political neutrality and non-interference. The definition of “national security” in section 1 of the National Strategic Intelligence Act explicitly excludes from its scope political activity, advocacy, protest, or dissent. However, as was revealed before the Commission, "[t]he key finding of the HLRP was that there had been a serious politicisation and factionalisation of the members of the intelligence community, based on factions in the ruling party, the African National Congress (ANC), resulting in an almost complete disregard for the Constitution, policy, legislation, and other prescripts."

36. The HLRP found that the CDSO unit of the SSA was rekindled, and stimulated by the incendiary and endemic politics of partisanship and factionalism in the ANC.

37. A Special Operations (SO) unit in intelligence refers to a unit that works under deeper cover than other units of a service. The work is usually on particularly sensitive operations against especially serious targets or in relation to especially serious security concerns. Members of such units should be specially trained and highly competent.

38. A witness for Project Veza corroborated the findings of the HLRP report stating that the CDSO had become highly politicised. The politicisation of the CDSO could be traced back to the restructuring of the SSA’s counterintelligence capacity, which shifted focus and resources from countering perceived threats to the personal and political security of Mr Zuma. According to the HLRP, the key player in the politicisation of the SSA was Ambassador Thulani Dlomo, whom Mr Zuma “deployed” to head the CDSO through then Minister Cwele in 2012.

39. According to the HLRP, the SO unit, especially under Ambassador Dlomo’s watch, was a law unto itself and directly served the political interests of the Executive.

40. The SSA was further exposed to the risk of politicisation by a second vulnerability in the regulatory framework, namely the powers of the duly designated Minister of State Security in relation to the powers of the DG of the SSA. The Minister is appointed in terms of Section 209(2) of the Constitution and has extensive powers to create structures and posts in the SSA, to make appointments, to issue regulations, and to exercise political oversight. The powers of the Minister as set out in Section 12(1) of the Intelligence Services Act are broad: "The Minister may, subject to this Act, do or cause to be done all things which are necessary for the efficient superintendence, control and functioning of the Agency."

41. Other senior officials are the DG, who is the Accounting Officer (AO) entrusted with the administration of the department, and deputy directors and senior managers, who are tasked with running the operations. The separation of these functions – political oversight, administration, and operations – is crucial for an intelligence service to insulate itself from political interference.

42. This subsidiary legislative framework to Section 209(2) of the Constitution creates the potential for the blurring of executive and administrative lines of responsibility. Although the powers of the DG are stipulated in the Intelligence Services Act, these powers are constrained by the Minister’s authority in significant ways. Specifically, the DG exercises command and control of the Agency subject to the directions of the Minister and the Act (Section 10(1)); and the DG is empowered to issue functional directives applicable to a range of matters, but "subject to the approval of the Minister" (Section 10(2) and (3), respectively).

43. Ministerial accountability entails ultimate executive control over the Agency. However, the Minister's power in terms of Sections 10 and 12 of the Intelligence Services Act to ensure the "effective superintendence, control and functioning" of the Agency opens the door to executive interference, including in operational functions of the Agency, and creates the possibility of a politicised intelligence service. The HLRP report and several witnesses argued that there was excessive power of political authorities in relation to the Agency and its employees.

44. Numerous witnesses reported the challenges faced by the DGs who worked under various Ministers appointed to the SSA during the time under review due to executive overreach with Ministers giving directives to staff who did not report to them and handling financial functions in the Agency's covert "projects". Political authorities manipulated existing legislation and enacted new legislative precepts to pursue their interests. Executive overreach was enabled by using the Ministerial Delegation of Powers and Direction of Payment ("MPD"). The MPD has been used to effectively amend the applicable primary legislation, the Oversight Act and the Intelligence Services Act, allegedly to undermine the oversight role of the Office of the IGI.

45. Ministers acting within the MPD succeeded in dislodging some committed and formidable professional senior officials, who recognised the dangers executive overreach posed to the governance systems and processes of the SSA and questioned the legitimacy of some of the covert projects (some referred to as "President's projects" and "Minister's projects"). An unprecedented increase in the Agency's expenditure was another concerning indication that the focus of civilian intelligence services was shifting from democratic values to serving narrow political interests along ruling party factional lines, and more specifically the personal interests of former President Zuma and his appointees. The Special Operations Unit was probably more exposed to the malpractices and corrupt conduct of senior politicians because of the nature of its core functions and how they were conducted. A willing DG in SSA who authorised unlawful access to or use of public funds under the guise of "secret projects" worsened the criminality and irregularities in the unit.

46. The witnesses linked with the SSA described the relationship of the executive and the various DGs as characterised by mistrust and undermining. This situation is believed to have contributed to the perpetuation of state capture. Intelligence information pointed to the Gupta family's influence on the state and on Mr Zuma as a threat to human security in the country; yet the then Minister ignored these warnings.

Financial controls and accountability

47. Another weakness in the regulatory framework is the scope for non-compliance with financial controls and accountability mechanisms. This includes both internal SSA controls and controls external to the Agency. The evidence presented to the Commission reveals that internal controls relating to operational expenditure were breached or bypassed on a routine basis. Some specific examples of the flouting of controls were that funds were withdrawn without the necessary authorisations, or authorisations were not made at the correct level as required by the applicable MPD. This led to widespread malfeasance in the Agency and millions of Rands being unaccounted for.

48. inancial controls were deliberately deactivated to enable access to funds. In relation to the CDSO, budgets were approved (and revised to effect increases) in the absence of Annual Performance Plans (APPs). Little or no specificity was provided as to the nature of expenses. Procedures were not followed - in direct conflict with National Treasury Regulations 2.1.2.

49. The SSA had to use cash in the operational environment. The system of cash disbursements was handled through a Temporary Advance (TA). A member applied for a TA based on a submission approved by the person with the delegation of authority to do so. A TA number issued by the Finance

Chief Directorate enabled the member to withdraw the agreed amount of funds. The member was then required to settle the advance and provide the Finance Chief Directorate with verification that the funds had been utilised as contemplated in the submission. Settling an advance also required that Part B of the TA form be completed by the member for approval by way of signature by the line manager. The claim could then be settled by the Finance Chief Directorate and the TA record removed from the member's name.

50. All cash TAs had to be authorised by the CFO before any withdrawal. For any TA requested and approved, if the amount of money spent fell short, the amount of the unpaid funds would be loaded on the system and deducted from the member's salary. Should there be monies outstanding or not "settled" by the member, they would not be allowed to take out any further money until the advance taken by them had been fully settled.

51. However, the evidence shows that the system could be circumvented if a member who could not take out a further TA asked someone else to withdraw funds for him or her. As a result, certain members had accumulated several advances that they had not accounted for. The HLRP was informed that where steps had been taken to recoup the funds through deductions made against salaries, the amounts were often too large to be realistically settled over time. Several members so affected had left the Agency owing large sums of money. The TA system also did not guarantee that cash leaving the Agency was indeed paid to the intended recipient.

52. Upon Mr Jafta assuming the DG position, all members were requested to settle their outstanding TAs, even when this meant their having to cede their pensions to the SSA. This tough stance was intended to restore governance and proper financial controls within the SSA.

53. Aside from the use of cash, inadequate documentation trails were kept for projects and operations undertaken. The evidence shows that a particular certificate was used to issue cash. All it contained was the name of the person issuing the cash, the amount in words, the reason for the cash issue, the name of the project, and the signature and name of the recipient, which was dated. There was also a declaration that the signatory was the recipient of the cash. This was all that was used to justify the handing over of R1.4 million in cash, in one specific example.

54. The HLRP was made aware that, although the SSA had strict procedures and controls in place for the procurement of assets, these were often reported as missing and could not easily be found on the assets register. Such assets included high value cars and SUVs, specialised surveillance equipment, properties and houses used for cover, and even the profits derived from entities created as front companies.

55. The Project Veza investigations showed that in the creation and operation of a parallel intelligence structure, the secrecy surrounding deep cover operations was (frequently) used as a pretext for accessing funds. One of the key control weaknesses was a perceived impermeable border between the "covert" SSA and the "open" SSA.

56. There were monthly cash-flow shortages and re-direction to covert operational work of SSA-retained funds meant for infrastructure development, for which no proper accounting was done. Financial officers did not have the ability to monitor compliance with Operational Directives (ODs) regarding the remuneration of agents or contacts, resulting in a higher risk of fraud or theft due to incomplete information.

57. Financial irregularities and weak financial controls made it difficult to ascertain the full extent of the operational expenditure incurred under covert CDSO projects. The outlay of funds, was "fast and loose" and mostly in cash. The Project Veza investigation shows that financial irregularities resulted in approximately R1.5 billion from state coffers being expended both domestically and abroad in the period 2012-2018 under the guise of covert operations.

58. The AG regularly made adverse findings on the internal control environment. In the 2017-2018 report, this included findings about lack of monitoring and of implementation plans by the AO and senior management to address key control deficiencies.

59. The Secret Services Account Act 56 of 1978 provided for the establishment of the Security Services Special Account and for the control and utilisation of unexpended balances or unspent funds in the budgets of security services. The unexpended balance could only be accessed with the approval of the Minister of State Security, and with no requirement for the Minister of Finance's concurrence. Officials had direct access to retained earnings in the amount of R130 million, of which R90 million was allocated to fund CDSO operational projects and R20 million to foreign intelligence. These instructions were contrary to commitments made to Treasury.

Secrecy: Classification and covert operations

60. The "secrecy" measures discussed above, which undermine financial accountability, reflect a more general vulnerability in the regulatory framework governing the intelligence services.

61. The SSA's ODs constituted a rigorous and comprehensive regulatory framework governing its operational activities, including deep cover operations. These ODs aligned with the constitutional imperative that national security be pursued in compliance with the law. They also recognised that the need for accountability was greater in the context of covert operations, where there was a risk that secrecy, whilst a necessary component of intelligence, might be abused to conceal unlawful activity.

62. The SSA evidence exposes at least two ways in which secrecy can be abused: classification and covert operations.

Classification

63. The default position in South African law is that everyone has the right to access any information held by the State. Classification is thus an exception to the norm. The national policy governing classification is contained in the Minimum Information Security Standards (MISS).

64. While recognising the importance of information security, the MISS cautions against an overreliance on classification. The MISS also sets out the foundational principle that classification cannot be used to conceal criminality, specifically to cover up maladministration, corruption, and criminal actions.

65. SSA's own regulatory framework for the classification and declassification of documents under its control in terms of the Intelligence Services Act, Chapter XXV of the Regulations issued by the Minister in terms of section 37(1) of the Intelligence Services Act places responsibility for classification and declassification on the DG, although he/she may delegate these powers and duties.

66. Regulation 3(2) of Chapter XXV contains detailed criteria for the application of restrictions of a document according to the three categories of classification: confidential, secret or top secret.

67. In keeping with MISS, the Regulations also prohibit the use of classification to conceal criminality or prevent embarrassment. It indicates that:

> Classification may not be used in instances to – (a) Conceal violations of law, inefficiency or administrative errors; (b) Prevent embarrassment to a person and/or organisation; (c) Prevent or delay the release of information that does not require protection in the safety or interest of the Republic of South Africa; (d) Any other information that does not fall within the categories mentioned in Regulation 3(2).

68. Notwithstanding the important legal principles set out in Chapter XXV, the Regulations are not published in the Government Gazette and are not publicly available. The non-publication of the Regulations is supposedly permitted by section 37(5) of the Intelligence Services Act: "A regulation made in terms of this section with reference to members need not be published in the Gazette but must be notified to members to whom it applies in such manner as the Minister may determine."

69. Similar provisions apply in respect of Regulations issued in terms of the National Strategic Intelligence Act and the Oversight Act.

70. It appears that the discretion of the Minister to publish Regulations in the Government Gazette does not necessarily mean that the Regulations are classified. However, it is unclear what process is to be followed to obtain a copy of the Regulations. The Commission's Legal Team was unable to secure a copy of these Regulations from the Acting DG despite numerous formal and informal requests to the Agency.

71. On 19 October 2020, the Minister of State Security delivered a bundle of publicly available legislation to the Chairperson which was inexplicably classified as "confidential". In a letter accompanying the bundle, the Minister referred to the relevant Regulations as follows:

> In light of the fact that the requested legislation and prescripts are publicly available, with the exception of certain chapters of the Intelligence Services Regulations, 2014, we are of the view that such publicly accessible documents may be submitted to the Commission in the interest of expediting the Commission's work" (emphasis added).

Covert operations

72. Secrecy can also be abused in the context of covert intelligence operations. "Covert collection" is defined in section 1 of the National Strategic Intelligence Act as the "acquisition of information which cannot be obtained by overt means and for which complete and continuous secrecy is a requirement".

73. However, the SSA evidence shows how secrecy was used to shield and sustain unlawful activities by placing them beyond the reach of public scrutiny. Covert companies were registered in the names of individuals who had full control of these entities with no oversight. The need for accountability is increased, not diminished, when state resources are used for covert operations.

METHODS: PATTERNS AND PROCESSES OF STATE CAPTURE

74. In the light of the weaknesses of the regulatory framework discussed above, the paragraphs below show how these vulnerabilities were exploited to use the intelligence services as a resource to pursue personal and political interests rather than human security. According to the evidence, this abuse of intelligence followed familiar patterns and processes of what might be termed state capture.

Centralisation of authority and restructuring of the SSA

75. The over-concentration of power in the hands of a single DG resulted in a span of control and authority that was too wide, and such authority consequently enabled resources to be hidden or moved so that there was no or limited robust oversight.

76. On 27 December 2011, proposed structural changes were approved. These were:

    76.1 The relocation of the CDSO from the line function authority of the Deputy Director: Domestic Intelligence to the Deputy Director: Counterintelligence

    76.2 The relocation of the Cover Support Unit (CSU) from the Office of the Director: SSA Domestic Branch to the Office of the Deputy Director: Counterintelligence; and

    76.3 The establishment of the Directorate Presidential Security Support ("PSS") within the existing CDSO.

77. The restructuring entailed a significant concentration of power in the office of the Deputy Director: Counterintelligence and envisaged a leading strategic role for the CDSO. Resources became increasingly concentrated in the hands of a few individuals. The patterns and processes by which this occurred exploited the vulnerabilities of the regulatory framework discussed above. The evidence shows how these individuals abused civilian intelligence to promote illegitimate interests.

78. The motivation for centralising these key assets within Counterintelligence was explained with reference to "immediate identified security deficiencies" that had left the President "vulnerable to all sorts of threats". Vague references were made in the proposal to the role of the media in undermining of the office of the Presidency, but no intelligence assessment or evidence was provided in support of this.

79. The recommendation to create the Presidential Support Service (PSS) Directorate included approving the employment of twenty officers who were assembled and sent for training on the outlined function of the directorate. The "head-hunted" officers of that recommendation were the same individuals who were recruited and trained in 2008-2009. Two years later, they were absorbed into a newly established PSS service, coinciding with Ambassador Dlomo's appointment as the GM of CDSO.

80. The centralisation of power within Counterintelligence is borne out by the activities subsequently carried out by the CDSO, the PSS and the CSU, which will be discussed in detail below. In summary, the consequences of these structural changes were the following:

    80.1 The infiltration into the SSA by "co-workers", who bypassed official recruitment, training and vetting processes

    80.2 The overreach of the duly authorised mandate of the SSA

    80.3 Illegal activities carried out by a parallel counterintelligence structure under the guise of covert operations

    80.4 Executive interference in operational activities

    80.5 The "rampant looting" of SSA funds; and

    80.6 The illegal use of SSA firearms.

Abuse of processes and resources

Recruitment of "co-workers"

81. Persons were recruited, trained, armed and deployed in ways that bypassed or breached official channels of accountability within the SSA. It was pointed by Mr Y in his affidavit testified to by Ms K that in 2008 and 2009, a group of approximately 48 non-SSA members were recruited and trained in preparation for their deployment after the May 2009 elections to various roles, with responsibilities that included VIP protection and intelligence collection. The new recruits received training on counterintelligence, weapons training, counterterrorism and VIP protection which took place both outside South Africa and locally, at the South African National Academy of Intelligence (SANAI) in May 2009. These non-SSA members were not subjected to the formal recruitment and vetting processes of the SSA but were rather "co-workers" not formally employed by the SSA. This notwithstanding, they were given access to SSA funds and resources and were provided with SSA firearms.

82. Through the CDSO, the SSA assumed responsibility for Mr Zuma's food and toxin security, his physical security and the protection of the President's aircraft. These tasks should of course have been performed by other security structures within the state.

83. The effect of this irregular recruitment and training of co-workers as well as their infiltration into the Agency created a parallel intelligence structure, which engaged in unlawful and unconstitutional activities that were concealed under the veil of covert operations.

Parallel vetting procedures

84. The following is a summary of the evidence presented to the Commission in respect of Security Clearance (vetting) processes at the SSA.

    84.1 "Vetting" refers to the process of verification and investigation relating to the determination of the security competency of members, prospective members, and contract employees.

84.2 Vetting is a deliberate coordinated effort within the SSA environment, governed by the Intelligence Services Act, the MISS, the National Strategic Intelligence Act, the Promotion of Access to Information Act (PAIA) as well as standard operating procedures and directives, to ensure that all vetting is conducted in accordance with these prescripts.

84.3 The issuing of clearance certificates, which is the end product of the vetting process, provides an assurance to the recipients, organs of state, that the concerned individual is security competent. This process is sacrosanct and falls squarely within the mandate of the SSA as a first-line measure in delivering on its counterintelligence mandate.

85. The Project Veza investigation uncovered evidence of a parallel vetting structure that operated within the Office of the DDG: Counterintelligence during the period 2013-2018. The evidence shows that this parallel structure vetted selected individuals and issued them with purported SSA clearance certificates. This process bypassed official SSA channels, and the vetting processes followed by this parallel structure were irregular and weak.

86. As a result of the establishment of a parallel vetting structure, the checks and balances built into the SSA system were overridden, allowing for persons who were not security competent to gain access to organs of state, sensitive information and positions of power and influence. The structure was set up in October 2013 when vetting officers, including polygraph personnel and evaluators, were seconded to the Office of the DDG.

87. The formal vetting structure was perceived as taking too long to allow for responses to appointments that needed to be made rapidly by the President. As a result, a "drive-through process" came into being in which people were processed within three days. This parallel vetting process severely compromised the integrity and the purpose of the legitimate SSA vetting process. A noteworthy example of where vetting processes were bypassed was in the case of Mr Arthur Fraser, who was appointed DG in September 2016. While Mr Fraser was not vetted through the parallel structure, a flawed vetting process that circumvented prescribed channels was followed, with striking irregular practices condoned based on the purported urgency of Mr Fraser's vetting.

88. The vetting process was also abused for the sole purpose of unseating Mr Robert McBride, which was described as a serious abuse of power by the Ministry of State Security and the SSA.

The weakening of oversight structures

89. The HLRP considered the lack of effective checks and balances within the security environment to be one of the key reasons for the alleged malfeasance, corruption and fraud perpetrated at the SSA. The HLRP posed the following question:

> The framers of our Constitution and democratic intelligence policy and legislation created an oversight system for our intelligence services comparable to the best in the world, comprising a bi-cameral, multi-party parliamentary committee – the JSCI – and the IGI. The question is: given the abuses and infractions identified in this report, did these oversight mechanisms function effectively and if not, why not?

90. The HLRP found that the oversight mechanisms had failed to act effectively in recent years, largely due to neglect or politicisation and factionalism. The absence or failure of oversight mechanisms is a common thread in the SSA evidence. Without weakened structures of accountability, the abuse of civilian intelligence would not have progressed as far as it did.

The Auditor-General

91. The AG's independent audit function serves to promote financial transparency and accountability. The activities that fall within covert operations did not receive the same level of scrutiny that other aspects of the SSA received from the AG. The HLRP was informed that the AG was compelled every year to automatically provide a qualified audit of the SSA. The AG was very uncomfortable with having to write a report which began with a disclaimer of this kind. The reasons for this disclaimer were that:

91.1 Access to information to allow verification of the finances and assets of the SSA was not provided; and 91.2 There was no provision to determine the extent to which performance targets had been met.

92. In addition, the HLRP was told by the AG that the Agency was not always able to provide documentary support for the money used in operations. The AG's report on the SSA for the financial year 2017/2018 provides a good illustration of why the AG had been forced to qualify his audit:

92.1 The high-risk environment within which the Agency functioned and the way expenditure and assets were recorded did not sufficiently mitigate the risks

92.2 There was extensive use of TAs for operations which were required to be certified for surety. However, during the audit, management was unable to provide documentation to verify operational expenditure of R125.6 million or that the money was used for the intended purposes; and 92.3 The AG was unable to confirm redundant assets in excess of R9 million as there was insufficient audit evidence: the assets could not be located by the Agency. The figure given by witnesses in evidence was R9 billion. This figure was extracted from the HLRP report and confirmed during the presentation of evidence at the Commission. The AG was unable to confirm the reported irregular expenditure of R31.3 million stated in the financial statements.

The Inspector-General of Intelligence

93. The oversight role of the IGI is indispensable in view of the vulnerable features of the regulatory framework governing intelligence. The IGI conducts compliance inspections of the work of the SSA and investigations into its activities. The Office of the IGI (OIGI) also investigates complaints of maladministration and corruption against the Agency.

94. In particular, the susceptibility of intelligence services to politicisation underscores the need to protect the independence of the IGI from political interference, and to ensure that the position is always filled.

95. In addition, in terms of the legal framework, the OIGI falls under the SSA, which is a national department reflected in Schedule 1 of the Public Service Act. The effect of the absorption of the OIGI under the office and ministry of the SSA has been that what should statutorily and constitutionally have been two autonomous discrete and independent offices have in practice become amalgamated. As a result, the guaranteed independence of the OIGI has been eroded.

96. A factor undermining the independence of the OIGI is the appointment of members thereto. The DG has control, in practice, over the filling of vacancies in the OIGI – though the Oversight Act provides that the powers to fill vacancies reside with the Minister in consultation with the OIGI.

97. The evidence shows that attempts have been made to investigate the intelligence services within the OIGI, to the exclusion of those within other LEAs. The rationale for this is that the OIGI does not have any of the powers granted to LEAs by section 38 of the Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977, which includes legal authority to arrest, serve summons, serve written notice on an accused person, provide a warning statement, or issue an indictment.

98. The OIGI does not carry out its mandate for the purposes of "feeding into the criminal prosecution process". Consequently, all matters investigated by the OIGI will not, as a rule, be acted upon by the criminal courts and do not, in the ordinary course, result in criminal prosecution. This is because, in countering investigation efforts by the Independent Police Investigative Unit (IPID) and the Hawks, an argument is routinely raised that these LEAs do not have a legal mandate to investigate any conduct of criminality, fraud or malfeasance of persons within crime intelligence. This argument is proffered on the basis that the OIGI has exclusive jurisdiction over the intelligence services.

99. In bolstering this argument, it has been consistently maintained that the OIGI is the body that is legally mandated to have access to the classified information of crime intelligence. This argument may obviously be raised in respect of other intelligence services. These arguments for excluding the jurisdiction of LEAs are advanced in the comfort that the "recommendations" of the IGI need not be acted upon and have no force in law.

The Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence

100. The oversight role of the JSCI must be considered. The JSCI reports to Parliament on the intelligence and counterintelligence functions of the SSA. These include the administration, financial management and expenditure of the Agency in accordance with section 2(1) of the Oversight Act.

101. The JSCI consists of fifteen members who are democratically elected representatives (MPs), who take an oath of allegiance to be faithful to the Constitution and to serve the people of South Africa. It is a multi-party body, the composition of which is determined by proportional representation. In its functional design, the JSCI is different from other parliamentary committees in that, members of the JSCI are not permitted to report to their political parties on issues that the Committee considers. The members also undergo a security clearance process. In addition, the media are not permitted to attend meetings of the JSCI.

102. The HLRP report noted that the JSCI was unable to engage substantively with the Panel, which was told that most of the Committee members were new and had no institutional memory. The Chair of the Committee had changed thrice since 2014, Committee members did not serve on the Committee on a full-time basis and met only once a week for a few hours, rendering the Committee rudderless.

103. The view was that the JSCI did not see or learn of what was happening in the SSA and take steps to halt it. The HLRP report noted that the cumulative effect of these issues was aptly captured by one member of the JSCI, who admitted that the Committee had lost control over their oversight role and that three of their annual reports had not been presented to Parliament.

104. The centralisation which was effected by proclamation in 2009 highlights an important failure in the oversight mechanism. Parliament knew that to change the structures and amend security legislation on the basis that was purported to be done, in terms of a proclamation, had to be done by Parliament and had to go through the consultation process in Parliament. In this instance, there was a complete failure of parliamentary oversight.

Unlawful projects and activities

105. So far, the evidence has shown that the failure of oversight mechanisms, the centralisation of authority, and the restructuring of the Agency paved the way, through the side-stepping of official processes, for unconstitutional and illegal intelligence operations to be pursued. These are discussed below.

Chief Directorate: Special Operations Projects

106. During the period 2012-2018, the CDSO conducted several counterintelligence projects and operations. The Project Veza team found that the majority, if not all, of the projects were established in breach of the SSA's policy and regulatory prescripts. Such attempts to comply with policy prescripts seemed to be aimed purely at meeting the minimum requirements for gaining authorisation to access funds.

107. Notwithstanding the vague and generic motivations for the establishment of projects, the operational activities purportedly undertaken were in clear breach of the constitutional prohibition against partisan and politicised intelligence. The extent of politicisation of the SSA is further illustrated by the executive interference in operational activities which occurred during this period.

    107.1 The documentary motivation for the establishment of the projects was entirely inadequate. The establishment documents of these projects contained only a generic, all-encapsulating reference to the SSA's counterintelligence mandate.

    107.2 No or limited detail was disclosed regarding the proposed plans and outcomes of these operational activities, and there were conflicting accounts of the project's deliverables.

107.3 There was no record of how or when or what intelligence was provided to the client, if any, as a result of these activities.

107.4 The operational activities undertaken exceeded the mandate of the SSA, and at times constituted conduct that undermined the very core of the Constitution, was manifestly unlawful, and involved criminality.

108. Information made available to the HLRP and Project Veza team indicated that among these projects and operations were the following:

Project Construção

109. This project had as its aim the recruitment of personnel outside of the SSA to provide VIP protection and to carry out the SO pursued by the CDSO. The majority of these so-called "co-workers" were trained outside of South Africa and outside of the normal training structures within SSA designed for this purpose.

110. According to the request for authorisation to establish this project, it had "an aim of gathering, influencing, penetrating and neutralising any form of threats or potential threats capable of destabilising the democratic rule of the Republic of South Africa." Ms K explained that vague motivations like this do not tell one exactly what the people involved in this project will be doing.

111. It was also noted by Mr Y that the submissions motivating for the establishment of Project Construção, Project Mayibuye and Project Wave all contained the same wording, were all authorised by the same individuals and were all approved on the same day (23 January 2015).

112. Project Construção involved the recruitment and training of 22 "co-workers" for the CDSO. None of these recruits was vetted by the SSA. Some of these recruits were sent for overseas training during the latter half of 2015. The recruits were trained in two groups – in VIP protection and in counterintelligence tradecraft. Frank (a pseudonym) confirmed that the recruits were trained in firearm handling and that the firearms were sourced from the SSA armoury on the instructions of Ambassador Dlomo and Johan (a pseudonym) of Internal Security. Frank also coordinated the deployment of VIP-trained recruits on the instruction of Ambassador Dlomo. These recruits were deployed to protect identified persons.

113. Mr Y pointed out that it was of concern that this VIP protection training was conducted outside of the available diplomatic channels provided by the agreement on training in place at the time, with the foreign-based trainers apparently under the impression they were training SAPS members rather than new intelligence recruits. During the "graduation" ceremony of the recruits, they were allegedly instructed by Ambassador Dlomo that upon return to South Africa they would report only to him.

114. The project manager, Frank, reported directly to Ambassador Dlomo. He confirmed that this project was linked to the VIP protection of high-ranking officials (who were not ordinarily entitled to be provided with such protection) such as Ms Dudu Myeni, Mr Collen Maine, Mr Desmond Moela and Mr Shaun Abrahams. According to Mr Y, Amb Dlomo himself benefitted from personal protection services using SSA resources.

115. Dr Mufamadi noted that the persons who were legitimately mandated to provide VIP protection were accountable to the Commissioner of Police. But once this function was carried out elsewhere, then these structures of accountability were bypassed. Instead, they accounted to the structures of the SSA, and the SAPS was kept "out of the loop".

116. Dr Mufamadi noted further that the budget of the SSA ought not to have provided for that category of function. Whatever these undercover agents did, might well have been a duplication of what the SAPS believed itself to have been doing.

117. An initial operational budget of R30 million was approved for this project by Ambassador Kudjoe in January 2015, who in August 2013 had been appointed the DG for the SSA. In July 2016, Amb Kudjoe approved the renewal of this project for the period 1 April 2016 – 31 March 2017 and for the allocation of a further R24 million in operational expenditure.

118. Three invoices were issued by the Carrot Export Company (a pseudonym) during February and March 2015 totalling R20 million in respect of this project. According to Mr Y, investigations have not been able to verify the existence of this company. Additional invoices were submitted under this project by two companies, Napa and Squash (pseudonyms). According to Mr Y, six invoices totalling R14.9 million were submitted by Napa and a further six invoices totalling R10.427 million were submitted by Squash.

119. Dr Mufamadi told the Commission that this project was an illustration of what was meant by the unit being a law unto itself: the unit organised the training of agents in VIP protection – which is the constitutional responsibility of the SAPS.

Project Mayibuye

120. According to Mr Y, this project was initiated by Amb Dlomo and was initially approved by Amb Kudjoe in January 2015. It was renewed and continued after the departure of Amb Kudjoe and the subsequent arrival of Mr Fraser as DG in September 2016.

121. The motivation for this project was "to provide counter-intelligence support that will enable to step up [sic] State authority and its organs of governance (Justice, Parliament, Provincial Legislature) against hostile behaviour or radical intents aimed at undermining the rule of law and governance in general."

122. According to Mr Y, Mr Mahlobo, the then Minister of State Security, approved the utilisation of retained earnings to fund these operations, despite advice that the retained earnings should be saved and utilised for infrastructure development to develop the intelligence capabilities of the SSA.

123. According to Mr Y, in May 2018, authorisation was given for the renewal of Project Mayibuye and the payment of related expenditure between 1 April 2016 and 31 March 2017. The related budget of R54.1 million was approved.

124. Based on the TAs, which had been discovered during the Project Veza investigation, the total paid out in respect of Project Mayibuye amounted to R84.79 million. This included eight invoices totalling R38.88 million, which were submitted by "Napa" and "Squash".

125. Dorothy (a pseudonym) testified that she had delivered cash – she presumed on behalf of Project Mayibuye – in the amount of R4.5 million to Mr Mahlobo's house on three occasions and once in the amount of R1.5 million to his official residence in Cape Town. In each case she took out TAs in her own name on behalf of "Lilly", who could not do so because she had outstanding TAs that needed to be settled.

126. On the first occasion that Dorothy was required to deliver the cash to Mr Mahlobo, she did so alone. On this occasion, as on the other occasions when she delivered cash to Mr Mahlobo, she would present herself at the gate and announce her arrival to the guards. Once permitted to enter the property, she would announce that she had brought the money and would be ushered into the Minister's study. There she would take out the money from the bag it had been placed in and count the cash in front of Mr Mahlobo to assure him she had brought the correct amount. She would then put the cash back in the bag and leave.

127. On the second and third occasions, Dorothy was accompanied by "Lilly" when she delivered the cash to Mr Mahlobo. After withdrawing the cash in her name, Dorothy called Mr Mahlobo to say she and Lilly would be coming to deliver the cash to him. When they arrived at the house, they asked Mr Mahlobo's protectors to inform him that they had arrived. Again, after receiving "the green light' that they could enter, Mr Mahlobo ushered them into his study where the money was counted and put back into the bags, after which they left.

128. Dorothy testified that Mr Mahlobo did not give her a receipt for the money on any of the three occasions referred to. Nor did he sign for the money.

129. Before she delivered R4.51 million to Mr Mahlobo on the three occasions, Dorothy claimed that "Darryl" (a pseudonym) used to make these deliveries. According to Dorothy, Darryl had indicated that he had been taking the money to Mr Mahlobo before, but since she (Dorothy) was now acting in his position, she should now be the one to deliver the cash. She said that after the three occasions on which she had made deliveries she did not know how many times money had been taken to Mr Mahlobo or by whom.

130. Dorothy also gave evidence that Lilly, together with Frank, had requested her to take out cash in the amount of R7 million under her name but nevertheless use the name of his (Frank's) Project. (Dorothy believes this may have been Mayibuye). The reason for the request was that Frank could not draw the money as he had an amount that he needed to clear at finance.

131. When asked to comment on the TA documentation related to Project Mayibuye, Frank confirmed that on one occasion Lilly had requested that he collect and deliver R2.5 million on her behalf, as she was not able to handle the transaction herself. Frank said he took this money to the relevant recipient (which he conceded was the Ministry) and they signed for it.

132. Dorothy testified that she signed various settlement documents for the approval of funds for Project Mayibuye, despite not knowing what the money was for. In the environment in which she worked, she claimed, business was conducted on a "need-to-know" basis. So as long as there was a submission that was approved for a project, she would not question what the money was for because it was "not her place" to know that.

133. Project Mayibuye comprised several operations: Operation Commitment, Operation Justice, Operation Lock, and Operation Sesikhona. These are discussed below.

Operation Commitment

134. According to Mr Y, this operation involved monthly withdrawals of cash by, amongst others, Frank, Darryl and Dorothy, which were delivered on more than one occasion to Mr Mahlobo. Frank confirmed the correctness of the documentary evidence, which showed financial records of cash being withdrawn from SSA for the purposes of the implementation of this operation.

135. It was alleged that these funds were intended for onward delivery by Mr Mahlobo to Mr Zuma. Frank confirmed that he dropped off monthly withdrawals of R2.5 million to Mr Mahlobo's office under this operation and indicated that these payments were going to the "Project of the President." However, Frank could not testify to precisely what the project execution entailed. Nor could he say whether the monies he delivered were used for their intended purpose, or even whether they reached their intended destination.

136. According to Ms K, the Project Veza team attempted to verify these allegations with Mr Mahlobo but were unable to do so. Nor was the team able to determine whether any amounts actually reached their intended destinations, or indeed Mr Zuma. However, in her supplementary affidavit, Ms K states that the Project Veza team was told during interviews with implicated individuals that it was common knowledge that the amount for Operation Commitment was earmarked for Mr Zuma.

137. Lilly's evidence (according to Mr Y) was that the Operation Commitment monthly payments totalled approximately R24 million in the 2015/16 financial year and increased to approximately R54.1 million in the 2016/17 financial year.

Operation Justice

138. Operation Justice involved recruiting and handling sources in the judiciary in order to influence the outcome of litigation against Mr Zuma. Mr Mahlobo, the then Minister of State Security, was responsible for handling the sources. Different witnesses stated that varied amounts of money were regularly or routinely transferred from the SSA to Mr Mahlobo for this purpose.

139. The justification for the project was to counter the influence of members of the judiciary who were perceived to be hostile to Mr Zuma. There were allegations that those judges were colluding to overthrow the government. Cash delivered to Mr Mahlobo's office was intended "to deal with the issue of the judges".

140. In May 2016 Operation Justice was noted for its "achievements" in gaining access to and interaction with the justice system "through what was becoming an alarming concern over the hostility . . . between the State and the justice fraternity". Equally, the CDSO recognised its own role in improving public perceptions about the justice system through using influential media figures.

141. The existence of Operation Justice could not be proved or disproved. It could have been one of those conduits allegedly used by SSA officials and the Ministers to unlawfully transfer funds out of state coffers. Irrespective of whether it existed and was used for the stated purpose, Operation Justice constituted a fundamental breach of the separation of powers principle and an unconstitutional attempt to compromise the independence of the Judiciary.

142. If indeed the judiciary was influenced in the manner in which it is alleged, this would exemplify how far the politicisation of the intelligence services could have encroached upon the democratic principles enshrined in the Constitution.

143. One of the witnesses testified to secret encounters that involved the Minister of State Security interacting with individuals introduced to those present as "judges".

144. In February 2015 the State of the Nation Address (SONA) was interrupted by an electronic signal jam. This incident was met with a public outcry and a legal challenge brought against the Minister and parliamentary officials as respondents. The Commission heard evidence that Mr Mahlobo had arranged a meeting with two judges to request them to influence the Cape Town Bench, where the matter brought before the court by the South African National Editors' Forum (SANEF) would be heard. Mr Mahlobo informed one of the operatives at the meeting that the two "judges" would work with the operatives and would assist in influencing the case brought against the SSA by SANEF.

145. A witness involved in this operation informed the Commission through an affidavit that the instructions regarding the operations of the agents during the 2016 SONA came directly from Mr Mahlobo. He made decisions about the involvement of operatives in this operation and decided who should run it.

146. Years later the identity of the alleged two judges could not be confirmed. During his testimony before the Commission, Mr Mahlobo denied all allegations..

147. The SSA witnesses believed that there was strong circumstantial evidence that some of the money transported to Mr Mahlobo, as revealed by some operatives, was passed members of the judiciary as alleged. One of the witnesses reported that he was subsequently informed by Amb Bheki Langa (Director of the domestic branch of the SSA), and saw records to confirm, that Amb Langa had authorised the drawing of R12 million in cash from the SO budget. It is possible, however, that there is more to Project Justice than has been shared with the Commission, which requires further investigation.

148. To the extent that this evidence is true and correct, this operation exemplifies how the enablers of state capture were empowered. SSA resources were redirected to protect the personal and political interests of Mr Zuma, by attempting to influence the outcome of litigation involving him.

149. This is also evidence of a self-standing project of state capture, representing a complete undermining of the constitutional prescripts set for the civilian intelligence services. Whether or not this project was in fact successfully implemented, its stated purpose reflects a deliberate attempt to interfere in the constitutional functions and independence of the judiciary, as well as in the separation of powers guaranteed in the Constitution.

Operation Lock

150. Operation Lock was designed to monitor, evaluate and provide logistical support to Mr Eugene de Kock after he was released on parole into the care of State Security. This project involved the provision of a safe house and protection to Mr de Kock when he was released from prison, apparently on the basis of an MOU with DCS. Prior to his release on parole, Mr de Kock had been assisting the NPA's Missing Person's Task Team to locate the bodies of murdered cadres of uMkhonto we Sizwe.

151. Operation Lock was designed to monitor, evaluate and provide logistical support to Mr Eugene de Kock after he was released on parole into the care of State Security. basis of an MOU with DCS. Prior to his release on parole, Mr de Kock had been assisting the NPA's Missing Person's Task Team to locate the bodies of murdered cadres of uMkhonto we Sizwe.

152. The CDSO had assumed responsibility for Mr De Kock over concerns about his continued links with right-wing groups. Mr Mahlobo was reported to have had close personal involvement with Operation Lock. Operation Lock was allocated around R100 000 – R200 000 monthly for the lease of a safe house, living expenses, and Mr De Kock's salary (of around R40 000), for which he signed acknowledgement receipts. Later this money was reduced to R30 000 a month.

153. None of the witnesses reported that they had seen the MOU signed with the DCS. However, the involvement of the CDSO in a project intended for the protection of Mr De Kock is inexplicable. If the DCS needed assistance in protecting him, such assistance should have come from the SAPS. Operation Ses'khona

155. This operation was purportedly aimed at stabilising or influencing the nature of public protest by a Cape Town-based group of homeless activists who had demonstrated and spilled human waste on the streets at national key points. The cause for concern for the CDSO was that the nature of these protests could undermine the integrity of the state and send a negative message to potential investors. This may well have been a legitimate concern.

156. Evidence was presented that "The CDSO team was directly tasked by the Minister of State Security to 'activate' the Ses'khona agents to ensure a presence within the City of Cape Town during the SONA. This was done to great success."

157. A Ses'khona three-member team infiltrated the leadership of the Ses'khona movement to determine who was planning to do what, when, where and how, and to assess if their activities would in any way affect the safety and security of people attending the SONA event. Numerous reports were then compiled and submitted to the management team concerning this movement.

158. A day before the SONA the minister instructed the agents to mobilise the Ses'khona group, provide them with all possible support, including transport, food, and T-shirts. Apparently, the intention was to highlight their presence in Cape Town on the day of the SONA to ensure there was another political presence on the streets of the city besides the Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF).

159. Later Mr Mahlobo transferred the Ses'khona project to another agent to ensure operational security and the safety of their sources. Mr Mahlobo instructed the agents to prepare and submit a business case for funding the Ses'khona movement. It was not clear if Ses'khona received funding from CDSO to establish themselves as a self-sustaining and self-sufficient NGO.

Project Wave

160. This project was launched in the 2015/16 financial year with a budget of R24 million. It had the same budget for the 2016/2017 financial year. Spending of the funds started soon after the establishment of the project, but co-workers were only recruited and trained for the project a year later. It emerged through the presentation of evidence that the project allegedly involved infiltrating and influencing the media in South Africa and abroad in order to counter negative publicity for the country, Mr Zuma, and the SSA.

161. According to the project plan and other related documentation, the purpose of the project was to conduct counterintelligence operations aimed specifically at influencing events and neutralising threats or disrupting threatening behaviour against the constitutional values and the wellbeing of South Africans. This was to be done by infiltrating organisations or entities identified as high risk. The activities conducted during implementation, however, bore no resemblance to the activities later carried out under Project Wave.

162. Media personnel and journalists were identified and profiled, with the aim of recruiting them to meet identified operational needs. The targeted journalists were recruited from outside South Africa. Ambassador Dlomo provided instructions for the operationalisation of Project Wave.

163. There were two reported "achievements" of Project Wave: First, it had been able to confirm allegations about the involvement of foreign intelligence agencies in the planned destabilisation of democratic rule in South Africa; and second, it "confirmed" the involvement of senior cabinet members and various senior leaders in the ruling ANC who were colluding in a conspiracy to effect regime change in South Africa.

164. No credible evidence has emerged that such persons were engaged in unlawful or treasonous activity. But the operation produced a fake intelligence document which came to be known as "Operation Checkmate". Minister Pravin Gordhan testified that his removal from cabinet by former President Zuma in March 2017 was, at least in part, motivated by these allegations.

165. One of the largest payments made under this project was for R20 million, given to Africa News Agency ("ANA") and referred to as "Apricot", for "services rendered". The Commission was provided with a list of the journalists who were allegedly paid, but the list had been redacted and the Commission could not access the names.

166. The very existence of a project of this nature had serious implications for the freedoms guaranteed in the Constitution – in this case freedom of the press but also collusion with the press to abuse this freedom.

Project Hollywood

167. The stated objective of this project was to conduct surveillance and monitoring of high-profile, politically prominent or connected individuals and government officials using illegal interception methods. While it is possible that such a project was a legitimate one, it is also possible that such a project could have been abused to further party political or factional interests.

168. Monthly cash withdrawals of R800 000 were made to pay Innovation Insight Network (Pty) Ltd purportedly for the provision of intelligence and security services, including the remuneration of operatives, involving the establishment of a surveillance platform and encrypted communication capabilities.

169. During the Project Veza investigation, details relating to and provided by this service provider were found to be fictitious, and there was no evidence of a contract between Innovation Insight and the SSA.

170. This arrangement between Innovation Insight and the SSA, irrespective of whether the purported services were in fact rendered, constituted an unlawful outsourcing of the SSA's counterintelligence mandate and the creation of a parallel intelligence network.

Project Accurate / Khusela

171. Project Khusela was purportedly established to replace Project Accurate. The 2013 Project Accurate operational plan (without a budget) was relied on to obtain approval for the "establishment" of Project Khusela in April 2015.

172. This was said to be a project to recruit toxicologists to test the food and bedding of Mr Zuma. The HLRP did not understand it to be the responsibility of the SSA to deal with issues such as these.

173. The project was managed by Dr Mandisa Mokwena, a non-SSA member. But its activities overlapped with those of the Toxicology Unit established in 2012 as part of the Directorate for Presidential Security Support (PSS).

174. Project Khusela was established following the "Minister's intervention into the CDSO financial matters, in which the budget of CDSO needed to be reallocated, because it had depleted." The depletion of the CDSO budget was because of the establishment of the PSS, which was not allocated a budget; instead, the general CDSO budget was used to support the logistical needs of PSS members.

    174.1 The project had an initial allocation of R500 000 per month, which increased to R1.5 million per month in the 2015/16 financial year.

    174.2 The SSA's ODs do not permit concurrency; but Project Accurate continued to function illegitimately in parallel with Project Khusela.

    174.3 The irregularities extended to monthly payments of R1.8 million intended for Project Khusela. In certain instances, submissions relating to Project Mayibuye were attached as the basis for withdrawals.

    174.4 The stated objectives of this project differed from submission to submission. They ranged from bioterrorism threats and threats to economic security, to subversive acts and sabotage directed at strategic installations and national key points. Dr Mokwena stated under oath that all intelligence products were submitted directly to Mr Zuma. Consequently, it could not be confirmed whether the content of the professed intelligence products met the differing objectives of the project.

    174.5 This direct reporting line operated outside of the formal SSA intelligence clearance channels, constituting a parallel information management process.

Project Tin Roof

175. This project involved an investigation into the alleged attempted poisoning of Mr Zuma by his former wife, Ms MaNtuli Zuma. It also involved acquiring a safe house for MaNtuli and maintaining her. The HLRP was not provided with a convincing and logical explanation for why the SSA arranged a safe house for MaNtuli.

176. Further detail on this project emerged from the accounts of witnesses who had been involved in the project. It had been established in December 2014 at the instruction of Mr Mahlobo, who had MaNtuli removed from Nkandla as a suspect. She was given "protection and maintenance" by the SSA until the investigation into the alleged poisoning of Mr Zuma was finalised.

    176.1 MaNtuli was illegally placed in the custody of the SSA. She was in detention, without having gone through the correct processes, and in circumstances where no law allowed the SSA to detain her.

    176.2 MaNtuli was reported in the media to have described this period as a detention where her constitutional rights were not respected. A criminal case was opened at Nkandla, but the then National Director of Public Prosecutions, Mr Abrahams, failed to act on the case.

177. The team working on this project was about forty persons strong, drawn from different directorates within the SSA, as well as externally from administration, investigations, vetting, polygraph testing, surveillance, counter espionage, toxicology, and physical security. Monthly withdrawals of approximately R800 000 were made under the auspices of this project. Operational expenditure included the leasing and maintenance of safe houses, the provision of security services, and the leasing of high-end motor vehicles for surveillance. Project Veza investigations suggested that this project was used by operatives as a front.

178. This project constituted an overstepping of the SSA's duly authorised powers. The SSA does not have powers to detain a person; the CDSO violated the civil rights of a citizen under the pretext of "national interest". In addition, Mr Mahlobo's alleged involvement in the operational activities of this project amounted to Executive overreach.

Operation Lungisa

179. The stated objective of this project was to "neutralise and counter the activities of individuals intent on undermining the authorities."

    179.1 Monthly cash withdrawals of R500 000 were used to pay an entity called Zenzele Economic Advisory, purportedly for the provision of economic services, including data collection and analysis, the collection of financial statements from banks, company and ownership analysis, the scrutinising of assets, and the compiling of reports.

    179.2 The details provided by Zenzele Economic Advisory appeared to be fictitious: the Project Veza investigation did not find any evidence of a contract between the SSA and the service provider. There is also a difference between the stated objective of Operation Lungisa as per its approved submission and the services that were purportedly provided.

180. Activities such as collecting financial statements from banks and company ownership analysis cannot be outsourced; SSA should conduct them.

Project Academia

181. This project, on the instructions of Amb Dlomo and then Mr Mahlobo, was designed to intervene in the #FeesMustFall protests and to influence the direction of related student movements. In the longer term, the aim of the project was to devise long-term solutions to prevent the resurgence of #FeesMustFall protests. Ambassador Dlomo described the purpose of Project Academia as to support "young bright minds" to be "patriotic" and to be strategically deployed to institute counter-measures and to ensure stability and peace in universities.

182. Mr Mahlobo recruited a former SSA member, "Murray" (a pseudonym), to mitigate and resolve the #FeesMustFall protests. This project was allocated R700 000 per month, with a significant portion of this amount handed over to Murray. Murray had consistently and regularly been receiving cash payments from various members of the SSA during the 2016/17 and 2017/18 financial years; including the period during which Mr Fraser was DG. Expenses included the payment of fees for student leaders and other expenses and activities for the Congress of South African Students. The manner of intervention and the expenses were questionable. The #FeesMustFall movement was a legitimate project already being investigated by the SSA after the protests turned violent. The engaging of Murray under a separate SO was questionable. It was also uncertain to whom Murray was reporting and providing information, and to what end. In view of this, Murray's activities were probed.

183. Murray was not able to provide a contract or project establishment document to recruit students that entitled him to the vast amounts of money he claimed. The findings of an internal investigation to verify Murray's claims revealed that some of the students on his list of beneficiaries were recipients of the National Student Financial Aid Scheme (NSFAS) funding. Some students owed the institutions at which they were studying fees from previous years. There was no indication as to what benefit these alleged students were providing to the SSA. 182 Securing stability and peace at universities and preventing malicious destruction of public property constitute a legitimate objective in the national interest, and indeed the SSA had a legitimate project to monitor the #FeesMustFall protests and there was no need for Project Academia to have been separately and independently pursued by the CDSO.

184. To the extent that this project sought to influence or even prevent legitimate forms of student protest, and to the extent that it sought to provide financial support to student organisations involved in the political sphere, it was clearly illegitimate.

Workers Association Union project

185. A trade union named the Workers Association Union was established with the support of the SO unit of the SSA. The HLRP heard evidence that the purpose of forming the union was to neutralise instability in the platinum belt and counter the growing influence of the Association of Mineworkers and Construction Union (AMCU). The HLRP also heard testimony about the SSA having put under surveillance unions that had seceded from the Congress of South African Trade Unions (Cosatu) and were critical of Former President Zuma.

185.1 Four monthly payments of R120 000.00 were paid to Mr Yekani Gadini whom Mr Mahlobo had deployed to start a rival union to AMCU, so that Gadini could secure private security and protection services after falsely alleging that he had been kidnapped and threatened.

185.2 "Steven" (a pseudonym) met Mr Mahlobo at his residence in order to discuss a problem that had arisen with the idea of creating a rival union to AMCU. Special Operations hired the principal agent in the project, Mr Thebe Maswabi. At one of the project meetings Mr Zuma was also present.

185.3 The assignment went ahead as planned but Mr Maswabi became dissatisfied over remuneration and threatened to disclose the details of his assignment (including the role of Mr Zuma and Mr Mahlobo) unless he was paid an amount of R6 million; but his demand was viewed as extortion and was ignored.

The Directorate for Presidential Support Services

186. The PSS, approved by Minister Cwele in December 2011, was established as a response to "immediate identified security deficiencies associated with VIP protection and Technical Surveillance Counter Measures Services (TSCM). The motivation for the project called for an "intelligence-driven" approach to VIP protection to be realised by locating the PSS service at the heart of the CDSO's specialised counterintelligence mandate. Surprisingly, the proposal did not refer to existing state structures. The submission created the impression that VIP protection was the responsibility of the SSA. The Presidential Handbook provides that the President's medical and health care is the responsibility of the Surgeon General and the South African Military and Health Services of the SANDF.

187. Notwithstanding this legislative framework for responsibilities and the existing structures the SSA established the PSS to perform the same functions for Mr Zuma. This not only broadened the mandate of the SSA without legislative processes being followed, but effectively usurped the functions of the SAPS and SANDF. This was an example of the SSA exceeding its statutory mandate through the CDSO under Amb Dlomo's leadership. It also reflects the shift in intelligence philosophy adopted after the restructuring of the SSA since 2009. Increasingly, SSA resources were channelled towards "state security", and the security of Mr Zuma in particular, rather than towards "national security".

188. Evidence heard by the Commission also referred to SSA funds that were spent on uMkhonto we Sizwe (MK) veterans for two ANC events: for assisting SSA with identifying and reporting on potential disruptive behaviour of attendees at certain ANC events at the 8 January 2016 rally at Royal Bafokeng stadium; and for MK veterans deployed by Amb Dlomo for the operation #OccupyLuthuliHouse in September 2016 to prevent the followers of this hashtag from occupying Luthuli House on this day.

189. To the extent that this evidence is accepted, it would constitute an example of a self-standing project where the human and financial resources of the civilian intelligence were redirected to promote partisan interests within the ANC. This constituted an unlawful appropriation of state resources for private and political party gains.

Toxicology Unit

190. A Toxicology Unit was established within the CDSO in 2012 under Amb Dlomo's management. There were no indications that this unit was established legitimately. Amb Dlomo, working with a non-SSA member, Dr Mokwena was involved in the recruitment and training of individuals in the toxicology environment to capacitate this new unit. This was done in conjunction with an organisation referred to as a foreign International Development Agency for Food Safety and Security. Based on the Project Veza investigations, this organisation does not exist in any official records.

191. There appeared to have been a "double dipping" of funds as members of the Toxicology Unit reported to the Directorate for PSS for their travel funds, whilst funds were also paid to Project Khusela as part of CDSO operational expenditure.

192. The leader of the Toxicology Unit (who was given the pseudonym "Kelly") was a trained toxicologist. She indicated that she had used her own business entity called Remix, which had been established in 2007, as a special purpose vehicle for receiving and disbursing operational funds from the SSA for this project.

193. Members of the unit were responsible for checking spaces that would be occupied by Mr Zuma. Notwithstanding the special training and considerable resources at its disposal, the unit failed to detect or prevent the alleged poisoning of a sitting President in 2014. In all the years that this Toxicology Unit served Mr Zuma, the only threat that had been detected was expired cold drinks. It is possible the Unit was used to syphon funds out of the SSA to be used for other undisclosed purposes.

194. Expenditure on the Toxicology Unit formed part of extraordinary expenses, financing extraordinary undertakings of the SSA, yet issues about toxicology would have involved consultation between the SAPS and possibly the Department of Health. The establishment of the Unit was an overreach of the SSA's authorised mandate.

195. In November 2014, Amb Dlomo instituted a project for the protection of the presidential aircraft. The rationale for the project was that he had been made aware that pilots and crewmembers were bringing in unauthorised individuals to sleep in the aircraft. No formal threat and risk assessment of the alleged concerns formed the basis of the project; only a verbal briefing on a purported threat from Amb Dlomo. Individuals selected for the project had no training or knowledge of aviation matters, yet they accepted and carried out the duty of guarding the presidential plane and helicopter.

196. The project was formally allocated to the Chief Directorate: Internal Security (CDIS) headed by "Johan" (a pseudonym). It was unclear why this project, which like the PSS service encroached on the SAPS mandate, was set up within CDIS. It was suspected that Amb Dlomo deliberately intended to remove all aspects of the protection of Mr Zuma from the realm of SAPS and place them instead under his own control.

197. The protection of the Presidential aircraft did not fall within the SSA's authorised mandate; hence this project was not allocated a budget in the CDIS budget. Nevertheless, almost 40% of the CDIS budget was redirected from other operational activities to meet the alleged requirements of this project.

198. The extension of the SSA mandate, the internal reconfiguration of the CDSO, and the usurping of the functions of the Military and Health Services and the SAPS Presidential Protection Unit breached the provisions of the statutory and regulatory framework and the policy prescripts in the Presidential Handbook. The irregular establishment and implementation of PSS services, the Toxicology Unit, and a static security force for the protection of the presidential aircraft undermined the security of a sitting President, disrupted the reporting lines for duly assigned functions and thereby also undermined accountability.

Undermining firearm management SOPs and illegal use of SSA firearms

199. Mr Y detailed the comprehensive firearms control regulatory regime, according to the Firearms Control Act 60 of 2000 and the Regulations promulgated pursuant to that Act. He explained in his affidavit that the FCA regulates the possession, safekeeping, and deployment of firearms in South Africa and recognises the office of the SAPS National Commissioner as the designated authority and Registrar of Firearms. The SSA has its standard operating procedures (SOPs) relating to the management of firearms from the FCA. The responsibility within the SSA resides with the CDIS, whose mandate includes ensuring physical security, VIP protection, and asset management. These SOPs cover the complete spectrum of procedures, tasks and requisite workflow involved in the management of SSA firearms.

200. The SSA, through the CDIS, implements various steps including, the drafting and approval of SOPs; firearm training materials and training in use of firearms; the development of face recognition ID cards; firearm permits; and other relevant documentary controls. This documentation includes official firearm requisition forms, annual firearm inspection, and accountability forms for all SSA provincial offices and relevant units as well as firearm and ammunition transport documents.

201. The SOPs set out the guidelines for the application process, issuing, possession, usage and storage of official firearms. The SSA has appointed competent Armoury officials who are well acquainted with the FCA and are actively involved in improving the physical security around firearms.

202. Despite the existence of these controls, SSA firearms were misused by individuals and the CDSO for illegal purposes. The Project Veza investigations indicated a nexus between the flouting of SSA recruitment processes, the circumvention of vetting processes, and parallel training initiatives on the one hand, and illegal access to SSA firearms enabled by this parallel counterintelligence structure on the other. Mr Y testified that in late 2014 and early 2015 the CDSO began requesting firearms from the SSA armoury. These requests were made directly to the GM of CDIS, Johan who facilitated the handing over of firearms to the CDSO. This was often done without the necessary forms being completed.

203. Ambassador Dlomo established a parallel firearm training process whereby CDSO members were trained externally by former SAPS members instead of by the members of the Armoury.

204. The GM of CDIS, Johan, breached legal prescripts by facilitating the handing over of firearms to CDSO members without the required safeguards, and himself occasionally overseeing the issuing of firearms from the armoury.

205. Ambassador Dlomo did not have a justifiable reason to make the requests for firearms. The CDSO was a covert operational arm of the SSA and, as such, generally took necessary steps to avoid detectable links to the SSA. It is unclear why the CDSO, if it was indeed conducting legitimate covert operations or training, made use of firearms that were directly traceable to the SSA.

206. The firearms issued to the CDSO remained unaccounted for during this period, without the SSA armoury being able to conduct firearm inspections or ensure that permits were renewed. Numerous reports were submitted highlighting that the CDSO was failing to comply with the firearm controls requirements.

207. In December 2016, the CDSO, under a new GM, was requested to return all firearms, but only 21 were returned and only 755 out of of 1 635 rounds of ammunition issued to the CDSO were returned –some of this did not originate from the SSA.

208. In his evidence before the Commission in August 2021, President Ramaphosa acknowledged that SSA firearms unaccounted for formed part of an intensive investigative process currently under way.

Outsourcing of intelligence mandate

209. The legal and policy framework governing the SSA does not permit the use of outsourced external entities to perform the functions of the SSA in covert operations. In terms of the National Strategic Intelligence Act, only the intelligence divisions of the SANDF, the SAPS and the SSA may perform intelligence functions.

210. There is evidence that these restrictions were not considered. In December 2014, Amb Dlomo illegally signed contracts with several companies on behalf of the SSA. Some of these contracts were neither valid nor legal. Invoices from these companies were then utilised to facilitate illicit financial flows in various CDSO projects, as discussed above. The question of the illegality or otherwise of these outsourcing activities must be considered in view of the evidence below.

    210.1 The matters listed in the contracts are precisely what the legislation mandated the legitimate SSA structures to do, and these structures were to a large extent bypassed.

    210.2 Several contracts were entered into by the SSA, represented by Ambassador Dlomo, around or during December 2014, a month before the projects relevant to those contracts were approved and established.

    210.3 The required procedures were not followed, and in some cases, there was no proper authorisation for the conclusion of these contracts or their later extensions. The form of the contracts did not comply with regulatory prescripts.

211. In summary and according to the evidence, the outsourcing of intelligence functions to third party companies is unlawful. Outsourcing compounds the difficulties in maintaining financial controls, accountability and adherence to the regulatory framework.

Operations within the Office of the DG (2013-2018)

212. In the period following the appointment of Amb Kudjoe as DG of the SSA in August 2013 and the appointment of Mr Mahlobo as Minister of State Security in the wake of the national election in May 2014, the Office of the DG became involved in several covert operations purported to be the "President's Projects", allegedly pursuant to a directive from Mr Mahlobo. These projects fell outside the intelligence mandate of the SSA and improperly sought to influence protest movements, activist groups, a trade union, civil society and internal party politics. There was a notable increase in operational expenditure in the Office of the DG due to these covert projects.

213. The Office Manager in the DG's office from January 2014 withdrew TAs for operational expenses related to "Presidential Projects." She retained her role after Mr Fraser re-joined the SSA as DG in September 2016.

214. Mr Arthur Fraser formally closed the CDSO shortly after assuming office. However, SSA financial systems, documents and witness accounts indicate that the Office of the DG continued to run many of the operations and projects. For example, approximately R242 million was taken or paid by the Office Manager between February 2014 and March 2018, allegedly for operations that were run from the office of the DG.

215. The Project Veza investigation shows that the operations run from the Office of the DG extended well beyond merely the continuation of some CDSO projects. As DG, Mr Fraser worked with individuals who had been implicated in the Principal Agent Network (PAN) investigations, considered in some detail below.

216. During Mr Fraser's tenure, expenditure for the Office of the DG increased from approximately R42 million in the 2016/17 financial year to approximately R303 million in 2017/18. It is striking that roughly 74% of the total expenditure in the 2017/18 budget was used for covert operational expenditure, 15% on contract expenditure and 5% on travel and subsistence.

217. This concentration of SSA funds in the Office of the DG during the 2017/18 financial year came at the expense of legitimate operational structures, and of the functioning of the SSA provincial offices in particular. During this time, the budgets for the provinces were cut by half despite the provinces being where the SSA is most operational.

218. The DG disregard the policies, prescripts and directives relating to SSA document and information management that he was responsible for enforcing as the AO and HOD, which constituted a gross dereliction of duty.

219. In the absence of details of the operational activities undertaken in respect of these projects, the deliberate circumventing of SSA systems by the Office of the DG raises the possibility that these projects were in breach of the SSA's mandate and its legislative framework and / or were vehicles created to facilitate the theft of state funds.

220. While there was a general lack of record-keeping during this period, a record of some of these ongoing operational activities was reflected in a performance review for the period 1 January 2016 to 24 February 2017, which was submitted to Mr Fraser by one of the CDSO Co-Worker Deployment Teams. This report is referred to in the HLRP report as the "Boast Report".

221. The Boast Report recounted that this deployment year had been "exceptional in terms of operational successes achieved". The "achievements", were directly attributed to the co-workers of the CDSO: the ANC January 8 Statement (Rustenburg, January 2016); counter operations to impede CR17-related support activities; the cancellation of the President's visit to Marikana following an incorrect threat assessment provided by the SAPS; infiltration of the leadership structure of the #ZumaMustFall movement in the Western Cape to weaken its presence at the Parliament during the SONA 2016 event; neutralising and preventing dissident groups from being transported to the ANC Manifesto launch in Port Elizabeth (March / April 2016); and the SONA Questions and Answers / Budget Speech (February 2017). The intelligence collected by co-workers in relation to these events targeted various groups through infiltration and / or penetration and/or monitoring of:

221.1 "All Western Cape universities and student activist groups on social networks"

221.2 The "new federation": the National Union of Metalworkers of South Africa (NUMSA), the Food and Allied Workers Union (FAWU) and other affiliated trade unions had minimal support after co-workers neutralised these unions' "promise of jobs" to young people if they attended the march, by disseminating countering information to affected youths; and 221.3 The NGOs, including South Africa First, Right to Know, Save South Africa (SAVE SA), the Council for the Advancement of the South African Constitution (CASAC) and Green Peace.

222. There were indications that operational activities emanating from the Office of the DG may have related to the ANC NEC at Nasrec in December 2017. Witness reports placed SSA members, including former CDSO "co-workers" and members of the newly configured Cover Support Unit (CSU) and other operational structures, in the vicinity of the Nasrec conference. Services of the CDSO at the Nasrec conference were requested by the ANC Head of Security, Mr Langa, and authorised by senior officials of the SSA.

223. Issues of incumbency and influence over who "ascends" to positions of power or authority within political parties and state organs is not the responsibility of the SSA.

Irregular procurement activities by Crime Intelligence

Attempted procurement of the "grabber" during the 2017 ANC Conference

224. There were various media reports concerning a failed attempt by Crime Intelligence to procure a Precise Mobile Location ("grabber") for utilisation during the 2017 ANC conference at Nasrec to influence the results of the ANC electoral conference. Some reliance was seemingly placed on doubtful intelligence information to justify the intended procurement of the grabber.

225. "Ice Box" (a pseudonym), a company belonging to "Ivan Ivano" (a pseudonym), was contracted to supply a grabber for around R45 million, which was "exorbitant" considering the market value of the product at around R7 million. The intended procurement was in contravention of legal prescripts, which prohibit the procurement of goods or services from a flagged or blacklisted company such as Ice Box. The intended procurement was halted by IPID. Following the IPID investigation, Ivano became a source for the SSA. He later alleged that Mr Robert McBride, then IPID Executive Director, had been involved in illegal activities.

226. The circumstances surrounding this failed grabber procurement warrant attention. Mr Bongani Mbindwane, the then Special Advisor to the Minister of Police, Mr Fikile Mbalula, actively participated in the procurement process (preceding its termination). Mr Mbindwane even contacted the incumbent IGI, Dr Dintwe, telephonically, requesting his approval ("blessing") for the procurement, stressing its importance. He asked to meet Dr Dintwe to discuss this, allegedly on the instruction of Minister Mbalula. This meeting took place on 6 December 2017 in Groenkloof, Pretoria. During their meeting, Mr Mbindwane informed Dr Dintwe that the Ministry of Police was concerned about Dr Dintwe's investigation into procurement of the grabber by Crime Intelligence. Following this disclosure, Dr Dintwe met with Major General KB Ngcobo the then Acting Divisional Commissioner in the Ministry of Police. However, when Dr Dintwe was made aware by General Ngcobo that the procurement involved Ice Box – a company he was investigating – which Mr Mbindwane had not disclosed to Dr Dintwe even though he was aware Ice Box was tainted, Dr Dintwe immediately terminated the meeting.

227. In his affidavit to the Commission, Mr Mbindwane disputed that he had improperly approached Dr Dintwe for the procurement of a grabber and denied any involvement in the procurement process.

Procurement from Icebox of an information technology solution for intelligence collection

228. In December 2016, Crime Intelligence acquired an IT solution intended for intelligence collection operations. Quotations from three companies were obtained. Crime Intelligence allegedly procured the IT solution for R33 million from Ice Box. During the process, rules and prescripts regarding supply chain management were allegedly not complied with. In the process of the investigation by the IGI, it was concluded that the IT solution for intelligence collection which had allegedly been procured did not exist.

229. Dr Dintwe visited Crime Intelligence headquarters during November 2017 for the purpose of a demonstration of the procured product. He was informed that the procured product no longer existed and had since been replaced. The relevant officer could not show Dr Dintwe the IT solution that had allegedly replaced the one procured from Ice Box. The OIGI concluded that the amount of R33 million was fraudulently paid from Crime Intelligence to Ice Box for a non-existent product.

Procurement of a voice encryption system

230. Crime intelligence allegedly procured a voice encryption system from Icebox at a cost of R23 million. The system was not, however, procured for the Crime Intelligence section responsible for any counterintelligence function. Rules and prescripts of SCM had been flouted and there appears to have been fraud and malfeasance involved in this procurement.

Irregular appointments in intelligence services

231. There had been numerous instances of irregular appointments within the intelligence services. Examples included the following:

    231.1 Minister Bongani Bongo was involved in the irregular appointment and promotion to a senior position in the National Intelligence Co-ordinating Committee ("NICOC") of an individual alleged to be personally known to him.

    231.2 The OIGI also found that a person in top management at SSA ordered the withdrawal of a vacant position of Programme Manager at the Intelligence Academy. He did so allegedly because his preferred candidate did not qualify in terms of the post requirements. Notwithstanding this, after the reinstatement process was set aside, the member was appointed in an acting capacity in that position.

    231.3 The policy adopted at SSA concerning the recruitment and provision of bursaries to cadets had been flouted allegedly in order to provide sheltered employment for family members. As the SSA is obliged to provide employment to recruited cadets after completion of their studies, this has meant that persons not necessarily suitable for work at the Agency had possibly been employed to the detriment of the effective functioning of the Agency. Dr Dintwe drew these conclusions based on the evidence summarised below.

    231.4 There is evidence that Mr Mahlobo and the then (May 2014 to May 2019) Deputy Minister of State Security, Ms Ellen Nnana Ntsitse Molekane, were involved in the recruitment process at SSA – a significant executive overreach – and instructed the SSA to grant them cadet bursaries, otherwise intended to be provided to underprivileged persons.

Questionable "intelligence reports" used for removing key persons who stood in the way of state capture

232. Witnesses made allegations of mysterious intelligence reports used repeatedly to target those regarded as "opponents".

233. In March and April 2017, the Democratic Alliance (DA) and the South African Communist Party (SACP) independently submitted complaints to the IGI. Both complaints requested the IGI to investigate allegations surrounding an intelligence report used for the recall of the then Finance Minister Pravin Gordhan and Deputy Minister Mcebesi Jonas. Former President Zuma was the only person apparently in possession of the (original) report. Despite numerous requests for a copy, nothing was forthcoming. Mr Zuma stated in a meeting at Luthuli House in March 2017 that he had received a copy of the report, however, the OIGI was not used to establish whether the decision of Mr Zuma was credible and based on a report which is authentic.

234. The IGI came across an intelligence report that dealt with an alleged plot by General Sibiya (former Head of the Gauteng branch of the Hawks), Mr Robert McBride, forensic investigator Mr Paul O'Sullivan and others to overthrow the government. This intelligence report, purported to be a product of Crime Intelligence, as well as the further report relating to the alleged unlawful rendition of foreign nationals involving Generals Anwa Dramat (former Head of the Hawks) and Sibiya, have recently been proven to be untrue.

235. All these so-called intelligence reports were not systematically compiled, and the identities of the compilers were not known. These reports were relied upon in the knowledge that they would not stand up to legal scrutiny. They were used to achieve the desired effect of removing key persons who stood in the way of state capture.

CESSATION OF INVESTIGATIONS

236. There has been a discernible pattern, one which is reflected in recent events at the SSA, that investigations into wrongdoing at the SSA are interfered with and eventually stopped. Alternatively, they continue until completion but are never acted upon and the findings remain recommendations which are never implemented. This means that wrongdoers are not called to account, nor are systemic issues dealt with. The result is that malfeasance and even state capture could continue unchecked. The absence of consequence management has become a theme running throughout the SSA.

Investigation into the Guptas stopped

237. In early 2011, there was a news report apparently based on a leak from a meeting of the NEC of the ANC, which claimed that there had been a robust discussion at the NEC concerning the Guptas, who had apparently informed Mr Mbalula of his new post as Minister of Sport. Former intelligence heads Ambassador Mo Shaik, Mr Gibson Njenje, and Mr Jeff Maqetuka decided that, for the security of South Africa, an intelligence investigation should be conducted to determine whether there had been such a discussion at the NEC meeting. It was important to determine whether a core function of government and the President had been taken over by or outsourced to foreign nationals.

238. Three possibilities presented themselves:

    238.1 A breach of national security had occurred in the form of a leak from the Office of the President

    238.2 The Guptas had overheard a discussion of the President in consultation, and they were now peddling this information; or 238.3 The Guptas in fact had suggested the appointment.

239. In his evidence, Amb Shaik explained that if the third possibility was found to be true, it would be even more serious because the Guptas, as foreign nationals, should not be suggesting members in the national cabinet of another country. It was also problematic that the Guptas demonstrated that they knew of the appointment before the appointment occurred. This, Amb Shaik explained, is referred to as a "created dependency", which in this instance was intended to extract value from Mr Mbalula as the Minister of Sport, and there would be dependence because if they "made him" Minister, they could "unmake him".

240. Messrs Shaik, Njenje and Maqetuka were also alerted to the Gupta's purchasing of a uranium mine, which raised concerns. The purchasing of a uranium mine and its funding would be a national security issue, so they decided that this should also form the subject of an SSA investigation. Shortly after they decided to initiate these investigations, the three were summonsed to Police Minister Cwele's office, where a tense and confrontational meeting occurred. The Minister was angry that they had launched these investigations into the Guptas without his authority, refusing to accept the reasons that informed the investigation. He argued that their investigation was intended to promote the business interests of Director Njenje. Director Njenje had previously placed his conflict of interest and his interactions with the Guptas on record – an explanation with which Ambassadors Shaik and Maqetuka were satisfied. As a matter of principle, any conflict of interest would not be a reason to stop an investigation; rather, Director Njenje could have been taken off the case.

241. The three maintained that the investigation was warranted, and that Ministerial authorisation was not required. That the three were left with the impression that he was unhappy about the investigation and did not want the investigation to continue, was indisputable. However, their evidence differed on whether or not he had given a clear instruction to stop the investigation.

242. On Minister Cwele's version, his primary concern related to the business relationship between Director Njenje and the Guptas, the alleged instruction to institute an illegal interception of "that Gupta person", and he had not instructed that the investigation be stopped. He told the three executives that they had to obtain permission from a judge to proceed with the interception, as required by the Interception and Monitoring Prohibition Act 127 of 1992. He also reminded Director Njenje that he was not to utilise state resources to pursue private interests, Amb Shaik testified that there would not have been, at that stage, any direction from a designated judge because the investigation had not yet commenced; the meeting took place only days after the decision to investigate had been made. The relevant Act on which Ambassador Cwele relied was repealed in 2008. In any event, this level of Ministerial involvement in operations was inappropriate, even illegal.

243. This exchange illustrates, according to Amb Shaik, why there should not be a Minister of Intelligence. A Minister, who serves at the behest of a President, would seek to gain favour from the President. The DG of Intelligence serves the national interest of the country. It should be noted, however, that Amb Shaik's views about the motivations of the Minister of Intelligence may not have been valid in all cases.

244. Messrs Shaik, Njenje and Maqetuka refused to stop the investigation, as they believed that it fell squarely within the mandate of the SSA. They told the Minister that an instruction to halt the investigation should come from the President. Mr Zuma, in a meeting the next day with the three, sought to reassure them that the Guptas were beyond reproach and that foreign capital was not involved in the purchase of the uranium mine. He narrated at length how the family had helped him with his son, Duduzane. The three understood that Mr Zuma's preference was for them not to take the investigation further. Amb Shaik could not recall whether Mr Zuma had specifically instructed them to halt the investigation, but he clearly viewed the investigation as unnecessary.

245. Ambassador Shaik testified that the three were speaking to Mr Zuma in his capacity as President but were mindful of his own long history in intelligence. He should have understood that this was a matter of national security. Amb Shaik added that there was a clear sense in that meeting that the President thought the investigation was not really about the Guptas but about toppling him as President.

246. Ambassador Shaik explained that the basis for the investigation was simple: there was a breach at the highest level of the land – either a leak from the Office of the President or a suggestion by the Guptas for the appointment of a Minister. Despite this view, the investigation stopped.

247. Regrettably, the allegation about the Guptas turned out to be correct. If the investigation had been allowed to proceed, then, there might have been no need for this Commission. It constitutes a further example of how the SSA played a role in the state capture project, by protecting those who enabled the project.

Cessation of Principal Agent Network investigations

248. The implementation of a PAN is accepted practice in intelligence agencies. The PAN was established under the auspices of the then DDG of Operations, Mr Arthur Fraser. While there was nothing untoward in the establishment of a PAN project itself, it was the implementation of the project by Mr Fraser that was problematic since the project was neither controlled by nor accountable to the SSA in its operations.

249. Amb Cwele confirmed that in 2009, soon after his appointment as Minister of State Security, he had ordered an investigation to "clean up" the PAN programme. He suspected that the structure had been established outside the legal framework. Accordingly, Director Njenje instituted a preliminary inquiry by internal auditors in September 2009. The internal auditors found that there had been maladministration, including discrepancies on TAs in the amount of R85 million, and non-compliance with various directives. The internal auditors further recommended a full independent forensic audit.

250. Director Njenje appointed an investigation team in February 2010 to further investigate alleged maladministration and financial irregularities within the PAN programme. The investigators identified numerous breaches of the SSA's regulatory framework, the irregular authorisation and utilisation of funds.

251. The IGI at the time, Ms Faith Radebe, conducted another investigation into the PAN programme and released two reports with findings similar to those of the internal SSA investigation. Both OIGI's reports into the PAN programme implicated Mr Fraser in serious wrongdoing.

252. The final report of Director Njenje's PAN programme investigation, dated May 2012, was presented to the Minister of State Security and the Acting DG on 19 June 2012. It is significant that many of the persons implicated by the PAN investigations returned to the SSA when Mr Fraser was appointed DG in September 2016.

253. Equally significant is the evidence that, by 2011, significant progress had been made with Director Njenje's PAN investigation. As a result of this, the investigation team approached the SIU and the NPA, agreeing to hand over the investigation and the related documentation to the SIU. It was clear to Director Njenje that, at this point, prosecution was possible.

254. In an affidavit presented to the Commission, a representative from the SIU acknowledged the engagements between the NIA (subsequently the SSA) and the SIU, which led to a preliminary assessment of alleged irregularities in relation to the PAN programme in March 2011. However, shortly thereafter, the NIA advised the NPA that NIA management had decided that the IGI would be conducting the investigation. The documentation from the NPA was retrieved and returned to the SSA, and the NPA did not prosecute those implicated in the PAN investigation.

255. Director Njenje recalled that Amb Cwele had summoned him to a meeting at ORT International Airport, where he allegedly instructed Director Njenje to stop the investigation and the prosecution of Mr Fraser and others in the PAN programme. He alleged that it was the President's decision because it was going to compromise national security if they went ahead and prosecuted those implicated. Director Njenje indicated that the matter related to criminality, not national security. Director Njenje believed that this had been the President's decision.

256. Ambassador Cwele's version was that there were outstanding risk assessment reports relating to court processes that had to be followed after the PAN project had finally been reported on. He said that he would not oppose any court processes that might follow. Amb Cwele stated that neither he nor the President would stop prosecutions because this was the responsibility of the NPA.

257. There is no reason to prefer Amb Cwele's version over that of Director Njenje regarding the circumstances of the stopping of the SIU investigation. In any event, the undeniable fact is that the investigation was stopped. Ambassador Cwele must have been aware of this because, on his own version in evidence, he followed this matter closely. He was also aware that the matter of PAN investigation was removed from the SIU and handed over to the OIGI – which happened after the case had been retrieved from the SIU. The SIU confirmed that it had evidence before it of criminal wrongdoing.

258. According to the HLRP, it appeared that the PAN programme at the SSA had adopted a methodology designed to bypass the procedural requirements for recruitment of staff, disbursement of funds, and procurement. Allegations of malfeasance, procedural transgressions and criminal behaviour were placed before the Panel. These included, for example, the procurement of assets without adherence to formal procedures, the signing of fraudulent contracts and payments to persons without valid signed contracts, the employment of family members outside of formal processes, the abuse of assets, and missing funds and assets. The investigation concluded that there was a sufficient basis on which to institute criminal proceedings against, amongst others, Mr Fraser.

259. All the reports placed before the Commission implicate Mr Fraser in wrongdoing. Significantly, however, none of the findings and recommendations by either the internal SSA investigation team nor the IGI was acted upon.

260. In his statement in support of his application to cross-examine seven witnesses, Mr Fraser insisted that he had been cleared of any wrongdoing during the PAN period. The PAN programme, he maintained, was legitimate, and the nine forensic, criminal, and other investigations conducted over a three-year period ending in November 2012 could not substantiate allegations of malfeasance against him. In his view the investigations had all been conducted by mandated or legitimate institutions of state, including with Minister Cwele's oversight. The Commission is unaware of any report acquitting Mr Fraser and he has not put any such report before the Commission.

261. These claims were repeated by Mr Fraser's new attorney, Mr Mabuza, in his letter to the Commission dated 24 August 2021. Despite having been asked to identify the reports referred to, Mr Fraser has failed to do so. The statements of Mr Fraser referred to above are contained in an annexure to his affidavit submitted to the Commission. The annexure itself is not a sworn statement.

Project Veza

Project Veza's predecessor

262. An internal investigation with the code name "Project Momentum" was established in June 2018 by then Minister Letsatsi-Duba to address allegations of corruption in the SSA. Limited progress was made under this project – due to a lack of cooperation from implicated persons and alleged undermining of the investigation. The documents that ought to have been disclosed to the investigators of Project Momentum were not disclosed; they were deliberately hidden. The documentation relating to the CDSO – which informed much of the content of Mr Y's affidavit and the investigative reports on which it was based – was discovered by chance during an inspection for other purposes of a walk-in safe at the SSA headquarters.

263. The safe in which the documents were discovered was controlled by the GM: Cover Support Unit (CSU), a position previously located, albeit unofficially, within the office of Mr Fraser, the former DG of the SSA. Certain members of the CDSO informed the investigation team that after Mr Fraser was appointed the DG in September 2016, he closed the CDSO and requested that all the documents concerning the operations of the CDSO be handed to his office. He also moved the CSU to the Office of the DG and these documents were then put in the safe.

Launch of Project Veza

264. The investigation conducted under Project Momentum was reinforced and re-launched by the then Director: Domestic Branch, Mr Lloyd Mhlanga, and then Acting DDG, "Ian" (a pseudonym), under the name "Project Veza".

265. After Mr Mhlanga's departure, Mr Jafta reaffirmed and approved the continuation of Project Veza and reconstituted the team. Notwithstanding the institutional support provided to the team, it continued to face a lack of cooperation, obstruction, and deliberate sabotage of the investigation from those implicated, from the Director of the Domestic Branch, Advocate Mahlodi Muofhe, and from the Executive. Project Veza did not have the support of some elements within SSA, who seemed to want to preserve the status quo rather than support efforts to remedy wrongdoing.

266. The Project Veza investigation has focused on various units within the SSA – chiefly the projects carried out by the CDSO, the CSU, and the operations run from the Office of the DG.

267. The Project Veza investigation team uncovered similar patterns of maladministration in the CSU as there had been during the earlier PAN programme. Evidence before the Commission indicated that during Mr Fraser's tenure as DG, there were irregularities in the management of the CSU that suggested an intention to resuscitate the operating model that was used in the implementation of the PAN programme. Several of the same individuals were implicated in both episodes.

Threats against the investigators

268. There were concerns that threats had been made against individual members of the Project Veza investigation team by certain implicated parties. These threats and intimidation continued even after the testimony of SSA officials had been given to the Commission. Despite Ms K's testimony having been given in camera during her testimony on 28 January 2021, Ms K received a photograph of herself, which was circulating on social media, revealing her identity, coupled with defamatory and disparaging remarks about her person and her career, presumably to discredit her testimony.

269. Mr Y's identity was also revealed, and pictures of his family were circulated on social media in what Ms K describes as a veiled threat against him, at a time when he was hospitalised and in a coma.

270. Mr Fraser had opened a case of perjury against SSA officials who testified at the Commission, eventually applying to cross-examine certain witnesses who had given evidence concerning him before the Commission.

Attempts by Advocate Muofhe to interfere with the Project Veza investigation

271. Ms K explained that Advocate Muofhe had allegedly interfered with and actively obstructed the work of Project Veza. Adv Muofhe, while he was Minister Letsatsi-Duba's advisor, sought to persuade Mr Mhlanga (DG, DPCI) to withdraw his referral to the DPCI of the criminal conduct uncovered during their investigations. At a meeting attended by Mr Mhlanga, Ian, Ms K and Mr Y, Adv Muofhe demanded that they hand over to the Ministry all evidence relating to Project Veza, which Ms K refused to do unless the instruction was given in writing. Such instruction was not forthcoming.

272. Ms K testified that a few weeks after this incident, Ian was instructed to return to his foreign posting. Around the same time, Adv Muofhe opened a criminal case against Mr Mhlanga. Mr Mhlanga was cleared of any wrongdoing by the IGI, and the NPA declined to prosecute the matter. However, this was used as a basis to suspend and subsequently remove Mr Mhlanga. Ms K stated that these actions eroded the governance structure of Project Veza.

273. According to Ms K, after Advocate Muofhe himself replaced Mr Mhlanga as Director: Domestic Branch, he made it clear that he did not support the investigation.

EVIDENCE OBTAINED BY THE COMMISSION AFTER 29 JANUARY 2021

274. After the completion of Dr Mufamadi's, Mr Jafta's and Ms K's testimony at the Commission between 25 and 29 January 2021, the Commission received further affidavits from the following persons: "Ms K", Mr Patrick Mlambo, Brigadier Burger, Mr Shanga Jele, and Mr Jafta.

275. These affidavits deal with the following matters, which occurred after 29 January 2021:

    275.1 The steps taken within the SSA to terminate the existing operation of the Project Veza investigation

    275.2 The outsourcing of the Project Veza investigation

    275.3 The conduct of certain SSA officials, in response to a search and seizure warrant which the Investigating Directorate of the NPA attempted to serve on and execute against the SSA; and 275.4 The conduct of former Minister Dlodlo in relation to Project Justice and in relation to the proceedings of a JSCI meeting held in early 2021.

276. The supplementary affidavit of Ms K, referred to above, has been forwarded to Minister Dlodlo and to Adv Muofhe for their response. Both Minister Dlodlo and Adv Muofhe have filed affidavits dealing with their complaints levelled against the Commission on oath as required by the Chairperson. Minister Dlodlo's affidavit also dealt with her response to Ms K's affidavit. Adv Muofhe, however, limited his affidavit to his complaints, but has been invited to respond to Ms K's affidavit, to no avail.

Steps taken within the SSA to terminate the existing operation of the Project Veza investigation

277. Since testifying at the Commission:

277.1 During the week of 11 February 2021, the Ministry instructed Mr Jafta to hand over the Project Veza investigation to Adv Muofhe. Despite having diligently carried out its investigation, the Veza Project team was subsequently labelled a "rogue unit" by Adv Muofhe.

277.2 After having been assigned the Project Veza investigation, Adv Muofhe demanded the keys to the office from which the Project Veza team had conducted their investigation. This office had in fact been allocated to Mr McBride, Director of the Foreign Branch of the SSA, who thereafter requested the return of the keys to him. Ms K refused to hand over the keys to Adv Muofhe without Mr Jafta being present. She later agreed to hand over the keys to Mr Jafta's office after consulting Mr Jafta.

277.3 On 9 March 2021, the Project Veza investigators sought to move the Veza documents from Mr McBride's office to a safer office to protect the documentation It was resolved between the Project Veza team; by the OIGI; and by the Investigating Directorate of the NPA ("the ID") that to safeguard the processes that needed to be followed, the documents pertaining to their three concurrent investigations at the time should be transferred for safeguarding to the OIGI, which had the requisite security clearance. Soon after, Internal Security ("IS") placed a security lock on the office allocated to Mr McBride.

277.4 On the morning of 11 March 2021, Ms K was informed by members of IS that they had been instructed to lock certain offices (including those occupied by Mr Y) and to change the padlocks of the offices where the Project Veza team had previously worked.

277.5 The Project Veza investigators were redeployed to their former positions.

278. These actions effectively shut down the Project Veza investigation. The investigators were denied access to their workspaces, to the documentation they had been working with, and to the computers and printers allocated to them.

279. In this affidavit, dated 18 November 2021, Adv Muofhe denies that he hampered or sabotaged the Project Veza investigation. He also denies having placed Project Veza under lock and key and unlawfully refusing to release documentation to the NPA.

280. In her affidavit referred to above, Minister Dlodlo denies Ms K's authority to depose to her supplementary affidavit. The new acting DG of the SSA, Amb Tony Msimanga, also denies that Ms K had authority to depose to her supplementary affidavit. He also alleges that she disclosed classified information in her affidavit. Ms K's authority to assist the Commission and to testify before it had been obtained from Mr Jafta. After Mr Jafta's employment as DG had been terminated, the new acting DG, Amb Msimanga, did not withdraw Ms K's consent to testify or to depose to any further affidavits to the Commission. Accordingly, Mr Jafta's authorisation still stands.

281. Minister Dlodlo also claims that she has been prejudiced by not having been furnished with a formal Rule 3.3 notice. It is correct that no Rule 3.3 notices were issued in respect of Ms K's evidence. Ms K was not called as a witness to testify. In any event there was, in the view of the Commission, a real risk to her security. On 18 October 2021, a copy of Ms K's affidavit was forwarded to Minister Dlodlo. In her invited response, Minister Dlodlo admits her instruction to Mr Jafta on 19 Feb 2021 to hand over the investigation to Adv Muofhe. Minister Dlodlo states her reasons as follows:

281.1 She referred to Mr Jafta's evidence before the Commission to the effect that the SSA should not conduct operations from the Office of the Accounting Officer (DG). Minister Dlodlo relied on this evidence to justify removing the Project Veza investigation from Mr Jafta's office.

281.2 She denies that she in any way influenced or played any part in the locking of the offices from which the Project Veza investigators worked or in determining where the documents were kept or moved to.

The outsourcing of the Project Veza investigation

282. During the week of 11 February 2021, the Project Veza investigation was intended to be handed over to a private law firm, Bowman Gilfillan, a firm of attorneys, at a rate of R15 million per year. It is not clear to the Commission precisely what the mandate of Bowman Gilfillan was and is. However, all SSA-related criminal investigations should be placed before the Investigating Directorate of the NPA (ID). In addition, it should be noted that Adv Muofhe's request that the Project Veza investigation be outsourced had been declined in April 2020 by the finance department at the SSA and by Mr Jafta as the accounting officer. Adv Muofhe's allegation that no investigations had been carried out since the release of the HLRP report was not true, as the findings of the HLRP had been extensively investigated under Project Veza.

283. Minister Dlodlo defends Adv Muofhe's decision to refer the investigation to a private law firm, on the following grounds:

283.1 The HLRP recommended that a forensic investigation be conducted, and on 17 April 2020 Adv Muofhe informed Minister Dlodlo that he had appointed Bowmans. She thus directed Adv Muofhe "to urgently proceed with further operationalisation of the process for a forensic investigation and... all other investigations as was recommended by the HLRP". It is significant that the HLRP report was made public in December 2018 but the urgency in relation to the forensic investigation had arisen only after evidence relevant to the SSA had been given before the Commission in January 2021.

283.2 Minister Dlodlo stated that Adv Muofhe was entitled to brief Bowmans as the HLRP had recommended that the "competent authorities" conduct a forensic investigation. However, it is doubtful that the HLRP intended to recommend that an independent forensic law firm be briefed to conduct the investigation. Adv. Muofhe informed Minister Dlodlo on 17 April 2020 that he had briefed Bowmans "to investigate malfeasance, perceived and or otherwise, within SSA" (emphasis added). In this regard, it is considered significant that any further investigation conducted into the affairs of the SSA should be entirely independent. Such an investigation should also be vested with powers of obligation.

283.3 Minister Dlodlo stated that she supported the appointment of Bowmans as its forensic investigation was intended to augment the investigative capacity of the Agency.

284. Minister Dlodlo alleged further that the Project Veza investigation had been "political" and that the persons involved in that investigation worked within the Agency. Despite its investigations, the Commission has been presented with no evidence directly implicating the Project Veza investigators in harbouring political motives.

The conduct of certain SSA officials and executive: NPA denied access to Project Veza documents

285. On 11 March 2021, a summons in terms of Section 28(6) read with section 28(1)(a) and section 28(14) of the National Prosecuting Authority Act, 1998 was issued to be served on the DG of the SSA. On 12 March 2021, the Investigating Directorate of the NPA (ID) sought to execute the summons to obtain Project Veza documents. The attempts to execute these summonses have been dealt with in Ms K's supplementary affidavit dated 11 May 2021. In addition, the Commission has been provided with an affidavit dated 25 March 2021 deposed to by Brigadier Burger, who has been seconded to the ID since June 2019 as the Head Operational Coordinator. Further relevant affidavits deposed to by Mr Mlambo of the ID and Mr Jele of the OIGI have also been provided to the Commission.

286. On 12 March 2021, the summons was served on Mr Jafta. He instructed Ms K and one of the members of the Project Veza investigation team to point out to the ID and OIGI officials where the documents had been secured. However, as the teams from the OIGI and the ID were attempting to gain access to the office where the documents sought were thought to be, they were intercepted by Adv Muofhe. He refused them access to the office and documentation on the basis that they were classified and that there was no need for their safekeeping by the OIGI. It was explained to Adv Muofhe that this was tantamount to obstruction of justice.

287. Adv Muofhe claimed that the Project Veza investigation was illegitimate and accused the project investigation team of being "a rogue unit" which ought to be charged. He adopted the view that he could revoke the instruction of Mr Jafta to cooperate with the ID. Adv Muofhe also indicated his intention to bring an urgent application to prevent the removal of any documents from the SSA's premises. Adv Muofhe received a call from then Deputy Minister Zizi Kodwa and assured him (Mr Kodwa) that he would not permit the documents to leave the premises. Mr Kodwa indicated that the matter was being escalated politically and that the Minister was engaging with the President.

288. On 12 March 2021, Dr Dintwe instructed Adv Muofhe to grant the OIGI access to the information relating to the Project Veza investigation. On the instruction of President Ramaphosa, Dr Dintwe held off on the execution of his powers until President Ramaphosa had had an opportunity to meet with Dr Dintwe to discuss the situation. Following a negotiation with representatives from the ID, the OIGI and the SSA, an MOU signed by Mr Jafta was concluded allowing the ID to execute the summons on Friday 26 March 2021. Mr Jafta signed the MOU on behalf of the SSA. However, when the members of the NPA attempted to execute the summons on the afternoon of Friday 26 March 2021 they were told to return on Monday 29 March 2021.

289. On Saturday 27 March 2021, Mr Jafta was informed by letter from Minister Dlodlo that his acting appointment as DG "[was] hereby terminated with immediate effect". President Ramaphosa's insistence that Mr Jafta's acting contract was not terminated was thus not entirely accurate. Mr Jafta's contract came to an end at the very time that the summons under discussion was sought to be executed.

290. Mr Mlambo (of the ID) and Mr Jele (of the OIGI) returned to the SSA premises on 29 March 2021 to execute the summons. They presented themselves at the office of the newly appointed Acting DG, Amb T Msimang, but he was in Cape Town. Mr Zweli Itholeng, the Manager: Physical Security, and Mr Motha: Unit Head Internal Security, stated that they had been sent by the DDG, Mr Welcome Simelane, to escort them off the premises. Mr Simelane then made it plain that access would be denied unless a court order was obtained to release the documents since the summons had lapsed.

291. The ID was not able to take the matter further as the summons had been granted in terms of section 28(13) and not section 29 of the NPA Act – which allowed for search and seizure. Since then, and at least until 15 November 2021, the ID has not been furnished with the documents it has sought.

292. Minister Dlodlo denies that she played any part in Adv Muofhe's refusal to hand over the documents. However, according to the witnesses present, during their attempt to obtain the documents Adv Muofhe was on the phone to the Deputy Minister and assured him that the documents would not leave the premises.

293. Minister Dlodlo also denies that there was any ulterior motive behind the termination of Mr Jafta's contract of employment. There is, however, no explanation as to why Mr Jafta's appointment was not further extended at this critical time. One would have thought that given the events taking place concerning the SSA at the time, continuity in the leadership was important.

294. Both Minister Dlodlo and Adv Muofhe are of the view, based on legal advice, that the summons issued by the ID was invalid. For this contention, Minister Dlodlo and Adv Muofhe rely on the fact that there was no search warrant presented to authorise the ID to enter the premises. In this regard, they rely on the opinion of Nalane SC that the summons was unlawful if no search warrant had been signed by a judge magistrate for the ID to enter the premises.

295. Brigadier Burger concedes that the ID did not rely on a section 29 summons to access the documents and so could not search for them. However, he states that they were perfectly entitled to issue a section 28 summons for Mr Jafta to hand over the documents. The handover of documents did not have to take place at the offices of the NPA. Mr Jafta acted lawfully in authorising the documents to be handed over, with his consent, at the SSA premises. It is noteworthy that currently Mr Jafta was cooperating with the law enforcement authorities. The termination of his acting appointment referred to above brought an end to this cooperation.

296. Minister Dlodlo alleged that the presence of members of the IGI at the SSA to obtain the documents was unlawful; the IGI was only entitled to gain access to documents if section 7(8)(a) of the Oversight Act was complied with. Section 7(8)(a) requires the IGI to notify the DG in writing before requiring access to the premises of the SSA. Section 7(9) of the Oversight Act states, "No access to intelligence, information or premises contemplated in subsection (8)(a) may be withheld from the Inspector-General on any ground" (emphasis added). The presence of the IGI was by way of arrangement with the ID and OIGI that they would maintain the security of the classified documents removed from the SSA.

297. On the other hand, Mr Jafta was of the view that his actions were entirely lawful. He sets out his position in detail in his affidavit.

298. What is apparent from the above is that Minister Dlodlo and Adv Muofhe, on the one hand, and Mr Jafta, representatives of the NPA (and the ID), and the Office of the IGI on the other hand, adopted entirely opposing views regarding the legality of the attempts of the ID to obtain documentation from the SSA. Further, Minister Dlodlo adopted an entirely adversarial stance, which she has maintained. Minister Dlodlo did not attempt to regularise the situation and to facilitate the handover of documents to the ID.

The meeting of the Audit and Risk Committee of the SSA

299. In her supplementary affidavit, Ms K explained that after the leading of the SSA evidence at the Commission, the Project Veza investigation team was summonsed to attend a meeting with the Audit and Risk Committee of the SSA (ARC) on 11 February 2021. During the meeting the Committee members discredited the Project Veza investigation and questioned the progress of the investigation, its legitimacy and the methodology adopted. The ARC report on the meeting did not accurately reflect what had transpired at the meeting. Although Minister Dlodlo admitted being the signatory to the ARC report, she could not verify the accuracy of the Chairperson's information.

Matters relevant to the subsequent meeting of the JSCI

300. Soon after this, a parliamentary question related to "Project Justice", was sent to the SSA via the Ministry. A response was prepared by the Project Veza investigation team for Mr Jafta to submit to the Ministry, indicating that the investigation was ongoing and that it was not prudent to discuss details at this stage. It was suggested that the issue could be canvassed further by the JSCI.

301. On the morning of the relevant Parliamentary Question and Answer session, the Ministry sought further details about Operation Justice and asked to be provided with the entire file on this project, which Ms K felt was inappropriate.

    Minister Dlodlo said that she required only the content of the administrative file in relation to Project Justice – this to brief Parliament and to respond to parliamentary questions. Despite having been informed about the existence and stated objectives of the operation, in Parliament the Minister discredited reports about Project Justice stating they were based on "peddler [referring to Steven's] information".

302. The Minister's response disregarded the Project Veza's investigations which revealed that Project Justice existed and had been approved to influence the judiciary. Additionally, substantial amounts of monies were withdrawn and delivered to the then Minister's office monthly, allegedly for the execution of this operation.

303. Following the Parliamentary Question and Answer session, Mr Jafta instructed the Project Veza team to prepare a presentation regarding Project Justice to be presented to the JSCI. At the ensuing JSCI meeting, the team was excluded. Ms K believed that she was prevented from addressing the meeting in order to ensure that the peddler information narrative was upheld and that Minister Dlodlo's statements that there was no documentary evidence of the existence of Operation Justice were not contradicted.

304. In her affidavit submitted to the Commission, Minister Dlodlo denies that she excluded Ms K from the meeting; however, she does not deal with the assertion that she informed the meeting that Ms K was not available.

Allegations made by Mr Fraser

305. Mr Arthur Fraser brought an application to cross-examine several witnesses who had testified at the Commission. In this application, Mr Fraser refers to his unsigned and incomplete statement to the Commission, annexed to his application as Annexure AF 1.

306. In the main, Mr Fraser's statement to the Commission seeks to justify his involvement in the PAN programme and the activities conducted by the CSU as necessary counterintelligence. Mr Fraser asserts that:

> As soon as the National Intelligence Agency realized that we were being manipulated, through the inherited Apartheid National Intelligence Service networks, the National Intelligence Agency adopted the 2006 Principal Agent Network Programme to be free of Apartheid forces' manipulation...

307. Mr Fraser further alleges that President Ramaphosa and Mlambo JP had interfered with a case involving Dr Dintwe, namely Inspector General of Intelligence and others v Minister of State Security and others. Specifically, Mr Fraser alleges that as a result of the interference, this case was removed from the roll on 19 April 2018 on the basis that the relief sought by Dr Dintwe had been met.

308. Having been invited to respond to Mr Fraser's allegation, and in an affidavit dated 12 November 2021, Mlambo JP denies that he interfered with this case in any way: he denies receiving a phone call from President Ramaphosa regarding the case; being involved in the case in any way; or being requested to do anything about the case. In support of his version, Mlambo JP attaches an explanatory e-mail from Van der Westhuizen J and notes inscribed on the roll for that week to show that the parties' legal representatives were present in his chambers on 19 April 2018 and that the matter was removed from the roll by agreement.

309. President Ramaphosa was also invited to respond. In an affidavit dated 22 November 2021, he denies the allegations relating to this case.

THE JOINT STANDING COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE REPORT

310. The latest report of the JSCI is of relevance to the evidence before the Commission. This report covers the financial year ending 31 March 2020 and the period up to December 2020.

Background to the JSCI report

311. The report was presented in accordance with the provisions of the Intelligence Services Oversight Act, 1994 (ISO Act). Section 3 of the ISO Act deals with the functions of the JSCI. They are, amongst others, to hold hearings and subpoena witnesses on any matter relating to intelligence and national security. The JSCI may also request relevant officials to explain any aspect of reports furnished to the Committee.

312. Given these and other powers and duties, it may well be asked what the JSCI has done in relation to the intelligence services over the past decade. Of course, the full functioning of the Committee may not be known to the Commission. The question is, however, a legitimate one: even if the JSCI did act to curb illegality (which is not apparent), it was certainly not effective.

Reports submitted to the JSCI

313. Contrary to the evidence of Amb Cwele, the JSCI report records that the SSA was indeed illegally established by Proclamation 59 of 2009. The legislation regularising the situation only came into force in 2013 with the passing of the General Intelligence Laws Amendment Act of 2013.

314. It was reported to the JSCI that, at the SSA, there had been corruption, improper recruitment to the SO unit, the existence of a parallel vetting structure resulting in fake top-secret clearance certificates being issued, and "sniper training" for non-SSA members. This latter issue should be referred for further investigation: for what reason would operatives need to undergo "sniper training"?

315. The Committee was informed that only between 0% and 2% of IGI recommendations were implemented. This is dealt with below.

316. It is clear from the JSCI report that matters of economic development and illicit economic activity are regarded as matters within the SSA mandate. This corroborates evidence given by Amb Shaik and others regarding the scope of the SSA mandate and the propriety of the Gupta investigation – which was halted prematurely at the insistence of former President Zuma. It raises the further question as to why the many allegations of corruption and state capture were simply not dealt with, adequately or at all.

317. What is also clear from the report is that the White Paper is still seen as a relevant document. Its review (namely, an update to align it with the National Security Strategy) is recommended. This is contrary to the evidence of Mr Mahlobo, who dismissed the White Paper as merely a guide to the intelligence community.

318. According to a presentation by the ARC of the SSA, the main concern of ARC was the continuous and automatic audit qualifications based on the nature of SSA business.

319. Project Veza reports were given to the JSCI, first in November 2019 and then at special meetings between 25 August and 4 September 2020. The reports included matters of criminality and of various (illegal) projects. If one has regard to the record of interaction between the JSCI and the SSA concerning Project Veza, it is apparent that the JSCI accepted that the project would continue, reports would continue to be submitted to the JSCI, and the project would not be terminated.

320. In the IGI's report to the JSCI regarding the SSA, several instances of the SSA acting outside of its mandate were reported. The IGI also reported that intelligence failures were not reported in terms of the Act. A possible "loophole" was identified in this regard in that the Act only requires "significant intelligence failures" to be reported.

Findings of the JSCI

321. The JSCI recorded, amongst others, the following findings and made the following observations:

    321.1 It was found that implementation of the recommendations of the HLRP report had been slow

    321.2 It commented that the IGI Intelligence Certificate refers to financial irregularities, as well as security breaches, leading to intelligence failures (see further below)

    321.3 Threats to the Project Veza team were noted. Security protection for those individuals involved in the investigation was recommended (this also assumes the project's continuation). It was also noted that serious financial irregularities had taken place at the SSA

    321.4 Challenges in the SSA's financial statements were noted. It was also noted that quarterly reports to enable ministerial oversight were not produced by the SSA

321.5 Governance challenges were noted, as well as instability in senior management. The Committee also noted a lack of consequence management (at all SSA sites)

321.6 Irregularities at Crime Intelligence were noted; and 321.7 It was noted that the IGI reported "looting of funds" from the Secret Service Account by "officials".

Recommendations of the JSCI

322. The JSCI made the following recommendations of significance:

322.1 All three intelligence services Ministers were directed to implement the IGI's findings. The JSCI is to investigate ways of making the OIGI recommendations enforceable.

322.2 The HLRP report is to be implemented without delay.

322.3 Those implicated in financial irregularities are to be reported to law enforcement agencies.

322.4 The loopholes identified in legislation regarding reporting of significant intelligence failures must be addressed when legislation is reviewed.

322.5 The White Paper should be reviewed when the legislation is reviewed.

322.6 Regarding Project Veza: security is to be provided to the investigators; and the team is directed to report quarterly to the JSCI. The clear understanding of the JSCI therefore seems to be that the Project Veza investigation would be maintained.

322.7 Disciplinary action is to be taken in respect of financial mismanagement.

322.8 Crime Intelligence must consider the recovery of money looted from the Security Services Account.

The Auditor General's report to Parliament

323. The SSA received a qualified report from the AG. Attached to the JSCI report is the AG's report to Parliament on the SSA for the 2019/20 financial year. In this report the AG gives a qualified opinion. The basis for this opinion begins at paragraph 3 of the report. In paragraph 4.2, the AG states that part of the reason for the qualified opinion is the nature of the business and related inherent risk, which has limited the AG's ability to confirm assets under property and equipment and computer software. Paragraph 5 then deals with property and equipment. In it, certain figures have been redacted.

323.1 Among the other significant findings in the report, the AG found that effective and appropriate steps had not been taken to prevent irregular expenditure. Furthermore, effective steps had not been taken to prevent fruitless and wasteful expenditure of R16 261 000.

323.2 The AG was unable to confirm what disciplinary steps had been taken and what investigations had been initiated. Furthermore, the AG found that disciplinary hearings were not always held for confirmed cases of financial misconduct committed by officials.

324. Similar findings to the above were made in respect of Crime Intelligence and Defence Intelligence.

QUESTIONS PUT TO PRESIDENT RAMAPHOSA CONCERNING STATE SECURITY

325. President Ramaphosa testified before the Commission in his capacity as President of the country and as President of the ANC. During this questioning, he admitted that the SSA had been compromised and was itself acting under the "milieu of state capture" (this is discussed in detail in another section dealing with President Ramaphosa's evidence).

The PAN investigation

326. On 24 August 2021, Mr Fraser's attorney, Mr Mabuza, addressed a letter to the Commission complaining that Mr Fraser had been unfairly and unjustifiably implicated in the evidence before the Commission and in the statements made by Adv Pretorius in his opening address and during the course of his questioning of President Ramaphosa.

327. Mr Mabuza claims on behalf of Mr Fraser that Adv Pretorius stated (presumably with reference to the PAN Summary): "... It is replete with references to criminal offences, for example the unlawful procurement of assets..." Mr Fraser denies that he was ever accused of making unlawful procurements during the PAN programme.

328. During his questioning of President Ramaphosa, Adv Pretorius put to him the following:

> There is a declassified summary of the SSA internal report... it is replete with references to criminal offences for example the unlawful procurement of assets, signing of fraudulent contracts, payment to persons without valid contracts having been signed. And the internal SSA report concluded that there was a sufficient basis upon which to institute criminal investigations into a range of persons who have not been named in – well were named in the summary but their names were redacted. But Mr Arthur Fraser was one of those against whom criminal investigations were recommended.

329. These propositions put by Adv Pretorius are an accurate reflection of what is contained in the PAN investigation summary.

330. These were also the findings of the HLRP. In paragraph 7.3.4 of the HLRP report it is stated, referring to the PAN programme, that:

> Several investigations have been conducted into this project by the internal Agency investigators, as well as two investigations which were conducted by the OIGI. The Panel heard the views of several persons involved in the investigations, as well as those of the IG.

331. The Panel noted that allegations of malfeasance, procedural transgressions and criminal behaviour were placed before it. It appeared to the Panel there had been instances of serious criminal behaviour which had taken place under the guise of conducting covert work and that this behaviour may have involved theft, forgery and utter fraud, corruption, and even bordered on organised crime and transgressions of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act (POCA).

332. What Adv Pretorius ultimately put to the President was that the illegality of the PAN programme insofar as it existed between 2007 and 2011 had been "swept under the carpet". It was also put to President Ramaphosa that the investigations which were carried out by the IGI "died an unnatural death." This is because the IGI has no powers of compulsion or sanction and is only empowered to make recommendations. Because of this, the IGI's recommendations have, until recently, largely been ignored and there has been no consequence management.

333. This was of particular concern to the HLRP, which stated in its report that:

> Of particular concern for the Panel was that, apart from suspending the programme in 2011, it appears that no formal action or consequence management has taken place by the Executive or the Agency management. The absence of consequence management has become a theme running throughout the Agency for several years.

334. The principal proposition put, namely that there had been no prosecutions or other accountability following the investigations into PAN, was accepted by President Ramaphosa. The President stated that he had become aware of the allegations in relation to PAN through the HLRP report. The President was also aware of the IGI investigation into PAN. President Ramaphosa also agreed that the investigations into PAN had been taken away from law enforcement. As to how that happened, President Ramaphosa said "it happened as many other things happened that are unexplainable"; the task, he said, is now to "move forward".

335. Mr Fraser also complains that reference has not been made by the Commission to further investigations into the PAN programme. Mr Fraser also insists that the Audit report implicating him was withdrawn by the SSA audit team after irregularities were discovered. The Commission is not aware of further investigations conducted by Crime Intelligence, the external private forensic audit firm, or the external legal firm which allegedly cleared Mr Fraser. Mr Fraser has not provided these reports to the Commission.

336. Mr Fraser was directed to provide an affidavit under oath in which he was to provide detail to the Commission of the investigations referred to by his attorney. Mr Fraser was also directed to provide full details on the basis of which the Audit Report was allegedly withdrawn by the SSA audit team. Mr Fraser has not availed himself of this opportunity.

337. Mr Fraser points out that the disciplinary proceedings against an agent involved in the PAN proceedings were withdrawn, presumably suggesting that the SSA itself accepts that there was no wrongdoing during the PAN programme. However, as was pointed out by the learned judge hearing the matter referred to, the disciplinary procedure applicable to the said agent's employment with the SSA is governed, inter alia, by Chapter XVIII of the Intelligence Services Regulations, 2014 made in terms of section 37 of the Intelligence Services Act 65 of 2002. While clause 9 of this chapter provides for the suspension of a member of the SSA pending the outcome of an investigation into misconduct or a disciplinary hearing, clause 9(8) provides that the total period of such suspension must not exceed 18 months.

338. This technicality could not be complied with in the case of the agent referred to as the internal investigation had not been completed. The fact that the member concerned was because of this technicality ultimately re-instated and no charges were proffered against him does not mean that charges ought not or will not in future be proffered against him. The member's re-instatement was thus not any indication of the absence of criminality.

The Project Veza investigation

339. Similarly, when the findings of Project Veza were put to President Ramaphosa, he stated that he did not know when he became aware of those findings but admitted that he was aware of them. He further stated that these findings had motivated him to move the SSA into the Presidency:

> [p]olitical responsibility of the State Security Agency now resides in the Presidency and deliberations continue on the Panel's recommendations to split up the SSA into distinct domestic and foreign intelligence services.

340. President Ramaphosa admitted that when he deployed Mr Fraser to Correctional Services in 2018, he was aware of some of the allegations against him in relation to SSA. He stated, however, that he was hoping that the Commission was going to assist him in making a fuller determination.

The events surrounding the recent violence following former President Zuma's arrest

341. Mr Fraser has complained, through his attorney, that Adv Pretorius suggested that there was a correlation between the events of July 2021 and himself and Amb Dlomo. Mr Fraser points out that Amb Dlomo was not even at the Agency during 2008. However, it is pointed by Mr Y in his affidavit testified to by Ms K that:

    341.1 In 2008 and 2009, a group of approximately 48 non-SSA members were recruited and trained in preparation for their deployment after the May 2009 elections to various roles, with responsibilities that included VIP protection and intelligence collection at SANAI and elsewhere. Their recruitment and training was directed by Ambassador Thulani Dlomo, then a security manager at the KwaZulu-Natal Department of Social Development ("DSD"). Ambassador Dlomo had previously been a member of President Jacob Zuma's protection team.

    341.2 According to one of the SANAI trainers who reported to the investigation team, the rationale proffered by Ambassador Dlomo for the training was to build a presidential protection unit that is like the United States Secret Service which would collect intelligence affecting the President. These recruited personnel would subsequently be deployed to SANDF, SAPS and SSA (bypassing official recruitment and vetting processes) when President Zuma assumed leadership after the elections in 2009.

342. The involvement of Amb Dlomo in SSA matters referred to above was followed by his formal appointment to the SSA.

343. At no stage in the questioning of President Ramaphosa did Adv Pretorius suggest that there was a correlation as alleged by Mr Fraser. Rather, throughout this questioning, Adv Pretorius put it to President Ramaphosa that questions had arisen that should be investigated. The President agreed.

344. Mr Y's affidavit makes it plain that persons trained under the auspices of Amb Dlomo who were neither vetted nor formally employed by the SSA remained unaccounted for, as did certain weapons which were provided to them. Mr Fraser himself testified before the HLRP that some of the persons trained under Amb Dlomo were trained as "assassins".

345. As stated above, it was put to President Ramaphosa that these were matters of great concern, which one does not know the answer to, but which should "raise red flags". This proposition was accepted by the President.

CONCLUSION

346. At least during the period under review (from 2009 to the present) there appears to have been a marked shift in the thinking and actions of the SSA. During this period the activities of the SSA appear to have been directed not primarily at serving the interests of the South African population but rather and to a material degree at serving factional and political interests, including those of former President Zuma and those close to him.

347. The evidence shows that the failure of the various oversight bodies, often due to them being improperly resourced or these bodies' negligence, allowed the corruption and unlawful benefit of various actors within and outside the SSA to continue unchecked.

348. The evidence has shown that while there was a centralisation of authority and a restructuring of the Agency, constitutionally sanctioned processes were transgressed, side-lined, or simply ignored. This paved the way for the carrying out of intelligence operations which were unconstitutional and illegal.

349. The shift signalled a return to an intelligence agency where coordination between the intelligence services (i.e., the police, military and civilian intelligence services) is weakened. In intelligence, there is a need for sharing of information, because in the absence of coordination there could be intelligence agencies spreading disinformation, information peddlers, and bogus informants.

350. This shift was accompanied by the subversion and avoidance of the prescribed rules and processes for good and accountable governance, including financial controls. This enabled the carrying out of operations and activities which fell outside the lawful mandate of the SSA, and which were to a material extent unlawful.

351. Unlawful intelligence operations and fronting companies were used to siphon funds from the SSA and to create parallel intelligence capacities that posed a risk to national security and the constitutionally established state.

352. In answering the questions posed at the outset, it is reasonable to conclude that the SSA contributed materially to the creation and protection of an environment which facilitated state capture.

352.1 First, the SSA failed to protect the people of South Africa from the threat that state capture posed to our national security. The SSA failed to establish the nature and extent of corruption and its effect on South Africa. The SSA, instead, allowed state capture to continue unchecked – a major intelligence failure. It then embarked upon a course of action which was not only unlawful, but constituted a project to benefit, personally and politically, beneficiaries not entitled thereto. This is evidenced most directly by the fact that the SSA halted its investigation into the Guptas and their undue influence over Mr Zuma.

352.2 Second, the SSA played a role in protecting the alleged state capture project and those who enabled it. First, SSA resources were redirected to protect the personal and political interest of these enablers, especially Mr Zuma. Second, in this way, the SSA made common cause with the weakening and redirecting of the work of LEAs when state capture was ongoing. Third, the SSA itself positively contributed to endemic corruption, theft and the abuse of state resources.

353. There was pervasive fraud and corruption within the SSA. Large amounts of money, mainly cash, remain unaccounted for. Even viewed as a state institution in isolation from the broader LEA framework, the SSA evidence sheds light on the nature and extent of systemic corruption which this Commission is tasked to investigate.

354. There was a co-ordinated project to repurpose the financial and human resources of civilian intelligence in order to protect and promote factional political interests rather than the collective national interest. Fundamental to the evidence is the complete undermining of the constitutional prescripts set down for the civilian intelligence services. The evidence shows that there was not only a failure to achieve the constitutional goal of human security, but that there was a reversion to a pre-democratic mindset in which the security services were used to assert the executive authority of the state in ways that limited human rights and democratic freedoms.

355. The mismanagement of the armoury and vetted employment and training of intelligence personnel not vetted by SSA provided access to arms by people who may not understand the ethics of intelligence services and the societal aim to create a societal environment that is free from violence and instability, while engendering respect for the rule of law and human life.

356. Whether all the intelligence projects and operations were in fact successfully implemented or not, their stated purpose reflects a deliberate attempt to interfere in the constitutional functions and independence of other pillars of democracy, namely the media and other branches of government –including the alleged attempts to influence the judiciary. In short, the SSA project was an attempt at unaccountable, unconstitutional, and parallel government.

357. There is inadequate legislative regulation of the “dividing line” between lawful and unlawful intelligence operations, particularly of the intrusive and covert kind which infringe constitutional rights such as privacy.

357.1 The interception of certain communications is regulated by the Regulation of Interception of Communications and Provision of Communications-Related Information Act 70 of 2002 (“RICA”). However, the privacy protections of RICA have recently been declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court in the case of AmaBhungane.

357.2 Other intrusive intelligence collection methods – such as the infiltration of an organisation, physical surveillance, and recruitment of sources – are not governed directly by any express legislative authority. Instead, these kinds of intrusive, covert activities are regulated only by ODs, which are internal, classified prescripts setting out the SSA’s work method for such operations.

358. Notwithstanding the need for greater legislative clarity as to the “dividing line” between lawful and unlawful intelligence operations in these contexts, the SSA evidence asserts that many of the intrusive covert operations undertaken were unlawful.

359. Irrespective of the covert nature of an intelligence operation, the constitutional imperative remains: national security must be pursued in compliance with the law and within the limits of the law. That law must be known to the people governed by it. It cannot be secret to any degree. The intelligence services are required to protect rights, not infringe them, regardless of the secrecy of these operational activities.

RECOMMENDATIONS

360. Many of the general recommendations which the HLRP has made have not been implemented, either at all or satisfactorily. Accordingly, it is recommended that:

On consequence management, discipline and criminal proceedings

361. The President instructs the appropriate law enforcement bodies and oversight and internal disciplinary bodies to investigate all manifest breaches of the law, regulations and other prescripts in the SSA with a view to instituting criminal or disciplinary processes.

362. The investigation is now best pursued by LEAs, appropriately capacitated and resourced. The criminal matters dealt with by the Project Veza investigators, coupled with the evidence obtained through the Commission's investigations, should be sufficient to expedite the ID investigation and subsequent prosecutions.

363. It is recommended that the erstwhile internal Project Veza investigation should not be outsourced in circumstances where the SSA will continue to control the investigation and decide what documentation and information should be provided. Certainly, the SSA should not have any control over who may be questioned as part of any such investigation.

364. Any further investigation into the affairs of the SSA should be independent. It should have powers of compulsion regarding witnesses, documentation, and information. It should also have appropriate powers of access to classified information.

On the structure of the intelligence services

365. A comprehensive architectural review of the intelligence structures is undertaken, which considers:

    365.1 Appropriate separation of the SSA into two services – a domestic and a foreign service.

    365.2 The appointment of a task team to initiate, undertake and coordinate the recommended structural reviews and oversee the implementation of their outcomes.

    365.3 The title "State Security Agency" be changed to reflect the determination to return the role and philosophy of our democratic intelligence capacity back to their constitutional origins.

    365.4 As part of the architectural review, attention should be given to clearer and more focused definitions of the mandate of any resulting services as well as other sections of the broader intelligence community.

On executive powers

366. It is noted that the executive responsibility for the SSA now resides in the Presidency. It is noted that in terms of the Intelligence Services Act, the definition of "Minister" includes the President himself.

367. There remains a need, however, to clarify the respective powers and responsibilities of the administration and the Executive. In particular, sections 10 and 12 of the Intelligence Services Act require attention.

On strengthening of oversight

368. The current legislative provisions governing the IGI are reviewed, in particular:

    368.1 To provide appropriate enforcement mechanisms to the OIGI, to ensure that its recommendations are implemented

    368.2 To amend the Public Service Act to incorporate the OIGI as a national department distinct from the SSA

368.3 To amend the Oversight Act to make allowance for the funding of the OIGI from an independent source, not aligned to the SSA or any other Intelligence Service; and 368.4 To ensure the independence of the OIGI from the SSA and other security entities in all relevant respects. Equally the OIGI should be independent from the Executive, including the President.

369. The JSCI performs an important role in exercising control over the Security Cluster Executive and the Security Cluster itself. It is evident that over the period under review it failed to detect, prevent or ensure accountability in respect of the unlawful activities of the SSA. It is important therefore that a review into the functioning of the JSCI is undertaken. Further, and given the demands of intelligence oversight, the issue of a dedicated and well-resourced support capacity for the JSCI needs to be explored.

On financial controls

370. The Office of the President and the SSA should consider alternative payment methods to cash, where appropriate and possible. The methods implemented should provide the necessary protection of sensitive information. The methods considered and implemented may be benchmarked against the practices of foreign intelligence services to determine how to minimise the use of cash and to identify secure methods of non-cash options for the movement of cash and the making of payments.

370.1 The SSA should ensure that the rules governing Temporary Advances (TAs) are revised, detailed and consistently implemented. These should include the introduction of auditable methods for accounting for the expenditure of such advances. The SSA should further ensure that there are routine and visible consequences for breaches of such rules and processes. Measures should be put in place to prevent evasion or avoidance of such rules.

370.2 The Ministry and SSA should review the SSA's annual planning process and its relation to the budgeting process. This review should consider clear accountability and management of budgeting, expenditure and performance against planning priorities and targets that are shareable with the AG, JSCI and other relevant oversight bodies.

On ethical culture

371. The intelligence community instill ethical intelligence practices through the establishment of an autonomous Ethics Office within the Office of the DG and the institutionalisation of integrity testing for members and protection of investigators from intimidation.

372. Finally, reference is made to the full set of detailed recommendations which were made by the HLRP at Section 15 of the report.

373. In summary, since 2009 the SSA has failed to meet the goals set for it in the Constitution. More concerning is the abundant evidence that it has deliberately abused its powers and resources in furtherance of unlawful objectives. The institution needs a complete reset. Its overall aims and objectives require alignment with its constitutional mandate – the security and protection of the South African people. Thereafter its structures, personnel, plans, and projects need to be revised to meet these aspirations.

CRIME INTELLIGENCE

INTRODUCTION AND CONTEXT

1. This report specifically relates to the Criminal Intelligence (CI) unit, a unit within the South African Police Services (SAPS) and the Secret Services Account (SSA), a financial account administered from within the CI. The contents of this memorandum derive from bundles of documents, exhibits and witness statements, and from brief discussions with the Chairperson, an official in the Commission administration and one of the evidence leaders.

2. The establishment of the Commission arises from a report by the Public Protector, no. 6 of 2016/2017 dated 14 October 2016 called the “State of Capture”, written and published in terms of s 182(1)(b) of the Constitution, s 3(1) of the Executive Members Ethics Act and s 8(1) of the Public Protector Act, 1994. The Public Protector called her report State of Capture. The SoCR related to an investigation into complaints of alleged improper and unethical conduct by the then President of the Republic and other state functionaries relating to alleged improper relationships and involvement of the Gupta family in the removal and appointment of ministers and directors of SOEs resulting in improper and possibly corrupt award of state contracts and benefits to the Gupta family’s businesses.

Relevant content of the "State of Capture" report

3. The investigation by the Public Protector which culminated in the SoCR emanated from complaints lodged against President Zuma on 16 March 2016 and 22 April 2016. The investigation included an examination of the business dealings of the Gupta family with SOEs and government departments and included whether any state functionary in any organ of state or other person acted unlawfully, improperly or corruptly in connection with the extension of state-provided business financing facilities to Gupta linked companies or persons. There is no specific reference in the SoCR to improprieties within CI or arising from transactions effected through the SSA. It does, however, fall within the scope of the Commissions TORs.

Scope of the evidence

4. The Commission’s interest stems from evidence presented to the Commission in relation to crime intelligence. Two witnesses testified: Colonel Kobus Demeyer Roelofse, employed in the Directorate of Priority Crimes Investigations (the DPCI), Western Cape, of the SAPS, and Lieutenant Colonel Dhanajaya Gangulu Naidoo, a member of the SAPS formerly stationed at its head office, with duties including the administration of the SSA. The focus of their evidence was on transactions effected, which appeared to constitute misappropriations.

5. In addition, a sworn statement of Col Jacobus Johannes Hendrik Roos, was placed before the Commission as an annexure to the statement of Col Roelofse, and the affidavits of certain persons who were served with notices under rule 3.3 of the Rules governing the Commission.

6. The Commission issued 45 such notices in relation to the evidence of Col Naidoo and 43 such notices in relation to the evidence of Col Roelofse and/or Col Roos. Three persons responded to the notices in relation to Col Naidoo: Ms Navaranjeni Munusamy, Gen Rayman Lalla and Gen Mphego. Seven persons responded to the notices in relation to Col Roelofse and/or Col Roos: Mr Bheki Cele, Ms Navarenjeni Munusamy, Lieutenant General Johannes Khomotso Phahlane, Lieutenant General Bongiwe Zulu, Major General Chris Ngcobo, Lieutenant General Julius Molefe and Lieutenant General Richard Mdluli. None of these persons sought leave to cross-examine or give evidence. Certain of them submitted affidavits in response to the notices, and these affidavits have been considered in this memorandum.

7. The evidence focussed on but was not limited to the alleged conduct of Gen Solomon Lazarus, the CFO of the State Security Account (SSA) at least until his arrest in 2011 and Gen Richard Mdluli, who was appointed divisional commissioner for CI in 2009.

CRIMINAL INTELLIGENCE MANDATE, AND STRUCTURE AND PURPOSE OF SSA

8. The mandate of CI is the managing of crime intelligence, the analysis of crime information and the provision of technical support for investigations and crime prevention operations. The strategic operations of CI include collating, evaluating, analysing, coordinating, and disseminating intelligence for the purposes of technical operational and strategic utilisation; supplying intelligence products relating to national strategic intelligence to National Intelligence; instituting counterintelligence measures within SAPS; and preventing and fighting crime through enhanced international cooperation and innovation in police and security functions.

9. The SSA contains government money made available through the National Treasury. All funding for CI is carried out through the SSA. The money allocated to the SSA may, however, be deposited into different bank accounts. The SSA is a financial management system within SAPS but is not audited in the same manner as the SAPS open account, used in everyday police operations. The secrecy attached to the SSA is to protect covert operations and protect individuals, projects and operations from exposure.

10. Apart from undercover members of SAPS, there are two categories of civilians used and paid by CI: contact persons (i.e., those who assist in a specific situation or provide ad hoc information) and informants (i.e., persons registered on the CI payroll who receive a monthly remuneration).

11. The SSA also pays for the rental and furnishing of safe houses; premises from which members undertaking CI operations can carry out their functions without public exposure. Such premises may not be used for private purposes. There is an established procedure by which such premises are acquired.

12. The regulatory framework applicable to CI and the SSA consists of the South African Police Services Act 68 of 1995, the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 (PFMA), the Secret Services Account Amendment Act 142 of 1992, and policy directives and procedures for CI laid down from time to time.

13. In South Africa and within the SAPS documents are classified in ascending levels of secrecy called “Restricted”, “Confidential”, “Secret” and “Top Secret”. The workings of the classification system are contained in a document classified as Restricted but available on the Internet called the Minimum Information Safety Standards (MISS).

14. The question of the classification of documents received the attention of the Constitutional Court in Independent Newspapers (Pty) Ltd v Minister for Intelligence Services: in re Masetlha v President of the Republic of South Africa and Another CCT 01/07 [2007]. The power of the national executive to classify documents to protect them from disclosure derives from s 172(1) of the Constitution which permits the executive to formulate national policy. On 4 December 1998, the national executive made a policy in relation to the classification of documents called the Minimum Information Security Standards (MISS), which was adopted by the Cabinet. It applies to all departments of State that handle classified information in the national interest. It provides for measures to protect classified information and empowers the Minister to protect information by classifying it. In addition, national legislation and regulations prohibit the disclosure of certain classified information but these are not relevant to the present topic.

15. Clause 3.4 of Chapter 2 of MISS which precedes the descriptions of the several types of classification reads: The security measures are not intended and should not be applied to cover up maladministration, corruption, criminal actions, etc or to protect individuals/officials involved in such cases.

16. It follows that MISS itself requires that classified material should in principle be made available to SAPS when investigating alleged maladministration, corruption, criminal actions and the like. The files should not be withheld from any SAPS officer in the performance of their duties and when investigating cases included in clause 3.4.

17. During the period July 2009 to November 2011. Lieutenant General Richard Naggie Mdluli was the Divisional Commissioner Criminal Investigations (CI), Gen Solomon Lazarus was the Chief Financial Officer (CFO) of the SSA, and Col Heine Johannes Barnard was the Section Commander, Supply Chain Management of CI, based in Pretoria.

18. During the same period Company X was a trading entity which formed part of a clandestine operation, set up and funded through the SSA and operated by members of CI. Col Barnard was a procurement officer for Company X.

Events leading to the investigation into the looting of the SSA

19. Col Roelofse, Section Commander: Major Case Operations in the Directorate for Priority Crimes Investigations (DCPI), investigated a murder implicating a very senior officer, Gen Mdluli. This led to a further investigation that he described as the "looting" of the SSA. During this latter investigation, he encountered efforts to frustrate and hamper his investigation and attempts to prosecute allegedly criminal conduct by members of the SAPS were frustrated by senior officials within the SAPS and the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA). Both these organs of state failed to address this situation.

20. Specific examples of the attempts to frustrate and hamper this investigation and subsequent prosecution of officials are provided below. But some events transpired within CI before Col Roelofse was brought on board that illustrate the challenges faced by his predecessors and particularly Col Roos, whose affidavit was part of the submitted evidence.

21. In 2003 Col Roos was the head of internal audit at CI. The audit plan for 2004 was to conduct an audit of the SSA advance office. Certain discrepancies were noted, including one related to a company called LLVS Trading and Services, which provided cleaning services to undercover offices used by CI. LLVS was owned by a colonel in CI in charge of an undercover office. The same audit revealed fraud in relation to the repairs of CI vehicles.

22. The audit findings were discussed with Brig van Vuuren, the legal officer of CI whose opinion was requested. The findings of this investigation and the request to Brig van Vuuren for an opinion were reported to Gen Mphego, the Assistant Commissioner of CI. Gen Mphego became angry and told Col Roos to leave his office.

23. Brig van Vuuren provided an opinion dated 21 October 2004 which Col Roos supplemented with an information note dated 22 October 2004 and submitted to Gen Mphego. Gen Mphego informed him not to discuss the matter with or hand over any documentation to any other persons.

24. However, Col Roos discussed the matter with Mr Steyn, in charge of the office of the Auditor General (AG) responsible for auditing the SSA. Mr Steyn reported that he had already been approached by Divisional Commissioner Lalla and Major General Els, head of Crime Intelligence Gathering (CI) at head office, who had questioned him about the matter. Col Roos gave his documentary information to Mr Steyn.

25. Col Roos was later summoned to Gen Mphego's office and took with him Col Groenewald of CI Internal Audit. Col Malaza, a suspect in the investigations, was with Gen Mphego. Gen Mphego discussed the possible fraud and informed Col Malaza that he was implicated. Col Malaza indicated he had no idea about what was going on. Col Roos attempted to present the facts of the case, but Gen Mphego interrupted him and told him and Groenewald to leave his office.

26. In November 2004, Col Roos was contacted telephonically by a brigadier in the Commercial Branch of the SAPS, who informed him that he would send the documents to Commercial Crime in Pretoria who would conduct the investigation. A few days later, Col Roos was summoned to the office of Gen Mphego where Gen Lazarus and Brig van Vuuren were present. Gen Mphego was angry and allegedly threatened Col Roos, who he believed had reported the matter to Commercial Crime. Gen Mphego said he would end Col Roos's career. Brig van Vuuren acknowledged reporting the matter to Head Office and then left the meeting. Col Roos was then told to leave.

27. The matter was never again discussed but later while under the impression that Col Malaza had resigned from SAPS, Col Roos learned that Col Malaza was in the undercover agent program. He also learned that Col Malaza had been convicted of fraud, forgery and uttering in the Pretoria Magistrate's Court while working at CI.

28. After Gen Mdluli was appointed Divisional Commissioner for CI, a Col Odendaal summoned Col Roos to a meeting with Gen Mdluli in July 2009 at a Pretoria hotel room. This was the first time Col Roos had met Gen Mdluli. Gen Mdluli told him that he wanted to clean CI and charge all corrupt members. He wanted Col Roos to provide him with his information in this regard. Gen Mduli specifically mentioned the name of Gen Lazarus. Col Roos believed that Gen Mdluli was serious about the investigation and that he wanted to clean up CI.

29. At a second meeting with Gen Mdluli at his Erasmuskloof office, the General handed Col Roos a letter dated 29 July 2009 appointing him as team leader in the investigation of certain instances of fraud relating to informer files, safe houses and receipts of purchases and invoices within the SSA in KwaZulu-Natal, Limpopo and the Northern Cape.

30. On 3 December 2009, he attended a third meeting at Gen Mdluli's office. Present, when he arrived, were Col Odendaal, Col Ntuli, Brig Mokoshane and Gen Mabasa. After a while Gen Mdluli arrived with Gen Lazarus and Brig van Vuuren.

31. Gen Mdluli wanted to know why those present had gone to Gen Dramat and who had given them permission to do so. Col Roos had not done so, but the others had to explain their actions to Gen Mdluli and seemingly Gen Lazarus.

32. Gen Lazarus confronted those present for their audacity to investigate him. Gen Mdluli did not intervene. Col Roos asked Gen Mdluli why they were being humiliated by Gen Lazarus, the person Gen Mdluli had told them to investigate. Gen Mdluli said that the institution (i.e., SAPS) was bigger than any one individual and told them to stop the investigation. They were then ordered to leave. Col Roos concluded that Gen Mdluli was now "big friends" with Gen Lazarus and Brig van Vuuren.

33. During May and June 2010, Col Roos oversaw an audit at Universal Technical Enterprises CC (UTE), one of the front companies used by CI. He uncovered fraud in UTE's dealings with Hills Fitment Centre in KwaZulu-Natal. Essentially the over quoting for repairs to vehicles. While still busy with the audit, Brig Steyn, the Head of Internal Audit, instructed Col Roos to stop the audit and not to compile a report. By then only one report regarding the Advance Office had been compiled.

34. Brig Steyn handed Col Roos a letter dated 14 June 2010, signed by Gen Mdluli, informing him of the establishment of an inspection capability at CI and his appointment to head up this new section. Col Roos was removed from Internal Audit and conducted no further audits of the SSA.

The Gen Mdluli Vosloorus case

35. In March 2011, Col Roelofse became part of a team assigned to investigate a criminal case against Gen Mdluli and three others. The investigation into the death of Mr Ramogibe at Vosloorus and related matters had been discontinued after Gen Mdluli was appointed to the post of divisional commissioner in 2009. But information about the discontinued investigation re-surfaced after Gen Mdluli's appointment.

36. At a meeting called by Major Gen Matakata, the head of the Hawks in the Western Cape, attended by several high-ranking SAPS officers, Col Roelofse and Lieut Col Piet Viljoen were briefed by Gen Shadrack Sibiya, the Provincial Commissioner, who disclosed that members conducting the investigation had been intimidated by those under investigation and could not continue. Col Roelofse and his team were assigned to take over the investigation and remain objective.

37. On 31 March 2011, Gen Mdluli, then Divisional Commissioner of CI was arrested and brought to court on charges including murder, kidnapping, assault and intimidation. The then Commissioner of Police, Gen Cele, suspended Gen Mdluli from office on 8 May 2011 and instituted disciplinary proceedings against him. Col Barnard was charged with fraud and corruption in the Specialised Commercial Crimes Court, Pretoria.

38. On 3 November 2011, Gen Mdluli wrote a letter to President Zuma, the Minister of Safety and Security and the Commissioner stating that the charges against him were the result of a conspiracy among senior police officers, including the then Commissioner, General Cele, and the head of the Hawks, General Anwar Dramat. The letter also stated that "[i]n the event that I come back to work, I will assist the President to succeed next year", which the Supreme Court of Appeal (SCA) found was an obvious reference to the forthcoming presidential elections of the ruling African National Congress (ANC) in Mangaung towards the end of 2012. The allegations of a conspiracy led to the appointment by the Minister of a task team which later reported that there was no evidence of a conspiracy and that the police officers who had accused Mdluli of criminal conduct had acted in good faith. There is no evidence that President Zuma responded to Gen Mdluli's overtures.

39. On 17 November 2011, Gen Mdluli made representations directly to Adv Lawrence Mrwebi, the head of Specialised Commercial Crime Unit (SCCU), Pretoria. Adv Mrwebi concluded that the SAPS had no power to investigate the case and that thus any investigations into the matter could be unlawful. He embodied this view in a memo dated 4 December 2011 and decided to withdraw the fraud and corruption charges against Gen Mdluli and Col Barnard. Adv Mrwebi asserted that only the Inspector General of Intelligence (IGI) had the power to investigate.

40. On 14 February 2012, the charges were provisionally withdrawn by Adv Andrew Chauke, the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) for South Gauteng.

41. On 29 February 2012 the Acting National Commissioner of Police at the time, General Mkhwanazi, withdrew the disciplinary proceedings against Gen Mdluli and on 31 March 2012 Gen Mdluli was reinstated and resumed his office as Head of Crime Intelligence. Shortly thereafter, his duties were extended to include responsibility for the unit which provides protection to members of the national executive.

42. The only reasonable inference from the circumstances arising from what happened after Adv Mrwebi's memo is that the acting National DPP, Adv N Jiba, knew of and approved the decision to terminate the prosecution of Gen Mdluli.

43. The IGI expressed the view that the reasoning of Adv Mrwebi was wrong. Adv Mrwebi took the view, in a communication made on 30 March 2012, that the IGI did not have the power to review his decision, which he declared he stood by.

44. Ultimately, the decision to terminate the prosecution was set aside by the court. It is common knowledge that Gen Mdluli was prosecuted, convicted of certain crimes and sentenced to imprisonment.

45. After legal proceedings to challenge Adv Chauke's decision, charges were reinstated against Gen Mdluli and one other. The charges did not include murder and attempted murder. Gen Mdluli was convicted in the South Gauteng High Court on various charges.

46. After the arrest of Gen Mdluli, some members of CI approached Col Viljoen and Col Roelofse with information about crimes allegedly committed by members within CI. They did not want to speak openly and were fearful of Gen Mdluli and officers within CI.

47. Cols Roelofse and Viljoen received a file, containing claims with supporting documents regarding, amongst others, a cleaning company, and repairs to motor vehicles, from Col Johannes Hendrik Roos, an internal auditor within CI. The file contents indicated that fraudulent quotes had been obtained to favour specific service providers. Col Roos reported these incidents to Gen Mphego, then head of CI, whereupon he was ordered not to proceed with his investigation. Col Roos claimed that the obstructions of his investigation, which included investigation into the conduct of Gen Lazarus, came from Gen Lazarus via Gen Mphego.

48. Allegedly, on Gen Mdluli's appointment on 1 July 2009, Col Roos wanted an investigation into the SSA and the conduct of Gen Lazarus. Col Roos was allegedly obstructed in this investigation. Gen Mdluli asked him to draft a letter for Gen Mdluli's signature granting him unrestricted access to information relating to the investigation. But when presented with the letter, Gen Mdluli refused to sign it.

49. According to Col Roelofse, when Gen Mdluli was appointed as Divisional Commissioner of CI, Mdluli began with the intention of cleaning up CI. But unfortunately, Mdluli became, in the opinion of Col Roelofse, "at that stage the number 10 victim of General Lazarus, who set in motion certain events to compromise General Mdluli." This impression was also conveyed by Col Naidoo in recalling his initial meetings with Gen Mdluli. The General succumbed to these pressures and stopped the investigation to protect himself.

50. The main body of the evidence presented to the Commission reveals the manner in which Gen Mdluli was corrupted and the looting of the SSA, which had started years before his appointment.

Trips overseas by Gen Mdluli and family facilitated by Gen Lazarus

51. On 6 November 2009, Gen Mdluli and his then wife, Ms VL Mdluli, flew business class to Hong Kong and back to visit their daughter, a student in China. The cost of the trip was R110 000, of which R60 000 was paid directly by the SSA and R50 000 was funded through the Barut account (discussed in the next section). Travel arrangements were made through Westville Travel in Durban (a division of One Stop Travel and Tours) and were done by Col Naidoo at the request of Gen Lazarus.

52. On 3 November 2009, Col Naidoo was called into Gen Lazarus's office. He was told to take an envelope on the table and keep it until Gen Lazarus discussed it with him. On the same day, Col Naidoo was again summoned to Gen Lazarus's office where Col Barnard was present. Gen Lazarus said they had secured a loan of R50 000 from Jan Venter of Atlantis Nissan for air tickets for Gen Mdluli's wife. Col Naidoo applied for an advance of R50 000, which was approved by either Col Barnard or Gen Lazarus. Col Naidoo subsequently bought two tickets for Gen Mdluli and his wife at Flight Centre.

53. Immediately afterwards Col Naidoo was concerned by his actions and that the advance was in his name. Col Naidoo wrote out an account of what had happened and kept a copy typed by his wife and copies of the E-tickets. Later, he gave these documents to Col Roelofse.

54. On 7 November 2009, Gen Lazarus instructed Col Naidoo to apply for R10 000 for Gen Mdluli as spending money for his trip. Col Naidoo did this and the application was approved by Gen Lazarus. Later that day, Col Naidoo met Gen Mdluli at the airport and gave him R20 000: R10 000 for which Gen Mdluli had applied and R10 000 from the balance of the money left after the ticket purchases. Col Naidoo misappropriated the balance of R3 848. All transactions were in cash.

55. Col Naidoo later purported to reconcile the claims by Gen Mdluli for expenses but failed to do so because most of the receipts were in a language he did not understand.

56. On 21 November 2011, Gen Mdluli flew on official business to Singapore, ostensibly to buy electronic equipment for CI. He was accompanied by Ms Lyons, his girlfriend. Her trip was paid for by the SSA although she was not a member of SAPS. She worked as a clerk at for the Department of Home Affairs (DHA). Her business class air ticket cost R46 809.

57. The party accompanying Gen Mdluli to Singapore included several SAPS officers and three civilians, Ms Lyons, Ms Juanita Barnard (the wife of Col Barnard) and Ms Sandra Lazarus (the wife of Gen Lazarus). The tickets of Col Naidoo and Col Miranda Venter were paid from the SSA in cash. Col Naidoo thinks that Ms Barnard's ticket was also purchased in this way. Except for Gens Mdluli, Lazarus and Ms Lyons, the rest of the party travelled economy class.

58. Col Naidoo conceded that there was no reason why anyone from CI needed to travel to Singapore for the stated purpose. After two days of buying electronic equipment at a general mall the rest of the trip was spent sightseeing. Col Naidoo admitted to buying a camera at the expense of CI as a present for his sister, valued at about R5 000. Gen Lazarus and Col Barnard approved the funding for this purchase.

59. On returning to South Africa, one of Gen Mdluli's contacts enabled the party to evade customs duties on the items they had purchased. The equipment was paid for by credit cards issued to Col Naidoo and Col Barnard at the ABSA branch where Ms Juanita Barnard worked. Col Naidoo believed that each credit card was loaded with R100 000. Thereafter, Col Naidoo was involved closely with Gen Mdluli and Gen Lazarus in their legitimate and illegitimate activities within CI. He was required to be at their beck and call in most of their personal and official requirements, including acquiring vehicles, the use of safe houses, buying groceries, ensuring safe houses were cleaned, buying air tickets, having their cars washed and transporting their family members. Col Naidoo aptly described himself as the "lackey" of the two Generals.

60. These two overseas trips formed the subject of a charge, and a comprehensive charge sheet was prepared. But SAPS would not declassify the documents required for the prosecution and the case was withdrawn.

Atlantis Nissan Motors and the BARUT account

61. BARUT was the name given to an account ON the books of Atlantis Motors in Centurion. The account was created following an arrangement between the dealer principal, Mr Jan Venter and Col Barnard. The account was funded from portions of the profit in the hands of Atlantis Motors arising from the sale of vehicles by Atlantis to CI at inflated prices. Mr Venter would then ensure that from time to time that these funds would be paid to third parties on the instructions of Col Barnard.

62. Financial records detailing these transactions were only available to Col Roelofse from 8 April 2008 when the BARUT account was in credit of R175 045.15. By 19 October 2012, an additional R1 527 601.61 was credited to the BARUT account, of which R1 659 923.08 was paid via EFT to third parties.

63. The BARUT account funds were used to give Gen Lazarus and other CI members discounts on private vehicles. An additional total of R465 000 was transferred to New World Motors (NWM), which Col Roelofse believed supported Col Naidoo's claim that Gen Lazarus had to generate cash inter alia to cover shortfalls in the SSA account. An additional R143 621.78 in this account was used to settle an amount owed to WesBank on a vehicle registered to a journalist, Ms Munusamy.

OBSTRUCTION OF CRIMINAL AND DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS

64. Disciplinary proceedings were taken against Gen Lazarus which led to his dismissal. Col Roelofse did not know the outcome of the disciplinary proceedings against Col Barnard who is still in the employ of the SAPS.

65. Brig Madonsela and Capt. Heeralal were tasked with the investigation of 250 members of CI. Col Roelofse provided copies of fourteen criminal case dockets opened by Capt. Heeralal, relating to the non-disclosure of criminal convictions or civil judgments. All these dockets were closed on the SAPS criminal administration system. None of them was submitted to the NPA for a decision on whether to prosecute. Col Roelofse knew that the investigation of Brig Madonsela and Capt. Heeralal was stopped but he did not know by whom.

ALLEGED INVOLVEMENT OF GENERAL BHEKI CELE

66. When Gen Mdluli was appointed, in 2009, Mr Bheki Cele was the National Commissioner of the SAPS and was rumoured to have been instrumental in the award of large tenders to a Mr Marimuthu. Gen Lazarus was aware of the connection between Mr Marimuthu and Mr Cele. In an attempt to secure Mr Cele's support and assurances that he was not transferred away from his position by the arrival of Gen Mdluli, Gen Lazarus contacted Mr Marimuthu. Thereafter, Gen Lazarus made several unsuccessful attempts to meet Mr Cele. Ultimately, Lazarus made a call to Col Naidoo to organise cash which Col Naidoo assumed that Gen Lazarus would need to pay to Mr Cele.

67. Col Naidoo was in possession of R40 000 which he had taken from CI head office for another purpose which he could not recall. Col Naidoo gave the R40 000 to Gen Lazarus. A meeting took place between Gen Lazarus and Mr Cele at a house where Col Naidoo was present but not in the same room. After the meeting, Gen Lazarus did not hand the R40 000 back to Col Naidoo, who then assumed that it had been paid over to Mr Cele. Gen Lazarus was not transferred and remained CFO of CI.

INAPPROPRIATE APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS WITHIN CI

68. On 1 February 2006, Col Naidoo was promoted from a civilian clerk to the functional arm of CI as a warrant officer. For about six months, he was employed as an undercover operative concentrating on drug syndicates. Through his association with Gen Lazarus, he was later promoted from warrant officer to Lieutenant Colonel through a covert advertising process. Col Naidoo also identified others who were improperly promoted or improperly skipped ranks in promotions.

69. During January or February 2010, 250 posts were made available within CI. Most of these positions were filled by friends or family of Gen Mdluli, Gen Lazarus and those close to them. To hide their connections with Gen Mdluli, most of his family members and friends were placed in the agent program, for which they had no prior police experience. Various persons appointed to fill these posts had criminal convictions.

70. During January or February 2010, Col Naidoo was present at a discussion between Gen Mdluli and Gen Lazarus. Gen Mdluli produced a list of persons he wanted employed in CI. The two generals agreed that the persons on the list would be appointed. Gen Mdluli said that Col Naidoo should be their handler because he trusted the Colonel. After Gen Mdluli left, Gen Lazarus remarked to Col Naidoo that Gen Mdluli wanted his family members appointed.

71. Mr Marimuthu and members of his family were similarly employed in CI. The names of these family members were withheld from the sworn statement and testimony before the Commission. Two family members of Col Barnard were also appointed. Two relatives of Major General Willie Els were appointed without any prior experience in SAPS or CI. Relatives or friends of Lt General Raymond Lalla and Lt General Stander were improperly appointed to CI and a relative of Gen Bellingham skipped ranks and was appointed to colonel.

72. A colonel in CI, identified as FM41, previously convicted of vehicle related fraud, was placed in the agent program and Col Naidoo was one of his handlers. According to Col Naidoo, Gen Lazarus wanted to “help the old man”.

73. Col Naidoo asserted that Col FM41 was placed in the agent program because he knew too much about Lt Gen Raymond Lalla and Gen Mulangi “Marshall” Mphego. Col Naidoo stated that Col FM41 told him that he was paying Gens Lalla and Mphego R100 000 per month from the money he made from the submission of false informer claims.

74. At the time Gen Lalla was Divisional Commander and Gen Mphego was Assistant Commissioner at CI. Col Naidoo believed that Gens Lazarus, Lalla and Mphego had Col FM41 placed in the agent program because they feared he would expose them. Both Gen Lalla and Gen Mphego later left SAPS.

75. A relative of Gen Lazarus stationed at Tongaat was found guilty of corruption and dismissed from SAPS. After his dismissal he was recruited as a CI informant and paid R50 000 per month. Another relative of Gen Lazarus, stationed at Tongaat SAPS until retirement, was employed as an informant by CI.

PAYMENTS OF FALSE AND INAPPROPRIATE CLAIMS TO AGENTS

76. Col Naidoo was responsible for paying salaries and operational expenses to relatives of Gen Mdluli and others. Col Naidoo identified to Col Roelofse the relatives concerned and certain payments made to them but withheld their names in his sworn statement and testimony. Col Naidoo indicated that these specific corrupt claims he administered and paid out exceeded R5 million. Col Naidoo provided details of false claims submitted by the handlers but again withheld their names in his sworn statement and his testimony.

ALLEGED ABUSE OF SAFE HOUSE SYSTEM

77. Col Naidoo provided instances where he alleged the safe house system was abused. He provided the names of the beneficiaries of these schemes, but the names were withheld in his sworn statement and his testimony. Prominent in Col Naidoo's account of this alleged abuse were Gen Lazarus, Mr Appalsami, Mr Marimuthu and Gen Mdluli, and other SAPS officers.

78. In 2005 or 2006, an attempt was made to hijack Gen Lazarus outside his house that was being renovated. Gen Lazarus used this as an excuse to get other accommodation at state expense during the renovations. Col Naidoo found him the premises in AX Estates, Greenstone, Johannesburg. The premises were rented at about R6 000 per month, paid from the Secret Services Account. Gen Lazarus and his family stayed there for over a year and the premises were furnished at CI expense through the SSA. When Gen Lazarus returned to his now refurbished house, the furniture in the Greenstone house was distributed between Col Marinda Venter (Gen Lazarus's second-in-command), Gen Lazarus and Col Naidoo.

79. A private Sheffield Beach property was developed by a consortium of CI members. These included Gen Deena Moodley, the commander of Crime Intelligence Gathering (CIG) in Durban who was promoted to assistant commissioner and became provincial head of CI in KZN, Gen Lazarus and two members whose names were withheld.

80. Most of the funds to develop this property came from false informer claims processed by Col Naidoo. The project required the generation of R250 000 every fortnight. Furniture and appliances were purchased via the SSA and placed as an asset against one of the CI safe houses. Much of this furniture was later stolen. This caused a problem as the items were not stolen from the safe house to which they registered. On the instructions of Gen Lazarus, Col Barnard removed the items from the Secret Register (this register will be further discussed in the next section). It is unknown if Col Barnard was a member of this consortium.

81. Gen Mdluli had to pay money to Karin Hanekom Attorneys for the purchase of a property. Gen Lazarus instructed Col Naidoo to deposit a cheque for R40 000 into her trust account. Gen Lazarus also instructed him to draw R30 000 cash from the SSA and deposit it with Karin Hanekom for the account of Gen Mdluli. Col Naidoo drew the funds from the SSA in his own name and paid the cheque and the cash to Karin Hanekom. Gen Lazarus approved the withdrawal of the R30 000 as well as the recouping of the money drawn from the SSA by applying at least four (and possibly five) monthly rentals applicable to the rental of Gen Mdluli's Gordon's Bay property for this purpose.

82. Mr Appalsami, a friend of Gen Lazarus, controlled Daez Trading CC. Through Daez, Mr Appalsami facilitated various transactions approved by Gen Lazarus, including safe house rentals and benefited from an account with Atlantis Motors called the BARUT account.

83. In November 2010, CI rented a safe house at Clearwater Estate, Boksburg through Daez at a monthly rental of R20 000. This house was exclusively used by Gen Mdluli and continued to be paid in November 2011 although Gen Mdluli had been arrested in April 2011.

84. Gen Mdluli owned premises called Gordon Villlas in Gordons Bay. CI rented this property through Daez, as a safe house at a monthly rental. The rental was inflated by R2 000 per month that was divided between Gen Lazarus and Col Naidoo. It was also used to recoup some of Gen Mdluli's debt to Hanekom Attorneys Trust Account.

85. CI leased office accommodation through Daez at which family members of Gen Mdluli were employed. According to Col Naidoo the rents charged to the CI were inflated.

86. Four properties belonging to a Mr Marimuthu were rented by CI as safe houses. Mr Marimuthu received rents from these properties of up to R25 000 per month.

ALLEGED IRREGULAR UPGRADING OF PROPERTIES

87. The Commission heard that the properties of CI members and other officials were irregularly upgraded with funds from the SSA. In some instances, the names of the officers who allegedly benefited were withheld. These were:

    87.1 Gen Lazarus's sister's flat in Tongaat: R150 000

    87.2 Gen Lazarus's uncle's premises in Richards Bay

    87.3 Col FM09's mother-in-law's property in Shaka's Rock

    87.4 Col FM07's house in Durban

    87.5 Gen Deena Moodley's properties in Pinetown and Belair

    87.6 A property associated with Col FM08, owned by him or his father; and

    87.7 A security upgrade to Gen Mdluli's house funded from the SSA to the value of R190 735, to which he was not entitled.

88. Gen Manoko Nchwe was provided with a security upgrade funded from the SSA to the value of about R40 000. This officer was not entitled to such an upgrade. When given notice of disciplinary proceedings against her, she resigned.

89. During the period September 2010 to January 2011, the then Minister of Police, Nathi Mthethwa, was provided with security upgrades to his house financed by the SSA and totalling R195 581.45. The allegation is that the documents evidencing these transactions and payments were handed to then Commissioner of Police Bheki Cele. These were to be used in his disputes with Minister Mthethwa to ensure that the Minister could not act against Cele. This investigation did not proceed because of the failure of the SAPS to provide important documents needed in the investigation.

90. When Gen Lazarus's property was being renovated, his builders had downtime. Col Naidoo had a boundary wall built and driveway gate replaced at his property by these builders. For this purpose, Gen Lazarus gave Col Naidoo a cheque for R20 000.

91. The CI bought a VW Golf for Col Naidoo's use at a price inflated by R40 000. He retained this vehicle for his private use. Expenses related to the vehicle and renovations to his private home, including those needed to enable his wife to start a catering company, were also from the SSA.

ALLEGED MISUSE OF VEHICLES ON THE SECRET REGISTER

92. Gen Lazarus used the acquisition of vehicles and other endeavours, such as security upgrades, to influence senior managers and to acquire their 'favour' and support. One of the means he allegedly used was to allow senior managers to choose a vehicle to the value of about R500 000, which the General funded from the SSA. These managers already received a vehicle allowance through their remuneration packages and were not entitled to these benefits. As these managers were receiving a financial benefit to which they were not entitled, they were placed in a difficult position in any action against Gen Lazarus.

93. Company X maintained a register of vehicles used by operatives in covert operations. This was identified as the Secret Register (SR) and seemingly included other assets used by CI. Gen Lazarus operated a scheme with Mr Joe Marques, through the firm New World Motors (NWM), owned or operated by Mr Marques. The scheme was for Mr Marques to buy SR vehicles from Company X which were due for replacement and sell vehicles to Company X at inflated prices. At the end of 2010, Mr Marques had about 80 vehicles he had bought from Company X.

94. For security reasons, when SR vehicles were due for replacement, they were sold by closed tender. There were five closed tenderers, of which two shared directors and members who were family of Mr

Marques. Gen Lazarus would inform Mr Marques beforehand of the competing bids, thereby enabling Mr Marques to bid amounts just higher than his competitors.

95. Using SSA funds, Company X would then repurchase some of the vehicles sold, after some refitment or refurbishment, to Mr Marques at inflated cash prices. Some of the cash derived from the sale by Mr Marques of these vehicles to Company X was used to settle advances made to members for work related expenses. Col Naidoo stated that he frequently collected money from Mr Marques for this purpose. Mr Marques would provide amongst other persons known as FM07, FM08, FM09 and Col Naidoo himself with fraudulent invoices to generate cash to be used to cover shortfalls in respect of other unaccounted for expenses. Members of CI were also allowed to buy SR vehicles bought by Mr Marques at the same prices paid by Mr Marques.

96. Col Naidoo provided several instances where vehicles were purchased or leased with SSA funds and then improperly made available to persons for their private use. He alleged that Gen Mdluli's family benefited from this conduct in several instances and that Gen Mdluli himself had seven vehicles allocated to him; six were registered as SR vehicles. Gen Mdluli had five vehicles valued at R3 153 730. This excludes vehicles provided to members of his family who were appointed to CI without due process.

97. About April 2010, Col Barnard approached Leon Haase BMW in Pretoria to buy a 5 series BMW for Company X. This included a trade in of Gen Mdluli's personal car with a settlement amount of R560 526,01 outstanding through BMW Financing. The deal that Col Barnard negotiated required that Company X had to buy two vehicles from Leo Haase to finance the shortfall on Gen Mdluli's private car. Col Barnard reported directly to Gen Lazarus who reported to Gen Mdluli. These two vehicles were for Gen Mdluli's personal use although financed through SSA.

98. Gen Manoko Nchwe, Divisional Commissioner and head of the police human resources unit, was provided with one vehicle valued at R557 079.96. The motivation was that she would use the vehicle for sensitive operations. But she was never a member of CI, nor did she undertake sensitive operations. Although the vehicle was registered on the SR it was also registered in her name.

99. Col Naidoo alleged that Mr Marimuthu improperly received a white BMW fitted with blue lights.

FALSE CLAIMS MADE BY COL NAIDOO TO BENEFIT HIMSELF

100. Col Naidoo said he benefited from false claims which he submitted, exceeding R100 000. He claimed he could not remember them all without documentation. However, he gave some examples. He mentioned false claims on the replacement of windscreens at NWM where no such service was rendered. He also mentioned false receipts for furniture not purchased from Masons Furniture.

101. Col Naidoo claimed that the stories of Gens Dramat and Sibiya's arrests for illegal activities, printed with great prominence by the Sunday Times, were facilitated with input from CI.

102. Between late 2009 and early 2010, Col Naidoo drew R25 000 which he gave to Gen Mdluli who, Col Naidoo claimed, informed him he needed the money to pay a journalist not to print information about CI.

103. Col Naidoo claimed that approximately R40 000 was paid to repair the silver BMW 3.3CL of journalist Ms R Munusamy, who was the confidante of Gen Mphego, who was the former CI head. Naidoo claimed that on three or four occasions he collected the vehicle from Ms R Munusamy and returned it after repairs.

The validity of Col Naidoo's evidence

104. Col Naidoo gave evidence at a disciplinary enquiry into Gen Lazarus's conduct. At the conclusion of the evidence, the chairperson of the enquiry made certain comments on the credibility of Col Naidoo. The chairperson of the enquiry concluded that Col Naidoo's evidence should be approached with "some caution"; that his own conduct in the events leading to the charges against Gen Lazarus was

"brazen and dishonest". It was his opinion that the Colonel Naidoo was not a person whose evidence could be trusted. The Chairperson did not to rely on his evidence, except where it was corroborated by other evidence or left unchallenged.

105. Many of the allegations made by Col Naidoo before the Commission lack corroboration. He himself was an accomplice to many of the alleged offences. Col Naidoo's evidence, as a result, must be approached with caution. On the other hand, those implicated by his evidence were given an opportunity to contradict the allegations against them or otherwise defend themselves. Gen Lazarus and Gen Mdluli elected not to do so.

106. The general allegations of corruption within CI stand uncontradicted, but the essence of the individual allegations of criminal conduct will depend largely on the documents that have been withheld from Col Roelofse and his team by Gen Lazarus and other senior officers of SAPS.

107. The evidence before the Commission leaves no doubt that for an extended period at the beginning of the present century, corruption, nepotism, theft and fraud in relation to the SSA administered from within the CI was conducted on such a scale that it can justly be described as looting and that at least three officers controlled the looting by virtue of their positions within CI. The execution of the orders of Gen Lazarus and Gen Mdluli in this regard was carried out by several subordinate officers within CI. Lieutenant Colonel Naidoo was prominent in the execution of their criminal schemes.

RECOMMENDATIONS

108. The allegations of Col Naidoo include claims that two Ministers of Police, one former and one present, were implicated in corrupt conduct committed by Gen Lazarus. These allegations do not appear to be corroborated by any evidence produced to the Commission. This does not mean that such evidence does not exist. Whether those allegations, and others made by Col Naidoo, justify further action against any individual depends on the evidence uncovered by those investigating the allegations in accordance with law.

109. There is evidence that Gen Mdluli appealed to President Zuma to help him in his efforts to escape from the consequences of his crimes in return for the assistance of Gen Mdluli in getting President Zuma elected. However, there is no evidence that President Zuma responded to his overture.

110. The conduct of Adv Mrwebi and Adv Jiba in relation to the withdrawal of the charges preferred against Gen Mdluli gives rise to a suspicion that something more sinister was behind the decision to withdraw other than simple professional incompetence and ineptitude. On a balance of probabilities, the evidence before the Commission does not extend sufficiently to convert the suspicion into a conclusion adverse to these two officers of the court.

111. There is no evidence that either Gen Lazarus or Gen Mdluli conducted their criminal depredations of the secret funds entrusted to their custody for any purpose beyond their own personal enrichment and that of their friends and family. It is also apparent that they provided largesse to certain of those who they feared might be in a position to uncover their wrongdoing (i.e., to implicate such persons in their schemes as insurance against exposure). There is no evidence that they sought to influence national politics or capture institutions outside the sphere of CI. Compared to other aspects of state capture, where the misappropriations involved millions and indeed billions of Rands as well as the capture and subsequent impoverishment of state-owned enterprises, the criminal conspiracies of Gens Lazarus and Mdluli appear to rank them as relatively small-scale hoodlums.

112. This contextualises the crimes exposed by the evidence before the Commission and does not mitigate or minimise the extent of crimes proved to have been committed and likely to have been committed. Those identified were placed in positions of the highest trust in an institution critical to the functioning and the protection of society. They abused that trust over long periods of time for personal gain and corrupted their subordinates, who should have been able to look to them for example and guidance.

113. This memorandum concerns alleged and established criminal conduct by high-ranking SAPS officers. Historically and structurally, the main obstacles to the law taking its proper course have been that the tendency of the SAPS to close ranks and obstruct the investigations into the conduct of their own and to abuse the system of classification of documents to protect their own.

114. When secret state funds fall under the control of scoundrels, as in this memorandum, only strong oversight institutions can protect the public against the harm that such scoundrels can inflict by invoking, when their conduct is called into question, the very secrecy that should exist only for the public good.

115. Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? - Who will guard the guardians themselves? This question is generally considered the embodiment of the philosophical question of how those in power can be held to account for their actions or inactions. The problem is as old as the institutions created to protect against wrongdoing but by their nature are equipped to evade detection and retribution when they go rogue. The allegations which Col Roelofse and his team set out with such determination to investigate and place before the prosecuting authorities for further action consistent with law is commendable. In the light of the evidence brought before the Commission and the report of the Commission Chair, no action is needed other than to ensure that the law takes its course.

116. The crimes and allegations and challenges in the SAPS, including the CI, as evidenced in this memorandum, can be best addressed if the President instructs the Minister of Police to take the following measures to:

    116.1 Satisfy himself or herself that the oversight institutions that exist to protect the integrity of the Secret Service Account are adequate to protect the state and the public against any risk of malfeasance and misappropriation and, if not, to take appropriate steps to strengthen such institutions

    116.2 Ensure that all investigations into corrupt conduct (in the broadest sense) within CI continue without any obstruction and receive the appropriate support from all units within SAPS; and 116.3 Ensure that those members of SAPS who have been tasked with investigating corrupt conduct within CI are given access by SAPS to all documents which may be relevant to establish the guilt or innocence of any person in relation to such corrupt conduct, while at the same time ensuring that any legitimate state interest in preventing the wider dissemination of such documents is protected.

SABC

INTRODUCTION

1. The report of the Public Protector, no. 6 of 2016/2017 dated 14 October 2016, sub-titled “State of Capture”, included various allegations concerning the abuse of power raised against the South African Broadcasting Company (SABC). The following is stated in the report in this regard:

    > During the course of this investigation, I interviewed Honorable Julius Sello Malema (’Mr Malema’) to solicit any evidence in support of statements attributed to him in the media relating to the influence of members of the Gupta family. During the said interview, Mr Malema made the following allegations relating to SABC:
    > > That the SABC, previously allowed government departments to communicate with the nation at no cost. This includes instances where Ministers required air time in order to make announcements and launch campaigns; and
    > > SABC has since entered into a partnership agreement with the New Age newspaper and government departments, including Ministers are required to pay either SABC, New Age newspaper and/or the relevant partnership to appear on SABC for purposes of communication with the nation.

The above allegations were confirmed by Minister Mbalula during an interview with him on this investigation.

Following the above allegations, I have decided to investigate any contract(s) awarded to the New Age newspaper and/or TNA Media by the SABC. The investigation into SABC will however form part of the next phase of the investigation.

2. The Public Protector briefly dealt with the arrival of the Gupta family in South Africa, gave an outline of their business activities and mentioned that they had started a media company called TNA Media, which published a newspaper called The New Age (TNA) and owned a television channel called ANN7. The Gupta family are known friends of the former President, Jacob Zuma. His son, Mr Duduzane Zuma, was also involved in various business activities with the Gupta family. The New Age newspaper had also secured contracts with some provincial government departments and state-owned entities (SOEs), most notably Eskom and South African Airways, but also the SABC.

3. In her report, the Public Protector referred to an interview with Mr Maseko, the former CEO of Government Communication and Information System (GCIS). Mr Maseko informed her that late in 2010 he received numerous requests from members of the Gupta family for a meeting to which he finally agreed. On his way to the meeting he received a call from then President Zuma who said: (loosely translated from isiZulu): "The Gupta brothers need your help, please help them". He then met the brothers at their Saxonwold residence.

4. During the meeting, Mr Ajay Gupta had said to him that they were setting up a newspaper called TNA and that they wanted government advertising channelled to such newspaper. As GCIS CEO, Mr Maseko told Mr Gupta he was in charge of a media buying budget of just over R600 million a year. He also said that GCIS performed market research and decided on clients' target market before selecting the right medium of advertising. He added that GCIS did not have the advertising budget and that it was with the various departments. Mr Ajay Gupta then said that this was not a problem as he would instruct the departments to advertise in the newspaper. He added:

   tell us where the funds are and inform the departments to provide the funds to you and if they refuse, we will deal with them. If you have a problem with any department, we will summon ministers here.

5. A few weeks later he received a call from a senior staffer at TNA newspaper who demanded a meeting with him. Mr A Gupta called an hour later. Mr Maseko told him that he was on his way to a golf tournament on Saturday and that they could meet on Monday. The reply was: "I will talk to your seniors in government and you will be sorted out". Mr Gupta also said that "we will replace you with people who will co-operate".

6. It is clear from the report that the Public Protector envisaged further phases of investigations both in the context of the alleged irregularities involving TNA and other strategic SOEs such as Eskom. This did not occur for a number of reasons, but she did recommend that a Commission of Inquiry be appointed.

7. The Public Protector investigated the SABC after receiving several complaints about fraud and maladministration. Her Report, dated 17 February 2014 and titled When Governance and Ethics Fail, was an "Investigation into Allegations of Maladministration, Systemic Corporate Governance Deficiencies, Abuse of Power and the Irregular Appointment of Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng by the South African Broadcasting Corporation (SABC)". The report identified systemic corporate governance failures at the SABC. The major issues identified are:

   7.1 The alleged irregular appointment and salary progression of Mr Motsoeneng, the Acting Chief Operations Officer. This included a "success fee" awarded to Mr Motsoeneng valued at (more or less) R11 million

   7.2 That Mr Motsoeneng allegedly fraudulently misrepresented his qualifications to the SABC, including stating that he had passed matric when applying for employment

   7.3 The alleged irregular appointment and salary progression of Ms Sully Motsweni and Ms Gugu Duda

7.4 The purging of senior officials at the SABC resulting in unnecessary financial losses in the CCMA, in court and other settlements

7.5 Irregular salary increases of various staff members that resulted in a salary bill increase in excess of R29 million; and

7.6 Alleged undue interference of the Department and former Minister of Communications in the affairs of the SABC, including giving unlawful orders to the SABC Board and staff.

8. On 25 May 2014, former President Zuma appointed Ms Faith Muthambi to the Cabinet as Minister of Communications. In the Cabinet reshuffle of 30 March 2017, she was retained as a Member of Cabinet, as Minister of the Public Service and Administration (DPSA). On 17 July 2017, Ms S. Fick, the Head of Legal Affairs at the Organisation Undoing Tax Abuse (OUTA), gave evidence concerning Ms Muthambi. In brief:

8.1 On 24 February 2017, the National Assembly's ad hoc Committee found that she "displayed incompetence in carrying out her responsibilities as Shareholder Representative (of the SABC)". The Committee noted "major shortcomings" in Ms Muthambi's conduct; and

8.2 The Western Cape High Court found that she had acted irrationally and unlawfully in appointing Mr Motsoeneng as COO of the SABC. The Supreme Court of Appeal made the same findings.

9. Mr BE Makhathini gave evidence on the current state of the SABC. In his view there was prima facie evidence that the SABC's primary mandate as a national public broadcaster had been compromised by the lapse of governance and management within the SABC, which ultimately contributed to the Boards inability to discharge its fiduciary responsibilities.

10. He stated in his introductory paragraph that:

> Like many of our state and public institutions that are the subject of this Inquiry into State Capture, the SABC has had a turbulent recent history and, at least from a financial point of view, the Corporation has been mortally damaged by the unlawful and irregular practices of a succession of boards and management.

11. According to Mr Makhathini, there appears to have been a flouting of governance rules, law, codes and conventions, including disregard for decisions of the Courts, the Independent Communication Authority of South Africa (ICASA), as well as the findings of the Public Protector. This collective conduct:

11.1 Rendered the SABC potentially financially unsustainable due to mismanagement because of non-compliance with existing policies and irregular procurement

11.2 Was manifested in interference in editorial independence, which is in direct conflict with journalistic ethics; and

11.3 Saw the purging of highly qualified, experienced and skilled senior staff members in violation of recruitment/human resource policies and procedures, and the replacement of purged staff, in many instances, without due consideration for, or compliance with, established recruitment policies.

12. The two reports of the Public Protector, as well as the evidence of several witnesses and their deposed affidavits to the Commission, thus drew attention to a variety of topics related to the SABC. Each is dealt with in more detail separately below.

THE NEW AGE NEWSPAPER AND ANN7

13. The introductory background has already been sketched in the Public Protector's report referred to above. Ms Yolande van Biljon, the SABC Chief Financial Officer (CFO) from 25 June 2018, provided evidence to the Commission on these issues from relevant books and records she had access to even though the events took place before her appointment.

14. As far as The New Age (TNA) was concerned, the relationship had the following purposes:

    14.1 TNA would supply newspapers on a weekly basis to the SABC; and 14.2 With reference to a schedule, Ms van Biljon could determine that the SABC had made payment to TNA for the delivery of newspapers in the sum of R 908,035.57, including VAT.

15. Dr Ben Ngubane (now deceased), Chairperson of the SABC Board from January 2010 until March 2013, stated that he had not been involved in the negotiations on TNA.

16. Ms van Biljon also testified that:

    16.1 The SABC provided TNA with certain broadcasting services and more particularly outside broadcasting services which were conducted at various venues across the country

    16.2 From what she could determine, the SABC was never paid, nor did it invoice TNA for any of the so-called "breakfast shows" and other outside broadcasting services rendered by the SABC; and 16.3 From the internal records she could determine that the costs incurred by the SABC in this context amounted to R 4,268,887 (excluding VAT). Travelling expenses alone amounted to R 2,784,009.

17. Dr Ngubane, Chairperson of the SABC Board at the time, stated that the SABC was required to build up audience ratings to increase advertising revenues. The breakfast shows were part of "Morning Live". There was no direct payment for the breakfast shows apart from SABC staff to record and broadcast the discussions. The SABC was merely bringing the audience to communicate with the Ministers; "Interest was very high".

18. Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng, the SABC's Group Executive for Corporate Affairs prior to his dismissal on 12 June 2017, stated that his interactions with the Gupta family was solely as the result of the partnership between TNA and SABC and nothing of consequence was ever discussed with him. At no time did he ever receive any gifts or other rewards from the Gupta family. As far as the TNA contract and the "Business Breakfasts" was concerned, he was not in possession of any minutes of meetings and was also not involved in establishing the contract. In a number of instances, he merely signed as a witness.

19. Ms Mokhobo, a former CEO of the SABC, gave evidence on the "New Age Breakfast Briefings" and their cost to the SABC.

    19.1 She confirmed that no partnership or joint venture was created between TNA Media and the SABC. TNA undertook the main obligations to be able to host such event and would ensure attendance. At no stage was it envisaged that the SABC would invoice TNA for the services rendered and it was also not envisaged that the SABC would share in any profit made by TNA. In terms of the relevant legislation and policies within the SABC it was not permissible that the SABC derive any payment from any party in the sponsorship of any news events because this might limit and/or impede the impartiality and independence of the SABC.

    19.2 She was able to determine (subject to SABC finance officials confirming this) that the amount spent by the SABC in facilitating those outdoor broadcasts over a few years amounted to some R 20,326,980.

    19.3 She could also confirm that the events did not stay within the contract at the prescribed two events per month and suddenly escalated, and in certain cases almost doubled. The decision to allow for the escalation was entirely within the purview of the News Division. The contract was also renewed. It was signed by Mr J Mathews on 20 February 2015.

    19.4 It was only when she was presented with certain facts by investigators of the Commission that she became aware that TNA was charging the various SOEs it had engaged with and who were part and parcel of the various breakfast shows.

20. Mr R Sundaram, an employee of the Gupta family-owned Infinity Media, gave the following evidence on the "New Age Breakfast Briefings":

20.1 Mr Sundaram was told by Nazeem Howa that these "Breakfast briefings" were "insanely profitable" for them as the entire cost of broadcast was borne by the SABC. The New Age had to invest in just the flimsy permanent props and the cost of the venue and hospitality. It would appear that often the cost of the venue and hospitality was also picked up by the department or ministry that the dignitary came from. Further profits were secured by selling tables at these events.

20.2 Former President Zuma was informed that his Cabinet colleagues were reluctant to attend. Mr Sundaram was told by Nazeem Howa that Mr Zuma helped not only in convincing the ministers and officials to attend these events but would also persuade them to use taxpayers' money to pay for the venue and hospitality and ask stakeholders to buy tables at these events.

21. Further background on these issues is found in the affidavits and evidence of Mr Sundaram before the Commission. In his first affidavit of 5 April 2019 he gave a brief background summary of TNA and ANN7. His second supplementary affidavit is more detailed. He arrived in South Africa from India on 3 June 2013 and remained until 2 September 2013. During this time, he worked with the Gupta family-owned Infinity Media and worked as "Editor" to set up the 24/7 television news station called ANN7. During this period, he was part of four meetings between former President Zuma and the ANN7/ TNA teams. Three of these meetings took place at former President Zuma's official residence and the fourth at the Midrand office of ANN7.

22. The first meeting took place on 22 June 2013. He had earlier been told to prepare a detailed presentation about all aspects of the proposed TV project for the President. The presentation contained details of such a confidential nature as would normally only be shared with stakeholders. He was also told that the former President's son, Mr Duduzane Zuma, was a 30% shareholder of Infinity. He was told that Mr Ashu Chawla, a trusted employee of the Gupta family, would be the point person for the family at the President's office.

23. At the President's residence, they were ushered into a well-appointed room to the extreme right of the entrance. They were not frisked, were not asked to pass through metal detectors and were not required to give over names and details to any security personnel. Neither his cell phone nor his laptop was screened. Mr Chawla was waiting in the room when they entered. After about an hour the remaining members of the Gupta delegation appeared.

24. There was another delay during which Mr Ajay Gupta had explained the origin of the channel name. It had been suggested by the President himself during the last meeting they had with him on this issue. "Africa News Network" had been taken, so they decided to add the "7".

25. After a further delay former President Zuma entered the room and apologised for the delay. He and Arun were introduced. The President said: "I soon have to go back to the meeting I left behind. I know there are a lot of things to discuss, but like they say in Zulu we will just skin the animal today. We must leave the rest for later". Mr Sundaram handed the President a copy of the presentation and summarised the content.

26. Mr Zuma had a number of comments about what he preferred to see. For example, he did not like the repetitive news presented on eNCA. After that it was mentioned that they wished to discuss the newspaper and commercials, and that the television personnel should leave.

27. Mr Sundaram was later told by a member of TNA marketing team that the remainder of the discussions were crucial for the newspaper to get government advertising and bring hard-to-convince Ministers and officials in as guests on TNA's breakfast briefings.

28. After the so-called Waterkloof airport scandal, some Ministers and officials seemed reluctant to be seen in public with Atul Gupta or on a platform hosted by his newspaper. Atul told Mr Sundaram that these Ministers and officials were convinced after a nudge from the former President. The bad press and public outcry following that incident did not seem to have made any difference to the relationship between Mr Zuma and the Gupta brothers. In the three meetings with former President Zuma that he was part of, the two brothers bonded well with Mr Zuma and joked occasionally about the scandal.

It was like nothing had happened. The brothers had fairly free access to the former President's residence and he often defended his friendship with them.

29. The second meeting occurred during July 2013. It took place in the same room as the first meeting and was attended by all those who attended the first meeting. This time Mr Chawla picked him and Arun Gupta up from the Midrand office. The meeting reviewed the progress of various aspects of the studio project, but the primary focus was on "editorial content". When the President arrived, he was shown the channel ID, and said that it looked impressive. He made certain suggestions, namely that they should not convert this into a publicity channel for the ANC and himself as they would have no credibility. The views of the opposition and his rivals in the ANC had to be presented as well. However, because in his view eNCA only presented the government and himself negatively, they needed a channel that presents the positives.

30. President Zuma added that he would be in Mpumalanga the following week and that he would meet people in the local communities and announce measures for their welfare. He was sure that eNCA would not cover that event but would seek out opposition supporters and report negatively. The former President added that their teams should be present two days before him to do background reports. He was assured that this was possible.

31. It must be said at this stage that there was evidence that former President Zuma was indeed in Mpumalanga on 9 August 2013 to attend the Women's Day celebrations at Bushbuckridge. This lends credence to Mr Sundaram's version as to what President Zuma had told them in advance of the visit.

32. Mr Nazeem Howa then asked the former President to recommend journalists and presenters. The name of Mr Jimmy Manyi came up for the first time. Mr Zuma offered to speak to him regarding talk-shows. He also wanted to know the names of any other high-profile journalists who would be selected. Mr Sundaram added that it was strange to him that the President would allocate two hours of his time on a Sunday to the ANN7 project. The intensity of his interest in the project was like that of a full shareholder.

33. Mr Sundaram later asked Mr Howa why the President showed so much interest in editorial and personnel matters. The reply was that his son, Duduzane, held a 30% share in the company. If the newspaper was able to get government advertisements, they would be able to break even in the first year. Mr Sundaram stated that if the news channel that he was heading would be pro-ANC and pro-Zuma and would be headed by people close to the President, or even chosen by the President himself, there would be a clear conflict of interest in light of the fact that the former President's son had shares in the newspaper and television news channel.

34. The third meeting took place in the first week of August 2013. It was also at the President's residence in Pretoria, but in the evening. Mr Williams was not present. The meeting was attended by Mr Duduzane Zuma, but his interventions were not significant. Having first been ushered into the waiting room, they proceeded to a larger room with a TV set. President Zuma then entered and was shown several news bulletins that they had produced. Mr Ajay Gupta added that the project was only about 50% complete. One visual showed Mr Julius Malema exiting a helicopter. Mr Ajay Gupta pointed out how "corrupt" he looked. These visuals had been bought from the SABC. The former President was very happy with the graphics and the bulletins. He did not want to be present when the channel was inaugurated because this would affect their credibility.

35. The next day he was told by Mr Howa and Mr A Gupta that they had secured R20 million worth of business the previous evening.

36. By this time, Mr Sundaram had decided to resign as editor at ANN7 and to return to India after the launch. What really pushed him was the violation of editorial integrity and dubious commercial dealings.

37. The fourth meeting was held at the Midrand office of ANN7 on 19 August 2013 just two days before the station was to go on air. The usual attendees were there, as were Mr L. Goel, Mr Duduzane Zuma and former President Jacob Zuma, who toured the studios, newsrooms and technical areas and met the staff. Mr A Gupta insisted that no recording be made of President Zuma's visit. Mr Zuma himself said that any association with him at that time would be bad for both of them.

38. Mr Sundaram made a further supplementary affidavit on 22 January 2020. He confirmed that a book he had written on the events described above gave a true account of his experiences while working as "Editor" during the setting up of ANN7 in 2013.

39. Mr M Williams made an affidavit but did not give oral evidence, nor did he apply to cross-examine anyone. In September 2012, he took up the position as editor of TNA and retired in June 2017. In the interim he also served as editor-in-chief of ANN7. He gave details of him having met former President Zuma on numerous occasions since 2012, mainly at breakfast briefings. This was not uncommon for journalists at all. It was only in that professional capacity that he attended one meeting (not two as Mr Sundaram attested to) at the President's official residence.

40. According to Mr Williams, it was widely known that TNA and ANN7 were inclined to report on the positive achievements of the government and the ruling party, rather than to focus on negatives as did the majority of news outlets. It was therefore preposterous to suggest that the former President would have had any input in editorial policy and discussions and commercial decisions relating to the newspaper and the television station. It would not be uncommon, though, to discuss in general terms with a person, such as Mr Zuma, the general approach a newspaper such as TNA or a television station such as ANN7 would follow insofar as its article or programme content was concerned.

41. Mr Williams added that Mr Sundaram should know, as does any seasoned journalist, that there was a "Chinese Wall" in all journalistic enterprises between journalists and its editorial staff, on the one hand, and management of the commercial enterprise on the other. The Gupta family in general never interfered with the editorial policy, direction or integrity of TNA for as long as he was involved in it. They also never interfered with the editorial independence of ANN7. Tensions between journalists and commercial managers do exist, however. They have different aims and purposes in mind.

42. Mr Williams denied that former President Zuma had a direct say in the commercial aspects of the newspaper and the television station in order to secure lucrative government advertising for the television station. He added that the Commission could easily verify this with reference to information readily available on what the advertising content of the TV station was immediately after the launch and for a considerable period thereafter.

43. He also denied that he, with others, stayed on in a meeting with Mr Zuma to discuss advertising support for TNA. This was simply false and in any event hearsay evidence. He also denied the version that representatives of the television station were asked to leave the meeting in order for a discussion to take place in relation to the commercial affairs of the newspaper.

44. Mr Williams denied that he had participated in three meetings at the residence of the then President. He was also not present at the studios on 19 August 2013. It must be remembered that a careful reading of Mr Sundaram's affidavits will show that his second affidavit contradicts his first insofar as the presence of Mr Williams at the President's residence was concerned. In the second affidavit he says that Mr Williams did not attend the third meeting. He also did not specifically say that Mr Williams was at the studios on 9 August 2013, but merely referred to the "usual attendees". It must be asked, however: why would the editor of the channel not be present on such an occasion? Mr Sundaram also contradicted himself in regard to the presence of Mr Duduzane Zuma at these meetings. In his first affidavit he said that he was never present, while in his supplementary affidavit he said that he was present at the third meeting. His evidence must be viewed with a degree of caution.

45. Mr Williams stated that he did attend one meeting with the former President on an off-the-record basis to discuss the general objectives of the television station, its imminent launch and how it would pursue the "objective" reporting pertaining to government and the ruling party. This was not out of the ordinary. This meeting could well have been on 22 June 2013, the date Mr Sundaram referred to. He noted that Mr Sundaram could not recollect the dates of the second and third meetings. He also denied that Mr Duduzane Zuma was present at the single meeting that he had with the President. Access records to the official residence would belie the version of Mr Sundaram. He also denied that the ANN7 delegation was permitted to circumvent the security measures.

46. The core issue here is: what was discussed with the Gupta delegation and why? Is it correct that much of Mr Sundaram's version is either trivial, or of a hearsay nature? It is unfortunate that Mr Williams took a passive stance in these proceedings. His attitude was simply that, inasmuch as no wrongdoing was attributed to him, there was no need to testify or to cross-examine anyone. If there were indeed four meetings as described by Mr Sundaram, the reasonable deduction can be made that then President Zuma showed an extraordinary interest in the Gupta family and the television channel as well as TNA. The important question to be answered is: why? Was it merely for the benefit of the ruling party, or did his son's 30% shareholding play a role? Both scenarios are feasible, and the one conclusion would not exclude the other.

47. Of significance is that an insolvent Corporation pays some R908,000 for an unsolicited newspaper delivery, and some R4,2 million for outside services relating to the ANN7 breakfast shows. No reasonable adjudicator would accept that this was just a coincidence, totally unrelated to Mr Zuma's extraordinary interest in TNA and ANN7, or the fact of his son's said shareholding.

SALE OF THE SABC ARCHIVES

48. Mr Sundaram also dealt with the above topic in his first affidavit. He was told by a Gupta joint venture partner, Mr Goel, that their company had concluded an agreement with the SABC relating to the purchase of one hundred hours of archived video footage for what he called "peanuts". The actual market value of this footage would rise significantly over decades, including priceless footage of former President Mandela that would be worth millions of dollars. He was told that the SABC officials were persuaded to sell this footage for far less than the market value.

49. Mr Sundaram also testified that Mr Nazeem Howa from Infinity Media told him that, given the close relationship between the Guptas and Mr Zuma, no one at the SABC would dare to question this deal. As per the said agreement, the relevant footage would be transferred to an ANN7 tape that could later be digitised. The SABC had no way to monitor the use of such footage, although it appeared that ANN7 had agreed to pay the SABC every time the footage was played.

50. Mr JJ Scott, a sales executive within the news agency at the SABC, made an affidavit and gave evidence on the transaction involving 2000 minutes' worth of archive footage with Infinity Media during October 2013. His responsibilities included the sale of archive content to the general public and commercial enterprises. This would be footage of new and other key events that the SABC would have captured over the years. The sale of such materials generated revenue for the SABC.

51. During June/July 2013 he received a call that the acting CEO, Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng, wanted to know how the sale of archive footage works as he had an external inquiry. He met with Mr Motsoeneng and explained the process. He was told by Mr Motsoeneng that he should expect a call from a new customer. Later he received a call from Mr Nazeem Howa, who requested an appointment. They met, and he explained the sale process of archive material. He was not told that the inquiry related to ANN7 or Infinity Media, nor exactly what was required. Later that day he met his manager, Mr J Mathews, to discuss this project and how they should price the requested 2000 minutes of content. Mr Mathews was the person authorised to deviate from the standard price guide. Under normal circumstances they would have charged "R100 per minutes of footage transferred and taken away". This transaction would have been the biggest sale his division had ever made to a single customer. They then decided, given the volume of content required, to deviate from the said standard price, and rather charge R70 per minute. This was the first time that they had offered such a discount. Mr Howa accepted this quotation.

52. The transfer of archive footage took place over about one month, facilitated by Mr Masimule, Mr Scott's assistant, who would sit on almost a daily basis with Mr Rahul of ANN7. Mr Scott had signed all the required documentation. They did charge for the agreed-upon 2000 minutes of content, although only 1982 minutes were taken. The necessary invoice was generated in the amount of R159,600, and is dated 10 October 2013.

53. As per paragraph "G" of the said Price Guide, the SABC charges R2000 per 30 seconds or part thereof for broadcasting rights of copied content. A specific process was followed in this context: the SABC would send an email to Infinity and enquire if any content was used for a given month. Infinity would then reply with a declaration indicating the minutes used, and Mr Scott would then raise the appropriate invoice. Unfortunately, however, there was no process in place to confirm how much content was in fact used.

54. The weak link in the process relating to actual data or footage used is obvious, but from Mr Scott's evidence no impropriety can be gathered. It is clear, however, that by 2013 the Guptas already had a relationship with Mr Motsoeneng.

55. Ms Yolande van Biljon testified before the Commission that she was able to determine the following from the relevant records on the agreement described by Mr Scott:

    55.1 Infinity was issued invoices amounting to a total of R405,840 (incl. VAT)

    55.2 Infinity did make these payments; and

    55.3 At no stage did the SABC make any payments to Infinity.

56. Mr Motsoeneng testified that his role was to direct the ANN7 management to engage the person who was responsible for the Archives. He was not involved in the "debacle".

EDITORIAL INTERFERENCE

57. The Public Protector's earlier investigation of the SABC alleges that various politicians interfered with the editorial integrity of the news operations of the SABC. A number of witnesses dealt with this topic at the Commission. Mr J.D. Krige was employed by the SABC from April 1990 until he retired in May 2019. His last position was at the RSG Current Affairs team as executive producer. He referred to several instances of direct editorial interference from his line managers. On 5 February 2014, at 09:30, the former acting head of Radio News, Ms S Ditlhakanyane, came into his office and informed him that they could not report on any Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF) activities. She said it was an order from the then Chief Operating Officer (COO), Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng. He objected, but she replied that they had no choice as it was a directive from the top. His reply was that they would not ignore the EFF on broadcasting news. A while later he received a call from Mr Mathews, the then Head of News, to see him in his office. In the presence of Ms Ditlhakanyane he was given a speech about not conforming to the rest of the SABC, and Mr Mathews accused him of thinking that they were an island on their own. Mr Krige replied that he would listen to every instruction and evaluate it before complying.

58. On 26 May 2016, the SABC issued a media statement declaring it would not cover violent protest action. On 31 May 2016, a studio interview was conducted with Mr Motsoeneng accompanied by his advisor Mr Anton Heunis. A debate ensued thereafter, and as a result Mr Krige was summoned to the office of Mr Motsoeneng.

59. Mr Krige recalled the following discussion at this meeting:

> Mr Hlaudi: We are cleaning up the organisation. This is a new SABC. You must adapt or find a job somewhere else. Editors' forum must go. It is advertising for rival newspapers. I do not believe in research. You must defend the organisation. No journalist is independent. The COO has the final responsibility for news.
> Mr Jimi Mathews: It is cold attitude. If you don't like it you can go. You've got two choices: the door or the window.

60. On 6 to 7 June 2016, the senior editorial staff attended a pre-election workshop where Mr Motsoeneng made the following statements, according to Mr Krige's notes:

> Do not focus on negative stories. I am the one in charge. News is now part of operations. We can change the world. We must have news with content. I am in charge. You must adhere to any instruction. President Zuma is the President of the country. I don't regard him as ANC. You cannot treat him the same. We will give him more time. And you can question everyone (Mantashe et al) except our President. We need to respect him, especially you SABC. I expect you to align with my instructions.

61. Ms K Pillay confirmed the above quote. She also mentioned other disturbing incidences. In February 2016, a day before former President Zuma's State of the Nation Address (SONA) she received an instruction that there would be no analysis of the address. She protested to the General Manager of Radio News but was told that they had no choice in the matter. On 23 August 2016, Parliament's Portfolio Committee met the SABC board. She was again instructed not to include analysis on this story.

62. On 7 June 2016, a SABC News Election Workshop was held, and minutes were taken. According to Ms Pillay, Mr Motsoeneng said the following:

    I am in charge of editorial content. President Zuma is the President of the country. That's how we cover him. Can't treat him like anyone. Talks about SA. Treat the President with respect. Question the politicians as much as we like. Align yourself with this.

63. Mr M Phiri, the Executive Producer in the SABC Current Affairs department, was the Executive Producer at the time of "Question Time", a current affairs programme whose mandate was to interview various sources for clarification of important issues in the public interest. They invited the then Public Protector, Adv Thuli Madonsela, onto their platform. At that time Question Time was pre-recorded. Adv Madonsela was invited for 18 February 2014. Earlier they heard that an interview with her scheduled for SAFM's "Forum at Eight" had been cancelled. They nevertheless recorded her interview but hid the final recorded tape until it went on air on 18 February 2014.

64. Local government elections were held in March 2014. The EFF, through Mr Julius Malema, had just released the party's election list. He was invited to Question Time. The newsroom was at the time abuzz with Mr Motsoeneng's close ties with the then President and inviting a person like Mr Malema was going to be seen as an affront to their boss's reputed relationship with Mr Zuma.

65. Mr Malema entered the SABC on the morning of 18 March 2014 just as the Head of TV News, Mr Mathews, was leaving the building. Mr Mathews then sent the Executive Producer, Mr K Skhosana, to follow Mr Malema and to stop whatever interview he had come for. They recorded the interview nevertheless and made two copies to avoid confiscation. The interview went on air on 19 March 2014.

66. Ms Thandeka Gqubule-Mbeki, an Economics Editor at the SABC, became involved in a struggle for independent public broadcasting. She was dismissed as part of the group known as the "SABC 8" for their objection to the "Protest Policy" introduced by Mr Motsoeneng. She had also experienced personal harassment, smear campaigns and death threats. She mentioned two instances of political interference with the editorial independence at the SABC. She was engaged by Ms N Maseko, "who had been appointed mysteriously and inappropriately over us" to lead the TV news division, about how to cover the fall in the currency after the sacking of the former Minister of Finance, Mr Nhlanhla Nene. She was told that they should editorially veer away from explaining the link between market perceptions of the dismissal of Minister Nene by President Zuma and the fall in the fortunes of the currency and its effect on the market. She obviously objected as the currency had plunged in relation to the rest of the basket of currencies on the Emerging Market Index. She was of the view that this instruction amounted to an attempt to bend the facts and to deceive or mislead the public.

67. On another occasion, Ms Gqubule-Mbeki was given a file by Ms N Molete of alleged misdemeanours committed by Mr Pravin Gordhan at SARS. She was told that this file had been furnished to the News Division by Mr Jimmy Manyi. She looked through the file and documents and found them to be flimsy. She was only "let off the hook" when she asked that those who had made various allegations should lay charges at a police station by way of an affidavit. This would protect her from a possible defamation suit. She was told that this would be conveyed to Mr Manyi, but she never heard of this again.

68. Mr Magopeni joined the SABC as Head of News in March 2018. Below, in summary form, is the situation he found at the SABC News Division at the time:

    68.1 There was no effective capable leadership to guide the work of the division, while the leadership was mistrusted

    68.2 There was a general sense that management of the division was compromised; and 68.3 Issues were endemic and deeply entrenched.

69. As a result of the sustained period of editorial transgressions, serious ethical drifts, editorial bullying by external parties, corporate bullying of newsroom staff, the news operation was characterised by the following:

    69.1 No existence of either editorial or administrative philosophy to guide management thinking and decision making

    69.2 No expressed and commonly understood value system to guide conduct in the news operation

    69.3 Crippling fear, anxiety, resentment and tensions, as well as unproductive staff

    69.4 A paralysed editorial system that could not enable ethical editorial decision making

    69.5 Lack of transparency and accountability in management decision making

    69.6 Management who tolerated and nurtured unethical editorial practices

    69.7 Extremely low morale, lack of motivation and employee engagement

    69.8 No clear lines of command as journalists were getting instructions from everywhere; and

    69.9 An environment where politicians thought that they had a say in editorial decisions.

70. There is ample and credible evidence of the abuse of power by Mr Motsoeneng, and, in all probability, with the tacit, if not express, approval of former President Zuma when one keeps the evidence of Mr Sundaram and the role of the ANN7 channel in mind.

THE MULTICHOICE CONTRACT

71. On 15 May 2013, when MultiChoice wrote a set of proposed provisions to the SABC COO, Mr Motsoeneng, that would form the basis of a MultiChoice / SABC Multi-Channel Agreement (MCA), MultiChoice had seen an opportunity to bring about a major policy shift in government's digital terrestrial TV transformation project.

72. Mr LR Kruger, Technical Advisor to Ministers Dina Pule and Yunus Carrim between January 2012 and July 2014, described the Digital Terrestrial (DTT) project roll-out for South Africa at the Commission. In essence, the Government's Broadcast Digital Migration (BDM) project is about converting the "old" analogue TV and Radio transmission/transmitter equipment to the latest digital broadcasting equipment. The BDM project arose from a decision taken in 2008 to provide ± 5 million set-top-boxes (STBs) to poor households, at no cost, to ensure that most of the population could receive television and radio signals on all TV sets irrespective of how old the units were. One of the critical capabilities of the control system is that of encryption. This function "scrambles" data to prevent unauthorised "taping/copying" of TV and radio programmes.

73. Mr FL Mutuvhi, Chief Director: Broadcasting Digital Migration with the Department of Communications, testified before the Commission that analogue television is the means by which video and audio is sent to the viewer over the airways using a terrestrial transmitter (tower) where a normal TV can receive it without an external device. Digital television is the means by which video and audio is sent to the receiver over the airwaves using a digital terrestrial transmitter (tower) where a normal TV can receive it using an external device called a decoder/set-top-box.

74. The objective of the BDM programme is to release radio frequency spectrum divided through migration of television broadcast from analogue to digital platforms without people losing television broadcast signal. The programme is to be achieved through connecting citizens to digital networks by means of digital decoders (terrestrial and satellite) – as well as integrated television sets.

75. The objectives of the Government's 2008 BDM policy were the following:

    75.1 Strengthening South Africa's capacity to be a more effective information society and knowledge economy

    75.2 Reducing the digital divide between the rich and poor

    75.3 Releasing much-needed radio frequency spectrum for wireless broadband and mobile communications

    75.4 Stimulating the development of the local electronic manufacturing industry and job creation

    75.5 Provision of e-Government services

    75.6 Encouraging additional television channels and in different languages to promote access to information and contribute towards nation-building

    75.7 Providing a framework for community television and mobile broadcasting services

    75.8 Providing access to broadcasting for people with disabilities

    75.9 Developing the electronic manufacturing industry; and

    75.10 Encouraging the creative industries.

76. However, according to the SABC's CEO at the time, Ms Mokhobo testified before the Commission that:

> The country-wide digital migration programme has been stalled for 11 years now since its policy, the Broadcasting Digital Migration ("BDM") Policy was approved by Cabinet and reflected in the Government Gazette on 8 September 2008. This resulted from a seeming lack of policy agreement and/or implementation coherence as the Ministerial leadership of the Department of Communications changed hands.
> The Department of Communications effectively changed hands 10 time in as many years, resulting in real leadership crisis as the broadcasting sector found itself with no solid Digital Terrestrial Television ("DTT") direction as it pertained to Set Top Box ("STB") technology choices, despite the provisions of the then existing BDM policy of 2008.

77. Mr Kruger testified that Sentech (the Government owned TV and Radio signal distributer) already had a STB control system in place and fully operational and working with trained staff. During March 2012, he wrote to Minister Pule informing her of Sentech's capabilities. Initially the SABC technical team and management agreed to Sentech providing STB control in the DTT network, and agreements were drawn up by Sentech indicating costs, responsibilities, etc. for the use of the STB control system. The SABC and eTV were on the verge of signing agreements with Sentech when Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng, the acting COO of the SABC, suddenly decided that the SABC would no longer require STB control.

78. On investigating the reason, it turned out that Mr Motsoeneng had signed an agreement with MultiChoice in which the latter "banned" the SABC from using a STB control system on the DTT network. Among the reasons MultiChoice was providing – and which had convinced Mr Motsoeneng – was that a STB control system would render the SABC TV channels no longer "Free To Air" (FTA), supposedly meaning that all South African citizens would have to pay to watch TV. Mr Kruger's view was that this was all nonsense, as all FTA channels were just that: no viewers of FTA channels would have to pay to watch. MultiChoice's network is fully encrypted, which is just to protect the network and the data travelling on the network. According to Mr Kruger, the conclusion of the Department of Communication project team was that MultiChoice did not want another Pay TV channel operator in South Africa.

79. Ms L Mokhobo testified that on 6 June 2013, the SABC Interim Board and MCA's Chairman, Mr Letele, CEO, Mr Imtiaz Patel, together with Mr Greg Hamburger had met to discuss the substance of the future Multi-Channel Agreement. Of contention, as may be gleaned from the verbatim minutes of the said meeting, were two provisions that effectively dictated the SABC's 2008 Digital Migration Broadcast (BDM) policy-based strategy on STB encryption. They stated the following:

    79.1 Point 9: "The offer presupposes that all SABC Channels on its DTT platform will be made available to the public unencrypted, without a conditional access system and thereby incidentally receivable by the MCA DTT decoder;" and

    79.2 Point 10: "MCA, the SABC, Sentech (if required), work together to promote carriage of all the SABC's free to air channels on the SABC free-to-air multiplex will be made available to MCA satellite platform, subject to available capacity. This is in order to enable the SABC to generate revenue from day one."

80. Ms Mokhobo claimed that she was joined by an SABC Board member, Mr Mavuso, in categorically stating that points 9 and 10 were not enforceable through the future Multi-Channel Agreement, and entirely dependent on the Department of Communications (DOC) and government deciding to amend the 2008 BDM Policy to reflect the change. Moreover, the DOC had begun a Must-Carry Regulations review process, which could ultimately lead to the SABC being paid for any channels that were broadcast through MCA and other satellite platforms.

81. However, the CEO of Multichoice, Mr CP Mawela, stated in a 170-page responding affidavit prepared for the Commission that on 19 June 2013 Ms Mokhobo wrote a letter to MultiChoice (copying Ms Tshabalala, the Chairperson of the SABC Board). The letter reads as follows:

    > The Board and Executive Management has duly considered MultiChoice's proposal... and we are pleased to inform you of the decision to proceed in accordance with the proposal as the terms that will be agreed between the SABC and MultiChoice.

82. In a letter dated 20 June 2013, MultiChoice replied to Ms Mokhobo's letter of 19 June 2013. Mr Mawela was of the view that it is inexplicable that Ms Mokhobo did not disclose this letter in her affidavit or in her evidence to the Commission. Her failure to do so casts a cloud over the whole of her testimony as to how the agreement was concluded. Mr Mawela's response to Ms Mokhobo's letter was as follows:

    > Dear Lulama, Thank you for your letter dated 19 June 2013. We are delightful that your board has agreed to the broad terms as contained in our letter of 15 May 2013. We are in the process of drafting the agreement on this basis. I am informed that our legal teams have already been in contact and will liaise on the finalisation of the documentation as soon as possible. We share your excitement about this mutually rewarding project.

83. It is important to note that Ms Mokhobo did not respond to MultiChoice's letter of 20 June 2013, nor did she give any indication to MultiChoice that it had misunderstood the purport of her letter.

84. The parties then proceeded to draft the SABC Agreement in accordance with the terms of the MultiChoice proposal. The initial draft agreement was circulated by MultiChoice to the SABC on 27 June 2013. The SABC made comments on 30 June 2013. After some discussion via email, further versions of the draft were circulated on 3 July 2013, and the Agreement was signed later that day. Ms Mokholo had taken emergency leave of absence from work on 2 July 2013 and returned to work on Monday 8 July 2013. On 3 July 2013, Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng, Mr Tiaan Olivier and Ms Ellen Tshabalala, chair of the board, signed the agreement on behalf of the SABC, and, according to Ms Mokhobo, effectively forced the SABC to declare the set-top box encryption mechanism as wholly unjustifiable. To them, the SABC's gain of a just over R500-million over a period of five years was far more important than the overall impact this was going to have on the total digital transformation trajectory of the country.

85. Minister Carrim, Minister of Communications between 10 July 2013 and 24 May 2014, set up a forum to try to get all parties to agree to using a STB control system or to come to a consensus as to how to run the South African DTT network according to the existing policy document. MultiChoice, supported by Mr Motsoeneng, approved all suggestions of STB control in the DTT network. The Department in turn received support from both the then CEO, Ms L Mokhobo, and the then Chair Ms E Tshabalala.

86. However, another change of Ministers again put the STB control system further in dispute when Minister Faith Muthambi, with full support of Mr Motsoeneng, decided to go against the Government and ANC recommendations that a STB control system be implemented in the DTT network.

87. Former Minister Carrim testified before the Commission that a key aspect of the debate between free-to-air (FTA) and Pay-TV broadcasters was that Pay-TV takes the FTA programmes for free and re-broadcasts them and uses the programmes to build market share. In so doing they acquired two revenue streams and subscriptions, which was unfair. STB control would allow FTA broadcasts to protect their content against unauthorised use. He gave details of the high concentration of the media industry, dominated mainly by Naspers which had a terrestrial subscription TV in the form of M-Net, owned by MultiChoice, that had more than 98% of direct to home (DTH) satellite subscription TV and controlled the country's internet service providers mainly through MWeb.

88. However, Mr Carrim conceded that despite allegations and counter-allegations of corruption, he himself could not attest to having personal knowledge of any fraud and/or corruption in respect of the SABC/MultiChoice Agreement. Nevertheless, according to the former CEO of the SABC, Ms Mokhobo: . . . certainly the interest of MultiChoice became paramount to Motsoeneng to the detriment of the organisation. Yes, he claims that he succeeded in bringing R500 million into the organisation, it was R100 million per year. There is somewhere where I do very roughly calculations about different scenarios for the SABC, that was very little compared to what the SABC was forced to concede as a result of this man.

89. In his testimony before the Commission, Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng referred to the Electronic Communications Act 25 of 2002 (section 60 (3)) and ICASA Regulation 6 (1), which prescribed that "the PBS Licence must offer its television programmes, at no cost, to a SBS Licence upon a request from the SBS Licence". Any deal with MultiChoice was thus to give effect to the "must carry" regulations. He did not benefit therefrom.

90. Subsequently, the Competition Commission investigated this matter, and in its findings made on 9 November 2018 stated that the encryption aspect of the agreement resulted in a notifiable change of control as envisaged in section 12(2)(g) of the Competition Act 89 of 1998 as amended. The Competition Commission stated: "Being able to influence a policy on encryption materially impacted the structure of the market in that it protected MultiChoice's dominance in the PayTV market in that the STB Control would have significantly challenged the dominance of MultiChoice particularly in lower LSM segments of the market". This was also in violation of section 2 (h) of the Broadcasting Act 4 of 1999 which reads: " ... ensure fair competition in the broadcasting sector".

91. The Competition Appeal Court also found that the Agreement gave MultiChoice control over SABC's public policy on STB decryption capability but held that "the agreement per se does not prevent (the SABC) from adopting a public policy supporting encryption. What it does is to constrain it from encrypting the free-to-air for the duration of the agreement".

92. It was patently clear at that time that neither Mr Olivier, Mr Motsoeneng nor Ms Tshabalala (as the Chairperson of the Board) understood the gravity and future impact of their actions to both the public and the industry.

93. Additionally, the entire process leading to the signing of the contract was deeply flawed in that it flouted the SABC's own Delegation of Authority Framework of 2012. Former Minister Carrim testified that there had been no SABC Board approval prior to signature, and that Mr Motsoeneng did not have the legal authority to sign such an agreement on behalf of the SABC.

94. The MultiChoice agreement came up for renewal in mid-2018 and, according to Ms Mokhobo, a new contract is in place. It was approved by the new Board, negating much of the "evidence" that it had been improperly entered into.

acquired the right to distribute and market specific subscription and free-to-air channels developed, produced and made available by the SABC. These channels are the Entertainment Channel, the News Channel, and the SABC free-to-air digital terrestrial television channels. The SABC received fees in consideration for the rights to broadcast and distribute the said channels and was also entitled to all revenue received from sales in respect of advertising and sponsorship on all of its channels. The SABC also acquired the right to distribute a MultiChoice free-to-air terrestrial entertainment channel. Certain technological requirements were included, and one such was that the SABC's free-to-air digital broadcasting signals should not be encrypted for the duration of the Agreement.

96. According to Mr Mawela, the Agreement, concluded during the term of office of an interim SABC Board, survived the scrutiny of two subsequent Boards: the Board appointed in September 2013, which considered and debated the agreement before proceeding with its implementation; and the Board appointed in October 2017, which resolved to renew the agreement in August 2018.

97. Mr Mawela also drew the Commission's attention to the fact that the Competition Commission, after an investigation, reported on 9 November 2018 that in its view the SABC Agreement did not give MultiChoice control over the SABC archive.

98. Furthermore, it is clear from the objective evidence referred to above, and the conduct of the parties, that MultiChoice had entered the Agreement in good faith on the understanding that the SABC's representatives had obtained the necessary approval from the SABC Board and Executive Management and held the requisite authority to negotiate and conclude the agreement. It had no knowledge of any of the internal irregularities such as they were, and MultiChoice relied on Ms Mokhobo's personal assurance that the SABC Board and Management had accepted its proposal before the Agreement was signed.

THE ROLE OF FORMER MINISTER FAITH MUTHAMBI

99. On 17 July 2017, Ms S Fick, the Head of Legal Affairs at the Organisation Undoing Tax Abuse (OUTA), concluded an affidavit concerning then Minister Faith Muthambi.

100. Certain emails were retrieved from the server of Sahara Computers (Pty) Ltd, a company owned by the Gupta family. OUTA received a copy of these emails from an unknown source. Ms Fick states that amongst those emails were those that evidenced "crimes of corruption and high treason". This misconduct occurred during Ms Muthambi's tenure as Minister of Communications.

101. On 25 May 2014, then President Zuma appointed Ms Muthambi to the Cabinet as Minister of Communications. In the Cabinet reshuffle of 30 March 2017, she was retained as a Member of Cabinet, as Minister of the Public Service and Administration (DPSA). On 24 February 2017, the National Assembly's ad hoc Committee found that she "displayed incompetence in carrying out her responsibilities as Shareholder Representative (of the SABC)". The Committee noted that the evidence suggested "major shortcomings" in Ms Muthambi's conduct, particularly in relation to the SABC's Memorandums of Incorporation (MOI) and her role in Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng's permanent appointment as COO. It concludes that ".... the Minister interfered in some of the Board's decision-making and processes and had irregularly amended the MOI to further centralise power in the Minister..." and condemned all political interference in the Board's operations by Minister Muthambi. The Committee recommended that then President Zuma should seriously reconsider the desirability of this particular Minister relating to the Communications portfolio.

102. The Western Cape High Court found that she acted irrationally and unlawfully in appointing Mr Motsoeneng as COO of the SABC in the face of the Public Protector's findings against him of abuse of power, fraud and maladministration. The Supreme Court of Appeal made the same findings in a prima facie basis against the Minister. It also criticised her for "treating with disdain" the allegation that Mr Motsoeneng's appointment was irrational and unlawful, and for raising technical objections rather than furnishing the Court with an explanation of her actions.

103. The Constitutional Court also expressed concern at her "evasive" and "suspicious" responses – or the lack thereof – to pertinent questions raised by eTV as regards consultations she had with undisclosed parties.

104. The Gupta emails obtained from the Sahara computer server show that between July and August 2014, shortly after her appointment, Ms Muthambi sent a series of emails to Mr Tony Gupta on confidential matters of executive policy and matters in the scope of her ministerial powers. The correspondence suggests either:

    104.1 That the transfer of powers to her national portfolio was influenced and vetted by the Guptas; or 104.2 That she used their relationship with the Guptas to influence the manner in which President Zuma transferred powers to her portfolio.

105. These emails were either sent directly from Ms Muthambi to Mr Tony Gupta, or indirectly from her to the Sahara Company's CEO, Mr Ashu Chawla, who in turn forwarded correspondence to Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Duduzane Zuma. The latter appears to have acted as a conduit between the Guptas and former President Zuma.

106. On 18 July 2014, Ms Muthambi emailed a copy of the President's Proclamation on the transfer of administration and powers to certain Cabinet members to Mr Ashu Chawla, who, in turn forwarded the email to Mr T Gupta. This Proclamation provided inter alia that all powers under the Electronic Communications Act 36 of 2005 and the Sentech Act of 1996 were to be assigned to the Minister of Telecommunication and Postal Services, then Minister Cwele. Previously they were assigned to the Minister of Communications.

107. A few minutes after emailing this Proclamation to Mr Chawla, Ms Muthambi sent a second email attaching a document which described the effect of Proclamation. On 25 July 2014vshe sent two emails to Mr Chawla again describing the effect of the Proclamation and also stating that Sentech's signal distribution must rest with the Ministry of Communications. Both emails of 25 July 2014 were subsequently forwarded by Mr Ashu Chawla to Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Duduzane Zuma, in separate emails.

108. The said Proclamation transfers power under section 3 of the Electronic Communications Act 36 of 2005 to make national policy "to the extent that it deals in any way with a broadcasting service or an electronic communications network used for as in the provision of broadcasting service".

109. On 6 December 2013, then Minister Carrim had used the power under section 3 by issuing for public comment draft amendments to the broadcast digital migration technology, the features of which were prominent:

    109.1 It proposed fixed dates for certain stages in the digital migration process; and

    109.2 It proposed that government would subsidise set-top-boxes capable of receiving encrypted signals. This was in accordance with ANC policy on the issue.

110. On 29 July 2014, Ms Muthambi sent an email to Mr Chawla giving notice of a Cabinet meeting the next day. She attached a memorandum that she had sent to Minister Cwele in connection with concerns that she had expressed regarding his intention to table final amendments to the Broadcasting Digital Migration Policy in Cabinet. Ms Fick expressed the view that this amounted to a gross violation of Cabinet confidentiality. This must be so. Mr Chawla forwarded the email and the document to Mr Tony Gupta later that day. Minister Cwele did not at any stage obtain Cabinet approval for his proposed amendments.

111. On 1 August 2014, Ms Muthambi sent an email to Mr Chawla to which she attached a draft of a Proclamation that the President had to sign. On 8 August 2014, one "Ellen" of Fortune Holdings emailed Ms Muthambi in reply thanking her for the proposed Proclamation that former President Zuma "must sign". The email was signed by "Zandile", presumably Ms Tshabalala, the SABC Chairperson at the time. "Zandile" copied Mr Chawla and a certain Khumalo at the SABC. The said draft Proclamation was never promulgated.

112. Ms Muthambi had policy on Broadcast Migration under her control, and on 16 March 2015 published her amendments under Government Notice 232 of 2015. It included neither of the two features of former Minister Carrim's draft of December 2013.

112.1 The policy no longer tied the Government to any dates for the digital migration process; and 112.2 The policy provided that Government subsidised set-top-boxes would not be capable of receiving encrypted signals. It thus reversed Minister Carrim's proposal which had been in accordance with ANC policy and replaced it with a decision that was contrary to it.

113. The communications described above amounts to an abuse of her office. There is no reasonable explanation for communications of this nature between a Minister and members of the Gupta group who control a television station subject to her regulatory jurisdiction.

114. Reference has been made to Ms Muthambi's irrational appointment of Mr Motsoeneng as permanent COO, which was set aside by the said Courts. It is most probable that Mr Motsoeneng's gross abuse of power at the SABC, including diverting public resources vested in the SABC to benefit the Gupta's rival media company, appear to have been sanctioned by both Mr Muthambi and then President Zuma.

115. Her actions should be referred to the National Prosecuting Authority if this has not yet been done. Her actions are in conflict with s 96 of the Constitution and her oath of office. There is also sufficient evidence on record to consider charges in terms of sections 3, 4, 7, 21 and 34 of the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004.

116. On 21 May 2021, Ms Muthambi appeared before the Commission. She was represented. She denied that she had sent emails to persons who were not entitled to be privy thereto. She merely "engaged" with various stakeholders, which included the Gupta family, who were the owners of TNA Media and ANN7 television at the time. She confirmed that she had made a statement which was undated and not sworn to, but she confirmed that it was true and accurate. She then raised preliminary objections on the basis that disciplinary proceedings were pending in Parliament and that those should run their course. She was still an MP at that time.

117. Ms Muthambi confirmed that she had sent an email to Mr Ashu Chawla on 18 July 2014. Attached to that was the Proclamation referred to above. She had no knowledge of whether Mr Chawla acted as a conduit between the Guptas and former President Zuma. Mr Chawla was merely a stakeholder in that context. Ms Muthambi admitted that she had sent all emails referred to by Ms Fick but did so as part of a consultation and engagement process with stakeholders. She also denied that she had changed any policy as suggested by Ms Fick, saying that previous policies had merely been in draft form. It was only in 2015 that the Digital Migration Policy was approved by Cabinet.

118. Ms Muthambi also denied that she had sent any confidential documents relating to the said Cabinet meeting inasmuch as that mentioned notification was not confidential. She also added that the fact that the Constitutional Court had criticised her as being "evasive" and "raising suspicious responses" was irrelevant because that Court had actually found in her favour regarding her powers. She also did not accept the finding of the Court that she had failed to disclose who she had consulted with. In any event she did not remember having been asked to disclose whom she had consulted with. She also denied that the reason of the said non-disclosure was that she had shared information with third parties (the Guptas) who were not entitled thereto.

119. The evidence of Ms Muthambi is unconvincing to say the least. She knew quite well that she had unauthorised communications with the Guptas, and for that reason most probably did not disclose to the mentioned Courts who she had consulted with. Her version that the Guptas in the given context were mere innocent stakeholders in a consultation process is unacceptable. If they were, there would have been no reason not to disclose that to the Courts. It is clear that she had abused her power in a number of instances.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

120. It is clear from the evidence relating to TNA and the creation of the ANN7 television channel that the Gupta family and their associates had a close relationship with President Zuma at that time and that he showed a particular interest in their ventures. Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng, having regard to his own utterances as described by witnesses, and in some instances recorded, saw himself (and probably was) the facilitator between the former President and at the very least the news section of the SABC. Whether this was for President's personal benefit is impossible to say, but there is clear evidence that it benefited the ANC, and his son Mr Duduzane Zuma who had a 30% share in Infinity Media, a Gupta family company.

121. Most probably TNA benefited from government advertising, but it certainly benefited from being distributed (uninvited) at the SABC at a cost of some R960,000, as well as at Eskom. The breakfast shows cost the SABC over R4 million, with about half being spent on "travelling expenses". It is not clear if those funds can still be recovered from those who benefited improperly. The outdoor broadcasts which were initially planned for two per month, escalated beyond that and the evidence was that these cost the SABC some R20 million over a few years.

122. In respect of the mentioned archive deal there is no evidence of any impropriety, except to say that there was no process in place to determine how much content of the material bought had actually been used and in respect of which use the SABC would have been entitled to a fee of R2,000 per second.

123. Several witnesses gave credible evidence of editorial interference with reference to specific events that were not allowed either to be broadcast or to be commented upon. Former Minister Muthambi handed the reign over SABC editorials to Mr Motsoeneng, as it was put, and allowed him to act above the law.

124. One must wholly agree with the view expressed by Mr Makhathini, the Chairperson since 2017, that depoliticising is of paramount importance in the renewal, rehabilitation and strengthening of governance systems. Appointing competent and credible executives with the prerequisite skills and experience is at the heart of the renewal process.

125. As the two cases dealt with above - the Multichoice Agreement and the role of Ms Muthambi - illustrate, it is necessary that a statutory offence with severe penalties should be created dealing with the abuse of power by public officials in all spheres of government and organs of state. Abuse of power has become endemic in South Africa. It is a recurrent theme almost everywhere, be it perpetrated by Ministers or by members of the Boards of SOEs or their Executives.

WATERKLOOF

INTRODUCTION

1. The Terms of Reference for the Commission Inquiry into the landing, on 30 April 2013, of a Jet Airways charter flight JAI (the flight) at the Air Force Base Waterkloof (the "Waterkloof Landing") require that the Commission conduct an inquiry into:

   > Whether, and to what extent and by whom attempts were made through any form of inducement or for any gain of whatsoever nature to influence members of the National Executive (including Deputy Ministers), office bearers and or functionaries employed by or offices bearers of any state institution or organ of state or directors of the boards of SOEs.

2. To answer that question, one must examine the events and people that may have led to a positive response to the question whether the Waterkloof Landing was caused or influenced by any state official or public office bearer, and what offences or breaches of protocol were committed by any such person/s. The examination will entail consideration of the oral evidence presented to the Commission and the documents placed before it. These will be discussed in more detail below.

3. Upon the direction of the Chairperson of the Commission, investigations and the legal inquiry was launched revealing the circumstances under which the commercial aircraft had been permitted to land at the Waterkloof Base. Twelve witnesses led evidence over seven days in July 2019. In testimony, they referred to some nineteen (19) exhibits, all of which have been examined. Not all the witnesses' testimony was relevant to the Inquiry, and mention shall be made only of the relevant oral evidence and the documents that are of importance.

The issue under investigation

4. A commercial Airbus A330-200, Flight JAI 9900, carrying Indian nationals which departed from India to South Africa landed on 30 April 2013 at the Waterkloof Air Force Base (Waterkloof Base), Pretoria. The intended purpose for the passengers was to attend the Gupta family wedding which took place at The Palace of the Lost City at Sun City.

5. The landing at the Waterkloof base of the commercial plane created a whirlwind of controversy throughout the country as the Waterkloof Base is a military base and a home to the Central Photographic Institute, the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre, the Electronic Warfare Centre, and the South African Air Force (SAAF) Telecommunications Centre. It is also utilised for presidential use and is classified as a National Key Point.

6. It was not contested at the hearing of oral evidence, nor in any of the documents before the Commission, that the purpose of the flight was to bring the guests of the Gupta family to a wedding of a family member at the Sun City hotel in the North-West Province. The officials who facilitated the landing had been advised, however, that there were several Indian Ministers of State aboard the flight. This proved to be false, as shall be shown.

THE INVESTIGATION PANEL

7. The circumstances in which the commercial airline had been permitted had been marginally probed by the Public Protector's office and in large by an exclusive investigation panel of Directors-General appointed by Mr Jeff Radebe, the Minister of Justice and the Crime Prevention and Security Cluster (JCPS). The investigation panel comprised of the following persons: Mr Dennis Dlomo, Acting Director-General of the State Security Agency (the Chairperson); Ms. Nonkululeko Sindane, Director-General of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development; Mr Tom Moyane, National Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services; and Dr CG Swemmer, Acting Coordinator of Intelligence.

8. The Terms of Reference given to the investigation panel were as follows:

   8.1 Determine the sequence of events prior to, during and after the landing of the chartered commercial aircraft at the Air Force base Waterkloof

   8.2 Assess the actual events in light of the established legislation, regulations, government and departmental protocols

   8.3 Interview and interact with relevant persons as to their understanding of established legislation, regulations, government and departmental protocols; and

   8.4 Make findings and recommendations to avert similar occurrences in future.

9. Ms N Sindane, who had played the leading role in the Panel's investigation, testified before the Commission on the process, the planning undertaken by the investigation panel, her role in the investigation panel, and interviews, documents and audio recordings considered throughout the investigation process. Her testimony was centred around the Justice Crime Prevention and Security (JCPS) Cluster Report, "Landing of a Chartered Commercial Aircraft at Air Force Base WaterKloof", 17 May 2013.

10. Numerous officials and individuals were interviewed by the investigation panel.

PRE-ARRIVAL PHASE OF A FLIGHT AT WATERKLOOF

11. The panel established the process that would ordinarily be followed prior to an aircraft landing at the Waterkloof Base:

    11.1 The Waterkloof Base would only receive flights classified as military flights, VVIP flights or VIP flights. The former would include Heads of State and/or Government and Ministers. No commercial or charter flights would receive permission to land except in an emergency. Only military personnel, Heads and Deputy Heads of State were permitted to make use of AFB Waterkloof.

    11.2 The Embassy or High Commission would forward a Note Verbale to the Office of the Chief of State Protocol requesting the assistance of government with the visit. The Air Force Command Post would then interact with the Department of International Relations and Cooperation (DIRCO) for clearance of state visits or VVIPs prior to issuing the clearance.

    11.3 Under the Customs and Excise Act 91 of 1964, Section 7(1A)(a), non-military and non-VIP flights seeking to land at an airport other than one of the ten customs and excise airports would need to obtain special permission prior to landing from the SARS Commissioner. This would especially be the case when the passengers are not subject to the Diplomatic Privileges and Immunities Act 37 of 2001.

    11.4 Once clearance had been granted, the Waterkloof Base would notify departments with immigration, customs, health, and port health sanitary responsibilities of the pending arrival to enable them to be in attendance at the time. This notification would take place in writing and/or via telephone notification. All the above departments would be notified of all incoming and outgoing flights. However, full protocol would only be provided during state and official visits.

    11.5 DIRCO would convene and chair an interdepartmental meeting to deal with official state visits; the meeting would include the Presidential Protection Unit for visiting VVIPs and Special Envoys. Protection for vehicle convoys of visiting delegations would be arranged at the national level by way of activation of the National JOINTS (National Joint Operational and Intelligence Structure) when the route crosses provincial boundaries. This is the responsibility of the National Commissioner of the South African Police Services (SAPS).

    11.6 The Department of Home Affairs would issue visas to the visitors against return flight tickets if travelling on a commercial flight, or if confirmed to travel on a charter flight.

ARRIVAL PHASE OF A FLIGHT AT WATERKLOOF

12. The panel established that the following procedures would ordinarily take place upon the arrival of an aircraft at the Waterkloof Base:

    12.1 Air Traffic and Navigations Service (ATNS) would manage the flight from its entry into South African airspace in terms of International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) Standards; South African Civil Aviation Authority Regulations and Technical Standards; as well as the requirements and procedures published in the South African Aeronautical Information Publication.

    12.2 The receiving airport radar would manage the actual landing.

    12.3 Health procedures would take place according to the prescripts of Port Health.

    12.4 Customs procedures would take place according to the prescripts of the Customs and Excise Act of 1964 and the Diplomatic Privileges and Immunities Act of 2001. The latter Act quotes the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 1963, which confer inviolability on a Head of State, Foreign Ministers and Ambassadors; and lesser immunities and privileges on a Special Envoy, albeit with a certain degree of inviolability.

12.5 Immigration procedures would take place according to the Immigration Act 13 of 2002. The Act requires that civilians present themselves physically to the Immigration Officer for processing.

12.6 Firearms would be cleared in terms of the Firearms Control Act 60 of 2000.

12.7 Convoy protection for VIPs would be provided upon request by SAPS in terms of the approved Operational Plan under the Safety at Sport and Recreational Events (SSAREA) Act 2 of 2010.

THE SEQUENCE OF EVENTS PRIOR TO AND ON 30 APRIL 2013

13. In reference to the customary process ordinarily followed in respect to the pre-arrival and arrival of an aircraft at the Waterkloof Base, the panel established through the interviews, documents and audio recordings, that the following transpired which had been contrary to the protocol set out in respect to the processes of aircraft landing:

13.1 In February 2013, Mr Tony Gupta approached the Airports Company South Africa (ACSA) to enquire about the use of O.R. Tambo International Airport for the arrival of "at least five heads of state, ministers and senior Indian Government officials" invited to a four-day wedding event at Sun City.

13.2 Mr Tony Gupta, together with the Chief of State Protocol, Ambassador Koloane, attended a meeting to facilitate approval for Mr Tony Gupta. Mr Bongani Maseko, the Acting CEO of ACSA, and Minister of Transport, Mr DB Martins, were present at the said meeting. During the meeting, Mr Gupta requested to utilise the facilities at O.R. Tambo to welcome guests from India who were to attend the wedding.

13.3 Mr Tony Gupta's request was denied by Mr Maseko, as the space requested by Mr Gupta was being utilised by the Department of Home Affairs for checking passports and the landing and reception at O.R. Tambo would disrupt the arrivals process at immigration. ACSA suggested that alternatives be considered, among them, Lanseria or Pilanesberg airports. It was later determined that the runway at Lanseria was being upgraded. At a follow-up meeting and after enquiring with SAA, ACSA informed Mr Gupta that the tarmac at Pilanesberg could not accommodate an Airbus A330-200.

13.4 In early March 2013, Ms Nosiviwe Mapisa-Nqakula, the then Minister of Defence and Military Veterans, was approached by Mr Atul Gupta. The Minister's Political Advisor, Mr Michael Ramagoma, was approached by Mr Ashu Chawla on behalf of the Gupta family in seeking a platform to land the aircraft which was scheduled to arrive for the Gupta wedding.

13.5 During the latter half of March 2013, Mr Ramagoma, approached the Chief of the SAAF, Lt. Gen. Msimang, to determine the regulations governing the landing and taking off of civilian aircraft at Air Force Base Waterkloof.

13.6 The Chief of the Air Force informed the Political Advisor that it would be irregular for an aircraft carrying wedding guests to land at the Waterkloof Base. The Chief of the Air Force advised Mr Ramagoma that the matter should not be entertained any further. This was confirmed by Lt. Gen. Msimang in testimony at the Commission.

13.7 On 2 April 2013, Ambassador Koloane contacted Mr Ramagoma to enquire as to progress with the Gupta's request to land the aircraft carrying their guests. Ambassador Koloane relayed to Mr Ramagoma that he was "under pressure from No. 1" (alleged to be former President Jacob Zuma) on the matter. Mr Ramagoma stated that he was not in a position to respond at that time. The following day, Mr Ramagoma met with Mr Chawla to inform him that the Minister had denied permission for the aircraft carrying wedding guests to land at the Waterkloof Base.

13.8 On 4 April 2013, Mr Chawla then liaised with individuals in the Indian High Commission for assistance, resulting in a faxed letter being sent by the Indian High Commission at 15h38 to the Air Command Unit at the Air Force Command Post for Overflight and Landing Clearance for a "Chartered Flight" at the Waterkloof Base. The Chartered Flight was described by the Indian High Commission as a "Delegation Visit".

13.9 On 9 April 2013, Ambassador Koloane telephoned Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi at the Air Force Command Post to enquire as to progress with the clearance request from the Indian High Commission. Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi informed Ambassador Koloane that the Waterkloof Base could only receive flights transporting Heads of State and their Deputies. Ambassador Koloane responded that there would be "four to five Ministers on board". Ambassador Koloane added that the Minister of Transport, Mr Martins, had been given instructions by President Zuma to assist the Gupta family and that the Minister of Defence and Military Veterans had no objection to the landing of the aircraft at the Waterkloof Base. He also stated that at a meeting between Minister Martins, Mr Maseko and the Guptas, he had been instructed to assist the Gupta family and that the case of the landing of the aircraft at the Waterkloof Base was a unique case.

13.10 Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi requested a note or a letter from Ambassador Koloane. Ambassador Koloane responded that "the challenge was that this could not be put in writing". Ambassador Koloane informed Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi that he had met with Lt. Col. Anderson the previous week to show them around the area; and that Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi should contact Lt. Col. Anderson to confirm this. Ambassador Koloane confirmed in conversation with Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi that the request for the aircraft to land was for "the Gupta family wedding". Ambassador Koloane then instructed Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi to call him back.

13.11 Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi then telephoned Lt. Col. Anderson to enquire about the 217 Indian delegates that were requesting to land at the Waterkloof Base. Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi was then informed that Lt. Col. Anderson was not available and would return his call. Lt. Col. Anderson returned Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi's call. Lt. Col. Anderson stated that she had just spoken to Ambassador Koloane, who had informed her that Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi had rejected the request for the aircraft to land at the Waterkloof Base. Lt. Col. Anderson questioned Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi as to how he could have refused such a request from the Chief of State Protocol, Ambassador Koloane. In reply, Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi clarified that he had requested written confirmation from Ambassador Koloane. Lt. Col. Anderson then stated:

> I must be very careful now, our Number 1 knows about this. It is political. Allow them. Phone the Ambassador back to find out who's the senior Minister". It transpired later, in the testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, that Ambassador Koloane had said to her that the President had asked if everything was on track for the landing.

13.12 The Presidency subsequently, on 13 May 2013, denied that the President had given any instructions, or received any request, about a landing at the Base.

13.13 Sgt, Maj. Ntshisi then asked Lt. Col. Anderson to confirm that the Waterkloof Base could only receive flights carrying Heads of State and Ministers. Lt. Col. Anderson in response stated that it depended on the visit type, and that it would be acceptable for a private visit if DIRCO approved.

13.14 Ambassador Koloane then called Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi and stated to him: "I believe you have spoken to Col. Anderson?" Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi confirmed this and stated to Ambassador Koloane that he would go ahead with the clearance immediately. Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi then inquired from Ambassador Koloane whether he should fax the clearance to Mr Matjila, the Directorate State Visits at DIRCO. In response, Ambassador Koloane instructed Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi to e-mail a copy of the clearance for the aircraft to land to his private e-mail address and to his official e-mail address.

13.15 Ambassador Koloane then called Mr Matjila, instructing him to assist with the clearance of the Indian delegation. In response to the request for a letter from Sgt. Maj. Ntshisi, Mr Matjila forwarded an e-mail sent to him by Ambassador Koloane's secretary, Ms. Morris. It stated: "As per your discussion with Ambassador Koloane with regards (sic) to the request for flight clearances and landing at Waterkloof AFB for the Indian Delegation, kindly note that Ambassador Koloane telephonically approved the request". Mr William Matjila forwarded this e-mail to various recipients within State Protocol at DIRCO.

13.16 A flight clearance certificate was eventually signed by Lieutenant S J van Zyl who had the authority to clear flights for the Base. He did so on the strength of various documents presented to him, and after talking to people at the Base. The clearance certificate indicated that an 'Indian Delegation' was the requestor.

13.17 On 9 April 2013, Captain Kutty of the Indian High Commission forwarded a request titled "Fuelling Requirement: VVIP Chartered Flight at AFB Waterkloof" to the Air Force Command Post requesting forty tonnes of fuel for "refuelling of the VVIP chartered aircraft" and requesting that this be included in the request for overflight landing and clearance.

13.18 On the same day, Lt. Col. S.J. van Zyl signed RSA05 External Clearance on the strength of the documentation received and conversations conducted that morning. The clearance was sent to Air Traffic Navigation Services (ATNS), the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), the Department of Transport (DOT), the Department of Home Affairs (DHA), the Chief of Joint Operations, DIRCO and a Senior Staff Officer.

13.19 On 19 April 2013, the SAPS Provincial Commissioner of the North-West Province, Lt. Gen. Mbombo, received a letter from Ms. Ronica Ragavan, representing the Gupta family, requesting protection for the convoys that would be travelling from the Waterkloof base to Sun City.

13.20 On 22 April 2013, Sun City Security applied to the SAPS for an Event Risk Categorisation. The request was from Mr Claud Home, the Security Manager at the Entertainment Centre at the Sun City Resort. The application was forwarded to the Cluster Commander, Maj. Gen. P. Asaneng, and by the Provincial Commissioner to the North-West Province Crime Intelligence and Operational Response Services. On hearing about the nature of the visit, the Provincial Commissioner turned down the request, and also declined to attend the wedding as a guest.

13.21 A second application that emphasised the attendance of Indian Ministers at the wedding was then presented. The applicant requested that the event be categorised as High Risk; but the Deputy Provincial Commissioner: Operational Services, Maj. Gen. Mpembe, categorised the event as "Medium Risk" on 25 April 2013.

13.22 On 23 April 2013, the Waterkloof Base was informed by fax of the arrival information of the Jet Airways flight.

13.23 On 24 April 2013 the Indian High Commission requested Ambassador Koloane to assist with arranging the reception and logistics at the base. On the same day, Ambassador Koloane met with Lt. Col. Anderson and an individual in the Indian High Commission at the base to discuss arrangements in preparation for the arrival of the aircraft at the Waterkloof Base.

13.24 On 25 April 2013, an individual at the Indian High Commission sent the Air Force Command Post a written request for "Permission for Private Helicopters and Chartered Flights" to land at the Waterkloof Base. The request stated that the aircraft would be required to ferry the delegation from the Waterkloof Base to Sun City on 30 April 2013, and back again on 3 May 2013. Tail and registration numbers for the seven helicopters and two fixed-wing aircraft were provided.

13.25 A SAPS report stated that on 25 April 2013 the SAPS Cluster Commander, Maj. Gen. Asaneng, convened the Operation Bojanala and South African Music Awards plenary meeting at Sun City to initiate security planning. An Operational Plan with serial number 44/2013 dated 25 April 2013 was compiled. It was recorded that Maj. Gen. Asaneng would liaise directly with Maj. Gen. Gera of Gauteng SAPS to arrange for assistance. Gauteng Province did not develop an operational plan.

13.26 On 26 April 2013, the loadmasters were briefed in their regular daily meeting by Lt. Col. Anderson on the arrival of the VIP flight from India on 30 April 2013. Lt. Col. Anderson then subsequently briefed the Officer Commanding Air Force Base Waterkloof, Brig. Gen. T.S. Madumane, to the effect that a VIP aircraft from India would be arriving on 30 April 2013 with Ministers on board. Brig. Gen. T.S. Madumane directed that the visitors should be accorded the requisite protocols as he would be on leave.

13.27 On 29 April 2013, the Air Force Command Post issued RSA04 Internal Clearance for the helicopters and the fixed-wing aircraft. On the same day, Jet Airways lodged a flight plan for flight JAI 9900 through the Civil Aviation Briefing Office at Indira Gandhi International Airport, New Delhi. The flight plan was addressed to all air traffic control authorities that would handle the flight from departure from New Delhi to arrival at the Waterkloof Base. Letters of Procedure were provided to the Beira (Mozambique), Johannesburg and Waterkloof Air Traffic Service Units (ATSUs) to coordinate the transfer of control of the aircraft amongst themselves. The lounges at the Waterkloof Base were decorated by an unvetted private company in preparation for the arrival of Flight JAI 9900.

13.28 On 29 April 2013, the SAPS Joint Operational Commander, Lt. Col. Du Plooy, activated the Event Safety and Security Planning Committee (ESSPC) and all relevant role players as the plan went operational in keeping with the Standard Operating Procedures.

13.29 On 30 April 2013, the aircraft landed at the Waterkloof Base along with seven helicopters and two fixed wing aircrafts. The operating agent, BidAir, placed the stairs against the aircraft and positioned its loadmasters to receive the baggage. Health procedures were conducted by Deputy Director Ockert Jacobs of Gauteng Port Health. A reception had been arranged at the entrance to the Waterkloof base lounges consisting of music and dancing, and refreshments were being served to the passengers who had just arrived.

13.30 Col. Visser was on duty to receive VIP's that supposedly were to disembark from the aircraft. Two red carpets were laid out at the entrances to the lounges. No VIPs were identified from all the passengers who had disembarked. Col. Visser ended up greeting everybody who greeted him. No DIRCO protocol officers were present.

13.31 The National Immigration Branch of the Department of Home Affairs processed the passports of the disembarked passengers. This was done at the immigration counters, with Lt. Col. Anderson and two members of the delegation bringing the passports to the Immigration Officers, without the passengers physically being present to present their own respective passports.

13.32 According to the Flight Sgt. Van Bentheim and the SAPS report, the helicopters, fixed-wing aircraft and vehicles left the base. The vehicles were divided into four convoys of fifteen vehicles each, with one police vehicle to lead the convoy and one traffic vehicle at the rear. Members of the SAPS Flying Squad were present outside the Waterkloof Base.

13.33 SAPS Gauteng deployed 31 cars and 62 members for route security. Gauteng Province developed a highway patrol matrix to guide the process. Extraordinary deployments were made that necessitated the utilisation of members who were not on duty. These additional deployments, which were not planned for, cost the department approximately R47 000. The Gauteng Province SAPS provided route security from OR Tambo International Airport and Air Force Base Waterkloof up to the boundary with the North-West Province at the Brits Toll Plaza. The North-West Province Flying Squad, consisting of five cars and six members, were deployed from North-West to Sun City.

13.34 On 2 May 2013, the Jet Airways Airbus A330-200 was moved from the Waterkloof Base to O.R. Tambo International Airport on the instructions of Ms Mapisa-Nqakula, the Minister of Defence and Military Veterans. The transfer was done in accordance with normal procedure, and the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) imposed a fine of R80 000 on the airline for the flight not having had a Foreign Operators Permit.

13.35 On the same day, the DG of DIRCO had a telephone discussion with the Indian High Commissioner, Mr V Gupta. The High Commissioner stated that there were no Union (National) Ministers on the flight, but only state ministers. He further informed the DG that the Gupta family had not asked him to assist with the arrangements for the visiting delegation.

13.36 On 3 May 2013, the DG of DIRCO again called in the Indian High Commissioner to discuss circumstances and procedures followed regarding the landing. It was pointed out to the High Commissioner that a Note Verbale had not been presented prior to the landing, which was consistent with diplomatic protocol.

13.37 Six check-in counters were set aside at O.R. Tambo International Airport to process the visitors who had previously landed at Waterkloof Base. Immigration procedures were complied with, except that the seven state ministers had left on a chartered flight to Cape Town and would leave on a commercial Emirates flight to return to India. It was also determined that one of the visitors originally listed as crew had in fact not yet left South Africa at the time of the investigations.

FINDINGS OF THE INVESTIGATION PANEL

14. The investigation panel found that Mr Tony Gupta's direct approach and request for the use of a strategic entry point for a wedding was improper because it amounted to a request for untoward assistance to the Gupta family. Moreover, the investigation panel concluded that the subsequent interaction on 2 April 2013 between Ambassador Bruce Koloane, Chief of State Protocol, and the Political Advisor to the Minister of Defence and Military Veterans on the wedding of the Gupta family was also improper.

15. Furthermore, during the interactions in these meetings, Ambassador Koloane abused the name of the President of the Republic in an effort to exert pressure for the aircraft to land at the Waterkloof Base and that in itself amounted to misrepresentation. Moreover, the involvement of Mr Chawla, which led to abuse of the diplomatic channel, was a deliberate manipulation of the system to further wedding objectives couched as official business.

16. In addition, the investigation panel found that the collusion between Mr Chawla and an individual in the Indian High Commission to abuse the diplomatic channel to request flight clearance on 4 April 2013 was of great concern, and improper in many respects. Firstly, the Indian High Commission failed to provide a Note Verbale to DIRCO, and that that was a serious infringement of diplomatic protocol. Secondly, the request was one for "Diplomatic Overflight and Landing Clearance"; that amounted to a misrepresentation of the nature of the visit. Thirdly, the purpose of the flight was listed as "Delegation Visit"; that was again a misrepresentation of what the actual purpose of the visit was.

17. It was further found that it was not normal practice for Ambassador Koloane as the Chief of State Protocol to interact directly with the Waterkloof Base Command Post to enquire as to progress with a specific clearance. Secondly, Ambassador Koloane had stated that there would be four to five Ministers on the flight; this was a misrepresentation of the facts, as the Ministers in question were State Ministers, the equivalent of Members of the Executive Council (MEC) in South Africa, not national Ministers which could have been accorded a different status. Thirdly, Ambassador Koloane had used the names of the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Defence and Military Veterans, and the President in an effort to put pressure on the Command Post to issue the clearance. They found that such conduct by Ambassador Koloane was improper and inappropriate and amounted to abuse of the political clout and office of members of the National Executive.

18. The investigation panel found that SARS had not been present at the arrival of the aircraft at Waterkloof Base, which was also improper.

19. The investigation panel further found that the actions of the individual from the Indian High Commission who requested Ambassador Koloane on 24 April 2013 to facilitate arrangements for the reception at the Waterkloof base amounted to a major security violation, particularly because the company involved in preparing celebrations at the Waterkloof Base had not been vetted.

20. It was found by the investigation panel that on 25 April 2013, an individual in the Indian High Commission applied for clearances for helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft as a continuation of a cover up of an official delegation that did not in fact exist. The officer responsible had approved the landing as this was part of the so-called 'diplomatic package', and that in itself had the potential of compromising national security.

21. In their findings the investigation panel stated that the collusion of officials in permitting and facilitating the landing of the flight from India resulted in numerous irregularities and an abuse of official authority. However, none of the findings indicated that there was any inducement or gain given to any member of the National Executive or office bearer. The only officials who clearly misled others to facilitate the landing, the welcoming of the wedding guests and the irregularities attendant on the convoy of vehicles from the Base to Sun City, were Ambassador Koloane and Lieutenant Colonel Anderson.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE COMMISSION

22. We shall not discuss the evidence of every witness, but only that which is relevant to the Commission's Terms of Reference. The first oral evidence given to the Commission relevant to the TORs was that of Major Thabo Ntshisi. His evidence was not helpful. He alleged that he had been reluctant to issue the flight clearance certificate requested by Ambassador Koloane for the flight carrying Indian guests without a written Note Verbale, but had eventually done so under pressure from the latter and when he received the email from Ambassador Koloane's secretary saying that the clearance had been authorised, and after speaking to Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson. He did not have the authority to issue the clearance certificate himself, but he had advised Lieutenant Colonel Van Zyl (who was newly in his position at the Base) that it should be issued.

23. Ultimately Major Ntshisi's evidence amounts to no more than this: he facilitated the issue of the flight clearance certificate only because he was pressured to do so by Ambassador Koloane and Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, who had both given him the impression that the President of the Republic at the time had authorised the process. He had in turn misled Lieutenant Colonel Van Zyl, and Mr William Matjila.

24. General D M Mgwebi subsequently testified that Major Ntshisi had deliberately misled various officials: General Mgwebi had made that finding when presiding over a disciplinary hearing convened by the SANDF. General Mgwebi claimed not to have known of the landing at the base until it had happened, and blamed lack of communication and the con-compliance with rules for the unauthorised landing of the flight. He had recommended that Major Ntshisi and Lieutenant Anderson be disciplined for "colluding and assisting with the approval to land knowing very well that doing so was unlawful. Charges of misuse of state property and corruption should also be laid against them".

25. Mr Matjila, who has a very long career as a diplomat, testified as to the standard procedure to be followed when there is a request from a foreign mission for the landing of foreign aircraft and that these procedures were not followed for the flight carrying the guests attending the wedding. The first time Mr Matjila heard about the Waterkloof Landing was through the press on the day of landing – 30 April 2013. The following day Mr Matiila was advised of the meeting of the JCPS cluster principals, and he asked for a briefing from the DIRCO spokesperson: he invited Ambassador Koloane to attend the meeting since so much had been said about his role in the saga by the media. Mr Matiila also called Mr V Gupta, the high commissioner of India, to establish whether there were Union Ministers aboard the aircraft.

26. Mr Matjila then testified as to the decision to follow disciplinary procedures against Ambassador Koloane. A special hearing was convened by DIRCO, following the recommendations of the report of the investigation panel (referred to above). The charges laid against Ambassador Koloane were: that (1) in the period between February and April 2013 he had abused diplomatic channels and had facilitated an illegal request for the landing of an international aircraft at the Waterkloof Base on 30 April 2013; (2) he had misrepresented facts in an endeavour to procure the unlawful landing; and (3) he had compromised the process and procedures of DIRCO in that no request had been properly made and the required interdepartmental coordination process had not taken place.

27. Ambassador Koloane pleaded guilty to the charges. Following the recommendation made by the committee that heard the charges, the sanction imposed on Ambassador Koloane was, as an alternative to dismissal, suspension without pay, for a period of two months. However, the infractions were serious because Ambassador Koloane caused embarrassment to the Republic and abused diplomatic channels.

28. Ambassador Koloane was not a credible witness. He evaded questions posed at the Commission and denied having suggested to anyone that President Zuma knew about the proposed landing of the flight from India at the Waterkloof Base. A clear example of his evasion was in relation to the email sent by his secretary to Mr W Matjila stating that the flight had been approved. He tried to obfuscate the questions asked of him by the Chairperson of the Commission and the evidence leader. He then denied that he had asked his secretary to communicate authorisation to Mr Matjila. All that Ambassador Koloane had said to her, he claimed, was that she should push "them" to process the request.

29. As to the meeting earlier in the year at O.R. Tambo, which was attended by Mr Tony Gupta, Ambassador Koloane alleged that his memory had faded, but that he did recall that at the meeting Mr Gupta said there would be wedding guests aboard the flight, some of whom would be 'Ministers' and possibly one of the 'Vice Presidents' of India. Ambassador Koloane could not, however, deny the veracity of a recording of a phone call between Major Ntshisi and himself in which he had explained to the Major that he could not put the request in writing. Major Ntshisi said that Colonel Anderson was in charge of the Base. Ambassador Koloane then reminded Major Ntshisi that people representing the Indian delegation had met Colonel Anderson at the Base and said that a few Ministers would be on board to attend the Gupta wedding.

30. Later, Ambassador Koloane admitted to "name dropping", presumably in respect of then President Zuma, but that, he had done so purely to push officials who were "supposed to process the flight clearance to do their job" – to process the flight. But he insisted that no one in a position of power, such as a Minister or President Zuma, had asked him to act in this way. Using their offices and names was an error of judgement on his part. Ambassador Koloane accepted that he had been wrong to use the names of Ministers and President Zuma because it could have tainted their reputations.

31. Lieutenant Colonel Anderson deposed to several affidavits regarding the landing, the first to the Board of Inquiry convened by the SANDF and then for the Commission. She described the events preceding the landing of the flight in these affidavits.

32. On a Sunday night sometime in March or April 2013, Ambassador Koloane had phoned Lt. Col. Anderson to enquire whether the Waterkloof Base had the capacity for the landing of an Airbus A330. Ambassador Koloane told Lt. Col. Anderson that there would be a 'cultural event' following the landing of the aircraft, which had 'two ministers' on board and that 'Number One' had knowledge of the flight proposed. Lt. Col. Anderson understood the term 'Number One' to refer to President Jacob Zuma.

33. Lt. Col. Anderson had advised Ambassador Koloane that it was possible for the aircraft to land but that an overflight clearance (a landing authority) was required for landing at the Base. Ambassador Koloane had said that he would start the process of obtaining the clearance from the Airforce Command at the Waterkloof Base.

34. On 2 April 2013 a gentleman who Lt. Col. Anderson thought was named 'Mr Ashuc', and two others, visited him at the Base and she escorted them through the lounges. They told Lieutenant Colonel Anderson that there would be about 150 to 200 people on board the flight. After some discussion it was agreed that the passengers could use the two lounges and a reception area. Lt. Col. Anderson was advised that once the immigration process was finalised the passengers would be escorted to Sun City.

35. In mid-April 2013, Ambassador Koloane phoned Lieutenant Colonel Anderson and said that he had been asked by President Zuma if the flight "was still on track". She responded that once flight clearance had been obtained "we would be able to finalise the movements of the passengers".

36. Ambassador Koloane had phoned Lt. Col. Anderson again two days later and advised that the passengers would not be taken in buses to Sun City. At that stage no flight clearance had been obtained. Ambassador Koloane had then made an appointment to see her at the Base on 22 April 2013, and he had arrived with Mr Ashuc and two women. Lt. Col. Anderson had shown them the arrival and departure procedures. That afternoon, she had spoken to her Commanding Officer, Brigadier General Madumane, and had advised him that the overflight clearances for the international flight had not yet been obtained.

37. Lt. Col. Anderson had received clearances for the flight from India and for the local aircraft that were to land and depart with the passengers to Sun City on 23 and 25 April, respectively. The aircraft from India, and the other national aircraft and helicopters for shuttling passengers, had arrived early in the morning of 30 April 2013

38. In 2019, in response to a request from the Commission and questions sent to her, she confirmed the contents of her affidavit deposed to in May 2013. She denied allegations about what she had done in preparation for the landing on 30 April 2013. Lt. Col. Anderson also denied that she had done anything to pressure Major Ntshisi into unlawfully issuing a flight clearance for the flight from India that landed at the Waterkloof Base.

39. In her oral testimony to the Commission, Lt. Col. Anderson (represented by a legal practitioner), said that she had ascertained that Mr Ashuc was Mr Ashuk Chawla, employed by a company associated with the Gupta family. She had believed at the time of the proposed landing that he was a Protocol Officer at DIRCO. She had also believed that there was nothing untoward about Ambassador Koloane's requests: she was told that there were wedding guests on board the flight. But it was not her job to question the purpose of passengers. When questioned by the evidence leader and the Commission Chairperson, she admitted that she had realised that the landing of the flight from India at the Base was not lawful. But that realisation has struck her, she said, only when she heard press reports.

40. Lieutenant Colonel Anderson accepted that she had been pressured by Ambassador Koloane to put procedures in motion for the improper landing of the flight at the Waterkloof Base.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

41. The Commission finds that the investigation conducted by the JCPS Cluster team into the Waterkloof landing and its findings were credible and that the subsequent evidence led before the hearing, in particular by Ms Nonkululeko Sindane, the Director-General of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development, confirmed those findings. This is relevant to Clause 1.6 of the Terms of Reference in that there was undue influence on DIRCO and the officials stationed at the Air Force Base to accommodate the business dealings, in this case, the wedding delegation of the Gupta family.

42. From the evidence considered above, it is not possible to make any clear finding that the Waterkloof Landing was the result of "any form of inducement or gain" by any member of the National Executive. We conclude that the officials at the Base had not complied with the SAAF's procedures and that the flight clearance was given as a result of misrepresentations by Major Ntshisi, who in turn was pressured by Ambassador Koloane. This misconduct calls for no further action.

43. Ambassador Koloane was guilty of abuse of diplomatic channels. Whether any member of the National Executive was in some way involved in the process did not emerge at the Commission.

44. Ambassador Koloane's evidence was in places incoherent and in several respects contradictory: the best example is his denial of having "name dropped" on the first day that he testified at the Commission. After listening to tape recordings of his telephone conversations with Major Ntshisi overnight, he suddenly recalled that he had referred to ministers and former President Zuma. Ambassador Koloane had done so simply to put pressure on the Major and others to expedite the proceedings, he asserted, and apologised for his mistakes.

45. In the Commission's view, it is not possible to find that Ambassador Koloane, or any official whom he had pressured, acted because of the 'capture' of any officer or institution of the State. At worst, his conduct, and the lapses in procedure by the officials at the Base, brought embarrassment to the Government and to the country. At best, the Waterkloof Landing, for which he was responsible, brought to the attention of the media and the wider public how the Gupta family was able to influence officers of the State to facilitate their private affairs.

PRASA

INTRODUCTION

1. The Passenger Rail Agency of South Africa (Prasa) is not specifically mentioned in the Public Protector's "State of Capture" Report (2 November 2016) that led to the appointment of the Zondo Commission. However, the Commission was delegated to inquire into, make findings, report and make recommendations on the nature and extent of corruption, if any, in the award of contracts and tenders to companies, business entities or organisations by Government agencies and entities. As a result of quite serious allegations, including of corruption, received by the Commission in respect of Prasa, extensive evidence was led on alleged wrongdoing at Prasa.
2. Fifteen months prior to releasing her State of Capture Report, Adv Thuli Madonsela had released her earlier report Derailed into an investigation she conducted into Prasa, which made several findings of maladministration. The report required the chairperson of Prasa's Board of Control (the Board) is to support a forensic investigation by National Treasury, to be commissioned by Prasa's Acting Group CEO, into all Prasa contracts above R10 million since 2012.
3. Two general themes that emerge from that evidence were that (i) influential individuals and/or entities, were permitted to benefit unduly in respect of the procurement of goods and services by Prasa, and employees who did not toe the line were victimised or "hounded out", as was Prasa's Board, when it sought to instil a "cleaner culture"; and (ii) Prasa was so "deeply and systemically captured" that a few courageous women and men who tried, were unable to stop the rot because those who wielded public power were obstructive and/or refused to assist, or simply stood by when there was a duty, whether constitutional, legal or moral, to assist the Board.
4. Prasa has been the subject of numerous adverse media reports. After the Commission was established, people with relevant knowledge were asked to present this to the Commission, but few did so.
5. On 1 August 2014, a new Board of Control took office at Prasa. Although some members of the old Board were re-appointed, most were new appointees. Veteran ANC leader Mr Popo Molefe was appointed Chairperson of the new Board when Mr Lucky Montana was Prasa's Group CEO. According to Mr Molefe, the new Board set about understanding how Prasa worked and perhaps how it could be improved.
6. However, the new Board soon began to experience challenges in discharging its responsibilities, encountering obstacles and resistance, from Mr Montana and others, to changes it considered were required for it to fulfil its weighty obligations. The obstacles and resistance, some direct others more subtle, were widespread but manifested themselves especially in respect of the procurement of goods and services.
7. Within a few months of taking office, the new Board declined to approve the award of two contracts, with a combined value of more than R4 billion, to service providers whom a sub-committee of the Board had recommended be the preferred bidders. Not long thereafter, the Board became aware that in her Interim Report, prior to the release of Derailed, the PP had made findings of serious maladministration at Prasa.
8. Mr Montana who, according to Mr Molefe, appeared to view the new Board with suspicion, told it in March 2015 that he would be leaving Prasa when his contract expired in mid-July 2015. By then,

Mr Montana's relationship with the Board and especially Mr Molefe, was strained and on a sharp downward spiral, evolving into acrimony even in the public space.

9. In July/ August 2015, it was reported to Mr Molefe that Mr Auswell Mashaba, the chairperson of the company that in July 2012 had been declared by the previous Board the preferred bidder to supply locomotives to Prasa at a cost of some R3.5 billion, had alleged that, after his company had been awarded the contract, he had been directed to, and did, pay R79 million to persons who were to pay the money over to the ANC. As Mr Molefe regarded himself as a "deployee" of the ANC, he felt constrained to raise this bombshell allegation with the ANC. Seemingly on account of his weighty political profile, Mr Molefe was granted an audience with the ANC's "Top Six". Mr Molefe told the meeting that he saw himself as having been deployed by the ANC as the Chair of Prasa's Board. He had therefore expected the ANC leadership to come to their defence when he and his Board were attacked by alleged wrongdoers such as Mr Montana.

10. Disappointed by the lack of support from ANC leadership, the Molefe Board nevertheless used its statutory powers to clean up Prasa, as evidenced by the Final Report of the Public Protector and an earlier direction by the Auditor-General, that forensic investigations should be conducted. The matters investigated by Werksmans Attorneys included the R3.5 billion locomotives contract awarded to Swifambo and R2.8 billion worth of contracts awarded irregularly to a long-standing service provider of Prasa. The contracts were found to have been tainted by irregularities and corruption and were accordingly reviewed and set aside by the High Court.

11. Whilst the ANC Top Six had been non-committal, other entities obstructed the Board's efforts. Parliament's Portfolio Committee on Transport attacked the Board for revealing in the Swifambo review papers the allegation that the ANC had been a beneficiary of the Prasa-Swifambo contract. ANC members of that Committee alleged that the Board was paying too much to Werksmans for the investigations. The Molefe Board was rendered dysfunctional before its term of office formally ended on 31 July 2017.

12. Mr Molefe was mystified by the ANC's and the Government's reaction to what the Board uncovered, as well as the appointment only of Acting GCEOs after Mr Montana's departure in July 2015, and interim Boards after 31 July 2017. Prasa thus lacked a permanent GCEO for nearly six years and a permanent Board for three years.

13. Mr Montana challenged Mr Molefe's contention that he was attempting to clean up Prasa, alleging that it was a personal vendetta. Nonetheless, much of the evidence was based on documents and affidavits. In judgments they handed down in review applications to set aside the multi-billion Rand Swifambo and Siyangena contracts, courts found that the procurement processes followed were irregular and tainted by corruption.

14. The focus hereunder will be on 1. the extent of maladministration or corruption at Prasa; and 2. the failure to provide appropriate assistance to the Board when steps were taken to address the wrongdoing.

15. With that in mind, a useful approach to the evidence, is to trace the sequence of events following the inception of the Molefe Board, the deterioration of its relationship with Mr Montana, the Board's clean-up process, the maladministration and corruption uncovered, and the reasons that the clean-up efforts did not succeed.

16. In light of the foregoing, the issues considered are the following.

    16.1 As regards Mr Molefe: his evidence about the state of affairs at Prasa soon after his Board was appointed; the deterioration of his relationship with Mr Montana; his notice to the ANC's Top Six of problems at Prasa; an alleged effort by former President Jacob Zuma to have Mr Montana back at the helm of Prasa; and the mechanisms used to obstruct the Molefe Board's clean-up attempt.

    16.2 In light of the fact that it provides a concrete basis for the concerns that Mr Molefe had "inherited", there is a quite extensive consideration of the irregularities that plagued the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo and reports prepared thereon by a forensic investigator and by the liquidators of Swifambo.

16.3 A consideration of the irregularities and improprieties surrounding the award of certain contracts to Siyangena and the findings of the Full Bench of the North Gauteng High Court in the application that Prasa instituted to have the contracts reviewed and set aside.

16.4 The sale of a property by Mr Montana to a lawyer who had acted for Siyangena and the funding for the purchase of three properties which Mr Montana had expressed an interest in purchasing, one of which he did purchase and was transferred into his name.

16.5 Evidence by senior members of Prasa's internal legal section on the consequences that they suffered after they opposed attempts to unduly benefit entities in which Mr Roy Moodley had an interest.

16.6 The role of the chairperson of the Interim Board that was appointed a few weeks after Mr Molefe's Board left office, in seeking unduly to benefit Mr Makhensa Mabunda, a known associate of Mr Montana.

16.7 The failure, until recently, to appoint a permanent Board and a permanent CEO.

16.8 The appointment of Werksmans to conduct forensic investigations.

MR MOLEFE'S EVIDENCE

Introductory matters

17. Prasa's main object and business is to provide rail and bus passenger services in the public interest and to generate income from the exploitation of its assets. Prasa is funded by National Treasury, through allocations made to the Department of Transport. Prasa's Board is its accounting authority. As an organ of state, Prasa is required to procure good and services in compliance with s 217 of the Constitution and other applicable statutory and regulatory measures as well as its own SCM processes and procedures. But, because of "its being captured" for many years, it failed to deliver on its mandates.

18. Mr Molefe said that his experience at Prasa equipped him to assist the Commission to better understand the different strategies that were used by those involved in state capture. He was of the view that Prasa was one of the state institutions identified for state capture, particularly in the awarding of lucrative tenders. Irregularities in the award of tenders occurred because [lower] decision-makers were made vulnerable by the manipulations of those who were at the heart of the capture of Prasa, or simply permitted it as they were afraid of the consequences of being seen to be "opposed" to the senior management at Prasa. Individuals and institutions with the duty to protect Prasa and the vulnerable, failed to do so and thus allowed the capture of Prasa to succeed, to the advantage of certain individuals and the entities associated with them.

19. It was Mr Molefe's experience that the captors targeted decision makers, so that they could direct contracts, and ultimately money, to favoured companies or individuals. An example was Mr Roy Moodley, a known associate of former President Jacob Zuma, dealt with in more detail below.

20. Mr Molefe said that at his first meeting with Mr Montana, Mr Montana told him that he had told the previous Chairperson of the Board, Mr Sifiso Buthelezi that he intended to resign from his position of GCEO. Mr Molefe said that he told Mr Montana that he expected him to stay for a while, as Prasa was in the process of carrying out its modernisation programme, which would entail a spend of some R172 billion over forty years and envisaged the replacement of aged trains, coaches and locomotives with new ones; delivering a better quality of service to commuters; renovating train stations and other infrastructure; and installing a modern signalling system.

The initial problems

21. The problems in the relationship between Mr Montana, on the one hand, and the Board and Mr Molefe, on the other, began to manifest themselves soon after the abovementioned meeting took place. Among those problems were the following:

    21.1 Most of the major contracts had already been concluded; when the Molefe Board asked for details and the status of these contracts, Mr Montana proved uncooperative

    21.2 Audits of the financial statements for the previous and following years indicated a steep rise in irregular expenditure

    21.3 Many of Prasa's departments were dysfunctional

    21.4 Its controls were weak or non-existent and many employees in strategic positions lacked the requisite skills; and

    21.5 There were serious labour issues, with employees being suspended or dismissed only for the decisions to be successfully challenged, and Prasa being required to find funds, not budgeted for, to compensate these employees.

22. Mr Montana disputed each of these allegations, saying that during his nine years of heading Prasa, it had not had a qualified audit. In respect of suspensions, he said he was being blamed for what had been done by other managers. In one case the Labour Appeal Court had reinstated 500 dismissed employees because Prasa under Mr Molefe had not properly opposed the appeal, which, he alleged, had cost Prasa about R1 billion. He also alleged that he and Mr Molefe had had a good relationship until November 2014. He said that the fall-out between them was not because the Board had tried to hold management accountable, but because he [Mr Montana] had instructed Prasa not to pay one of its contractors, SA Fence and Gate (Pty) Ltd, to terminate Prasa's contract with the company and to recover all monies from it. He alleged that SA Fence and Gate had sponsored a golf day hosted by Mr Molefe's Foundation, the Popo Molefe Foundation, which had received corrupt benefits from SA Fence and Gate. He asked the Commission to subpoena the accounts of Mr Molefe and his Foundation.

23. Mr Molefe responded to Mr Montana's allegations in respect of SA Fence and Gate in a later affidavit, saying that his Foundation is a Trust created for charitable purposes, one of which is to focus on the plight of disadvantaged youth; the Trust is independently audited; and its bank and other accounts are regulated by at least three of the Trustees. Regarding the Golf Day, Mr Molefe's affidavit said: SA Fence and Gate had purchased golf shirts, directly from the supplier, that had been used by the golfers on one of the two days of the event; it had however not donated any funds to the Foundation; there was no link between the purchase of the golf shirts and any contract or litigation between SA Fence and Gate and Prasa; and in any case the relationship between SA Fence and Gate and Prasa pre-dated his appointment to Prasa's Board. Mr Molefe also denied an allegation by Mr Montana that Prasa had not defended a claim brought against it by SA Fence and Gate and annexed papers that showed that Prasa had instituted a counter-claim against SA Fence and Gate for payment of some R45 million.

24. Mr Molefe's evidence continued as follows: at the Board's first substantive meeting, on 27 November 2014, Mr Buthelezi, then chairperson of the Board's FCIP, said he was resigning from the Board. However, the FCIP had recommended the appointment of service providers for two quite major contracts. The one was for the Braamfontein Depot Modernisation project and the other for the purchase of Rails and Turnouts, which the FCIP said were urgent. The tenders had a combined value of some R4 billion. Mr Molefe said that the Board was concerned that there was no probity report confirming that applicable procurement prescripts and processes had been properly followed. As a result, the Board gave only provisional approval in respect of the awards. Mr Montana assured the Board that the probity report would be made available to the Board, but it never was. It turned out that there could not have been such a report as the contract of the probity officer had expired at least one year earlier. Thereafter, Prasa's internal auditors had conducted a probity assessment of the tender processes and found that the SCM policy and the provisions of the PFMA had not been complied with. As a result, on 26 February 2015, the Board cancelled the award of the tenders and asked management to re-issue RFPs.

25. Conversely, Mr Montana contended that Mr Buthelezi had not pushed for the tenders to be awarded; he (Mr Montana) had not been asked for a probity report, which he accepted did not exist for the reason given by Mr Molefe; and although the awards of the tenders were cancelled, he alleged that it was not because of corruption but because the Molefe Board had "destroyed" Prasa in less than three years.

26. Reverting to Mr Molefe's evidence, he said that in December 2014 he became aware that the PP would soon release a report on her investigations into the affairs of Prasa, following complaints that had been lodged with her office. Her Interim Report had been shared with Prasa's management but the Board had not been told of its existence. Mr Montana confirmed receipt of the PPs Interim Report and at around that time, told the Board that, for personal reasons, he would not be renewing his contract on expiry in March 2015. The Board accepted Mr Montana's "resignation" but asked him to stay on while it searched for a replacement, and limited his powers.

27. Thereafter, at a meeting with Mr Molefe in Knysna on 4 April 2015, Mr Montana presented a "litany of complaints" about him and the new members of the Board, accusing them of conspiring with Minister Dipuo Peters to work against him and to get rid of him, an accusation Mr Molefe denied. Mr Montana said that Mr Molefe had "leaked" the PPs Interim Report to the press and had told Mr Molefe this at their Knysna meeting. The relationship between Mr Montana and the Molefe Board deteriorated further, spilling into the public arena with accusations against each other.

28. Mr Molefe's affidavit and evidence highlighted certain findings of the PP's Final Report and prescribed remedial actions. In particular, it was found that the scope of a number of tenders had been extended, which Adv Madonsela said constituted maladministration and improper conduct. In one case, a tender for two train stations was later improperly extended to seven stations.

29. The Public Protector's Report indicated that it had been difficult to get information from Prasa, which had delayed finalisation of this investigation lodged in 2012. Requests for documents yielded very few, yet Mr Montana said that the complainants could not provide documentary evidence on these allegations. The PP also found that Mr Montana suspended some employees without following proper disciplinary procedures, in contravention of Prasa's disciplinary code, resulting in fruitless expenditure.

30. Remedial actions that the PP said should be taken were that the Board should note the findings of maladministration and improper conduct by Mr Montana and others; report these to National Treasury and support a forensic investigation into all Prasa contracts above R10 million from 2012; and take appropriate measures to address the findings.

31. Mr Montana's reaction was that there were no findings of corruption and he had applied to the High Court for the Report to be reviewed and set aside. He said there was no connection between his resignation (March 2015) and the release of the Report (August 2015). He said Adv Madonsela did not have an "understanding" of Prasa and had applied inapplicable legal prescripts. Whereas she had dealt with only about half the complaints, the present Public Protector [Ms Busisiwe Mkhwebane] had dealt with the rest of the complaints and in her report had made only one adverse finding. Mr Montana denied that he had not co-operated with Adv Madonsela.

32. Around the time of the release of Derailed, Mr Molefe became aware that Mr Mashaba had, after Swifambo was awarded the R3.5 billion locomotives contract paid R79 million to people who then allegedly paid the money to the ANC. The meeting between Mr Molefe and the ANC's Top Six must be considered in this light.

Mr Molefe's meeting with the ANC's Top Six

33. Mr Molefe's meeting with the ANC Top Six took place in July or August 2015. It appears that the meeting was preceded by a meeting Mr Molefe had with the ANC's Treasury General Dr Zweli Mkhize, to discuss his concerns about the Mashaba payments and the contracts Prasa had awarded to companies connected with Mr Roy Moodley, such as Siyangena, Prodigy and Strawberry Worx. The only member of the Top Six who was not present at the meeting was party chairperson, Ms Baleka Mbete.

34. Mr Molefe said he told the five members of the Top Six who were present at the meeting that the ANC leadership had approved his [Mr Molefe's] appointment as Chair of Prasa's Board, in a sense deploying him there, yet none of them had defended him or the Board. Mr Molefe told them that he had been quiet for a long time, but he was going to use legal instruments with which the Board was armed, such as the PFMA.

35. At the meeting Mr Molefe raised the malfeasance and corruption at Prasa identified by the PP in her reports, involving R1,9 billion of contracts with Siyangena. As a result, his Board had initiated new procurement processes for contracts for the Braamfontein Depot Modernisation and the purchase of Rails and Turnouts, which together involved an amount of R4 billion. He said that following the award of the R3,5 billion locomotives contract to Swifambo, its chairperson, Mr Mashaba, had alleged that he paid money to people purporting to be collecting it on behalf of the ruling party.

36. Asked what the reaction of the Top Six was to the foregoing interaction with them, Mr Molefe said that they felt he had not given them enough time to think about what he had told them. They said that they would have another meeting, but there was no further meeting.

37. In his evidence on this issue, President Cyril Ramaphosa admitted that the meeting had taken place and that Mr Molefe had mentioned that he would utilise the PFMA against wrongdoers, with which the ANC leadership was satisfied. However, he denied that Mr Molefe had mentioned the alleged payment of R79 million to the ANC. He also denied that they had asked for more time to think about the issues raised at the meeting.

38. Mr Molefe referred to a further meeting relating to the dispute between Mr Montana and the Molefe Board, which took place at the Presidential Guest House in Pretoria.

The meeting with former President Zuma

39. Mr Molefe said that after the Board had accepted Mr Montana's "resignation", Mr Montana had publicly announced that, if the Minister and the Board wanted him back, he was available to stay on as Prasa's GCEO. Given the strained relationships and public acrimony, the Board declined his offer. According to Mr Molefe, in early August 2015 President Zuma and Minister Jeff Radebe (then the Minister in the Presidency) invited him to a meeting at the Presidential Guest House, together with Minister Peters and Mr Montana. The meeting took place on 20 August 2015. It started three hours late. Each of the attendees had a different version of what transpired at the meeting.

Mr Molefe's version

40. At the start of the meeting, only President Zuma, Minister Radebe, Minister Peters and Mr Molefe were present: Mr Montana was called in later. President Zuma expressed concern about the ongoing public conflict between Mr Molefe and Mr Montana. President Zuma said: "I have invited that boy, Lucky Montana", and asked Minister Radebe to call Mr Montana in. President Zuma then said that the public spat between Mr Molefe and Mr Montana was embarrassing to the ANC, of which both Mr Molefe and Mr Montana were members. He said that Mr Montana was very knowledgeable about commuter rail matters. He said the two should sort out their differences and that Mr Montana should be brought back as the GCEO of Prasa.

41. Mr Montana, who, according to Mr Molefe, appeared to have been briefed about the meeting, criticised the Board and Minister Peters, complaining that he had not been consulted before the Molefe Board had been appointed. Minister Peters pointed out that he was an employee of Prasa, with no right to be consulted on Board composition.

42. Mr Molefe invited President Zuma to address the Board and tell the Board why its acceptance of Mr Montana's "resignation" was "a problem". It did not please President Zuma that Mr Molefe was not prepared simply to reinstate Mr Montana. Mr Molefe said that at about 02:00 the meeting ended because President Zuma fell asleep. 43. Despite what President Zuma had said at the meeting, the Board did not re-visit its decision on Mr Montana's resignation. Mr Molefe said that President Zuma had described it the meetings as a meeting of "comrades of the ANC". However, Mr Molefe told the Commission that he was deeply concerned that the President of the country was personally interfering in the operations of Prasa.

Minister Peters's version

43. In her affidavit and evidence, Minister Peters said that the meeting had been arranged when she requested President Zuma to ask Mr Montana and Mr Molefe to stop their public spat. President Zuma told her that he knew that Minister Radebe was very close to Mr Montana and he would ask him to speak to Mr Montana. At the meeting, she had gained the impression that Mr Montana wanted his job back, but there was not "a conscious decision" by President Zuma that Mr Montana should return to Prasa.

44. She agreed with Mr Molefe that Mr Montana was not present when the meeting started and that the meeting had been inconclusive because the President had fallen asleep. She did not recall that President Zuma had said that Mr Montana was knowledgeable about rail matters. She agreed that Mr Molefe had invited President Zuma to address the Board on why it had agreed to release Mr Montana early but said that the invitation was also extended to enable President Zuma to "see" Prasa. She said she could understand the concern Mr Molefe had expressed about "interference" (by President Zuma in Prasa's affairs). She said that Mr Montana had spoken at length about why the organisation needed him. She confirmed that the meeting had ended at about 2 am.

Mr Montana's version

45. Mr Montana said he had no interest in going back to Prasa. He had been invited by President Zuma and Minister Radebe to the meeting after a public spat between him and Mr Molefe. He said that they were all present at the start of the meeting. He said that it was not the President, but Mr Molefe who had said he was very knowledgeable about the rail industry. After a while he and Mr Molefe were asked to leave the meeting because the President wanted to talk to the two Ministers. He denied that the President had said "bring Montana back". He said the meeting ended on "a very positive and a jovial note" when he and Mr Molefe left. It had lasted four to five hours, ending about midnight. He had not spoken for long. He denied he had compiled a document entitled "Prasa in Turmoil". He denied that the meeting ended because the former President dozed off. However, he accepted that "the war" between him and Mr Molefe continued after the meeting; and no clear pronouncement was made about "the outcome".

Minister Radebe's version

46. In Minister Radebe's affidavit, he said he had called the meeting because he was concerned about the public spat between Mr Montana and Mt Molefe. He had asked President Zuma to intervene, and had invited Mr Montana, Mr Molefe and Minister Peters. He said, "The meeting was cordial and the resolution amicable to the satisfaction of everyone at the meeting, including Mr Molefe." He added that it was regrettable that Mr Molefe now painted a different picture. He said the meeting finished before midnight, not at 2am. He denied that President Zuma wanted Mr Montana reinstated; or that he [President Zuma] had fallen asleep during the meeting.

Brief analysis

47. The versions of Mr Molefe and Mr Montana differ in some material respects. The version of Minister Peters lends some support to that of Mr Molefe, while the version of Minister Radebe lends some support to that of Mr Montana. The critical issues are the reasons for the meeting and whether it ended amicably.

48. The Montana-Radebe version is that the meeting was called to end the public spat between Mr Montana and Mr Molefe; and it ended amicably. While Mr Molefe interpreted the purpose of the meeting as to get the Prasa Board to take Mr Montana back, Minister Peters was of the view that Mr Montana used the meeting to make a case for his return to Prasa. Both agreed that Mr Molefe had invited President Zuma to address the Board for only one purpose: to give President Zuma an opportunity to persuade the Board to retract its acceptance of Mr Montana's resignation. That the "war" between Mr Montana and Mr Molefe did not end after the meeting (as acknowledged by Mr Montana), suggests strongly that the meeting did not end on a positive note (Montana- Radebe version). The continuation of the "war" supports the Molefe-Peters version that the meeting ended inconclusively – and when President Zuma fell asleep.

49. President Zuma did not testify or respond to Mr Molefe's affidavit or evidence. Accordingly, his version is not known. That this meeting took place about a week after Mr Molefe's meeting with the ANC's Top Six, at which President Zuma was present, suggests a link between the two meetings. President Zuma was in a position to answer that, but he chose not to do so. Mr Molefe's concerns that the President would involve himself in the affairs of an SOE but characterised the meeting as one among "ANC comrades" is valid. It blurs the distinction between affairs of the ruling party and the SOE to which the ANC deploys its cadres.

Developments soon after the meetings

Appointment of Werksmans

50. After Mr Molefe's meetings with the ANC Top Six and with President Zuma, the Auditor General (AG) issued adverse findings in respect of Prasa, and the Derailed Report was released. In August 2015, the Board appointed Werksmans Attorneys to conduct forensic investigations as required by the AG. Thereafter, Werksmans' scope of work was broadened to include matters that arose from the PP's Report.

51. Mr Molefe said Werksmans uncovered many irregularities and acts of maladministration at Prasa. The appointment of Werksmans was criticised by Mr Montana, Minister Peters and Parliament's Portfolio Committee on Transport. The AG later found that the appointment of Werksmans was irregular as the panel from which Werksmans had been selected had not been renewed by Prasa for a lengthy period. However, in a letter to the Minister of Transport in June 2017, a leading law firm in Johannesburg expressed the opinion that there was nothing amiss with the appointment of Werksmans.

52. In defending his Board's appointment of Werksmans, Mr Molefe said a lawful procedure had been followed before Werksmans was appointed. Werksmans' investigations had enabled the Board to institute legal proceedings which resulted in the courts setting aside major contracts, found to be tainted: the R3,5 billion contract awarded to Swifambo; and two substantial contracts awarded to Siyangena totalling R2,8 billion.

The vilification of Mr Molefe and his Board

53. Mr Molefe's Replying Affidavit (deposed 25 August 2016) in Prasa's application to have the R3.5 billion locomotives contract with Swifambo reviewed and set aside, stated that Mr Mashaba had told him that: he [Mr Mashaba] was aware that the award of the locomotives tender to Swifambo in 2012 was being investigated by the Molefe Board, and wished to come clean. Mr Mashaba said he had bid for the locomotives tender after an approach by Mr Makhensa Mabunda (a known associate of Mr Montana). After Swifambo had been awarded the contract, Angolan businesswoman Ms Maria Gomes (known to be a "fundraiser" for the ANC) told him that 10% of the value of the contract should be paid to the ANC. Mr Mashaba later furnished documents indicating that R79 million was paid to persons or entities who would pay the money to the ANC. This disclosure, made in court papers, was widely reported in the media. It suggested strongly that the award of the tender to Swifambo was tainted by corruption.

54. However, Mr Molefe pointed out that it was he and his Board who were painted as villains by Parliament's Portfolio Committee (PPC) on Transport when they appeared before it on 31 August 2016. The record of the proceedings made available to the Commission suggests that this is true. An issue raised at the PCC meeting was that Prasa needed only 20 executives but it had a complement of 65 executives. However, instead of dealing with this on-going fruitless and wasteful expenditure, an ANC member focused on the allegation that Mr Molefe had made about money paid to the ANC. Mr Molefe's request, on the basis that the matter was sub judice, that the issue be dealt with in a closed session was rejected. Another ANC member of the PPC then questioned why the firm carrying out the forensic investigation (Werksmans Attorneys) was being paid R93 million. The record of subsequent meetings of the PPC indicates that the approach of ANC members was to target those who blew the whistle on wrongdoing, rather than ascertaining how it came about, and identifying the beneficiaries so that recoveries could be made.

55. An affidavit (deposed 21 October 2020) by Ms Phillistus Dikeledi Magadzi, ANC MP who chaired the PCC between 2014 and 2019, and who later became Deputy Minister of Transport, addressed Mr Molefe's allegation that he and his Board were vilified by the PPC. The affidavit was submitted in response to an invitation by the Commission to the ANC to set out how Parliament carried out its oversight obligations over the Executive and held it accountable. She stated that the PPC consisted of twelve members, seven of whom were from opposition parties; she understood that the role of the Committee was to oversee the operations of the Department of Transport, which had twelve SOEs under its jurisdiction. She said the PPC performed its oversight obligation well and that with the exception of Prasa, the other SOEs were relatively stable. During her tenure, the PPC focused on Prasa, because it was undergoing a modernisation process.

56. The Deputy Minister's affidavit stated that a high turnover of executives, CEOs, Board members [and Ministers] after 2015 contributed to Prasa's instability. While she was Chairperson of the PPC, Prasa had three Ministers, four Boards and numerous CEOs. The instability at Prasa "hampered" the Committee's efforts "to follow up" on allegations in the media that the purchased locomotives were not fit for purpose, especially since the Rail Safety Regulator in its report indicated that the trains could be used. The PPC wanted state institutions such as the Auditor-General, National Treasury, the Hawks and the SAPS to investigate the irregular procurement of the locomotives, but the Board "saw fit to engage a private law firm, Werksmans" to conduct the investigations. The PPC wanted to know how this would be funded, and was told there had not been a bid [before Werksmans had been appointed] and the cost had not been estimated. The PPC proposed "regularisation", but this was not done, although the procurement was "irregular" and the cost had then reached R120 million. The AG had made several findings of irregular, unauthorised and wasteful expenditure at Prasa and had recommended consequence management. The PPC also wanted disciplinary steps to be taken but this did not happen. The PPC "wanted to pursue" Mr Molefe's allegation that "Prasa had donated R80 million to the ANC". She said, "[t]he Committee demanded invoices and evidence from Prasa to support this allegation because it fell within the purview of oversight". It was her "personal observation" that Mr Molefe "was angered by this request". Another allegation that the Committee "wanted to explore" was the [alleged] appointment of Mr Molefe's son at Werksmans.

57. Ms Magadzi alleged that the PPC pursued its oversight obligation rigorously. In March 2016, it asked for a report from Prasa on actions taken to recover money lost through irregular expenditure and asked why additional expenditure of about R250 million to pay SA Gate and Fence was not reflected in briefing documents. In February 2018 it was given a status report that said due process was not followed in the appointment of Werksmans and that governance processes had been flouted. She also said that when allegations of procurement impropriety at Prasa surfaced in the media, the PPC conducted oversight visits and was assured by the Regulator that the trains were "fit for purpose". She also alleged that the "ANC Study Group" was "very forceful in demanding that the allegations of impropriety be investigated" and "only disengaged" after the Regulator provided assurances "that all was well".

58. In an affidavit responding to the allegations against him by Deputy Minister Magadzi, Mr Molefe denied that he had been asked to provide invoices in respect of the payments allegedly made to the ANC. He also denied that his son worked for Werksmans, but rather for a company that manufacturers buses and trucks. It was not explained why the Deputy Minister raised the issue of Mr Molefe's son only in her October 2020 affidavit, when she could have asked Mr Molefe and/or Werksmans about the matter.

59. Mr Molefe said there appeared to be a plan by those with influence to make it impossible for the Board to operate effectively. The Board sought to appoint a new CEO, embarking on a rigorous recruitment process. A list of its preferred appointees was sent to the Minister, recommending appointment of the top candidate, a black woman. In terms of clause 15.8 of the Board Charter, the GCEO is appointed by the Minister, on the recommendation of the Board. But, according to Mr Molefe, the Minister insisted that Mr Collins Letsoalo, CFO of the Department of Transport, be seconded as an Acting GCEO. Mr Letsoalo appeared to have been instructed to stop or significantly curtail the Werksmans investigations: he insisted that it was he who should take charge of the investigations. This led to tensions with Werksmans. Minister Peters herself attempted to stop the investigations, but the Board refused to relent. The Board applied to the high Court (27 November 20150) for review and setting aside of Prasa-Swifambo contract, and (1 February 2016) likewise for the Prasa-Siyangena. Both applications were successful.

60. In her affidavit and evidence, former Minister Peters denied frustrating the Board's attempt to appoint a permanent GCEO. She said the decision to appoint Mr Letsoalo was not unilaterally imposed on the Board: it had been discussed with Mr Molefe, who had written the appointment letter and congratulated Mr Letsoalo. She denied attempting to stop the Werksmans investigation, but alleged that she repeatedly asked when the investigation was likely to be concluded, mindful that the unbudgeted legal fees were close to R200 million as flagged by the AG.

61. Mr Molefe said he had made several attempts to seek protection from Parliament. He wrote (8 March 2017) to the Speaker of the National Assembly, Ms Baleka Mbete, requesting Parliamentary intervention, raising the Public Protector's Report and the matters under investigated by Werksmans. On the same day he also wrote to Ms Magadzi, Chairperson of the PPC on Transport, regarding humiliating treatment meted out to Board members by the PPC. Both these letters, he said, went unanswered. Instead, on the same day that he had written the two letters, Minister Peters dismissed the Molefe Board. No reasons were given. Shortly thereafter, Minister Peters appointed an Interim Board. However, the dismissed Board Directors approached the High Court to have their dismissals reviewed and set aside. Minister Peters opposed the application. She lost with costs and the Molefe Board was reinstated. A few weeks later, Minister Peters herself was relieved of her Cabinet position. Minister Peters said she was mindful of lodging an appeal against the High Court's decision setting aside her dismissal of the members of the Molefe Board, as it was based on a procedural point, namely that she had not given the Board members a hearing before dismissing them.

62. Minister Peters was replaced by Minister Mkhacani Joseph Maswanganyi as Minister of Transport. Mr Molefe said Minister Maswanganyi, who had been a member of the PPC on Transport, avoided meeting with the Board, despite several requests. It appeared to Mr Molefe from the outset that Minister Maswanganyi's agenda was to dissolve the Board. In letters dated 5 June 2017 Minister Maswanganyi asked Board members to show cause why they should not be dismissed. The "irregular" appointment of Werksmans was raised as a significant reason for the decision. Board members disputed that there was a basis for them to be removed and Minister Maswanganyi did not follow through on his threat. Mr Molefe said there were further moves to weaken the Board by ensuring that it did not have a quorum. Some Board members were encouraged to resign and did so, and they were not replaced. In addition, the nominee of the Department of Transport stopped attending Board meetings, rendering the Board ineffective, as a quorum could not be formed for valid meetings.

63. Former Minister Maswanganyi responded that when he had been a member of the PPC, Prasa Board's "poor performance and financial management" had been discussed. He "strongly" denied that he had refused to meet with the Board; in any case, it was not "compulsory" for the Minister to meet with the Board; he accepted that on 5 June 2017 he had asked each of the remaining Board members to make representations on why he should not terminate their membership. His reasons were their poor performance and financial mismanagement; and their appointment of Werksmans without following Prasa's SCM policy, without a Board resolution, contract and/or mandate. In addition, he alleged the following: "It was a Parliamentary decision to dissolve . . . the Board . . . and a Minister cannot go against a decision made by the Parliament of South Africa."

64. Mr Molefe was of the view that the Board could not rely on Parliament's Portfolio Committee on Transport for support. He alleged that the PPC did not take its responsibility of oversight in respect of public assets seriously, turned a blind eye to malfeasance and protected the culprits, rather than defend the public purse.

Other entities also did not act

65. On 13 May 2016, pursuant to the investigations by Werksmans, Mr Molefe wrote to General Berning Ntlemeza, the Head of the Directorate of Priority Crime Investigation (DPCI) colloquially known as "the Hawks", and to Advocate Shawn Abrahams, the National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP), setting out the grave revelations that had been uncovered by investigations and the cases that had been reported to the Central Reporting Office in terms of the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 (PRECCA Act) for further investigation. The letter to General Ntlemeza noted that several cases concerning Prasa had been registered with the police, but seemingly no progress had been made. Mr Molefe asked the DPCI to allocate dedicated resources to process the cases, especially those registered as serious offences. However, Mr Molefe alleged, the DPCI refused to discharge its statutory and constitutional mandate.

66. Ultimately, on 29 May 2017, the Board applied to the High Court for an order compelling the DPCI to act on the allegations. That application has not been finalised. This is in part because, instead of dealing with the merits of the Board's complaints, the DPCI raised technical objections. The Court however dismissed those technical objections. Thereafter, the DPCI filed its answering affidavit in respect of the substantive issues raised by Board in its founding affidavit and Prasa filed its Replying Affidavit. The matter has however not been taken further. Mr Molefe was of the view that the interim boards that were later installed simply did not have the determination of the dismissed Board to hold those who abuse power to account.

67. In response to a request from the Commission to deal with the allegations of the failure of the DPCI to act, Lieutenant General Seswantsho Godfrey Lebeya (appointed as National Head of the DPCI on 1 June 2018), submitted an affidavit dated 23 August 2021 stating that the DPCI was investigating twenty cases relating to Prasa; the first docket, which was opened in July 2015 on the basis of a complaint by Mr Mamabolo, an assistant manager at Prasa, related to the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo; the next docket, which concerned the extension of the scope of work in respect of contracts awarded to Siyangena was opened in September 2015 following a complaint by Mr Paul O'Sullivan. Mr Mamabolo, representing Prasa, also submitted a statement; thereafter, following the Public Protector's Report, eighteen further cases were opened – on 16 August 2019.

68. Lt General Lebeya mentioned the three reasons for the delay in finalising the Swifambo and Siyangena investigations. First, he was told that details of the Swifambo complaints were not provided by the complainant or other Prasa employees when requested. Second, he was told that certain documents relating to contracts and the bases on which they were awarded were not made available by Prasa. He referred to letters that had been written to senior Prasa employees and in one case a subpoena being served. From the time of his appointment (1 June 2018), he had met with the previous Board, the Administrator and the current Board on nine occasions, the last being a virtual meeting on 7 April 2021. Third, there was a lack of cooperation from Prasa employees, especially Ms Ngoye and Mr Dingiswayo, who insisted on being part of every interview with Prasa employees. The investigators wished to interview Mr Mamabolo on his own in terms of an investigation plan compiled by the investigators and the case prosecutor.

69. Lt General Lebeya confirmed that the matter had not been concluded. The Swifambo case (in respect of which 383 statements had been taken) was still under investigation, though the investigation was "90% complete". The Siyangena investigation (with 185 statements taken) was 75% complete; of the remaining eighteen cases, four investigations had been finalised, while the other fourteen are still under investigation. He said: "[T]he unsound relationship between the DPCI and Prasa between 2015 and 2018 contributed to the delay in completing the investigations." Allegations that Prasa's legal section did not co-operate with the DPCI were denied by Ms Ngoye and Mr Dingiswayo. Given that what Lt General Lebeya alleged is for the most part hearsay, there is no reason to reject their denials. The dilatoriness of the DPCI is dealt with below.

THE SWIFAMBO AWARD

Introduction to the award of the locomotives tender

70. A procurement process culminated on 24 July 2012 with the appointment of Swifambo by Prasa's Board as the preferred bidder for the locomotives contract. On 23 March 2013, Prasa and Swifambo Rail Leasing (Pty) Ltd concluded a contract in terms of which Prasa would purchase seventy locomotives from Swifambo for R3.5 billion. On 27 November 2015, sixteen months after the Molefe Board took office, Prasa approached the High Court's Gauteng Local Division, Johannesburg, to have its contract with Swifambo and other decisions made in respect of the locomotives tender reviewed and set aside. Prasa alleged that the procurement process in terms of which Swifambo had been appointed was highly irregular and possibly corrupt. On 3 July 2017, the High Court concluded that the procurement process was deeply flawed and corruption was involved. Similar findings were made by the Supreme Court of Appeal (SCA) when it dismissed Swifambo's appeal on 30 November 2019. The Constitutional Court (CC) refused to grant Swifambo leave to appeal.

71. On 18 December 2018, Swifambo Leasing and its "holding company", Railpro Holdings (Pty) Ltd were both liquidated by way of special resolutions.

72. The allegations of irregularity and impropriety made in the Founding Affidavit suggest that the procurement process was designed to award the tender to a company which had little or no experience in the rail industry and was a front for a foreign company. Moreover, whilst the RFP envisaged Prasa leasing the locomotives from the winning tenderer, a decision was made at a very late stage in the procurement process for the locomotives to be purchased – at a cost of R3.5 billion.

73. A forensic investigation (dated 19 April 2017) requested by the DPCI and the Report of the Liquidators identified individuals and entities that received payments from the R2.65 billion that Prasa had paid to Swifambo. This was despite only twenty locomotives (out of seventy) having been delivered, and said to be "not fit for purpose". The DPCI has until recently not taken the matter further. Other allegations were that minutes of a meeting of one of the Committees that recommended the appointment of Swifambo as the preferred bidder were inaccurate, if not forged; because the Committee re-visited its decision after being urged to do so by a senior person at Prasa.

74. The aforementioned information was available to the PPC on Transport and the DPCI were under a duty to pursue them properly, but did not do so. Had they done so, it is safe to conclude that they would also have uncovered at least some further matters that emerged when evidence on Prasa was led at the Commission and possibly even the matters that have come to light only recently. The blameworthiness of the PPC and the DPCI in respect of their inaction on the locomotives contract, becomes clearer as revelations are considered chronologically.

Brief overview of events preceding the procurement process

75. First, in July 2009 PRASA published a request for expressions of interest in the supply of locomotives for the haulage of passenger trains on various national routes as it had a shortfall of locomotives and wanted to lease locomotives.

76. Second, in May 2011, a Spanish company, Vossloh Espana S A U (Vossloh) inspected Prasa's fleet of locomotives and made recommendations on what Prasa needed in the short, medium and long terms.

77. Third, Prasa's Executive Manager: Engineering Services, Mr Daniel Mtimkulu, recommended that Prasa acquire air-conditioning systems from Vossloh Kiepe Ges.mbh.H (a subsidiary of Vossloh incorporated in Germany), and authorised the payment in terms of the contract of €3 631 090 (R24.6 million at the time).

78. Fourth, in July 2011, Mr Mtimkulu sent a memorandum to Mr Montana about Prasa's needs. He indicated that Prasa's fleet was outdated and that this impacted on the reliability of the services that Prasa was supposed to provide. He estimated that it would cost R5 billion over a period of six years and recommended that Mr Montana and the Board approve the sourcing of 100 locomotives.

The procurement process

79. The milestones that led to a contract being concluded for Prasa to purchase seventy locomotives from Swifambo are detailed in Prasa's founding papers in its review application. Mr Molefe alleged several times that documents could not be found and that there was a general lack of co-operation from some employees. Moreover, most of the minutes that were attached to the founding affidavit were unsigned.

80. The principal allegations made in the founding papers were the following:

    80.1 Prasa published the RFP (tender HO/SCM/223/11/2011) on 27 and 28 November 2011 and issued the RFP on 2 December 2011. As regards Swifambo, documents annexed to the papers indicated that the tender document was collected by someone from the "S Group" and that S Group Holdings paid for the tender documents using the reference "Swifambo". On 9 December 2011, Prasa held a compulsory briefing session for potential bidders. Swifambo was not one of the companies in attendance, but its holding company Swifambo Holdings (or Railpro Holdings) was present. Some two months thereafter, on 7 February 2012, Swifambo Holdings acquired a company known as Mafori Finance Vryheid (Pty) Ltd. (Its name was later changed to Swifambo Rail Leasing (Pty) Ltd, referred to as Swifambo.)

    80.2 Six bidders responded by the closing date: Mafori Financing t/a Swifambo Rail Leasing; Havdap Investment Solution (Pty) Ltd; Thelo Rolling Stock Leasing (Pty) Ltd; CRM Consortium; RRL Grindod; and GE South Africa. On 9 March 2012, Swifambo submitted its response to the RFP, with Vossloh Espana SAU (Vossloh) as its supply partner. Swifambo submitted its bid to the tender on 27 February 2012, as Mafori Finance Vryheid t/a Swifambo Rail Leasing. The founding papers alleged that there was no documentary evidence identifying those responsible for the compliance assessment of the bid proposals.

    80.3 According to unsigned minutes of Prasa's Bid Evaluation Committee (BEC) that were annexed to the founding affidavit, the BEC met on 27 March 2012. In a report that was compiled later, the BEC recorded that only Swifambo achieved the threshold compliance of 70% and it recommended that Swifambo be appointed as a preferred bidder. Thereafter according to the unsigned minutes of Prasa's Corporate Tender and Procurement Committee (CTPC), annexed to the founding affidavit, the CTPC met on 11 July 2012. Those minutes record that the CTPC concurred with the recommendation [presumably by the BEC] that Swifambo be appointed as a preferred bidder.

    80.4 According to an unsigned report purportedly compiled by the "Bid Adjudication Committee" (BAC), the committee met on 12 July 2012. The "BAC report" states that the BAC adjudicated and approved the BEC's recommendations, but also recommended that "Swifambo's appointment as a preferred bidder be based on outright purchase option". The "BAC Report" appears to have been forwarded to Mr Montana in his capacity of GCEO. The GCEO's report, which was unsigned, was also annexed to the founding affidavit. It simply repeats the recommendation set out in the BAC Report.

    80.5 The Board's Finance Capital Investment and Procurement Committee (FCIP) met on 19 July 2012. It recommended to the Board that Swifambo be appointed as the preferred bidder for the provision of 67 dual electric diesel locomotives (hybrids) and that a separate procurement process be entered into for the remainder of the required 25 diesel locomotives.

80.6 According to the minutes of the Prasa Board's meeting of 24 July 2012, the Board approved Swifambo as the preferred bidder for the procurement of dual diesel electric locomotives.

80.7 On 27 July 2012, Prasa notified Swifambo of its appointment as a preferred bidder for the provision of the "diesel-electric (hybrid) locomotives".

80.8 On 25 March 2013, Prasa and Swifambo concluded the main contract on the terms set out therein. The contract was signed by Mr Montana, on behalf of Prasa, and Mr Mashaba, on behalf of Swifambo. It was for the purchase of 20 Euro 4000 locomotives and 50 Euro Dual locomotives, with a contract value of R3.5 billion (including VAT).

80.9 On 11 April 2014, Mr Montana approved a recommendation by Mr Mtimkulu that the "rudimentary" systems that came with locomotives needed to be upgraded, at a cost of some R335 million. This however, met resistance from Prasa's [internal] legal section and it was not approved by the Board.

The alleged irregularities

81. In the founding papers, Mr Molefe stated that a range of irregularities had been committed during the procurement process, including patent irregularities that appear on the face of some of the documents annexed to the founding affidavit. Those that appear significant for the purposes of this report are set out hereunder.

The designing of the specifications

82. Prasa's Procurement Policy required that specifications were to be designed or drawn up by a Cross Functional Sourcing Committee (CFSC), which would consist of at least three members; specifications ought to promote the broadest possible competition; and they should be based on relevant characteristics or performance requirements and avoid brand names or similar classifications.

83. In the founding affidavit, on the bases summarised hereunder, it was stated that those requirements were not met in that the specifications for the locomotives were not designed by a committee: they were authored by Mr Daniel Mtimkulu, who had told Mr Montana in July 2011 that Prasa's fleet of locomotives was outdated and had recommended the sourcing of 100 locomotives. The specifications appeared to have required features of the locomotives that Swifambo would offer when it later submitted its bid, namely the EURO 3000 diesel-electric locomotive.

84. The specifications included items that were irrelevant. The power output of the engine is a relevant consideration but the way the output is achieved and the identity of the manufacturer are irrelevant. However, the specifications stipulated that the manufacturer of the engine had to be EMD, which is the brand for which Vossloh had expressed a preference after its May 2011 inspection. Other irrelevant requirements set out in the specifications included almost exact matches for Vossloh's locomotives: the number of cylinders (V12); the bore and stroke (230, 19mm x 279,4 mm); the engine speed (904 rpm); and a multi-traction control with 27 pins.

85. In addition, the following specifications were an exact or nearly exact match for Vossloh's locomotives: a track gauge of 1065 mm (Vossloh's was 1067 mm); locomotive weight of 88 tons; and a traction effort of 305KN. Moreover, the following features, which Vossloh's locomotives had, were also specified: two cabs, which were not required, but had added cost implications as all the driver controls and displays had to be duplicated; a monocoque structure, which is more difficult to service as access to components for maintenance is difficult; and the UIC standard applied in Europe, although in South Africa, the Association of American Railroads standards are applied.

86. The founding papers said that the inclusion of manufacturer identity and of irrelevant considerations, and tailoring some requirements to the Vossloh locomotive had the effect that Swifambo's bid enjoyed a decisive advantage in the bid evaluation, ensuring that Swifambo was awarded more points in the technical evaluation phase. It was the only bidder that met the 70% threshold when the bids were evaluated by the BEC.

RFP requirements and Swifambo's non-compliance

87. The RFP had set out a number of matters with which bids were required to comply and stated that failure to do so would lead to disqualification of the bid. The founding papers identified some of those requirements and stated that Swifambo's bid did not meet them.

88. The RFP stated that bids would be checked for completeness and compliance with the essential RFP requirements. Incomplete and non-compliant bids would be disqualified. The technical ability of bidders to deliver the locomotives in accordance with the prescribed specifications was a threshold criterion. Bidders were required to achieve a minimum of 70% in order to qualify for further evaluation.

89. Each bid had to meet at least the following requirements: demonstrating previous experience in the supply and leasing of locomotives and the bidder's capacity to handle a project of this magnitude; submitting letters of references from at least three previous clients for whom they had done similar work; and to provide, within ten days of appointment, an unconditional performance bond of 10% of the value of the project price offered by the preferred bidder. The purpose of the RFP was to enable Prasa to select a final bidder who was technically and financially qualified and had sufficient experience in similar projects.

90. The founding papers then went on to state that Swifambo's bid did not comply with some of the requirements set out in the RFP. The tax clearance certificate did not have a VAT number, and no tax clearance certificate was submitted in respect of Vossloh (according to the bid, a sub-contractor). The bid did not comply with the local content requirement as the locomotives were to be designed and manufactured in Spain. The bid did not contain evidence to support Swifambo's claim that it and its shareholders had previous experience in the rail industry, or demonstrate that it had experience in the supply of locomotives or the capacity to manage a tender of the size in question. The furnished reference letters related to Vossloh, not Swifambo, but Swifambo indicated that it would rely entirely on Vossloh to fulfil its obligation, although Vossloh was not a co-bidder and at the time had no contractual relationship with Swifambo.

Flaws in the consideration of the bids

91. The bids were considered by different committees before the Board made its decision. However, there was no documentary evidence of the identity of the individuals in the committees. Two documents were produced by the BEC: a set of minutes and a report.

92. The minutes, neither signed nor dated, record that the BEC met on 27 March 2012. They note that the RFP had requested bidders to submit proposals for two options: a five-year renewable lease with full maintenance programme; and a 10-year lease with a full transfer of ownership thereafter. The minutes note that those responsible for checking compliance with the SCM policy had not satisfactorily done so. The minutes record six persons as present: Ms Ntombeziningi Shezi, Mr Benedict Khumalo, Mr Thabo Mahlobogwane, Mr Jabulani Nkosi, Mr Peter Stow and Mr Joseph Magoro.

93. The founding affidavit records that Mr Molefe was told by a member of the BEC (whose confirmatory affidavit was annexed) that some BEC members had raised concerns about the compliance of Swifambo's bid but the chairperson, Ms Ntombeziningi Shezi, had told them that the Chief Procurement Officer, Mr Chris Mbatha, had instructed that the BEC should not concern itself with compliance issues, as SCM had performed the compliance check; and the BEC had been constituted merely to perform a technical evaluation of the bids. (Affidavit submitted by Mr Mbatha denied that he had given such an instruction to Ms Shezi.)

94. The BEC Report was signed by Ms Shezi in her capacity as Chairperson of the BEC. The Report lists the six persons, who according to the minutes were present at the meeting of 27 March 2012 but makes no mention of Ms Jerita Motshologane, or that she was absent or had tendered her apology. Contradicting the minutes of the BEC, the Report said the bids had been checked for completeness and compliance. It also noted "the scope of work" as being the provision of locomotives on lease and correctly reflected that the periods of lease were either five years or 15 years (and not ten years as recorded in the minutes). The Report recorded that the RFP required a minimum technical threshold of 70% and that only Swifambo's bid had achieved that threshold. As a result, only Swifambo's bid was "financially evaluated". The report also noted that Swifambo's bid provided three options: a five-year lease, a 15-year lease and the cost of purchasing the locomotives.

95. The date on which Ms Shezi signed the Report is not reflected under her signature, although there is space therefor. However, there are two insertions at the foot of each page of the 13-page report: on the left-hand side, the words "Bid Evaluation Committee" and in the centre, the page number. In addition, the date 23 June 2012 appears on the right-hand side of the first seven pages of the Report, and the words "[insert date]" on the last three pages.

96. In the founding papers, Mr Molefe said that Prasa's procurement policy required that the CFSC, not the BEC, should prepare the scoring sheet and allocate the weighting for different items. In this case, the BEC had prepared the scoring sheet.

97. As noted above, according to its Report, the BEC found that only Swifambo's bid achieved the threshold compliance of 70% and only its bid was financially evaluated. Mr Molefe attributed this in part to the fact that the specifications were tailored to suit Swifambo's product. He added that there were other irregularities in the scoring process. A member of the BEC who participated in the first scoring exercise on 27 March 2012 was replaced for the next sitting on 15 May 2012, but the scores that he gave on 27 March 2012, which were favourable to Swifambo, were used in the final calculation; and the bids were not scored in accordance with the weighting allocated.

98. If, as recorded in the Report that was signed by Ms Shezi, a proper compliance check had been done, the check inexplicably overlooked obvious deficiencies in the Swifambo bid. In particular, Swifambo's bid did not contain documents confirming that it had entered into a joint venture with Vossloh Southern Africa, on whose experience and technical capabilities it would rely to fulfil its contractual obligations to Prasa. Documentary evidence of the existence of such an agreement would have been critical if Swifambo was to be awarded the contract on the basis not of its own experience and expertise but that of Vossloh as its alleged partner.

99. The BEC's Report recommended that Swifambo be appointed as a preferred bidder; and the CPO appoint a negotiation team to enter into negotiations with Swifambo and if the negotiations were successful, the negotiated agreement be submitted to the GCEO for recommendation to the Board's FCIP.

100. According to a set of minutes annexed to the founding papers, Prasa's Corporate Tender and Procurement Committee (CTPC) held an "extra-ordinary" meeting on 11 July 2012. The minutes record that the following persons were present at the meeting: Mr Tiro Holele (the chairperson), Mr Chris Mbatha, Mr Siphiwe Mathobela, Ms Jerita Mothshologane, Mr Maishe Bopape, Ms Martha Ngoye, Ms Ntombeziningi Shezi and Mr Sidney Khuzwayo. A resolution taken at the meeting was that the CTPC concurred in the recommendation [presumably by the BEC] that: Swifambo be appointed as a preferred bidder; and the Group CEO appoint a negotiations team to negotiate with Swifambo and, if the negotiations were successful, the negotiated agreement be submitted to the GCEO for recommendation to the FCIP. Significantly, however, although there are spaces for the signature of the chairperson and the date these are left blank in the copy annexed to the Founding Affidavit. There appears to be no copy that is dated or signed.

101. The next document annexed to the founding affidavit is titled "Bid Adjudication Report", which notes: "On 12 July 2012, the Bid Adjudication Committee of Prasa (CTPC) adjudicated and approved the recommendations of the Bid Evaluation Committee." The Report was neither signed nor dated. The "Report of the BAC", for the most part, repeats almost word for word, what was said in the BEC's report of (presumably) 23 June 2011. Apart from a few additions, it simply reproduces the BEC Report but effects changes to page numbers. However, unlike the reproduced BEC Report that it incorporates, the "BAC Report" does not identify the members (in this case of the BAC) who were present at its meeting of 12 July 2011. In addition, it includes some additions to the BEC Report, such as at the end of paragraph 1: "On 12 July 2012, the Bid Adjudication Committee of Prasa (CTPC) adjudicated and approved the recommendation of the BEC." Thereafter, at paragraph 6 (recommendations), prior to repeating the BEC's recommendations, it states that Swifambo be appointed as a preferred bidder for the dual and the E300 locomotives; and that its appointment "be based on outright purchase option". There is a space for Mr Holele to sign in the capacity of "the Chairperson of the Bid Adjudication Committee", but no signature was affixed.

102. Also annexed to the founding affidavit is a document titled "Report of the Group CEO". The report has Mr Montana's name, but it is neither signed nor dated. In the section of the report titled "recommendation", the following is said: "The GCEO has reviewed the report of the Bid Adjudication Committee and makes the following recommendation . .." The recommendation repeats, virtually word for word, the recommendation of the BAC.

103. In his founding affidavit, Mr Molefe noted that when comparing the contents of the BAC and the GCEO reports, the two documents are clearly generated from the same template. The inference is that the BAC recommendation was not considered by the GCEO.

104. Mr Molefe said that the Board's FCIP, tasked with focusing on the Board's responsibilities in respect of finance, capital investments and procurement, met on 19 July 2012. The FCIP recommended that Swifambo be appointed as the preferred bidder for the provision of 67 dual electric diesel locomotives and that there be a separate procurement process for the remainder of the required 25 diesel locomotives.

105. According to its minutes annexed to the founding affidavit, Prasa's Board met on 24 July 2012. The attendees were: Mr Sifiso Buthelezi, Dr Gasa, Mr Nkosinathi Khena, Ms Marissa Moore, Mr Ntebo Nkoenyane, Mr Mfanyana Salanje and Mr Montana (who were members the Board) and the following non-members: Mr Lindikaya Zide, Mr Goggi Ngakane, Mr Gastin and Mr Sebola. The tender was discussed under the item "diesel-electric locomotives" and the minutes noted that the Board approved Swifambo as the preferred bidder for the procurement of dual diesel electric locomotives.

106. On 27 July 2012, Prasa notified Swifambo of its appointment as a preferred bidder. The value of the contract was R3.5 billion and thus had to be approved by the Board. In these circumstances, one would expect that properly dated and signed documents would be produced at each stage of the process to enable one to ascertain precisely what decisions were taken or recommendations made; when they were taken or made; who was present on each occasion; signed registers; and the reasons for the decisions and recommendations. In this matter, however, only the Report of the BEC was signed. Quite how the bids passed through the successive committees and individuals without the omissions being detected and commented upon is quite a serious matter affecting not only the regularity of the process but its integrity as well.

107. A further worrying aspect that is raised in the founding is that the Board had approved the award of the tender to Swifambo on 24 July 2012 after the then chairperson, Mr Buthelezi, and Mr Montana were told that concerns had been raised about Swifambo.

108. The concerns are reflected in emails annexed to the founding papers, namely that on 6 November 2012, Dr Gasa (the chair of the FCIP) sent an email to, among others, Mr Buthelezi and Mr Montana, saying "I have just received intelligence information about Swifambo Rail Leasing. ... Failure to follow this up, would sink the organization (sic). Should the intelligence report prove true, we need immediate intervention as the Board". On 20 November 2012, Dr Gasa emailed to the Chief Procurement Officer, Mr Chris Mbatha, copying Mr Buthelezi. Part of this email said: "There are concerns that have been raised around [Swifambo Rail Leasing] and the FCIP is needing you to confirm that indeed a capacity check was properly done in relation to this contract and that you have satisfied yourselves that the necessary checks and balances have been done". In the email, Dr Gasa emphasised that time was of the essence as it would be "an anomaly to conclude contract negotiations in light of the seriousness of the matters we'd raised for which we have not received a response from you". Nonetheless, the contractual negotiations proceeded. There appear to be no written responses to these emails or the serious concerns that Dr Gasa raised.

109. On 25 March 2013, Prasa and Swifambo concluded the main contract on the terms set out therein. The contract was signed by Mr Montana on behalf of Prasa. The contract was for the purchase of 20 Euro 4000 locomotives and 50 Euro Dual locomotives, with a contract value of R3.5 billion (including VAT).

110. On 11 April 2014, Mr Mtimkulu sent a memorandum to Mr Montana in which he requested a variation to the Swifambo contract because "the systems that came with the locomotives per the Swifambo proposal to Prasa were rudimentary and therefore needed to be upgraded to ensure that the locomotives are fitted and assembled with the latest technology". The additional cost to Prasa was R335 million. The request was approved by Mr Montana on 11 April 2014 [although he had no authority to approve amounts over R100 million]. Mr Molefe said that the suggestion that the systems that came with the locomotives were rudimentary was nonsensical. He said the locomotives offered by Swifambo were state of the art and the systems mentioned in the memorandum were standard features.

Main grounds of review

111. In support of its review application, Prasa relied on numerous irregularities and improprieties. Some of them have already been mentioned above. The specifications had been designed by Mr Mtimkulu as opposed to a CFSC; and Swifambo's bid was non-compliant as it did not meet some of the requirements set out in the RFP.

112. In addition, the review papers stated that the following matters rendered the award made to Swifambo unlawful:

    112.1 The main contract that Prasa concluded with Swifambo deviated materially from the terms of the RFP: the RFP required a lease of locomotives, but the main contract was for the purchase of the locomotives. The main contract however stated that the RFP had invited proposals for three options, with one being an outright sale of locomotives to Prasa. Mr Molefe stated that that was incorrect: the RFP did not provide for an outright purchase. As a result, competing bidders were not afforded an opportunity to bid on an outright sale as one of the options. Accordingly, Mr Molefe contended that this change (in procurement strategy) was fundamentally flawed and unlawful.

    112.2 The award of the tender to Swifambo and the conclusion of the main contract without the contractual involvement of Vossloh constituted a material irregularity. Swifambo had no technical capacity, and Vossloh had no contractual obligation to design, manufacture and deliver the locomotives in terms of the main contract. The risk to Prasa was palpable.

    112.3 The conclusion of the main contract without the submission of an unconditional performance bond by Swifambo within the time period prescribed in the RFP was irregular.

    112.4 Swifambo had offered the Euro 3000 diesel locomotive in its bid, and that was the model that had been evaluated. However, Prasa acquired the Euro 4000 diesel model, which had not been evaluated.

    112.5 In terms of the main contract, the first twenty locomotives to be delivered were the Euro 4000 locomotives. But the Euro 4000 did not comply with the specification as set out in the RFP in several material respects. Moreover, the Euro 4000 was designed for the European rail network, not for South Africa. It is not compliant with the vehicle gauge specifications designed to ensure that the locomotives are able to operate on the rail networks safely and effectively: it has an overall vehicle gauge height of 4 140mm, whilst the RFP specifications required that the maximum vehicle gauge height be 3 965mm. The consequence was that Prasa was saddled with locomotives that were not fit for purpose and unsafe to operate on the South African rail network.

113. Other irregularities to which Mr Molefe referred were that approval from the Minister of Transport had not been obtained; there was no indication that National Treasury had received a written submission; there had been no budgeting for provision for the purchase of the locomotives; and Mr Mtimkulu falsely stated that he held a doctorate.

114. Swifambo's response through its deponent Mr Massaroa, who was not initially involved in its bid, did not dispute these irregularities, but indicated that these were a result of Prasa's internal decisions, by which Swifambo ought not to be prejudiced. Similarly, Mr Montana expressed the view that irregularities must be distinguished from corruption. He said that, while there may have been certain irregularities, this did not justify setting aside the award and contract by the High Court or the SCA.

115. It is appropriate to observe at this stage that the irregularities detailed in the founding papers make it clear that the award of the locomotives tender to Swifambo were attributable to much more than incompetence or negligence. They suggested a pre-determined plan that involved a number of people of various levels of seniority at Prasa.

Bombshell allegations in the replying affidavit

116. In mid-August 2015, Mr Mashaba told Mr Mamabolo that he was aware that Prasa was investigating the award of the Swifambo tender and asked Mr Mamabolo to arrange a meeting with Mr Molefe. That meeting was held on 31 August 2015. Present at the meeting were Mr Mashaba, Mr Molefe, Mr Mamabolo and Ms Mashila Mtala, a member of Prasa's Board and chairperson of its FCIP Committee.

117. Based on Mr Molefe's affidavit, Mr Mabunda had asked Mr Mashaba to participate in the locomotives tender; he was aware that the award of the tender was being investigated. Mr Mabunda had instructed Mr Mashaba to pay some of the money received from Prasa into specified accounts and this would "benefit the movement"; and while it was a pity that he did not have documents with him reflecting the payments he had made he would provide the documents.

118. Mr Mashaba later did indeed hand over some documents to Mr Mamabolo. As regards the payments, the documents reflected that, through his company, AM Consulting Engineers (Pty) Ltd, Mr Mashaba had paid R79 million and had charged a "handling fee" of 10%. At subsequent meetings between Mr Mashaba and Mr Mamabolo, Mr Mashaba told Mr Mamabolo that, after Prasa had made payments to Swifambo or Swifambo Holdings, Ms Gomes would instruct him to make payments to certain entities. These were: Similex (Pty) Ltd, Nkosi Sabelo Incorporated and Knowles Hussain Lindsay Incorporated. None was a creditor of Swifambo or Swifambo Holdings. He said that he had also made two cash payments to Ms Gomes: one for just over R1 million and the other for R90 000. She would then distribute the funds.

119. In his replying papers, Mr Molefe also mentioned two sets of documents that he suggested were relevant to what has been set out above. First, a document ostensibly prepared by Siyaya Rail Solutions (Pty) Ltd, a subsidiary of Mr Mabunda's S Group. This document appears to have been submitted to Prasa in response to the request by Prasa for Expressions of Interest (EOI) to lease locomotives to Prasa. In the document, Siyaya Rail Solutions said that for the purposes of the EOI, it had entered into a partnership with two international companies, one of which was Vossloh Espania, to provide turnkey solutions to Prasa for the leasing of locomotives. Second, emails exchanged between Mr Montana and Ms Gomes on 16 and 17 December 2013, which Mr Molefe alarmingly indicated the following: the familiarity between them and the fact that they referred to each other as "comrades"; and that Mr Montana gave Ms Gomes details of various projects within Prasa.

120. Swifambo filed an affidavit by Mr Mashaba responding to the bombshell evidence in Mr Molefe's replying affidavit. Mr Mashaba denied that Mr Mabunda had told him that he was friends with Mr Montana. He denied that he did not have experience in the rail industry, saying that he had three years' experience. He said the purpose of the meeting of 31 August 2105 was to "amicably iron out difference between Swifambo and Prasa emanating from the contract". He alleged that at the meeting Mr Molefe had asked him if he supported the ANC financially - his affidavit sets out contributions he made to the ANC. He made them, according to the affidavit, after he was contacted by Mr Sabelo, who professed to be an ANC "fundraiser". It was Mr Sabelo who introduced him to Ms Gomes, whom he said was also an ANC fundraiser. The payments were not made by Swifambo or from its account.

Mr Mashaba later gave documents to Mr Mamabolo to demonstrate that he supported the ANC, "as requested during the meeting by Molefe".

121. Mr Mashaba made two other points in his affidavit which are worthy of special mention as they display a somewhat cynical approach to dealing with wrongdoings in procurement processes of SOEs The one point was that by the time the payments referred to by him were made, the contract had already been awarded to Swifambo. The other point is worth quoting in full. Mr Mashaba said:

> I honestly believe that if Mr Molefe dealt with this matter at an arm's length basis, a commercial solution could easily have been found in a manner that would permit Prasa's technical issues to be addressed, and costly protracted litigation avoided. The public would now have state of the art locomotives.

122. The complaints that Mr Molefe's papers raised about the unlawfulness of the contract that Prasa had concluded with Swifambo for the purchase of the locomotives were considered by the High Court and the SCA. In the High Court, the review application was heard by Francis J. The learned Judge reviewed and set aside the contract on the basis that it was tainted by serious irregularities, some of which related to corruption and fronting. On appeal, the SCA confirmed the order and also concluded that there was corruption. The CC refused Swifambo leave to appeal. A consideration of the review papers suggests that, on the basis of the information and documents placed before the Courts, a proper case for review had been made out.

123. It is instructive to consider what the SCA held about the tender and its outcome:

123.1 It was Mr Mtimkulu who had in July 2011 recommended that Prasa sources 100 locomotives at a cost of R5 billion; it was he who had drawn up the specifications of the locomotives to be supplied; he had no expertise in the subject, but had been appointed to a position in Prasa by Mr Montana in 2010 and had a meteoric rise through the ranks, with a salary to match; he claimed to have diplomas in engineering and later a doctorate; in fact he had no qualification at all. He resigned before disciplinary proceedings could be instituted by the new Board.

123.2 The specifications drawn up by Mr Mtimkulu contravened various requirements of Prasa's procurement policy. But they matched those of the locomotives manufactured by Vossloh Espana (who in May 2011 had made recommendations on Prasa's needs) and were tailored to include several features that were of no relevance to Prasa's needs, so as to benefit Vossloh and thus Swifambo. Accordingly, the High Court had correctly held that this was a factor that justified the conclusion that the tender process was corrupt.

123.3 No proper assessment of Prasa's needs had been undertaken, and the normal financial procedures required by the procurement policy were not followed. National Treasury's approval, required by the PFMA, had not been obtained.

123.4 Swifambo's bid did not comply with the requirements of the RFP in at least the following respects: Swifambo's tax clearance certificate did not have a VAT number and no such certificate was submitted for Vossloh; Swifambo's bid did not comply with the local content requirement as the locomotives were to be designed and manufactured in Spain, and it had not provided evidence of previous experience in the rail industry; Swifambo's bid did not demonstrate that Swifambo had experience in the supply of locomotives or its capacity to manage a project of the size put out to tender.

123.5 Although the contract between Prasa and Swifambo was concluded on 25 March 2013, a contract for the supply of locomotives was concluded between Swifambo and Vossloh only on 4 July 2013. Thus when Prasa and Swifambo concluded the contract, Vossloh had no legal obligation to Swifambo or Prasa and Swifambo had no capacity to provide Prasa with the locomotives. Like the High Court, the SCA found that Swifambo was a party to a fronting practice.

123.6 Mr Montana was party to Mr Mtimkulu's conduct. Of Mr Montana, it also said:

> He controlled PRASA and its staff, was obstructive and attempted to cover up his role in various corrupt transactions, including the award of the tender to Swifambo. ... The Public Protector had experienced similar obstruction in her investigation.

123.7 Mr Montana agreed that Courts have a responsibility to fight corruption, but in the Swifambo matter, he alleged, they went beyond their duty in declaring the contract corrupt. He said that it was important that, as regards corruption, even Mr Sacks had not found that any money had gone to "Prasa people". He said he rejected both judgments and attacked Francis J and the Justices of the SCA.

The Sacks Report

124. Mr Sacks is a Chartered Account and a director of Crowe Forensics SA (Pty) Ltd, formerly Howarth Forensics. Horwarth was appointed by Werksmans to perform expert forensic investigations relating to certain expenditures incurred by Prasa, one of which was in respect of the Swifambo contract. On 28 December 2015, the DPCI appointed Horwath Forensics, represented by Mr Sacks, to perform a cash flow analysis investigation pertaining to the Swifambo tender. In his report, which is dated 20 April 2017 and is described as a "preliminary report", Mr Sacks sets out how it came about that he had compiled his report.

125. On 8 July 2015, Mr Mamabolo reported a number of corrupt activities at Prasa to the Hillbrow Police Station, under CAS 405/07/2015. In a supplementary affidavit, Mr Mamabolo stated that the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo was irregular and could amount to fraud or corruption. On 27 November 2015, Prasa launched its application to have reviewed and set aside the contract that Prasa had concluded with Swifambo. On 28 December 2015, Horwath Forensic, represented by Mr Sacks, was appointed by the State to perform a forensic investigation into the allegations of irregularity. The scope of the investigation included all identified bank account details and individuals implicated in the process of the award of the tender and the entities that benefitted therefrom; to conduct a forensic audit of certain bank accounts and to trace the flow of funds and establish any individuals (including Prasa employees) or entities that benefitted from the award of the tender to Swifambo.

126. The objective of the audit was to analyse payments that Prasa had made to Swifambo, which payments were made into bank accounts of Swifambo Rail Leasing and Swifambo Rail Holdings, and the subsequent utilisation of those funds by Swifambo.

127. In his report, relying on the allegations made in Prasa's review papers, Mr Sacks analysed the entire tendering process.

Summary of main findings of Sacks' Report

128. The report notes that the contract between Swifambo and Vossloh reflected the following:

128.1 In terms of the contract, Vossloh was to sell 70 locomotives to Swifambo at €255 993 640, or for €3 657 052 each, while the price at which Swifambo sold the 70 locomotives to Prasa was €267 603 000 or €3 822 900 each. This means that Swifambo's profit margin was €165 848 per locomotive or €11 609 360 for 70. Using an exchange rate of R10.18 per Euro, the Report continues, Swifambo would earn more than R118 million.

128.2 Prasa's first payments were R64 473 684 to Swifambo Leasing on 6 December 2013, and R460 526 315.79 to Swifambo Holdings on 5 April 2013.

128.3 Prior to Prasa's first payment to Swifambo Leasing's account (on 6 December 2013), there was no transactional or operational activity on the account, apart from bank charges and insignificant receipts with a description of "Musa".

128.4 Between 1 January 2011 and 5 April 2013 (when Prasa made its first payment to Swifambo Holdings), the call account of Swifambo Holdings was evidently used to pay for various operating costs. Of the R1 043 865.40 received into this account: a total of R690 000 was received from an entity called Siyaya Rail Solutions; and a total of R257 265.40 was received from Vossloh SA and Vossloh Track. During that period, an amount of R1 008 516.23 was paid mainly for rent and furnishings for Swifambo's offices.

128.5 The Report draws the following conclusions: Swifambo had no trading activity prior to receipts from Prasa; it was not an operating or trading company; the only expense it had incurred was for start-up costs and bank charges, thus confirming that it was a company set up for the locomotive tender with Prasa.

129. In the Report, Mr Sacks also set out his preliminary findings of his flow of funds analysis of Swifambo's bank accounts. He emphasised that those were "Level 1" findings, meaning that they pertained only to the flow of funds to and from bank accounts of Swifambo Leasing and Swifambo Holdings into which Prasa made payments. He cautioned that each of these entities held several bank accounts and that he had not been able to identify them all. In his "Level 2" findings he would have dealt with the flow of funds from entities that or individuals who received payments from Swifambo. The analysis considered descriptions in Swifambo's bank statement, as confirmed by beneficiary bank statements.

Swifambo's accounts

130. The outcome of Mr Sacks' analysis suggests that, as of 30 November 2015, the receipts into, disbursements from and balances in the accounts of both Swifambo Leasing and Swifambo Holdings may be summarised as follows:

130.1 In all, Swifambo received more than R2.65 billion from Prasa.

130.2 Swifambo made total payments to Vossloh of more than R1.8 billion [R1 873 474 161.62] and of R237 021 909.04 to SARS and as of 30 November 2015 it had R111 376 943.89 as balances in its accounts.

131. Mr Sacks set out a table of the dates when Swifambo received payments from Prasa and when it made payments to Vossloh (see below). The first and second columns reflect the dates on which Prasa (P) paid Swifambo (S) and the amount paid; the third and fourth columns reflect the dates on which Swifambo (S) paid Vossloh (V) and the amount thereof. The last column reflects the difference between what Swifambo was paid and what it paid Vossloh.

Date	P pays S	Date	S pays V	Difference

131.1 Mr Sacks said Swifambo made the first payment to Vossloh 116 days after it had received its first payment from Prasa. Details of five of the payments that Swifambo made to Vossloh were obtained from a letter that Swifambo had written to National Treasury. The bank accounts were not available to Mr Sacks, so he was not in a position to confirm those payments.

131.2 Mr Sacks says the bank accounts indicate that Swifambo received five payments from Vossloh totalling R811 508.59. The reasons for these payments were unclear, but even before the contract between PRASA and Swifambo was signed, Swifambo had received three payments from Vossloh SA/Vossloh Track totalling R257 265, seemingly to fund the set-up costs for Swifambo's office.

132. It is convenient now to consider the more significant payments that Swifambo made from the R2.65 billion that it received from Prasa. It paid a total of R1.8 billion to Vossloh and R237 million to SARS. Mr Sacks identifies the persons and entities to whom significant payments were made. However, his report was compiled in April 2017, some twenty months before Swifambo was placed under liquidation.

Report of the liquidators

133. A more up-to-date picture of the flow of those funds emerges from the report prepared by the Liquidators, dated 18 February 2020, titled "Report to Stakeholders", and signed by Mr JZH Muller, one of the joint liquidators, who gave evidence at the Commission.

134. It should be noted that Mr Mashaba was summoned to appear before the Commission as a witness on 24 February 2021 and answer questions on among other matters the Liquidators' Report. In response, Mr Mashaba's attorney wrote to the Commission that Mr Mashaba "does not recognise and accept the lawfulness and/or legal validity" of the summons and would not be appearing at the Commission. He failed to comply with the terms of a summons without sufficient cause, and the Commission's Secretary has laid a charge against Mr Mashaba.

135. Be that as it may, the Liquidators Report records that in total the beneficiaries of most payments made by Swifambo were Mr Mashaba (and entities "under his control") and Mr Mabunda (and "entities under his control").

Payments to Mr Mashaba

136. The flow of funds analysis conducted by the Liquidators, found that Railpro Holdings made payments totalling more than R146 million to Mr Mashaba or "entities under his control" as indicated in the table that follows:

Payment amount from Railpro Holdings	Beneficiary
R1 680 000.00	Mr Mashaba
R9 293 000.00	Britewave
R31 066 859.88	AM Investments
R29 816 020.28	AMCE
R50 000 000.00	MM Trust
R26 200 000.00	Manoroko Makol

137. The liquidators' report shows Swifambo Leasing made payments of more than R22 million to entities "under the control of [Mr] Mashaba", as shown in the next table:

Payment amount from Swifambo Leasing	Beneficiary
R7 500 000.00	Bahn Wheels
R5 859 658.03	Mizana

138. Although Mr Mashaba did not comply with the summons to appear on 24 February 2021, he furnished an affidavit in response to a Directive served on him in terms of Regulation 10(6) of the Commission's Regulations. He said that at all material times and until they were liquidated, he was the managing director of Railpro Holdings and of Swifambo Leasing. Mr Muller had laid charges against him in respect of racketeering and money laundering. Should he respond to the contents of the Liquidators' Report, he ran the risk of possibly incriminating himself. He was challenging the lawfulness of the appointment of the Liquidators of Railpro Holdings and Swifambo Leasing. There was on-going litigation between him and the Liquidators; and an application was to be made to the Master [of the High Court] to remove Mr Muller as a final liquidator of Swifambo Leasing. He was exercising his right not to respond to allegations made in the Report about monies received by him or entities referred in the Liquidators' Report.

139. Regarding Mr Mabunda and Mr Montana: Mr Montana had worked for the Ministry of Public Enterprises, whilst Mr Mabunda had worked at the Department of Public Enterprises. Mr Mabunda appears to control the "S-Group" (Siyaya) of companies, which have been paid more than R1 billion by Prasa for work performed by them.

140. In a statement submitted to the Commission, Mr Mabunda responded to the allegations. Regarding Railpro Holdings, he said: the payments made to him were for "service rendered"; the payments to the entities mentioned, except for Bahn Wheels, were for "service rendered"; and the payment to Bahn Wheels was made after he had "sold" the company to Swifambo. Regarding Swifambo Leasing, he said: the payments made to him were for "service rendered"; the payments to Siyaya DB and the S Group were for "service rendered"; the payments to Nsovo Holdings were for rental for offices; while the payments to Ntshovelo Logistics and Sterlings "had nothing to do" with him.

141. As has been noted above, in his report Mr Sacks also dealt with the flow of funds from Swifambo to third parties such as Mr Mashaba and Mr Mabunda and entities with which they were associated. Although his flow of funds analysis considered what the position was as of 30 November 2015, his findings on the payment amounts and recipients are broadly in accord with the findings of the Liquidators. It is necessary to consider the reasons that the DPCI gave for not acting on Mr Sacks' Report.

142. According to Mr Sacks he was asked to meet with the DPCI to present his Report [on his investigation into Swifambo] before the DPCI met with prosecutors on 20 April 2017. He presented his Report to Brigadier Makinyane and another member of General Khana's team on 19 April 2017. After that he heard nothing further from the DPCI.

143. Mr Sacks notes in his affidavit however that when his firm, then known as Howarth Forensics, was appointed by the DPCI on 28 December 2015, the DPCI team under General Mosipi had envisaged extending the firm's mandate as and when it was deemed appropriate. It was envisaged that the next investigation would be into the award of certain contracts to Siyangena. However, General Khana took over the investigations from General Mosipi. From then on, Mr Sacks said, his firm did not receive any further appointments. In particular, he was not even asked to conduct the Second Level analysis in respect of the Swifambo tender.

144. It will be recalled that Lt General Lebeya, in his affidavit in response to Mr Molefe's allegation that the DPCI had been dilatory in their investigations into Prasa-related matters, had laid the blame for the delay on Prasa and its employees. He sought, in that affidavit, to explain why Mr Sacks' services had not been retained. Following a complaint by Mr Mashaba, the chairperson of Swifambo, the mandate of Horwath Forensics in respect of the Swifambo investigation had been withdrawn. However, there was "an indication" that because they were "Forensics Accountants" as opposed to a "Forensic Investigating Company", the police continued to meet with Horwath: hence the meeting of April 2017. However, the prosecutors allegedly "raised a concern and discomfort" about the "objectivity" of the Sacks Report and advised that an "independent report" by a different services provider should be sourced and "as such the investigation team did not continue with Crowe Forensics' services".

145. Lt Gen Lebeya's explanation as to why the investigation into the Swifambo tender had not been finalised is hearsay. He relies on what he had been told, without saying by whom. But, given that more than six years had passed since the complaint was lodged with the police, his explanation does not stand scrutiny, and even after he took over in 2018, not much has happened. In particular, it does not appear that there was any urgency in securing an "objective" report on the flow of money received by Swifambo as a replacement to Mr Sacks' Report. In addition, he does not even seek to explain why Mr Sacks was not told about the concerns that had been raised about his report.

146. With respect, the explanation tendered by Lt General Lebeya does not dispel the impression entertained by Mr Molefe, Ms Ngoye and Mr Dingiswayo that there was a reluctance on the part of law-enforcement authorities to investigate and prosecute persons who may have committed offences during the tender process. If anything, Lt General Lebeya's explanation not only gives force to the impression but leads one to conclude that that reluctance persists even today.

Allegations of other irregularities

147. It appears in 2012 there was no Committee at Prasa called a Bid Adjudication Committee (BAC). Despite this, one of the documents that Mr Molefe annexed to his founding affidavit was what purports to be a "Report of the BAC". Rather, when the Swifambo tender was being considered, the BEC would submit its recommendation to the CTPC, which became known as the BAC only a year or so later. The Swifambo tender could thus not have been considered by the BAC.

148. However, based on minutes of the CTPC annexed to it, the founding affidavit went on to say that the BEC's recommendation was also considered by the Corporate Tender and Procurement Committee (CTPC). A three-page document was attached to the Founding Affidavit as being the "minutes" of the meeting of the CTPC. The document that was annexed as being the "minutes" of the CTPC meeting simply recorded the names of the persons who were present and that presentations had been made in respect of certain "items" [presumably reflected in the minutes]. In addition, the "resolution" taken was recorded in the minutes.

149. The next document annexed to the Founding Affidavit was titled "Bid Adjudication Report". Mr Molefe relied in part on the minutes of the BEC meeting held on 27 March 2012 and an undated and unsigned Report of the BEC, which reflected the date 23 June 2012 at the foot of some of its pages. Mr Molefe also relied on what he was told to him by Mr Peter Stow, who attended the BEC meeting of 27 March 2012, alleging that the BEC minutes and Report were misleading in certain respects.

150. Significantly, there was no similar allegation by Mr Molefe relating to the minutes of CTPC meeting or the BAC Report being misleading. However, towards the end of the Commission's scheduled hearings, questions were raised about what was reflected in those two documents, which were annexed to the founding affidavit.

151. Ironically, the questions arose in the following circumstances. During the course of his testimony before the Commission, Mr Montana made a number of quite serious allegations against Ms Martha Ngoye and Mr Tiro Holele. Mr Montana claimed that Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele had accused him of wrongdoing, but they could not escape blame in respect of the award of the locomotives tender to Swifambo. He testified that this was because they were members of the BAC that supported the recommendation that Swifambo be appointed as the preferred bidder.

152. In response to Montana's allegations against them, Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele filed affidavits and were thereafter given an opportunity to respond to Mr Montana's evidence against them. They said that in July 2012 according to the documents purporting to be the minutes of the CTPC and BAC meetings that were annexed to the review papers, they [Mr Holele and Ms Ngoye] were members of the CTPC, appointments to that committee being made on an annual basis, and Mr Holele was the chairperson of the CTPC. Neither of them could recall being at a CTPC meeting on 11 July 2012 or a "BAC meeting" on 12 July 2012, given that there was no BAC at the time. Given the sheer size of the tender [R3.5 billion], they said they would remember being part of the process. Ms Ngoye and/or Mr Holele also pointed out that in 2012, recommendations from the BEC were considered by the CTPC: at that time there was no committee known as the BAC. The CTPC was "converted" into, and became known as "the BAC", a year or so after the locomotives tender had been considered by the BEC in March 2012. Accordingly, the locomotives tender could not have been considered by a Prasa BAC. Significantly, the minutes of the CTPC meeting are not signed (or dated), nor is the BAC Report signed, notwithstanding the space in the respective documents for the Chairperson to sign. Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele also noted that there would also have been recordings of the meetings, signed attendance registers and duly signed minutes. But these are not included in any of the papers.

153. The foregoing matters, they said, are evidence of fraudulent and corrupt conduct that was associated with the locomotives contract. They in effect suggested that the minutes (of the CTPC) and the Report (of the BAC) are forgeries.

154. However, soon after they testified at the Commission, Prasa decided to institute disciplinary proceedings against them. In affidavits to the Commission, Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele complained that they were being victimised by Prasa because they had testified at the Commission. However, the Chairperson of Prasa's new Board, Mr Leonard Ramatlakane, disputed that allegation in an affidavit that he submitted to the Commission. This led to further affidavits from Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele and further responding affidavits with accompanying documents from Mr Ramatlaklane. The affidavits referred to herein deal with a number of issues, not all relevant hereto.

155. In his affidavits to the Commission, Mr Ramatlakane denied that the institution of disciplinary proceedings against Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele were in any way related to their giving evidence at the Commission. In support of that denial, he said that his Board was concerned about several issues that had arisen at Prasa, among them that there had not been consequences for management and compliance failures at Prasa; there was inadequate record keeping, and in some instances no records at all; and an increase in irregular expenditure. As a result, he said, his Board had undertaken various investigations to get to the root cause of the concerns. Among the matters that it investigated was role of different Prasa employees in the award of the locomotives tender to Swifambo, including the roles of Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele.

156. Mr Ramatlakane said that the evidence that is now at the disposal of his Board confirms that Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele attended the CTPC meeting of 11 July 2012. In support of that allegation, he relied on an affidavit by Mr Sydney Khuzwayo, who was the temporary secretary of the CTPC/BAC during 2012. In his affidavit, which was also submitted to the Commission, Mr Khuzwayo said he was a member of the CTPC that met on 11 July 2012. He said he had made handwritten notes of what had transpired at the meeting and annexed a copy of those notes to his affidavit. According to his notes, the eight persons who according to the unsigned minutes of the CTPC annexed to Mr Molefe's affidavit attended the meeting, were in fact present. Mr Khuzwayo also said that Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele had signed declaration of interest forms on 11 July 2012 and annexed those to his affidavit.

157. There is one further matter that arises from Mr Ramatlakane's affidavit. It concerns a formal transcript of a tape recording of a meeting of the CTPC that was allegedly held on 19 July 2012 and at which the locomotives tender was again discussed. According to the transcript, the following persons were present at this meeting: Mr Mbatha, Mr Holele, Mr Khuzwayo, Mr Mathobela and Ms Shezi. Insofar as the transcript is concerned, the following needs to be stressed: this is the first and only indication that there was a further meeting of the CTPC after 11 July 2012 at which the locomotives tender was considered. From what is recorded to have been said at the meeting, it is difficult to piece together precisely why it was called and what the final outcome was, as there appears to be no formal resolution that was adopted. However, it would appear that after Mr Mbatha had conveyed the resolution of 11 July 2012 to someone senior at Prasa, he was urged to ask the CTPC to modify to some extent the resolution it had adopted on 11 July 2012. It appears from the transcript that this is what was done at the meeting of 19 July 2012. However, there is no written record of the resolution adopted at the meeting of 19 July 2012.

158. In their responses to the foregoing allegations, Ms Ngoye again denied that she was present at the CTPC meeting of 11 July 2012. She challenged the correctness of what was recorded in Mr Khuzwayo's notes about the meeting. Mr Holele reiterated his denial that he was present at the CTPC meeting of 11 July 2012. He also appears to deny being present at the CTPC meeting of 19 July.

159. It is regrettable that new evidence relating to the meeting of the CTPC was received only at a late stage, and after Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele had testified that they had not attended the meeting. None of the evidence relating to the CTPC meetings of 11 or 19 July 2012 has been tested by cross-examination. Although Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele gave oral evidence they were not cross-examined; and the new evidence from Prasa is set out in affidavits. In light of the foregoing, it is not possible to make a firm decision on whether or not Ms Ngoye and Mr Holele attended the meeting of the CTPC on 11 July 2012 and whether Mr Holele attended the CTPC meeting of 19 July 2012. Nevertheless, it must be accepted that the new evidence presented appears to cast doubt on their version that they were not part of the process that recommended that Swifambo be the preferred bidder for the locomotives contract.

160. Be that as it may, the new evidence considered in the paragraphs above reinforces the contentions set out in Mr Molefe's affidavits in the Swifambo review application that the procurement process followed by Prasa to acquire the locomotives was seriously flawed. Certainly, the new evidence confirms that not much reliance can be placed on the documents that recommended that Swifambo be approved as the preferred bidder. In addition, the transcript suggests that on 19 July 2012 the CTPC re-visited the decision that it had taken on 11 July 2012 – after being urged to do so by someone senior.

161. It is clear that all those who were involved in the procurement process for the acquisition of the locomotives should be made to account for their actions.

THE SIYANGENA REVIEW

162. Ms Martha Ngoye made the Founding Affidavit in the application that Prasa instituted in the High Court to have reviewed and set aside certain contracts that Prasa had concluded with Siyangena Technologies (Pty) Ltd. The application was instituted on 5 March 2018.

163. In respect of the awards of tenders to Siyangena and the contracts that Prasa concluded with Siyangena, Ms Ngoye was not able to give a complete picture of what happened or what decisions were taken. According to her, there were a number of reasons for this. Various versions of documents and what supposedly transpired at meetings existed, and obtaining information from within Prasa proved to be very difficult. A number of persons actively impeded the investigations by removing hard copies of documents from Prasa's premises and deleting electronic copies from their computers. Moreover, Mr Othusitse Mogolelwa, one of Prasa's IT Specialists was found to have deliberately deleted information from Mr Montana's computer on the instruction of Mr Montana. Following an arbitration, he was dismissed.

164. For the purposes of her evidence to the Commission, Ms Ngoye prepared a further affidavit which she deposed to on 15 March 2020. In that affidavit, she summarised the evidence given in her affidavit in support of Prasa's review application, and responded to evidence given in Siyangena's answering affidavit.

165. The review application that was considered by the High Court was the second application by Prasa to have reviewed and set aside certain contracts that it had concluded with Siyangena. The first review application was dismissed on a procedural point: Prasa had not complied with the 180-day period set out in the Promotion of Administrative Justice Act 3 of 2000 (PAJA) for a review application to be instituted. However, following a decision by the CC that a review application brought by an organ of state is based on the legality principle, as opposed to a review under PAJA, Prasa instituted a new application in March 2018 in which it sought the same or similar relief as sought in the application that had been dismissed.

166. In both review applications, Prasa applied for various contracts between it and Siyangena, to be reviewed and set aside. The bases of Prasa's applications is that they were concluded without the requisite authority, and/or in violation of s 217 of the Constitution, the Preferential Procurement Policy Framework Act (PPPFA) and Prasa's SCM policies and procedures. Also, there were property dealings between an attorney associated with Siyangena and two Prasa officials, including Mr Montana himself.

167. The general bases on which Siyangena opposed the relief sought were as follows: the bulk of the founding affidavit consisted of inadmissible hearsay evidence and inadmissible documentary evidence; the institution of the review application was unauthorised and Prasa had unduly delayed in prosecuting it; even if it were to be found that the review application should succeed, Siyangena ought not to be deprived of what was due to it under the contracts, because Siyangena was not a party to, nor involved in what transpired within Prasa in relation to the tender; charges laid against those allegedly involved in corruption had not resulted in any prosecutions; and the core of the attack was a power-play between Mr Molefe and Mr Montana.

Background to review application

168. In 2009, in preparation of the Confederation Cup of 2009, as a "pilot project", two railway stations (Nasrec and Doornfontein) were to be developed by Intersite, a subsidiary of Prasa. Intersite awarded the contract to a company called Enzo to upgrade Nasrec and to a company called Rainbow to upgrade the Doornfontein station. These companies appointed Siyangena as a sub-contractor to install speed gates. There were no complaints about the process.

169. For the World Cup preparations in 2010, Siyangena's "contract" was extended to an additional five stations. Ms Ngoye testified that there were several fundamental problems with this "extension". Primarily, no procurement process preceded the "extension". In addition, Siyangena had not been a contractor on the Nasrec and Doornfontein stations: it had only been a sub-contractor to the entities which had been appointed as the contractors. Accordingly, there was no legal basis for an "extension" of Siyangena's contract when the contracts of the main contractors had not been extended.

170. Ms Ngoye also stated that, in addition being unlawful for non-compliance with s 217 of the Constitution, what took place prior to the extension was improper and irregular. In this regard, she stated that a report that Mr Gantsho sent to Mr Montana on 22 February 2010 said that the gates being offered were not suitable; an associated company of Siyangena, ESS, was asked for a quotation, but their gates were "very expensive"; the extension had not been budgeted for, but following a telephone call in which Mr Montana advised him to contract with Siyangena, Mr Gantsho requested that Mr Montana approve the "extension" of the Confed Cup contracts to seven further stations. In the request, Mr Gantsho stated that Prasa had no funds for the project, but the engagement of Siyangena should nevertheless proceed.

171. Thereafter Mr Montana appears to have approved the request, subject to engagement with the Finance Department on the availability of the funds. Siyangena thereafter submitted a written proposal. However, Mr Piet Sebola, the Senior Manager: Projects raised several concerns about the process being followed and the proposal. Instead of addressing the issues that were raised, it was decided that the project would not proceed under Prasa, but would be implemented by Intersite, meaning Mr Sebola would no longer be involved. Thereafter, Mr Sindane requested approval for the "extension" but this was refused on the basis that it was the approval of Intersite's Board that was required. Ms Ngoye states that there is no record that Intersite's Board gave its approval. Despite this, Siyangena was appointed to install access gates at the train stations close to these stadia. Ms Ngoye went on to say that it was Mr Gantsho who championed Siyangena's cause and that Mr Montana gave his approval.

172. Regarding Phase 1 of the project Ms Ngoye said Prasa's Chief Procurement Officer (CPO), Mr Chris Mbatha, decided that eight companies be invited to a briefing session. It however emerged that the selected invitees had not been given copies of the RFPs. Nevertheless, the BEC sat for two days in December 2010 and awarded Siyangena the highest points, although another bidder Protea Coin, had quoted a lower price. Mr Montana decided that Prasa would not proceed with the transaction but Mr Gantsho urged "the team" not to relent and requested reasons for Mr Montana's decision.

173. The matter suddenly came back to life on the eve of a sitting of the CTPC on 14 February 2011. There, according to a submission made to the CTPC it was a contest between two companies, Siyangena and Protea Coin; but Protea Coin had failed because it had not provided something referred to as a "funding model". The submission requested the CTPC to recommend to the FCIP the appointment of Siyangena for a project called ISAMS for an amount of R1,1 billion over five months. Having deliberated on the submission, the BAC decided not to recommend the award to Siyangena. However, Prasa documents show a document with a signature that purports to be that of the BAC's then Chairperson, Ms Tara Ngubane, on minutes of the BAC that records a decision recommending the award to Siyangena for an amount of R1,1 billion.

174. On 17 February 2011, just three days after the BAC meeting, the matter came before the Board's FCIP Committee, which was requested to recommend to the Board the appointment of Siyangena for the ISAMS project. Minutes of this meeting show that the FCIP recommended to the Board the award of this contract to Siyangena at a sum of R1,9 billion. There is no indication in the minutes that the views of the CTPC were shared with the FCIP or how the FCIP would have found its way clear to recommend this award.

175. What was also strange was that one of the items on the agenda of the meeting related to Prasa's Medium-Term Expenditure Framework (MTEF) budget. According to the MTEF budget that was recommended by the FCIP Committee at the meeting, the project had been allocated R317 million over the period of the MTEF. Despite this, the FCIP Committee recommended the award of a contract for R1,9 billion over a period of 18 months, which was half of the MTEF period.

176. The Board approved the recommendation of the FCIP but did not indicate the contract amount. The Board mandated management to negotiate with Siyangena. Mr Mbatha initiated discussions with Siyangena.

177. According to Ms Ngoye, the irregularities in the award of the contract with Siyangena were lack of an open tender process and no request to deviate from the normal open tender process; no RFP and no evaluation criteria (bidders were asked to make a "shot in the dark" and hope that Prasa would be happy with it). Although Protea Coin's tendered contract price was R1,3 billion, much cheaper than that of Siyangena, it lost because it did not have a "funding model". Additionally the minutes of the CTPC and of the Board were forged. (If the minutes of the FCIP recommending the award and the tendered amount were true, they are self-contradictory: they approve one amount on the MTEF budget and another one for the contract amount).

178. Ms Ngoye stated in her affidavit that after the conclusion of the R1,9 billion contract, Prasa and Siyangena concluded further contracts for the extension of Phases 1 and 2.

Extension of Phase 1 and Phase 2

179. Phase 1 was followed by an extension of Phase 1. In the extension, twelve stations were selected under the guise of filling gaps in the corridors of the 69 stations that were part of the Phase 1 tender. However, this extension required Siyangena to install the ISAMS on twelve stations for an amount of R350 million. Siyangena agreed to do so. The patent irregularity of the request and Siyangena's agreeing to comply was that there simply was no procurement process that preceded this "extension".

180. Be that as it may, this irregular extension was followed by what was referred to as Phase 2. This Phase had a number of stops and starts. However, it is not necessary to refer to all of them, save for one that goes to the heart of the irregularity of this award.

181. In her affidavit and evidence, Ms Ngoye pointed out that for a change there was an RFP before a contract was concluded. However, instead of requiring functionality, the RFP required that the parties be accredited to procure and install certain branded equipment. One or two of the parties who submitted a tender complained that this made the requirement restrictive. Prasa's SCM Policy discourages the use of branded products in RFPs and prefers the requirement for functionality. The specifications were tailor-made for Siyangena, and Siyangena was awarded the contract.

182. Thereafter, an addendum to the contract appeared in the midst of an urgent interdict application that Siyangena had launched after Prasa had instructed it to stop working. No Prasa employee was aware of the "addendum". However, Siyangena produced it as part of its interdict papers. The "addendum", signed by Mr Montana on behalf of Prasa, purported to engage Siyangena to replace some equipment and to maintain equipment installed under the Phase 1 contract for a period of three years.

183. Considering the amounts it obliged Prasa to pay, it was a strange document: it consisted of only five pages and did not include a service level agreement regulating Siyangena's maintenance obligations. It required Prasa to pay Siyangena R10 million a month. The obvious irregularity about the addendum was that no procurement process was followed before Siyangena was appointed to undertake the services and replace the old equipment.

184. In addition to setting out the irregularities noted above, Ms Ngoye said Prasa was not authorised to proceed with works contemplated in Phase 1 and Phase 2 and the addendum. This is because the transactions had not been budgeted for and no approval had been obtained from the Minister of Transport.

185. A Full Bench of the High Court reviewed and set aside the contracts on account of the irregularities identified by Prasa and also on account of the property dealings referred to earlier that involved Mr Van der Walt on the one hand, and, Mr Gantsho or Mr Montana, on the other.

186. Ms Ngoye said in her affidavit that a disciplinary hearing was held into Mr Gantsho's conduct and Mr Gantsho was dismissed by Prasa.

187. Ms Ngoye noted that Prasa reported the Siyangena contract irregularities, and allegations regarding the property dealings to the DPCI. The investigation moved at a snail's pace. Among the allegations are that Siyangena paid R550 million to a company called Hail Way Trading, which shares a registered address with Royal Security, of which Mr Roy Moodley is a director. In addition, criminal charges in respect of the above matters were laid at the Brooklyn Police Station. Despite a lapse of more than five years, not much appears to have been done.

188. Mr Montana filed an "intervening witness statement" in the review application. In this affidavit, he noted an earlier order of the Full Bench giving him the right to respond to the allegations made in Prasa's papers. The thrust of his affidavit is as follows:

    188.1 First, he noted that three investigations formed the bases of Prasa's allegations in the Siyangena review application. One was by the Public Protector whose findings on about half the matters that were referred to her are set out in her Report titled Derailed. Then there were investigations by the National Treasury, which had not been completed. He had seen draft reports that had been compiled but had not been given an opportunity to respond thereto. In any case, he said, they do not make any finding of fraud or corruption. The third investigation was conducted by Werksmans. He said that he did not "recognise" this investigation because among other things: Werksmans had been irregularly appointed; it had utilised "illegal measures" against him; its investigation was a "witch-hunt" against him; and it and Prasa claim that "irregular appointments automatically translate into corruption".

    188.2 Second, the two contracts awarded to Siyangena in 2011 and 2014 went through a competitive bidding process and were awarded by the Board and not by him, as the amounts involved were beyond his delegated authority [of R100 million]. Despite this, the Board members were not joined as parties to the review application. He denied receiving any gratification, alleging that reports to that effect were made by a journalist who linked him to Mr Van der Walt. Mr Montana said that Mr Van der Walt was not an employee or director of Siyangena, had not done work for Prasa and had not been involved with the Siyangena tenders in question.

    188.3 Third, the review application was part of a "political vendetta" in which organs of state are used to further personal political interests. He accused Mr Molefe of a range of illegal or improper conduct, including "laundering" money from Prasa for his personal benefit, being conflicted, unduly and unlawfully favouring a service provider, SA Fence and Gate, at huge cost to Prasa; as a director claiming remuneration not due to him, which he was instructed to pay back; and irregularly using a Prasa motor vehicle for personal purposes. However, these matters were not investigated by Werksmans.

    188.4 Fourth, Mr Montana also alleged that Ms Ngoye, who it will be recalled had made the affidavits in the second Siyangena review application, was bitter because he had removed her as the CEO of Intersite and she had a personal vendetta against him. She had also irregularly approved a large payment to SA Fence and Gate without Board approval.

    188.5 Fifth, Mr Montana challenged the merits of Prasa's application for the review and setting aside of the contracts on among others the following bases: it was false to allege that the requisite needs assessments had not been undertaken; in fact, a business case had been developed for the ISAMS project; the documentary search tool used by Ms Ngoye was selective and supported her "narrative"; the specifications that were mooted by Ms Ngoye had not been approved by Prasa; as demonstrated by an examination of the background and "true facts", it was not correct that Prasa needed to obtain approval from the Minister of Transport for the ISAMS programme, as it did not constitute the acquisition of a significant asset; Mr Montana disputed Ms Ngoye's allegation that the GCEO was "intimately" involved in the procurement process; he also disputed her allegations that the appointment of Siyangena was at R1,1 billion and that this was changed to R1,9 billion, alleging that the sum of R1,1 billion was for the capital amount only for the supply and installation of the speed gates, while the R1,9 billion included rates of exchange, warranties and maintenance; he alleged that Prasa's SCM policy provided for deviations from competitive bidding where there was a proper motivation.

189. As was pointed out above, among the bases on which the Full Bench reviewed and set aside the Siyangena contracts that Prasa sought to impugn were the allegations of property dealings between Mr Van der Walt and Mr Montana. The Commission itself investigated property transactions in which Mr Van der Walt and Mr Montana were involved.

The Oellermann Report

190. The backdrop against which the property transactions between Mr Montana and Mr Van der Walt took place is of significance, when considering the allegations that Ms Ngoye made in respect of the lawfulness of Prasa's awards of contracts to Siyangena and the prism through which to view the propriety of Mr Montana's role in the awards of those contracts.

191. Based on what was said in Ms Ngoye's affidavit, the Oellermann Report states that several matters deserve highlighting. In June 2014, Prasa appointed Siyangena to execute the ISAMS Phase 2 Project. Three months later, the parties agreed in an addendum (signed by Mr Montana on 30 September 2014) that Siyangena would provide further services to Prasa – costing an additional R800 million.

192. At this time between August 2014 and October 2014, Mr Montana was involved in arrangements for the purchase of three properties for a total of more than R36 million.

193. The Commission investigated four property transactions in which Mr Montana was involved or showed an interest. One of them was a property he sold to Precise Trade and Invest 02 (Pty) Ltd, one was a property that was transferred to him and the other two were properties in which he had shown an interest in purchasing but which were eventually sold and transferred to the name of Precise Trade.

194. The purchases were funded through arrangements made by Mr Adrian Van der Walt, an attorney who has acknowledged that he has acted for Siyangena and other companies with which Mr Mario Ferreira is associated. Mr Van der Walt, who apparently now resides in Texas, United States, was the sole director of Precise Trade. In addition, only a few months earlier, in May 2014, Precise Trade bought a house from Mr Montana. The agreed purchase price was R6,8 million, which appeared to be R3 million more than the house was valued.

195. Mr Oellermann drew the inference from an analysis of the four property transactions that Mr Montana was central to each of the purchases, but attempts were made to conceal his link, even in respect of the one property that was eventually transferred into his name. Despite this, and the fact that all the properties were fully paid for, on the documents that Mr Oellermann has been able to get his hands on, Mr Montana himself appeared not to have paid even a cent towards the purchases.

196. Most of the finance for the purchases was made available by Mr Van der Walt, through an Investec Bank account in the name of Precise Trade. In a letter to his erstwhile co-directors, Mr Van der Walt suggested that quite large amounts of money flowed into Precise Trade's account from "TMM" [TMM Holdings (Pty) Ltd], an entity linked to Mr Ferreira. In an affidavit in response to the Oellermann Report, Siyangena denied that it had made any payments to Precise Trade. Documents indicate that TMM, together with Mr Ferreira, had entered into a joint venture with Mr Van der Walt.

197. In his Report, Mr Oellermann said that these matters called for a frank explanation about the four transactions, principally from Mr Montana, Mr Van der Walt and Mr Ferreira, who played a principal role in securing the addendum that in September 2014 led to the extension of Siyangena's contract with Prasa. None has been forthcoming. When he testified, Mr Montana did not volunteer any explanation save to say that he and Mr Van der Walt had a business relationship.

198. While Mr Van der Walt is no longer in the country, one of the fellow directors of his law firm, Loubser van der Walt Inc., Mr Nicholas Loubser, after being served with a subpoena, provided the Commission's investigators with several documents relating to the property transactions. Mr Loubser also gave evidence. Among the documents that were provided to the investigators was the transactional history of Precise Trade's Investec bank account. It is from this account that many of the payments relating to the property transactions were made, and into which Mr Van der Walt allegedly deposited monies which had been deposited into other accounts by Mr Ferreira's entities. In addition, in two letters to his partners, Mr Van der Walt identified Mr Ferreira's entities as being the main source of the money that was paid to settle the purchase price and other expenses associated with the purchase of the three properties and the property that Precise Trade bought from Mr Montana.

199. In addition to the documents that Mr Loubser made available to the Commission, its investigators have come into possession of several documents connected to the transactions. Among them are the following: deeds of transfer, offers to purchase and communications preceding the conclusion of the contracts and subsequently about their implementation. The Commission's investigators are also in possession of affidavits or sworn statements made by an estate agent, an owner and a conveyancing attorney. Documents concerning each transaction were annexed to Mr Oellermann's Report.

200. It will be recalled that that Ms Ngoye said Prasa only became aware of the addendum when Siyangena annexed it to its interdict papers. The addendum was signed by Siyangena on 19 September 2014 and by Mr Montana, on behalf of Prasa, on 30 September 2014. The cost to Prasa was nearly R800 million. Ms Ngoye raised concerns about the validity of the addendum. The Report notes that the addendum was concluded shortly before, during and/or soon after the period during which Mr Montana was taking steps that led to the purchase of the three properties (in Waterkloof, Sandhurst and Hurlingham), the first two by Precise Trade and the last by Mr Montana.

201. It was not suggested in any evidence or papers before the Commission that Mr Montana had purchased properties to the value of some R36 million. Rather, the evidence was that he was involved, either personally or through his Trust, in interactions that led to the purchase of three properties valued at R36 million and that one of those properties was in fact registered in his name.

202. The property transactions with which Mr Montana was involved were as follows: First, Precise Trade bought from Mr Montana a house that he owned in Parkwood, Johannesburg, for R6,8 million. The price was R3,3 million more than Mr Montana's own banker had valued it only twenty months earlier. Second, after Mr Montana had expressed interest in a house in Waterkloof, Pretoria, it was eventually sold to Precise Trade for R11 million, but when she moved out the previous owner handed over the keys to Mr Montana. Third, after Mr Montana's Trust had made an offer to buy a house in Sandhurst, Johannesburg, Precise Trade bought it for R13,9 million. Fourth, Mr Montana bought a house in Hurlingham for R11,5 million.

203. The above transactions had been widely reported in the media long before the Commission began its investigations. However, the details of the transactions and how payments were made only became known as a result of the Commission's investigations. As regards payments for these properties, the evidence presented at the Commission was based to a large extent on the transactional history of Precise Trade's Investec bank account and what Mr Van der Walt said in the two letters to his partners which have been referred to above.

204. With regard to the transactions in which Mr Montana or his family trust was involved, the facts were based on documents which Mr Montana did not dispute when he gave evidence on these matters.

The Parkwood property

205. Mr Montana bought the Parkwood Property on or about 4 July 2008 for R1,85 million. In August 2012, Mr Montana's private banker (from Absa Private Bank) valued the property at some R3,5 million. On 5 May 2014, Precise Trade, represented by Mr Van der Walt, offered to purchase the property from

Mr Montana for R6,8 million, an offer Mr Montana accepted on the same day. Transfer was affected on 20 February 2015. Mr Montana made a profit of nearly R5 million [R4,95 million] on the property.

206. As regards payment, the agreement provided for a deposit of R2,5 million to be paid to Loubser van der Walt Inc. by about 4 June 2014 and the balance of the purchase price to be paid into Loubser van der Walt Inc.'s trust account by about 3 August 2014.

207. Payments towards the purchase price were made, but not in accordance with the agreement. Among the deviations were the following: the money was not paid into Loubser van der Walt Inc.'s account; and a "deposit" of R2,25 million, not R2,5 million, was made but on 18 June 2014, not 4 June 2014. Moreover, periodic payments were made from June 2014 to February 2015. In other words, payment of the purchase price was not made by 3 August 2014, as required by the agreement. Based on the entries in Precise Trade's Investec account, from which all the payments were made, Mr Montana was paid R439 200 less. When questioned about this at the Commission, the thrust of Mr Montana's explanation was that Mr Van der Walt may have paid the money from a different account and not from Precise Trade's Investec account.

208. The first deposits into the Investec account, being in the amounts of R1,85 million and R4 million, were, according to Mr Van der Walt's written note on the transaction account and in his letters to his partners, made by TMM – and reflected in the account on 18 June 2014. That is the day on which payment of the "deposit" of R2,25 million was made – from the Investec account. The next three payments to Mr Montana from the account totalled R860 800.

209. Six weeks after the agreement of sale was concluded, Mr Montana signed an addendum which imposed on him onerous obligations to effect – at his cost – specified improvements and/or alterations to the property that he had just sold. The addendum recorded that although a friend of Mr Montana was residing at the Parkwood Property, Mr Montana undertook to give Precise Trade vacant possession within 30 days of registration, if Precise Trade and Mr Montana's friend were unable to conclude a lease agreement for at least R20 000 a month. Mr Montana's friend continued occupying the property after transfer on 20 February 2015, but no payment of rental by the friend is reflected in Precise Trade's bank statement. The addendum stipulated that Mr Montana had to bear the costs of the alterations. Surprisingly, Mr Montana had improvements effected to the bedroom even though the addendum did not require this.

210. What is also surprising is that Mr Montana sent the invoices for the improvements and alterations to Mr Van der Walt to foot the bill, telling him at one stage that he was "under pressure to pay the contractor for additional work". The amounts that Mr Montana required Mr Van der Walt to pay totalled more than R1 million. Asked to explain this, Mr Montana said that there was a special and dynamic relationship between him and Mr Van der Walt and they had not "strictly aligned" the payments with the agreement. But he did not have a problem with this as he and Mr Van der Walt were working together on many properties and there were many transactions beyond what "we have here".

211. In response to Mr Oellermann's Report, Siyangena said in an affidavit in support of an application to cross-examine Mr Oellermann that it had made no payments to Precise Trade. It did not dispute that it had made payments to other entities and that, if what Mr Van der Walt had told his partners and had recorded in handwriting on the bank account was correct, its payments to those other entities appear to have found their way into Precise Trade's Investec account. It would appear that in noting the source of those funds, Mr Van der Walt was referring to the ultimate source of those monies.

The Waterkloof property

212. On 25 August 2014, the Aanmani Guest House CC, represented by Ms Karen de Beer, and Mr Johan Smith, in his capacity as Trustee of the Minor Property Trust, a Trust the beneficiaries of which were Mr Montana's children, entered into an agreement in terms of which the CC was to sell the Waterkloof Property to Mr Smith for R11 million. The purchase price was to be paid as follows: a non-refundable deposit of R3,5 million payable within fourteen days; and the purchaser to render approved guarantees within 60 days as security for the balance of R7,5 million.

213. The R3,5 million deposit was paid from Precise Trade's Investec account on 23 September 2014 and reflected as "minor property trust loan". The entry just before that on the copy of the transactional account reflects, seemingly in Mr Van der Walt's handwriting, that TMM had paid that same amount into Precise Trade's account on the same day. According to Mr Van der Walt's second letter, the balance of R7,5 million was paid directly to the transferring attorneys from TMM. Thereafter, on 25 February 2015, Precise Trade paid R1 105 084. 92 to the transferring attorneys in respect of the costs of the transfer. Not coincidentally, it would appear, the entry prior to that entry on Precise Trade's account reflects a deposit of that exact same amount on the same day. The handwritten note reflects that payment was made by TMM.

214. Payments made from Precise Trade's Investec account in respect of the Waterkloof Property appear to be consistent with the agreement between the CC and Mr Smith, in his capacity as trustee of the Minor Property Trust. However, on or about 20 February 2015, a new agreement about the purchase of the Waterkloof Property was concluded.

215. The most important difference between the two agreements is that in the new agreement Precise Trade was reflected as the purchaser, in the stead of Mr Smith, the trustee. Other changes are that the deposit of R3,5 million had already been paid; a further amount of R1,5 million had been paid to the seller; and the "balance of the purchase price of R6,5 million" had been paid into the transferring attorney's trust account. The new agreement also reflected that occupation had been given to the purchaser on 1 December 2014 and that the purchaser would be responsible for rent of R50 000 a month until registration. The domicilium of the purchaser was changed from that of Mr Smith to that of Loubser van der Walt Inc. The property was transferred to Precise Trade on 8 April 2015.

216. Notwithstanding that what is set out above suggests that Mr Montana himself had not played any role in the transaction, according to an affidavit and evidence given at the Commission by the sole member of the CC, Ms Karen de Beer, Mr Montana indeed played a key role, which is considered in the paragraphs hereunder.

217. According to Ms De Beer, Mr Montana's role in this transaction may be summarised as follows. On 10 February 2013 she and Mr Montana concluded a deed of sale in terms of which she sold to Mr Montana her member's interest in the CC for R10,5 million but the deal fell through ("the earlier agreement"). When Ms De Beer put the property on the market again in August 2014, Mr Montana again indicated an interest in the property but Ms De Beer would not entertain an offer from him, unless he paid a substantial deposit. He agreed to pay a non-refundable deposit of R3,5 million. Whereas the earlier agreement had been concluded in the name of Mr Montana, this new agreement was in the name of Mr Smith. The "new agreement" is the agreement referred to above concluded on 25 August 2014. Mr Montana, however, later asked Ms De Beer to change the name of the purchaser from Johan Smith to Precise Trade. The balance of the R7,5 million was eventually paid by Mr Van der Walt, whom Ms De Beer described as "Montana's attorney", and the deal went through.

218. Ms De Beer said that she had first met Mr Montana in mid-November 2014, when he walked through the house as he wanted "to check some things". She then moved out. On 26 November 2014, she handed the keys to the property to Mr Montana. The next day she sent an email to her neighbours telling them that "the new owner of [her] property was Lucky Montana". She was in no doubt that the CC had sold the property to Mr Montana and that the contracting entities were merely his "alter ego".

The Sandhurst property

219. Mr Montana signed an offer to purchase the property on or about 26 October 2014, after he had attended a show day. The price set out in the offer to purchase was R13,9 million. The seller, a Mr NG Kohler, accepted the offer on 28 October 2014.. On 6 November 2014, Mr Van der Walt wrote to the estate agent, Mr Louis Green, saying that he held R5 million in "our trust account" towards the purchase price. He asked for the Offer to Purchase to be forwarded to him and what the amount of the deposit was. On 7 November 2014, Mr Green sent a copy of a sale agreement and said the deposit payable was R3,9 million. Later that day, Mr Van der Walt wrote to Mr Green confirming that Precise Trade had paid R5 million into the estate agency's trust account with beneficiary reference being kohler/montana. An entry in a copy of Precise Trade's Investec account reflects that on 7 November 2014 an amount of R5 million was paid to the estate agency for 119 Empire Place and an entry on the previous day reflected a payment of a deposit of R5 million seemingly from an entity identified by Mr Van der Walt as "Pimemtal JV".

220. On 25 November 2014, a month after Mr Montana had signed the offer to purchase the property, Mr Van der Walt wrote to Mr Green asking that the "buyer" be changed from Mr Montana to Precise Trade. A new offer to purchase by Precise Trade, was signed by Mr Van der Walt on 26 November 2014 and returned to Mr Green. In the new offer, Mr Green noted that a R5 million deposit had been received on 7 November 2014. On 6 March 2015 Precise Trade paid the balance of the purchase price.

221. Although Precise Trade was reflected as the buyer on 26 November 2014, correspondence relating to the property was still sent to Mr Montana. For example: on 27 November 2014, the seller asked Mr Montana (whom he addressed as "Lucky") if he was interested in taking occupation before transfer; thereafter, in response to a query to him by the seller about payment of the transfer costs, on 3 February 2015, Mr Montana emailed an apology for the delay and said Mr Van der Walt had undertaken to pay by the following day at the latest. Precise Trade paid the transfer costs of R1 105 537.30 on the following day. On 6 March 2015 the balance of the purchase price, being R8,9 million, was paid by Precise Trade. Transfer of the property from Mr Kohler to Precise Trade was affected on that day.

222. Even though ownership of the Sandhurst Property was transferred to Precise Trade on 6 March 2015, subsequent exchanges relating to the property show that Mr Montana was still intimately involved with the property. Among the exchanges that confirm this are the following: a request to Mr Montana on 12 March 2015 asking him to co-operate with the sellers in the transfer of the electricity account; and communications by Mr Green to the sellers indicating that he had spoken to Mr Montana about the electricity and other issues such as the pool cover. Mr Green communicated with Mr Montana about the property as late as 23 June 2015.

223. However, on 10 May 2015 Mr Van der Walt suddenly asked Mr Green why he had copied Mr Montana on an email relating to the pool cover, saying: "You were well aware of the fact, and as I explained to you last year, before the property was even bought by my company, that Mnr L Montana has nothing to do with Precise [Trade] or this property. Please refrain from this action in the future." Mr Green apologised. However, Mr Green continued communicating with Mr Montana about the Sandhurst Property.

The Hurlingham property

224. On 14 May 2015, Ms Merileon Gevisser, the owner of the Hurlingham Property, accepted an offer by Mr Montana to purchase the property for R13,5 million. The purchase price was payable as follows: a deposit of R2 million, and the balance of R11,5 by the following day. (It is necessary to record at this stage that a previous contract between Mr Montana and the owner for the sale of the same property to him did not proceed.) A deposit of R2 million had been paid on 23 March 2015 from Precise Trade's Investec account. An earlier entry on the copy of the transaction account records that on the same day a deposit of R5 million had been made into the account. Mr Van der Walt's handwritten note says that it was a "TMM grant". On 15 May 2015, payment of the R11,5 million was made to the conveyancing attorney by an entity called "Midtownbrace". The property was transferred to Mr Montana on 28 July 2015.

225. Several significant events and developments preceded Mr Montana's purchase of the Hurlingham Property. The same agent who had been involved in the sale of the Sandhurst Property, Mr Louis Green, had been mandated by the owner to market and sell the Hurlingham Property. Mr Montana attended a show day on or about 12 October 2014, expressed an interest in purchasing the property and asked that an offer to purchase be sent to Mr Johan Smith of the Minor Property Trust. Mr Smith, representing the Trust, then submitted an offer to purchase the property for R12 million. Mr Green told the seller that they had received the offer from Mr Montana [though it] "is in the name of his Trust".

226. On 30 October 2014 a new offer was made, this time in the name of the Trust. The purchase price offered was R13,5 million. It would appear, however, that nothing came of these two offers and that not much happened for four months. On 3 March 2015, Mr Montana himself made an offer to the seller to purchase the property for R13,5 million, payable as follows: a deposit of R2 million within seven days; and the balance of R11,5 million to be secured by approved guarantees. The seller accepted the offer on the same day. The R2 million deposit was recorded in the conveyancer's bank account on 24 March 2015. On 14 April 2015, Mr Van der Walt, on instructions from Mr Montana, asked for more time to submit the guarantee. Following concerns that the conveyancer expressed about the guarantees, that agreement was cancelled and a new one was concluded and implemented, with transfer being affected on 28 July 2015.

227. As noted above, whilst Precise Trade paid the guarantee of R2 million, payment of the balance of R11,5 million was made by Midtownbrace (Pty) Ltd. This payment was dealt with in a rather terse affidavit that Mr Andre Wagner submitted after he was invited to deal with what the Report had said in respect of the Hurlingham Property.

228. Mr Wagner said he was a representative of Midtownbrace and that he and Mr Van Der Walt, who were good friends, had "engaged in joint ventures". Mr Van der Walt had introduced him to Mr Montana. Midtownbrace and Mr Montana had agreed on a development in 2015; the "full investment amount [totalling R11,5 million] was paid over to Mr Montana. The company was satisfied with "the agreements" to secure its investments but had issued summons against Mr Montana "if he defaults again".

Mr Montana's objection to the evidence

229. Mr Montana was not in a position to dispute what was said in the documents produced as evidence. In addition, insofar as payments for the properties, whether to him or in respect of the properties in which he had expressed an interest in purchasing for himself or his Trust, he was also not in a position to dispute what Mr Van der Walt had told his partners or had recorded in handwriting on the Investec bank statement. In the circumstances, the relevant factual matrix was not in dispute.

230. Mr Montana however attacked the evidence on several grounds:

    230.1 He alleged that the Commission's investigations were based on a 22-page affidavit that Mr Paul O'Sullivan had submitted to the police and the Werksmans Report. As a result, the Commission was aligning itself with certain people, whom he alleged had acted unlawfully in their investigations. The short answer to this allegation is as follows: as it was entitled to do, the Commission considered what was said by Prasa in its application to review and set aside certain contracts that it had concluded with Siyangena; the documents that it relied on were in the main contracts and communications that were annexed to the Siyangena application papers; the more significant allegations against Mr Montana related to the payments made in respect of the properties; and the main source of that information was Mr Van der Walt's former partner, Mr Nicholas Loubser, who made available to the Commission several important documents, in particular the transactional history of Precise Trade's Investec bank account. In addition, Mr Loubser gave oral evidence at the Commission. In the circumstances, there is no merit in that complaint by Mr Montana.

    230.2 Mr Montana also objected to the commentary on Mr Oellermann's Report being considered by the Commission. The difficulty with that objection is that, properly considered, the "commentary" that forms part of the Report is nothing more than inferences to be drawn from the facts, events and circumstances that are detailed in the annexures to Mr Oellermann's Report. Of course, where the inferences that are drawn are not reasonable or do not flow from a proper consideration of the documents annexed to the Report, they should not be and are not accepted. The approach adopted was to consider the contents of the annexures and determine what conclusions should be drawn, having regard to the totality of the evidence led and the documents available.

230.3 At a late stage in the evidence he was giving in respect of the property transactions, Mr Montana asked that the evidence leader recuse himself on the basis that he was "invested" in suggesting wrongdoing on Mr Montana's part and had displayed bias.

Conclusions in respect of the property transactions

231. The details about the agreements to purchase the Waterkloof, Sandhurst and Hurlingham properties make it clear that Mr Montana was a key figure in the purchases. Although two of the properties were transferred to Precise Trade, Mr Montana was a significant role player in all three purchases.

232. As regards Mr Montana's role in the three transactions, the following is highlighted:

232.1 With respect to the Waterkloof Property, as far back as February 2013, Mr Montana and the seller, Ms De Beer concluded an agreement of sale, which fell through. In August 2014, Mr Montana again expressed an interest in the property. An agreement was concluded with Mr Smith, the Trustee. Thereafter, Mr Montana asked the seller to change the name of the purchaser from Mr Smith to Precise Trade. When Ms De Beer moved out, on 26 November 2014 she handed the keys to Mr Montana. She was in no doubt that the CC had sold the property to Mr Montana.

232.2 With respect to the Sandhurst Property, Mr Montana signed the first offer to purchase on 26 October 2014, which offer was accepted by the seller. However, following a request by Mr Van der Walt on 25 November 2014, a new offer to purchase in the name of Precise Trade was drawn up, which Mr Van der Walt signed on the following day. It recorded that the R5 million "deposit" [that had been paid pursuant to Mr Montana's offer] had been received on 7 November 2014. Even after the change in the name of the purchaser, correspondence relating to the property was still sent to Mr Montana, whom the seller addressed as "Lucky". When the costs were late in being paid, in February 2015 it was Mr Montana who apologised to the seller and seemingly caused Mr Van der Walt to make payment on the day after. Even after ownership of the property was transferred to Precise Trade [on 6 March 2015], when the electricity account needed to be transferred, it was Mr Montana with whom the estate agent and the seller communicated.

233. What Mr Van der Walt told his partners about the source of the funding for his purchase of the Parkwood Property and the purchases of the Waterkloof Property, the Sandhurst Property and the Hurlingham Property and an analysis of Precise Trade's Investec's transactional account suggests that there is a link between the payments for all four properties and Siyangena. The deposit for the Hurlingham property was paid from those monies. Mr Montana alleged that he had paid the deposit, but that is not what the documents show. A further question arises: why were such efforts made to disguise his involvement. Having regard to the foregoing, there is a reasonable basis for concluding that Mr Montana received an undue benefit from a Siyangena-linked entity, at least in respect of the Hurlingham property.

Mr Roy Moodley

234. It is instructive to preface the evidence relating to Mr Moodley by recording that when the then Public Protector Adv Thuli Madonsela was compiling her State of Capture Report, she submitted a list of 42 questions to President Zuma. One of them was his relationship to Mr Moodley. President Zuma refused to answer her. Moreover, allegations were made in affidavits submitted to the Commission that entities connected to Mr Moodley had received preferential treatment at Prasa and that on several occasions Mr Montana intervened in this respect. In all, five witnesses gave evidence on Mr Moodley: Mr Molefe, Ms Ngoye, Mr Dingiswayo, Mr Holele and Mr Makwanatala Jacob Ramagothe.

235. The evidence indicated that Mr Moodley had direct or indirect interests in several companies that provided services to Prasa, including Royal Security, Strawberry Worx and Prodigy. A company of which he is the sole director, Hail Way, is also said to have received a total of R550 million from Siyangena.

236. In his evidence, Mr Molefe told the Commission that he did not know Mr Moodley before he (Mr Molefe) had been appointed as Chair of Prasa's Board. However, he soon became aware that the name Roy Moodley was on the lips of many at Prasa, with some describing him as "the owner" of Prasa. He was told that Mr Moodley would often walk around with managers in their work environment.

237. Mr Molefe gave examples of means by which Mr Moodley intended to "capture" him. On one occasion, Mr Moodley invited him to a Golf Day that he had arranged and, on another, Mr Moodley invited him to the Durban July Handicap, telling him that President Zuma, Minister Jeff Radebe and other Ministers had been his guests at the event every year. Mr Molefe declined both invitations. Mr Moodley also wished to attend the US Masters with Mr Molefe in April 2015. Mr Molefe wriggled out of this. In an affidavit in response, Minister Radebe denied that he had attended the July Handicap as a guest of Mr Moodley. And, in an affidavit, Mr Moodley disputed Mr Molefe's evidence.

238. In his response to Mr Molefe's allegations, Mr Montana claimed that: Mr Molefe and Mr Moodley were close; Mr Molefe had told him that he and Mr Moodley were to travel together to the US "to play the golf event"; he had not attended any golf event organised by Mr Moodley: and whilst he had not heard Mr Moodley being described as "the owner" of Prasa, he was aware that Moodley's entities had contracts with Prasa. He also said that Mr Moodley had been appointed "in Railways" in around 1991, before Mr Montana joined Prasa. He alleged that Mr Molefe was relying on hearsay and rumours to back up his claims of state capture.

239. In an affidavit, Mr Moodley denied that he had tried to capture Mr Molefe and in general denied all the allegations made by Mr Molefe. He alleged Mr Molefe had tried to befriend him for his own personal benefit to secure sponsorships for himself and his Foundation. It was Mr Molefe who had tried to pursue an association with him, rather than the other way around. it was Mr Molefe who initiated plans for the US trip but these fizzled out.

240. In her affidavit and evidence, Ms Ngoye dealt with a contract between Prasa and Strawberry Worx. In July 2011 Intersite [a subsidiary of Prasa] and Umjanji (Pty) Ltd concluded an advertising agreement that was to last for five years. In August 2011, with the consent of Prasa, Umjanji ceded portions of its rights to Strawberry Worx and Siyathembana Trading. Although Intersite was the contracting party, it received instructions from Mr Montana on dealing with the advertising portfolio.

241. Ms Ngoye was once summoned to a meeting with representatives of Strawberry Worx. Strawberry Worx representatives were a Mr Maharaj, Mr Ashveer Dwaerkapersadh, Mr Selwyn Moodley and a fourth person whose details escaped her. At the meeting, she was given instructions by Strawberry Worx's representatives on how to manage the advertising portfolio. She was also told that she would have to take instructions from them; that they had the power to remove the portfolio from Intersite; that they intended to do so, as she clearly did not know what she was doing; and that there were instructions from Mr Montana to take back instructions given to attorneys Hogan Lovells, who were representing Prasa in litigation that had been instituted by Primedia challenging the validity of the award of the advertising tender. BBM Attorneys (who were not on Prasa's panel at the time) would be appointed to represent Prasa.

242. After the meeting, Intersite continued to manage the portfolio, amidst continuing threats of removal. On 20 May 2013, the threat of removing the portfolio was carried out in an aggressive and bullish way by Ms Marlini Naidoo, described as the special legal adviser in the office of the GCEO. She arrived at Intersite's office and "conducted a raid". Ms Naidoo told Ms Ngoye that she (Ms Naidoo) was "an officer of the court", instructed by Mr Montana to remove the Strawberry Worx files from Intersite. Ms Ngoye called Mr Montana, who did not respond. She also called Intersite's lead independent director, who was not aware of the instruction. Ms Naidoo proceeded to remove the files.

243. Ms Ngoye raised the issue of the removal of the files at an Intersite Board meeting that had been scheduled for the following day. Mr Montana told her he had nothing to do with the instruction. At Ms Ngoye's request, a meeting of all relevant parties was then held a few days later. Present were Ms Hope Zinde (GM: Corporate Affairs), Mr Holele, who was based at Intersite at the time, Ms Naidoo and Mr Montana. After the meeting Mr Martin Chauke, the manager who was responsible for the advertising portfolio, was placed on suspension. There is a dispute as to what happened at the meeting and particularly who placed Mr Chauke on suspension: Ms Ngoye says it was Mr Montana, while he claims that it was Ms Zinde. It is not necessary to resolve this dispute, save to note that disciplinary action was taken against another employee in respect of a difference of opinion about a contract that Prasa had with an entity in which Mr Moodley had an interest. Mr Chauke's suspension on full pay, lasted for more than two years. He was one of the employees who was brought back after the Molefe Board had instructed that all suspensions of employees be investigated.

244. The foregoing matters, Ms Ngoye submitted, demonstrated just how powerful Mr Roy Moodley was at Prasa.

245. Mr Montana's responses to the allegations made by Ms Ngoye may be summarised as follows: he was not aware of any link between Strawberry Worx and Mr Moodley, nor was he aware of any link between Siyangena and Mr Moodley; he denied giving instructions on how to deal with the advertising portfolio; he said he was not aware of Ms Ngoye's meeting with Strawberry Worx at which she was told that she would have to take instructions from them; he denied that Ms Ngoye had told him that it had been suggested that Hogan Lovells should be removed as Prasa's attorneys, but said that his legal adviser had later spoken about changing attorneys and he supported the idea; he was not aware that Maharaj Attorneys, who were also acting for Strawberry Worx, were the last group of attorneys to handle the matter for Prasa; Ms Ngoye had not raised with him the threatened removal of oversight of the contract from Intersite; he also said that it was Ms Ngoye as the CEO of Intersite who had signed the contract between Intersite and Strawberry Worx; he also said that one of the reasons that Primedia was not awarded the contract again was that Prasa was not getting value for its portfolio.

246. Mr Montana agreed that the manner in which the files were removed was incorrect; but he did not agree with the way in which Intersite was dealing with the litigation that Primedia had instituted after it was not awarded the tender. He disputed that Intersite was required to manage the portfolio under difficult circumstances. Mr Montana alleged that Ms Ngoye raised the issue with the Commission to implicate Strawberry Worx (and Mr Moodley) and denied that he had attended the meeting that led to Mr Chauke's suspension and did not know Mr Chauke had been suspended. As regards Ms Ngoye, Mr Montana said she was moved from being CEO of Intersite because the Intersite Board was not happy with her and she was unhappy about being moved to Prasa as Executive Head of Group Legal. He confirmed asking her to act when he went on leave in December 2014 and thanked her when he returned; he denied that her dismissal had anything to do with a refusal to assist with changes to the Swifambo contract.

247. Mr Dingiswayo said that it was known at Prasa that certain persons and entities wielded undue influence over Mr Montana and other senior Prasa employees and that if you crossed Mr Montana's path or attempted to ensure that things were done lawfully and properly insofar as these entities and individuals were concerned, Mr Montana ruthlessly abused his powers and even arrogated to himself powers that he did not possess. (This was disputed by Mr Montana). Being in Group Legal Services, Mr Dingiswayo was often required to deal with the maladministration that was pervasive at Prasa.

248. As an illustration of the foregoing matters, he testified on how concerns that he had expressed about the lawfulness of certain dealings between Prasa and Prodigy Business Services (Pty) Limited led to his dismissal.

    248.1 Prodigy had entered into a number of contracts with Prasa to provide training and related services. Mr Moodley was previously a director of Prodigy. Prasa has since placed the validity of those contracts in dispute and applied to the High Court to have set aside agreements purportedly concluded between it and Prodigy. As the validity of the agreements was before the High Court, he did not wish to deal with that issue. He did give evidence on the manner in which the agreements had been concluded. When he raised questions about the validity of one of the agreements, Mr Montana dismissed him and later Ms Ngoye, who had questioned the fairness of Mr Dingiswayo's dismissal.

    248.2 On 10 June 2010, Ms Shunmugam an employee of Prodigy, sent a letter to Mr Montana proposing some form of "partnership". Mr Montana noted on the letter that the proposal should be accepted in writing and an MOU be concluded. A partnership agreement was signed by the two on 11 October 2010. On 30 August 2011, an addendum was concluded and on 31 October 2012, a further aspect was added to the agreement, with Mr Montana again representing Prasa. This aspect in effect required Prasa to pay Prodigy R24 000 per learner for a five-day course for 300 learners, which meant that Prasa would be required to pay R72 million to Prodigy. Thereafter, on 10 May 2015, Prasa and Prodigy entered into an SLA.

248.3 In February or March 2015, Mr Dingiswayo was asked by the Contracts Manager at SCM to draft an agreement to reinstate and extend two of the earlier contracts with Prodigy. After reviewing the matters, he raised a number of compliance issues. On 1 April 2015, Prodigy sent an email to the office of the GCEO asking about outstanding payments. Mr Dingiswayo again later raised questions about issues relating to the drafting of the proposed agreement and said, until they were addressed, he would not begin drafting the agreement.

248.4 On 10 April 2015, Prodigy sent a further email, setting out the thrust and purposes of the agreements. On 18 April 2015 Mr Dingiswayo was asked to finalise a draft of an SLA sent to him. He raised concerns about the draft in an email, also sent to the Group Chief Procurement Officer, Mr Josephat Phungula. Mr Dingiswayo said there was general acceptance that the contracts were invalid, but a view was put forward that Prodigy was "innocent" and that Prasa should therefore proceed with the transaction. On 18 May 2015, Mr Montana sent an email contending that there was nothing wrong with the extension of the contract and alleged that "certain contracts" were being targeted and a "dirty campaign" was being waged against him.

248.5 At about 19h00 on the following day (19 May 2015), Mr Montana's PA phoned Mr Dingiswayo to say Mr Montana wished to see him urgently. Mr Dingiswayo asked if the matter could wait until the following day. He was told Mr Montana wished to see him personally that evening. Mr Dingiswayo arrived at Mr Montana's office and sat to meet with Mr Montana, who thanked him for coming back to work and made light of this by chuckling. Mr Montana then told Mr Dingiswayo that he had been told that he was one of the people that were working against the interests of Prasa on a number of matters. He accused Mr Dingiswayo of leaking documents to the Board and of abusing his position as one of Prasa's legal advisors, citing as an example that he had told Prasa employees to cancel a tender. Mr Dingiswayo denied the allegations and said he had no such power.

248.6 Mr Montana told Mr Dingiswayo that he was not interested in what he had to say and that the only thing that he had called him for was to tell him that he no longer worked at Prasa. He went on to say that the only thing that he could discuss with Mr Dingiswayo was how much he would accept for his contract to be terminated. Mr Dingiswayo responded that he would not be party to an unlawful termination of his own employment. He was told to collect his letter of termination the following day. Mr Dingiswayo noted that the meeting lasted just five minutes.

248.7 Mr Dingiswayo called Ms Ngoye soon thereafter. She was outraged and arranged to meet Mr Montana the following day. On that day, Mr Montana dismissed Ms Ngoye.

249. In the events leading up to her dismissal, Ms Ngoye confirmed that she had received Mr Montana's email of 18 May 2015 about the Prodigy contract. She added that during that period the Legal Function had declined to assist in amending the Swifambo contract as it had not been involved in the negotiations and drafting thereof. She confirmed that Mr Dingiswayo's advice in respect of the Prodigy contract did not accord with instructions given to him to amend and extend the Prodigy contract. On the evening of 18 May 2015, Mr Dingiswayo called her to tell her he had been dismissed. She immediately called Mr Montana and asked why he had dismissed Mr Dingiswayo who, as general manager, was her direct reportee. She said she had found it unacceptable and a repeat of how he had dealt with Mr Chauke. Whilst the interaction over the phone did not go well, Mr Montana agreed to meet her the following day.

250. Ms Ngoye confirmed that "[we] indeed met on 19 May 2015. The meeting started at 18:00. By 18:05, Mr Montana told me he was dismissing me with immediate effect. I received my dismissal letter on 20 May 2015."

251. After what happened to Mr Dingiswayo and Ms Ngoye, Mr Molefe intervened and prevailed on Mr Montana to follow the law in applying discipline. Mr Montana agreed to reinstate the two but within about a week he suspended them again. Mr Dingiswayo noted that other Prasa employees who had not supported the Prodigy contract were also placed on suspension. They returned to work after Mr Montana had left Prasa [in mid-July 2015] without any charges being made against them.

252. Three other matters raised by Mr Dingiswayo when he gave evidence on Prodigy and Mr Moodley's influence at Prasa are worthy of mention. Prasa's contracting with Prodigy breached other regulatory measures as well. For example, Prodigy was not an accredited provider of train drivers but nonetheless charged Prasa for the development of training for the drivers. Moreover, it charged Prasa penalties for non-attendance by employees, thereby contravening the PFMA and constituting wasteful expenditure. Mr Dingiswayo was of the view that Prodigy was favoured because Mr Moodley exercised undue influence over Mr Montana and some other senior employees. Mr Dingiswayo was of the view that what happened to him as a result of his not toeing Mr Montana's line on Prodigy illustrates part of how the capture of Prasa was implemented: when employees stood for what is proper, they were disciplined and often dismissed.

253. As regards the Prodigy contracts, Mr Montana testified that: as Mr Dingiswayo was not in Prasa's employ when the Prodigy contract was concluded, his evidence on this issue was "hearsay"; Mr Montana went on to say that there was a background to the contract of which Mr Dingiswayo was not aware; the training was for persons who did not have Matric and had gained Prasa an international award. It was not for Mr Dingiswayo to decide which contracts he would draft or whether counsel should be briefed. He also accused Mr Dingiswayo of undermining his leadership and being part of a "campaign" against him; among others whom he alleged were part this "campaign" were Mr Molefe and Ms Ngoye. Mr Montana conceded that no procurement process had been followed before the Prodigy agreement had been concluded and also accepted that the Legal Department had not been asked if the contract was valid.

254. As regards Mr Dingiswayo's dismissal, Mr Montana said he decided to "fire" Mr Dingiswayo, who was "not working in the best interest of Prasa"; he said he had made up his mind to dismiss Mr Dingiswayo even before the meeting; he alleged that the labour laws allowed for summary dismissal "when you think a lot is at stake". He could not recall if Mr Dingiswayo had told him that he would not be part of an unlawful process [in respect of his dismissal], but said Mr Dingiswayo was unhappy that he was dismissed; he also said he had consulted the head of HR, who had advised against summary dismissal, but he weighed up the situation and decided on summary dismissal.

255. Regarding whether the appointment of Prodigy complied with s 217 of the Constitution, Mr Montana said that the way in which s 217 of the Constitution was being interpreted "has become an instrument to undermine transformation in the country". Mr Montana said Mr Dingiswayo was bitter because he [Mr Montana] had fired him.

Mr Holele's and Mr Rakgoathe's evidence on Mr Moodley

256. In about February or March 2017, Ms Shunmugan asked to meet Mr Holele to discuss the issue of non-payments to Prodigy. Mr Holele invited Mr Rakgoathe, GM: Group Compliance to attend the meeting with him. When they got to the boardroom, it was not Ms Shunmugan who was present, but Mr Moodley. Mr Holele said that Mr Moodley complained that Prasa owed Prodigy a significant amount and demanded that it make payment in full. Mr Holele found it irregular that none of Prodigy's directors or employees were present and that it was Mr Moodley who was insisting on payment. The meeting was "very tense". He said he explained that as the matter was before the court, they could not accede to his demand before the court decision.

257. Mr Holele said that Mr Moodley then told them that "[h]e was part of the top 15 decision makers in the country and referred to media reports of an impending Cabinet re-shuffle. He then threatened us that 'big changes' were coming and that we needed to ensure that we were on the right side of these changes." Mr Rakgoathe confirmed this but added that Mr Moodley had also said that "he was involved" in the selection of CEOs of SOEs. Mr Holele pointed out that the "big change" for Prasa was announced in March 2017 when Ms Peters was replaced as Minister of Transport by Mr Joe Maswanganyi.

258. In an affidavit that he submitted to the Commission, Mr Moodley emphatically denied that he had met Mr Holele and Mr Rakgoathe. Mr Moodley did not apply to testify at the hearing. He filed an affidavit notwithstanding that serious allegations had been made about him.

259. Having heard the evidence of Mr Molefe, Mr Holele and Mr Rakgoathe, and the substance of what they said, the probabilities are that what they said is true and correct and should be accepted.

260. Aside from Mr Moodley, according to the evidence led at the Commission, the other person who enjoyed undue favourable treatment at Prasa was Mr Makhensa Mabunda.

Mr Mabunda

261. Evidence by Mr Molefe in respect of the Swifambo tender made several references to Mr Mabunda. However, in respect of Mr Mabunda and the Siyaya Group, Mr Dingiswayo had given the most direct evidence, though it was given in the course of complaints he had made about the role that Ms Makhubele had played in effecting payment of some R59 million to the S group. The two issues should, however, be separated. In this section, what Mr Dingiswayo said about Mr Mabunda and the S Group is summarised.

262. According to Mr Dingiswayo, Mr Mabunda controlled the Siyaya Group of Companies, also known as the "S Group". It had over the years received work of more than R1 billion from Prasa. Mr Dingiswayo said that the entity that received a lot of work from Prasa was Siyaya Consulting Engineers (Pty) Limited (Siyaya Engineers), which was registered in 2006. It is now in liquidation.

263. Regarding the relationship between Mr Montana and Mr Mabunda, Mr Dingiswayo said that it was a matter of public record that they had worked together at the Department of Public Enterprises and thereafter at the Department of Transport. He noted that Mr Montana left Prasa on 15 July 2015. In September 2015, he said three High Court summonses were served on Prasa. The agreements on which two of the claims were based had been signed by Mr Montana, and the one on which the third claim was based had been signed by Mr Daniel Mtimkulu. The following year, whilst the above three matters were pending, the Siyaya Group instituted two further actions. The agreements that formed the bases of these claims were signed by Mr Montana.

264. The attorneys who represented the Siyaya Companies in the above matters were Mathopo Attorneys. Based on instructions from the relevant business unit or division that Prasa was not liable, the actions were defended. Siyaya Engineers was voluntarily liquidated on 27 March 2017. When the actions had reached the pre-trial stage, Prasa pressed for discovery, but the plaintiffs did not comply. In order to expedite proceedings and because some of the agreements had arbitration clauses, the matters were referred to arbitration. However, the plaintiffs still struggled to produce the documents. It was agreed however that the arbitration would be held from 11 to 22 September 2017.

265. In the meantime, the Liquidators held an enquiry in terms of sections 417 and 418 of the Companies Act. They subpoenaed a number of past and present Prasa employees.

266. Although this was not part of Mr Dingiswayo's evidence, it is worth noting that, according to the record of the liquidation proceedings, among those who gave evidence in support of Siyaya's claims were Mr Montana and Mr Mtimkulu.

267. At this stage, it would be convenient to deal with the manner in which the Interim Board that replaced Mr Molefe's Board dealt with the Siyaya's claims. This necessitates a consideration of the role played by its chairperson Adv Nana Makhubele.

Adv Makhubele

268. Regarding the dispute between Prasa and Siyaya, Mr Dingiswayo said that the trial bundles were to be filed by 25 August 2017, which did not happen. Prasa made applications to compel the filing of the pre-trial processes but to no avail. In the meantime, although the term of the Molefe Board ended on 31 August 2017, a new Board was only appointed on 17 October 2017, with Adv Nana Makhubele SC as chairperson.

269. Mr Dingiswayo noted that although the finalisation of Prasa's Audit Report imminent at that time, the new Chairperson started making enquiries about the litigation between Siyaya and Prasa. Mr Dingiswayo summarised what happened in respect of the litigation as follows:

269.1 On 14 November 2017, Ms Makhubele met with Ms Ngoye to enquire about the cases involving the Siyaya Group. Upon a request by Mr Dingiswayo, Prasa's attorneys prepared a report. The report detailing the defences that had been set out in the Plea in each matter was shared with Adv Makhubele.

269.2 Advocate Makhubele said she had been approached by the attorneys of the liquidators; she was in possession of an interim report of the Commissioner in the insolvency inquiry; and that that report indicated that Prasa employees who had testified had made "major concessions" in respect of Prasa's liability. She asked for written reports from the employees "to confirm their testimony". But they had to do so without being furnished with a transcript of their testimony. Two employees compiled reports in which they indicated that they had not made concessions.

269.3 On 30 November 2017, Mr Dingiswayo prepared a further memorandum in which he said the delays in the litigation were at the instance of Siyaya and the liquidators; the liquidators appeared to have given preference to liquidation proceedings instead of preparing for the arbitration, which would produce a binding outcome. He sent his memorandum and the reports of the two employees to Adv Makhubele.

269.4 On the following day, 1 December 2017, the Board held a special meeting at which it resolved to suspend the panel of attorneys but did not mention the Siyaya litigation.

269.5 On 15 December 2017, a meeting was held between Adv Makhubele and Mr Madimpe Mogoshoa, of Diale Mogashoa Inc., Prasa's then attorneys in the Siyaya matters. At the meeting, Mr Mogashoa was told to settle each of the matters at the amounts given to him. These instructions were confirmed in a letter from the Company Secretary later that day. However, when Mr Mogashoa tendered the offer to Mr Mathopo, he was told that it did not conform to Prasa's "specific and express instructions". As a result, he sent a revised offer. On 7 February 2018, this revised offer was made an award by the appointed arbitrator. In the meantime, Mr Mogashoa had been told that he was not to communicate with Group Legal Services in respect of the Siyaya litigation.

269.6 In early March 2018, Mr Dingiswayo became aware that Mr Mabunda had indicated that he would be receiving monies from Prasa pursuant to an application to make an arbitration award an order of court. On being requested, Mr Mogashoa furnished Mr Dingiswayo with a copy of the papers.

269.7 Prasa's Group Legal then instructed Bowman Gilfillan to enter a notice to oppose the application, which had been set down for 9 May 2018. The attorneys representing the liquidators were Mathopo Attorneys, the attorneys who had represented Siyaya Engineers before it was liquidated.

269.8 Mathopo Attorneys challenged Bowman Gilfillan's authority to act on behalf of Prasa. A power of attorney signed by Ms Ngoye was filed to counter this. However, Mathopo Attorneys then wrote to Bowman Gilfillan to indicate that they were in possession of a text message from Adv Makhubele saying that Bowman's did not have the authority to represent Prasa. Mr Dingiswayo communicated this to the Board by email on 8 March 2018, but no member of the Board responded to the e-mail. Ms Ngoye sent a similar email to Minister Blade Nzimande, who had just been appointed Minister of Transport. No response was received from him.

269.9 At the hearing of the matter on 9 March 2018 Mr Botes, for the Siyaya Companies, had in his possession a letter on the Prasa letterhead addressed to Diale Mogashoa Attorneys, instructed them to concede to the Siyaya claims. The letter referred to the conclusion of a "settlement agreement" that led to the arbitration award being made. Mr Dingiswayo was surprised that Siyaya's legal representatives were in possession of a privileged letter. Be that as it may, the order sought by Siyaya and the liquidators was granted by Acting Judge Holland-Muter, who ruled that Prasa's attorney did not have the authority to represent Prasa.

269.10 Group Legal Services then told the Board and the Minister that judgment had been entered against Prasa.

269.11 In the meantime, Siyaya Companies and the liquidators instructed the sheriff to attach Prasa's banking account and about R59 million was removed therefrom.

269.12 The Minister then called a meeting with Ms Makhubele and senior Prasa employees, including Ms Ngoye and Mr Dingiswayo. At the meeting, Adv Makhubele was told to compile a report setting out her version. Group Legal was asked to do the same.

269.13 Upon instructions from the Minister, Prasa applied for the rescission of the judgment granted on 9 March 2018 and an order interdicting the Sheriff from paying any money to Siyaya. That application was granted, the attached money returned and the judgment was rescinded.

270. Adv Makhubele resigned from the Board with effect from the due date of her report, namely 16 March 2018.

FAILURE TO APPOINT A PERMANENT BOARD OR CEO

271. After the demise of the Molefe Board, Prasa had no permanent Board for just over three years. Interim Boards were appointed – until 22 October 2020 when a new permanent Board was appointed.

272. Similarly, Prasa did not have a permanent GCEO for more than five and a half years. After Mr Montana left as GCEO on 15 July 2015, only Acting GCEOs were appointed – until 24 February 2021 when Cabinet approved the appointment of Mr Zoleni Kgosietsile Matthes as the GCEO.

273. This is despite the Office of the Auditor General telling the Commission that it had drawn to the attention of the Minister and Cabinet the following matters. First, from November 2016, there was instability in the Board and from 1 August 2017, there was no permanent Board. Second, from July 2015 only acting GCEOs were appointed. Third, the instability in the Board and at Prasa's key management level were negatively impacting Prasa's operations and contributed to the collapse of the control environment. Fourth, irregular expenditure had increased from R0,01 billion in 2013/14 to R24,2 billion in 2017/18.

274. As has been noted above, Mr Molefe complained that Minister Peters obstructed the appointment of someone to replace Mr Montana after Mr Montana left office. Former Minister Peters could offer no proper explanation for not acting on the Board's recommendations. With respect, that inaction does not reflect well on the manner that she carried out her responsibilities. Further, this delay with no explanation does not reflect well on the different Cabinet Ministers as it is Cabinet that has the final say on who should be appointed to the Boards of SOEs. In the case of Prasa, this is despite the fact that the relevant Act reposes that power in the Minister of Transport.

THE APPOINTMENT OF WERKSMANS ATTORNEYS

275. An issue that arose repeatedly relating to the Molefe Board's attempt to deal with corruption at Prasa was the appointment of Werksmans Attorneys to conduct investigations into matters first identified by the Auditor General and thereafter by the Public Protector.

276. Ms Ngoye gave evidence on this at the Commission, based on a report (21 September 2020) prepared by Prasa's Group Legal for Prasa's (new) Board.

Ms Ngoye's report

277. Werksmans was appointed by way of a letter of engagement dated 6 August 2015. It was signed by Mr Nathi Khena, the then Acting GCEO. Werksmans was appointed to investigate irregular expenditure identified by the AG in the 2014/2015 financial year. The appointment was the culmination of discussions between the 2014 Board and a Consortium initially led by a chartered accounting and auditing firm, Ngubane & Company, and later led by Werksmans. According to Mr Khena, the decision to appoint Ngubane to conduct the forensic investigation was based on Regulation 16 of Treasury's Regulations.

278. After an initial meeting with Ngubane, a further meeting was held, which included sub-contractors to Ngubane. Among them were Werksmans. The meeting was told that the Board had decided that Werksmans would lead the team and not Ngubane. The reasons were: as Werksmans was a law firm, Prasa would be protected by attorney-client privilege in the work done by the Consortium; Regulation 16A was not applicable to the appointment; and Werksmans was one of the law firms on Prasa's panel. A new letter of engagement was then prepared, which was vetted by Group Legal Services and signed by Mr Khena.

279. An issue raised by Prasa's Group Legal was negotiations on the method of billing. But the Chairperson of the Board's Risk and Audit Committee, Ms Zodwa Manase, responded "if you want quality work, you don't negotiate fees". Initially, fees were paid by the cost centre of legal fees and would be refunded to that cost centre. Later, payments were made from the cost centre of the GCEO, who approved the invoices.

280. From its inception, until the final report was issued in 2017, the forensic investigation and litigation that flowed from it was under the purview of the Board. The role of Group Legal Services was to assist the investigation team, provide information and facilitate meetings between them and officials. Werksmans did not report anything to Group Legal Services. Their reports were presented to the Board and then the Minister of Transport. Invoices were signed by the Company Secretary and the Acting GCEO. However, after Group Legal Services suggested that their services should be more productively used, they were allowed to see reports, but only at Werksmans' premises.

281. In June 2016, a meeting was held at which Group Legal Services thought the costs of the investigations would be discussed. But Ms Manase said she would discuss the costs separately with Werksmans' lead partner and the two retired to a separate room.

282. The initial scope of the investigation was that of fruitless and wasteful expenditure that the AG had found in the 2014/2015 financial year. After the Public Protector had tabled her Derailed Report, the Board and NT agreed to refer to Werksmans some of the investigations that the PP had directed be undertaken. This agreement increased the number of investigations from 33 to about 140.

283. The report notes that among the outcomes that flowed from the Werksmans investigations were the review applications that the Board had instituted in respect of the Swifambo and Siyangena contracts. It also noted that the investigation had highlighted Prasa's fight against corruption.

284. The parties who were mentioned in Ms Ngoye's report were invited to respond. They did so by way of affidavits. Their responses are considered separately hereunder.

Werksmans' response

285. Werksmans' response to the allegations made by Ms Ngoye is set out in an affidavit made by Mr Hotz on 16 February 2021, read with an earlier affidavit dated 24 November 2020 that he had submitted to the Commission, the essence set out hereunder:

    285.1 The Special Investigations Unit (SIU) was investigating various Prasa-related matters, one of them being the appointment of Werksmans. Prasa has already instructed Werksmans to help the SIU in respect of the investigations and Werksmans did so. As regards the SIU's investigation into the appointment of Werksmans by Prasa, Mr Hotz said that Werksmans had given a detailed oral explanation to the SIU on 25 June 2020 and thereafter confirmed it in a letter dated 30 June 2020. Werksmans had not heard from the SIU after it sent the letter, which had also been copied to Mr Molefe, Ms Manase and Ms Ngoye.

285.2 In the letter of 30 June 2020 Mr Hotz set out how Werksmans came to be appointed. After Prasa had decided to appoint Ngubane, Werksmans was asked by a firm that was to provide investigative capacity to Ngubane whether Werksmans was on Prasa's legal panel and if so would it accept an instruction; when Werksmans confirmed that it was on the panel and would accept the instruction, it was invited to a meeting with Mr Molefe, Ms Manase and other firms whom Prasa intended to engage for the purposes of the investigations; at the meeting, Ms Manase said that Ngubane had been appointed in terms of Treasury Regulation 16A; it was also envisaged that Ngubane would be leading the process; thereafter, Werksmans met with Ngubane to discuss, among other things, the methodology that could possibly be followed in the investigations; however, no agreements were concluded between Ngubane and Werksmans or any of the other firms pursuant to the earlier meeting.

285.3 Werksmans had in the meantime concluded that it was not competent for Prasa to utilise Regulation 16A to appoint Ngubane and advised Mr Molefe and Ms Manase of that view. It also stressed the importance of attorney and client privilege, which would only exist if Prasa instructed a firm of attorneys to conduct the investigation and explained that if Werksmans were appointed by Prasa the attorney-client would extend to services providers whom Werksmans would appoint. Prasa accepted Werksmans' advice and Ms Ngoye finalised the letter of engagement, which was signed by the Acting GCEO on 6 August 2015. It was only then that Werksmans commenced rendering its services.

285.4 At the time of its engagement, Werksmans was ("and still is") a member of the Prasa legal panel and as such Prasa was lawfully entitled to appoint Werksmans for the tasks and in the manner it had. Werksmans had appointed the different service providers; after it was appointed, Werksmans often engaged with the Board, representatives of NT and the AG's office, Minister Peters, the Head of Scopa (Mr Themba Godi) and law enforcement.

286. Mr Hotz disputed the correctness of certain allegations made by the AG in respect of Prasa's appointment of Werksmans. Mr Hotz said that the AG's allegation that no SCM process had been followed by Prasa in the set-up of the legal panel was incorrect. This is because a proper tender process had been followed by the South African Rail Commuter Corporation Ltd (SARCC) and the SARCC's name was changed to Prasa by the Legal Succession Act. The SARCC had lawfully appointed a panel and accordingly Prasa was not required to conduct a fresh tender process.

287. The AG had made the following further allegation: no SCM process was followed when selecting suppliers from the panel and not all services providers were given a fair chance to participate/bid. In his response to this allegation, Mr Hotz said Prasa's SCM policy in place at the time permitted the development and maintenance of a database and obtaining of quotations from persons on the database; but the policy also permitted Prasa to deviate from the requirement to obtain more than one quotation in certain circumstances; one of those circumstances is in respect of "single source" or "confinement", which Prasa was permitted to use, but only in respect of professional services such as legal. Mr Hotz's affidavit states Prasa formed the view that the requirements for confinement were satisfied for Werksmans' appointment as a professional legal service provider. Accordingly, there was no merit in the allegations made by the AG's office.

288. As regards the June 2016 meeting when he and Ms Manase retired to a separate room to discuss the issue of Werksmans' costs, Mr Hotz said that a private discussion was necessitated by the fact that Werksmans were not operating in "friendly waters"; many people in Prasa did not welcome the investigation; measures were taken to interfere with the investigation, destroy or conceal evidence, mislead investigators and be generally obstructive; this was because the evidence that had been gathered suggested that Prasa was "plagued by corruption". One of the measures used was to delay payment of Werksmans' invoices. Because Mr Molefe and Ms Manase were the driving force behind the initiation and continuation of the investigations, he [Mr Hotz] informed them of the non-timeous payments. He had at the outset cautioned them that their interactions should be confined to a small group of trusted persons within Prasa; that is the reason that only one copy of Werksmans' Reports would be presented to Mr Molefe and it was for him to decide to whom to make the reports available. In June 2016, their invoices had again not been paid; it was to discuss the delay in payment of those invoices that he had asked to meet separately with Ms Manase; and their outstanding invoices were eventually paid.

Ms Manase's response

289. Ms Manase dealt with the issue of the appointment of Werksmans in her affidavit. After the Board had received the AG's report on irregular and fruitless expenditure, it resolved to investigate this; the Board approved the use of Regulation 16A; it delegated the responsibility to appoint a service provider to its chairperson (Mr Molefe) and Ms Manase (as the chair of its risk and audit committee); Ngubane was appointed in terms of Regulation 16A; a member of a forensic team that Ngubane had engaged, BCPS, introduced them to Werksmans; BCPS said it was standard practice that a firm of attorneys is appointed to lead the investigations, so that attorney-client privilege could be claimed in respect of the investigations. Consequently, she and Mr Molefe agreed that Werksmans could be appointed to lead the investigations, provided they were on Prasa's panel of attorneys.

290. After Ms Ngoye confirmed that Werksmans was on Prasa's panel, Werksmans was appointed to lead the investigations. She was satisfied that Werksmans rates were reasonable and the agreement with Werksmans was thereafter signed on Prasa's behalf by its then Acting GCEO, Mr Nathi Khena, on 6 August 2015.

291. As regards the investigations, Ms Manase and Mr Molefe met with the forensic team regularly. As the investigations were sensitive, only she and Mr Molefe were privy to some of the information that was obtained. After the Derailed Report, in order to reduce Prasa's costs, she asked that investigations that the Werksmans team had not started be referred to National Treasury. She pointed out that when the agreement with Werksmans was signed, there were 33 contracts; thereafter, following a meeting with NT on 2 March 2016, it was decided that, in respect of the Public Protector's remedial action, Werksmans would investigate 141 contracts and Treasury would investigate 220 contracts.

292. Of the 141 matters investigated by Werksmans, 66 had been referred to the DPCI by the time she had left Prasa in April 2017; and Prasa had succeeded in setting aside the Swifambo and Siyangena contracts.

Mr Molefe's response

293. In a separate affidavit dealing with the allegations made by Ms Ngoye, Mr Molefe said Werksmans had been appointed to Prasa's legal panel prior to his tenure as Board chairperson; after receiving the AG's draft report on fruitless expenditure in June and July 2015, the Board mandated him and Ms Manase to ensure that the investigations did happen; Ms Manase was of the view that Regulation 16A could be utilised to fast track the appointment of a service provider; it was thereafter that the appointment of Werksmans was made by Mr Khena. He and Ms Manase met frequently with Werksmans; and the reason that he and Ms Manase had adopted a hands-on approach was management's reluctance or refusal to cooperate with the investigation.

Brief analysis: Appointment of Werksmans

294. It is considered that there are three significant issues that arise in respect of the Molefe Board's appointment of Werksmans to conduct the investigations that the AG and the PP required:

    294.1 The first is the lawfulness, propriety and fairness of the appointment. In respect of this issue, what emerges from the foregoing is that it does not appear that a procurement process as such was followed when first Ngubane and thereafter Werksmans were engaged by Prasa. It appears that Werksmans appointment was made on the basis that it was one of the law firms on Prasa's panel and that Prasa was entitled to rely on its "single source or confinement powers" to appoint

Werksmans, as it was a professional legal service provider. In the circumstances, whilst it may have been lawful for Prasa to appoint Werksmans, given the scope of the work and the time for which the services were to be procured, it may appear to have been unfair to other service providers. However, it appears that the required work was done and that it bore fruit. In that sense, even though the appointment may not have been made strictly in compliance with s 217 of the Constitution, even if a declaration to that effect is made, it does not appear that there is a case for setting aside the appointment of Werksmans.

294.2 Given the difficulties that the Molefe Board experienced when they assumed office at Prasa and that Werksmans were achieving at least some measure of success, the Board's concerns about being questioned about the appointment of Werksmans may be understandable, but concerns raised about the appointment are also understandable. Legitimate concerns were: the absence of an estimation of the total cost of the services; the possible irregularity of the appointment and the appointment possibly being unfair; and what appears to have been the Board's approach, namely that the raising of such matters in itself put you in the camp of the Prasa wrongdoers. Ironically, the Molefe Board rightly wished to hold wrongdoers accountable, but itself appeared to resent being held accountable for how state funds were being spent.

294.3 The unfortunate result is that much of the good work done by the Board and Werksmans in the fight against corruption at Prasa was hindered by allowing the appointment of Werksmans and insistence on the continued utilisation of its services to be a major distraction. The Molefe Board, as well intentioned as it was, could have done more to root out corruption at Prasa had it adopted a more nuanced approach to questions about its appointment of Werksmans by the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee.

295. The observations made above about the Board's approach is not to be understood as an acceptance of the treatment meted out to the Molefe Board by Minister Peters and the Portfolio Committee. They too were under a duty to ensure that corruption, rather than well intentioned boards, are rooted out from public entities. In this they failed.

296. It should perhaps be reiterated that Mr Montana on several occasions criticised the appointment of Werksmans and accused them of engaging in illegal surveillance, allegations that Werksmans denied.

297. Mr Montana also raised several matters not directly connected to allegations that were made against him to which he was required to respond when called as a witness by the Commission. The more significant of those matters are considered in the next section.

MATTERS RAISED BY MR MONTANA

298. Long before the Commission was established, Mr Montana had been in the public eye – mainly for the wrong reasons. Among the significant matters that attracted attention to him were: the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo, whose managing director, Mr Auswell Mashaba, reportedly paid some R79 million to persons who were to pay the money over to the ANC: his defence of Mr Daniel Mtimkulu, the engineer who falsely declared that he held a doctorate and was according to the judgment of the SCA, central to Prasa's acquiring trains that were said to be "too tall" for South Africa's rail network; his relationship with Mr Van der Walt, an attorney who had provided legal services to Siyangena and whose company provided the funding for houses which Mr Montana had expressed an interest in purchasing; and the quite damning findings made by the Public Protector.

299. It was therefore not surprising that several witnesses made serious allegations against Mr Montana. Unlike some senior persons in other SOEs and also Prasa, Mr Montana was intent on presenting "his side of the story". He approached the Commission with a lengthy affidavit in which he dealt with matters that were likely to be considered by the Commission. Several quite diverse themes emerge from that affidavit:

299.1 President Zuma was the target at which the establishment of the Commission was aimed

299.2 The membership of the Prasa Board was changed in 2014 to get rid of him as Prasa's GCEO or made that as one of its missions

299.3 It was wrong to "elevate" irregularities that taint procurement processes to corruption

299.4 Prasa was a well-run entity during his reign as GCEO, as emerges from the quite numerous and extensive examples he set out in his affidavit, to which thousands and thousands of pages of documents were annexed; and 299.5 Prasa went on a downward spiral after the Molefe Board was appointed.

300. While Mr Montana was entitled to set out "his side of the story", many of the matters that he dealt with in his affidavit were not relevant to the Commission's TORs. Members of the Commission's investigating and legal teams dealing with Prasa-related matters sought to persuade Mr Montana to exclude those parts of the affidavit that did not fit into the Commission's TORs. Mr Montana took offence at this suggestion and alleged that the Commission was attempting to "curtail" his evidence. He accused the Commission of depriving him of the opportunity to tell his story and the "real story of Prasa" and refused to accept the excising of the irrelevant parts of the affidavit.

301. Mr Montana's approach could not legitimately be countenanced because this is a Commission whose TORs set out the matters it should deal with. It is perhaps important to stress that this is not a Commission into Prasa, although given what has emerged about Prasa at the Commission, it may well be that a separate commission should be established to look at the wrongs at Prasa. Be that as it may, a stand-off ensued about Mr Montana's evidence.

302. Eventually, Mr Montana was required through a directive issued in terms of Regulation 10(6) of the Commission's Regulations to respond on oath or affirmation to the allegations made by Mr Molefe, Ms Ngoye, Mr Dingiswayo and the Report of Mr Oellermann. However, Mr Montana did not comply with the directive to furnish to the Commission affidavits or affirmations that set out his responses to each of the allegations that had been made against him. The purpose of requiring such responses is to identify precisely what is being disputed and thereby curtail the time spent on oral evidence. As a result of Mr Montana's failure to comply with the directive, it became a time-consuming exercise to get answers from him when he did testify. And, as noted above, he did not agree to answer all questions relating to the property transactions, alleging that the evidence leader was biased.

303. In order to ensure that the public had heard from Mr Montana himself, he was accommodated. However, as regards his affidavit, the problems remained until the very end. Eventually, the Chairperson admitted the affidavit. But not all the original annexures form part of the affidavit that was admitted.

304. Among the more significant issues that emerged in Mr Montana's evidence or affidavit are summarised here. He delivered what he described as an "opening statement to the Commission", which throws some light on his views of the Commission, the role of SOEs and allegations made about them generally and at the Commission. It is accordingly instructive to set out some of what he said on these matters:

304.1 He had written to the Chairperson on 26 July 2019 asking for an opportunity to testify about a whole range of issues that he intended to address, but the Commission wanted to curtail his evidence and wanted him to take out some parts that dealt with the appointment of Werksmans Attorneys (by the Molefe Board).

304.2 He expressed the following general views: we have made many gains as a country; and key SOEs and public entities have played a major role in those gains but they are being destroyed because "[w]e are a country that is prepared to lose R100 to save R1 and that is why we see all our things are falling apart in the country."

304.3 He also claimed that "all that has been said here in this Commission is actually not the totality of our experience and reality of our country". SOEs such as Prasa and Transnet are being destroyed "because we fail to understand [that] these are important instruments in the hands of a democratic government to drive economic transformation".

304.4 It was his view that irregularities (in procurement processes) should not be "elevated" to mean criminality and corruption. Irregularities and a poor control environment created favourable conditions for fraud and corruption, but irregularity in itself did not constitute corruption: "As a nation we are now using irregular expenditure as a barometer to measure corruption. Our courts in my view seem to have fallen into this trap. We have created an unfortunate picture of South Africa as an extremely corrupt nation" (emphasis added).

304.5 Mr Montana went on to accuse the Commission of bias and pursuing "a pre-determined agenda" and stated that "this Commission is captured".

304.6 He asked the Commission to subpoena the bank accounts of Mr Molefe, who was "the most preferred witness of this Commission", and those of his Foundation.

305. It may not be inappropriate to end this section with the following allegations that Mr Montana made in his affidavit: there appeared to be a split in the ANC, between those deemed to be associated with former President Zuma and the so-called State Capture project and those seemingly opposing them; the ANC or some of its leaders were either beneficiaries of payments by companies that were contracted to Prasa or directly from Prasa; as the GCEO, he worked very closely with the ANC; ANC leaders would put pressure on many CEOs of SOEs and public entities to assist the ANC or entities that it said belonged to "the movement"; the "dominant view and practice in the party" was that cadres "deployed" in positions of power should assist the party financially; the ANC "would ask many of us in leadership positions of SOEs and public entities" to get contractors to contribute financially to the party; he had once agreed to meet companies to whom the ANC owed money to see if "we could assist them in the future"; although the ANC had denied that it had ever received money from Swifambo, Mr Mashaba had confirmed to Mr Montana that he had made payments to the ANC; the ANC, through instructions from the Minister of Transport, had over years used Prasa transport services without paying; and Prasa had also provided dozens of trains and more than 200 buses for the ANC's Centenary Celebrations in 2012.

306. Mr Montana also alleged that on two separate occasions he had been approached by Minister Peters to provide transport for ANC events. First, in 2014 the request was to provide "Prasa buses" for a large gathering of traditional leaders in the North West Province. He said that he refused to comply with the request despite being told that "he was defying the movement". He said he refused to provide the buses as Autopax would have lost an estimated R40 million had the buses been provided. Second, in January 2015 Minister Peters had asked him to provide trains and buses for the ANC January 8 celebrations in Cape Town as she was "under pressure". On this occasion he put together a transport plan for the event.

307. In her response former Minister Peters said that in January 2014 she had approached Mr Montana after she had been told by former Minister Bathabile Dlamini that she had not been able to get hold of Mr Montana to ascertain the process to follow to secure Autopax buses and a quotation for the use of the buses. There had been no suggestion that the buses were to be made available free of charge. As regards her request to Montana in January 2015, she said she had asked Mr Montana to provide a quotation and assistance with the use of the trains. She alleged that she had not requested him in his capacity as Prasa's GCEO or to make the trains available for free or without following the usual processes "when such services are enlisted".

308. In response to allegations made in Mr Montana's affidavit against him personally or in his capacity as Treasury-General of the ANC, Dr Zweli Mkhize filed an affidavit in which he said that Mr Montana had made similar allegations in the past and that he had responded to those allegations in a letter to the Parliament's Public Enterprises Portfolio Committee. A copy of his letter was annexed to his response to the Commission. The thrust of what is set out in Dr Mkhize's response and letter is that when Mr Montana visited the ANC's Headquarters [at Luthuli House], he would "come and greet"; Mr Montana had on a few occasions offered to let Dr Mkhize know if there were private business people who were willing to offer a donation to the ANC, though such offers were not linked to Prasa contracts; he and Mr Montana had never discussed a donation [to the ANC] that would be solicited through a Prasa contract; he confirmed that Ms Maria Gomes had made donations to the ANC, but the money was not “derived from Prasa contracts”; and at some stage Mr Montana had asked him to meet a Prasa service provider, but he refused to do so.

309. The allegations made by Mr Montana are worrisome. They suggest that people whom the ANC deployed to leadership positions in SOEs were expected to secure benefits for the ANC from their service providers.

310. The evidence of former Minister Peters is equally worrisome. Even on her own version, in early 2014 she had asked Mr Montana to assist the ANC by providing Prasa transport in 2015 and had succeeded in getting him to provide the ANC with Prasa transport in 2015. Former Minister Peters alleges that she expected that the ANC would have to pay for this. Yet, what is missing from her response to Mr Montana’s allegations is whether she had followed up on the issue of payment. Given that she was the Minister, there would have been a duty to do so.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

311. The evidence led on Prasa at the Commission is, to put it mildly, deeply disturbing. Prasa has been in the public eye, often in a negative light, over many years. Various complaints regarding Prasa were made and reported on by the media especially about its procurement practices. In addition, employees were disciplined and when such disciplinary action was successfully challenged Prasa was required to compensate them at massive cost. But the problems at Prasa were also systemic and more fundamental. Its record-keeping was deeply flawed. More worryingly, it appeared that not only could critical documents not be found, but that in some instances several versions of the same documents, including minutes and reports, existed. And, as has been alleged, documents appear to have been created to suggest that certain matters were discussed at meetings, certain persons were present or certain decisions were taken when they had not, if indeed the meetings had taken place at all.

312. In 2012 Adv Thuli Madonsela began her investigation into Prasa arising from 32 complaints. However, she was able to furnish her Derailed Report only in August 2015. Even then, that report did not deal with all the complaints she investigated. Adv Madonsela says the report was delayed because of a lack of co-operation mainly from Prasa’s then CEO (Mr Montana) and also from the Board that was in office at the time. She found that some of the allegations had been proven, but some had not. She did not make findings in respect of fifteen of the matters. One of her recommendations was that every contract worth more than R10 million that Prasa had concluded after 2012 be investigated by Treasury and that the Board assist with that investigation. Given that Prasa would have paid at least R10 million for many of the goods and services that it procured, that is a seriously damning finding in respect of Prasa’s procurement of goods and services.

313. Fortunately, however, by the time that that recommendation was made, Prasa had a new Board. That Board, whose members were appointed for a period of three years, took office on 1 August 2014, just about a year before the PP’s Report was released. However, most of the complaints that were investigated related to actions and decisions that had occurred prior to 2012.

314. It is however difficult to comprehend that, notwithstanding the dire state in which Prasa was found to be for such a prolonged period, no action was taken and that its state of disrepair had been allowed to remain officially undetected until uncovered by the Public Protector and thereafter by the investigations initiated by the Molefe Board.

315. In seeking to provide an explanation some of the witnesses who testified at the Commission expressed the view that Prasa had been “captured” or was a victim of “state capture”. Most suggested that Mr Montana was central to that capture. Notwithstanding that questions had been raised about at least two multi-billion Rand contracts while he was at the helm of Prasa, he remained the GCEO. The suggestion was that he had been allowed to become too powerful, in fact so powerful that, according to Mr Molefe, at the meeting of 20 August 2015 Mr Montana had complained to former President Zuma that the Molefe Board had been appointed without his (Mr Montana’s) being consulted. In addition, Mr Molefe, who was probably the Commission's main witness on the ills that afflicted Prasa, suggested that Mr Montana enjoyed the protection of quite powerful persons behind the scenes.

316. Mr Molefe was also of the view that for state capture to succeed, systems in organisations must be broken, must be weakened and good people must be removed and substituted by people who were compliant, who would carry out the agenda [of those] whose objective is the looting of the public purse. In addition, he perceptively pointed out that he was in a position to speak out but not everybody can do that.

317. According to Mr Molefe, his Board tried to clean up Prasa. Ironically, however, it was his Board that was in effect cleared out, a process that was allowed to continue with the commission of some and the omission of others, who all ought to have known better. As regards his attempts to clean up Prasa he said after he took over as the Chairperson of the Prasa Board, he became aware of the extent to which maladministration and possibly corruption were rife in Prasa. Mr Mashaba had told him that after Swifambo had been awarded the R3,5 billion locomotives contract, he had been asked to pay some R79 million to persons to pay the money to the ANC; the ANC's then Treasury General, Dr Zweli Mkhize, facilitated a meeting between Mr Molefe and the ANC's Top Six to assist in that clean-up effort. They however did not give him the requisite support; instead, soon after that meeting, the then most powerful person in the ANC and in Government, former President Zuma, tried to influence him to have Mr Montana back at the helm of Prasa. In addition, neither Parliament nor the law enforcement agencies did the right thing.

318. Mr Molefe's evidence shows that he and his Board did not allow themselves to be regarded as victims. They fought back: they approached the Courts to set aside the Swifambo contract and certain contracts that Prasa had concluded with Siyangena; they attempted to get the High Court to require the DPCI to finalise its investigations into matters in which Prasa had laid criminal charges; and when Minister Peters dismissed the members of his Board, they launched a High Court application which succeeded in setting aside her decision. Sadly, that success had limited practical benefit: the Board was rendered unworkable for the remaining short period of its existence.

319. It is also clear from the evidence led at the Commission and in what is said in affidavits, that if the requisite care was displayed by those in a position to assist in the clean-up of Prasa, Prasa would not be in the sorry state it is today. For example, although the DPCI had initially intended utilising Mr Sacks' services, after he submitted to it his damning and quite incriminating "first level" flow of funds report in respect of the Swifambo tender, he has not heard back from the DPCI. Nor did they ask him, as was envisaged at the time he was engaged, to perform a similar exercise in respect of the Siyangena contracts.

320. In the face of foregoing, one would expect that everyone concerned who had anything to do with Prasa would express at least a measure of regret or apology about the manner in which they exercised, or failed to exercise, their powers. This applies both to those within Prasa who exercised power and took or influenced decisions and those who were required to have held the repositories of power and influence accountable.

321. In determining who should be held responsible for the ills at Prasa, it would be instructive to divide the persons or entities into two broad categories: first, those who occupied positions of oversight and who should have ensured that perpetrators were held accountable; and second, those who actually perpetrated the wrongs.

Persons who had a duty of oversight

322. Insofar as oversight of the maladministration at Prasa is concerned, at least two fundamental questions must be asked. First, can it be said that the Government leaders, and of course the ANC leadership were not aware of it? Second, given what they knew and also what they must have known, what steps did they take?

323. It would appear that the answer to the first question is as follows: the ANC leadership and also the then President and the then Deputy President were told, at least in general terms, about the extent of the problems at Prasa and the amounts involved.

324. The answer to the second question would appear to be that, at best, they and other public representatives and public bodies stood by and did nothing while the Molefe Board attempted to fight corruption and bring perpetrators to book. In this regard, it will be recalled that Mr Molefe said he had written to the then Deputy President Ramaphosa, just before the term of his Board expired identifying the critical challenges that Prasa faced and had asked him and Government to intervene and get things back on track. He said that he had also alerted the then Deputy President to the methods used to make his Board dysfunctional, namely not filling in vacancies on the Board.

325. If only some of the individuals and entities had fulfilled their obligations and responsibilities, Prasa might have enjoyed a better fate. It will be instructive to set out formally what those commissions or omissions were, in respect of individuals or entities.

    325.1 First, it is necessary to consider the role of then President Jacob Zuma. He was the head of the ANC, Cabinet and Government. As the President, in terms of his oath of office, he was under a constitutional duty to among other things tlprotect and promote the rights of all South Africans; do justice to all; and devote himself to the well-being of all South Africa's people. He must have been aware of some of the wrongdoings that were happening at Prasa. Given his constitutional obligations, he was under a duty to put in place mechanisms to right them. He failed to do so and as a result did not carry out his oath of office. He owes a profound apology to persons and entities who tendered to provide goods and services to Prasa but whose tenders were unlawfully and unfairly overlooked; and an apology to the thousands of commuters whom Prasa cannot and does not serve on account of the disrepair into which it has fallen.

    325.2 Second, the inaction of the ANC's Top Six when told by Mr Molefe of the extent of the rot at Prasa and the R79 million paid to the Party by the managing director of a company that had received a R3,5 billion tender. That information was subsequently made public. The beneficiaries of that contract are still at large – with large sums of money still in their possession. The Top Six too owe the country a profound apology. They allowed a state entity required to provide an essential service to the most vulnerable to be incapable of fulfilling its duty. Although the ANC's Top Six does not formally exercise public power, important positions in SOEs are determined or ratified by the ANC's "Deployment Committee". The Top Six must be therefore held accountable to the public for not acting in circumstances where the public interest requires that action be taken.

    325.3 Parliament's inaction is a matter of serious concern. It will be recalled that on 7 March 2017, Mr Molefe wrote to the Speaker of Parliament pleading for protection for his Board when it appeared before Parliament's Portfolio Committee on Transport. Mr Molefe did not get the requisite protection. Instead, at a sitting of the Portfolio Committee on that very day an announcement was made on behalf of Minister Peters that she had dismissed the Molefe Board. There is no record of Parliament calling Minister Peters to account for this public embarrassment of the Board, even after the High Court set aside her decision to dismiss the Board. With respect, Parliament failed to hold the executive to account and allowed it to punish a Board that sought to fight corruption and maladministration. It is recommended that Parliament puts in place mechanisms to ensure that such unlawful use of power by the executive to silence its critics is not allowed to happen again.

    325.4 The members of the Portfolio Committee on Transport have hardly covered themselves in glory in their handling of Prasa-related matters. Just how little some of them cared about their obligations or applied themselves to fulfilling those obligations is illustrated by the following: In her affidavit to the Commission in response to Mr Molefe's complaints about the manner in which his Board was treated by the Portfolio Committee, its then Chairperson, Ms Magadzi, said that in the Swifambo review application Mr Molefe had alleged that "Prasa had donated" R79 million to the ANC. However, that was never Mr Molefe's allegation: he said that Mr Mashaba had told him that he [Mr Mashaba] had paid R79 million to the ANC after Swifambo had won the locomotives tender. Worse still, Ms Magadzi and her Committee held it against Mr Molefe that he could not produce receipts from Prasa confirming the payments. Given that Members of Parliament are paid from public funds, one would expect that they would not be guilty of such basic and unacceptable errors. However, there are more fundamental problems with the approach that the ANC members of the Portfolio Committee adopted. In her affidavit, Ms Magadzi alleged that her Committee wanted state institutions (National Treasury, Hawks (the DPCI), police) to investigate the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo, but "comrade Popo Molefe" engaged Werksmans. The focus on the appointment of Werksmans was a diversion from the real problems at Prasa. It is regrettable that this Committee permitted the Minister to use the hallowed rooms of Parliament to dismiss unlawfully the Molefe Board and when the High Court set aside her decision, not hold her accountable for this serious lapse of judgment.

325.5 In respect of ANC MPs who were members of the Portfolio Committee on Transport during the period that the Molefe Board was in office, the following needs to be recorded. President Zuma appointed Mr Maswanganyi as the Minister of Transport after he dismissed Minister Peters. According to Mr Molefe, Minister Maswanganyi refused to meet with his Board and in effect rendered it unworkable. What is however more worrisome about the elevation of Mr Maswanganyi to Minister of Transport is this: he said that it was Parliament that had decided to dissolve the Board and a Minister "cannot go against a decision taken by Parliament!" On that score, Mr Maswanganyi is simply wrong. As powerful as Parliament is, the power to dismiss the Board lies with the Minister. There should be serious reservations about appointing a person who has so limited an understanding of where certain powers lie, as a Minister. Notwithstanding Ms Magadzi's inadequacies as Chairperson of the Portfolio Committee, she has been elevated to the position of Deputy Minister of Transport. One of the other members of the Portfolio Committee at the time that Mr Molefe's Board was in office at Prasa was Mr Leonard Ramatlakane. He is now the Chairperson of Prasa's Board. As has been noted in the section dealing with the award of the locomotive tender to Swifambo, Mr Ramatlakane has embarked on a process of consequence management at Prasa. This is commendable. However, given his less than distinguished performance as a member of the Portfolio Committee, and complaints made by Prasa employees who appeared before the Commission, it is recommended that the Portfolio Committee on Transport exercises particular oversight over this process and prepares appropriate reports that are available to the public and civil society organisations.

325.6 Minister Dipuo Peters must be credited with appointing the Molefe Board in 2014. It appears that initially at least she was supportive of the Molefe Board's attempt to clean up Prasa. However, it seems that her support for this effort waned. The reason she proffered for withdrawing her support was that the Board was not focusing on ensuring that Prasa was running properly. However, what emerges from the evidence is that she wished the investigations into Prasa's ills at least to be curtailed. Thereafter, when it became public knowledge that Mr Mashaba had said that, after his firm had been awarded the Swifambo tender, he had paid money to persons who would pay it the ANC, one would have expected that as the Minister to whom Prasa was accountable, she would have insisted that that embarrassing allegation was expeditiously pursued. Instead, she stood by. Moreover, she ought to have been aware of the unacceptable treatment meted out to the Prasa Board by the Portfolio Committee of Transport. By her inaction, it would appear that she made common cause with that Committee's approach. She must accordingly share some of the blame for the fact that the wrongdoers in the Swifambo matter have still not been brought to book. In addition, then Minister Peters must take responsibility for the non-appointment of a GCEO to replace Mr Montana after he left Prasa in July 2015. That position remained vacant throughout the remaining period that she was Minister – until March 2017.

326. There are at least two matters of a general nature that arise from the systemic failure to allow the rot at Prasa to continue, notwithstanding its devastating effect on the many vulnerable persons who depended on its services:

326.1 First, the fact that not one person who is paid, from scarce public funds to exercise oversight over Prasa assisted the Molefe Board in its fight to rid Prasa of corruption and maladministration leads to two broad inferences. All of them, individually or collectively, were incompetent and/or uncaring. The other is that they were implementing a pre-determined plan, namely, to ensure that the Molefe Board failed. It will be recalled that that is precisely what Mr Molefe told the Top Six when he met them in July or August 2015. A consideration of the evidence led at the Commission, suggest that the probabilities are that Mr Molefe's prognosis was correct.

326.2 Second, many professions have bodies that exercise oversight over their members. Should a member deviate quite radically from what is expected of a reasonable member of that body, he or she can face malpractice proceedings. The term political malpractice has been recently coined. Given the extent to which certain public representatives failed to exercise their power, and the resultant massive losses to the fiscus and the suffering caused to vulnerable members of the public, perhaps it is time for South Africa to ensure that its public representatives fulfil their obligations by introducing a form of sanction for what may be termed constitutional and political malpractice.

Persons who should be held accountable

327. It is worth reiterating that Mr Molefe was clear that in his view Prasa had been "captured" or that Prasa was a victim of state capture. He was also of the view that, at Prasa itself, Mr Montana was at the helm of that project. A similar view was expressed by among others Ms Ngoye and Mr Dingiswayo.

328. In assessing the cogency of these views, it is necessary to appreciate that it would be difficult to secure direct evidence of state capture or the capture of state institutions. Whether or not that happened is to be inferred from the evidence tendered, the contents of documents and facts and circumstances that cannot reasonably be disputed. The latter includes known relationships between those in positions of powers and persons who are known beneficiaries of contractual relationship that are concluded between organs of state and persons or entities in the private sector.

329. During the course of the Commission's hearings, evidence was led of the enormous influence that Mr Roy Moodley exercised at Prasa in respect of the contracts that Prasa concluded with entities with whom he was associated or known to be associated and the consequences visited upon those who raised questions about some of those contracts. In addition, it is a matter of public record that there was a quite close relationship between President Zuma and Mr Moodley, whose Royal Security paid Mr Zuma a salary for a period of fifteen months before Mr Zuma became the President of the country and a month thereafter. In addition, when Mr Montana appeared at the Commission he made no secret of his allegiance to Mr Zuma, even after Mr Zuma had stepped down as President. Not coincidentally, Mr Montana was of the view that institution of the Commission was "targeted" at former President Zuma.

330. The other person who benefitted handsomely from Prasa contracts was Mr Makhensa Mabunda. He is a known associate of Mr Montana. Evidence was led that entities with which he was associated received contracts totalling nearly R1 billion. In addition, Mr Mashaba told Mr Molefe that it was Mr Mabunda who had encouraged him [Mr Mashaba] to submit a bid for the locomotives contract, which he did through Swifambo. The manner in which the tender came to be awarded to Swifambo, despite the fact that its bid ought to have been disqualified, is a further factor that needs to be considered. Likewise, the fact that Swifambo paid large sums of money to Mr Mabunda or entities with which he was associated.

331. Considered collectively, the information available to the Commission leads to the following reasonable inferences: first, Prasa was indeed captured or a victim of state capture; second, its procurement processes, as noted by the Public Protector were suspect at best; and third, Mr Montana was the key role player at Prasa in its capture and determining which service providers would be allocated major tenders, such as the acquisition of locomotives.

332. As is clear from what has been detailed, a fair amount of the evidence related to allegations about Mr Montana and the manner in which Prasa was run during his tenure as GCEO. Based on the position that Mr Montana held at Prasa for some nine years, the evidence that was led, the documents that served before the Commission, the findings of the Public Protector and the judgments handed down by Courts in the Swifambo and Siyangena matters, it appears to be a reasonable conclusion to identify Mr Montana as the key internal role player in the capture of Prasa. However, the following further question must be asked. Who else was involved in the project, whether knowingly or simply by virtue of the position he or she held at Prasa or by virtue of having been a member of a committee that was part of the procurement processes that were followed at Prasa?

333. Whilst a consideration of documents that were received suggested that in several instances there were serious irregularities, very little direct evidence of corruption was received. Accordingly, in deciding against which persons from Prasa steps should be taken, reliance will have to be placed on the reasonable inferences to be drawn from the documents, read in their proper context.

334. As noted above, one of the serious problems experienced in respect of determining what happened during those procurement processes related to documents. Importantly, it is a problem that was referred to by the Public Protector, who found that Prasa hid documents from her office and then alleged that a finding should be made against complainants because they were unable to produce the documents. In the affidavits in the applications to review and set aside the contract between Prasa and Swifambo and contracts between Prasa and Siyangena that issue was also raised, as all the relevant documents could not be located. In addition, the following further matters were raised in respect of documents that were in fact located: in many cases, minutes or reports were not signed or dated; and in some instances, different versions of minutes or reports existed. As noted above, when the Swifambo matter was dealt with earlier in this Memo, documents relating to the procurement process were made available to the Commission only after the scheduling of oral evidence had been finalised. The correctness of what is reflected in those documents and in some instances the authenticity of the documents has been challenged. In addition, in his affidavits to the Commission Mr Ramatlakane also referred to some of these concerns. As a result of the foregoing, it is a difficult task to identify the individuals who may have knowingly participated in the capture of Prasa insofar as procurement matters are concerned.

335. However, despite the difficulties relating to documents, and the absence of direct evidence of wrongdoing, it can be said with some certainty that Mr Montana must have been assisted to ensure that the locomotives tender was awarded to Swifambo and that there was support for concluding the impugned Siyangena contracts.

336. Insofar as the awarding of those tenders is concerned, it bears reiterating that according to the National Head of the DPCI, Lt General Lebeya, the investigations into the criminal complaints relating to these two matters is quite advanced. In the circumstances, as regards these matters, the following recommendations are made. 341. As regards the Swifambo matter, it is recommended that:

336.1 The DPCI finalise the investigation as soon as possible

336.2 The NDPP immediately appoint a team to oversee the investigation and the prosecution of those suspected of committing criminal offences; and

336.3 In deciding whom to prosecute, the DPCI and the NDPP, in addition to the documents that they have already collated or are in the process of collating, have due regard to the evidence led at Commission, the documents that served before the Commission, the documents that formed part of the record in the review application, and the documents that Mr Ramatlakane's current Board has uncovered recently.

336.4 it is further recommended that:

336.4.1 Serious consideration be given to prosecuting the following senior employees who played a role in the award: Mr Montana, Mr Mtimkulu and Mr Mbatha

336.4.2 The roles of following persons, who were members of the BEC that recommended that the tender be awarded to Swifambo, be examined to determine whether they, or any of them, should be prosecuted: Ms Shezi, Mr Khumalo, Mr Mahlobogwane, Mr Nkosi and Mr Magoro

336.4.3 It be investigated whether the following members of the CTPC should be prosecuted: Mr Holele, Mr Mbatha, Mr Mathobela, Ms Motshologane, Mr Bopape, Ms Ngoye, Ms Shezi, and Mr Khuzwayo

336.4.4 The prosecutions of Mr Mashaba and Mr Mabunda be expedited

336.4.5 Others who may have received undue benefits from the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo, as detailed in the Reports of Mr Sacks and the liquidators, be identified; and 336.4.6 the NDPP consider instituting a prosecution, in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA, against members of the Prasa Board that approved the recommendation that the locomotives contract be awarded to Swifambo: Mr Buthelezi, Dr Gasa, Mr Khena, Ms Moore, Mr Nkoenyane, Mr Salanje and Mr Montana.

337. As regards the Siyangena matter, it is recommended that:

337.1 The DPCI finalise the investigation as soon as possible

337.2 The NDPP immediately appoint a team to oversee the investigation and the prosecution of those suspected of committing criminal offences

337.3 In deciding whom to prosecute, the DPCI and the NDPP, in addition to the documents that they have already collated or are in the process of collating, have due regard to the evidence led at Commission, the documents that served before the Commission, the documents that formed part of the record in the review application, and any further documents that the current Prasa Board has uncovered recently

337.4 Based on the foregoing, serious consideration be given to prosecuting the following Prasa employees who played a role in the conclusion of the two impugned contracts: Mr Montana, Mr Gantsho and Ms Ngubane; and 337.5 The NDPP consider instituting a prosecution, in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA, against the Prasa Board or any of its members who approved the award of the contracts with Siyangena.

338. As regards Mr Montana's property dealings, it is recommended that:

338.1 The DPCI finalises as soon as possible its investigations into the sale by Mr Montana of the Parkwood Property to Mr Van der Walt's Precise Trade and the assistance that Precise Trade or Mr Van der Walt gave to Mr Montana to pay the deposit for the Hurlingham Property and the assistance that Mr Van der Walt gave to Mr Gantsho to acquire the property in the Point area in Durban

338.2 The NDPP immediately appoint a team to oversee that investigation and prosecutes Mr Montana, Mr Van der Walt and Siyangena (and / or its associated companies) for contravening sections 12 and / or 13 of the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004.

VREDE INTEGRATED DAIRY PROJECT

INTRODUCTION

1. The province of the Free State with its grassy flatlands always struck even an occasional passer-by along the N1 national road that cuts through the province as being ideal for agricultural production. The idea did not escape the attention of the MEC for Agriculture in the province, Mr Mosebenzi Zwane, who on or about 17 November 2011 called potential role players, including members of opposition parties, to a meeting at his offices at Glen Agriculture College in Bloemfontein. At that meeting the MEC unveiled what he called the "Mohoma Mobung" Strategy, meaning "plough into the soil" in Sesotho. The strategy was in due course to be complemented by another strategy, called "Zero tolerance for hunger".
2. Implicit in the meaning of these two strategies was that the soil had to be worked and utilised for agricultural production and agri-processing in the province. The province had for some time been producing agricultural produce, which it dispatched in trucks to centres such as Gauteng and KwaZulu-Natal provinces, where it was processed and then either exported or trucked back to the Free State at a higher cost. The idea was to create a processing centre or centres within the province. The strategy was largely supported by those in attendance as one that would contribute to the creation of employment and alleviation of poverty.

3. The unveiling of the two strategies appears to have coincided with the arrival of Mr Mbana Peter Thabethe within the provincial government. He had just finished a three-year period as the special adviser to the national Minister of Agriculture Forestry and Fisheries where, according to his CV, he had risen to the position of Acting DG of the National Department.

4. On arrival in the provincial government, Mr Thabethe was appointed Head of Department (HOD) of Rural Development, which was then attached to Public Works, with both departments under one ministry. Later, Rural Development was moved to Agriculture, which became the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD). When the two sections were formally merged Mr Thabethe was appointed HOD of DARD.

5. Shortly after his appointment (as he stated to Mr SJ Schalkwyk, the senior financial investigator for the National Prosecting Authority [NPA]) he became aware of a report compiled by the National Agricultural and Marketing Council (NAMC) highlighting that the Free State was ranked second in terms of its suitability for dairy farming and that there had been a decrease in the numbers of dairy farmers nationally. With him at the helm, the Department saw an opportunity for the province to become a large player in the dairy industry.

6. Mr Thabethe conducted a feasibility study on the internet, identifying three countries, India, Germany and Sweden, as potential partners – subsequently discounting Germany and Sweden because they were first-world countries and too advanced. He chose India because he considered it to have comparable economic conditions to those in South Africa. He was also impressed by the Paras Dairy company of India because it collected milk from local producers and then processed it profitably.

7. The Vrede Dairy Project (VDP) was first mentioned when, in his State of the Province Address on 16 February 2012, the Premier, Mr Ace Magashule, indicated that a dairy project would be established at Vrede. The project was expected to create 150 jobs. It was introduced as part of the Mohoma Mobung strategy, a “growth and development strategy for agriculture and rural development. Mr Zwane subsequently informed Mr Thabethe of the availability of suitable land in Vrede, which happened to be near the MEC’s hometown.

8. On 24 February 2012 Mr Thabethe made a written request to the Premier for approval for him and one Mr Ashok Narayan “to attend a strategic meeting with a strategic partner in India from 29 February to 4 March 2012 in support of the expansion of a dairy farming in the Free State”. The request was recommended in writing by the MEC and was approved and signed by the Premier on 28 February 2012. On 29 February 2012, the day of the trip, the Premier appointed Mr Ashok Narayan as a member of his Advisory Council “with effect 1 March 2012”, indicating that his role would be “as an ICT and Project Management expert.” The Premier indicated in his letter of appointment that he would announce the names of members of his Advisory Council in his Budget Vote speech on 29 March 2012. As the sequence of events demonstrates, the request for Mr Narayan to travel to India at state expense was made, recommended and approved before his appointment – on the date of his departure for India.

9. Evidence from several other witnesses suggests that a top (unnamed) government delegation undertook the trip to India together with representatives of Estina Pty Ltd (Estina).

ESTINA

10. The company Estina was registered on 24 June 2008 with the Companies and Intellectual Property Commission (CIPC) under registration number 2008/015033/07. Its director was one Anthony Last, who resigned as director on 1 August 2008. On the same date a new director, Kamal Vasram, assumed the sole directorship of the company. On enquiry, the NPA investigator established that prior to assuming the directorship of Estina, Kamal Vasram had been the retail sales manager at Sahara Computers. He had no background or experience in farming or agriculture.

11. The core business of the entity on registration was stated as "business consultancy". On 19 October 2012, the company's core business was changed to "agriculture, farming and related activities". On 1 July 2015, Mr Vasram resigned as director and one Mr Seo Young Jeon was appointed as the sole director in his place. Two years later, on 4 May 2017, Estina applied for voluntary liquidation. In its declaration of statement of affairs, it declared that its total assets amounted to R10,000, total liabilities to R34,200, and that its liabilities therefore exceeded its assets by R24,100. This information was confirmed by the CIPC.

12. In summary, Estina has throughout had only one director, to which the Free State government entrusted the establishment and management of a R570 million project. The director, Mr Vasram, was only 33 years old when he assumed management of the dairy project. It is not clear who the shareholders of the company were when it was granted the government contract between May and July 2012.

Trip to India

13. Details have not been furnished as to who represented Estina on the trip to India. The official (government) delegates for the trip to India were the new HOD of DARD, Mr Thabethe, and the freshly appointed advisor to the Premier, Mr Ashok Narayan. However, Mr Narayan was in the process of being appointed when he boarded the plane. It is unclear what qualified Estina delegates or Mr Narayan to be on the flight.

14. On their arrival in India the delegation met with the CEO of Paras Dairy, who outlined the value chain of milk production in India. Staff members of Paras were in attendance. The South African and host delegations together visited the Paras processing plant. A copy of a presentation made by Paras was given to the South African delegation and later incorporated into a presentation made by Estina to DARD and by DARD to the Executive Council (Exco) of the Free State. An in-principle agreement for cooperation had been reached between the two delegations, though its precise nature is not clear. An official report on the trip was presented to the Free State government.

15. It appears from the first of the three affidavits signed by Mr Thabethe, dated 10 August 2017, that he and Mr Narayan did not continue to work together on the report on their return from India. Mr Narayan joined the office of the Premier while Mr Thabethe prepared the report for Exco.

Proposals by Estina

16. Following the trip to India, Estina made a presentation to DARD, wherein it proposed a partnership between Estina and DARD. A version of the project proposal was signed on 15 May 2012 by Mr Sanjeev Gautam as Managing Director of Estina. There are three different versions of the same proposal, one of which is unsigned. The three versions differ in various ways.

17. In the versions of the project proposal there is very little information given about Estina. A standalone company profile of Estina indicates that it was "established in 2010 to provide the highest calibre support in the areas of project implementation, management and consulting services to its clients" and that "Estina consultants have decades of industry experience and functional expertise" – though there is no mention of agricultural expertise or experience.

Presentations to DARD

18. On 24 May 2012 Estina made a presentation to DARD, presumably on the basis of one or a combination of the versions of the project proposal. On 26 May 2012, the Chief Directorate: District Services made a written submission for acceptance of a proposal from Estina. The document has as its subject: 'To accept the proposal from ESTINA with regard to the Vrede Integrated Dairy project and to enter into a partnership with ESTINA". The background section in the submission indicates that Estina had signed an MoU with Paras to set up the dairy project in Vrede, that Estina had made a proposal to this effect to DARD, and that the Chief Directorate recommended that DARD enter into a partnership with Estina. The final paragraph of the submission recommends that approval is granted to accept the proposal from Estina. The document was signed by Dr TJ Masiteng, Chief Director: Services; Ms S Dlamini, CFO; and Mr P.M. Thabethe, HOD Agriculture.

19. However, in evidence before the Commission, Dr Masiteng explained that the document had not been compiled by him; he did not authorise its drafting and he was not consulted about it. He was not in the office at the time of the preparation and signing of the document. The signature next to his name was that of one of his colleagues from another district, Mr Sarel Van Schalkwyk, who was acting in his position at the time. Indeed, the signature had the letters 'pp' next to it. The compiler appears to have used a template which already had the name of Mr Matsiteng on it.

20. Significantly, from its contents, the submission document refers only to Estina as the company that made the presentation. There is no reference to the involvement of Paras Dairy in the presentation or the submission.

21. Mr Thabethe explained in his affidavit of 10 August 2017 that upon his return from India he drafted an Executive Council report recommending implementation of the dairy project, which was approved by the Exco. He then invited the CEO of Paras to visit the country to inspect the proposed location of the dairy project. The CEO subsequently submitted a proposal through a South African-registered company which was accepted and a partnership agreement was drafted.

22. In his affidavit Mr Thabethe does not mention the involvement of representatives of Estina in the trip nor any presentation to his department by Estina. It appears to have been his suggestion, when talking to the CEO of Paras, that the Indian company needed to invest through a South African-registered company. He does not mention introducing his guest to Estina or any South African company.

23. According to another statement Mr Thabethe made to Mr Schalkwyk, the representatives of Paras were accompanied by representatives of Estina when they visited the Department where a joint presentation of the proposal was made. The question arises as to whether there was more than one presentation to DARD – one made jointly by Paras and Estina and another made by Estina on its own. The submission document does, however, specifically indicate the involvement of Estina ("Estina made a proposal with regard to this to DoARD"). It appears fair to accept that Estina did make a presentation to DARD. The written submission for recommendation and approval of its involvement is dated 26 May 2012, two days after the date of the alleged presentation.

24. At the hearings of the Commission, the evidence leader asked Mr Thabethe a direct question: "Who suggested that Estina partner Paras?" No direct answer was given; instead, vague statements were made that did not answer the question. This issue, therefore, remains unresolved.

Verifying the credentials of Estina

25. Mr Thabethe describes Estina as a company that appeared after the visiting CEO of Paras had left the country. He makes no mention of the involvement of Estina prior to that date. Consistent with this, it became necessary for his department to verify the status of Estina before he did business with it. His statement about the verification process confirmed that a SARS tax clearance certificate was obtained. Verification of account details was to be obtained by provincial Treasury.

26. The expression "verifications were done in respect of Estina Company" is insufficient for Departmental accreditation purposes. He says nothing about meeting with the directors or other management of the company prior to signing the First Agreement with them other than the above statement about verification.

Decision to appoint Estina (and First Agreement)

27. Following the presentation of 15/24 May 2012 and the recommendation and approval of 26 May 2012, on 27 May 2012 Mr Thabethe addressed a letter to Mr S Gautam accepting the proposal made by Estina subject to an appropriate agreement being signed between DARD and Estina.

28. The evidence of the CFO, Ms SS Dhlamini, is that two agreements between Estina and DARD were signed in June 2012. Both were signed on behalf of Estina on 5 June 2012. The first was signed on behalf of DARD on 6 June 2012 and the second on 7 June 2012. The differences between these two agreements are described more fully below. When the agreement signed on behalf of DARD on 6 June 2012 was presented to the CFO by the HOD, who had already signed it, she pointed out that as the agreement referred to procurement of services from Estina, it would be subject to SCM processes and the contract would accordingly have to go out on tender. Her own understanding of the proposal was that the relationship between Estina and DARD envisaged in the proposal was not for acquisition of services. Mr Thabethe returned with the agreement, dated 7 June 2012, which he had signed on behalf of DARD.

29. The idea was therefore to conclude an agreement which would not need to go through the competitive process of SCM. On closer examination, however, there is little difference between the agreement of 6 June 2012 and that of 7 June 2012. Both spelt out broadly similar obligations for both parties, and the values espoused are the same. It would appear, however, that the agreement signed on behalf of DARD on 6 June 2012 was never taken further and was for all intents and purposes replaced by the one signed on 7 June 2012. The latter agreement is therefore referred to henceforth as the First Agreement.

30. The First Agreement, described as a partnership agreement between Estina and DARD, was signed on 5 June 2012 by Mr S Gautam on behalf of Estina and on 7 June 2012 by Mr Thabethe on behalf of DARD. The CFO witnessed the HOD's signature, having satisfied herself of its terms, in particular of the circumvention of the SCM process.

31. The Provincial Treasury was approached on 15 June 2012 by the CFO of DARD. She attempted to secure payment of R30 million for Estina in terms of the partnership agreement. She presented the contract between DARD and Estina, together with a document request from DARD for an amount of R30 million, to the DDG: Financial Services of Provincial Treasury Ms Anna Susanna Fourie. In assessing the documents, Ms Fourie raised certain questions about the contract, which the CFO was unable to answer satisfactorily. Her concerns were twofold: the normal procurement process had not been followed in procuring the services of Estina; and the contract in question, signed on 5 June 2012 by Estina and on 7 June 2012 by the HOD, did not sufficiently protect the interests of the Department. Ms Fourie also approached her colleague dealing with the Provincial Revenue account and established that there were in fact no funds available to meet the requested payment. The agreement had been concluded without budgetary provisions.

32. Accordingly, on 18 June 2012 Ms Fourie approached the State Law Advisors (Legal Services) in the Office of the Premier to review and advise on the contract. She consulted Advocate Ditira, the DDG: Legal Services, who furnished her written opinion on 19 June 2012 confirming that indeed procurement processes had not been followed and that the contract might be invalid for a number of reasons. Adv Ditira further suggested that the Treasury Committee should send the procurement documents to Legal Services for their review.

33. In the meantime, on 13 June 2012 DARD had made its presentation to the Executive Council in which it sought the approval of Exco to enter into an agreement with Estina to establish a dairy project in the Free State. By resolution number 62/2012 dated 13 June 2012 the Exco of the Free State Province resolved to approve the implementation of the dairy project and the sourcing from the province of additional funding of R84 million for that financial year, and agreed that the Department would cover the costs, which over the next three years would amount to R114 million per annum. The resolution was signed by the Secretary of Exco, the MEC of Agriculture and Rural Development and the Premier. Ms Dlamini would, as CFO, have been aware of this resolution when she approached the Provincial Treasury on 15 June 2012 to try to secure payment to Estina of R30 million.

34. Having advised on the illegality of the First Agreement between DARD and Estina, Legal Services proceeded to draw up an altogether new agreement between the same parties in order to give effect to the above resolution of the Executive Council taken on 13 June 2012. The new agreement was signed on 05 July 2012 by Mr Thabethe as HOD representing DARD and by Mr Gautam as Managing Director of Estina.

35. In his affidavit Mr Thabethe does not refer to the first and then to the second agreement that his Department signed with Estina; nor does he indicate why one agreement was signed after the other. In paragraph 14 of his affidavit he merely refers to "The ultimate agreement signed [having been] perused and edited by the state legal adviser". He glosses over the fact that he personally ended up signing two consecutive agreements with DARD (in fact three) because of inherent illegality.

Second Agreement between DARD and Estina

36. In 2012 Dr Masiteng was employed as a "General Manager: District Services" by DARD. He had the status of Chief Director. At the time of testifying before the Commission he was the Acting HOD for DARD within the Free State provincial government.

37. The core of his evidence appears in an answering affidavit which he prepared as the third respondent in the Free State High Court application in terms of section 38 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act 121 of 1998 (POCA) brought by the NPA. The NPA later withdrew the charges against him and paid his costs; they also withdrew the criminal case against him. He claimed to have been one of the general managers reporting to the HOD and was responsible for district services. He was not an accounting officer. He had no decision-making powers and was only allowed to submit documents, proposals and submissions to the CFO, who then recommended them to the HOD for approval. All submissions of line managers had to go to the CFO for consideration and recommendation. Dr Masiteng therefore had no authority, power or competency to recommend or to approve the proposed project or to authorise any payments to be affected in pursuance of the project.

38. Dr Masiteng claimed he became "involved" in the VDP for the first time on 5 July 2012, after the agreement had already been signed. On the same day the HOD handed him some documents and requested him (Dr Masiteng) "to immediately draft a submission for his approval in execution of a resolution by Exco" for the implementation of the proposed VDP "with entities known as Estina and Paras". The documents Mr Thabethe submitted to him included a submission to Exco by MEC Zwane; a proposal compiled by Sanjeev Gautam on behalf of Estina dated 15 May 2012; a partnership agreement concluded between DARD and Estina dated 5 June 2012; an agreement between DARD and Estina for the establishment and management of VDP dated 5 July 2012; and an Exco resolution dated 13 June 2012. 39. When he received these documents, the decision to approve the dairy project had therefore already been taken by Exco and the necessary contracts in respect of VDP had already been signed and steps had been taken to implement the agreements. What the HOD sought of him was to compile and submit a submission for the CFO's consideration and recommendation and his (the HOD's) final approval.

39. Dr Masiteng complied, handing his submissions to the CFO, who approved and submitted the document to the HOD. Mr Thabethe, however, immediately informed Dr Masiteng that those submissions he had made had previously been recommended and approved. The Finance unit within DARD later confirmed that a previous submission dated 26 May 2012 to the same effect had indeed previously been approved by the HOD and that payments totalling an amount of R30 million had already been made by DARD to Estina on 11 June 2012. The Finance unit furnished him with the necessary proof.

40. Mr Thabethe made it clear to Dr Masiteng that he did not want a submission that had already been approved; he wanted a proposal to be compiled for his approval "to deviate from the normal SCM processes and procedure and appoint Estina/Paras to implement/establish Integrated Dairy in Vrede". In compliance, Dr Masiteng added an additional proposal to his initial submission by inserting the motivation, as specifically instructed, for a deviation from SCM procedures to appoint Estina. It is clear that Mr Thabethe himself initiated the process of obtaining the approval for deviation when the agreement had already been signed. By then an initial payment had also been made to Estina – or steps had been taken to effect payment – even before the agreement itself was concluded.

41. It emerged from Dr Masiteng's further evidence before the Commission that if an HOD gives an instruction to a Chief Director, the Chief Director must comply with that instruction. Failing to comply with a clear mandatory instruction of the HOD may expose the Chief Director to disciplinary action for failing to carry out the instructions of the accounting officer. The official performance agreement obliges the Chief Director to assist the HOD in executing the objectives of the department.

42. Similarly, a resolution of the Exco obliges the different layers of management to give effect to it. The expectation is nevertheless that officials, like the CFO, are not expected to act blindly in the face of a resolution. They are expected to interrogate it and take up matters with Exco to ensure compliance with the law. The CFO, who is appointed in terms of the PFMA, is required to review the implementation of those Exco resolutions which have financial implications. This is a perspective to bear in mind when one considers the fact the final submission of 0 July 2012 was compiled, recommended and approved when the Agreement between Estina and DARD had already been signed on the same day. The signed contract and the Exco resolution were part of the documents placed before Dr Masiteng by Mr Thabethe when he instructed him to prepare the submission.

43. Dr Masiteng explained that once an implementing agent has been appointed, as was done with Estina, a number of normal internal procedures do not apply to the project in question. The implementing agent takes charge of the implementation from the outset. Such an agent has total responsibility for the appointment of service providers and the procurement of materials. In this case Estina was also appointed to undertake the feasibility study, to do the business planning, to deal with the water issues, and so forth. Dr Masiteng agreed to the suggestion of the Chairperson of the Commission that in such a case an implementing agent should be an independent party. Estina effectively acted as project manager, implementing agent and contractor. As a partner with the Free State government through DARD, Estina was in effect also a co-owner of the project, taking charge of it without any evidence of accountability. Paras, according to media reports, denied ever having been involved in the project.

44. The government appears to have given Estina extraordinary powers in relation to the VDP: money was paid over even before the approval of Exco; and the implementing agent was itself never assessed. If Estina was simply "preferred" by Paras, then an international company with no standing in South Africa and with no agreement with the Free State government simply imposed Estina on the provincial government, which accepted Estina without any due diligence having been performed.

LAND, PHUMELELA MUNICIPALITY AND 99 YEAR LEASE

45. VDP was to be established on the farm Krynaauwlust 276, in the district of Vrede. The property was owned by the Phumelela Municipality, which held it through a Deed of Trust.

46. Evidence suggests that the HOD of the provincial DARD initially wanted to locate the project somewhere near the town of Sasolburg, which would have been close to the big market of the densely populated City of Johannesburg in Gauteng. It was eventually taken to Vrede on the suggestion of MEC Zwane. The MEC's hometown where he grew up and was educated is the nearby town of Warden, whose residents were also targeted to benefit from the project. The black small-scale farmers of that town and those of the nearby Memel were invited to join and submitted their names as potential intended beneficiaries.

47. At the time when the suggestion was made and a decision taken to locate VDP there, the local municipality had leased a substantial part of the farm to some local farmers for a total annual rental income of approximately R1 million. The lease agreements were all terminated and the whole farm was leased to the project on a 99-year rent free lease. The municipality derived no demonstrable benefit from the lease.

48. Evidence about how the land was acquired for VDP came mainly from Mr Albert Doctor Radebe, a farmer and member of the Municipal Council of Phumelela Municipality, where he represented the minority opposition party, the Democratic Alliance (DA), and from Mr Moremi, the Municipal Manager at the time. Mr Radebe gave evidence mainly about a presentation to the municipality in June 2012 about land for the farm and his being attacked for exposing irregularities on the farm. He testifies about a day on which the MEC for Agriculture, Mr Zwane, the HOD, Mr Thabethe, and the CFO, Ms Dlamini, made a presentation to the council regarding the facilitation of a transfer of 4400 ha of agricultural land owned by the municipality in Vrede to the Free State DARD. The land was required for the purposes of establishing a dairy farm, which the council had just leased to local commercial farmers for a period of three years. The MEC and his officials told the council that they would pay off the commercial farmers and lease the land from the municipality at market rates.

49. The presentation, according to Mr Radebe, stated that DARD had budgeted R400 million for the project and that Estina, which was in partnership with Paras of India, would inject funds of approximately R500 million to bring the project to approximately R900 million in value. There were to be approximately one hundred BEE intended beneficiaries who would together hold 51 precent of the shares. The project would generate R100 million a year and would benefit and uplift the community.

50. Mr Radebe and other DA members on the council were not supportive of the project as presented because the details presented by the government officials appeared sketchy: there was no budget, no business plan was presented to council, and no feasibility study had been conducted. There was nothing documented, and the council was provided with only an oral presentation.

51. However, the mayor, Mr John Motaung, was highly supportive of the VDP proposal. Mr Radebe gathered that the mayor and the MEC were very close, “like brothers”. As members of the opposition were vastly outnumbered by members of the majority party on the council, a resolution was passed by council allowing the Department and Estina to use the municipal land to develop dairy production facilities in Phumelela.

52. A copy of the resolution attached to Mr Radebe’s affidavit is vague, stating only that “Estina Pty Ltd / Paras Dairy Company are hereby permitted to use the 4400 ha of agricultural land located in Phumelela local municipality, for use in conjunction with a dairy production facility”. The resolution was unanimously adopted on 19 June 2012, the opposition having decided not to participate.

53. A summary of the representation regarding VDP attached to Mr Radebe’s statement suggests that the intended beneficiaries were to hold 51%, Estina 49% and the municipality 4% (which does not sum to 100) and that “the government will fund the establishment of the dairy. PARAS / Estina will fund the processing plant”.

54. Mr Radebe later learned that there were several dead cattle on the farm, dumped next to the stream which provided drinking water to the town of Vrede. Having confirmed the facts, he reported them to the press. He also informed the environmental authorities, who ordered the owners of the farm to remove the carcasses and bury them at an appropriate place on the farm. This was done. Mr Radebe claimed that “the people who were in charge of the operations at the dairy farm knew nothing about farming dairy cows”.

55. After publication of the deadly state of affairs on the farm, those running the farm placed security guards at the entrance gate and prevented the public from accessing it. As a result of his activities, Mr Radebe became a target of the people he called “a group of enforcers employed by the Department of Agriculture in Vrede”, whom he named.

56. The evidence of Mr Moremi on the presentations and the deal on the land from which the dairy was to be operated complements that of Mr Radebe, though given from a slightly different perspective. 58. When he gave his version, Mr Moremi was the Chief Director at the Free State Provincial Treasury. Between May 2012 and 14 February 2014, he was the Municipal Manager of the Phumelela Local Municipality, within whose area of jurisdiction the VDP was established.

57. He testified that in June 2012 a team from DARD led by Mr Thabethe had visited the municipality, where they made a presentation about the VDP to municipal managers, the community, and commercial farmers. The purpose of the presentation was to brief those addressed and to request the municipality to make land available, namely the farm Krynaauwlust 275.

58. The presentation sounded positive: the project was going to be one of the biggest in the country and was going to attract foreign direct investment in Vrede, with an Indian company, Paras, being part of the project. The municipality was going to be on the international map, with massive economic spin-offs, and was offered a 4% shareholding in the project.

59. At that time, part of the farm in question had been leased to four commercial farmers between 1 October 2011 and 30 September 2013 for an annual rental of approximately R1 million. However, there was sufficient will on the side of both the DARD and the municipality to negotiate and reach agreement with the existing commercial tenants.

60. On 26 June 2012 Mr Moremi wrote to Mr Thabethe confirming that the municipality had in principle agreed to avail its farm to the Department for the VDP. On 21 June 2012 the HOD had sent to the municipal manager a draft resolution which the municipality was requested to adopt. On 3 July 2012 the municipal council took a formal resolution that Estina Pty Ltd / Paras Company were permitted to use the 4400 ha of agricultural land located within the municipality for use in conjunction with the dairy production facility. The resolution directed the municipal manager to publish the resolution, which was to take effect after thirty days unless a valid petition in opposition was filed in accordance with municipal bylaws.

61. On 18 July 2012 Mr Moremi held a meeting with representatives of a new venture company, Zayna Investments Pty Ltd. They were Mr Narayan and a lawyer, Mr Johann Schalkwyk. At that meeting the lawyer presented the municipal manager with a draft lease agreement. After perusing the agreement in their presence, the municipal manager requested that he be afforded an opportunity to seek legal opinion on the draft.

62. Following the legal advice which he obtained from Legal Services in the Office of the Premier, the draft lease agreement was not signed. Instead, subsequent thereto, he, acting on behalf of the municipality, and the HOD, acting on behalf of the provincial government, signed a Cession and Land Use Agreement on 12 and 14 December 2012 in which the municipality assigned its rights in respect of the farm and under pre-existing lease agreements to the Free State provincial government – which duly entered into a 99-year lease of the farm with Estina on the same date, with the HOD signing on behalf of the government and Mr Vasram signing on behalf of Estina. The lease was notarially executed on 18 December 2012 and registered in the Deeds Office on 18 January 2013.

63. The salient terms of the lease agreement were that it was entered into for a period of 99 years and that no monthly rental was payable by Estina to the government for the entire term of the lease. As appears from the NT report, the HOD was asked several times about whether the 99-year rent free lease was signed with Estina and his response was that such a lease was not signed.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT PERSPECTIVE

64. The evidence of two witnesses, Mr Elders Mtshiza from the national Department of Agriculture Forestry and Fisheries (DAFF) and Mr Dumisani Cele from the NT, has a bearing on the turn of events involving the implementation of the VDP.

65. Mr Mtshiza, Programme Management Coordinator in DAFF and coordinator of the Comprehensive Agriculture Support Programme (CASP), oversaw provincial requirements for managing project funds. Provinces had to prepare a provisional business plan and present it to the National Assessment Panel (NAP). Every project had to have conducted a feasibility study, produced an environmental assessment plan (EIA) where applicable, and investigated water rights and access to electricity.

66. During 30-31 January 2013, the Free State DARD made a presentation to the NAP on the VDP as part of the CASP and Ilima/Letsema business plan. The delegation informed the NAP that the VDP had been approved by the provincial Exco as one of its strategic projects for the Mohoma Mobung Strategy; the province had secured a private investor, Estina, to partner with the DARD; one hundred black dairy producers around Vrede were to be owners of the dairy value chain; the feasibility study had been conducted; equitable share had been invested in clearing the identified land where construction had started; and the land had been donated by the municipality.

67. The NAP sought clarity on a number of issues: the amount of water available for the project, water rights, the feasibility study, and the project business plan. The province was requested to submit a list of the 100 intended beneficiaries of the project to the DAFF before the end of April 2013.

68. Overall, the NAP supported the implementation of the VDP. However, only R53 million from CASP was approved in the 2013/14 financial year; the requested R23 million from Ilima/Letsema was declined.

National Treasury

69. Mr Dumisani Cele, in 2013 the Director: Specialised Audit Services within NT, headed the Forensic section of that unit. He attached to his affidavit a copy of the NT Report on the investigations into the Vrede Project conducted by ENS Forensics issued on 11 February 2014, testifying that on or about 10 June 2013, NT received a complaint regarding the irregular appointment of and payments to Estina. The complaint came through a Mail & Guardian newspaper article dated 10 June 2013. It appeared that the funds used to pay Estina had come from a grant administered by the national DAFF.

70. As a result of the media article, NT initiated an investigation. Mr Cele was assigned to it. He acquired the services of ENS Forensics to assist with the investigation. On 22 August 2013 Mr Cele made an appointment with the HOD of DARD, Mr Thabethe, seeking "information pertaining to allegations of irregular engagement of Estina / Para for the establishment of an integrated dairy in Vrede". The HOD claimed that he (Cele) had no power to investigate his department. Mr Cele returned home without any documentation about the VDP.

71. After investigation Mr Cele found that SCM procedures had not been followed in the appointment of Estina. Nor were the requirements for a deviation followed. Mr Cele also found that an un-authorised payment of R114 million had been made and that there were no intended beneficiaries in terms of AGRIBEE.

72. Mr Cele urged that his claims be investigated because, as he pointed out, the Commission had a responsibility in terms of its own TORs to take action to dislodge practices of state capture.

73. Areas not covered by the NT report include a possible Gupta connection and allegations of overpricing of assets acquired.

Delegation to Vrede

74. Following the presentation made by the Free State DARD to the NAP in January 2013, Mr Mtshiza, in July/August 2013, led a delegation of DAFF to Vrede in response to the letter that NT had sent to DAFF citing concerns of non-compliance by the DARD. NT needed information from DAFF on the project and on how much CASP funding had been made available. The delegation found that de-bushing, fencing, road construction and the silage bank had been completed; construction of the dairy structure was underway; about 351 Friesland cows had been purchased; and the cows had been attended to by a veterinarian. An assessment of the required documentation indicated that the water rights were not in place and that the amount of water available for the project had not been established, the list of intended beneficiaries had not been provided, and the feasibility study and business plan had not been submitted.

75. The feasibility study was later sent by the province to the DAFF and was analysed by the chief economist and a dairy expert. On the basis of their analysis and of the assessment of the delegation, it was concluded that the assumption that 45 litres of milk per cow per day would be produced was highly unrealistic; more detail was required to verify the economic feasibility of the project; figures mentioned for the economy-wide impact of the project were not conclusive; and there was no evidence to support the inclusion of small-scale farmers as intended beneficiaries in the project.

76. Professional technical support persons required to make the plan work (such as animal scientists – dairy experts, animal nutritionists, and pasture scientists – and irrigation and infrastructure engineers) had not been involved in the project.

77. In addition to recommending that the above deficiencies had to be addressed, it was proposed that the R53 million allocated from CASP in the 2013/14 financial year be withdrawn from the project immediately and redirected to incomplete projects in the province and to small-scale farmers indebted to the Agricultural Credit Board – to boost their productivity to enable them to service their DAFF loans.

78. DAFF offered to make experts available to support the province to ensure that the requirements were met, which would allow DAFF to make funds available for the project in the next financial year. However, no requests were made by the province for additional support and no funding was requested for the completion of the project.

LOCAL BUSINESS PERSPECTIVE

79. In addition to the testimony of Mr Radebe, the Commission received the evidence of Mr Willie Basson who owned and operated a construction company and hired out moving equipment and Mr Johannes Cornelius Hermanus Theron who was also involved in local dairy farming.

80. In about March 2013 Mr Basson was contracted by Estina to attend to the drainage and certain construction and earth moving works related to the various cattle sheds in which dairy cows would be housed. In the same year he was approached directly by Mr C Prasad to assist in the establishment of what was called “the processing plant”.

81. Parts for the processing plant appeared to him to have been shipped in containers. When they arrived at the farm on trucks it was required that they be removed from the containers and installed in the appropriate positions in the processing plant. Mr Basson provided various heavy lifting equipment to facilitate the process. He was personally present when much of the equipment was removed and “immediately noted that several of the stainless-steel kettles and containers appeared used and in fact were badly rusting and in a general poor condition”. In his view this was not new equipment but second-hand. Later that year he was contacted again by Mr Prasad to be of assistance to Estina after the death of approximately one hundred cattle. He was asked to excavate a suitable burial site, transport the carcasses of the dead animals to it, bury them, and then refill the excavated site. His observation was that “the majority of these cattle had died from hunger and malnutrition”.

82. On two further occasions he again assisted in burying cattle, ten to fifteen cattle at a time. It was clear to Mr Basson that the people in charge of the project had absolutely no idea about cattle farming. He procured just over R2 million worth of cattle feed between 8 August 2014 and 4 January 2016.

83. In the course of his involvement with the VDP, Mr Basson came to meet several of the people tasked with the establishment of the VDP. He said that “No less than three of these individuals were clearly Indian nationals who had very limited ability to communicate in English language and who were identified to me by Mr Prasad as being members of the Gupta family”.

84. Mr Theron was a dairy farm manager of an established dairy in Vrede with extensive experience in the industry, including in the Free State. He testified that he provided information to representatives of Estina about dairy farming in Vrede; he knew about the termination of the lease contracts of the four commercial farmers who previously leased the farm Krynaauwlust from the municipality; he referred representatives of Estina to the local agents of Alva Laval, from whom they bought milking machines; and representatives of the company later invited him to a Saxonwold compound, which possibly belonged to the Gupta brothers.

85. During 2012 Mr Theron was in the employ of Mr Rodney Neuman as a dairy manager at his dairy business at Cork in the district of Vrede. Mr Neuman invited him to a meeting with a delegation from Estina who were visiting the Neuman Dairy and needed some advice as to the local dairy conditions. In the delegation he recognised Mr John Motaung – the Mayor of Vrede – accompanied by a delegation of about fifteen people, all of Indian descent. Although some of them were South African, several were not South African but from India. He demonstrated to them the operations at the Neuman Dairy, which had 400 cows producing about 21,000 litres of milk every second day, equating to approximately 25 litres per cow per day. It was a profitable operation.

86. Mr Theron's employer, Mr Neuman, had leased a portion of the farm from the local Phumelela Municipality. After the delegation had exerted substantial pressure on Mr Neuman, the agreement was terminated.

87. Approximately a month later, Mr Theron was contacted telephonically by Mr Narayan, who had been part of the delegation to the Neuman Dairy, who invited him to meet urgently with him in Johannesburg. Messrs Theron and Neuman met in a security compound in Saxonwold, where stringent security measures were in place.

88. The meeting was chaired by Mr Narayan, who informed them that VDP was a major government project in which Estina had undertaken to make a substantial investment of R300 million and in which the government would in turn invest some R700 million, making it a R1 billion agricultural project. The project was described as a key project of the then Premier of the Free State, Mr Magashule. Mr Narayan was there as an adviser to the Premier to ensure the success of the project. Initially in awe, Messrs Theron and Neuman subsequently had some misgivings: the budget felt inflated; and the area in which they wished to establish the project was not the best location (the project was best suited to coastal areas where water was in abundance).

89. Mr Theron was then introduced to an Indian veterinarian, to whom he spoke at length, advising him on how to construct and establish the dairy. At the end of the meeting, Mr Narayan handed Mr Theron an envelope containing approximately R5000 in cash. There was no invoice or receipt for this payment.

90. The primary interest of Messrs Theron and Neuman was to sell cattle to the project. They had top quality Holstein genetic material of stud quality and would have been able to supply cattle at approximately R8000 a head at the time.

91. They did, however, refer their hosts to the local agents of Alva Laval, the suppliers of dairy plant equipment, who were successful in selling and installing a 30-point rotary milking machine at the farm for R6 million. Both Mr Neuman and Mr Theron were jointly paid a further sum of R60 000 as a 1% spotter's fee for the referral.

92. Some months later, Mr Theron offered his services as a dairy farm manager to Mr Prasad, of Estina, but was rejected and chased off the property by Mr Prasad.

93. Mr Theron become aware of a rumour that the mayor, Mr Motaung, the municipal manager for Vrede, had been given a brand-new Mercedes Benz ML4 50 as a thank-you gesture for facilitating the lease agreement and negotiation of the new 99-year lease that Estina had secured for the farm.

94. The abovementioned evidence counters the suggestion that since local businesses were not willing to assist in the establishment of the VDP, the HOD had to seek assistance from India.

EXPERT PERSPECTIVE

95. In addition evidence of an objective expert assessment of the project was also received. The evidence came from Mr David Andreas Maree, an agricultural economist employed by FNB as Head: Information and Management. The evidence was based on his assessment of and investigation into Estina and the VDP in November 2013. Mr Maree's qualifications (BSc in Agricultural Economics, MBA, and MSc in Agricultural Economics) and experience (as agricultural economist at HG Grain Marketing, the Milk Producers Organisation, Agri-SA, and FNB) lend considerable weight to the validity of his testimony at the Commission.

96. Mr Maree provided a background to the dairy industry in South Africa. The number of dairy farms had declined from 3,899 in January 2007 to 2,083 in September 2013. In the Free State in particular, producers had declined by 57% over the same period – the number diminishing from 1,067 in June 2007 to 423 in September 2013. The decline was due to higher production in pasture-based (coastal) areas. The cost of milk production in-land due to the increase in maize prices and other input costs was a key factor in these declines. In December 2007 the Free State province produced 80% of total milk in South Africa; but by February 2012 this had declined to 10.5%. The VDP proposal, Mr Maree explained, claimed that India was the largest milk producer in the world. But this was only true if buffalo milk was included. South Africa consumed mainly cows' milk. For the period 2010 to 2012, the European Union was the largest producer of milk, followed by the United States, with India in third place. Nor did Estina and Paras feature in the list of the top twenty major dairy companies in the world. The VDP proposal had estimated employment creation by the VDP of 600 jobs, which was improbable given the growing mechanisation of the sector. Dairy cattle were costed at R25 000 per cow in milk in the Estina proposal – also too high since the then cost of a cow in milk was about R15 000 per cow.

97. An amount of R5 million had been budgeted for a milking parlour, and a further R15 million for "other dairy equipment". The expert's view was that for an amount of R15 million a state-of-the-art, high precision parlour could be erected. While the sale of milk had been touted to provide extra income on a regular basis for rural people, the VDP had been envisaged primarily as a large commercial project to provide jobs in the rural areas rather than to promote small-scale milk production. The proposal did not seem to appreciate the difference between the various business models. Mr Maree's conclusion was that an in-depth cost-benefit analysis of the impact of the proposed project was needed given the amount of money the government had been lured into spending on VDP.

98. The business plan contained inconsistencies; the feasibility study had no clear findings or recommendations; and the plan lacked detail on the costing of equipment, a marketing plan, an environmental impact assessment (EIA), information about management and personnel requirements, a time schedule for the project, possible contingency plans with regard to electricity costs and energy supply, a plan for the sourcing of cows, and a complete cash flow projection. On these grounds, Mr Maree's recommendation was that the government should discontinue the project since it would not receive value for money from it.

INTENDED BENEFICIARY PERSPECTIVE

99. Small-scale black dairy farmers were the intended beneficiaries of the project. Those who were already in that business would benefit by growing their dairy farming businesses into bigger commercial operations, while those interested but not yet in dairy farming would be offered an opportunity to enter the business.

100. The project had been proposed on the basis that it aimed to empower 100 individual small farmers, who would each receive a donation of ten milk cows via government funding. There were to be no cows in the dairy project business except those that the government would acquire and donate to the intended beneficiaries, who were not expected to pay to enter the project. Government would buy shares for them.

101. Evidence was obtained mainly from two persons numbered among the intended beneficiaries: Mr Ephraim Makhosini Dhlamini, chairperson of the local Farmers Association; and Mr Meshack Mpaleni Ncongwane, his deputy. Evidence was also obtained from Mr Mhlaba, who, together with two others, was chosen to form a committee of representatives of intended beneficiaries dealing with government representatives on the one hand and representatives of the company appointed to implement the project on the other. Mr Mhlaba was chosen to chair the committee in question.

Evidence

102. Since the testimonies of Messrs Dhlamini and Ncongwane are similar, their evidence is presented together. Mr Dhlamini was self-employed at the time of the implementation of the VDP, mainly as a farmer with 52 cattle in the homage of the municipality. Out of his farming proceeds he had established another business, a record bar, in Vrede. Mr Ncongwane owned about 60 head of cattle and focused on dairy farming, while Mr Dhlamini focused on beef farming. As chair of the African Farmers Association, Mr Dhlamini represented small farmers in the area, mostly in their interactions with DARD. The Association initially comprised 82 farmers, and at the time of testifying the number was 120 farmers.

103. Together these gentlemen attended several meetings about VDP. Most meetings were held with government officials, mostly representatives of DARD, officials of the office of the Public Protector, the Hawks, representatives of political parties, and the media.

104. Mr Zwane was well known to Mr Dhlamini and other intended beneficiaries. Mr Zwane had grown up, been educated, and had worked within the Vrede area. Residents of his hometown, Warden, were included amongst the intended beneficiaries.

105. Of the meetings about the VDP attended by Messrs Dhlamini and Ncongwane, four are the focus of the following discussion.

    105.1 The first meeting was called by the then MEC, Mr Zwane, in about June 2012. Amongst the attendees were the Mayor, Mr Motaung, the HOD, Mr Thabethe, Mr Dume Kobeni (from the local ANC office, also an extension officer attached to DARD), Mr Jimmy Mphahlele, and two other officials of DARD who were residents of Vrede, Mr Khuliza Sibeko and Ms Thuto Kganye. About 100 community members were in attendance. The MEC introduced the idea of a dairy project to include milking and the processing of milk into products like yoghurt, cheese, and a number of other dairy products. Most members of the community were receptive to the idea, though a few were suspicious. Local farmers were asked to indicate which category of stock farming they had an interest in.

    105.2 At the second meeting, attended by the mayor, the HOD, Ms Alta Meyer, Mr Khanye, Mr Dume (an employee of the municipality), the two local representatives of the MEC (Mr Sibeko and Ms Thuto), and by intended beneficiaries from the nearby towns of Warden and Memel, it was announced that the Mayor of the local Phumelela Municipality had made available to DARD 4 000 ha of land where the dairy cows would be kept. Government would provide feed for these cows. Farmers were told to sell their existing cattle, especially meat or beef cattle, in return for which the government would give each of them ten head of dairy cows. MEC Zwane added that the intended beneficiaries would have a 52% shareholding in VDP, 20% would go to roads, bursaries for scholars, hospitals, and so on, and 28% would go to government. He urged the intended beneficiaries not to sell the shares allocated to them as these would be their legacy. The intended beneficiaries would be taken to India for training in dairy farming. According to the testimony of Mr Mhlaba, it was at this meeting that Ms Meyer explained the contents of the Beneficiary Agreement to all the intended beneficiaries, whereafter he was required to sign the agreement. When the Agreement was presented for his signature, it had already been signed on behalf of DARD by Dr Masiteng with witnesses but not dated. Neither Messrs Dhlamini nor Ncongwane makes specific reference to Ms Meyer's presentation of the Beneficiary Agreement.

    105.3 At the third meeting, held on a Friday in 2013 and convened by Ms Meyer, intended beneficiaries were asked to furnish her with copies of their identity documents. Having anticipated the issue, Mr Dhlamini had held a brief caucus meeting with the farmers before the meeting, advising the farmers not to provide Ms Meyer with copies of their identity documents as funds had already been released without the details of intended beneficiaries having been provided. There was a realisation that the identity documents were being sought to legitimise a project which had already been initiated. However, the farmers did not heed the advice and all (including Mr Dhlamini) ended up furnishing Ms Meyer with copies of their identity documents. The intended beneficiaries were asked to nominate three amongst them to represent them at VDP-related meetings with DARD. The representatives were Mr June David Mahlaba (as chairperson), Ms Zelpha Lindiwe Masiteng (as secretary), and Mr James Dumalisile Ngqosini (as treasurer).

    105.4 At the fourth meeting, in 2014, it was announced by its convener, Ms Meyer, that at the behest of the Premier, Mr Magashule, the Free State Development Corporation (FDC) would be taking over VDP (from Estina) the following week. At an imbizo at Frankfort attended by Mr Zwane, Mr Thabethe, and Lesedi Radio Station, Mr Dlhamini tried to raise the concerns of the intended beneficiaries about VDP but was ignored. The Minister patently told him that as he (Mr Dhlamini) had called the people running the farm "Ma-Gupta", the Minister could not help him. Mr Thabethe promised to sort things out but as far as the intended beneficiaries could see, nothing was done to honour that undertaking.

106. Further meetings were held in connection with VDP but from which the intended beneficiaries derived no benefit: at a meeting in March 2019 (MEC Ms Mamiki Qabathe of DARD in attendance), the MEC reprimanded the intended beneficiaries for having contacted the media; at another meeting intended beneficiaries were asked to reregister their interest in the VDP because of the appointment of a new chief director, Mr Madiba, but refused; at yet another meeting, Dr Masiteng met with intended beneficiaries to inform them that the farm project had not started showing a profit and that the 52% shareholding announcement had been an error; and at the last meeting attended by Messrs Dhlamini and Ncongwane, which took place on the Vrede dairy farm itself courtesy of the leader of the opposition, Mr Mmusi Maimane the visitors found poisonous plants and the carcasses of dead cattle.

107. Messrs Dhlamini and Ncongwane also met independently with and gave statements to representatives of the Hawks and the Public Protector (PP), Adv Busisiwe Mkhwebane. In the last of a few meetings with the PP they indicated that they had lost faith in her because of a broken promise to secure statements from them in 2017 (she herself visited them in person in 2019), because she had issued her first report (probably an interim report) on VDP without consulting or interviewing the intended beneficiaries, and because she claimed that only 35 persons were beneficiaries of the VDP.

Beneficiary Agreement

108. The Beneficiary Agreement alluded to above (which Mr Mhlaba signed) had emerged in the process of attempts to formalise the interests of the intended beneficiaries in the VDP.

109. DARD had sought legal advice from Mr AJ Venter, head of the Legal Services section within the Office of the Premier, on Beneficiary Agreements. Mr Venter claims to have given the advice orally to Dr Masiteng, who presented Mr Venter with a Beneficiary Agreement which he had already signed. Dr Masiteng, Mr Venter noted, was not an accounting officer and therefore had no authority to sign such an agreement. Legal Services was simultaneously provided with a list of intended beneficiaries who, it was assumed, were to be presented with those agreements in order for them to sign.

110. Mr Venter noted that the document was inappropriate for the purpose for which it had been drafted. It was not clear precisely what was being transferred by DARD to each individual beneficiary; the intended beneficiaries, not being part of a cooperative, could not hold rights over the same thing without a structure to do so; and the Agreement indicated that individual intended beneficiaries could dispose of the assets of the project.

111. From the perspective of Dr Masiteng, the document entitled "Beneficiary Agreement" to which Mr Venter referred had not been drawn up by him personally: it was drafted by his internal legal team. As the document itself showed, it was signed by him and Mr Mhlaba – the chairperson of the representative committee which had never functioned. Dr Masiteng conceded that the document had certain defects, claiming that it was cleaned up and certain clauses rectified and that there was a new agreement in place. Such an agreement has not been found.

Special purpose vehicle

112. Mr Roy Jankielsohn, a member of the provincial legislature who took a keen interest in the VDP, testified that a special purpose vehicle was to be registered in which BEE intended beneficiaries were to hold 51% and Estina 49% of the shares. The new legal entity to be formed was Mohoma Mobung Dairy Project Pty Ltd. Other evidence presented in this report identifies the entity as Zayna Investments Pty Ltd t/a Mohoma Mobung Dairy Project.

113. Mr Jankielsohn testified that the VDP was initiated without intended beneficiaries having been identified. Only in late 2013, when DAFF queried who the beneficiaries were, were attempts made to identify them.

Death threats and acts of violence

114. A number of death threats and acts of violence have been associated with the VDP. Investigators from the Hawks visited VDP and held a meeting with intended beneficiaries on 25 January 2019, taking statements from some. Intended beneficiaries from Vrede, Warden and Memel were interviewed. Once members of the Hawks had left Vrede, Mr Dhlamini made a phone call to a brigadier at the Hawks saying, "we were being threatened by death at Vrede". The investigation of these threats seems to have stalled, yielded no results, or simply did not take place. The following evidence of threats has been assembled:

    114.1 Mr Dhlamini came into possession of a video in which threats were made on his life. He sent a copy to a Mr Ntombela at the Hawks.

    114.2 He also provided the video to the station commander at Vrede police station, who listened to it. The station commander promised to investigate but at the same time told Mr Dhlamini to look after himself. No statement was taken from him regarding the complaint, and as far as Mr Dhlamini is aware no formal file was opened.

    114.3 Some people made threats directly to his face. He is therefore in a position to give police further information if there is a credible investigation.

    114.4 He said: "In Vrede once you mentioned the dairy project (or the name of Mr Mosebenzi Zwane) you won't sleep in your house ... We had to brave ourselves to come before the Commission and report before everyone is killed." Despite having reported threats against his life to the SAPS, nothing has come of this. The Chairperson of the Commission directed on record that a supplementary affidavit be taken from Mr Dhlamini in which he would be free to mention names. Those mentioned would be given rule 3 notices before their names were disclosed before the Commission.

    114.5 Mr Jankielsohn as a member of the provincial legislature and the portfolio committee was part of a collective charged with oversight over provincial government projects. VDP was part of their responsibility. He also reported his concerns to the PP. He testified to the Commission about how the project had been reported on in the Mail and Guardian newspaper of 7 to 13 June 2013. The article raised a number of concerns about the project, which are adequately summarised in the NT Report. The concerns included allegations that DARD might have flouted NT rules relating to procurement in entering into a R500m partnership with Estina which did not seem to have a discernible infrastructure, track record, or resources.

    114.6 Following the unsatisfactory responses on issues about the VDP Mr Jankielsohn spoke of a climate of fear that had gripped the provincial government. One Moses Chake / Tshake / Chauke was kidnapped, tortured and murdered, allegedly because he had raised too many questions about the project. Some people lost jobs within the government for speaking out. Mr Jankielsohn also spoke of a culture in which members of the ruling party in the legislature protected fellow comrades in the executive, thus frustrating the oversight role of the provincial legislature over the provincial executive.

    114.7 In the wake of his reporting dead cattle on the VDP farm to the press, DA Councillor Mr Radebe was physically attacked by a group of individuals (Mr Thuto Khanye, Mr Khulisa Sibeko, and Mr Bongani Radebe) – "individuals [who] eventually became well known as enforcers of Mr Zwane's policies in and around Vrede and more particularly relating to the Vrede Dairy Project". On attempting to report the attack to the SAPS in Vrede, officials, including the new station commander, Mr Xhasa, informed him that he was not allowed to open a case since this concerned political activity. He was further victimised by being continually refused access to the State Veterinarian in the area – as a result of which he lost about 45 head of cattle to a disease that had broken out in his herd.

114.8 The climate of fear and death threats around VDP also affected the NT investigator, Mr Cele, in August 2013 – through a threat that "Dumisani, Basotho ba tla u bolae" ("Dumisani, the Basotho people are going to kill you"). In addition, a robbery took place at the house of Ms Elizabeth Cornelia Rockman, the former DG in the Office of the Premier and later MEC Finance in the province, The ostensible target of the armed robbery appears to have been the information which was possibly stored in her laptop as well as in the two small safes. No-one was arrested for the robbery, and the case remains unsolved.

Recommendations arising from death threats and acts of violence

115. Arising from these incidents, the following recommendations for action are made:

115.1 Over and above any other conclusions arising from his investigations, the Commissioner is urged to ensure that the conclusions identified in the affidavit of Dumisani Cele of 3 October 2017 be followed vigorously, not only because they involve criminality, as he pointed out, but also because the Commission has a responsibility in terms of its own TORs to take action to dislodge practices of state capture.

115.2 The particular area on which the Commission must continue to report, as there is no evidence of pending processes being followed, is threats to life. The Commission has heard evidence from Messrs Dhlamini, Ncongwane and Radebe suggesting strongly that the culture and practice of intimidation is not isolated and amounts to state capture.

115.3 The Commission should ensure that all deaths, death threats, acts of violence and threats of violence around the VDP made in this report are investigated by an independent team under independent leadership from outside the Free State. Complainants need to be informed directly about the outcome of their complaints if public confidence in the justice system is to be restored.

115.4 In terms of the robbery at the home of Ms Rockman, the investigation should examine the type of security, if any, provided for her at her house at the time, given her senior position in the provincial government. If she had no security at all at her house, that aspect too should be of interest to the investigators. Those law enforcement investigators assigned to the case should report on why they did not resolve the reported crime and provide a satisfactory answer.

116. Reading the perspective of the intended beneficiaries, as presented in affidavits and oral evidence, one gets the impression that the locals were duped, Nongcawuse-style, to sell their cattle on the basis that government would donate dairy cows to them. Having regard to what was truly happening as evidenced by written documents and other informed evidence, intended beneficiaries were told half-truths or plainly lied to by officials who promised the world. This was an Indian-run project on African soil – operated by people who did not speak English or any local language. Intended beneficiaries were merely mentioned, identified late, and were never involved in or properly informed about the project.

117. From this perspective, Estina used the Indian connection (Paras) to milk more than R250 million from the government, which deliberately or with gross negligence blindly pumped money into an "agricultural" company without asking questions or investigating how it was spent.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS' PERSPECTIVE

118. The perspective provided in this section of the report is that of the individual officials within government involved in the VDP. Unless the context indicates otherwise, the perspective does not represent the official position of the government.

119. The testimony of Ms Fourie, the former DDG: Financial Governance in the Provincial Treasury of the Free State government, pertains largely to two aspects: her having been asked on 15 June 2012 to assist DARD with a payment they required; and her concerns about the contract and the legal advice she obtained about it. Presented with a contract between DARD and Estina and a written request for payment in the amount of R30 million, she queried with her colleague dealing with the Provincial Revenue account to verify the availability of funds, discovering that there were in fact no funds to meet the requested payment – which was accordingly not issued.

120. Noticing that the normal procurement process had not been followed and that the contract in question (signed on 5 June 2012 by Estina and on 7 June 2012 by the HOD) did not sufficiently protect the interests of the Department, she consulted with Advocate Ditira, the DDG: Legal Services in the Office of the Premier, who furnished her with a written opinion on 19 June 2012 confirming that indeed the procurement process had not been followed and that the contract might be invalid for various reasons. Adv Ditira further advised that the Treasury Committee send the procurement documents to Legal Services for their review.

121. What emerged from Dr Masiteng's answering affidavit in the High Court application was that he became involved in the VDP for the first time on 5 July 2012, after the agreement had been signed on that same day, when the HOD handed him some documents and requested him "to immediately draft a submission for his approval in execution of a resolution by Exco" for the implementation of the proposed VDP with entities known as Estina and Paras. The order of events has been outlined above. Dr Masiteng concluded his testimony by saying: "I did not collude with Estina in any way. I do not know any of its employees or directors".

122. Estina, the implementing agent of the VDP, with the power to do almost everything and to deliver a finished product to the government, was at the same time a partner with the government (ostensibly representing intended beneficiaries). This on its own presented a problem. The government appears to have given it extraordinary powers on the VDP, with money paid over even before the approval of Exco. The implementing agent itself was never assessed – raising the question of whether it was trusted only because it went to India with representatives of the government.

123. In a document purporting to be an MOU between Estina and an Indian company (VRS Foods Ltd t/a Paras India) signed on 11 April 2012 to be in effect for an initial period of twelve months Estina was described as having acquired familiarity with the regulatory, social, cultural and political framework and therefore capable of closely coordinating with the authorities, of comprehending applicable government policies, of identifying opportunities for participation in various government projects, and thus of facilitating trade of goods and services concerning such projects. The company was described as having been in the business of implementing dairy projects and the production and marketing of dairy products. Estina was therefore approached to assist with identifying suitable avenues for participating in the dairy projects in the territory, while Paras would assist Estina with technology and commissioning of those identified opportunities.

124. Clause 4 of the MOU specified the duties and responsibilities of Estina including being "the prime contractor or bidder in all such identified opportunities ... [which] shall subcontract the work to the company based on the proposals submitted by the company to Estina". The MOU limited Estina's role to the identification of bids – tenders – with specifications and opportunities and getting the tender documents to comply with the requirements of tenders – a responsibility which was to be located in the company. As the Chairperson of the Commission pointed out, the MOU did not even mention VDP and did not constitute an agreement binding the company, Paras, in any way to VDP. The Chairperson also queried whether anyone in government had attempted to ascertain the authenticity of the MOU and whether government should not have ensured that their contract was with a body with expertise rather than relying on an MOU, as they appeared to have done.

125. Ms Dhlamini, CFO of DARD during the critical period of the VDP, claimed she became aware of the VDP the project for the first time when she was invited to attend the presentation by Estina: "Estina advised that it had an agreement with Paras ... We were advised that Estina was appointed by Paras". No agreement with Paras was forthcoming at the meeting.

126. She claimed that VDP existed as a project prior to the presentation by Estina, and that a budget allocation existed at the time for the VDP. Like many other witnesses, she understood that the VDP was going to be in line with the "Mohoma Mobung Strategy". She did not, however, refer to the fact that she had recommended and signed for the HOD to approve it – instead stating "I am not the one who approved it". However, she personally recommended approval in writing under her signature, which she appeared to evade if not avoid.

127. The CFO claimed on first seeing the submission for approval dated 26 May 2012, to have approached the HOD and informed him that the Estina / Paras proposal was going to cost R342 billion, and at the time they only had a budget allocation of R9 million for the VDP. The HOD advised her that he would re-prioritise the budget to make provision for the entire project. She claimed she could not overrule him. While she concedes here that there was no budget for the project when it was signed, in other parts of her affidavit she contradicted herself on this point.

128. The June 2012 agreements were discussed earlier and the details will not be repeated here. What is significant is new detail about the CFO's testimony. She claimed in her affidavits that "the Estina /Paras project was not a service nor was it a contract as envisaged in section 217 of the Constitution dealing with procurement". Her understanding was that the Estina / Paras proposal was a "strategic partnership arrangement". Why, then, did DARD pay Estina for what the company did? Estina did indeed propose doing something to establish the dairy. It would not have done what it proposed for free. Someone, the recipient or contractor for the service, had to pay for it. Government ended up doing so.

129. The 6 June 2012 agreement had already been signed by both parties and witnesses when the HOD brought it to the CFO, who indicated that if the agreement was styled as being for services, then SCM procedures had to be followed and the contract would need to go out on tender. The main difference between the 6 June and 7 June agreements was that the expression "provide the services" used in the 6 June agreement had been replaced with the expression "execute the project".

130. Significantly, in both agreements, unlike in the later July 2012 final agreement, in addition to DARD and Estina there was a third party, Zayna Investments Pty Ltd, trading as Mohoma Mobung Dairy Project (MMDP). In both agreements an amount of R30 million was to be paid in advance to Estina. However, the balance of the payment from the total amount of R342 million payable by the government was in terms of the 6 June agreement payable to Zayna Investments, described as "the beneficiary", whereas in the 7 June agreement the balance was payable to Estina, described as the "implementing agent".

131. The CFO further stated that: "All submissions with financial implications have to come to the CFO for recommendation. ... I am not the custodian of the SCM policy; it is the accounting officer who is the custodian of the SCM policy ..." – revealing that she did not take responsibility, despite her title speaking for itself. She would have the HOD face all responsibility and herself take none. The explanations of the CFO made no sense and were in some respects contradictory: on the one hand she argued that the requirements for deviation were met and on the other that there was no need to comply with the SCM procedures.

132. According to the CFO's testimony, DARD under her watch paid Estina just over R330 million from the financial year 2012/2013 up to and including 5 May 2015. No explanation was provided as to where the R30 million allegedly paid in the 2012/2013 financial year came from when there were no funds in the revenue account. But in her 2019 affidavit she said: "[A]s the CFO, I was all the time mindful of the fact that the Department had limited budget in as far as the VDP is concerned. In truth and in fact, the Department only had R9 million in its budget. To be precise, the Department did not have R300 million."

133. Why the CFO and the HOD committed the Department to paying money it did not have is at the heart of the enquiry. Money found its way into accounts of entities which had no ostensible involvement in farming in the Free State, including corporate entities and individuals linked to the Gupta family.

Evidence of Mr Thabethe

134. The evidence of Mr Thabethe is central to the enquiry into the Estina saga since he played a vital role throughout the whole process. He was suspended on 25 April 2018, five days before the end of his five-year contract as HOD, having been arrested and criminally charged on 14 February 2018.

135. Once the broad proposal to establish the VDP had been accepted, he started the consultative process for investment opportunities. In addition to holding discussions with local farmers to sell the idea as an intended project by the Department, he and his colleagues in DARD also consulted private sector organisations in the industry such as Nestle, Parmalat, Clover and Dairy Belle. However, nothing seems to have come from these consultations as none of these big milk industry players became involved on the project. Questioned by the Chairperson of the Commission during its proceedings about whether these companies were all not prepared to assist, the HOD's answer was somewhat vague: "They did not indicate interested to work with us".

136. The HOD claimed that for the implementation of the project "the department had to deviate from the normal procurement process" since Paras as an investor was also making a financial investment in the second phase of the project, namely construction of the processing plant. However, an investment of a smaller percentage of the total costs would not be a reason to deviate from normal procurement process, particularly given the fact that the investment was to be done only at a much later stage. He confirmed that there were no tender documents and that in terms of the PFMA he, as an accounting officer, used his discretion to deviate from the normal procurement process. No cogent reasons for deviation have been provided.

137. In paragraph 42 of his affidavit the HOD stated:

> Pursuant to the aforesaid research and various further consultation processes and the consideration of various proposal(s) regarding the implementation of the Vrede Project, which included proposals from Estina and Paras, the implementation of the Vrede Project was approved and an initial partnership in respect thereof was concluded between Estina and the Department on 7 June 2012. The Department and Estina subsequently concluded a further agreement in respect of the Vrede Project on 5 July 2012.

138. This statement gives rise to a number of issues: first, the research itself has not been seen – other than the possible internet activity conducted by the HOD; second, the statement suggests that the Department considered "various proposals" which included the proposals from Estina and Paras – this investigation has seen and heard of only one proposal, which the HOD accepted; third, the statement suggests there was a proposal from Paras – but the proposal by Paras to DARD has not been seen, and probably does not exist; and finally, the statement suggests that there were two agreements that governed the relationship between Estina and Paras, whereas there was only one agreement. The HOD maintained the idea of more than one proposal. He expressly accepted responsibility for its approval but implicated both the MEC and the Executive Council in the approval process.

139. A further sentence is of some significance: "During the negotiations and implementation of the VDP, Estina was represented by Varum Gupta and Sanjeev Gautam and Paras was represented by Gajiender Kumar."

140. The HOD clearly does not disavow any contact with Mr V Gupta. Later in the 2019 affidavit, however, he corrected his reference to Mr V Gupta as having represented Estina during the negotiations with him and states that he only met this Mr V Gupta for the first time when they were arrested in February 2018. On that version, at the time of making the 2018 affidavit, Mr Thabethe would have known Mr V Gupta for not more than three months. In a further correction he stated: "The reference to Mr V Gupta in paragraph 47 of my answering affidavit was meant to be a reference to Mr K Vasram."

141. In his evidence before the Commission the HOD conceded that he had ignored the existence of milk processing facilities in the vicinity of Vrede – in Harrismith, Frankfurt and Standerton. This major concession collapses a main reason for the establishment of VDP.

142. The HOD claimed that before the partnership agreement between Estina and DARD had been concluded a draft had been provided to the province's legal advisers and that the legal advisers, including Mr Venter, had prepared the partnership agreement which was ultimately concluded on 7 June 2012. The statement is disingenuous, however, because it is known that the legal advisers were not provided with a draft agreement but were given an agreement which the HOD had already signed.

143. As far as payments to Estina by DARD are concerned, the HOD claimed that "if Estina was not lawfully entitled to these payments, Provincial Treasury would not have authorised and paid the money to Estina". On this basis he denied that he had committed any offence.

144. According to him, between 18 April 2013 and 5 May 2016 DARD, through Provincial Treasury, paid a total amount of R250 202 652.00 to Estina in terms of the agreement. He reiterated that he did not receive any benefit or proceeds from VDP.

145. Paragraph 84.6 of his testimony reconfirms the illicit money flow and possibly the elusive Gupta connection:

> After the curator issued his report in the preservation application, it has been established that monies were paid from the Oakbay account to Tegeta Resources, Islandsite Investments and Shiva Uranium in the total amount of R5,000,000.00; that the sum of R36,000,000.00 was transferred on 19 April 2013 from Oakbay to Islandsite Investments and that Oakbay furthermore received the respective amounts of R45,000 000.00 and R1,675,716.00 from Estina and Aerohaven.

146. In paragraph 84.7, the HOD confirms: "The aforesaid monies which were paid over by the Department into the bank accounts of Estina was stolen when it was transferred to persons or entities who/which were not in business relationships with Vrede Project" – confirming that a crime had been committed involving funds paid over by DARD to Estina.

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE COMMISSION

147. The justification by the HOD for establishing VDP, namely that milk was being produced in the Free State and transported on trucks to places like Gauteng Province to be processed there and sent back to the Free State at an increased cost because of lack of processing facilities, was turned on its head by his concession in evidence before the Commission. He conceded that his evidence on that score as the reason for his having approached Paras was in fact incorrect. That concession has the effect of throwing off the initial justification for his research in the first place and the real motivation for seeking to establish VDP. There were in fact dairy processing plants in the vicinity of Vrede, contrary to his view when he initiated the project. His entire submission and the motivation he made to the Premier for the trip to India was thus questionable.

148. On the question of whether DARD had conducted any due diligence before appointing Estina as the implementing agent it transpired that no proper due diligence had been carried out. The Department only checked the registration particulars of the company and its tax compliance status. Mr Thabethe was deliberately noncommittal when asked by the Chairperson whether with the benefit of hindsight he realised that proper checking on the company and its background was necessary. He ultimately acknowledged in response to the Chairperson's probing that he should have conducted further research into Estina as a matter of diligence. He claimed he was not even interested in establishing what the main business of Estina was because his focus was on the Indian company, Paras.

149. With regard to the very First Agreement between DARD and Estina signed on 5 June 2012, the HOD testified that that original agreement had been drafted by Estina. It did not matter whether the agreement came from Estina, since as long as it came from Estina it was coming from Paras. The expertise the government required was located in Paras but the HOD was content to have the agreement only with Estina. This is further evidence either of gross negligence or gross incompetence.

150. In terms of the agreement of 5 June 2012, the HOD accepted in hindsight that he should not have relied on the advice of his own internal lawyers but should have sought the advice of experienced lawyers, available in the office of the Premier, before signing. 156. The HOD conceded that the intended beneficiaries had never formally been registered. DARD had requested Estina to register a company on behalf of the intended beneficiaries and "then put them in and officially make them beneficiaries, but we did not get to that stage". At the time of signing the agreement (5 June 2012), as the Chairperson put it, the only entity or person that stood to gain was Estina.

151. The HOD explained the system of having certain items budgeted for under "transfers". Whether particular money was budgeted for under "transfers" or not depended entirely on how DARD gazetted it. This was done by the MEC. Once money or an item appeared under "transfers", said Mr Thabethe, SCM did not apply until in April 2018 when the NT issued a new instruction note, made retrospective to 2016. It was not only funds from those two sources from the national Department of Agriculture that would fall under transfers. Even funds allocated by the provincial Treasury under Vote 11 and which came the way of DARD could be gazetted as transfers.

152. It appears that the use of transfers by gazetting certain amounts of money under "transfers" irrespective of the quantity involved circumvented PFMA and the Constitution and might not have been legal.

"Deviation"

153. DARD failed to comply with the Constitution and the PFMA in that when appointing Estina and acquiring its services as an implementing agent, it did not follow a system which was fair, equitable, transparent, competitive, or cost-effective. Even when the HOD decided to deviate, he did not follow the prescribed procedure for deviation.

    153.1 Estina was appointed without any due diligence into its background and competence to carry out the obligations under the contract.

    153.2 The contract was entered into and signed without prior consultation with the Treasury and without ensuring that funds were available for the contractual obligations.

    153.3 The HOD ignored the advice of legal services and the provincial Treasury and was determined to procure payment of the first tranche to Estina with indecent haste.

    153.4 DARD failed to secure and register intended beneficiaries and to secure their interests before paying large sums of money to Estina.

    153.5 DARD failed to put in place a mechanism for monitoring the expenditure of funds once paid to Estina. The HOD and DARD must therefore shoulder the responsibility for funds which were improperly dispersed by Estina.

154. The failure to involve prospective beneficiaries in VDP is shockingly inexplicable. Intended beneficiaries were asked to put their names forward and were listed on the basis of the interest they had indicated in dairy farming. However, the intended beneficiaries were not even employed on the project. The list appears to have been redrawn each time a new director was appointed, to the total irritation of the intended beneficiaries.

155. The appointment of Mr Narayan and the role he played in VDP requires close investigation. His relationship with the notorious Gupta family similarly needs to be investigated.

GUPTA CONNECTION

156. The possible connection of the Gupta family to the VDP was raised in the Mail and Guardian newspaper expose of 7-13 June 2013 but was not investigated by the NT investigators or by the initial and final report of the PP on VDP (the PP did not even refer to an alleged link). The possible link would have been uppermost in the public eye after media allegations relating to funding of the Gupta wedding by VDP funds. The PP seems to have stuck to the complaint received by her office and ignored issues raised by the media.

157. Some of the evidence that could point to a possible link with the Gupta family are the following. The evidence presented here is neither conclusive nor exhaustive.

    157.1 A key employee of VDP, project coordinator Mr Prasad, was said by witnesses to the Commission to have been linked to the Gupta family. All evidence, however strong, pointing in that direction should be recorded and evaluated by the Commission.

157.2 One of the small-scale black farmers in Vrede, Mr Dhlamini, noticed at one stage that milk from VDP was delivered to a shop next to his record bar in Vrede, from where it was sold to consumers. The shop was owned by some people of Indian origin who could not speak English or any of the local languages. Since Paras allegedly denied involvement in the project, the question arises whether the shop could be linked to the Guptas, or to the project manager. If a link to the Guptas is to be investigated that possibility might as well be probed.

157.3 One hint of a Gupta connection came during examination of one of the three affidavits of the HOD, in which he stated: "It was brought to my attention during the investigation that some of the monies were paid to Dubai and some to consultancy in Dubai. That information was not in my disposal and as such those were not in terms of agreement signed between the parties."

157.4 The Answering Affidavit of the HOD to the Founding Affidavit and other supporting affidavits reconfirmed the illicit money flow and possibly the elusive Gupta connection:

> After the curator issued his report in the preservation application, it has been established that monies were paid from the Oakbay account to Tegeta Resources, Islandsite Investments and Shiva Uranium in the total amount of R5,000,000.00; that the sum of R36,000,000.00 was transferred on 19 April 2013 from Oakbay to Islandsite Investments and that Oakbay furthermore received the respective amounts of R45,000 000.00 and R1,675,716.00 from Estina and Aerohaven.

157.5 The theft of money – though not necessarily channelled into a Gupta bank account – was confirmed by the HOD's statement that "The aforesaid monies which were paid over by the Department into the bank accounts of Estina was stolen when it was transferred to persons or entities who/which were not in business relationships with Vrede Project."

157.6 In two paragraphs of his 2018 Answering Affidavit, the HOD claimed that "During the negotiations and implementation of the VDP, Estina was represented by Varum Gupta, and Sanjeev Gautam and Paras was represented by Gajinder Kumar." The HOD clearly does not disavow any contact with Mr V Gupta – a clear reference to a member of the Gupta family. This reference to a connection with the family was, however, later recanted by the HOD in his 2019 affidavit to the Commission, in which he claimed that Mr V Gupta had never represented Estina in any of the negotiations or discussions which he had held with Estina representatives. He claimed to have met Mr V Gupta when he was arrested on 14 February 2018, and that "The reference to Mr V Gupta in paragraph 47 of my answering affidavit was meant to be a reference to Mr Kamal Vasram ... I unfortunately did not notice the erroneous reference to Mr Varun Gupta but only establish it later."

157.7 This is the context in which the Gupta family was connected to the VDP and Estina. Even if corrected, the point remains that the connection was made. It is also irrefutable that the Mr V Gupta mentioned in the above context was the 9th respondent in the High Court application in case number 1778/2018 in the Free State division – the only member of the Gupta family to be cited in the court application.

157.8 Over 29 months, between April 2013 and 16 May 2016, DARD made seven payments to Estina in a total amount of R220 202 652.00 in respect of services purportedly rendered: a total amount of R113 950 000.00 into Estina's Standard Bank Account; and a total amount of R106 252 652.00 into Estina's First National Bank Account. Immediately upon this money having been paid into these Estina bank accounts, several large payments were made to several entities and individuals as follows:

157.8.1 R40 000 757080.00 to Gateway Pty Ltd

157.8.2 R43 392 660.00 to an entity known as Varsgafield PTY Ltd whose director is an Indian national with a residential address in Dubai

157.8.3 R110 450 000.00 to the Bank of Baroda

157.8.4 R10 000 000.00 to Atul Gupta

157.8.5 R14 500 000.00 to Oakbay Investment Pty Ltd

157.8.6 R21 200 000.00 to Aero Haven

157.8.7 R19 000 000.00 to Stanlin Bedford Gard

157.8.8 R60 000 000.00 to VLRS Investments

157.8.9 R6 000 000.00 Westdawn Investments; and 157.8.10 R4 000 500.00 to Uxolo Diamond Cutting.

158. One member of the Gupta family was alleged to have been paid. Similarly, some of the entities to which payment was made are linked to the Gupta family. Mr Mradla's analysis of the aforementioned payments was that the bulk of the payments received by Estina were paid to several related entities and individuals that did not appear to have any legitimate business relationship with Estina and its core business.

159. Mr Basson, the local businessman and farmer called in to assist with various services when VDP had problems, came to meet several of the people tasked with the establishment of the VDP. He said: "No less than three of these individuals were clearly Indian nationals who had very limited ability to communicate in English language and who were identified to me by Mr Prasad as being members of the Gupta family." Mr Prasad, himself connected to the Guptas, disclosed the involvement of members of the Gupta family at VDP.

160. In 2012, after visiting the Neuman Dairy in the vicinity of Vrede as part of the delegation, Mr Narayan invited Mr Theron, the farm manager of Neuman Dairy, and Mr Neuman, owner of Neuman Dairy, to a meeting at the Gupta compound in Saxonwold. Mr Narayan attended the meeting with the Guptas, at the end of which Messrs Theron and Neuman were given an unsolicited amount of R5 000.00 in cash. No invoices were exchanged. At the meeting Mr Narayan stated that he was there on behalf of the Premier to ensure the success of the VDP.

161. The role of Mr Narayan in the VDP deserves examination. He has not testified and therefore no conclusion about him can be drawn. The observations about him are recorded in case the Chairperson finds it necessary to investigate further: he was appointed by the Premier as his adviser by letter dated 29 February 2012 (the appointment was expressly with effect from 1 March 2012); even before he assumed office in that capacity, on 24 February 2012 his name was on the proposal for the trip to India, prepared by the HOD, recommended by the MEC (on 28 February), and approved by the Premier.

162. On the very date on which the Premier signed his letter of appointment (29 February 2012) he left with Mr Thabethe on a trip to India fully paid for by the government, at which time he was neither a government employee nor an adviser to the Premier; on his return from the trip to India, according to the HOD, he went straight to the office of the Premier and did not assist in the preparation of the official report because he was not part of his team; Mr Narayan later approached the municipal manager of Phumelela, Mr Moremi, together with the lawyer, Johan Schalkwyk, to present a draft lease for the farm, Vrede for the VDP; his only role on the trip to India was to assist with interpretation as some of the representatives of Paras in the meeting did not speak English well.

OTHER INVESTIGATIONS AND THEIR CONCLUSIONS

163. It is recognised that the following state entities conducted investigations into possible irregularities at VDP: NT (assisted by ENS Forensics); the PP; and the NPA. The reports and conclusions of the first two are a matter of record, and parts thereof have been referred to and relied on in sections of this report. The affidavits drawn by the NPA and used in the High Court application under the Prevention of Organised Crime Act 121 of 1998 (POCA) were similarly perused and considered. The POCA application in the Free State High Court and the related criminal charges were withdrawn. Some NPA witnesses have not testified before the Commission and the value of their affidavits to the Commission is somewhat uncertain. However, the affidavits of three NPA witnesses – Messrs Samson John Schalkwyk, Motlalekhosi Knox Molelle, and Nkosiphendule Mradla – have been summarised, and the summaries have been made available separately to the Chairperson of the Commission for his consideration. This is because of uncertainty about their evidential value, in the light of the fact that criminal proceedings may still be reinstated at the behest of the NPA.

164. Mr Schalkwyk's overall conclusion was that Mr Thabethe, the CFO, the directors of Estina, as well as the directors of Linkway were involved in a series of irregularities and acts of criminality wherein they colluded with one another to circumvent DARD's SCM processes.

CONCLUSIONS AND OBSERVATIONS

Appointment of Estina

165. Estina was appointed as the implementing agent for the VDP without the SCM process as prescribed by the PFMA being followed.

166. The HOD provided contradictory reasons for not having followed the prescribed process. In fact, evidence shows that when it came to signing the July 2012 contract, the HOD had already decided not to follow a competitive process. The submission for deviation dated 5 July 2012, which he approved, was a mere formality, prepared on his instruction so as to validate the decision which he had already taken to deviate. South African milk farmers and operators of milk processing plants were denied the opportunity to tender for the project.

Experience of Estina

167. Estina had no experience whatsoever in farming, let alone dairy farming, prior to its appointment. Estina had only one director, Mr Vasram, when it was appointed as an implementing agent for VDP. Prior to assuming the directorship of Estina, Mr Vasram had been the retail sales manager at Sahara Computers. He had no farming or agricultural experience.

168. The director is the only decision-maker within a company. The decision to entrust such a big government project to the decision-making power of a single person is illogical.

169. The evidence of at least one witness suggests that Estina's representatives accompanied the senior representatives of DARD on the trip to India. However, the HOD in his report made no mention of representatives of the company having travelled or accompanied him to India. If Estina accompanied government on the trip, the question of why it was selected for that purpose remains.

170. The people appointed to manage the VDP farm did not seem to know what they were doing – learning as they went along. This cost the government a considerable amount of money. This is seemingly the only explanation one can give for the death of many dairy cows and the negligent and environmentally hazardous manner in which the carcasses were disposed of.

171. The reason Estina was a sole provider for the services procured is unsustainable in the light of the fact that there were and still are milk farmers in the Free State and in the vicinity of Vrede.

172. Estina was appointed without DARD having conducted any due diligence about it and without having followed the prescripts for procurement The HOD decided to appoint Estina and instructed his juniors to prepare a submission for him to approve the deviation.

173. According to the HOD, Estina was in fact appointed by the CEO of Paras to represent Paras in South Africa and to contract with DARD. He claimed the company he had actually wanted to contract with was Paras. If indeed he wanted to secure a relationship with Paras, he clearly should have taken legal advice, which was available to him. By signing a contract with Estina he did not secure any obligation by Paras towards DARD or the Free State provincial government. The MOU to which he referred did not secure a relationship between Paras and the government.

174. The absence of any monitoring mechanism overseeing the utilisation of public funds once they were paid to Estina aggravates matters. DARD used a questionable "transfers" budgeting process on the basis of which the HOD maintained that once money had been paid over to a farmer beneficiary, government had discharged its obligation as the money then belonged to the beneficiary. Estina was neither the targeted small-scale farmer nor a beneficiary of government programmes. The contract made it a beneficiary, which was clearly a deliberate misnomer and part of a scheme to siphon public funds out of the government purse to benefit chosen private entities and individuals.

175. The reasonable suspicion is that Estina's director had a close relationship with someone in government who had influence in the decision to appoint the implementing agent. The Estina director had been a manager of Sahara Computers, the initial Gupta business in South Africa.

176. Estina was given carte blanche to conduct a feasibility study, develop a business plan, and organise an event to find and register beneficiaries. Estina became an implementing agent while at the same time partnering with government. The partnership relationship gave it authority to make a profit, while its role as an implementing agent or management company entitled it to payment for its services – entirely contradictory roles.

177. The shareholders of Estina have not been identified. The company had only one director at all material times, but DARD entrusted it with the power to manage a R500 million project. DARD was prepared to pour public funds into the entity without exercising authority over or monitoring how the funds were expended.

178. The agreement of 7 June 2012 was signed without the approval of Exco. It is not clear whether the MEC for Agriculture had approved it; but it is likely that at the very least he was informed about and did not oppose it.

179. The agreement was signed, and the government was committed to expending funds for which there was no provision in the budget. The HOD alone took a decision that funds would be redirected from other projects and on that basis signed the agreement.

180. The proposal made to DARD at first and subsequently by DARD to Exco put the Indian company, Paras, at the centre. The profile of the presenting company was that of Paras and not of Estina, which was mentioned in only one or two lines. If that proposal was the basis for Estina's appointment, it constituted fraud committed against the government because it induced government to commit to a project of half a billion Rands and to its making payment to an entity which did not qualify to be appointed.

181. Since the HOD of DARD had himself undertaken the trip to India and knew exactly where the expertise lay, and since there was nothing Estina knew about Paras which he himself did not know. He could only be defrauded if he submitted voluntarily to the "fraud". If it was the expertise that government had contracted for then there was a clear obligation to ensure that the contract signed secured the expertise for the VDP.

182. The HOD suggested that he was the one who advised Paras to make the presentation through a South African registered company. If he did not introduce Estina to Paras, he had a duty to ensure that the South African-registered company was properly qualified to implement the project.

183. Similarly, if the reason for appointing Estina was the promise of financial contribution by way of investment, the contract should have had at its core the securing of the contribution.

184. In the final analysis, if fraud was committed against the government, then the HOD as head of DARD must have been the core perpetrator because he could not have been defrauded when he knew the truth. He visited Paras, met its CEO, became aware of its expertise, secured its commitment, and represented to government that it was safe for it to approve the deal.

185. Absent fraud committed against the government, all those involved in the arrangement collaborated and colluded in siphoning and channelling public monies to an incompetent entity without a shred of accountability become the fraudsters.

Intended beneficiaries

186. In theory, VDP was started for the benefit of small-scale black dairy farmers and those interested in dairy farming. They registered their interest in the project. Promises were made to them that were never fulfilled. Those involved in beef or other forms of farming were persuaded to become involved in dairy farming under the pretext of receiving government support.

187. However, the intended beneficiaries were side-lined and overlooked in the launching and development of the project. They were never given shareholding or any right to participate in the project until the national DAFF intervened. The company Zayna Investments Pty Ltd, trading as Mohoma Mobung, was effectively a shell company, registered ostensibly to house interest in the project. No farmer interviewed appears to have been aware of that company. It was also not clear whether the company ever had any formal relationship with Estina until the contract between Estina and DARD was terminated.

188. The local black farmers had a structure, the African Farmers Association, led by Mr Dhlamini and Mr Ncongwane. These leaders both formally indicated interest in the VDP. If the intention had been to benefit and develop these farmers, as has been suggested, it was incumbent on DARD to consult with the African Farmers Association, involve it in the project, and empower it where necessary.

189. The farmers do not appear to have been consulted about the structure in which they were invited to participate and were by and large left in the dark. DARD decided to overlook these established small farmers and instead paid money into a small company with one director, without any farming background, who effectively decided on the management of public funds without any monitoring by the authorities.

190. Small-scale farmers were asked to put forward their names and submit their identity documents more than once, without any demonstrable progress. A representative committee formed by the farmers themselves to interact with the government on the project, under the chairpersonship of Mr Mhlaba, was similarly ignored and kept in the dark.

191. A so-called Beneficiary Agreement signed with Dr Masiteng representing DARD was drawn up without proper legal advice and had major deficiencies. The agreement appeared to have been signed in haste when the national Department of Agriculture demanded evidence of the involvement of the intended beneficiaries. At that stage, around August 2013, no beneficiary was involved in VDP despite the fact that millions Rands of public funds had been poured into the project.

192. The intended beneficiaries were left with the impression that their names and identity details were used to secure money from the Treasury without any intention to involve them in the project.

Fear and death threats

193. The intended beneficiaries had heard rumours that the VDP had started and that government had paid money into it. They raised questions which DARD was not able to answer satisfactorily. They were even denied access to the site of the project, which fuelled their suspicions. When they asked more questions and insisted on answers, they were victimised. Some received death threats while others were killed under mysterious circumstances. From the perspective of the intended beneficiaries a cloud of secrecy covered the VDP and those who tried to expose the truth were victimised.

State capture enabled by oversight failure and absence of law enforcement

194. When members of the opposition in the legislature insisted on exercising oversight over the project and asked questions about it, satisfactory answers were hardly ever given.

195. Similarly, those in municipal councils who opposed the way in which the VDP was being implemented were victimised and even assaulted. Threats were issued openly. Cases of assault reported to the SAPS were not followed up.

196. An atmosphere of fear reportedly hangs over the project, with those appearing to be critical of it becoming victims at the hands of the supporters of political leaders.

197. There are allegations also that members of the majority party in both the legislature and municipal council protect one another in the face of questions formulated by members of the opposition parties in those structures. The allegations, if true, point to a culture of nurturing and protecting state capture.

THE CLOSURE OF BANK ACCOUNTS OF GUPTA COMPANIES

RELEVANT TERMS OF REFERENCE

1. In December 2015 and 2016 four banks closed the bank accounts of companies owned or controlled by or linked to the Gupta family. They were First National Bank, Standard Bank, ABSA and Nedbank. The terms of reference of the Commission cover this topic. Term of Reference 7.1 requires the Commission to investigate, inquire and determine:

   > whether any member of the National Executive and including Deputy Ministers, unlawfully or corruptly or improperly intervened in the matter of the closing of banking facilities for Gupta owned companies.

   This part of the report deals with this issue.

RELEVANT CONTENT OF THE PUBLIC PROTECTOR'S REPORT

2. The Public Protector identified in para xxi(e) of her executive summary an issue which required investigation:

   > Whether President Zuma and other Cabinet members improperly interfered in the relationship between banks and Gupta owned companies thus giving preferential treatment to such companies on a matter that should have been handled by independent regulatory bodies.

3. In paragraph 5 of her "observations" regarding the scope of her report, the Public Protector stated:

   > Cabinet appears to have taken an extraordinary and unprecedented step regarding intervention into what appears to be a dispute between a private company co-owned by the President's friends and his son. This needs to be looked at in relation to a possible conflict of interest between the President as head of state and his private interest as a friend and father as envisaged under section 2.3(c) of the Executive Ethics Code which regulates conflict of interest and section 195 of the Constitution which requires a high level of professional ethics. Sections 96(2)(b) and (c) of the Constitution are also relevant.

4. The Public Protector recorded that one of the complaints pursuant to which she investigated and submitted her Report was that it had been alleged in the media that the Cabinet had decided to get involved in holding banks accountable for withdrawing banking facilities for Gupta-owned companies. The complainant in question wanted to know if it was appropriate for the Cabinet to assist a private business and on what grounds was that happening. He asked if corruption was not involved and specifically asked if such matters should not be dealt with by the National Consumer Commission or the Banking Ombudsman.

5. An Executive Ethics Code was promulgated on 28 July 2000 by the Acting President of the Republic, prescribing how members of the Cabinet, Deputy Ministers and members of Provincial Executive Councils must comply in performing their official responsibilities. The complaint before the Public Protector asserted that the conduct of President Zuma in relation to the issue between the banks and certain Gupta-owned companies may have contravened articles 2(3)(a), (c) and (d) of the Ethics Code. The suggestion was that President Zuma may have exposed himself to a situation involving the risk of a conflict between his official responsibilities and his private interests; acted in a way that is inconsistent with his position and used his position or any information entrusted to him, to enrich himself or improperly benefit any other person.

THE ISSUES THAT NEED TO BE DETERMINED

6. The focus herein is on whether any member of the National Executive unlawfully, corruptly or improperly intervened in the matter of the closing of banking facilities of the Gupta owned companies.
7. The TORs require a consideration of the the conduct of former President Zuma and other Cabinet members and determine whether they improperly interfered in the relationship between Banks and Gupta owned companies, thus giving preferential treatment to such companies on a matter that should have been handled by independent regulatory bodies.
8. Although no Rule 3.3 notices appear to have been served on anybody in regard to the evidence that was led in relation to this topic, Mr Gwede Mantashe, who was the Secretary-General of the ANC at the time of the closure of the bank accounts of Gupta companies, and Mr Mosebenzi Zwane did place their versions before the Commission. President Ramaphosa also explained in his affidavit furnished to the Commission in his capacity as President of the Republic, in which he explained what decisions the Cabinet took about the Task Team that was chaired by Minister Zwane.

EVIDENCE HEARD

9. The Commission heard evidence about the closure of the bank accounts of Gupta companies. That evidence included the evidence of various witnesses who represented the banks or at least some of the banks involved as well as the evidence of Mr Mosebenzi Zwane and Mr Gwede Mantashe. Mr Mosebenzi Zwane was the Minister of Mineral Resources at the time and chaired a Committee or Task Team that was set up by the Cabinet in response to the closure of the bank accounts of Gupta Companies. The Commission did not hear Mr Jacob Zuma's evidence because he elected not to testify before the Commission.

Evidence of Mr Ian Hamish Scott Sinton

10. Mr Sinton (Head of Compliance at Standard Bank) testified to the manner in which Standard Bank terminated its banking relationship with companies (the Gupta companies) in which various members of the Gupta family and Mr Duduzane Zuma had a direct or indirect interest. He also submitted a witness statement signed on 13 August 2018.
11. Standard Bank gave notice on 6 April, 2016 to the Gupta companies of its intention to terminate the banker-client relationship with them as from 6 June, 2016, a notice period of two months. On 6 June 2016 Standard Bank officially terminated that relationship.
12. Mr Sinton provided a list of the Gupta companies, 27 in total including Oakbay Investments (Pty) Ltd, Westdawn Investments (Pty) Ltd, Sahara Computers (Pty) Ltd, TNA Media (Pty) Ltd, VR Laser Services (Pty) Ltd, Optimum Coal Mine (Pty) Ltd, Optimum Coal Terminal (Pty) Ltd and Estina (Pty) Ltd. Certain of the Gupta companies operated multiple accounts.
13. This process was not preceded by consultation with the client. Sometimes Standard Bank will consult with the client before terminating and sometimes not. In this case the reasons for termination included:

    13.1 Absa had previously terminated its relationships with certain Gupta companies, the Gupta companies' auditors had terminated their relationship with the Gupta companies, former Deputy Minister Jonas had published on the National Treasury website the allegation that the Guptas had offered him benefits if he would do their bidding.

13.2 a former MP, Ms Mabel (Vytjie) Mentor, had announced that she had been offered a Cabinet post by the Guptas in exchange for favours.

13.3 Standard Bank provided services to the Gupta group in the media business through two of its own customers and was concerned about being implicated in unlawful behaviour.

13.4 Mr Themba Maseko from the Government Communication and Information Service (GCIS) had announced that he had been instructed to help Gupta entities.

13.5 Minister Zwane had accompanied a Gupta delegation to Switzerland to negotiate the purchase by the Guptas of the Optimum coal mine from Glencore (which Standard Bank believed Minister Zwane had falsely denied).

13.6 it had been reported in the press that one of the Gupta companies had bound itself as surety for the obligations of a trust in which a wife and son of President Zuma were beneficiaries.

13.7 Estina (Pty) Ltd had been awarded a contract to develop a farm in the Free State but had sent substantial sums of the money paid to it to Dubai instead of using it for the proper purpose.

13.8 the Guptas had attempted to persuade Standard Bank to transfer money held in trust for the rehabilitation of Optimum mine to the Bank of Baroda.

13.9 In addition, Standard Bank's money laundering reporting officer had warned the bank to use extreme caution in dealing with the Gupta companies.

14. On 25 May 2016 Standard Bank received a letter from Oakbay's attorneys threatening an application to compel Standard Bank to keep the Gupta companies' accounts open. Standard Bank rejected the demand and Oakbay withdrew its letter of demand.

15. Mr Sinton testified that the Gupta companies launched a media campaign to induce those banks which had terminated their banking relationships with Gupta companies to reverse their decisions. In addition, the ANC requested the Standard Bank CEO to attend a meeting at Luthuli House to account to the ANC for why it had closed the Gupta accounts. Standard Bank also received a separate request from a committee which described itself as an Inter-Ministerial Committee of Cabinet (IMC) to account to them in this regard. Standard Bank regarded these requests as inappropriate but decided to attend the meetings.

16. Three relevant meetings took place after Standard Bank had announced its decision to close the Gupta accounts. The first was with representatives of Oakbay. This meeting was attended by Mr Nazeem Howa, Mr Terry Renson, Mr Trevor Scott, Mr Ashu Chawla and Ms Veronica Ragavan for Oakbay and certain senior Standard Bank officials.

17. Standard Bank was not persuaded by the representations and refused to reverse its decision to terminate the accounts. Indeed, the attempts to explain certain conduct which had led to the decision to terminate the relationship reinforced Standard Bank's perception that it had made the right decision.

18. Mr Sinton referred to certain examples. One of these was that Oakbay, through Ms Ragavan, asked that Standard Bank move R1,456 billion in an Oakbay account from itself to the Bank of Baroda. Standard Bank responded on 22 April 2016 that these funds were held in trust to cover rehabilitation costs in relation to Optimum mine and only the trustees could give this instruction. Two business days later, Oakbay produced letters of authority from the Master, recording that the former trustees had been removed and Gupta appointees installed as trustees. It is common knowledge that the Master's office is notoriously slow; yet Oakbay managed to push this process through in two working days. The explanation from Oakbay for this conduct was that Baroda offered a better rate of interest. Standard Bank did not believe this because it had not been asked by the Guptas what rate of interest they were paying on the funds held by it.

19. Standard Bank raised the question of the mortgage bond to the trust of which a wife and son of President Zuma were beneficiaries and asked Ms Ragavan if there was any truth in the allegation that a Gupta company, Westdawn Investments, had guaranteed the loan. Ms Ragavan responded that she had never met President Zuma's wife and had not been party to arranging the loan. Ms Ragavan's signature under her maiden name, Govender, was put to Ms Ragavan. After a lengthy pause, Ms Ragavan admitted that she had indeed arranged that loan.

20. Mr Sinton produced an undated letter written by Mr Howa to Oakbay's attorneys stating that Oakbay had requested the intervention of President Zuma and Ministers Zwane, Oliphant and Gordhan (members of the IMC) to investigate the account closures. The letter by Mr Howa was published in the media on 8 April 2016. The IMC was established on 13 April 2016. Mr Howa wrote similar letters to these four members of the executive as well as to Mr G Mantashe, then secretary general of the ANC.

21. Standard Bank further referred to a provision in the agreement in terms of which Glencore sold Optimum mine to Tegeta, a Gupta company. In terms of that agreement Tegeta was obliged to procure the release of Glencore from liability for a claim of R2,1 billion which Eskom had against the Glencore company which owned the mine and dealt with Eskom. Standard Bank asked the representatives of the Gupta companies what consideration they had given Eskom for the release. Their response was that they had given Eskom no consideration and that Eskom had effectively waived the entire claim of R2,1 billion.

22. On 21 April 2016 the CEO of Standard Bank, Mr Simpiwe Tshabalala, a senior executive, Ms Hannah Sadiki and Mr Sinton attended a meeting at Luthuli House with Mr Mantashe, Ms Jessie Duarte, Mr Enoch Godongwana and others. The ANC delegation said that they accepted that the meeting was not to discuss the relationship between Standard Bank and a particular customer but to gain a better understanding of how Standard Bank entered into and terminated banking relationships. Amongst other things, the ANC representatives asked the Standard Bank delegation how it responded to the accusation that it was colluding with "white monopoly capital" to oppress black-owned businesses in the form of the Guptas and why it allowed construction companies which had been fined for collusion in the construction of stadiums to maintain their accounts while the bank had closed the accounts of the Gupta companies.

23. Mr Sinton said in his statement before the Commission that the fact that the ANC requested the meeting at the behest of Oakbay showed the extent of Oakbay's influence at the highest echelons of political office-bearers and the willingness of the Gupta companies to use their influence to reverse a decision taken lawfully and in good faith in compliance with legal and regulatory obligations.

24. On 1 September 2016 Minister Mosebenzi Zwane told the media that on 13 April 2016 Cabinet had established an IMC to consider allegations that certain banks and other financial institutions had acted unilaterally and in collusion in closing the bank accounts and terminating contractual relationships with Oakbay. It seems that the IMC was also, or more accurately, called a task team. The IMC requested a meeting with Standard Bank and invited the CEO of Standard Bank's group holding company to attend it. Standard Bank decided that it would be more appropriate for the CEO of Standard Bank, Mr Tshabalala, to attend.

25. The meeting took place on 5 May 2016. On the government side, the meeting was attended by Ministers Zwane and Oliphant and Mr Mzwanele Manyi. Mr Manyi said that he was attending as advisor to the Ministers and remained in attendance throughout the meeting. Mr Zwane said that he was the Chairman of the Committee. Minister Gordhan did not attend. His absence was not explained. The inclusion of Mr Mzwanele Manyi in this Ministerial team was strange because there is no evidence that Mr Manyi worked for Government in 2016. However, it must be remembered that Mr Manyi is the person that President Zuma – possibly at the instance of the Guptas – appointed as a replacement of Mr Themba Maseko at GCIS in February 2011 after Mr Maseko had been removed from the position of CEO of GCIS at the instance of the Guptas. It must also be remembered that Mr Manyi is the person that Mr Zwane wanted to have appointed as DG of the Department of Mineral Resources in 2014 or 2015 but did not succeed in getting him appointed because Minister Ramathlodi as Minister of Public Service and Administration blocked that on the basis that Mr Manyi did not qualify for the position of DG.

26. Mr Sinton understood the purpose of the meeting to be to discuss the closure of the accounts of the Gupta companies. The Standard Bank delegation stated that it was willing to discuss and explain its policies and procedures regarding account closures but not individual cases because of banker client confidentiality. Mr Sinton explained how the Serious Fraud Office in London had effectively fined Standard Bank UK a very large sum of money for failing to ensure that one of associates did not engage in corruption and placed Standard Bank UK on probation for three years. This required Standard Bank in South Africa to be exceptionally careful about being caught up in bribery and corruption in South Africa.

27. The IMC members argued in favour of the Gupta companies that these companies employed up to 7 500 employees with the result that up to 60 000 South Africans, including the dependents of employees, had been affected by the decision to close the accounts.

28. It became clear to Mr Sinton that the true purpose of the meeting was to secure an outcome favourable to the Gupta companies. The IMC members:

    28.1 Expressed a concern about the criteria used to identify politically exposed persons such as members of the Gupta and Zuma families

    28.2 Suggested that Standard Bank had not acted fairly towards the Gupta companies and that the Standard Bank and its competitor banks may have colluded with “monopoly capital” in the way it treated the Gupta companies

    28.3 Asked Standard Bank to explain why it continued to provide banking facilities to construction companies convicted of collusive conduct but decide to close the Gupta companies’ accounts

    28.4 Admonished Standard Bank for operating under a license from the government and held that it should therefore be responsive to issues raised by them on behalf of the government

    28.5 Suggested that Standard Bank should have placed the interests of the employees of the Gupta companies above the bank’s legal obligations; and

    28.6 Suggested that the government had the power to change the law to make banks accountable for job losses caused by account closures, including those flowing from the closure of the Gupta company accounts.

29. The meeting closed with Mr Zwane asking what changes Standard Bank would need to see within the ownership and management of the Oakbay Group that would be sufficient to persuade the bank to reverse its closure decision. This was after the Standard Bank delegation had made it clear that they would not discuss the affairs of any specific customer.

30. Mr Sinton concluded that the queries at this meeting were substantially the same as those posed on behalf of the ANC and were all directed at inducing Standard Bank to reverse its closure decision. As the committee was a committee of the Cabinet, it might mean that the Cabinet itself wanted through its committee to achieve a reversal of the closure decision.

31. Although the secretary to the committee was present throughout and took notes, no minutes of the meeting were circulated after the meeting. Standard Bank accordingly wrote a letter dated 6 May 2016 recording what had transpired at the meeting. The response was an email dated 9 May 2016 from the representative of the two ministers on the committee, a Ms Kellerman, thanking Mr Tshabalala for his input. Nothing in the letter from the bank was placed in dispute.

32. Standard Bank’s letter reminded the Ministers that the bank had hoped to keep the meeting about policy and practice and not any particular customers, but that the meeting did go on to discuss particular customers. It summarised all the laws that the bank said were applicable to them and the risk faced by the bank if it did not strictly adhere to those laws. The letter summarised the experience of dealing with bribery and corruption and then described its process about what considerations it would take into account when deciding whether to close a client’s account, demonstrating that such decisions were not made arbitrarily or capriciously, but were considered carefully. In response to the query whether there was any possibility of Standard Bank reversing any decisions that could help save the jobs of the employees of the Gupta companies, Standard Bank indicated that it applied the known facts and suspicions as envisaged by PRECCA and POCA to the law to reach its decisions and, therefore, if the facts should change, there could be a review of its decision.

33. On 1 September 2016 Mr Zwane issued a media statement announcing that Cabinet had resolved to recommend to President Zuma that a judicial commission of inquiry under s 84(2)(f) of the Constitution be appointed to consider the current mandates of the Banking Tribunal and the Banking Ombudsman, on the grounds that, on the evidence presented to the committee, all of the actions taken by the banks and financial institutions against Oakbay were a result of innuendo and potentially reckless media statements and Oakbay had had very little recourse to the law.

34. On 2 September 2016 the Presidency issued a very sharply worded statement confirming that the banking sector was on a sound footing and describing Mr Zwane as being a member of the IMC who had spoken in his personal capacity, that he "does not speak on behalf of Government" and that the Presidency regretted the "unfortunate contents of the statement" and the confusion the statement had caused.

35. However, on 23 November 2016, President Zuma spoke in Parliament in response to a question by an MP.

36. Mr Sinton takes the view in his statement that the remarks in Parliament by President Zuma show that he regarded the banks' decision to close the accounts as having been taken without due consideration ("willy-nilly"), that he, believed there may have been collusion between the banks and other financial institutions in that regard, that government would continue to deal with the banks' decisions and that Mr Zwane's unauthorised remarks were still being investigated.

Application to court by the Minister of Finance

37. By notice of motion dated 13 October 2016, the then Minister of Finance, Mr Gordhan, brought an application under case no. 80978/16 in the Pretoria High Court with several Gupta companies and South African Banks, as well as the director of the Financial Intelligence Centre (FIC), for an order declaring that the Minister of Finance was not empowered or obliged to intervene in the relationship between the Gupta company respondents and the Bank respondents regarding the closing of the Gupta companies' bank accounts. The declarator included a founding affidavit deposed to by Mr Gordhan on 13 October 2016. The relevant part of Mr Gordhan's affidavit reads as follows:

> The closure of the Gupta bank accounts ...
> 139. Following a Cabinet meeting on 13 April 2016, at which I was not present, a Ministerial task team (which should not be confused with an Inter-Ministerial Committee ("IMC")), was established to look into the issue of the closure of the Gupta bank account. Mr Zwane, Labour Minister Mildred Oliphant and myself were nominated for this task.
> 140. Following correspondence received from Mr Zwane purporting to schedule a meeting of the task team (seemingly expanded to include the then Minister of Communications, Faith Muthambi) with the banking institutions, I questioned the purpose and seeming aim of the task team with my colleagues who were nominated to it. I explained the extensive global and domestic legal regulatory framework that governs the financial sector, and cautioned that this framework needed to be understood and considered prior to any engagements with the banking institutions. My concerns were not addressed by the members of the task team.
> 141. I chose not to attend the meetings of the task team nor to participate in its actions, because I was of the view, confirmed in legal advice, that members of the executive cannot interfere in the contractual relationships between banks and their customers.
> 142. I do recall further events in Cabinet that I cannot publicly disclose but which I have indicated to the Commission should be investigated, that indicated to me that Mr Zwane had the full backing and support of former President Zuma in pursuing the task team's objective of undermining and maligning the stance adopted by myself and National Treasury to the closure of the bank accounts, this included three reports from the task team, two of which were distributed in Cabinet.

143. On or about 1 September 2016, Mr Zwane issued a media statement, purportedly on behalf of the task team and, I believe, based on its first report, announcing that it, through Cabinet, would recommend to former President Zuma that a judicial inquiry be established into the closure of the bank accounts of several Gupta companies by the major commercial banks in South Africa. This statement was effectively abandoned in the days that followed, with a statement issued by the Presidency, to clarify that no such decision had been endorsed as a decision by Cabinet.

144. On or around 14 October 2016, I launched a court application to seek declaratory relief regarding the limitations of my available powers to intervene in various decisions taken by several commercial banks to close the accounts held by Gupta-related firms.

144.1. This application attracted further hostility towards me from supporters of the former President and the Guptas.

144.2 Attached to the application as an annexure was a certificate issued by the Financial Intelligence Centre certifying that it had received 72 Suspicious Transaction Reports from the various banks relating to suspicious account activity and transactions conducted using the bank accounts that had been closed. This was the first public acknowledgement of suspicions regarding the business affairs of the Gupta entities since the Public Protector's State of Capture report was only released to the public on 2 November 2016 (following litigation aimed at interdicting its release launched by former President Zuma, Mr Zwane and Mr Van Rooyen.

145. I submit to the Commission that it should "follow the money" and request a full account of all transactions by any Gupta-related company and related individuals that has gone through bank accounts. By doing so it will be better placed to determine which activities were related to criminality and malfeasance. This will assist State Owned Enterprises and taxpayers to recover funds lost in this process.

Evidence of Mr Johan Petrus Burger

38. Mr Burger testified before the Commission on 18 September 2018. Mr Burger was, during April and May 2016, a director and the CEO of FirstRand Bank Limited. FNB is a division of FirstRand.

39. In his evidence, Mr Burger described the process pursuant to which FNB closed client accounts. He made the point that banks had a legal obligation to scrutinise ("vet") a proposed client before opening an account and to monitor clients on an ongoing basis. He said that FNB not only had such obligations under SA legislation but also pursuant to the UK's Bribery Act and the USA's Foreign Corrupt Activities Act because FNB did not restrict its business activities to the Republic. He said that FNB had to take positive steps to ensure that it was not being used for money laundering or other unlawful activities.

40. In his oral evidence, Mr Burger further made the point that FNB was careful to avoid reputational and consequent business risk pursuant to its dealings with its own clients.If events external or internal to a client relationship lead FNB to question whether a relationship ought to be maintained, FNB would conduct a due diligence, which would include transaction monitoring for potentially suspicious transactions. This might lead to the next phase of the process, deliberation. FNB has an internal "person of interest (POI) forum, an independent committee set up to review client relationships in such cases.

41. This process was followed in the cases of Gupta related entities which had accounts with FNB. By letter dated 1 April 2016, FNB notified its Gupta related clients through its attorneys that it had decided to terminate its relationships with these entities with effect from 31 May 2016. The Gupta entities which had accounts with FNB were Tegeta Exploration and Resources (Pty) Ltd, TNA Media (Pty) Ltd, Islandsite Investments One Hundred and Eighty (Pty) Ltd and Sahara Computers (Pty) Ltd.

42. The Gupta related entities asked for the reasons for the decisions and FNB's attorney responded in a letter dated 13 April 2016 that the decision had been taken due to associated business and reputational risks.

43. In a letter dated 24 October 2016 to FNB's attorneys, the attorneys for the Gupta entities made allegations against FNB and asked FNB for information. FNB responded through its attorneys in a letter dated 31 October 2016 rejecting the allegations made against it and declined on several grounds, to provide the further information sought.

44. By email on 22 April 2016, Ms Kellerman, who described herself as the Acting Secretary of the IMC, requested FNB's CEO to attend a meeting with the committee. FNB had learnt that the committee had been set up to look into certain allegations made against certain financial institutions. On 23 April 2016, in response Mr Burger asked amongst other things for details of who would be attending on behalf of the committee, what specific allegations had been levelled against FNB and what the nature and scope of the committee's process would be.

45. Ms Kellerman responded on 24 April 2016 that she was not mandated to respond to questions. On 24 April 2016 FNB declined to attend the meeting. On 4 May 2016 Ms Kellerman again invited FNB to a meeting with the committee. After further correspondence, during which Mr Burger raised questions and Ms Kellerman responded that she was not authorised to answer questions, FNB again declined to meet the committee.

46. On 18 or 19 April 2016 Mr Burger received a call from Mr E Godongwana, who was trying to set up a meeting between bank CEOs and the SG of the ANC in regard to the closure of client accounts. After some correspondence, during which Mr Burger enquired who would be attending the meeting and what its agenda would be, to which Mr Burger received no response, Mr Godongwana notified Mr Burger by text message that the meeting was off.

47. Mr Burger accordingly did not meet the members of the committee or the ANC in regard to the alleged irregularities or the closure of client accounts. Mr Burger stated that in his 32 years in banking, this was the first time ever that he had received requests from a political party or an inter-ministerial committee to discuss bank-client relationships and that the involvement of the Minister of Mineral Resources (Mr Zwane) in relation to the operations of financial institutions was worrying. The proper organs for that purpose are the Minister of Finance and other regulatory bodies conducting oversight in relation to the financial sector.

Evidence of Ms Yasmin Masithela

48. In 2016 Ms Yasmin Masithela was Head of Compliance at Absa Bank Ltd. She testified before the Commission in 2018 when she was Absa's Chief Executive: Strategic Services.

49. Ms Masithela explained that Absa was a subsidiary of Barclays Africa Group Ltd, which itself was a subsidiary of Barclays PLC. As such Absa was obliged throughout the world to comply with laws pertaining to the combating of money laundering and terrorist financing and fell squarely within the regulatory ambit of financial authorities in all major countries. She stated that Absa had risk management policies to ensure that Absa was not used for unlawful activities. She testified that Regulation 36 of the Regulations made under the Banks Act required banks to have in place mechanisms to prevent this from happening.

50. In about November 2014, as part of Absa's normal annual review process, the relationship between Absa and what Ms Masithela described as the Oakbay companies, i.e., those Gupta related companies which held accounts at Absa, came under review. An organ within Absa, its politically exposed persons (PEP) review committee decided that Absa should exit the relationship with its Gupta controlled customers.

51. In December 2015 Absa gave notice of its intention to close the bank accounts of various Oakbay companies and related parties. In February 2016 Absa closed the accounts concerned.

52. The Absa review committee concluded that the Oakbay companies were not using ABSA as their primary or dual bank and were apparently moving their banking accounts elsewhere to other financial institutions. As a consequence, ABSA was limited in its ability to monitor appropriately and understand the transactional activity in those accounts. There was also evidence of large unexplained transfers of funds between the Oakbay companies and related parties at other banks. ABSA was unable to account for these transfers in accordance with its obligations. Furthermore, the revenue received by ABSA from the portfolio at the time had declined materially over the years and the costs of fulfilling its monitoring obligations in respect of this account had accordingly been significant. Ms Masithela also said that there was adverse media that was in the public domain regarding the Oakbay companies and related parties which increased the reputational and conduct risk arising from a continued relationship with these companies and ABSA.

53. Ms Masithela confirmed the identities of 33 linked companies and individuals which or whom Absa considered to be Gupta linked and thus hit by the decision to terminate. These included Oakbay itself, Sahara Computers, Tegeta, Shiva Uranium, TNA Media, Westdawn, Mr Duduzane Zuma, Mr Rajesh Gupta, Mr Atul Gupta, Ms Chetali Gupta, Mr Varun Gupta, Mrs Shivani Gupta and Mrs Arti Gupta.

54. On 20 April 2016 and at the request of the NEC of the ANC, a meeting was held at Luthuli House between representatives of Absa and representatives of the NEC of the ANC. The ANC was represented by Mr Gwede Mantashe, Mr Enoch Godongwana, Ms Jesse Duarte and Mr Krish Naidoo, the ANC's legal representative. Absa's team was led by its CEO, Ms Ramos, and included Ms Masithela.

55. The stated purpose of the meeting was to discuss the judgment in Bredenkamp and Others v Standard Bank of SA Ltd, which provided certain guidelines about how a bank ought to go about terminating its relationship with its own client and to enable the ANC to understand the regulatory framework applicable.

56. Absa made clear, and the ANC appeared to accept, that Absa would not discuss the affairs of any specific client. Despite this, the ANC also raised the allegation or perception that the banks had colluded in effecting the closures of the accounts of the Gupta related entities.

57. On 22 April 2016 Absa received an email from Ms Kellerman requesting Absa to attend a meeting with the IMC on 25 April 2016 to gain clarity on current media reports relating to allegations against certain financial institutions. Absa requested further information regarding the nature of the proposed meeting. The information sought was not provided to Absa's satisfaction and Absa sent an email on 24 April 2016 declining the invitation to the meeting.

58. By email sent on 4 May 2016, Ms Kellerman extended a further invitation to Absa to a meeting with the IMC to discuss the deterrent effect the closure of client bank accounts might have on potential investors in South Africa. On the same day, Absa declined the request to meet the IMC.

Evidence of Mr Michael William Thomas Brown

59. Mr Brown made a statement to the Commission and gave evidence. When he testified, he was the CEO of Nedbank Limited, the banking entity in the Nedbank group.

60. Mr Brown testified that in February 2016 Nedbank began reviewing its relationship with the Gupta family and associated entities, following a request by Mr Brown to Nedbank's Chief Risk Officer to escalate reviews of Gupta-related accounts. Mr Brown perceived at the time that Nedbank's relationship with the Gupta-linked entities posed an increased reputational risk to Nedbank. Of particular relevance was a statement on Ministry of Finance stationery containing an allegation from the then Deputy Minister of Finance that members of the Gupta family had offered him the position of Minister of Finance to replace the then Minister, Mr Nhlanhla Nene.

61. On 4 April 2016 Mr Brown saw media reports and reports from the underlying companies confirming that both KPMG who were the auditors to these companies and SASFIN who at that stage were the sponsoring broker, had terminated their relationships with the Gupta family. Mr Brown considered, from a Nedbank point of view again, that these were particularly significant terminations, because he regarded it as likely that the auditor of a set of companies was privy to information that Nedbank, who were not the main transactional bankers to the Gupta family, would not have had. He took the view that there must have been a reason for them to make their decision. Mr Brown noted that the then CEO of KPMG was quoted as saying that the association risk was too great for them to continue. While there was no direct quote from the sponsoring broker, Mr Brown considered it likely that Sasfin would have had access to more information than Nedbank at that stage.

62. Nedbank proceeded to convene a meeting of a sub-committee of its executive committee which was mandated to review Nedbank's relationships with the Gupta family. That sub-committee concluded that because of the reputational and business risks associated with doing business with the Gupta family, Nedbank should give notice to terminate the accounts held at Nedbank by these entities. Accordingly, on 7 April 2016 - Oakbay, Islandsite, Confident Concept (Pty) Ltd and Sahara Computers were given 30 days' notice of termination. Termination letters were tendered to a representative of the Gupta entities at a meeting on 7 April 2016. The representative refused to accept the notices. Thereafter, the notices were delivered by registered post. On 4 May 2016 notice of termination was given to a further Gupta company, VR Laser Services (Pty) Ltd.

63. On 14 April 2016 Mr Howa of Oakbay requested an urgent meeting with Nedbank. Mr Brown did not attend this meeting but learnt that the meeting was held between Mr Howa and officials of Nedbank, that Mr Howa urged Nedbank to reconsider its closure decision and that Nedbank refused to do so.

64. On 20 April 2016 Mr Brown attended a meeting at Luthuli House at the request of Mr Mantashe, Ms Duarte, and Mr Godongwana to enable them to get a better understanding of the process banks followed to close customer accounts. Mr Brown was told that complaints had been made by the general population that banks were able just to close accounts unilaterally. This was the first time that Mr Brown had ever been asked to attend a meeting to discuss the closure of Nedbank's customer accounts. He testified that Mr Mantashe and Ms Duarte attended the meeting. Mr Brown was not sure whether Mr Godongwana attended.

65. Mr Brown explained that Nedbank's closure decisions were made without consulting other banks but on reasonable notice, after Nedbank had assessed the situation. He testified that, if the client wanted to discuss the matter, Nedbank would be prepared to listen to what the customer had to say and may, in a proper case, reverse its closure decision.

66. Mr Brown did not feel that the ANC had sought to place him under any pressure to reopen the Gupta accounts.

67. On 4 May 2016 Nedbank received an email from Ms Kellerman to say that an IMC had been established by Cabinet to look into certain allegations made against certain financial institutions. Mr Brown testified that he understood the IMC to consist of the Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr Zwane, the Minister of Finance, Mr Gordhan, the Minister of Labour, Ms Oliphant and the Minister of Communications, Ms Muthambi.

68. The purpose of the meeting was said to be to gain clarity on the media reports and public statements made by Nedbank with regard to the closing of bank accounts and/or termination of bank/client relationships. The meeting was held at the offices of the Minister Zwane in Pretoria. Mr Brown said that before this meeting he had not met government at the offices of the Minister of Mineral Affairs in relation to banking matters.

69. On 5 May 2016 Ms Kellerman informed Mr Brown that she was unable to confirm who from the IMC would be attending the meeting as it was an ad hoc meeting. The meeting was attended on the government side by Mr Zwane, Mr H Mkhize as Ms Oliphant's representative and two other persons who were not introduced. Mr Brown asked if the meeting was quorate and Mr Zwane assured him that it was.

70. A letter put up by the Minister of Finance in the application, written by Mr Gordhan to Mr Zwane and dated 22 April 2016 was drawn to Mr Brown's attention. The letter stated, amongst other things, that

Mr Gordhan had established that:

70.1 The date on which Mr Zwane had announced that the Cabinet had met and authorised the constitution of the IMC, April 2016 was incorrect because no Cabinet meeting had been held that day

70.2 No IMC had been established

70.3 Three Ministers were nominated: Finance, Labour and Mineral Resources

70.4 No one Minister had been designated as convenor in contradiction of Mr Zwane's announcement that he had been appointed to chair the IMC; and 70.5 The financial services sector was not "already distressed" as Mr Zwane's letter indicated and care had to be taken not to compromise financial stability.

71. In response to a request from Nedbank, Ms Kellerman said in an email on 9 May 2016 that the following had attended the meeting on behalf of government: Mrs F Muthambi as well as her advisors, Messrs Z Manyi and Z Nene, Ms M Oliphant as well as her advisors, Mr H Mkhize and DDG Mr V Seafield, Mr Zwane and his advisor, Ms S Kellerman. However, Mr Brown testified that this was inaccurate as Ms Muthambi, Mr Manyi and Ms Oliphant had not attended the meeting.

72. Mr Zwane began the meeting by saying that the IMC had been constituted by Cabinet and was not there to represent any particular company or family but to resolve apparent issues of investor confidence and reported potential job losses. In response Mr Brown affirmed that Nedbank would not discuss individual cases. He went on to explain the regulatory environment. He quoted from a JP Morgan report which dealt with reputational risk and in which JP Morgan disclosed publicly that it had closed 18 000 accounts. He said that Nedbank had similar experiences. In the year ending in June 2016 Nedbank had closed about 100 accounts for reputational reasons.

73. Despite Mr Zwane's assurance that individual closures would not be raised at the meeting, several questions were asked about the triggers for the closures of the Gupta accounts including a reference to a recording of a Nedbank staff member talking to a client about the Gupta accounts. Mr Zwane also observed that Nedbank was not the main transactional banker to the various Gupta entities and went on to suggest that Nedbank might step in to save jobs and come to an amicable solution.

74. Mr Brown found the request strange and reminded Mr Zwane that Nedbank could not discuss specific customer matters. At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr Zwane thanked Nedbank for its attendance and remarked that he found it surprising that other banks had refused to attend the IMC meetings considering that banks received their licences from the government. Mr Brown perceived this as a threat. After the meeting, Nedbank asked for a set of minutes of the meeting, but no minutes were provided.

75. Mr Brown left the meeting with the impression that the IMC was focused on two key issues: to try to determine whether there had been collusion amongst the banks in relation to the Gupta account closures and to see whether Nedbank would be prepared to become the Guptas' primary transactional banker.

Evidence of Mr Gwede Mantashe

76. Mr Mantashe submitted an affidavit which he signed on 11 November 2018 on behalf of the ANC. Mr Mantashe testified that the ANC met with Standard Bank, Absa and Nedbank but not with FNB.

77. Mr Mantashe said in his statement that the purpose of the meeting convened by the ANC with the Standard Bank (and, therefore, by extension with the other banks as well) was not to discuss the bank's relationship with a "particular customer" but to "obtain a better understanding of the process and criteria applied by Standard Bank in entering into and terminating banking relationships with its customers, especially when politically-exposed persons are involved". In his oral evidence he said that Oakbay's argument for the ANC to intervene with the banks was that the termination decisions had caused job losses. The ANC had two meetings with Oakbay. The first meeting was to explain the structure of the company and the second focused on job losses.

78. Mr Mantashe admitted that at the meeting with Standard Bank, the ANC expressed a concern that there was a perception that race or political affiliation played a role in Standard Bank's decisions to retain or terminate relationships with its customers.

79. Mr Mantashe admitted that at the meeting, the ANC expressed a concern about possible collusion between Standard Bank and other banks.

80. Mr Mantashe stated that the ANC made the point at the meeting with Standard Bank that stringent FICA requirements could force the dishonest into cash transactions.

81. On 8 April 2016 Mr Howa, the CEO of Oakbay, sought a meeting with Mr Mantashe to discuss job losses in the group arising from the banks' decisions to close accounts. Mr Howa said in a letter to Mr Mantashe that he believed that the terminations were anti-competitive and politically motivated, designed to marginalise the Gupta entities. The ANC was concerned about the impact of such action on the employment situation and the serious nature of the allegations. It held two meetings with executives of Oakbay. The second such meeting was held after the account closures. Arising from these meetings and the allegations made by Mr Howa, the high office bearers of the ANC directed Mr Mantashe to meet the four banks involved and "some of the relevant Ministers". The decision to create the IMC however rendered it unnecessary for Mr Mantashe to meet the Ministers.

82. Mr Mantashe went to the meetings with the banks armed with a "framework of principles" developed by its officials for the engagement. The principles were:

    82.1 The ANC had to be mindful that banks were not permitted to share information about their customers with a third party. The engagement, therefore, had to be about principles and general facts.

    82.2 The ANC sought clarity on how "consistent is the principle of account closures applied" and how "widespread is the practice of account closures in the banking sector".

    82.3 The ANC sought to enquire whether the "internal debate on corporate capture in the ANC had an impact on the banks' decision-making processes in relation to closure of accounts."

83. This framework was extended, "emanating from certain quarters in the ANC", to seek clarity on:

    83.1 Whether the banks were using their ability to terminate banking relationships to exercise the power of "white monopoly capital" against black business "to a degree that should concern policy makers"; and

    83.2 Whether the four large banks were "colluding or acting in concert in withdrawing banking services from a common customer."

84. On 23 May 2016 the officials of the ANC reported the essence of their discussions with Oakbay to the ANC's National Working Committee (NWC) and Mr Mantashe reported on his meetings with the banks. Following these reports, the NWC observed that:

    84.1 The "coordinated action of the banks smacks of collusion"; the power of the banks to "close businesses without being required to explain their action" was a threat that these powers could be abused for various reasons, including possible resistance to transformation.

    84.2 The potential for job losses had to be raised sharply without the ANC being seen as the spokesperson for any particular company.

    84.3 The government had to ensure that there was broad understanding at government level of the legislation in question; it would serve a good purpose if leaders and public representatives of the ANC were made to understand the concept of politically exposed persons (PEPs) and the moral stigma attached to PEPs, "i.e., that they are morally corrupt until proven otherwise".

84.4 The ANC had to always be sensitive to public perceptions and appreciate the need to reassure society that its interventions were genuine.

84.5 With hindsight, the engagement with the banks would have been more effective if conducted through the regulator; any other approach carried the risk that the ANC would be seen to be talking from a biased position without acquainting itself with the facts; as the ANC raised the issue of possible job losses, the ANC had to emphasise the importance of businesses complying with law.

85. At its meeting of 28-30 May 2016 the NEC of the ANC adopted the report of the NWC and resolved that the decision of the ANC to meet with the banks had been driven by loss of jobs, perceptions that the banks were colluding and perceptions that the banks were exercising the power of "white monopoly capital" (WMC) against black businesses.

86. Mr Mantashe conceded that at the time this resolution of the NEC was passed, it was public knowledge that President Zuma had a relationship with the Guptas, that Mr Duduzane Zuma had a business relationship with the Guptas and the facts and allegations around the purchase of Optimum mine from Glencore by Tegeta were being aired in the media. The media were also reporting that Tegeta had been awarded a contract worth R4 billion to supply coal to the Majuba power station in Mpumalanga. It was also known by the ANC that Mr Jonas had publicly announced that he had been offered the position of Minister of Finance by the Guptas (although Mr Mantashe doubted that this was true). The ANC was also aware that Mr Themba Maseko had claimed that President Zuma had requested him to help the Guptas. Mr Mantashe said Mr Maseko was one of the eight ANC members who came forward with allegations that efforts had been made to corrupt them in favour of the Guptas.

87. In his oral evidence Mr Mantashe said that during the meetings the banks explained the processes they followed in complying with the law. Mr Mantashe said that in the end "we understood the basis of banks closing accounts and that was the essence of our meeting." After the meetings, Mr Mantashe said, the ANC reported telephonically to Oakbay that while their argument regarding job losses was attractive, the ANC could not help the Guptas because "people must comply with regulations and rules".

88. At the same NEC meeting, the ANC created a process by which persons could report conduct by the Gupta family amounting to what is now called "state capture". Mr Mantashe noted that eight ANC members came forward with information and noted these members' preference was for their submissions to be made to an independent body.

89. Mr Mantashe's statement concluded with the quotation of a resolution passed by the ANC at its national conference in December 2017 declaring unanimously its resolve to combat corruption and an observation that this Commission was appointed by former Present Zuma a month later on 23 January 2018.

Evidence of Mr Mosebenzi Joseph Zwane

90. Mr Zwane was the Minister of Mineral Affairs in 2016. In 2021 he was a member of Parliament and was no longer a Minister. He was invited to respond to the evidence in relation to the account closures and did so in an affidavit he signed on 31 May 2021 in response to questions sent to Mr Zwane by an evidence leader.

91. Mr Zwane's answer to the evidence that he put pressure on the banks to reverse their closure decisions was that he did so in an effort to forestall job losses. This, he said, was also why he travelled to Switzerland to attend a session of the negotiations between Glencore and Tegeta relating to the acquisition by Tegeta of the Optimum mine. He claimed that he never discussed Cabinet business with third parties. Mr Zwane confirmed that an IMC was constituted of which he was the chair.

EVALUATION

92. The facts show that there were four banks which provided banking facilities to the Guptas: namely, Standard Bank, FNB, Absa and Nedbank.

93. Standard Bank gave notice to terminate on 6 April 2016; FNB gave notice on 1 April 2016, Absa gave notice in December 2015. Nedbank gave notice on 7 April and 4 May 2016.

94. Each of the banks' representatives gave his or her bank's reasons for terminating the relationship. Absa, described by one of the witnesses as the main transactional bank used by the Guptas, was the first to terminate. Ms Masithela gave those reasons as the Guptas appeared to be moving their accounts away from Absa, which limited its ability to monitor the character of transactions, there were large unexplained transfers of money between the Oakbay companies and related parties, the costs of monitoring the account were significant and there had been adverse reports in the media regarding the Guptas.

95. Some four months later, the other three major banks followed suit in short order.

96. Mr Sinton gave Standard Bank's reasons for its closure decision. He said that Absa had previously terminated its relationships with certain Gupta companies; the Gupta companies' auditors had terminated their relationship with the Gupta companies; former Deputy Minister Jonas had published on the National Treasury website the allegation that the Guptas had offered him benefits if he would do their bidding, a former MP; Ms Mentor had announced that she had been offered a Cabinet post by the Guptas in exchange for favours; Standard Bank provided services to the Gupta group in the media business through two of its own customers and was concerned about being implicated in unlawful behaviour; Mr Themba Maseko had announced that he had been instructed to help Gupta entities; Minister Zwane had accompanied a Gupta delegation to Switzerland to negotiate the purchase by the Guptas of the Optimum coal mine from Glencore ; it had been reported in the press that one of the Gupta companies had bound itself as surety for the obligations of a trust in which a wife and son of President Zuma were beneficiaries; Estina (Pty) Ltd had been awarded a contract to develop a farm in the Free State but had sent substantial sums of the money paid to it to Dubai rather than using it for the proper purpose; the Guptas had attempted to persuade Standard Bank to transfer money held in trust for the rehabilitation of Optimum mine to the Bank of Baroda. In addition, Standard Bank's money laundering reporting officer had warned the bank to use extreme caution in dealing with the Gupta companies.

97. Mr Burger gave FNB's reasons for its decision to close the accounts as reputational and consequent business risk pursuant to FNB's dealings with its own customers.

98. Mr Brown gave Nedbank's reasons for the termination of the bank-client relationships as the resignations of the Gupta companies' auditor and sponsoring broker, and reputational and business risks as determined by the sub-committee of its executive committee.

99. There is no reason to doubt the veracity and cogency of this evidence. The suggestion that these banks might have terminated, or did terminate, for reasons of racial prejudice and jealousy (all embraced within the manufactured public relations tag of "white monopoly capital") demands that it be accepted that these banks decided to cut themselves off from a lucrative income stream and, for some unexplained motive, decided to suspend their participation in this competitive market to achieve some other unstated goal.

100. Not only is there no evidence on which to disbelieve the witnesses who explained the conduct of the banks, but the probabilities are strongly against the white monopoly capital, anti-competitive, collusion narrative. From the abundant evidence before the Commission, it is clear beyond any reasonable doubt that the Guptas, and their politically connected enablers, had embarked on a coordinated campaign to loot the South African state coffers and, until the banks stopped them from doing so, were using the banks as their vehicles for this purpose. It is equally clear that, when this looting became notorious in the public sphere, the banks were obliged by law to act against the Guptas and did so for that reason.

101. The banks should, therefore, not be criticised for acting against the Guptas. If anything, the three banks which delayed their closure decisions until April 2016 might have been interrogated as to why it had taken them so long to act.

102. Although some doubt exists as to whether Cabinet ever constituted an IMC to enquire into the reasons surrounding the termination decisions was raised by Mr Gordhan in his letter dated 24 May 2016.

103. The application for a declaratory order was launched after Mr Howa had persistently sought to place Mr Gordhan as Minister of Finance under pressure to intervene on behalf of the Gupta companies to procure the reversal of the termination decisions. To this end, Mr Howa engaged in correspondence and met with Mr Gordhan. This correspondence was attached to Mr Gordhan's founding affidavit in the High Court application. For example, on 8 April 2016, Mr Howa wrote that the termination decisions, and indeed the termination decision of their auditors as well, were the result of an "anti-competitive and politically motivated campaign designed to marginalise our businesses."

104. In response, Mr Gordhan obtained counsel's advice that nothing in law authorised governmental intervention with the banker-client relationship arising by contract. In a letter dated 24 May 2016, Mr Gordhan communicated this advice to Mr Howa and pointed to the highly regulated environment in which banks operated and to the legal impediments to banks discussing client related matters with the Minister of Finance and suggested that Oakbay exhaust its legal remedies.

105. Nonetheless, Mr Howa, while acknowledging that the termination decisions were unassailable in a court of law, persisted with his requests that Mr Gordhan as Minister of Finance somehow assist him to achieve the reversal of the decisions.

106. The pressure exerted by Mr Howa was the reason stated by Mr Gordhan for his decision to institute the application for a declaratory order. It is overwhelmingly probable, however, that Mr Gordhan was faced with pressure from some of his colleagues in the Cabinet and the ANC to place pressure on the banks to reverse their termination decisions:

    106.1 It is likely that Mr Howa, having unsuccessfully sought to pressurise the Minister of Finance into an interaction with the banks, placed the same pressures on the ANC and government.

    106.2 It is similarly probable that the ANC and the government acceded to Mr Howa's request. Never before, in the lengthy experience of the bank officials who testified had the ANC or government sought or held meetings with banks to discuss their decisions relating to a single client and exert pressure on banks to reverse or modify their termination decisions.

    106.3 Mr Gordhan did not attend any of the meetings convened by government to pressurise the banks. This reinforces the conclusion that Mr Gordhan was not prepared to do something counsel had advised him was unlawful.

    106.4 Both the Cabinet and the ANC had decided to place such pressure as they could on the banks to reverse their decisions. It is highly unlikely that Mr Gordhan would not have disclosed to his colleagues the legal advice which rendered it unlawful for the government to intervene in the dispute and which justified his stance.

    106.5 It is therefore probable that both the ANC and government tried to place pressure on the banks to reverse their closure decisions even though they knew that they had no legal right to intervene in individual banker-client relationships.

    106.6 This is reinforced by the acknowledgement of both the ANC and Mr Zwane to the banks at the various meetings that they were not entitled to intervene in, or receive information about, the circumstances of and context within which the termination decisions had been made in respect of any client(s) of the specific banks.

    106.7 Nevertheless, other members of the National Executive, particularly Mr Zwane in his statement that the President had decided to establish a Commission of Inquiry to investigate the banks, had chosen publicly to perpetuate the narrative that the termination decisions had been taken on improper grounds.

106.8 The evidence of the bank officials makes plain that, while both the ANC and Mr Zwane paid lip service to the principle that there could be no discussion of the relationships between the Gupta account holders and the banks, the conversation at the meetings was constantly steered in that direction and the bank officials were left in no doubt that they had incurred the displeasure of the ANC and of government and would only regain their good opinion by restoring banking facilities to the Guptas.

106.9 Indeed, Mr Zwane did not deny that he used what he mistakenly believed to be the government's power to interfere with banking licences in an effort to pressurise Standard Bank to bend to government's will.

106.10 While concern over job losses was a legitimate focus of both the ANC and the IMC, their focus on this aspect was no more than a cover for their attempts to pressurise the banks into reversing their termination decisions. It was hypocritical to focus on job losses.

106.11 When Mr Zwane's attempts at the meetings to impose the Guptas' will on the banks through government failed, his next move was to announce that the President would appoint a Commission of Inquiry to investigate conduct that did not remotely display any of the negative characteristics both the ANC and government sought to attribute to it.

106.12 The Presidency proceeded to issue a statement repudiating Mr Zwane. It appeared from the text of the statement that even the suggestion that such a commission was to be appointed had disconcerted the markets. However, when President Zuma was questioned on the subject in Parliament, President Zuma gave answers which would enable him to jump either way; either to establish such a commission or to repeat the repudiation of Mr Zwane, by so doing casting doubt on the assertion in the statement that Mr Zwane's utterance had been unauthorised and unfortunate.

106.13 At some stage while answering questions about the Government's reaction to the closure of the bank accounts of the Gupta entities in Parliament on 23 November 2016, President Zuma said:

> We wanted to look into that matter and get to the bottom of it because we cannot say, at any other time any business person will be dealt with and the government will just stand and look. [Interjections.] We were not dealing with the company but the actions of the bank. That is what we were dealing with and we will continue to do so. [Applause.]
> We are responsible because we are government of this country. There is nothing that sounds very suspicious that we are going to look at and do nothing. That is the reason why we acted on this one. Thank you, Madam Speaker. [Applause.]

106.14 Conspicuous by its absence from President Zuma's answers and remarks was any concern about the possibility that the banks may have taken the decisions they took because his friends, the Guptas, were involved in suspicious transactions. When it came to the conduct of the banks, he said when there was "action" that looked "suspicious", as a responsible government governing this country, they had to investigate, and yet there had by 2016 been a lot of allegations of criminality and wrongdoing on the part of the Guptas and yet this government as a responsible government that governs this country, as he put it, had not seen fit to investigate the Guptas.

106.15 Finally, on this subject, there is the reaction of the NEC of the ANC to what they must have regarded as the banks' intransigence. Without any evidence to back them up, they adopted as the party position a stance which characterised the actions of the banks as racially motivated mischief ("white monopoly capital"), anti-competitive and collusive. There is not a word in the resolution of the NEC which recognises the right of the banks to manage their own businesses if they do so in good faith. Indeed, the tone of the resolution conveys the strong impression that the ANC had decided that the banks had not acted in good faith. Nor is there any reference to the wrongdoings of the Guptas which had been reported at the highest party level from within their own ranks.

106.16 Nevertheless, the ANC recognised that their support for their members, the Guptas, might backfire on them. So they included in the resolution of the NEC a reference to the anxieties of some of their own comrades about the conduct of the Guptas and a vague reference to a process by which the anxieties might be redressed.

107. The regret expressed by the ANC about the decision to take on the banks publicly and directly was not a moral regret; it was a regret that the tactic employed had not born political fruit. This conclusion is reinforced by the suggestion in the assessment of the ANC, testified to by Mr Mantashe, that the "engagement with the banks would have been more effective if conducted quietly and done through the regulator."

CONCLUSIONS

108. The accusation that the termination decisions to close bank accounts were taken to advance the agenda of WMC, was entirely unjustified on the facts of this case. There is absolutely no evidence to support that accusation. The decisions of the banks were taken in the light of their legal obligations when a client appears to be involved in suspicious transactions that could cause a bank reputational damage.

109. It is quite clear with regard to the meetings that representatives of various banks had with the Inter-Ministerial Task Team chaired by Mr Zwane that that Task Team's focus, as they seem to have understood it themselves, was to get the banks to reverse their decisions to close the bank accounts of the Gupta-owned companies. Therefore, that Task Team improperly intervened in the matter of the closing of the bank facilities of the Gupta owned companies to advance the cause of the Guptas. That is why in one or more of the meetings Mr Zwane effectively asked bank representatives what the Guptas would need to do in order for the banks to reverse their decision.

110. President Zuma may have issued a media statement repudiating a statement that had been issued by Mr Zwane to the effect that the Cabinet had decided that a judicial commission of inquiry would be appointed to investigate the conduct of the banks concerned. However, if one reads the transcript of the proceedings of the National Assembly on 23 November 2016 when President Zuma was answering questions on, among others, the Government's reaction to the closure of the bank accounts of the Gupta-owned companies, one wonders to what extent what Mr Zwane had articulated may have been something that Mr Zuma would also have wanted but had felt that he would not have enough support for it. I say this in part because the transcript of those proceedings on that day reveal that President Zuma said that as Government they wanted to investigate the conduct of the banks. A Commission of inquiry conducts an investigation. Subsequently, President Zuma does not seem to have pursued the idea of an investigation once the idea of a Commission of Inquiry had been rejected. So, it may well be that the investigation that President Zuma talked about in Parliament was intended to be conducted by a Commission of Inquiry as Mr Zwane had announced but the idea was not pursued once it was clear that there would be a lot of criticism against the Government if it was pursued.

111. In this regard it must be remembered that President Zuma was the President of the ANC and the country in 2016. He still had strong support both in the ANC and in the Cabinet. It must also be remembered that the evidence heard by the Commission was to the effect that his friendship or bond with the Guptas was very deep. This was part of the evidence that was given by Mr Rajesh Sundaram when he testified about the relationship between Mr Zuma and the Guptas. We have seen in the evidence heard by the Commission that President Zuma's relationship with the Guptas was so deep that he was even prepared to fire his own ANC comrades in Government if that is what the Guptas wanted. We saw that when he removed Mr Themba Maseko from GCIS because Mr Ajay Gupta wanted him removed. We can see in this Report that he was prepared to fire Minister Nene who was doing a good job as Minister of Finance simply because he was not prepared to work with the Guptas and was not prepared to approve transactions that he believed were not in the interests of the country.

112. Given all the above and all evidence heard by the Commission in relation to President Zuma, there can be no doubt that he wanted the "IMC" to come to the assistance of his friends, the Guptas, which would have been and was an improper interference in the relationship between the banks and their clients. That conduct on his part was also in breach of section 96(2)(b) of the Constitution. That section reads:

> 2. Members of the Cabinet and Deputy Ministers may not . . .
> b. Act in any way that is inconsistent with their office, or expose themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and private interests ....

113. It was also in breach of section 2 of the Executive Members' Ethics Act. That Act reads:

> Code of ethics 2.
> (1) The President must, after consultation with Parliament, by proclamation in the Gazette, publish a code of ethics prescribing standards and rules aimed at promoting open, democratic and accountable government and with which Cabinet members, Deputy Ministers and MECs must comply in performing their official responsibilities.
> (2) The code of ethics must—
>
> (a) Include provisions requiring Cabinet members, Deputy Ministers and MECs—
> (i) At all times to act in good faith and in the best interest of good governance; and
> (ii) To meet all the obligations imposed on them by law; and
> (b) Include provisions prohibiting Cabinet members, Deputy Ministers and MECs from—
> (i) Undertaking any other paid work;
> (ii) Acting in a way that is inconsistent with their office;
> (iii) Exposing themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and their private interests;
> (iv) Using their position or any information entrusted to them, to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person; and
> (v) Acting in a way that may compromise the credibility or integrity of their office or of the government.

114. When one also has regard to the statements he made in Parliament on the matter, it is quite clear that he sought to improperly interfere in the matter of the closing of the banking facilities of the Gupta owned companies in order to assist his friends.

115. There is no doubt that Mr Zwane used his position as Chairperson of the Committee to try and assist the Guptas and get the banks to reverse their decisions. His intervention was improper and he should not have played that role. It would appear that Rule 3.3 notices were not served on other members of the Committee. For that reason, it would not be fair to make any adverse findings against them.

116. Mr Zwane was vested with the public power and used public resources in an effort to get done what the Guptas wanted. The Constitution requires public power to be exercised in good faith and for a proper purpose. President Zuma also used the power of his office to improperly intervene in the matter of the closure of the banking facilities of Gupta-owned companies in order to assist the Guptas.

117. One can only conclude that President Zuma and Mr Zwane misused their public power in an attempt to achieve a benefit for the Guptas, not because their case was a deserving one which ought to enjoy the protection of the state but because of the power and influence which the Guptas were able to wield in the South Africa of those times.

118. This conduct on the part of Mr Zuma and Mr Zwane ought to be deplored and condemned both as a violation of the powers vested in them by the Constitution and as a breach of the provisions of the Executive Ethics Code.

119. The ANC tried to say that it held the meetings that it held with the banks not because they wanted to assist the Guptas but because they wanted to understand the process and the circumstances under which a bank would terminate a banker-client relationship or because they were concerned about job losses. The TOR do not require findings in relation to the ANC. Nevertheless, the following questions can be raised:

    119.1 If the ANC wanted to understand the process relating to a bank closing a client's bank account, why did they refer to politically exposed persons in their questions to the banks when we know that the politically exposed persons they were really having in mind were the Guptas? Furthermore, if they just wanted an understanding of the bank processes, why could they not deal with the issues in the normal course? What was the urgency in the matter? They wanted to understand the process or reasons and then do what after the banks had explained? Why did they report back to Oakbay after their meetings with the banks if they simply wanted to understand the reasons and processes of the banks when in general they close client's bank accounts?

    119.2 If they were concerned about job losses or the workers, why did they not leave this issue to their ally COSATU, which deals with labour issues all the time? If they were concerned about workers, it is Oakbay which approached the ANC and not the workers – at least on the evidence heard by the Commission. If they had been approached by the workers, would they have called the meeting with the banks as they did or would they have referred the workers to COSATU?

120. As far as the Cabinet is concerned, it was improper for it to get involved in the matter of the four banks closing the accounts of the Guptas. Minister Gordhan was the Minister of Finance at the time. The banks fall under his portfolio. He was dead against the Cabinet and anybody getting involved in the relationship between the banks and their clients. He sought a legal opinion which made it clear that it would be improper for government to get involved. Mr Gordhan boycotted the committee that was chaired by Mr Zwane. It is highly unlikely that Mr Gordhan would have stayed away from that Committee without having explained to the Cabinet that it would be unlawful for the Cabinet to get involved. The Cabinet should have left this matter to the relevant regulatory body.

RECOMMENDATIONS

121. Some of the banks which closed the bank accounts of the Gupta companies were prepared to have a discussion with their clients before they could terminate their relationship with them but others appeared not to have been prepared to have such a discussion and thought that all they needed to do was to give their client a reasonable notice of the termination of the relationship. In Bredenkamp and Others v Standard Bank of SA Ltd the Supreme Court of Appeal decided that a bank was not obliged to hear its client's side of the story before the bank could terminate the relationship. It seems that the Supreme Court of Appeal's basis for this decision was that the relationship between a bank and a client is a contractual one.

122. Representatives of banks who testified before this Commission revealed that the banking industry is regulated or is subject to many laws. Banks possess an enormous amount of power. This would become very clear if all the banks were to refuse that you hold an account with them. You would not be able to run any serious business without being able to open a bank account. If you already had a bank account and all the banks in which you have accounts terminated their relationship with you that would be devastating. If you were running a serious business, you would need to close down that may result in job losses. Depending on the size of the business one may be talking about hundreds or thousands of people who would lose jobs. The workers would have to suffer serious consequences even though they may not have done anything wrong themselves.

123. In this day and age in South Africa it is unacceptable that an institution as powerful as a bank should have no obligation to hear – whether in a discussion or in writing - what a client has to say before the bank may close that client's account on suspicion that the client may be involved in illegal or corrupt transactions. It does not appear to be in line with the kind of society that our Constitutional democracy envisages. A decision to close a client's bank account on those grounds is a decision that could have far reaching consequences for the client and others and it is only fair that banks be required to afford their clients the opportunity to be heard or to make representations to show if they are able to, that there are no grounds for the bank to be concerned. The bank may be persuaded or it may not be persuaded. The bank would need to afford the client a proper opportunity to be heard and should not just go through the motions or pay lip service to the principle of audi alteram partem (hear the other side).

124. The fact that the relationship between a bank and a client may be contractual is neither here nor there because there are other relationships which are or were at some stage contractual in nature and Parliament intervened in order to infuse the notion of fairness in the relationship. The first of those is the employment relationship. Under the common law an employer had all the power to terminate an employment relationship for a good reason or for a bad reason or for no reason at all and there was very little that an employee could do about such a termination. Labour legislation was enacted to infuse fairness into the employer-employee relationship and, now, an employer must have a fair reason to terminate the relationship and must follow a fair process to do so. The same applies to certain leases. Some legislation requires that certain tenants be treated fairly. Illegal occupiers of land also need to be treated fairly. In our legal system even those who are accused of rape and murder are not sent to jail without being given an opportunity to tell their side of the story. There is no reason why Banks should not be required to observe this basic principle.

125. It is therefore recommended that relevant existing legislation governing banks be amended to introduce this requirement of fairness or, if warranted, a new piece of legislation be enacted which will make this a requirement.

THE CONCEPT OF STATE CAPTURE

INTRODUCTION

1. This Commission is the result of remedial action directed by the former Public Protector, Ms Thuli Madonsela, on 2 November 2016, in her report titled State of Capture. The report was issued in terms of section 182(1)(b) of the Constitution read with section 8(1) of the Public Protector Act.

2. The State of Capture report relates to an investigation into complaints of alleged improper and unethical conduct by former President Zuma, certain state functionaries and the Gupta family in the appointment and removal of cabinet ministers and directors of SOEs which possibly resulted in the improper and corrupt award of state contracts and other benefits to the Gupta family.

3. The essential task of the Commission, as stated in the Proclamation[9] establishing it, is to investigate allegations of state capture, corruption and fraud. The terms of reference of the Commission (TORs), discussed more fully later, are broad in scope, with the Commission being appointed "to investigate matters of public and national interest concerning allegations of state capture, corruption and fraud." As will appear later, this broad formulation is narrowed somewhat by the terms of particular TORs.

4. The Proclamation specifically requires that in investigating, reporting and making recommendations the Commission shall be guided by the Public Protector's State of Capture report, the Constitution, relevant legislation, policies, and guidelines, as well as the order of the North Gauteng High Court of 14 December 2017 under case number 91139/2016. While the concept of state capture is the central framing issue of concern for the Commission, neither the Public Protector's report, nor the High Court judgment, nor the TORs define the concept. There is also no legal definition of the concept to rely on.

5. Accordingly, understanding what is meant by "state capture" in the context of the Public Protector's report, the judgment and order of the High Court of 13 December 2017, and the TORs is thus of central importance to the Commission's work. A workable delineation of the concept of state capture is necessary to guide the Commission in determining how to approach the facts before it; in determining what conclusions or findings it can and should make; and in determining the related recommendations.

STATE CAPTURE AS UNDERSTOOD IN THE PUBLIC DISCOURSE

6. The term "state capture" has in recent years gained popularity in the South African public discourse, where it has been used generally to describe an increasing degree of corrupt private influence over state power. The term has been used in the media since 2013 but the beginnings of its pervasive use can be traced to the aftermath of the dismissal of the then Finance Minister, Mr Nhlanhla Nene, on 9 December 2015.

7. When the Public Protector produced her report, the term state capture had not yet gained the wide currency it has today. The publication of the report was the catalyst for civil society and the media to put together the pieces of the "big picture" of state capture in South Africa. The "Gupta-leaks" emails revealing the extent of state capture entered the public domain after the Public Protector's report was published.

8. Generally speaking, state capture is a term of art used in the lexicon of agencies and institutions involved in anti-corruption strategies and endeavours internationally. It has no precise, universal meaning and is used variously in different contexts to encompass activities by private actors and enterprises intent on their own enrichment by capturing state processes, regulatory functions and procurement, with the assistance of corrupt state functionaries. This conduct is often criminal in nature and depending on the circumstances may constitute the offences of corruption, fraud, money laundering and racketeering.

9. The Commission's mandate as proclaimed is directed at state capture, corruption and fraud in the public sector. In general terms, corruption in the public sphere concerns the unlawful exercise of influence over political and administrative decisions, and often the unlawful appropriation of public funds and benefits. It is essentially the abuse of entrusted power for private gain. Corruption is endemic in many countries and may in certain contexts become so prevalent that standard systems of accountability and law enforcement become inadequate and unable to restore constitutional standards of governance. The situation that was taking hold in South Africa threatened to have that outcome, and has required an intervention, namely the establishment of this Commission, to provide a comprehensive understanding of what occurred and how it occurred with a view to making recommendations regarding accountability and reform.

10. Against that background it is therefore necessary to determine an adequate and appropriate definition of state capture. Establishing the meaning of state capture for the purpose of the Commission involves identifying the key elements that make up the overall concept with a view to determining if these elements have been shown in evidence substantially to exist.

11. The concept of "state" is generally understood to mean the civil government and organised public sphere of a country, and includes the legislative and executive branches of government, but also all the public mechanisms and institutions whereby public services are delivered to the citizenry by all levels of government. Section 239 of the Constitution helpfully encompasses the notion of the state in the South African constitutional order. It defines an "organ of state" primarily to mean any department of state or administration in the national, provincial or local sphere of government. However, the definition goes further and includes "any other functionary or institution" exercising a power or preforming a function in terms of the Constitution, a provincial constitution or any legislation. It expressly does not include a court or a judicial officer. The Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 (PFMA) which regulates financial management in national and provincial government, further defines the state in South Africa. It applies to all national public entities. These include national government business enterprises and public companies which are publicly funded.

12. The word “capture” ordinarily and relevantly means the taking into one’s possession or control by force. In the context of state capture, the taking of control is not necessarily by force, but rather by illegitimate means. The taking of control need not be absolute. Rather, capture is attained where sufficient control can be exercised to achieve the corrupt purposes of improper enrichment or benefit.

13. However, it is important to note that state capture is not just about corruption and similar offences. It is not even just about widespread corruption. Corruption may be part of state capture but state capture is more than that. State capture, at least in theory, concerns a network of relationships, both inside and outside government, whose objective is to ensure the exercise of undue influence over decision-making in government and organs of the state, for private and unlawful gain. The task of the Commission is to consider the various ad hoc instances of corruption and to determine if there has been a coordinated and deliberate project of state capture. As is evident in various parts of this report, the Commission has identified repeated patterns of conduct of corruption or state capture as well as networks of persons, entities, government office bearers and state officials involved. Herein is the answer to the question as to whether an organised and recognisable project of state capture occurred in the period under review, which it manifestly did.

THE PUBLIC PROTECTOR’S STATE OF CAPTURE REPORT

14. The State of Capture report was based on various complaints filed with the Public Protector. The complaints requested the investigation and determination of several allegations including the following: 1. the veracity of allegations that the then Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Mcebisi Jonas, and Ms Vytjie Mentor, a Member of Parliament, were offered positions in cabinet by members of the Gupta family; 2. all the business dealings of the Gupta family with government departments and SOEs to determine whether there were irregularities, undue enrichment, corruption and/or undue influence in the award of contracts, mining licences, government advertising or other governmental services; 3. President Zuma’s role in the alleged offer of cabinet positions to Mr Jonas and Ms Mentor; 4. President Zuma’s role in relation to the alleged corrupt offers and Gupta family involvement in the employment of cabinet members and directors of SOE boards; 5. whether President Zuma acted improperly and in violation of the Executive Ethics Code; and 6. the role and conduct of the cabinet in holding banks accountable for withdrawing banking facilities for Gupta owned companies and whether it was appropriate for cabinet to assist private business in this regard.

15. The Public Protector identified a number of issues as relevant for investigation. These included whether: 1. President Zuma had breached the Ethics Act and had acted improperly and in violation of the Code of Ethics; 2. President Zuma had allowed members of the Gupta family and his son, Mr Duduzane Zuma, to be involved in the process of removal and appointment of the Minister of Finance in December 2015; 3. President Zuma had allowed members of the Gupta family and his son to engage in or become involved in the process of removal and the appointment of various members of cabinet; 4. President Zuma had allowed members of the Gupta family and his son to be involved in the process of appointing members of boards of directors of SOEs; 5. President Zuma had enabled or turned a blind eye in violation of the Ethics Code to alleged corrupt practices by the Gupta family and his son in relation to allegedly linking appointment of cabinet ministers and board members to quid pro quo conditions; 6. President Zuma had improperly and in violation of the Code of Ethics exposed himself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between his official duties and his private interests or used his position or information entrusted to him to enrich himself and the businesses owned by the Gupta family and/or his son so as to be given preferential treatment in the award of state contracts, business financing and trading licences; 7. other Cabinet ministers had improperly interfered with the relationship between banks and Gupta-owned companies thereby giving preferential treatment to such companies when they should have been handled by an independent regulatory body; 8. any state functionary in any organ of state or other person had acted unlawfully, improperly or corruptly in connection with the appointment or removal of ministers and directors or boards of directors of SOEs; 9. any state functionary in any organ of state or person acted unlawfully, improperly or corruptly in connection with the awarding of State contracts or tenders to Gupta-linked companies or persons; 10. any state functionary in any organ of state or other person acted unlawfully, improperly or corruptly in connection with the extension of state-provided business financing facilities to the Gupta-linked companies or persons; and 11. any state functionary in any organ of state or other person had acted unlawfully, improperly or corruptly in connection with the exchange of gifts in relation to Gupta-linked companies or persons.

16. As mentioned, the State of Capture report contains no definition of state capture, but there are a number of indications of what the Public Protector understood by the concept which had begun to emerge as part of the public discourse in South Africa prior to her report. The title of the report, “State of Capture” was presumably intended as a play on the term. State capture is broader in its conceptual reach than State of Capture which does not specify who (e.g., the President) or what (e.g., the state or government) has been or is being captured. “State of Capture” simply denotes that there is a situation, circumstance or setting of capture, with the application of the concept depending on the factual information filled in — whether implying a form of regulatory capture, or the capture of particular state institutions or SOEs, or more specifically the capture of the President by the Gupta family.

17. The term state capture appears in only one paragraph of the Public Protector’s report. This paragraph reads:

> The media reports alleged that the relationship between the President and the Gupta family had evolved into "state capture" underpinned by the Gupta family having power to influence the appointment of Cabinet Ministers and directors in boards of SOEs and leveraging these relationships to get preferential treatment in state contracts, access to state provided business finance and the award of business licences.[10]

18. While the paragraph reflects the essence of state capture as it has occurred in South Africa, (the improper influence of the Gupta enterprise in relation to the appointment of cabinet ministers and the directors and executives at SOEs in order to influence procurement and financing decisions), the concept is broader than this. The sub-title of the report and the issues identified for investigation envisage a broader scope. The focus of the report is on the improper and unethical conduct by the President and other state functionaries relating to improper relationships with the Gupta racketeering enterprise and involving inter alia the removal and appointment of cabinet ministers and directors and employees at SOE’s resulting in improper and possibly corrupt award of state contracts and benefits to the Gupta enterprise.

19. A reading of the "State of Capture" report as a whole reveals that the Public Protector accepted the following elements as being the essential components of state capture in South Africa: i) improper relationships between influential state actors and private individuals or enterprises; ii) the resultant involvement and influence of those private individuals or enterprises in the appointment of cabinet ministers, directors and executives of SOEs, and other senior state officials; iii) the leveraging of the relationships so formed resulting in the improper and corrupt award of state contracts and benefits to the private individuals concerned; and iv) the consequent (mostly unlawful) financial and other benefits to those private individuals, their businesses and their associates.

20. After a review of the issues she identified for investigation, the Public Protector in paragraph 8 of the report proposed the following remedial action:

> 8.4 The President to appoint, within 30 days, a Commission of Inquiry headed by a Judge solely selected by the Chief Justice who should provide one name to the President.
> 8.5 The National Treasury to ensure that the Commission is adequately resourced.
> 8.6 The Judge to be given the power to appoint his/her own staff and to investigate all the issues using the record of this investigation and the report as a starting point.
> 8.7 The Commission of Inquiry to be given powers of evidence collection that are no less than that of the Public Protector.

8.8 The Commission of Inquiry to complete its task and to present the report with findings and recommendations to the President within 180 days. The President shall submit a copy with an indication of his or her intentions regarding the implementation to Parliament within 14 days of releasing the report.

The judgment of the High Court

21. In December 2016, former President Zuma launched an application under case number 91139/16 in the Gauteng Division of the High Court, Pretoria to review and set aside the remedial action of the Public Protector instructing him to appoint a commission of inquiry. The former President sought an order that the matter be remitted to the Public Protector for further investigation on the basis that the Public Protector lacked the power to delegate her functions to a commission of inquiry. The review was directed, in the main, at the lawfulness and rationality of the remedial action with the primary question being whether the President's constitutional power to appoint a commission of inquiry could be limited by remedial action taken by the Public Protector.

22. A full bench of the court found that the President's power under section 84(2)(f) of the Constitution to appoint a commission of inquiry is not untrammelled and must be exercised within the constraints of the Constitution. The Public Protector's powers in terms of section 182(1)(c) of the Constitution included the power to direct members of the executive (including the President) to exercise powers entrusted to them under the Constitution including the power (in appropriate circumstances – such as when the President was conflicted) to direct the President to appoint commissions of inquiry and to direct the manner of implementation.

23. In the light of the compelling evidence that the relationship between President Zuma and Gupta family had evolved into state capture and the Public Protector's lack of capacity to investigate on the scale required, the court held that a judicial commission of inquiry was pre-eminently suited to carry out the task of investigating the allegations of state capture contained in the report. Given that the President was implicated in the allegations of state capture, his insistence that he alone select the judge to head the commission of inquiry was at odds with the legal principle of recusal.

24. The court accordingly dismissed President's application with costs de bonis propriis. In addition, the court declared the report to be binding and directed the President to appoint a commission of inquiry within thirty days to be headed by a judge selected by the Chief Justice.[11]

25. In reaching its decision, the High Court did not analyse the concept of state capture in any detail. It merely observed as follows:

> There is thus compelling prima facie evidence that the relationship between the President and the Gupta family had evolved into "state capture", underpinned by the Gupta family having power to influence the appointment of Cabinet Ministers and directors in boards of SOEs and leveraging these relationships to get preferential treatment in state contracts, access to state provided business finance and the award of business licences. . . . The issue of "state capture" is a matter of great public concern. The outcome of her investigation is that there is deeply concerning evidence of serious malfeasance and corruption, but she does not have the resources to complete the investigation. She has reasoned that a commission of inquiry is the appropriate remedial action in light of her findings and constraints.[12]

26. It added later:

> There can be no question that this aspect of the remedial action is both necessary and appropriate. Since the release of the Report, further allegations of "state capture" have become public in the form of the so-called "Guptaleaked emails". The Public Protector's remedial relief is broad enough to encompass the investigation of these issues ...[13]

27. Both the Public Protector's report and the High Court judgment upholding her remedial action are thus foundational documents which guide the Commission in discharging its mandate. Taking the broad approach to the concept of state capture in these two documents, two features can be identified as having the main focus: i) improper conduct by the President or state functionaries enabling improper involvement or undue influence by the Gupta enterprise in the appointment of cabinet ministers and directors and executives of SOEs; and ii) the fact that those improper relationships were leveraged to give undue and preferential treatment in state contracts and other benefits to the Gupta enterprise. These two features while not exhaustive of the investigative tasks identified in the Public Protector's remedial action are central to the state capture thesis. The High Court judgment pointed to serious misconduct or impropriety also on the part of other persons, functionaries and entities referred to in the report. The Public Protector's report, read with the High Court judgment, thus provide the background and context within which to construe the practical meaning to be given to the concept of state capture as it appears in the TORs of the Commission.

THE ACADEMIC LITERATURE

28. Before turning to the concept of state capture envisioned in the TORs, it may help to comment briefly on the term as used in the works of reputable academics and in evidence before the Commission. A review of the academic commentary on the concept "state capture" reveals that there is no single or standard academically or internationally accepted usage of the term. Rather, the term has been used to describe different manifestations of what has been termed "state capture" in different political contexts and at different periods in history. Hence, establishing a contemporary definition appropriate in the South African context, which accurately reflects the Commission's mandate, while being appropriately informed by the academic discourse, must look primarily at sources within the South Africa context.

29. Much of the literature describes state capture as occurring when institutions of the state can no longer function without high levels of corruption. Viewed through this lens, state capture is a situation where corruption has become so routinised as to become institutionalised, and where the shape and future trajectory of state institutions are determined by capturers through corrupt and clandestine means. State capture normally involves a distinct network structure where corrupt actors cluster around a particular part of the state, enabling it to launch privately constituted goals at the expense of the public interest.[14]

30. In the early stages of the inquiry, the Commission heard testimony from Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann. They testified that state capture is not confined to developing countries or to countries in transition (although they are particularly vulnerable). It is to be found also in countries with a traditionally robust constitutional and legal system, in which the laws have not been refreshed and amended to keep pace with developments, where grey areas have developed between the legal and the illegal, and advantage is taken of loopholes in the law, as well as of official discretion.

31. In their original work, Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann discussed and analysed the phenomenon of state capture which had come to the fore in the turbulent transition from state to private ownership in the countries of the former Soviet Union and bloc. These countries, in the midst of simultaneous economic and political transitions, were particularly vulnerable to state capture since they were in the process of both redistributing property rights and redrafting the basic rules by which their markets, polities and societies were governed. In the context of the former Soviet bloc, Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann defined state capture as shaping the formation of the basic rules of the game (i.e., laws, rules, decrees and regulations) through illicit and non-transparent private payments to public officials.[15] That definition is too narrow for purposes of this Commission.

[14] See, for example, Mihály Fazekas and István János Tóth, "From Corruption to State Capture: A New Analytical Framework with Empirical Applications from Hungary", Political Research Quarterly 69, no. 2 (1 June 2016): 320–334, https://doi.org/10.1177/1065912916639137.

32. The transition in South Africa, from apartheid and white minority rule to majority rule and democracy, was significantly different at a number of levels. Our transition was not accompanied by a comparable collapse of the existing state. Although in the dying days of the apartheid era some measures were adopted to shift public resources away from the state for the benefit of a few, the new constitutional order closed off immediate opportunities for large-scale looting of the state. The relevant context within which the Commission has to consider and evaluate the threat and onset of state capture and rampant corruption here differs, therefore, in fundamental respects from the particular context addressed in the initial work of Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann. 33. In developing the concept of state capture, Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann adapted the then prevailing conception of regulatory capture in the post-Soviet societies that they had examined. However even that narrow conception, which was limited to the formation of regulatory rules, has since undergone significant development. Regulatory capture may now be understood as the result or process by which regulation, in law or in its application, is consistently or repeatedly directed away from the public interest and toward the interests of the regulated industry, by the intent and action of the industry itself.[16] The concept of state capture itself requires a similarly broadened approach, applying of course not necessarily to whole industries but to firms, groups of firms, and individuals.

33. Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann distinguished state capture from two other types of interactions between firms and the state. These are administrative corruption and the exercise of influence. They are distinct but potentially overlapping.[17] Administrative corruption is the practice of making illicit and non-transparent payments to public officials in order to alter the implementation or application of laws, regulations and rules for the illicit gain of the firm or associated network. The proceeds of administrative corruption primarily accrue to corrupt public officials. However, in state capture, “the rents” are shared between the corrupt officials and the capturing firms. This is because state capture allows firms to build significant advantages into the rules of the game. Influence is the ability to alter the formation of laws and other rules without recourse to such payments. Influence is often considered to be within the bounds of acceptable practice, as in the case of lobbying and consultative pressure. If that influence reaches levels of shaping or controlling of the legal and regulatory environment, subordinating it to the influence, then it has become state capture.

34. The term “state capture”, as defined by Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufmann, identifies a form of corruption in which firms and public officials collude in sharing rents, as distinct from forms of extortion (bribery) in which rents are monopolised by public officials.[18] This is a helpful distinction for our purposes, and more relevant to the South African context than the rule-changing definition of state capture that was applicable to post-Soviet societies. State capture involves something more than — and qualitatively different from — particular acts of bribery and corruption, however large, occurring in relative isolation from each other with the aim of altering or evading the implementation of one or more particular laws. A systematic project of securing illicit and corrupt influence or control over the decision-making and conduct of state institutions cannot be considered as anything other than a project of state capture, even if it has not (yet) entailed efforts to shape the formation of laws, rules, and even policies. Such a project may evolve as particular, initially separate, acts of bribery and corruption, combined to form a pattern to which the description “state capture” should rightly be applied. This has quite evidently been the case in South Africa.

35. Dr Kaufmann when testifying before the Commission did not remain glued to the initial narrow definition but confirmed that the concept of state capture could legitimately be extended to include the control and allocation of public assets and public finances, including the tax system, how expenditures are allocated and so on, and it varies from country to country which one is more prevalent.[19] He was able to draw in particular on his knowledge and research relating to state capture and corruption in Latin American countries.

36. Prof Hellman and Dr Kaufman, while conceding that there is no all-embracing concept of state capture, identify key institutional reforms aimed at its notable common features. State capture is principally a product of institutional deficiencies and a systemic failure of governance, and thus more than a criminal issue. However, some legal and judiciary initiatives and reforms (including those that can be preventive and not necessarily punitive) should also feature as a component in a strategy to address state capture. Reducing the risk of state capture therefore requires focus on institutional and policy reforms. It is critical to have an in-depth diagnostic of the unique socio-political and institutional context of each affected country so as to elaborate country-relevant action programmes. To develop an action program, country-specific expertise is essential yet still general lessons of experience globally may also be useful in pointing to an array of potential reforms and initiatives that can have an impact. The range of potential reform areas is substantial. However, they generally fall into a few broad reform categories – political and economic contestability; political finance; conflict of interest; procurement; sector-specific initiatives, as well as transparency reforms generally.

37. Procurement is often a focus for state capture as public procurement can be a major source of economic rents for firms closely tied to politicians and political parties. Using state capture to shape the procurement playing field to the benefit of specific firms is perhaps one of the most common forms of state capture, as was certainly the case in South Africa. As a result, procurement reform is generally an important starting point in the effort to combat state capture.

38. As experience of state capture and the evidence before the Commission has shown, state-owned enterprises are used to cement the ties between politicians and private actors. They are often critical transmission mechanisms through which state capture occurs, and though potential vehicles for fostering the state's interests, powerful state-owned firms can use their close relationships to state actors to shape laws, policies and regulations in their own interest. Moreover, the murky boundaries between ownership and control rights in state-owned enterprises can give leeway to managers to manipulate their ties to the state for their own interests. As a result, to prevent state capture emanating from state-owned enterprises, there needs to be a clear separation of the management of state-owned companies and politics, as well as the empowerment of professional, independent boards, which should also be selected through a meritocratic process, emphasizing technical expertise over political patronage. Further, ensuring transparency and oversight by disclosing revenues, costs, revenue flow between SOEs and the state, as well as disclosing data on production, plans, trading activities as well as quasi-fiscal activities, are essential preventive mechanisms. Independent financial audits and an effective level of legislative oversight are also very important.

39. At root, state capture is a manifestation of a conflict of interest. Private individuals or firms seek to engage politicians and public sector actors through the provision of private benefits to shape public decisions in their interests. As a result, robust legislation to regulate conflicts of interest and the interaction between public officials and private actors is critical to prevent state capture.

40. There is also a growing body of academic literature on state capture and corruption in South Africa[20] that offers various elaborations of the meaning of state capture. For example, party state capture is said to occur when the state is used as an instrument to deal with issues that have typically remained within the confines of political party structures. A ruling party may hollow out state institutions, substituting the party machinery for the state. The power of the state apparatus is then used to deal with intra-party political and administrative issues.[21] Corporate state capture occurs when public power is exercised in the interests of particular corporate formations.[22] The concept of elite capture focuses on corruption that occurs around initiatives that are meant to promote economic or infrastructural development; elites capture the resources that have been mobilised for development.[23] It can be observed in the siphoning off of value towards an elite grouping with ties to the upper reaches of the state, such as rural elites (the 'chieftain' class) embezzling funds from a rural economic development project. Public goods and their value in this scenario are effectively extracted by elites for their own narrow benefit.[24]

41. Professor Tom Lodge describes state capture as a situation in which control or power passes from officials to non-state corporate interests, or where officials themselves (including elected politicians) become corporate, primarily individually- and entrepreneurially-oriented actors. He further argues that it may not be necessary to actually capture the regulation process itself in order to gain control of an institution. Regulatory capture may be superfluous in environments in which regulations or laws are under-developed. In such cases captors might focus on a single state department to secure decisive influence over its procurements. Thus, state capture implies that the state has become unable to function in such a way as to serve broad social interests or to make decisions that might achieve long-term developmental goals. It is unable to do these things because it has become harnessed to a very particular and especially narrow set of private interests. This is more in line with what has happened in South Africa.

ENGAGEMENT WITH STATE CAPTURE IN THE COMMISSION

42. References to state capture and assertions as to its true meaning in the South African context appear in the evidence of a number of witnesses who testified before the Commission.

43. Mr Gordhan, current Minister of Public Enterprises and with long prior ministerial and public service experience, testified that state capture "became a sophisticated scheme or racket" which involved: advancing false narratives; enlisting the assistance of facilitators such as consulting and legal firms to entrench the project; marginalising public servants who possessed integrity and honesty; and fostering an enabling environment of impunity for crime and corruption. Mr Gordhan explained that his own understanding of state capture evolved over time as he became more aware of the connections between events that at the time did not seem as significant as they did in hindsight. In his view, these events included repeated and irrational changes to the cabinet, SOE boards and the leadership of key institutions and organs of state for the purposes of plundering resources at those institutions without the risk of prosecution.

44. Mr Gordhan cited analysis from the research report of the State Capacity Research Project titled The Betrayal of the Promise: How South Africa is being Stolen[25] and the book The Shadow State.[26] He found these works to be instructive in applying the concept of state capture to the South African context and the "politics of capture" in terms of which a schema of brokers, mobility controllers, elites and dealers, all perform various functions towards the maintenance of networks of patronage. The following critical account of state capture appears in the State Capacity Research Project's Betrayal of the Promise report:

> Corruption tends to be an individual action that occurs in exceptional cases, facilitated by a loose network of corrupt players. It is somewhat informally organised, fragmented and opportunistic. State capture is systemic and well-organised by people with established relations. It involves repeated transactions, often on an increasing scale. The focus is not on small-scale looting, but on accessing and redirecting rents away from their intended targets into private hands. To succeed, this needs high-level political protection, including from law enforcement agencies, intense loyalty and a climate of fear; and competitors need to be eliminated. The aim is not to bypass rules to get away with corrupt behaviour. That is, the term corruption obscures the politics that frequently informs these processes, treating it as a moral or cultural pathology. Yet, corruption, as is often the case in South Africa, is frequently the result of a political conviction that > the formal 'rules of the game' are rigged against specific constituencies and that it is therefore legitimate to break them. The aim of state capture is to change the formal and informal rules of the game, legitimise them and select the players allowed to play.[27]

45. The current Transnet board chairperson and former PRASA board chairperson, Mr Popo Molefe, provided his own analysis of the way that the state capture project manifested in the case of Transnet as follows: key individuals with a common purpose and interests were placed in key executive roles to pursue the rapid accumulation of wealth through companies with links to influential businesses. This was achieved through the flouting of constitutional provisions, the weakening of governance structures and processes in the company, and the dismissal of skilled individuals and their replacement with people who brought a "veneer of professionalism" but who ultimately lacked ethical and moral leadership, all culminating in the corrupt awarding of major contracts to connected entities.

46. Former Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Mcebisi Jonas, postulated that state capture in South Africa is the result of the failure of South Africa's "developmental framework". In his testimony, Mr Jonas explained his belief that South Africa's current economic developmental framework rests on three fundamental pillars. These are (1) the protection of the established elite through property rights protections and other measures; (2) the promotion of the new elite through policies such as Black Economic Empowerment ("BEE"); and (3) the provision of services to the under-classes and the working-class. He asserted that this is effectively a patronage system, where resources to all three layers should be dispensed successfully. However, he continued:

> That model depends effectively on three things to work. One, it depends on a strong state and an efficient state. It is a state that is able to manage resources very well and dispense them more efficiently. But secondly, it also depends on growth because ... without growth then you would not be able to do those things. The third is revenue, consistent revenue that you have. Now what ... I think is [that in] many ways what has come to happen over particularly over the last 10 years has been that model unravelling. It unravels because your state is weak and sometimes it is consciously weakened.

47. Mr Jonas went on to explain that the unravelling of this system created tensions across the three layers that are usually mutually supported, and this became the basis of rampant corruption and the fertile ground upon which state capture could occur. He stressed that the easiest vehicle through which the state can be captured is the capture of the ruling party, where the party becomes an instrument used for the project of financial accumulation that state capture is concerned with animating.

48. In his evidence to the Commission, President Cyril Ramaphosa provided his understanding of state capture, which was informed to a large extent by the work of Prof Hellman et al. He sought to distinguish influence from state capture. He asserted, in reference to the work of Prof Lodge:

> The existence of a multiplicity of interest groups within any given political environment is neither original nor in itself problematic. State capture occurs when one of these interests dominates public power for their own ends. This results in the undermining of the democratic process and the national interest.

49. Mr Ramaphosa stressed the dynamics of a modern democratic society that consists of varying interests. A state functioning within a democratic system must seek to accommodate divergent interests. This must be reflected in the broader national interest, through the policies and practices of an economic developmental framework. State capture occurs when the national interest is undermined by the interests of a small and confined set of actors. State capture is therefore fundamentally connected to the undermining of the democratic system.

50. In summary, President Ramaphosa's understanding is that state capture involves: 1. one of many forms of corruption; 2. an organised, systemic process or project; 3. a network of actors within and outside the state, acting in concert; 4. the redirection of public resources away from the public good and towards private financial gain; 5. the shaping of the basic rules of the game (laws, rules, regulations, policy-making processes etc.) of government; 6. the appointment of agents of state capture to governance structures, so they are positioned to disperse government benefits to select groups; 7. the use of ideological arguments in order to question legitimate institutions and conceal state capture under the guise of transformation; 8. the deliberate weakening and exploitation of law enforcement agencies;[28] 9. entrenchment in the state; 10. the distribution of benefits to small vested interests at the expense of the country, and her citizens, as a whole; and 11. an assault on the democratic process undermining the democratic constitutional order.

51. In a constitutionally enshrined democratic order, private citizens or formations are necessarily enabled to influence the political process. In fact, active efforts to do so are fundamental to any functioning democracy. However, there are checks and balances built into the system to ensure that this influence does not subsume the democratically elected government and the institutions of the state that practically administer actions impacting on citizens. The crucial point about state capture is the combination of corrupt and unlawful actions that subvert the entire democratic political system.

52. President Ramaphosa believed that a definition of state capture penned by Ms Catrina Godinho and Ms Lauren Hermanus, both South African-based academics who have examined state capture with specific reference to the conditions prevalent in South Africa was particularly useful for the Commission's purposes. They submit that state capture ought to be understood as:

> A political-economic project whereby public and private actors collude in establishing clandestine networks that cluster around state institutions in order to accumulate unchecked power, subverting the constitutional state and social contract by operating outside of the realm of public accountability.[29]

53. Against the backdrop of the preceding analysis, consideration can now be given to the TORs of the Commission.

THE COMMISSION'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

54. In compliance with the order of the Gauteng High Court, and by Proclamation No.3 of 23 January 2018, former President Zuma appointed this Commission. The Proclamation sets out the TORs in relevant part as follows:

> A Judicial Commission of Inquiry ("the Commission ") is hereby appointed in terms of Section 84(2)(f) of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996. The Commission is appointed to investigate matters of public and national interest concerning allegations of state capture, corruption, and fraud.
> 1. The Commission shall inquire into, make findings, report on and make recommendations concerning the following, guided by the Public Protector's state of capture report, the Constitution, relevant legislation, policies, and guidelines, as well as the order of the North Gauteng High Court of 14 December 2017 under case number 91139/2016:
> 1.1 Whether, and to what extent and by whom attempts were made through any form of inducement or for any gain of whatsoever nature to influence members of the National Executive (including Deputy Ministers), office bearers and /or functionaries employed by or office bearers of any state institution or organ of state or directors of the boards of SOEs. In particular, the commission must investigate the veracity of allegations that former Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Mcebisi Jonas and Ms Mentor were offered Cabinet positions by the Gupta family.
> 1.2. Whether the President had any role in the alleged offers of Cabinet positions to Mr Mcebisi Jonas and Ms Mentor by the Gupta family the commission must investigate the veracity of allegations that former Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Mcebisi Jonas and Ms Mentor were offered Cabinet positions by the Gupta family.

1.3. Whether the appointment of any member of the National Executive, functionary and /or office bearer was disclosed to the Gupta family or any other unauthorised person before such appointments were formally made and /or announced, and if so,

1.4. Whether the President or any member of the present or previous members of his National Executive (including Deputy Ministers) or public official or employee of any state-owned entities (SOEs) breached or violated the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs or any organ of state to benefit the Gupta family or any other family, individual or corporate entity doing business with government or

1.5. The nature and extent of corruption, if any, in the awarding of contracts, tenders to companies, business entities or organizations by public entities listed under Schedule 2 of the Public Finance Management Act No. 1 of 1999 as amended.

1.6. Whether there were any irregularities, undue enrichment, corruption and undue influence in the awarding of contracts, mining licenses, government advertising in the New Age Newspaper and any other governmental services in the business dealings of the Gupta family with government departments and SOEs.

1.7. Whether any member of the National Executive and including Deputy Ministers, unlawfully or corruptly or improperly intervened in the matter of the closing of banking facilities for Gupta owned companies.

1.8. Whether any advisers in the Ministry of Finance were appointed without proper procedures. In particular, and as alleged in the complaint to the Public Protector, whether two senior advisers who were appointed by Minister Des Van Rooyen to the National Treasury were so appointed without following proper procedures.

1.9. The nature and extent of corruption, if any, in the awarding of contracts and tenders to companies, business entities or organizations by Government Departments, agencies and entities. In particular, whether any member of the National Executive (including the President), public official, functionary of any organ of state influenced the awarding of tenders to benefit themselves, their families or entities in which they held a personal interest ...

55. Thus, paragraph 1 of the TORs sets out in nine sub-paragraphs particular topics of state capture that require investigation. The specific matters stipulated for investigation by the Commission provide particular content to the more generic term of state capture. Since it is merely invoked in the introductory paragraph of the TORs, but not in any particular TOR, state capture is as an overarching animating principle in relation to the subjects of investigation in the particular TORs. Reading paragraph 1 of the TORs in context, it is clear that, while the nine particular topics of investigation are key ingredients in establishing whether or not state capture had occurred, they do not necessarily exhaust that inquiry. State capture is a subject in its own right that the Commission is concerned with and it is not simply subsumed under the concept of corruption, or particular instances of that. The Commission's mandate is not to undertake a free-floating investigation into state capture of every imaginable kind, but rather to apply the concept in a focused manner when evaluating evidence on the particular subject-matter of the TORs.

56. Some of the TORs are narrow and specific but others very wide in scope. Findings and recommendations by the Commission are required and have been made in relation to all of them, which are set out in the different volumes of the Commission's report and are dealt with in the summation contained in this volume.

57. TORS 1.1, 1.2 and 1.3 narrowly focus on attempts to unduly influence politicians and public functionaries and directors of the boards of SOEs though the offer of inducements, including the offer of cabinet positions to two individuals, Mr Mcebisi Jonas and Ms Mentor, by the Gupta enterprise and on whether former President Zuma played any role in that regard; and in particular whether the appointment of any cabinet member or key public functionary was disclosed to the Gupta family or any other unauthorised person before such appointments were formally made and announced. TOR

1.8 continues with the theme of improper appointments by requiring investigation of whether any advisers in the Ministry of Finance were appointed without proper procedures - in particular, two senior advisers appointed by Minister Des Van Rooyen.

58. TORs 1.4 and 1.6 are also narrowly focussed on specific activities and events concerning the Gupta enterprise. The Commission is required to determine whether the former President, members of his executive or public functionaries breached or violated the law by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs or any organ of state to benefit the Gupta family or any other family, individual or corporate entity doing business with government and whether there were any irregularities, undue enrichment, corruption and undue influence in the awarding of contracts, mining licenses, government advertising in the New Age Newspaper and any other governmental services in the business dealings of the Gupta family with government departments and SOEs. TOR 1.7 requires special investigation of whether any cabinet member of deputy minister unlawfully or corruptly or improperly intervened in the matter of the closing of banking facilities for the Gupta enterprise.

59. TORs 1.5 and 1.9 are general and extensive in their ambit. They focus explicitly on corruption associated with procurement (the awarding of contracts and tenders to all service providers) in SOEs (public entities) and by government departments, agencies and entities. The public entities listed under Schedule 2 of the PFMA include those that have been the subject of detailed investigation in other volumes of this report, including: SAA; Transnet; Eskom; Denel; Alexkor and PRASA.

60. The TORs are thus concerned predominantly with the practices of executive members of the state, and the nature of their relationships with private individuals, and specifically the Gupta enterprise.

The Commission's definition of state capture

61. The Commission's investigation into state capture in South Africa in terms of the TORs is therefore concentrated on irregular public appointments, improper conduct by the national executive and public functionaries, the concerted efforts and activities of the Gupta enterprise in gaining control of governance and procurement in SOEs and government agencies and general corruption (including fraud, money laundering, racketeering and various other illegal activities) in public entities and government at all levels.

62. The element of corruption (in a wide sense) in procurement and tendering, as the centrepiece of state capture, accordingly demands examination of the conduct of the role players in terms of the constitutional requirement of an accountable public sector and the legal framework established to deal with corruption, fraud, money laundering and racketeering.

63. In addition to the constitutional principles of an accountable public sector, section 217(1) of the Constitution requires that, when an organ of state contracts for goods or services, it must do so in accordance with a tendering system that is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective. The PFMA gives some effect to these broad principles. Section 51(1)(a)(iii) of the PFMA obliges the board of a public entity to ensure that the public entity concerned has and maintains an appropriate procurement and provisioning system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective. Section 50 and section 51 of the PFMA require the boards of public entities to exercise the duty of utmost care to ensure reasonable protection of the assets of the public entity and to act with fidelity, honesty, integrity and in the entity's best interests in managing its financial affairs.

64. Corruption is a statutory offence in South Africa in terms of the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 (PRECCA). Anybody who accepts any gratification from anybody else, or gives any gratification to anybody else, in order to influence the receiver to conduct himself in a way which amounts to the unlawful exercise of any duties, commits corruption. Gratification is broadly defined in PRECCA and includes essentially any valuable consideration. The gratification must be accepted or given as an inducement to act in a certain manner.

65. Section 4 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act 121 of 1998 (POCA) outlaws the crime of money laundering. It prohibits any person from entering into any agreement, engaging in any arrangement or transaction,[30] or performing any other act,[31] with anyone, in connection with property that is or forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities (being any property or any service, advantage, benefit or reward which was derived, received or retained in connection with or as a result of any unlawful activity). The offence is committed if that person knows or ought reasonably to have known that the property constitutes the proceeds of unlawful activities. In addition, the agreement, arrangement or other act must have or be likely to have the effect of concealing or disguising the nature, source, location, disposition or movement of the property or the ownership of or interests in relation to it.[32] Section 5 of POCA creates the offence of assisting another to benefit from the proceeds of unlawful activities and section 6 of POCA prohibits any person from acquiring, using or possessing property that is or forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities of another person.

66. Many instances of wrongdoing in public procurements in the period under review may constitute planned offences as part of a pattern of racketeering activity conducted by a racketeering enterprise (comprising a group of individuals and companies associated in fact) aligned with the Gupta family and its associated companies. In terms of POCA, a pattern of racketeering activity comprises two planned, ongoing, continuous or repeated offences contemplated in Schedule 1 of POCA including: 1. corruption; 2. the common law offences of extortion, theft, fraud, forgery and uttering; 3. offences related to exchange control; and 4. money laundering.

67. In the final analysis much of the evidence presented to the Commission indicates that state capture in the South African context evolved as a project by which a relatively small group of actors, together with their network of collaborators inside and outside of the state, conspired systematically (criminally and in defiance of the Constitution) to redirect resources from the state for their own gain. This was facilitated by a deliberate effort to exploit or weaken key state institutions and public entities, but also including law enforcement institutions and the intelligence services. As just intimated, to a large extent this occurred through strategic appointments and dismissals at public entities and a reorganisation of procurement processes. The process involved the undermining of oversight mechanisms, and the manipulation of the public narrative in favour of those who sought to capture the state. Moreover, the subversion of the democratic process which the process of state capture entailed was not simply about extracting resources but was further geared towards securing future power and consequently shaping and gaining control of the political order (or significant parts of that order) in a manner that was necessarily opaque and intrinsically unconstitutional.

68. A number of them will normally be present in the case of state capture: 1. the allocation and distribution of state power and resources, directed not for the public good but for private and corrupt advantage; 2. a network of persons outside and inside government acting illegally and unethically in furtherance of state capture; 3. improper influence over appointments and removals; 4. the manipulation of the rules and procedures of decision-making in government in order to facilitate corrupt advantage; 5. a deliberate effort to undermine or render ineffectual oversight bodies and to exploit regulatory weaknesses so as to avoid accountability for wrongdoing; 6. a deliberate effort to subvert and weaken law enforcement and intelligence agencies at the commanding levels so as to shield and sustain illicit activities, avoid accountability and to disempower opponents; 7. support and acquiescence by powerful actors in the political sphere, including members of the ruling party; 8. the assistance of professional service providers in the private sphere, such advisers, auditors, legal and consulting firms, in masking the corrupt nature of the project and protecting and even supporting illicit gains; and 9. the use of disinformation and propaganda to manipulate the public discourse, in order to divert attention away from their wrongdoing and discredit opponents.

69. The evidence discussed in the chapters of this summation, and in other volumes of this report, establishes that all these elements were present in the extensive scheme of corruption and wrongdoing that afflicted public entities, government departments and other state agencies in South Africa during the period under review, mostly, but not exclusively, at the instance of the Gupta enterprise. State capture as contemplated in the TORs occurred in the public sector in South Africa on an extensive scale. I do not propose to deal with all the state-owned entities. It will be enough to refer to all the state-owned entities. In my view a reading of the evidence of what happened at Eskom, Denel, SARS reveals quite clearly that state capture did take place in those entities. In Eskom the Guptas used President Zuma to remove certain executives and have their own associates appointed and thereafter carried out their scheme. In Transnet the Guptas used President Zuma to remove a Minister who would not have agreed to work with them and they got President Zuma to appoint their friend Minister Gigaba who then appointed their friend Brian Molefe. They later got Mr Siyabonga Gama to succeed Mr Brian Molefe when the latter was deployed to Eskom. What happened at Transnet under Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Gama is dealt with in Part II of this Commission's Report. At Denel the Guptas also pushed out Mr Riaz Saloojee and two others so that they could have Mr Ntshepe appointed CEO as Mr Ntshepe was prepared to work with them. In SARS it is also clear that Bain captured the Head of State, President Zuma, as well as the Commissioner of SARS, Mr Tom Moyane. BOSASA captured President Zuma and Commissioner of Correctional Services Mr Mti as well as other officials. So, there can be no double that state capture happened in South Africa. A discussion of the evidence of state capture in Transnet, BOSASA and SARS is discussed below.

STATE CAPTURE: TRANSNET

70. State capture at Transnet involved a systematic scheme of securing illicit and corrupt influence or control over decision-making. Collusion between individuals inside and outside of Transnet, as part of a co-ordinated effort to access and re-direct funds and benefits in substantial procurements, resulted in the strategic positioning of particular individuals in positions of power. A small group of senior executives and directors were positioned to collude in the award of key contracts. The evidence further shows that key employees at an operational level in Transnet were disempowered or marginalised from participation in important procurement decisions which affected their work.

71. The extensive scheme of wrongdoing that afflicted Transnet between 2009 and 2018 was conducted by an enterprise (comprising a group of individuals and companies associated in fact) aligned with the Gupta family and its associated companies. The relationship of the events at Transnet to one another point to the existence of a common objective that establishes a pattern. The evidence therefore establishes convincingly that state capture occurred at Transnet in the period between 2009 and 2018.

72. The central elements of state capture at Transnet comprised: i) the appointment of Gupta associates to key positions within Transnet; ii) the kickback agreements between CNR/CSR/CRRC and Mr Essa's companies; iii) the inclusion of Gupta linked companies as supplier development partners (SDPs) on Transnet contracts; iv) the money laundering arrangements between Regiments and the companies associated with Mr Essa and Mr Moodley; and v) the payment of cash bribes to officials and employees associated with Transnet presumably for their role in facilitating transactions that favoured the Gupta enterprise.

73. State capture at Transnet began after the resignation of Ms Ramos as GCEO in 2009. Thereafter, President Zuma thwarted the efforts of Ms Hogan to appoint a GCEO for a period of 18 months because he preferred Mr Gama, the then CEO of TFR who was facing serious charges of misconduct, until he replaced her in November 2010 as Minister of Public Enterprises with Mr Gigaba, an admitted associate of the Gupta enterprise who had regular and frequent contact with Gupta family members.

74. Mr Gigaba immediately reconstituted the board of Transnet with his preferred appointees and initiated the process that led to the appointment of Mr Molefe as GCEO. There is clear and convincing evidence that Mr Molefe was an associate of the Guptas and a regular visitor to the Gupta Saxonwold compound and that the Gupta's had some involvement in his appointment as GCEO at Transnet and later at Eskom. Mr Molefe's appointment was accurately predicted by the Gupta owned newspaper, the New Age, and he was recommended for appointment by Mr Sharma who Mr Gigaba attempted unsuccessfully to have appointed as chairman of the Transnet board. Mr Sharma was a business associate of Mr Essa, a key associate of the Gupta enterprise. Around about the same time, Mr

Gigaba appointed Mr Essa as a director of BBI (an SOE in the IT sector), which played some role in attempting to secure IT contracts from Transnet for the benefit of the Gupta enterprise.

75. Thus, Mr Gigaba (a friend of the Guptas) was instrumental in the appointment of Mr Molefe (another friend of the Guptas), with his appointment predicted in the Gupta owned newspaper, the New Age, and initiated by Mr Sharma (another Gupta associate).

76. Mr Sharma went on to serve as the chairperson of BADC, which was established in February 2011 as a subcommittee of the board. Prior to the establishment of the BADC in February 2011, the board of Transnet was not directly involved in procurement. Many of the procurement transactions which favoured the Gupta enterprise after 2011 arose in the context of the Market Demand Strategy (the MDS) which was developed by Mr Molefe and Mr Singh (then the acting GCFO) and approved by the BADC (chaired by Mr Sharma under its increased authority) in 2011.

77. One week after Mr Molefe was appointed, Mr Gama, who had been dismissed for serious irregularities in 2010, was reinstated as CEO of TFR on 23 February 2011, in terms of a wholly indefensible settlement agreement that included a payment of R17 million to Mr Gama for benefits and legal costs. Mr Gama's early efforts to be appointed as GCEO in 2009 (despite the allegations of impropriety against him and the board of Transnet considering him unsuitable for the position) was vocally and publicly supported by members of President Zuma's cabinet, Mr Gwede Mantashe (then the Secretary-General of the ANC), other high-profile persons associated with the ANC, and presumably by the deployment committee of the ANC. After his reinstatement, Mr Gama was centrally involved in key transactions that favoured the Gupta enterprise. The evidence on record gives rise to reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Gama was reinstated as a consequence of an instruction or direction by President Zuma.

78. It is undisputed that from July 2011 Mr Molefe intensified his contact with the Gupta family, frequently visited the Gupta compound in Saxonwold and was in regular contact with Mr Ajay Gupta in particular. Mr Molefe's driver testified that in the period between July 2011 and August 2014, he transported Mr Molefe to the Gupta compound and reasonably suspected that Mr Molefe received substantial cash payments during those visits. The testimony of the drivers of Mr Gama, Mr Gigaba, Mr Singh and Mr Pita (who replaced Mr Singh as the GCFO) gives rise to reasonable grounds to believe (or suspect in the case of Mr Pita) that they too received cash payments from the Gupta enterprise during the period under consideration.

79. The first transactions tainted by corruption and advancing the interests of the Gupta enterprise concerned the procurement of cranes from ZPMC and Liebherr which were procured in 2011-2014 by corrupt payments to the Gupta enterprise.

80. The procurement of 95 electric locomotives from CSR, shortly after the appointment of Mr Molefe as GCEO and the reinstatement of Mr Gama as CEO of TFR, was the first significant locomotive transaction tainted by corruption. The board approved the acquisition of 95 electric locomotives at its meeting of 31 August 2011. The transaction was approved by Mr Gigaba on 21 December 2011 at an ETC of R2.7 billion.

81. The evidence in relation to the procurement of the 95 locomotives founds reasonable grounds to believe that it was attended by irregularities including: 1. a prior decision by Mr Molefe to favour CSR as a bidder; 2. inappropriate communication with CSR prior to the closing of the bid; 3. communication between CSR and the Gupta enterprise during the bidding process; 4. the failure to disqualify the bid by CSR on the grounds of it being non-responsive by not furnishing returnable documents; 5. the improper changing of the evaluation criteria to favour CSR; 6. the failure to obtain the authorisation of the Minister for a cost overrun of R700 million; and 7. the non-recovery of late delivery penalties.

82. All these irregularities favoured CSR and were against the best interests of Transnet and preceded a corrupt payment of USD 16.7 million (made in terms of an agency agreement concluded in relation to the "95 project" in April 2012) by CSR (Hong Kong) to Regiments Asia (Pty) Ltd (a company associated with Mr Essa) and the subsequent laundering of these unlawful proceeds onto companies forming part of the Gupta enterprise.

83. During 2011, work had commenced on the business case of the 1064 locomotives transaction. This transaction was tainted by various irregularities which mostly advanced the interests of the Gupta enterprise.

84. In May 2012, Mr Molefe approved the confinement to the McKinsey consortium of the contract for advisory services related to the acquisition of the 1064 locomotives aimed at strengthening the business case by validating the market demand, reviewing funding options and mitigation of various risks. The contract was only signed in August 2014, but McKinsey commenced work in 2012 in terms of a LOI dated 6 December 2012. On 30 November 2013 the LOI expired with the consequence that although work continued to be performed by the McKinsey consortium there was no valid agreement governing its services to Transnet from that date. Moreover, the contract should never have been awarded to McKinsey as its bid was non-responsive on account of it refusing to furnish its financial statements.

85. The RFPs for the acquisition of the 1064 locomotives was issued in July 2012. Mr Singh (a Gupta associate) was appointed as GCFO in July 2012 and Mr Sharma (another Gupta associate) was appointed chairperson of the BADC in August 2012. The BADC's authority was increased to R2 billion at the same time. The board in August 2012 also approved the use of a loan facility from the China Development Bank ("the CDB") to fund the 1064 acquisition.

86. In October 2012, McKinsey agreed to appoint Regiments as its SDP subject to Regiments agreeing to share with Mr Essa (or one of his companies) 30% (later increased to 50%) and Mr Moodley (or one of his companies) 5% of all income received from Transnet. Neither Mr Essa nor Mr Moodley (or any of their companies) rendered any services of any kind to McKinsey or Transnet beyond the introduction of Regiments to McKinsey.

87. In December 2012, Mr Essa facilitated a meeting between Mr Singh and Mr Pillay of Regiments, after which Regiments replaced Letsema in the McKinsey consortium in terms of the LOI. Regiments thus became a member of the consortium without having tendered as part of it.

88. The board approved the business case for the 1064 locomotive acquisition on 25 April 2013. The closing date for the bids was 30 April 2013 and the evaluation commenced in May 2013. During March 2013 to May 2013, prior to the submission of the bids for the 1064 locomotive procurement, Transnet engaged in direct negotiations with CSR and the CDB with a view to concluding a tripartite agreement, the original draft of which explicitly provided for cooperation on the procurement of the locomotives. This is again an indication that the senior executives of Transnet were favourably disposed to CSR and CNR. The final version of the agreement merely provided for Transnet and the CDB to identify opportunities for CDB to participate in funding. Even then, given the relationship between the CDB and CSR, the perception that Transnet was favourably disposed to the Chinese OEMs is inescapable. Mr Gigaba, the Minister of Public Enterprises, approved the business case for the 1064 locomotive procurement in August 2013.

89. The modus operandi of the Gupta enterprise was revealed in another transaction involving Transnet at this time. During July and August 2013, Mr Singh and Mr Essa engaged with Hatch, a bidder for work on Transnet's Manganese Expansion Project (the MEP) in an attempt to strong arm it into agreeing to their preferred companies, DEC and PMA, being included as SDPs in the successful consortium that bid for the tender. The evidence in relation to these incidents provides reasonable grounds to suspect corruption in that Mr Essa and Mr Singh attempted to make the award of the tender conditional on Hatch's appointment of their preferred SDPs, which were to be paid an inflated fee of R80 million (later to be increased to R350 million) that would be laundered onto the Gupta enterprise. Hatch resisted these efforts to involve it in the corrupt scheme.

90. Besides the evident corruption in relation to the MEP tender, the proven association of Mr Singh and Mr Essa with the Gupta enterprise at this time, the manipulation of the supplier development component in the transaction by Mr Singh, Mr Essa's disclosure at a meeting with Hatch of the modus operandi of inflating the price of Transnet tenders for illegal purposes and a claim by him that he and his associates would have influence in the subsequent appointment of Mr Molefe as CEO of Eskom, all point to state capture and a pattern of racketeering activity involving the Gupta enterprise.

91. In late 2013 Mr Singh agreed to an increased scope of work for Regiments on the financial services contract in relation to the 1064 locomotive procurement by replacing Nedbank with Regiments in the McKinsey consortium. This increased the scope of work of Regiments on the contract to 30% and thus the fee paid to it, 55% of which was intended to be laundered onto the Gupta enterprise. Around the same time, Regiments presented the so-called "R5 billion proposal" proposing a R5 billion loan facility to be funded by Nedbank through an "in-between structure" which had the potential to cause Transnet a R750 million loss and from which only Regiments would have benefitted in fees. Although the proposal was not implemented, it again evidences a pattern of conduct consistent with the scheme of state capture.

92. In October 2013, the board approved the business case for the second significant locomotive transaction, being the procurement of 100 additional locomotives for use on the coal export line aimed also at the release of older locomotives from the coal export line for use in general freight business. The original intention was to acquire the locomotives by confinement on grounds of urgency and standardization from Mitsui which had supplied similar locomotives in the recent past. The evidence reveals that Mr Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Pita and Mr Sharma all played a role in altering the confinement memorandum to award the contract to CSR which undermined the rationale of urgency and standardization as CSR had not produced similar locomotives.

93. The alleged wrongdoing in relation to the procurement of the 100 locomotives during the course of 2014 included: 1. management misled the BADC and the board in early 2014 by misstating the rationale by confinement and not disclosing the concerns of the technical staff about CSR's inability to deliver the 100 locomotives in accordance with the required specifications; 2. non-compliance with the urgent delivery requirement; 3. non-compliance with the local content requirement; 4. the payment of excessive advance payments (60%) prior to the delivery of any locomotives; 5. the payment of the advance payments without CSR furnishing the requisite security (advance payment guarantee); 6. the unjustifiable increase in the price of the procurement by R740 million without prior authorization of the board; and vii) the unjustifiable inflation of the base price of the locomotives and the reliance on incorrect assumptions in relation to cost factors and escalations. CSR (or CRRC) paid a kickback of R925 million on this contract to one of Mr Essa's companies, JJ Trading FZE.

94. The most significant locomotive transaction was the procurement of the 1064 locomotives at a cost of R54.5 billion. As mentioned, the board approved the business case for the 1064 locomotives on 25 April 2013. The evaluation process and best and final offer (BAFO) stage of the procurement process for the 1064 locomotives endured from May 2013 to January 2014. On 24 January 2014, the BADC and the board resolved to split the procurement into four contracts and appointed four OEMs as preferred bidders. Post tender negotiations took place in February 2014 and the locomotive supply agreements (the LSAs) were concluded on 17 March 2014.

95. While the post tender negotiations in relation to the 1064 procurement were under way, on 5 February 2014, McKinsey purported to cede its rights under the contract for the provision of advisory services to Regiments and informed Transnet that all the work related to the mandate had in fact been performed by Regiments – all of which was for the benefit of the Gupta enterprise, through the money laundering fee share agreement with Mr Essa and Mr Moodley's companies.

96. During the evaluation process, CSR's bid was favoured through the irregular adjustment of its price to account for its use of Transnet Engineering ("TE") as a subcontractor and CNR was favoured by the exclusion of key costs from its BAFO that normally would have been included. There are thus reasonable grounds to believe that but for these irregular adjustments, CSR and CNR would not have succeeded as bidders.

97. During the post tender negotiations in relation to the 1064 locomotives, the price of the procurement increased substantially to the detriment of Transnet's interests, partly as a result of an improper agreement by Mr Singh and Mr Jiyane (overriding Mr Laher) to include batch pricing at a cost of R2.7 billion in the agreed price. In addition, the negotiations team, led by Mr Singh and Mr Wood of Regiments, imprudently agreed to excessive advance payments particularly to favour CSR and CNR which negatively impacted Transnet's cash flow going forward. Furthermore, the negotiations team agreed to terms of the contract contrary to the local content requirement of the RFPs that should have disqualified the bidders at that stage.

98. As stated, the LSAs were concluded on 17 March 2014 at an increased price of R54.5 billion, being R15.9 billion more than the ETC stipulated in the business case. On 28 May 2014, the board accepted the recommendation of Mr Molefe and Mr Singh to increase the ETC from R38.6 billion to R54.5 billion on the premise that the original ETC stipulated in the business case had excluded forex and escalation costs. This was a false premise, following a misrepresentation by Mr Molefe and Mr Singh in a memorandum dated 18 April 2013, in that the ETC had in fact included forex and escalation costs in an amount of R5.9 billion. Mr Singh repeated the misrepresentation in correspondence to Mr Gigaba the Minister of Public Enterprises on 31 March 2014. Mr Singh and Mr Molefe furthermore failed to obtain the approval and authorization from the Minister for the price increase in contravention of section 54 of the PFMA with the result that the legality of the LSA is brought into question.

99. Mr Molefe and Mr Singh, in their memorandum to the board dated 23 May 2014 justifying the price increase of the procurement of the 1064 locomotives, also misrepresented the profitability of the procurement. The business case provided for a positive net present value (NPV) of R2.7 billion based on the original ETC using a hurdle rate of 18.56%. The increase in price to R54.5 billion produced a negative NPV. Mr Molefe and Mr Singh however informed the board that the NPV remained positive using a changed hurdle rate of 15.2%. Mr Singh, in his capacity as GCFO, had changed the rate from 18.56% to 16.24% on 20 May 2014, but rather than use that reduced rate, he used an even lesser rate of 15.2% in his submission to the board. There are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Singh used this lower hurdle rate to ensure a positive NPV, in the context of the 41% increase in the price of the procurement, in order to persuade the board that the NPV remained positive when in fact there were doubts about the profitability of the project overall.

100. The actuarial evidence presented to the Commission provides a reasonable basis to conclude that the increase in the ETC by R15.9 billion included amounts totalling R9.124 billion that were unjustifiable expenditure. The unjustifiable amounts related to inflated provision for backward and forward forex and escalation costs, batch pricing and an excessive provision for contingencies. The evidence further indicates that Regiments, led by Mr Wood, played a key role in finalising and agreeing the unjustifiable forex and escalation costs during the post tender negotiations. The memorandum of 23 May 2014 submitted by Mr Molefe to the board justifying the increase specifically stated that the escalations had been verified by Regiments “using their intellectual property methodology and techniques”.

101. CSR paid a R3.81 billion kickback in respect of the 359 electric locomotives awarded to it as part of the 1064 locomotive transaction (of which 85% was laundered further onto companies associated with the Gupta enterprise). It is also reasonable to conclude that the unjustifiable expenditure of R9.124 billion which increased the price paid to CSR probably facilitated the ability of CSR to make the kickback payment. The kickback in this instance was made in terms of a BDSA concluded in May 2015 by Mr Essa acting on behalf of Tequesta and CSR (Hong Kong) and in terms of an earlier agreement between CSR Zhuzhou Electric Locomotive Co Ltd and JJ Trading FZE.

102. A kickback of R2.088 billion was paid by CNR to Mr Essa’s company Tequesta in terms of an exclusive agency agreement (which superseded an earlier agreement of 8 July 2013 between CNR and CGT). This kickback was in respect of the 232 diesel locomotives awarded to CNR as part of the 1064 locomotive procurement.

103. Thus, CSR and CNR (later amalgamated as CRRC) paid approximately R5.9 billion in kickbacks in relation to the 1064 locomotive procurement. This amount fell within the R9.124 billion margin of unjustifiable expenditure in respect of all the 1064 locomotives.

104. In March 2014, shortly before the conclusion of the LSA in relation to the 1064 locomotives, a decision was taken to locate the manufacturing and assembly of the CNR and Bombardier locomotives in Durban. The initial costing of the relocation of CNR was estimated to be R9.8 million. Transnet eventually agreed to pay approximately R647 million to CNR (CNRRSSA) and approximately R618 million to Bombardier, a total of R1.261 billion of which R617.6 million was actually paid. Further investigation is required to definitively determine the justifiability of these costs. However, the available evidence establishes strong grounds to believe that CNRRSSA made a corrupt payment of approximately R77 million to BEX (a company associated with the Gupta enterprise) which was laundered onto other shell companies including Integrated Capital Management of which Mr Shane (a director of Transnet who succeeded Mr Sharma as chairperson of the BADC) was a director. The payment to BEX was ostensibly for services rendered in relation to the relocation. However, the BDSA with BEX resembled the other kickback BDSAs facilitated by Mr Essa in relation to the locomotive transactions with the services rendered being of dubious value. The inclusion of BEX in the arrangement was consistent with the methodology of the Gupta enterprise of inflating the value of tenders to enable payments to the enterprise via chosen SDPs that were typically shell companies.

105. The LSA concluded between CSR and Transnet in relation to the 359 locomotives as part of the 1064 locomotive transaction envisaged the parties concluding a maintenance services agreement for the locomotives supplied. In June 2015, CSR concluded a BDSA with Mr Essa's company, Regiments Asia, in relation to a proposed 12-year maintenance plan in terms of which Regiments Asia would supposedly provide advisory consulting services in exchange for a fee of 21% of the contract price of the maintenance services amounting potentially to R1.3 billion. The Transnet board approved the conclusion of a 12 year maintenance plan for an amount of R6.18 billion on 28 July 2016. Transnet paid CSR an advance payment of approximately R705 million in terms of this agreement in October 2016. The evidence indicates that R9.4 million of this was paid to Tequesta (another company associated with Mr Essa). Amidst allegations of corruption, Transnet terminated this agreement in October 2017 and sought repayment of the monies that had been advanced. In December 2018, CSR refunded Transnet R618 million. It is unclear whether CSR has repaid to Transnet the VAT and interest in the amount of R223 million in respect of the R705 million advanced.

106. The wrongdoing in relation to the 1064 locomotive procurement comprised, inter alia: 1. the misrepresentation to the board of the components of the ETC; 2. non-compliance with the preferential points system; 3. the unfair favouring of CSR through the TE adjustment; 4. the factoring of a R2.01 million discount for TE back into the price of CSR's locomotives; 5. the irregular understating of CNR's BAFO price by approximately R13 million per locomotive; 6. the marginalizing of Transnet's treasury by unnecessarily outsourcing tasks to Regiments; 7. the inflation of the price through the inappropriate use of batch pricing; 8. the inappropriate calculation of escalation costs, forex and contingencies; 9. the manipulation of the delivery schedule; 10. the payment of excessive advance payments favouring CSR and CNR; 11. non-compliance with the local content requirements; 12. the failure to obtain the approval of the Minister for the substantial increase; 13. the misrepresentation to the board of the NPV by using the wrong hurdle rate; 14. the dubious maintenance services agreement and the failure to recoup the excessive advance payment timeously and the VAT and interest on it; and 15. the BDSA kickbacks.

107. Regiments began to assume a greater role at Transnet in the immediate period leading up to the conclusion of the LSA's in respect of the procurement of the 1064 locomotives and the 100 locomotives confined to CSR on 17 March 2014 and in the subsequent period in which the financing of the 1064 transaction was finalised. On 23 January 2014, Mr Singh, without appropriate authority concluded a contract with Regiments in relation to the 1064 locomotive procurement. This was followed on 4 February 2014 by Mr Singh concluding with Regiments a third addendum to the LOI with McKinsey. McKinsey then purported to cede its rights to Regiments on 5 February 2014 in terms of an invalid cession. Regiments was then paid R36.77 million between 18 February 2014 and 7 April 2014 in terms of the purported invalid third amendment to the LOI concluded on 4 February 2014. An additional payment of R79.23 million without any legal basis was paid by Transnet to Regiments on 30 April 2014.

108. During 2014-2015, McKinsey and Regiments were awarded contracts valued at R2.2 billion by way of confinement rather than by open public tender. Half of the revenue received by Regiments under these contracts was directed to Homix, a Gupta associated company, in terms of the money laundering agreement with Mr Essa and Mr Moodley. The evidence establishes that McKinsey and Regiments were irregularly in possession of the confinement memoranda prior to making the bids on their contracts. Four of the confinements were approved by Mr Molefe over a period of four days between 31 March 2014 and 3 April 2014. These contracts all appointed Homix and Albatime (Gupta linked laundry vehicles) as SDPs. Fee payments (in an unknown amount) were irregularly made to McKinsey and Regiments in July 2014 in terms of these contracts prior to the conclusion of the tender process. Correspondence of 13 June 2014 confirms that provision for fee payments to Homix and Albatime in excess of R100 million were to be made in terms of these contracts. Mr Fine of McKinsey confirmed in a statement to Parliament that neither Homix nor Albatime were involved in providing any services on any project in which McKinsey was involved.

109. In April 2014, shortly after the conclusion of the LSAs in respect of the 1064 locomotives, negotiations began in earnest with the CDB for the financing of the procurement of the locomotives from the Chinese companies. Regiments assumed a lead role in the negotiations while the Group Treasurer and treasury team of Transnet were side-lined. The Group Treasurer, Ms Makgatho, valiantly challenged the relegation of the Transnet treasury team. She repeatedly raised her concerns about her marginalisation and the unsatisfactory proposed terms of the CDB facility with Mr Molefe and Mr Singh, but to no avail. Ms Makgatho resigned from Transnet in November 2014 as she feared for her safety and wellbeing. She was replaced by Mr Ramosebudi who had links with the Gupta enterprise.

110. During August 2014, Mr Singh, with the assistance of Regiments, presented misleading information to the board which committed Transnet to a loan of USD1.5 billion from the CDB on relatively unfavourable terms.

111. During this period, on 4 August 2014, Mr Molefe signed a deed of settlement agreeing that Transnet would pay the costs of GNS/Abalozi and its directors (including General Nyanda, a member of President Zuma's cabinet) on a punitive scale in litigation about the termination of a services contract with GNS /Abalozi, which had led to the dismissal of Mr Gama in 2010. The deed was apparently signed on behalf of GNS/Abalozi by General Nyanda, who was a friendly acquaintance of Mr Gama. The agreement to pay these costs was unjustifiable in a number of respects and should not have been concluded. Moreover, properly taxed the costs envisaged in the questionable settlement agreement would not have exceeded R200 000 at that particular stage of the litigation between Transnet and GNS/Abalozi. Yet, on 16 January 2016, Mr Molefe agreed to pay GNS/Abalozi R20 million to settle all legal claims against Transnet. The amount paid was an excessively inflated assessment of the legal costs payable and was paid to settle claims that had already been settled or had prescribed. This expenditure was wholly unjustifiable.

112. On 17 April 2015, consistent with what Mr Essa had told Mr Bester of Hatch during the course of 2014, Mr Molefe was seconded from Transnet and became acting CEO of Eskom. On 20 April 2015, the board of Transnet appointed Mr Gama as acting GCEO of Transnet. Four days earlier, on 16 April 2015, Transnet paid Mr Gama's attorneys R1.4 million in relation to his dismissal and reinstatement in 2010/2011 (four years previously). This payment was without any legal basis as it was probably a duplication of a costs payment made to Mr Gama's attorneys earlier which itself should never have been paid for various reasons, including the fact that it related in part to costs that had been awarded to Transnet in Mr Gama's failed High Court application and moreover was in any event not due in terms of the indefensible settlement agreement to reinstate Mr Gama.

113. A week after Mr Gama's appointment as acting GCEO, Mr Ramosebudi who had succeeded Ms Makgatho as Group Treasurer of Transnet, compiled a memorandum seeking inter alia approval from the BADC for the payment to Regiments of R189.24 million as a "success fee" in relation to the USD1.5 billion facility with CDB (concluded eventually on 4 June 2015). The proposal was supported by Mr Gama, Mr Singh and Mr Pita. The BADC approved the request on 29 April 2015. Mr Gama approved the additional fee on 16 July 2015. Before the conclusion of the CDB loan, Regiments submitted an invoice for R189.24 million on 3 June 2015. The evidence discloses that the work performed in respect of this fee fell within the scope of an earlier agreed fee of R15 million. Additionally, the expert evidence of Dr Bloom confirms that the fee of R189.24 million was 10-15 times greater than the market norm for the work supposedly performed by Regiments and was probably inflated by an amount of between R90 million and R140 million. The fee was paid to Regiments on 11 June 2015 and the record shows that R147.6 million of it was paid to Albatime (the Gupta linked laundry vehicle) of which R122 million was laundered further to Sahara Computers, another company in the Gupta enterprise.

114. As discussed earlier in this report, USD1 billion of the USD2.5 billion CDB loan facility was shelved and Regiments advised and arranged for Transnet to conclude a ZAR12 billion club loan instead. Regiments originally replaced JP Morgan as the lead arranger on this loan. However, when Mr Wood moved from Regiments to Trillian Capital (Pty) Ltd (a company which Mr Wood helped to establish and in which Mr Essa was a controlling shareholder), Mr Gama submitted a memorandum to the BADC on 22 September 2015 recommending that the BADC approve the appointment of Trillian to replace JP Morgan as the lead arranger on the ZAR club loan.

115. The proposal to appoint Trillian was supported by Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Pita and Mr Thomas. It was initially intended to pay Regiments a success fee of R50.2 million. However, Trillian was eventually paid a success fee of R93.48 million. Mr Thomas in an email to Mr Ramosebudi and Mr Pita challenged the propriety of the proposal on the grounds that prior payments to Regiments had covered the services supposedly performed by Trillian and expressed doubt that the newly incorporated Trillian had the capacity to underwrite the loan. Trillian was not a bank with significant assets but a company recently conceptualized by Mr Wood.

116. On 14 September 2015, a few days before Mr Gama submitted the proposal to the BADC, Mr Ramosebudi forwarded an email to Mr Wood to which he attached an order to Land Rover Waterford (a dealership partly owned by Mr Wood's partner, Mr Nyhonyha) for a Range Rover Sport valued at R1.23 million in the corrupt hope that Mr Wood could "do something for him".

117. On 18 November 2015, Mr Gama and Mr Pita concluded a mandate with Mr Roy of Trillian engaging it as the lead arranger for the ZAR12 billion club loan. On the same day Trillian issued an invoice for R93.48 million. The next day, 19 November 2015, Mr Gama and Mr Pita signed a payment advice. Four days later on 23 November 2015, the ZAR club loan was concluded. The next day, 24 November 2015, Mr Ramosebudi compiled a memorandum requesting Mr Gama and Mr Singh to sign off on the Trillian invoice which they did in early December 2015. The money was paid into Trillian's account on 4 December 2015, a mere 16 days after the mandate was concluded. Four days later on 8 December 2015, R74.8 million of that fee was transferred by Trillian to the Gupta money laundering vehicle Albatime.

118. The evidence convincingly confirms that Trillian had not in fact performed any services in relation to the ZAR club loan and that the lead arranging work had been performed earlier by JP Morgan and Regiments. In addition, Trillian could not have practically done the work in the limited time available to it as it would have needed to be done in the months leading up to the conclusion of the ZAR club loan.

119. Shortly after Mr Gama approved the wholly unjustifiable payment of R93.48 million to Trillian, he met with Mr Essa at the Oberoi Hotel in Dubai on 23 January 2016. Evidence before the Commission confirms that Mr Gama's hotel bill in Dubai was either paid or was intended to be paid by Sahara Computers or Mr Essa, both associates of the Gupta enterprise. A few weeks later, on 24 February 2016, Ms Mabaso, the chairperson of the Transnet board recommended the appointment of Mr Gama as GCEO to replace Mr Molefe (who had resigned in September 2015 to assume the position of CEO at Eskom). Ms Mabaso recommended the appointment of Mr Gama without any formal, competitive recruitment process. Ms Brown, the then Minister of Public Enterprises (appointed by President Zuma) appointed Mr Gama as GCEO on 12 March 2016, despite the fact that Mr Gama had on two prior occasions been found unsuitable for the post by the Transnet board.

120. On the same day that Mr Gama authorized the unjustifiable payment of R93.48 million to Trillian – and just 10 days after the conclusion of the ZAR12 billion club loan, at a floating interest rate – Mr Ramosebudi submitted a memorandum to Mr Pita, the then acting GCFO, seeking approval for hedging the interest rate exposure from a floating rate to a fixed rate and permission to instruct Regiments to execute the hedges with approved counterparties. Mr Gama approved the proposal and two tranches of interest rate swaps were executed by Regiments on the ZAR club loan. R4.5 billion was swapped to a fixed rate of 11.83% for 15 years on 4 December 2015. Seven months later, on 7 March 2016, R7.5 billion was swapped to a fixed rate of 12.27% for 15 years.

121. These interest rate swaps were highly imprudent for various reasons, caused substantial losses to Transnet, and should never have been concluded. The realised total negative cash flow for Transnet on these interest rate swaps was R850.5 million by 2019. This amount would not have been payable had Transnet not effected the interest rate swaps. As of 14 May 2019, the amount of the cost of exit (an unrealised negative cash flow) would have been an additional R918.48 million, giving a total negative cash flow of R1.83 billion at that date.

122. . Other interest rate swaps executed by Regiments on Transnet debt in the amount of R11.3 billion, not directly related to financing the 1064 locomotive transaction, and unusually using the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund as a counterparty, resulted in an additional realised cash flow loss of R720.8 million and an unrealised loss of R815.7 million, totalling R1.5 billion, for Transnet. Regiments received a fee of R229 million in respect of these transactions.

123. Other transactions in relation to Transnet's IT and data network were tainted with corruption and irregularity. In October 2013, the acting GCEO of Transnet awarded the tender for Transnet's network services to Neotel when Mr Molefe, the GCEO, was absent on business elsewhere. On his return, and most likely in contravention of the PFMA, Mr Molefe revised the award and granted the tender to T-Systems which had bid for the contract in conjunction with BBI, the SOE to which Mr Essa had been appointed as a director by Mr Gigaba. T-Systems was linked to the Gupta enterprise via Sechaba Computer Systems, its SDP, which made various payments to Gupta laundry vehicles (including Homix and Albatime) and which during 2015 and 2016 paid Zestilor (a company owned by Mr Essa's wife) a monthly retainer of R228 000.

124. Mr Molefe's decision was subsequently reversed and the award to Neotel was reinstated after Transnet received a negative opinion from its auditors and legal advice that Mr Molefe's decision was irregular.

125. The evidence establishes convincingly that during 2014-2015, Neotel made two corrupt payments to Homix (a Gupta enterprise laundry vehicle), in the amount of approximately R75 million. The first payment of R34.5 million was in respect of the acquisition of equipment from Cisco for use in the Transnet IT network and another payment of R41 million supposedly for services rendered over two days in concluding the Master Services Agreement for the network services between Neotel and Transnet. Neotel also agreed to pay R25 million to Homix for services it supposedly rendered (over the same two-day period) in relation to an asset buy back agreement between Transnet and Neotel. The amounts paid to Homix by Neotel were then laundered onto the Gupta enterprises in contravention to the exchange control regulations.

126. A further unsuccessful attempt to favour T-Systems was made in 2017. On that occasion, the BADC chaired by Mr Shane (seemingly supported by Mr Gama) refused on dubious grounds to award the tender to the first placed bidder, Gijima, and instead awarded it to T-Systems, the lowest scoring bidder whose bid was R1 billion more expensive. The decision was eventually reversed and the tender was awarded to Gijima, but the conduct of the members of the BADC, particularly Mr Shane and Mr Nagdee (both with links to the Gupta enterprise) evinced a clear intention to favour T-Systems. There are reasonable grounds to believe that their conduct contravened section 50 of the PFMA and is evidence establishing their links to the Gupta racketeering enterprise.

127. Transnet ultimately was the primary site of state capture in financial terms. Transnet contracts to the value of approximately R41.204 billion were irregularly awarded for the benefit of entities linked to the Gupta enterprise or Mr Essa. This amount represents 72.21% of the total state payments in respect of contracts tainted by state capture. The overall impact on Transnet was to burden it with the huge financial losses that resulted from the excesses, fraud and corruption.

128. Much of looting of Transnet by the Gupta enterprise took place during Mr Gigaba's tenure as the Minister of Public Enterprises (November 2010 to May 2014) in President Zuma's cabinet. The fact that both President Zuma and Mr Gigaba had strong ties to the Guptas underpins the conclusion that Transnet was a site of state capture.

STATE CAPTURE: BOSASA

129. The Bosasa evidence overwhelmingly establishes that Bosasa, its leadership, employees and associates were able to gain illicit control over the procurement processes of departments and organs of state, through the systematic and aggressive targeting of public officials with offers of gratification in the form of bribes and a range of other material benefits. As part of its strategy, it sought out officials across different levels of seniority within the state, ranging from the former President Zuma at one end of the spectrum, to municipal officials and employees of SOEs at the other end of the spectrum. It also sought to identify and influence individuals that wielded the greatest influence within the ruling party.

130. Mr Angelo Agrizzi, former Bosasa chief operating officer, testified that Bosasa relied heavily on government contracts worth approximately R2.5 billion per annum, particularly from the Departments of Correctional Services (DCS), Justice and Constitutional Development (DOJCD), and Transport. Bosasa set up a system whereby gratification was provided on an ongoing basis through regular payments of cash bribes to numerous officials within a department or entity. Mr Agrizzi estimated that bribes to the scale of around R75 million per annum were paid out.

131. Although the primary mechanism for attempting to influence public office bearers was the payment of these cash bribes, Bosasa also provided benefits in the form of building houses, providing various furnishings for homes, installing several home security systems, purchasing and hiring of motor vehicles, buying gifts (from premium luxury gifts to food and grocery items) and paying for travel and accommodation. By spreading benefits widely in this manner, Bosasa was able to maintain an advantage in fresh tender and contract extension processes, eliminate the risk of whistleblowing and ensure the early provision of confidential information that would enable it to have an advantage in any tender process.

132. The evidence demonstrates that Bosasa and the Watson family established a reasonably well-organised network of well-placed, well-connected and powerful people whose loyalty was secured with financial and other material incentives and bribes. It was through this network that they were able to promote and protect the private interests of Bosasa by irregular procurement practices to extract money from the state in very substantial amounts. In addition, there was a very close relationship between the company's main shareholder and chief executive, the late Mr Gavin Watson, and Mr Zuma. They met frequently.

133. Bosasa and the entities falling within the Bosasa group were the primary beneficiaries of the facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders, as a corporate entity doing business with government and organs of state. Senior Bosasa employees (such as Mr Agrizzi), Mr Gavin Watson and the Watson family also benefitted.

134. The clearest example of Bosasa's organised project to redirect state resources into private or individual hands and to protect the actors and beneficiaries from any accountability or consequence is its contracts with the DCS.

    134.1 The evidence shows that Bosasa was awarded numerous contracts with the DCS that were later renewed or expanded. These contracts were secured through Bosasa's relationship with, and bribes to, various key officials at the DCS, including the former National Commissioner, Mr Linda Mti, and the former Chief Financial Officer, Mr Patrick Gillingham. These relationships were frequently initiated through Mr Gavin Watson. The extent of the influence was such that Bosasa was able to gain substantial control over the drafting of tender specifications so as to ensure that it would be awarded the contracts.

    134.2 In addition, Bosasa was able to limit the level of scrutiny on the various contracts awarded to it by offering and paying gratification in the form of bribes to members of parliament and by making threats against members of parliament who did not toe the line. As a result, attempts by some Members of the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee on correctional services to interrogate the award of further contracts and extensions to Bosasa gained little traction.

134.3 In line with its modus operandi outlined above, Bosasa secured influence in the DCS in a systematic manner and to a substantial degree through the unlawful and use of bribes or other gratification to influence decision-making on tenders and contracts. The evidence revealed provision of gratification in the form of monthly cash payments; the purchase of motor vehicles; travel and vehicle hire; building houses; fittings, furnishings and the installation of security systems; and paying for the studies of children of officials and members of parliament.

135. Various contracts between the DCS and Bosasa or Bosasa-related companies were subject to an investigation by the Special Investigating Unit (SIU). The SIU investigation made significant findings of a corrupt relationship between Bosasa and the DCS, concluded that the award of the contracts was irregular and that there was no lawful basis for benefits that were provided to senior DCS officials, Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham. The SIU provided the report as well as all of the evidence in their possession to the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA). Despite the nature of the findings made by the SIU, none of its recommendations were implemented by the DCS apart from the disciplinary proceedings eventually instituted against Mr Gillingham. Instead, the contracts between Bosasa and the DCS continued.

136. There was a concerted effort by Bosasa to avoid prosecution by the NPA for its corrupt relationship with the DCS.

136.1 Mr Agrizzi testified that he and Mr Gavin Watson made monthly payments to Mr Mti that were intended for officials at the NPA in return for which Bosasa was provided with documents and information regarding ongoing investigations into Bosasa, which allowed interference in the investigation and possible future prosecutions.

136.2 Various confidential NPA documents relating to the investigation and prosecution of persons linked to the Bosasa-DCS contracts were in Mr Agrizzi's possession and had been leaked in an attempt to interfere with the investigations and to harm the prosecution. Mr Agrizzi also alleged that Ms Myeni obtained confidential documents from the NPA on the progress of the investigation, including the docket, and allowed Bosasa to view them.

137. Overall, the evidence shows wrongful attempts to close down the Bosasa investigation and prosecutions and a substantial degree of control over the decision-making of the law enforcement and oversight bodies. For example, Mr Agrizzi alleged that Mr Zuma arranged for a meeting between a senior Hawks official and Bosasa Director Mr Joe Gumede, which Mr Gumede claimed did take place. Furthermore, the NPA did not act against Bosasa for over ten years, despite clear evidence of extensive corruption uncovered by the SIU in its report.

138. The DCS was not the only state department in respect of which Bosasa sought to gain illicit control over procurement processes. The evidence considered shows that contracts awarded to Bosasa and its affiliates by the DOJCD, the Airports Company of South Africa (ACSA) and the South African Post Office (SAPO) were similarly irregular and that certain officials received bribes.

138.1 Around 2013, Sondolo IT was awarded the contract with the DOJCD at an approximate value of R601 million to install a security access control system for close on 110 courts nationally. The Commission heard evidence that Sondolo IT paid 2.5% of all money received to certain individuals in the DOJCD as bribes in the form of car repairs, furniture and the payment of cash amounts; further, that certain officials received cash payments to overlook the problems with the infrastructure provided by Sondolo IT and sign off on the monthly maintenance fee that was charged by it. The 2.5% was paid over and above other monies that were being paid to officials in the DOJCD.

138.2 Bosasa (Sondolo IT) also paid Mr Seopela R1.9 million as a fee for corruptly arranging the DoJCD security upgrades contract at the SALU building.

138.3 Mr Agrizzi testified that he was advised that Bosasa would be awarded a five-year, renewable contract by ACSA for carpark protection and guarding services at OR Tambo International Airport when the tender bid was drafted. Further, he testified that security bags filled with money were regularly taken to the airport for "certain people", including the procurement officer. Various irregularities were exposed by the Auditor-General in departments contracting with Bosasa.

138.4 Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson had informed him to start the logistical preparations for the SAPO security contract before the tender was submitted. Mr Watson was alleged to have known that Bosasa would be the successful bidder months before the contract was awarded. The contract operated for a three-year period with a further extension of two years. The evidence was that cash payments were made to the then CEO of SAPO, Mr Maanda Manyatshe, as well as the head of security, Mr Siviwe Mapisa. Premium gifts were also purchased for these individuals in exchange for the security contract.

139. The scope of corrupt influence Bosasa sought to maintain was not limited to officials within state departments. Its efforts to secure substantial, corrupt influence over administrative decision-making targeted the executive at the levels of the presidency, the cabinet and deputy-ministers. It also sought corruptly to exercise influence through gratification provided in various forms to high-ranking members of the ruling party, the ANC as an entity itself and persons within law enforcement agencies. It also targeted certain SOEs.

139.1 The Commission heard evidence that Bosasa provided corrupt gratification in various forms to Mr Zuma, the ANC and at least one minister (Ms Mokonyane) and deputy minister (Mr Makwetla). Bosasa also catered for one of Mr Zuma's birthdays. Mr Agrizzi alleged that Mr Watson paid R300,000 cash per month to the Jacob Zuma Foundation, usually through the Chair, Ms Myeni, but once directly to Mr Zuma. The payment directly to Mr Zuma was made at a meeting where Mr Watson requested Mr Zuma's intervention in potential prosecution facing Bosasa.

139.2 Bosasa provided free catering for certain ANC events as well as large donations to the party.

139.3 Bosasa provided and operated sophisticated war rooms to assist the ANC in the running of elections, clearly aimed at assisting the ANC in retaining its position as majority party. The ANC furthermore accepted donations from Bosasa without investigating the source of the funds, this despite Bosasa being heavily reliant on government contracts and despite there being information in the public domain about Bosasa which raised serious concerns regarding its business dealings.

139.4 Ms Nomvula Mokonyane, a senior ANC politician who became Minister of Water Affairs and Sanitation in 2014, was given very substantial food and drinks deliveries annually, monthly cash payments, paid-for social events, security systems and maintenance and even car hire on occasion for her daughter – all because she "had a lot of clout".

139.5 Ms Dudu Myeni, Mr Gwede Mantashe, Mr Vincent Smith and Deputy Minister of Correctional Services, Mr Thabang Makwetla, all received free security system installations or upgrades and, in some instances, maintenance services for their private homes. The evidence shows the influence that Ms Myeni was able to exert over Mr Zuma and the closeness of her association with him.

140. The evidence before the Commission in relation to Bosasa directly implicates members or former members of the executive, the legislature and heads of SOEs in corruptly providing direct or indirect assistance to Bosasa in relation to the award to, or retention by, Bosasa of state tenders. This includes, amongst others:

140.1 Members of the executive who were found to have breached their constitutional, statutory and ethical duties. For example, the evidence established a prima facie case of corruption against Mr Makwetla in relation to his conduct in agreeing to Mr Watson's request to discuss increasing the payment rates under the Bosasa catering contract with the accounting office of the DCS.

140.2 Ms Myeni, who was involved in corrupt activities pertaining to facilitating access to and influence over Mr Zuma, co-ordinating Bosasa's arrangement of high-end functions for Mr Zuma, including a birthday party, arranging a meeting with the then acting CEO of South African Airways, Mr Bezuidenhout, with a view to Bosasa taking over a security contract and a catering contract with SAA (although nothing came of it) and providing confidential information pertaining to the NPA's investigation into Bosasa's dealings with the DCS. All of these constituted corrupt activities intended to benefit Bosasa in doing business with the state and retaining existing and securing new tenders. Ms Myeni corruptly received benefits in return.

140.3 Members of the parliamentary portfolio committee responsible for oversight of the DCS, who were found to have participated in the facilitation of the unlawful award or tenders in return for corrupt payment, inter alia by protecting Bosasa from proper scrutiny when the portfolio was considering the affairs of the DCS.

141. In other instances, while there is less evidence (and in the case of Mr Mantashe, no evidence) of the provision of a corrupt quid pro quo, there is clear evidence that Bosasa corruptly sought to influence decision-making structures of the state to favour it, to the knowledge of the person targeted.

141.1 Although there is no evidence to suggest direct facilitation by the then President Zuma of the unlawful award of any tenders to Bosasa, there is evidence of interference directly by Mr Zuma in the investigation of Bosasa by the Hawks. On a conspectus of the evidence there are reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr Zuma corruptly provided the facilitation in order to benefit Bosasa and to benefit himself and his Foundation as the recipients of Bosasa's material and monetary largesse.

141.2 On the evidence, there is a reasonable suspicion that Mr Mantashe received the free security installations, knowing that Mr Leshabane sought through him to influence unspecified or unnamed office bearers in the lead departments that Bosasa did, or sought to do, business with.

141.3 There were, on a balance of probabilities, extensive efforts by Bosasa and its leaders, through a range of generous and lavish inducements and gratification, corruptly to influence and benefit Ms Mokonyane in her position as a member of, at various times, the national executive, the provincial executive and office bearer in organs of state. It is significant that Ms Mokonyane was dishonest in her evidence pertaining to the birthday function organised by Bosasa for her. There is evidence of the incomplete facilitation provided by Ms Mokonyane in relation to a possible tender for security for dams, when she was Minister of Water Affairs, a tender that did not materialise. The answer to the question in relation to facilitation by her is likely to be found in Mr Watson's explanation that "she has a lot of clout" and that "we needed her support for the protection from the SIU investigation, the Hawks and the NPA". Clearly, Ms Mokonyane did benefit herself in that she continued to receive benefits from Bosasa on a lavish scale over an extended period and would have been well aware of their corrupt purpose.

142. The foregoing represents a brief summary of some of the main aspects of the Bosasa evidence. The authoritative and binding source of the Commission's analysis and reasoning in relation to the Bosasa evidence is to be found in Part III of the Report.

Was there state capture at Bosasa?

143. From the evidence, it can be concluded that Bosasa and its leadership, employees and associates were indeed involved in the systematic attainment of unlawful and corrupt influence, to a substantial degree, over the decision-making of certain organs of state, for their own private purposes and gain, in conflict with the constitutional duty of the state and its organs to operate exclusively in the best socio-economic interests of its people and the sustainable management of its natural resources, for the benefit of current and future generations, consistent with the rights in the Bill of Rights and the values underlying it.

144. The corrupt activities of Bosasa thus brought about state capture, with its own defining features and modus operandi. The "captors" included:

144.1 Mr Gavin Watson, Mr Angelo Agrizzi and a number of individuals associated with the Bosasa network, mostly employees and directors of Bosasa and affiliated companies; and 144.2 The Watson family, who were the main beneficiaries through Bosasa and related companies from the corrupt relationships established with various public officials and who exerted various forms of pressure or influence on others, to their and Bosasa's benefit.

145. Those who were targeted or "captured" within the state, and who facilitated the process, included:

145.1 Members of the National Executive and Provincial Executives, such as Mr Jacob Zuma, Mr Thabang Makwetla and Ms Nomvulo Mokonyane, to whom Bosasa provided inducements aimed at gaining substantial influence. The evidence shows that these officials accepted gratification from Bosasa which held and sought to obtain and retain contracts with government

145.2 Senior board members and executives in SOEs, such as Ms Dudu Myeni, who had a relationship with Mr Gavin Watson and used her position to facilitate various procurements which would benefit Bosasa, and potentially SAA. Ms Myeni also benefitted in her personal capacity. There were also senior persons in the SAPO and ACSA who were successfully targeted

145.3 Members of Parliament who received regular monthly cash payments from Bosasa in return for adopting a favourable attitude towards Bosasa in the portfolio committee on correctional services; and

145.4 The ANC and some of its senior leadership who received benefits from Bosasa which were aimed at ensuring that the ANC would remain the majority party and be in a position to appoint to positions of public office, persons whom Bosasa was able to influence or would seek to influence, and members of the ANC deployed to senior positions in state institutions, organs of state and SOEs whom Bosasa sought to ensure would remain well-disposed towards Bosasa in its business dealings.

146. The modus operandi of Bosasa in gaining substantial influence over the decision-making processes of the relevant organs of state, is apparent from the foregoing summary and Part III of the report. It had as a distinguishing feature the regular payment of cash bribes and other forms of gratification, to a wide range of officials on a substantial scale, thus ensuing ongoing, corrupt influence over decision-making processes to favour Bosasa and to avoid detection and prosecution.

147. Those targeted were all in a position to have prevented Bosasa's corrupt activities, by declining to accept the bribes and other gratification provided, reporting the offers of gratification to the police and prosecuting authorities, and ensuring that those authorities followed up on their reports. The members of Parliament targeted had available to them the wide range of mechanisms for holding both the private and public sector actors involved to account. Yet the MPs involved did not use the mechanisms available to them. Instead, they worked to ensure that the portfolio committee did not expose the corruption.

148. The NPA and SIU were also in a position to put a stop to the corrupt activities by investigating and prosecuting the strong cases they had against the perpetrators. Bosasa used its corrupt influence over members of the executive, amongst others, to intervene with the investigating and prosecuting authorities in order to ensure that prosecutions never took place.

149. One may ask what features of the South African situation allowed Bosasa's state capture to take hold.

149.1 A particular component of the system of corruption-based business developed by Bosasa, and in particular the late Mr Gavin Watson and Mr Agrizzi, is that they traded on the Watson family's "struggle credentials". There can be no doubt that the Watson family were a beacon of hope during the apartheid era. They bravely crossed the racial divide to play non-racial sport in a society aggressively focused on building impenetrable and oppressive legislative, social and economic barriers between the race groups in every walk of life. For their stance, the Watson family gained justifiable admiration.

149.2 Sadly, however, it has become clear from all of the evidence, that the late Mr Gavin Watson and Mr Agrizzi perceived the potential for illicit economic gain to be derived from the influence the family had come to wield in the post-apartheid era. The evidence of Mr Vincent Smith is revealing in this regard. It demonstrated how a relationship forged in the struggle for democracy, could be manipulated and transformed into an instrument for corrupt gain. The influence derived from the family's role in the struggle also meant that they enjoyed a competitive advantage in knowing who within the ruling party wielded the greatest levels of influence and where optimal opportunities for corrupt gain were to be found.

149.3 Other features of the South African situation that rendered the state vulnerable to capture of the kind exploited by Bosasa include:

149.3.1 The absence of a culture of ethical dealing in the private business sector

149.3.2 Problematic social trends in South African society today that tend to place a higher value on individual, material gain and the conspicuous accumulation of wealth, than the value placed on the pursuit of communitarian, developmental, charitable and egalitarian goals, that characterised the struggle for freedom; and

149.3.3 The failure of the state fully and effectively to implement section 195 of the Constitution, which provides:

> 195 Basic values and principles governing public administration
> (1) Public administration must be governed by the democratic values and principles enshrined in the Constitution, including the following principles:

STATE CAPTURE: SARS

150. The ultimate question for the Commission to answer is whether there was an organised project of state capture in respect of the various institutions which it investigated.

151. In order to establish whether a particular institution fell victim to state capture the Commission directed its attention to a number of core themes summarised below.

152. First, the Commission was mindful of the fact that the strategic positioning of key individuals in positions of responsibility is central to the repurposing of State institutions. It was thus important for the Commission to focus on the relationships upon which the alleged state capture networks were forged and to examine how the repurposing of SOEs was co-ordinated. It was also important to establish who it was who nominated the various individuals to their positions of power and what process was followed which culminated in their appointment to senior positions in the affected SOEs.

153. Many of the individuals who were implicated before the Commission share some or other connection to the Gupta and/or Zuma families. It was thus clear that these relationships were important for understanding what role a broader network of implicated persons may have played in the project of state capture. Significant in this regard is that Mr Zuma appears to have been determined to see particular individuals fill CEO positions at various SOEs, regardless of whether other candidates had been nominated or even proposed by the Minister of Public Enterprises.

154. Second, it was important for the Commission to examine the circumstances which led to the irregular suspension of apparently well-performing senior executives at SOEs, either so as to remove them as stumbling blocks to state capture, or for allegedly resisting inappropriate agendas and instructions. The Commission looked at any patterns which might be indicative of the potential collusion between Board members and officials within a SOE in effecting these changes. In this regard, the similarities between several significant departures of senior people at various SOEs were obvious.

155. Third, the Commission examined whether SOE governance structures were deliberately changed to facilitate irregular procurement or other decisions for the benefit of particular individuals and entities.

156. Fourth, the Commission took account of evidence from several witnesses claiming that they were unfairly smeared in public statements, in the press, and on social media after resisting what they understood to be a project of state capture. These individuals contended that smear campaigns were used as a tactic to silence and discredit those who opposed or threatened to expose state capture. In particular, the Commission heard evidence that false or misleading information was leaked to certain journalists at the Sunday Times in order to discredit specific individuals. It was alleged that these stories put false allegations in the public domain in order to justify suspending these individuals and investigating the false allegations.

157. In pursuing all these lines of inquiry, the Commission paid particular attention to the impact of private sector consultancy arrangements on the effectiveness of internal controls in SOEs and the role which external consultants played in facilitating state capture. It became clear that the increasing reliance on consulting and advisory services was accompanied by the side-lining or weakening of internal controls, either by diluting their role in key transactions or operational matters or by entirely outsourcing their functions to third parties.

158. All of these over-arching considerations featured in the evidence lead as part of the SARS Workstream and the findings ultimately made by the Commission. These themes and findings as they relate to SARS are highlighted below. The Commission finds that, cumulatively, they demonstrate a very clear case of state capture at the Revenue Service.

The role played by Bain

159. When Mr Moyane took over as Commissioner of SARS it was internationally recognised as one of the best and most efficient tax administration services in the world. Despite this, the consulting firm, Bain, was contracted to perform consulting services at SARS and ultimately recommended and implemented what it called a “profound strategy refresh” and complete organisational restructure in the organisation. Objectively speaking, there was no need for this invasive intervention. Instead, it is apparent there was a plan conceived between Bain and the Executive, particularly Mr Moyane and former President Zuma, to seize SARS for other purposes. The Bain contract with Ambrobrite makes plain that the SOE sector was seen as a strategic priority and would be the subject of leadership and strategic changes for illegitimate purposes. That is precisely what happened at SARS.

160. The high number of meetings between August 2012 in July 2014 between Bain and Mr Zuma demonstrates the level of collaboration between them. Over the period 2012 to 2015, Bain created a series of documents containing far-reaching plans not only to restructure certain State agencies but also to restructure entire sectors of the South African of economy.

161. SARS was a central part of this scheme. Bain developed a restructuring plan with Mr Moyane, which he presented to President Zuma. All of this happened before Mr Moyane had even been appointed as Commissioner.

162. The reality is that there was no need for consultancy services since SARS was a well-functioning, highly effective organisation. The appointment of Bain was a convenient pretext to facilitate the re-purposing of SARS.

The appointment of Mr Tom Moyane as SARS Commissioner

163. SARS was a clear example of where former President Zuma was himself directly and personally involved in the plans to take over an SOE.

164. Mr Zuma obviously earmarked Mr Moyane for the position of Commissioner at the outset of the selection process and paid only lip-service to the statutorily mandated appointment procedure. Mr Moyane conceded that President Zuma had informed him at a very early stage that he intended to appoint him to the position of SARS Commissioner. This happened well in advance of the actual appointment, despite the process then underway to select the appropriate person from amongst a large number of candidates.

165. It was Mr Moyane who would do former President Zuma's bidding at SARS.

The axing of key, long serving individuals

166. In the "First 100 Days" document created by Bain and Mr Moyane, one of the "key immediate actions for discussion" was to take control of SARS. Amongst the identified ways to achieve this was to "build a healthy sponsorship spine to accelerate change and identify individuals to neutralise".

167. One of Mr Moyane's first actions, only two weeks after taking over at SARS in September 2014, was to disband SARS's entire executive committee on the basis of the apparent expose in the Sunday Times about the existence of a so-called "rogue unit". The repeated contention over a period of years that an illegitimate unit existed was eventually definitively debunked by the High Court.

168. Mr Moyane also side-lined senior officials. In August 2015 when a new model for SARS (designed by Bain) was presented to its senior management, this was done as a fait accompli and they were never even consulted about it.

169. Mr Moyane also systematically removed key individuals from SARS who he regarded as potential obstacles to his plans and who therefore needed to be "neutralised". Dramatically, he removed Mr Barry Hore, then chief operating officer, who was key to SARS's proper functioning. Mr Hore had been specifically named in the 100 Days document as a target. After only a few months in his position as Commissioner, Mr Moyane had engineered the resignation of one of SARS's most vital employees.

170. By the end of his first year at SARS, Mr Moyane succeeded in working out of the system at least six other key officials who were crucial to the proper functioning of SARS but who were obstacles to Mr Moyane and his plans.

The appointment of compliant individuals

171. In the place of these long-serving, loyal officials, Mr Moyane appointed people who were happy to go along with his "restructuring" plans and who provided no obstacle to his repurposing objective.

The disassembling of SARS' compliance units

172. At the time when Mr Moyane took over at SARS there were a large number of dedicated, specialist units within the organisation which were mandated to assist law-enforcement agencies to control organised crime from a revenue and customs and excise perspective. They had proved to be highly effective and were well functioning enforcement units. However, Mr Moyane's "restructuring" plans involved the dismantlement of enforcement capabilities of a number of these key units.

173. By 2015 the PEMTS subdivision of SARS was at the forefront of investigating organised-crime and was running at least 87 projects. These included investigations into smuggling activities with specific emphasis on tobacco and alcohol related products.

174. Under Mr Moyane's leadership, PEMTS was dismantled and its projects were brought to a close in a very short space of time. The net effect of this was that pending investigations were negatively affected and, in some cases, stopped altogether. The beneficiaries of this where in the vast majority of cases persons who had connections to high-ranking politicians.

175. Project Honey Badger is a good example. It focused on the illicit tobacco trade. The project was making good progress at the time of Mr Moyane's appointment. However, it came to a halt under Mr Moyane's tenure. There is no rational explanation for this other than that it was done in an attempt to protect wrongdoers.

CONCLUSION

176. Having considered the evidence led before it, the Commission has concluded that it gives a very clear picture of state capture.

MR MALUSI GIGABA AND THE EVIDENCE OF MS NOMACHULE MNGOMA

INTRODUCTION

1. This part of the report deals with the evidence given by Ms Nomachule Mngoma implicating her husband, Mr Malusi Gigaba, in state capture and corruption. Her evidence is assessed in the light of Mr Gigaba's own evidence and that of other witnesses, with a view to determining the extent of Mr Gigaba's links to the Guptas and the role that he may have played in the Gupta enterprise.

2. From 1996 to 2004 Mr Gigaba was the President of the ANC Youth League. He went on to hold five ministerial posts: 1. Deputy-Minister of Home Affairs (29 April 2004 – 31 October 2010); 2. Minister of Public Enterprises (1 November 2010 – 25 May 2014); 3. Minister of Home Affairs (26 May 2014 – 31 March 2017); 4. Minister of Finance (31 March 2017 – 27 February 2018); and 5. Minister of Home Affairs (28 February 2018 – about 13 November 2018).

3. Mr Gigaba was appointed to his first post by President Thabo Mbeki, to his second, third and fourth posts by President Zuma, and to his fifth post by President Ramaphosa.

4. The bulk of the Commission's investigation into the conduct of Mr Gigaba relates to the three-and-a-half years that he was the Minister of Public Enterprises within President Zuma's cabinet. Extensive findings have already been made about Mr Gigaba in those sections of this Report dealing with SAA, The New Age, Transnet, Denel and Eskom.

MS MNGOMA'S EVIDENCE

5. Mr Gigaba and Ms Mngoma met in 2009 when Mr Gigaba was the Deputy Minister of Home Affairs. They moved in together in 2009 and were married in August 2014.

Meetings and interactions with the Guptas

6. From the time that Ms Mngoma met him, Mr Gigaba would regularly visit persons whom he described as his "advisors", but for some time she did not know their identities.

7. About two to three months before Mr Gigaba was appointed as the Minister of Public Enterprises and following a meeting at the Gupta residence in Saxonwold, Mr Gigaba told her that Mr Ajay Gupta had advised him that he would be moved from the Department of Home Affairs to the Department of Public Enterprises (DPE).

8. After his appointment as the Minister of Public Enterprises (in November 2010), Mr Gigaba would visit the Guptas regularly. When Parliament was in session, Mr Gigaba would meet with them on Mondays (before flying to Cape Town) and on Friday evenings or sometimes on Saturdays (upon his return from Cape Town). When Parliament was in recess, meetings would take place on any day of the week, after Mr Gigaba was phoned by Mr Ajay Gupta.
9. During late 2011, Mr Gigaba told Ms Mngoma that his "advisors" – whom he described as "long-time friends" – wanted to meet her and their eldest son. The meeting took place at the Gupta residence, where Ms Mngoma met Mr Ajay Gupta, his wife and their son. Mr Ajay Gupta gifted their son a gold necklace. Ms Mngoma learnt from the meeting that Mr Gigaba's "advisors" were the Guptas.
10. Ms Mngoma went on to visit the Gupta residence on several occasions during 2012 together with Mr Gigaba. She did so again a few months after their second child was born (in December 2012) at the request of the Guptas.
11. The Gigabas attended the Gupta wedding in Sun City in 2013. The day before the wedding they attended the Waterkloof Air Force Base to receive the Gupta aircraft. Although they had planned to stay over at Sun City on the night of the wedding, they travelled home at around midnight because of negative media reporting.
12. After this, Ms Mngoma went to the Gupta residence on many occasions together with Mr Gigaba. She described the procedure that would be followed when she accompanied Mr Gigaba for meetings. They would be escorted to the lounge area and asked to hand over their cell phones by one of the security personnel. Mr Ajay Gupta would then arrive and brief Mr Gigaba before they met in an adjacent private meeting room. Topics for discussion that Mr Gigaba was briefed on included matters relating to Transnet, Eskom and SAA. Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu and / or Mr Thamsanqa Msomi (Mr Gigaba's special advisor and chief of staff, respectively, while he was the Minister of Public Enterprises) were often in attendance at these meetings, and what appeared to be official government vehicles were often parked at the residence. Ms Mngoma also often saw Mr Duduzane Zuma at the Gupta residence.
13. When Ms Mngoma questioned Mr Gigaba about why she had to hand in her cell phone at the Gupta residence, he said that this was because the matters for discussion were confidential and sensitive.
14. From an overall perspective, Ms Mngoma estimated that she had gone with Mr Gigaba to the Gupta residence at least twenty times from late 2011 (her first visit) until after Mr Gigaba returned to Home Affairs in 2014. That would be in a period of about three years. They would go there: (i) when Mr Gigaba had meetings; (ii) for lunch with Mr Ajay Gupta and his wife; and (iii) occasionally for events, like Diwali.
15. According to Ms Mngoma, during 2013, Mr Ajay Gupta twice visited their official residence in Waterkloof. Mr Gigaba told her that the meetings related to Transnet and Eskom.

Tensions rising in the first half of 2014

16. As Mr Gigaba's tenure as the Minister of Public Enterprises progressed, he told Ms Mngoma that the Guptas were putting pressure on him to take decisions that he did not agree with.
17. During early 2014, Mr Gigaba's relationship with the Guptas began to appear strained. The Guptas wanted Mr Gigaba to get rid of Mr Brian Dames as the CEO of Eskom because he was not doing what the Guptas wanted him to do, but Mr Gigaba did not agree with the instruction. Mr Gigaba then started avoiding phone calls from the Guptas and was reluctant to meet with them. In this context, Mr Gigaba told Ms Mngoma that Mr Ajay Gupta had advised him that if he wanted to run the DPE as he wished, he would be moved back to the Department of Home Affairs.

18. In this context, Mr Gigaba told Ms Mngoma that, when he did not want to follow the instructions of Mr Ajay Gupta or Ms Myeni, they would phone President Zuma and complain about him. As Mr Ajay Gupta had done, Ms Myeni told Mr Gigaba that, if he did not do as he was told, he would go back to the Department of Home Affairs.

Mr Gigaba's return to the Department of Home Affairs

19. On 26 May 2014, and following the 2014 elections, Mr Gigaba was transferred back to the Department of Home Affairs.

20. According to Ms Mngoma, Mr Gigaba did not think that President Zuma would do this because he believed that they shared a close relationship. He appeared shocked and hurt when his transfer was announced. He relayed to Ms Mngoma that President Zuma had informed him that the move was motivated by the need to strengthen border controls, but that he knew this was not the real reason.

21. Ms Mngoma went on to testify about two matters that occurred during this ministerial appointment. The first related to a trip to India which Ms Mngoma accompanied Mr Gigaba on during 2015. In the run up to the trip, he mentioned that he would create an official state visit to India so that he could meet with India nationals that Mr Ajay Gupta wanted him to meet in relation to the cancellation of SAA's Johannesburg / Mumbai route – an issue that arose while Mr Gigaba was the Minister of Public Enterprises. Ms Mngoma said in this regard that during 2010, Mr Gigaba had told her that the Guptas wanted to introduce their own airline to service the Johannesburg / Mumbai route and that they were demanding that he compel SAA to cancel its route.

22. The second matter related to the Guptas' application for South African citizenship, which Mr Gigaba told Ms Mngoma he was assisting them with. According to Ms Mngoma, sometime during 2015, she went with Mr Gigaba to the Gupta residence, where official documents were apparently signed and brought back home by Mr Gigaba.

Mr Gigaba's appointment as Minister of Finance

23. 25. On 30 March 2017, Mr Gigaba told Ms Mngoma that he had received a phone call from President Zuma who informed him that he had decided to reshuffle his Cabinet and that Mr Gigaba would be appointed as the Minister of Finance. 26. This change in portfolio also appeared to upset Mr Gigaba. He informed Ms Mngoma that President Zuma had told him that he initially wanted to appoint Mr Brian Molefe as the Minister of Finance but had decided to appoint Mr Gigaba instead at the request of other NEC members. 27. According to Ms Mngoma, by this time Mr Gigaba's relationship with the Guptas had deteriorated and his visits to the Gupta residence had become infrequent.

Appointments at SOEs

24. Mr Gigaba told Ms Mngoma that Mr Molefe was going to be moved from Transnet to Eskom. Ms Mngoma testified that Mr Gigaba told her this before Mr Brian Molefe was actually moved. As a matter of fact, Mr Molefe moved from Transnet to Eskom in April 2015. He said that the Guptas wanted Mr Molefe at Eskom and not Mr Dames. According to Ms Mngoma, she was told this at a time when Mr Gigaba was the Minister of Public Enterprises.

25. While also the Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Gigaba shared with Ms Mngoma that Mr Siyabonga Gama was going to be reinstated as the CEO of Transnet Freight Rail before this occurred.

26. On the topic of Mr Gama, Ms Mngoma said that Mr Gigaba had told her that he intended to speak to Mr Gama about employing his sister, Ms Gugu Gigaba, at Transnet. She went on to be employed by Transnet and remains employed there.

Gifts, cash and benefits received from the Guptas

27. A few months before Mr Gigaba took office as the Minister of Public Enterprises in November 2010, Mr Ajay Gupta gave Mr Gigaba a white 3-series BMW, which he handed over, in Ms Mngoma's presence, at the offices of Sahara Computers. Ms Mngoma used the BMW as her private vehicle for one-and-a-half to two years, with it having been registered in her name for a short while before Mr Gigaba arranged for it to be registered in the name of a friend of his. After the vehicle was sent in for repairs by a friend of Mr Gigaba, it was never returned.

28. As mentioned above, the Gigabas were married in August 2014, at a time when Mr Gigaba was the Minister of Home Affairs. According to Ms Mngoma, the Guptas were invited to the wedding but did not attend. However, from what she was told by Mr Gigaba, the Guptas gave a cash donation towards the cost of the wedding and paid for their honeymoon in Dubai (a week-long stay at the Waldorf). Ms Mngoma estimated that the wedding cost between R4 and R5 million and said that she paid all the expenses (caterers and the like) in cash given to her by Mr Gigaba.

29. Ms Mngoma also testified about Mr Gigaba carrying a leather bag into and out of private meetings at the Gupta residence on several occasions. He would phone one of his close protection officers who would take the bag out of the boot of his vehicle and leave it at the door of the residence. She subsequently came to learn that the bag contained cash.

30. Under cross-examination, Ms Mngoma was confronted with the transcript of her ENCA interview on 17 December 2020, which reflects her having stated: "So then they will give him money. It was a lot of cash, all the time." In response to it being put to her that this contradicted her version that she never actually saw the Guptas giving Mr Gigaba cash, Ms Mngoma said that this captured what Mr Gigaba had told her about the Guptas paying for their wedding, assisting his sister with her bad debts, and assisting him with building renovations (dealt with below). Ms Mngoma was also confronted with this statement made during her ENCA interview: "Because every time when we go there he used to carry a bag and they will give him money." Her response appears to have been to the effect that she had not meant that Mr Gigaba was given money every time they went to the Gupta residence; she also accepted that she had not actually seen Mr Gigaba being given money.

31. Ms Mngoma was also confronted with the evidence of Witness 3. He served as one of Mr Gigaba's close protection officers for six months (July – December 2013) while Mr Gigaba was the Minister of Public Enterprises and testified about Mr Gigaba receiving cash at the Gupta residence (a deduction that he made by "connecting the dots"). It was put to Ms Mngoma that Witness 3 had not testified about Mr Gigaba having called for his bag at the Gupta residence and it being returned to the boot of his vehicle; nor about Ms Mngoma having been at the Gupta residence. In response, Ms Mngoma said that Mr Gigaba had four close protection officers, and that he would not always go to the Gupta residence with all of them. Although Ms Mngoma did not refer to this, Witness 3 did in fact testify that he had taken Mr Gigaba and Ms Mngoma to the Gupta residence on one occasion for dinner.

32. Ms Mngoma went on to say that Mr Gigaba bought her a Louis Vuitton handbag in Sandton City which he paid for in cash and gave her between R100 000 and R150 000 in cash for shopping when she went on holiday overseas.

33. Ms Mngoma also gave evidence about the Guptas having paid off the debts of Ms Nozipho Gigaba, Mr Gigaba's eldest sister, who appears to have been blacklisted by credit bureaus. According to Ms Mngoma, after meeting with his father sometime in 2013, Mr Gigaba told her that his father had asked him to assist his sister to settle a R850 000 bad debt. Mr Gigaba told her that he would ask Mr Ajay Gupta for the money. At a later stage, Mr Gigaba told her that Mr Ajay Gupta had agreed to give him the money, that Mr Mahlangu would collect the initial amount of R425 000, and that Mr Mahlangu would assist in removing the blacklisting. She was subsequently told that this was achieved. According to Ms Mngoma, at around this time, Ms Nozipho Gigaba came to stay with them in Pretoria, during which time she worked for Sahara Computers for a number of months.

34. Ms Mngoma went on to testify about the Guptas also paying for extensive renovations to Mr Gigaba's flat situated on his family's property in Mandeni, KwaZulu-Natal – this in 2013 and early 2014. Mr

Gigaba told her about fetching money from Mr Ajay Gupta to pay the builder, and she said that she was present on a few occasions when Mr Gigaba paid the builder in bundles of cash. Ms Mngoma disputed that Mr Gigaba's father could have paid for the renovations.

35. In her oral evidence, Ms Mngoma also said that Mr Ajay Gupta had given Mr Gigaba two watches on a trip to Dubai sometime during the period 2013-2015.

Confiscation of devices and destruction of evidence

36. During February 2020, Ms Mngoma asked Mr Gigaba for a divorce. In response, Mr Gigaba asked her to delay the proceedings until after he appeared before the Commission, so as not to forfeit spousal privilege. Ms Mngoma agreed to do so. Mr Gigaba also requested her not to speak to the Commission or the law enforcement agencies about Gupta visits, cash and gifts.

37. Around June 2020, Mr Gigaba arranged for an IT expert to come to the Gigaba residence to assist in deleting information from Ms Mngoma's electronic devices (cell phone, iPad and laptop), but she refused to hand them over. Mr Gigaba wanted to delete proof of him having visited the Gupta residence regularly, and photographs of their trip to India, and honeymoon in Mauritius and Dubai.

38. On 20 July 2020, a domestic incident occurred at the Gigaba residence. Following this, on 22 July 2020, two members of the Hawks (including Captain Mavuso), who were called by Mr Gigaba to their home, confiscated her electronic devices and demanded all the usernames and passwords.

39. On 31 July 2020, arising from the domestic incident, Ms Mngoma was arrested by the Hawks. Sometime after this, she secured bail and was released from custody, whereupon her devices were returned to her. Upon their return, Ms Mngoma discovered that all photographs and emails relating to her overseas trips, visits to the Guptas, etc had been deleted from her devices.

40. In a judgment delivered on 11 February 2021, the High Court found Ms Mngoma's arrest and the confiscation of her devices to have been unlawful and ordered the respondents (including Captain Mavuso) to restore all information unlawfully removed from the devices.

41. Finally, Ms Mngoma said that she believed that Mr Gigaba was responsible for the disappearance of her and their children's passports, which went missing in March 2021.

MR GIGABA'S VERSION

42. From an overall perspective, Mr Gigaba disputed the vast majority of what Ms Mngoma had to say. He described her as having a creative imagination and being a pathological liar and contended that she was a bitter spouse with her evidence being aimed at extorting a divorce settlement (which Ms Mngoma denied). As far as he was concerned, her evidence was mainly stitched together from things already in the public domain.

The one area of commonality

43. The one area where there was a degree of commonality between them related to Mr Gigaba's general relationship with the Guptas.

44. On Mr Gigaba's own version, he had a long-standing association with the Guptas, having met them in the early 2000s while he was still the President of the ANC Youth League. For at least the first decade of him being in Government (2004 – 2014), he would visit the Gupta residence for cultural functions and social luncheons. He did so on not more than twenty occasions, and never once for business. He knew all three of the Gupta brothers well, had been introduced to their mother, and attended the Gupta wedding at Sun City. Over time, he fostered a friendship with Mr Ajay Gupta – this to the extent that he instructed Mr Mahlangu to manage the Guptas to avoid a conflict of interest. In this capacity, Mr Gigaba permitted Mr Mahlangu to attend a Gupta wedding in India shortly after he took up employment as his special advisor. The friendship between them was of such a nature that Mr Gigaba admitted that Mr Ajay Gupta had gifted his eldest son a gold necklace (which was presented at the Gupta residence).

45. Mr Gigaba's evidence was also punctuated with references to the Gupta-owned Sahara Computers. He would occasionally go there to collect invitations to cultural functions at the Gupta residence, and visit Mr Ajay Gupta, including for lunch. Sahara Computers also paid for Mr Mahlangu's trip to the Gupta wedding in India and employed Mr Gigaba's eldest sister for a period of time, which Mr Gigaba said he had nothing to do with.

46. According to Mr Gigaba (and again consistent with Ms Mngoma's version), he scaled down his interactions with the Guptas significantly from about 2014, which importantly, was the year when he moved from being the Minister of Public Enterprises to the Minister of Home Affairs. Mr Gigaba said that their relationship cooled off after he became concerned about name dropping and their image becoming tainted.

Meetings and interactions with the Guptas

47. Save as stated above, Mr Gigaba effectively denied all of Ms Mngoma's evidence about meetings and interactions with the Guptas. In particular, he denied having been told by Mr Ajay Gupta (in the latter part of 2010) of his impending appointment as the Minister of Public Enterprise; denied that he frequented the Gupta residence on a weekly basis (or more) while holding that ministerial post; denied that the Guptas were his advisors; denied that he had taken each of his two sons to the Gupta residence shortly after their births; denied that he went to the Waterkloof Air Force Base before the Gupta wedding in Sun City and that he did not stay over at Sun City because of media hype; denied that Ms Mngoma had gone to the Gupta residence on at least twenty occasions (stating that she had not met the Guptas on more than four occasions); denied that she had ever accompanied him to business meetings at the Gupta residence as well as her version of what transpired during such visits, including that cell phones were turned in; denied that he had ever been shown an automated teller machine at the Gupta residence; and denied that Mr Ajay Gupta had ever visited his home in Waterkloof.

Tensions rising during the first half of 2014

48. The only thing which the Gigabas agreed upon is that Mr Gigaba's relationship with the Guptas cooled off during 2014, albeit that they advanced different reasons for this.

49. Other than for this, Mr Gigaba denied Ms Mngoma's version set out above. In particular, he denied that he was advised by Mr Ajay Gupta and Ms Myeni that, if he did not do as he was told, he would be moved back to the Department of Home Affairs.

50. In the context of dealing with Ms Mngoma's evidence that Ms Myeni had facilitated their trip to Mauritius, which he denied, Mr Gigaba said – for the first time in oral evidence – that he was of the view that Ms Mngoma had paid for the trip herself and that she was independently wealthy (or portrayed herself as such).

Mr Gigaba's return to the Department of Home Affairs

51. In relation to his tenure as Minister of Home Affairs, he denied that his Ministerial trip to India in 2015 had anything to do with the cancellation of SAA's Johannesburg / Mumbai route (which was now outside his portfolio) and denied that he had assisted the Guptas with their application for South African citizenship.

Mr Gigaba's appointment as Minister of Finance

52. While admitting that he was informed telephonically by President Zuma on 30 March 2017 that he would be appointed as the Minister of Finance, Mr Gigaba denied Ms Mngoma's evidence that he was "upset" about being appointed as the Minister of Finance.

Appointments at SOEs

53. Mr Gigaba denied having told Ms Mngoma about Mr Molefe's move to Eskom or about Mr Gama's reinstatement at Transnet Freight Rail before they occurred.

54. Although Mr Gigaba claimed not to have known in 2014 that Mr Molefe would be moved to Eskom (which occurred in April 2015), he was faced with the evidence of Mr Henk Bester of Hatch to the effect that Mr Salim Essa had said this to him sometime after April 2014. Mr Gigaba denied any knowledge of this.

55. Mr Gigaba also denied having told Ms Mngoma that he intended to speak to Mr Gama about employing his sister (Ms Gugu Gigaba) at Transnet. Mr Gigaba did, however, accept that he forwarded her CV to Mr Mlamuli Buthelezi (the COO of Transnet who reported to Mr Gama when he was the GCEO of Transnet) on 25 June 2016 and that his sister went on to be employed at Transnet Freight Rail.

Gifts, cash and benefits received from the Guptas

56. Mr Gigaba denied that he was given a white 3-series BMW by Mr Ajay Gupta (in 2010) and said that he had never seen Ms Mngoma driving such a vehicle. Ms Mngoma's version in regard to the BMW is, to say the least, very doubtful.

57. Turning to the Gigaba wedding in August 2014, although he was uncertain, Mr Gigaba did not believe that he would have invited the Guptas because his relationship with them had cooled off at this time, but he did not rule out the possibility that Ms Mngoma may have invited them. He was, however, categorical in his denial that they made a cash donation towards the wedding and paid for their honeymoon. According to Mr Gigaba, they honeymooned in Mauritius and subsequently undertook a trip to Dubai in 2014 or 2015. He funded the air tickets to Dubai using frequent flyer credits and they stayed in the Hilton and not the Waldorf.

58. In response to Ms Mngoma's evidence that the wedding cost between R4 and R5 million and that she paid for it in cash given to her by him, Mr Gigaba said that, while he was responsible for their customary wedding (which he described as a modest affair), Ms Mngoma and her family were responsible for the "white wedding". Although he questioned whether it cost as much, as far as Mr Gigaba was concerned, if Ms Mngoma paid R4m to R5 million, she used her own money and it had nothing to do with him. A question that arises from the fact that Mr Gigaba did not categorically deny their wedding cost about R4 million to R5 million and all he did was to question those figures is: how could he not have known how much at least more or less their wedding had cost?

59. While admitting that he had bought Ms Mngoma a Louis Vuitton handbag using cash, Mr Gigaba denied having given her large sums of cash for shopping overseas and denied having provided her with a credit card with a limit of R100 000. In relation to the latter, Mr Gigaba said that he had instead provided her with a debit card with a R3000 cash withdrawal limit, which she used for a couple of years.

60. In relation to Ms Nozipho Gigaba, while Mr Gigaba admitted that she was in debt to the tune of R850 000, that he had asked Mr Mahlangu to advise on how to deal with credit bureaus, and that she went on to be employed (on his version, without his involvement) by Sahara Computers for a short while. He said that no money was obtained from the Guptas.

61. Mr Gigaba's evidence in relation to the renovations undertaken to his family home in Mandeni also produced a stark dispute of fact. According to Mr Gigaba, except for some tiling and plumbing for which he paid for, his late father paid for everything. The money for the renovations did not come from the Guptas, and Ms Mngoma was not present when Mr Gigaba paid the builder (which he admitted doing for tiling and plumbing).

62. Mr Gigaba also denied that Mr Ajay Gupta bought him two watches in Dubai.

Confiscation of devices and destruction of evidence

63. Mr Gigaba denied Ms Mngoma's version that he asked her in February 2020 to delay their divorce until after he appeared before the Commission, so as not to forfeit spousal privilege, and that she agreed to do so.

64. According to Mr Gigaba, to the contrary, Ms Mngoma attempted to use her appearance before the Commission to strong-arm him into a divorce settlement. In this regard, he said that, in January 2021, Ms Mngoma advised him that she had been approached by the Commission to testify (following her ENCA interview on 17 December 2020) but that she would refuse to do so if a suitable divorce settlement was reached, and Mr Gigaba withdrew a criminal complaint that had been opened in July 2020 against her for malicious damage to property. When he refused, Ms Mngoma became annoyed and threatening. Thereafter and right up until the end of March 2021, Ms Mngoma repeatedly stated that if he offered her a suitable divorce settlement, she would drop the whole Commission issue, and pretend that the divorce proceedings had been withdrawn until the Commission completed its work.

65. Mr Gigaba also denied Ms Mngoma's version that he secured an IT expert in around June 2020 to assist in deleting information from her electronic devices. According to Mr Gigaba, no such person had come to their home.

66. Regarding the domestic incident, the confiscation of Ms Mngoma's devices and her arrest, the following sequence of events emerged from Mr Gigaba's evidence: in April / May 2020, Mr Gigaba gave a statement to Captain Mavuso of the Hawks in relation to an SMS that he had received informing him that Ms Mngoma had hired people to kill him; on 20 July 2020, a domestic incident occurred at the Gigaba residence (involving Ms Mngoma damaging a vehicle belonging to a friend of Mr Gigaba and a complaint of crimen injuria); on 22 July 2020, the Hawks (Captain Mavuso and another) attended upon the Gigaba residence and confiscated Ms Mngoma's devices; on Friday, 31 July 2020, the Hawks returned to the Gigaba residence and arrested Ms Mngoma; Ms Mngoma was granted bail and released from custody on Saturday, 1 August 2020 on 4 August 2020, Ms Mngoma's devices were returned to her; and on 11 February 2021, the High Court delivered judgment in which it found as stated above.

67. While the High Court judgment was scathing of Mr Gigaba (it having found that the Hawks' actions "appeared to have been motivated by an abuse of power by a former minister and member of the executive"), in fairness to him, he was not joined as a party to the litigation, and thus not afforded an opportunity to present his version of events to the court.

68. In his evidence, Mr Gigaba denied that he abused his power, pointing out that he was no longer a minister, and stating that Captain Mavuso's intervention stemmed from their earlier interaction about the plot to kill him. Mr Gigaba was unable to comment on the removal of information from Ms Mngoma's devices – the issue not having been brought to his attention or knowledge at the time of the High Court litigation.

69. Turning to the disappearance of Ms Mngoma's and their children's passports, Mr Gigaba also denied any involvement in this.

FINDINGS FROM THE EVIDENCE

70. As appears from the above, save for the one area of commonality, the evidence of the Gigabas produced stark disputes of fact at almost every turn.

71. In circumstances where Ms Mngoma's motivation for testifying against her husband has been placed in issue, where she signed her affidavit under oath without paying proper attention to the contents and where there are various aspects of her evidence that are questionable, a measure of caution in relation to the acceptance of her evidence over that of Mr Gigaba is called for.

The one area of commonality

72. There are important aspects of Ms Mngoma's evidence that materially accord with that of Mr Gigaba. As appears from that section, on Mr Gigaba's own version – significantly in accordance with that of Ms Mngoma – he had a long-standing and close association with the Guptas and was particularly friendly with Mr Ajay Gupta.

73. As dealt with elsewhere in this Report, when judged against Mr Gigaba's own evidence, his statement made to Fundudzi that he had no relationship with the Guptas was untruthful. The fact that he chose to cover it up in 2019 is telling.

74. Mr Gigaba was clearly not fully transparent in his evidence and appears to have continued to attempt to cover up the extent of his relationship with the Guptas, resulting in him making implausible denials.

Visits to the Gupta residence and happenings there

75. The extent of the relationship between Mr Gigaba and the Guptas is reflected by the visits that Mr Gigaba and Ms Mngoma made to the Gupta residence and the happenings there. On Ms Mngoma's version, it appears that what accounted for many of her visits to the Gupta residence were instances of her accompanying Mr Gigaba there for business meetings. On Mr Gigaba's version, he only ever went to the Gupta residence for cultural and social events – and never for business meetings.

76. Ms Mngoma's version is, however, corroborated by the evidence of Mr Riaz Saloojee, which is dealt with elsewhere in this Report. He was appointed as the new CEO of Denel with effect from January 2012. In the first quarter of 2012, Mr Essa took him to the Gupta residence, where he met Mr Tony Gupta, Mr Atul Gupta and Mr Gigaba. Upon Mr Saloojee being introduced to him by Mr Atul Gupta, Mr Gigaba said, "these are my friends" and "if at some point there is something you can do together with them in Denel it would be good". While Mr Gigaba denied his presence at this meeting, there is no basis upon which to reject the evidence of Mr Saloojee. It shows that Mr Gigaba – as Ms Mngoma said – attended business meetings at the Gupta residence and that their relationship was not purely social.

77. Also corroborative of Ms Mngoma's version about business meetings at the Gupta residence is the evidence of Garry Pita, who replaced Mr Anoj Singh as the GCFO of Transnet. He said that on two occasions when he attended business meetings at the Gupta residence (when Mr Essa was also present) in 2016/2017, he was asked to first turn in his cell phone. This appears to have been a long-running practice, because the same happened to Mr Vuyisile Kona (then both the acting chairperson of the board and acting CEO of SAA) when he visited the Gupta residence in late 2012. The evidence of both of these witnesses accords with Ms Mngoma's version of what transpired when she accompanied Mr Gigaba to business meetings at the Gupta residence. This serves as a basis to accept Ms Mngoma's version, from which it can reasonably be inferred that Mr Gigaba engaged in sensitive discussions during business meetings at the Gupta residence.

78. Then there is the evidence of Witness 3, who served as Mr Gigaba's close protection officer when he was the Minister of Public Enterprises. His evidence is dealt with elsewhere in this Report, with the conclusion being that, based on it, there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Gigaba received cash payments at the Gupta residence. Despite the fact that aspects of Ms Mngoma's evidence are open to criticism here and that the evidence of Witness 3 and Ms Mngoma is not entirely aligned, it is sufficiently corroborative to at least give rise to a reasonable suspicion that Mr Gigaba received cash (on two occasions) at the Gupta residence, when Ms Mngoma accompanied him there.

79. In addition, the fact that it has been found elsewhere in this Report that there are reasonable grounds to believe (or suspect) that Mr Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Gama, Mr Pita, and Mr Thamsanqa Jiyane (the chief procurement officer at Transnet Freight Rail) also all received cash from the Guptas further corroborates, at least indirectly, Ms Mngoma's version about the happenings at the Gupta residence.

Gupta-captured ministers

80. From an overall perspective, Ms Mngoma's evidence about Mr Gigaba's relationship with the Guptas was to the effect that Mr Gigaba was captured by the Guptas – he was at their beck and call and was given instructions by them.

81. While Mr Gigaba denied this, Ms Mngoma's version accords with the evidence of Mr Themba Maseko, the former DG and CEO of the GCIS. Mr Maseko was called to a meeting at the Gupta residence in the latter part of 2010, where he was instructed by Mr Ajay Gupta to ensure that advertising budgets across all departments were transferred to GCIS' account and then spent with The New Age. According to Mr Maseko, this is what transpired after he told Mr Ajay Gupta in response that he had no power to instruct ministers to transfer funds:

> He said, no, and I quote: "That is how the system works now. If there is any Minister who is not co-operative, I tell him and by that he meant, tell President Zuma and he sorts them out." I did ask him how will he sort them out, he then volunteered information that he as Ajay Gupta, has regular meetings with the President and that if there is a Minister who is not co-operating, the Minister is then summoned to ... So if he speaks to the President, the Minister is either spoken to by the President or summoned to Saxonwold where they are given instructions of what to do.

82. On the evidence presented to the Commission, no other minister had a longer standing or closer relationship with the Guptas than Mr Gigaba, and he occupied the key post of the Minister of Public Enterprises who had oversight over of Transnet, which was the main target of the Gupta money-laundering enterprise. If ever there was a Minister that the Guptas would have wanted on their side, it was surely Mr Gigaba.

83. Returning to the evidence of Mr Saloojee, as found elsewhere in this Report, the reason why the Guptas brought Mr Gigaba to the meeting (in 2012) was to show Mr Saloojee that Mr Gigaba was a mere tool in their hands, a dupe who would do their bidding and from whom Mr Saloojee could expect no protection. That Mr Gigaba was prepared to participate in the meeting on this basis demonstrates that the Guptas had procured his cooperation.

84. The fact that, by 2014, Mr Gigaba's relationship with the Guptas had (by his own admission) cooled down serves as a reasonable basis to believe that this may have played a role in him being moved back to the Department of Home Affairs with effect from 26 May 2014. By then, the looting of Transnet by the Gupta enterprise – which occurred under Mr Gigaba's watch as the Minister of Public Enterprises – had also been substantially completed.

85. However, Mr Gigaba was never really out of the Gupta fold. In 2017, President Zuma appointed Mr Gigaba as the Minister of Finance.

Ignorant or complicit?

86. This brings one to a key question raised with Mr Gigaba during his evidence: given that he, in his capacity as the Minister of Public Enterprises, had oversight over Transnet and was part of the Gupta environment, how is it that he was unaware of their involvement in the widespread looting of Transnet, in particular? One of two possibilities arise – either Mr Gigaba was genuinely unaware of their nefarious dealings, or he was complicit therein, at least to some extent. In his evidence, Mr Gigaba opted for the former, stating that, in his capacity as the Minister of Public Enterprises, he received limited information (by way of formal reports) and that any nefarious dealings by the Guptas under his watch was "purely coincidental".

87. The difficulty confronting Mr Gigaba is that not only was he close to the Guptas, but he was also involved directly or indirectly in a number of acts or decisions – many questionable – that were linked to the Gupta enterprise and ultimately benefited it (or was intended to). These include the following, also discussed elsewhere in the Reports.

    87.1 Mr Gigaba's meeting with Mr Saloojee and the Guptas in the first quarter of 2012 discussed above. When Mr Saloojee showed that he would not dance to the Guptas' tune, steps were taken to gain control of Denel and oust Mr Saloojee. This all started with Mr Gigaba seeking to facilitate cooperation between the Guptas and Mr Saloojee.

87.2 Mr Gigaba provided the Guptas with direct access to the Department of Public Enterprises by appointing Mr Mahlangu to manage the Guptas on his behalf, which entailed him interacting with the Guptas and helping them. The Commission is not aware of any other Minster whose relationship with the Guptas was such that he or she felt the need to appoint someone to serve as a buffer between him and the Guptas. A month or two after Mr Mahlangu's appointment), Mr Gigaba permitted Mr Mahlangu to attend a Gupta wedding in India, which was paid for by Sahara Computers. Mr Mahlangu was of the view that the trip was of "great political value". The fact that the Guptas saw value in inviting Mr Mahlangu to the wedding and sponsoring his trip, and the fact that he attended under Mr Gigaba's watch, speaks volumes – and was a sign of things to come.

87.2.1 In October 2012, Mr Mahlangu went on to arrange (and attended) a meeting between Mr Kona and the Guptas at their residence. As dealt with elsewhere in this Report, at this meeting, Mr Tony Gupta offered Mr Kona large sums of money (R100 000 and then R500 000), which he refused. This was the prelude to a discussion about the appointment of a consultant by SAA. Although Mr Mahlangu denied that cash was offered at this meeting, his version has been rejected. Mr Gigaba's denial that Mr Mahlangu gave him any feedback on the meeting appears improbable; but if he did not do so, it may have been because the events of the meeting were simply business as usual.

87.2.2 Amongst the various other meetings that Mr Mahlangu arranged (and attended) was a meeting between Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Dames (CEO of Eskom) at Sahara Computers. The meeting involved another pure operational issue – the supply of coal by the Guptas to Eskom. Mr Mahlangu's presence at this meeting (and similar ones) – in his capacity as Mr Gigaba's representative – was likely to have created the impression that the Guptas had Mr Gigaba's backing.

87.3 Mr Gigaba's involvement in the appointment of Mr Molefe (a friend of the Guptas) as the GCEO of Transnet in 2011. The appointment of Mr Molefe was predicted well in advance by The New Age (Gupta owned), he was nominated by Mr Sharma (another Gupta associate) and he was not even the highest-scoring candidate.

87.4 Mr Gigaba's involvement in the appointment of Mr Sharma as a director of Transnet in 2010 and attempt to have him appointed as the chairperson of the Transnet board in 2011 (only a year after his initial appointment). Mr Sharma had a matrix of business relationships with Mr Essa. Mr Sharma went on to become the chairperson of the BADC at Transnet, which took key decisions that favoured the Gupta enterprise.

87.5 Mr Gigaba's involvement in the irregular reinstatement of Mr Gama as the CEO of Transnet Freight Rail in 2011. As already found, here Mr Gigaba probably acted on the instruction of President Zuma, who was himself closely connected to the Gupta enterprise. After his reinstatement, Mr Gama was also centrally involved in key transactions that favoured the Gupta enterprise.

87.6 Mr Gigaba's appointment of Mr Essa as a director of BBI in 2011. As mentioned, Mr Essa was the Gupta money-laundering kingpin and had a matrix of business relationships with Mr Sharma. While Mr Essa was a director of BBI, it collaborated with T-Systems (also linked to the Gupta enterprise) in a contentious tender at Transnet.

87.7 Mr Gigaba's involvement in the appointment of Dr Rajesh Naithani as a director of SAA in 2012. Dr Naithani had been nominated by Mr Rajesh (Tony) Gupta, Mr Ashu Chawla (the CEO of Sahara Computers) appears to have modified a document explaining his qualifications, and Mr Mahlangu had raised with Mr Gigaba his misgivings about making the appointment, but he went ahead. According to Mr Gigaba, he was unaware of the first two points, and could not recall Mr Mahlangu raising his misgivings. Like with Mr Essa, there is no evidence of a proper vetting process having been conducted on Dr Naithani before his appointment.

87.8 Mr Gigaba's appointment of Mr Rafique Bagus as the chairperson of the board of Alexkor in 2012. Mr Bagus attended the Gupta wedding in Sun City in 2013, and his cell phone records reflect him having been in contact with Mr Sharma, Mr Chawla, Mr Ajay Gupta and Mr Tony Gupta over different periods of time. Mr Bagus was instrumental in the irregular award of a tender to SSI granting it exclusive rights to market and sell diamonds produced by the Alexkor joint venture. The majority shareholder in SSI was Mr Kubentheran Moodley (through his company Kimomode), who had no diamond industry background. Together with Mr Essa, Mr Moodley was a key role player in the Gupta enterprise.

87.9 Mr Gigaba's appointment of Mr Colin Matjila as the acting CEO of Eskom in March / April 2014 over Dr Steve Lennon (a divisional executive at Eskom) – the board's candidate who Mr Gigaba consented to before changing his mind for some reason. Following his appointment, Mr Matjila became embroiled in the irregular award of a contract to the Gupta owned TNA In the process, Mr Tony Gupta asked Mr Zola Tsotsi (the chairperson of the Eskom board) to make the investigation into Mr Matjila "go away". Mr Matjila was also prepared to sign a certain contract that Mr Essa was pursuing, which Eskom's financial director refused to sign.

87.10 Mr Gigaba issued an instruction in 2011 for Eskom to conclude a contract with TNA for the sponsorship of Business Breakfasts. In so doing, he interfered in the internal operations of Eskom to the benefit of the Guptas. (As dealt with elsewhere in this Report, there is evidence of Mr Gigaba (at least through Mr Mahlangu) also interfering in operational matters at SAA.)

88. With reference to the appointments mentioned above, Mr Gigaba contended that none of them was influenced by the Guptas, and, in effect, that any favouring by the persons concerned of the Guptas after their appointment was coincidental. This would be a remarkable coincidence.

89. It warrants mention here that evidence was presented by Mr Ernest Nekhavhambe of Fundudzi relating to an investigation undertaken by Fundudzi, which dealt in part with board appointments made while Mr Gigaba was the Minister of Public Enterprises. During the investigation, Ms Matsietsi Mokholo (an acting DG within the DPE) advised that Mr Gigaba introduced an informal way of making board appointments, with there being no framework or policy in place, and that this resulted in almost all names in respect of board appointments originating from Mr Gigaba's office. The Fundudzi investigation also revealed that the motivations for appointments to boards were sent by Mr Mahlangu to Mr Gigaba.

90. In sum, given the links between Mr Gigaba and the Guptas, the variety of acts or decisions that he was involved in that ultimately favoured them (or was intended to) and the fact that Mr Gigaba was prepared (on occasion) to do wrong for the Guptas, there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Gigaba was complicit to some extent in the operation of the Gupta enterprise. This conclusion is fortified by the fact that he received gratification from the Guptas, which is dealt with next.

Gratification from the Guptas

91. To recap, it has been found above that the Guptas employed Ms Nozipho Gigaba as a favour to Mr Gigaba and that there are reasonable grounds to believe or suspect (on the evidence of Witness 3 and Ms Mngoma) that Mr Gigaba received cash payments at the Gupta residence.

92. On a conspectus of the evidence, there are reasonable grounds to believe that this was a quid pro quo for Mr Gigaba's facilitation of co-operation, appointment of directors and executives and on occasion, his (or Mr Mahlangu's) intervention in the internal operations of SOEs falling under the DPE.

93. In relation to the other forms of gratification testified to by Ms Mngoma (a cash donation of R4 to R5 million towards the Gigaba wedding, a week-long trip to Dubai, cash used for the renovations to the home of Mr Gigaba's late father, the payment of at least R425 000 to settle the debts of Ms Nozipho Gigaba, and two watches), there are aspects of Ms Mngoma's evidence that are open to criticism. However, the findings in relation to Ms Nozipho Gigaba and the receipt of cash payments at the Gupta residence, give rise to there being at least a reasonable suspicion that such gratification was received by Mr Gigaba.

94. It warrants highlighting here that Mr Gigaba's belated version that Ms Mngoma is a woman of financial means and was able to fork out millions on their wedding is unsatisfactory.

The balance of Ms Mngoma's evidence

95. As for the balance of Ms Mngoma's evidence, there exists no need to make findings on an issue-by-issue basis; nor can they be reliably resolved.

96. While some of the specifics are thus left undetermined, reasonable grounds exist to accept the general tenor of Ms Mngoma's evidence. If she was hell bent on harming Mr Gigaba (as he alleged), she could certainly have done more damage in her evidence. Instead, she was circumspect in key aspects of her evidence – for example, by making it clear that Mr Gigaba only received cash while at the Gupta residence on two occasions.

School fees

97. In her evidence, Ms Mngoma said that Mr Gigaba would pay their children's school fees in cash. The Commission obtained an affidavit from the school bursar, Ms Johanna Rossouw, who stated that these cash payments of fees were made to the school: (i) 2015 – R22 450; (ii) 2016 – R136 404; (iii) 2017 – R143 668; (iv) 2018 – R154 328; (v) 2019 – R318 399; (vi) 2020 – R229 418; and (vii) 2021 – R14 461.

98. Mr Gigaba admitted making the cash payments and said that the source of the funds was from a stokvel and related investment in a livestock business, both of which were run by a friend of his, Mr Sduduzo Gumede.

99. Although Mr Gigaba put up a bland confirmatory affidavit by Mr Gumede, he tendered no proof of the source of money that he used to invest in the stokvel (or any financial records). In the years 2015 to 2018, Mr Gigaba was still a minister, and two additional large payments were made in the two years immediately following his resignation.

100. In the light of the finding that there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Gigaba received cash payments from the Guptas, in the absence of such proof, there exists at least a reasonable suspicion that the source of the cash for the school fees may have been the Guptas.

RECOMMENDATIONS

101. It has already been recommended (in the Report on Transnet) that, based on the evidence of Witness 3, the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to the cash payments allegedly received by him during visits to the Gupta residence in Saxonwold (during the period July to December 2013).

102. Similarly, it is recommended that, based on the evidence of Ms Mngoma, the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to the cash payments received by him during visits to the Gupta residence in Saxonwold in or about 2013.

103. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to the employment of his sister, Ms Nozipho Gigaba, by Sahara Computers in or about 2013.

104. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on a charge of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA and/or a racketeering charge in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA, to determine whether:

    104.1 The Guptas gave Mr Gigaba about R4 to R5 million in cash that was used to pay for the Gigaba wedding in August 2014

    104.2 The Guptas paid for the trip taken by Mr Gigaba and Ms Mngoma to Dubai in or about 2014 / 2015

    104.3 The Guptas gave Mr Gigaba cash used to effect renovations to his late father's home in Mandeni, KwaZulu-Natal in or about 2013 / 2014

    104.4 The Guptas gave Mr Gigaba R425 000 (or more) to pay off the debts of his sister, Ms Nozipho Gigaba, in or about 2013

    104.5 Mr Ajay Gupta gave Mr Gigaba two watches in Dubai during a trip there in or about 2013 – 2015; and

    104.6 The cash (or part thereof) used by Mr Gigaba to pay his children's school fees (or part thereof) in 2015 - 2021 emanated from the Guptas.

PRESIDENT CYRIL RAMAPHOSA

INTRODUCTION

1. Matamela Cyril Ramaphosa is the President of the Republic of South Africa and has held this position since former President Jacob Zuma resigned on 15 February 2018. This report deals with the evidence of President Ramaphosa as President of the country and as Deputy President of South Africa from 26 May 2014, during Mr Zuma's second term. Many of the events investigated by this Commission took place during this period.

2. He is also the President of the African National Congress (ANC), a position he has held since his election at the ANC's 54th National Conference in December 2017. He was the Deputy President of the ANC from December 2012 and previously the Secretary-General of the ANC from 1991 to 1997. Between 1997 and 2012, he held no official political position, but was a member of the ANC's National Executive Committee (NEC).

3. President Ramaphosa testified at the Commission in his capacity as the President of the ANC and former Deputy President of the ANC on 28 and 29 April 2021. He also testified at the Commission in his capacity as the President of South Africa, and former Deputy President of South Africa, on 11 and 12 August 2021.

4. President Ramaphosa summarised the three central questions posed to him as "what I knew, when I knew, what I did in response." These questions are critical to the work of the Commission. As the Deputy President and a member of Cabinet between 2014 and 2018, he was at the heart of the National Executive and privy to various events the Commission was mandated to investigate. In this capacity he worked with many individuals directly or indirectly implicated in corruption and state capture.

PRESIDENT RAMAPHOSA'S UNDERSTANDING OF STATE CAPTURE

5. The President spoke about his understanding of state capture. He confirmed that he believed state capture exists and emphasised the importance of the Commission's work in bringing it to light.
6. In summary, President Ramaphosa's understanding is that state capture:
   - 6.1 Is one of many forms of corruption
   - 6.2 Is an organised, systemic process or project
   - 6.3 Is conducted by a network of actors within and outside the state, acting in concert
   - 6.4 Involves the redirection of public resources away from the public good and towards private financial gain
   - 6.5 Involves the shaping of the "basic rules of the game" (laws, rules, regulations, policy-making processes etc.) of government
   - 6.6 Involves the repurposing of governance through the appointments of agents of state capture to governance structures, so they are positioned to disperse government benefits to select groups
   - 6.7 Does not include interest groups' influence over policy decisions where no illicit benefits are accrued
   - 6.8 Involves the use of ideological arguments in order to question legitimate institutions and conceal state capture under the guise of transformation
   - 6.9 Is facilitated by the deliberate weakening and exploitation of law enforcement agencies, which fail to hold the perpetrators accountable and are used to persecute the opponents of the state capture project
   - 6.10 Has become entrenched or embedded in the state
   - 6.11 Results in benefits to vested interests at the expense of the country, and her citizens, as a whole; and
   - 6.12 Is an assault on the democratic process and undermines the democratic constitutional order.

PRESIDENT RAMAPHOSA'S KNOWLEDGE OF AND RESPONSE TO STATE CAPTURE

The "sign posts"

7. He stated that many of the incidents of corruption or state capture became known to him through investigative journalism/reporting; Chapter 9 institutions; court cases and disciplinary proceedings; the Gupta leaks; and whistle-blowers. He made no mention of the security establishment or law enforcement agencies.
8. He was asked to detail the "sign posts along the way" that alerted him to state capture. He conceded that: there were a number of sign posts and you are absolutely right and if the impression was ever put forward that we really did not know that would be the wrong impression, because there were signs.
9. He dealt with three events in detail: the removal of Mr Nene, the removal of Mr Gordhan and the attempt to establish a commission of inquiry into the banks.
10. President Ramaphosa cited the admission made by Mr Fikile Mbalula, in an NEC meeting in 2011, that he had heard about his appointment to Cabinet from the Gupta family as one such sign post. This was not heeded, although it "startled many of us". He admitted that the NEC should have been more alert to such warning signs.

11. He cited the 2013 use of Waterkloof air force base by the Gupta's as a sign of state capture but could not offer any more examples. He stressed that those involved in state capture "hid their machinations".

The "five options" President Ramaphosa felt were available to him

12. President Ramaphosa explained his response to state capture revelations during his Deputy Presidency. He felt he had five options: resign; speak out; acquiesce and abet; remain and keep silent; or remain and resist. He chose to "remain and resist". He believed this to be the only way he could contribute to ending state capture and corruption in government.
13. The Chairperson commented that, although he could have been fired from the Executive, he would have remained as Deputy President of the ruling party, which is powerful position. He responded that the Deputy President is still "part of the collective". He did not acknowledge who would have removed him from his position. Only former President Jacob Zuma had the power to dismiss him but he gave no evidence why he believed he might be dismissed by former President Zuma.
14. The implication of his whole argument is that he believed that the former President was complicit in the state capture project and would abuse his power to further it and that he could not count on the ruling party to defend him.
15. He felt by remaining in office he could bring about change. His ability to "resist" was curtailed by the political reality of the time. His decision to remain as Deputy President – and subsequently to run for President of the ANC – was based on his desire to "shift the balance of forces".
16. His remarks imply that state capture involved a political project and not isolated, opportunistic acts of corruption. They imply that the project enjoyed powerful support in the state and in the ANC, as he was forced to 'resist' within government, choosing his battles, without challenging state capture outright. The natural conclusion is that the most dominant political faction – the ANC under President Zuma – permitted, supported and enabled corruption and state capture.
17. There is a pattern in the testimony of President Ramaphosa. He repeatedly testified to the existence of state capture and the role of the ANC therein, without providing any specific detail, and without implicating any individual members of his party.
18. President Ramaphosa was asked to elaborate on what actions he took to resist state capture as part of his strategy to "remain and resist". He cited his actions after the removal of Minister Nene, after the removal of Minister Gordhan and the attempt to set up a commission of inquiry into the banks. He testified that there were many "silent" battles fought behind the scenes but did not provide examples.
19. When asked why, if a substantial part of the executive were not complicit in state capture, was their opposition not more vocal and more frequent? His response was that they chose to be strategic by working within the system and "chose their battles" carefully.
20. He stated that their apparent silence should not be construed as complicity, as they had to carefully to choose when to act to make the largest impact. He did not dispute that the ruling party and the Executive were firmly controlled by those complicit in state capture.
21. President Ramaphosa deposed to an affidavit on 2 July 2019, which details his interactions with the Gupta family. He met the Gupta brothers on three or four occasions. In the same affidavit, he only mentioned Bosasa's funding of the ANC and his internal campaign for President of the ANC.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS AND DISMISSALS

22. President Ramaphosa was asked to address Cabinet appointments and removals relevant to the Commission's TORs.

The removal of Mr Nene

23. Former Finance Minister Nhlanhla Nene testified at the Commission that he was removed from this position by former President Zuma because of his opposition to certain corrupt deals, including the nuclear deal, the Denel Asia deal, and the SAA Airbus swap transaction. He provided substantial evidence of facts and circumstances corroborated by documentary and other evidence. He was informed by the former President that the decision to remove him was taken by the "Top Six" - reference to the six ANC officials of the NEC.

24. President Ramaphosa stated that he was not consulted by the former President, nor involved in any discussion, and this was not a decision taken by the "Top Six".

25. He said he believed that former Minister Nene's resistance to the nuclear deal may have informed the former President's decision to replace him. His removal signalled to President Ramaphosa that "the process of state capture had now succeeded to an extent that the most strategic organ of the state, Treasury, had now been captured." He did not indicate who he believed to be doing the 'capturing', although he conceded during his testimony that it was ". . . former President Jacob Zuma who did dismiss the minister."

26. He was asked about "Operation Spiderweb", a purported intelligence report that claimed Treasury had been captured by Apartheid-era intelligence operatives and "white monopoly capital" to control the country's finances. President Ramaphosa stated he did not know its origin but that the report was false and used to discredit those who were resisting the capture of Treasury.

The appointment of Mr Des van Rooyen as Minister of Finance

27. President Ramaphosa stated he was never consulted on the appointment of Mr van Rooyen and was notified as a matter of courtesy on 9 December 2015, shortly before the appointment was announced.

The appointment of Mr Pravin Gordhan as Minister of Finance

28. Shortly after the appointment of Mr van Rooyen, Mr Lungisa Fuzile, then Director-General of National Treasury, met with then Deputy President Ramaphosa. They discussed Mr Fuzile's interactions with Minister van Rooyen and the advisers he arrived with. Mr Fuzile expressed concern about the impact this development would have on the future ability of National Treasury to properly exercise its functions. President Ramaphosa was concerned by Mr Fuzile's account and the negative impact the announcement had on the markets, thus prompting him to act.

29. President Ramaphosa met with Ms Duarte, the Deputy Secretary-General of the ANC, and informed her that he would resign his position as Deputy President of the Republic as he believed that "the process of state capture had now succeeded to an extent that the most strategic organ of the state, Treasury had now been captured." Ms Duarte conveyed his message to former President Zuma.

30. He stated there was then a "flurry of consultations" that involved some ANC officials, expressing disquiet about Mr van Rooyen's appointment.

31. President Ramaphosa, Ms Duarte and Mr Mantashe informed the former President that he should instead appoint Mr Gordhan as Minister of Finance. President Ramaphosa argued that Mr Gordhan's appointment would be in the country's best interests and help to calm the financial markets.

32. When asked why Mr Nene was not reappointed, President Ramaphosa believed that the former President "would no longer be able to have a relationship of trust with Mr Nene." The Chairperson noted that this was inconsistent with a public statement issued by former President Zuma at the time, in which he spoke very highly of Mr Nene. President Ramaphosa stated this was "political speak."

33. President Ramaphosa cited his intervention in this case as one successful example of his "resistance" to state capture while Deputy President.

The removal of Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas

34. President Ramaphosa stated he knew no more about the alleged targeting of Minister Gordhan by law enforcement agencies than anyone else, and that it was not within his power to do anything about the decisions of those agencies. He Ramaphosa testified that he was merely informed of the Cabinet reshuffle announced by former President Zuma on 30 March 2017, in which Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas were removed from the Ministry of Finance.

35. President Ramaphosa detailed his recollection of the events leading up to and including that reshuffle:

    35.1 He had observed some deterioration of the relationship between the Mr Gordhan and Mr Zuma and that "it did not just suddenly happen".

    35.2 Before effecting the Cabinet reshuffle, former President Zuma met with the ANC officials (this contradicts his statement above).

    35.3 In this meeting, former President Zuma referred to what he described as an intelligence report, which asserted that Minister Gordhan and Mr Jonas were plotting to undermine the government. Their removal was purportedly as a result of the allegations contained in this report.

    35.4 The report was a "photographed piece of paper" which was "3 pages in very large font" and "very badly drafted". The document is known as 'Operation Checkmate'.

    35.5 He raised his concerns – that the Minister and Deputy Minister were being removed based on an unsubstantiated and spurious intelligence report – directly with former President Zuma during this meeting:

    35.6 At this meeting, former President Zuma proposed appointing Mr Brian Molefe to the position. The officials objected as Mr Molefe did not have the right "profile" and had left Eskom under a cloud.

    35.7 On 31 March, he stated publicly that he did not support President Zuma's decision to fire Minister Gordhan and some other ANC Officials also publicly objected.

36. President Ramaphosa considered this case to be another example of his resistance to state capture from within the state and party.

CABINET

37. The detail of how the Cabinet works and the role of Cabinet structures is set out in a statement by Dr Cassius Lubisi who was Cabinet Secretary for a decade, ending in August 2020.

38. Dr Lubisi explained the principles of collective responsibility, cabinet solidarity and cabinet confidentiality in his affidavit. When Cabinet decisions are taken in situations where, for example, vital members of the executive are not in attendance (as in the bank accounts matter) and important issues are discussed on a walk-in basis and without the required preparatory materials and discussions in sub-committees (as in the bank accounts and nuclear matters), these decisions must still be defended and protected by all members of the Cabinet. The public would have no way of knowing that these processes had been manipulated, had the Commission not investigated.

39. The evidence of Mr Ismail Momoniat concerning the functioning of Cabinet was put to President Ramaphosa. He had stated that in certain important occasions – the nuclear deal, the appointment of the SARS Commissioner, the Gupta bank accounts matter and others – the procedures ordinarily followed by Cabinet by way of preparation were not followed.

40. President Ramaphosa confirmed this statement. He agreed that Cabinet processes had been manipulated in this and other instances.

41. This evidence is important. It shows that under former President Zuma, decision making processes at the highest level were abused in order to facilitate a certain agenda. The way the Cabinet was run under the previous administration therefore provides an important insight into how state capture could have occurred.

42. President Ramaphosa stated that this has been improved under his Presidency.

MATTERS CONCERNING NATIONAL TREASURY

The Nuclear New Build Programme

43. President Ramaphosa detailed his knowledge of the nuclear programme in his statement. Unfortunately, there was no time to discuss this matter during his appearances.

44. President Ramaphosa noted: "In essence, the decision made by Cabinet at the time was that the project [NNBP] would not go ahead until and unless we were sure of its affordability." President Ramaphosa's characterisation of the situation is somewhat problematic. The problems with his version are detailed hereunder. Time constraints prevented the questioning of President Ramaphosa on these matters.

    44.1 The decision to proceed with the procurement process cannot reasonably be described as a decision to "not go ahead".

    44.2 Treasury had already determined that the procurement was unaffordable when this decision was made. Treasury had already strongly contested the viability of the 9.6GW procurement, and had provided feasibility, affordability and sustainability studies advising against procurement. President Ramaphosa did not explain why Cabinet decided to proceed.

    44.3 Cabinet minutes, cited by President Ramaphosa, reflect that the exchange rates cited in the Cabinet memorandum be updated to reflect current values. However, the gross underestimation of the exchange rates led to the cost implications of the memorandum being understated by about 40%. This would necessarily have a material impact on the conclusions and the recommendations of that memorandum.

    44.4 Documents provided to Parliament as well as the testimony of Mr Nene and Mr Fuzile show that the Department of Energy deliberately misled the Cabinet about the costs and risks of the nuclear energy project and misrepresented the findings of various cost analysis and feasibility studies.

    44.5 Cabinet did not ensure that adequate consultation had occurred.

    44.6 The public statement released on the Cabinet meeting makes no mention of the decision on the nuclear procurement. When confronted, the Cabinet spokesperson was unaware of the decision.

45. President Ramaphosa did not comment on whether the former President was personally driving the process forward with "reckless urgency", as testified to by Mr Nene, Mr Fuzile and Mr Gordhan. He did not overtly state whether he considered the nuclear deal to be corrupt or a part of state capture but he believed that the deal would have proceeded if Mr Nene had not resisted.

The Oakbay bank accounts matter

46. The Commission has heard extensive evidence on the closure by banks of bank accounts of Gupta owned entities, which is the subject of the Commissions TOR number 1.7.

47. President Ramaphosa's evidence, Mr Gordhan's evidence, as well as the statement provided to the Commission by Mr Momoniat to which President Ramaphosa refers, provide the most comprehensive account of Cabinet's intervention in the matter.

48. President Ramaphosa's recollection is that:

    48.1 The issue was raised on 13 April 2016 Cabinet meeting by then Ministers Zwane and van Rooyen, who conveyed their "dismay" in relation to what they considered to be the unequal treatment by banks and auditing firms of clients and advocated for the urgent reform of the banking system. President Ramaphosa considered it highly unusual for a matter relating to a private company to be raised and decided on by the Cabinet.

48.2 Cabinet decided that Ministers Zwane, Oliphant and Gordhan (not present at this meeting) would prepare a briefing memorandum on the implications of the decision of certain banks and auditing firms to close or withdraw services to Oakbay Investments.

48.3 The matter was discussed at a meeting held between the ANC Top Six and the Gupta brothers after the Cabinet meeting.

48.4 On 22 June 2016, President Ramaphosa was requested to chair the Cabinet meeting, despite the President being in attendance. Minister Zwane submitted a memorandum during the meeting which suggested that a commission of inquiry be established to inquire into the conduct of the banks. President Ramaphosa objected to this proposal as: it would be wholly inappropriate for a Commission of Inquiry to be established for the purpose of addressing unique challenges faced by one private company in the banking sector.

48.5 The memorandum was withdrawn before it could be discussed. Cabinet approved that the relevant Ministers brief the President and the Deputy President prior to the memorandum being brought back to Cabinet for discussion, but no such briefing took place.

48.6 At the following Cabinet meeting, 6 July 2016, the same agenda item was tabled, and a reformulated memorandum submitted. Mr Zwane briefed the Cabinet on the memorandum and referred to this as an Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC), but it was actually a task-team. Cabinet noted the progress made and that the memorandum required more work to be done. It was agreed that several further memoranda be prepared by Mr Gordhan relating to the banking and finance sector.

48.7 President Ramaphosa chaired the Cabinet meeting on 31 August 2016, in his capacity as Acting President. Cabinet noted that the memorandum had been leaked and published in the media that morning. It was agreed that the Cabinet Secretary would, in collaboration with the State Security Agency (SSA), investigate the security breach and report back to the Cabinet. Dr Lubisi indicates in his statement that he met with the then DG of State Security, Mr Arthur Fraser, and requested the matter be investigated, but no report was forthcoming despite multiple reminders sent to the DG. Allegedly, Bell Pottinger and the Gupta family were involved in this leak.

48.8 On 2 September 2016 Mr Zwane issued a statement with several “inaccuracies”. Later that day the Presidency issued a statement clarifying that Mr Zwane’s statement did not reflect government’s position and was issued in his personal capacity and not on behalf of the task team or Cabinet.

48.9 Former Finance Minister Gordhan took several steps to prevent government intervention, including making a court application in October 2016 to seek a declaration that he cannot interfere with banks’ decisions on account facilities. Before taking this step, Mr Gordhan sought the advice of President Ramaphosa, who agreed and gave him his full support.

49. President Ramaphosa describes the intervention sought regarding the banks “as an attempt to abuse state power in favour of a private company and in furtherance of its interests”. He also considered his opposition to Cabinet’s intervention in the matter to be an example of his resistance to state capture although Cabinet has no power to appoint a judicial inquiry, as this power resides solely with the President.

50. He, and others, resisted by insisting that “we should instead just find out exactly why these accounts are being closed”. It is not clear why President Ramaphosa thought it was acceptable for Cabinet to make such inquiries of the banks, nor did he explain what he thought would result from this process. As was made clear in the testimonies of Mr Ian Sinton and others, this process was used to intimidate the banks’ representatives and legitimate a narrative being used by the Gupta family. The involvement of Cabinet is thus highly questionable.

51. President Ramaphosa did not say why he believed there was such a strong push to establish a commission of inquiry into the conduct of the banks. The Cabinet minute of 22 June 2016, provided by President Ramaphosa, states that Cabinet approved the development of measures ensuring the "effective transformation of the financial and banking sectors" and Cabinet mandated the Minister of Finance to submit further memoranda.

52. President Ramaphosa did not include Mr Zwane's memorandum in his statement. (Mr Momoniat noted in his affidavit that neither Mr Gordhan nor the Treasury have ever seen this memorandum.)

53. Although former President Zuma repudiated Mr Zwane's statement on 2 September 2016, its contents were never disputed, and are somewhat similar to the Cabinet minute. Mr Zwane's statement provides insight as to the motivations behind the proposals which were adopted by Cabinet, and what the proposed commission of inquiry would be mandated to cover.

54. Mr Momoniat's affidavit, to which President Ramaphosa refers and does not dispute, notes that not only were the Guptas in dire need of banking services at the time, but they were simultaneously attempting to purchase a bank, a process which is controlled by National Treasury and the Reserve Bank. In fact, the Guptas had applied to purchase a private bank (Vardospan) to the Reserve Bank the day before then Minister Zwane's statement was released.

55. Elaborating on the leak during his testimony, President Ramaphosa said:

> It was one of those furious events where a cabinet memo was leaked, and we have never really had such in our cabinet system, that all of a sudden this one was leaked and it was leaked to achieve a particular end and a particular narrative which was being directed from somewhere.

56. While he did not specify who he believed to be directing this particular narrative, the natural inference is that the memo was leaked by the Gupta family, with the assistance of one of more members of Cabinet, possibly Mr Zwane and/or Mr van Rooyen.

57. The ANC in this case was acting knowingly in concert with Cabinet in this unlawful intervention into the affairs of the banks. The Top Six, which directed the ANC to engage with the banks at the behest of Oakbay included President Zuma and Deputy President Ramaphosa, who were party to the actions of Cabinet and the IMC. It is difficult for the Commission to believe that the ANC Officials acted completely independently of the Cabinet "task team".

58. President Ramaphosa did not provide evidence about former President Zuma's involvement in these events and did not testify about the motivations behind the actions of Mr Zwane and others. He did, however, characterise the saga as an example of state capture, and an example of successful push-back against state capture. The inference is that he considered Mr Zwane and the other Ministers, and possibly Mr Zuma, to be abusing their power to benefit the Gupta family.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

59. President Ramaphosa described in strong terms the role of law enforcement agencies in state capture.

60. He stated he had no knowledge of the reasons for the delays or failures of the Anti-Corruption Task Team and National Anti-Corruption Forum.

61. He detailed a number of steps he had taken as President to address this situation as part of his process of renewal and combating corruption by improving leadership and appointment processes and establishing various commissions of investigation.

INTELLIGENCE

The High Level Review Panel

62. President Ramaphosa gave evidence about his appointment of the HLRP into the conduct at the SSA, chaired by Dr Sydney Mufamadi. He claimed that the implementation of the HLRP recommendations are "at an advanced stage." It was put to him that the claim made in his statement – that the implementation of HLRP recommendations is at an advanced stage – was not a fair description, as the investigations have been halted, the documents have been put under lock and key, and the investigations must start again. President Ramaphosa agreed.

63. President Ramaphosa was asked why it was necessary for the HLRP to be established; surely the government should have known what was going on at the SSA. He responded that many state institutions were debilitated by state capture, and that the SSA was "compromised and operating under the milieu of state capture".

64. He was also asked about the hampering of the Veza investigation into the SSA, including how essential evidence and documentation were not made available to investigators.

65. It was put to President Ramaphosa that the state of the SSA was in fact a direct result of those in charge of State Security, which he conceded.

66. He was asked about the SSA's refusal to cooperate with law enforcement agencies and to withhold evidence from them. He characterised the issue as a problem of implementation and coordination between government entities, which occurred because each law enforcement agency has a "sense of proprietorship" over what they control. He confirmed that the documents were safe and that "the various processes that need to unfold will unfold."

67. President Ramaphosa was also asked if the unrest which occurred in July 2021 could be linked to operatives trained and armed by the SSA presidential security project. He felt that this proposition was "not unreasonable" and that there is a need to investigate the "lapse" of the SSA and how it "manifested itself from a certain beginning right up till what happened in July."

68. It was put to him that the events of the state security saga over a period from 2007 to now could hardly be termed a lapse. He did not disagree.

69. Ultimately, his evidence shows that that HLRP recommendations regarding internal investigations have come to a halt. The reason seems to be interference from the highest powers in the SSA and the Ministry, without apparent consequences.

70. Despite very serious findings made by the HLRP and the Veza investigation, against Mr Mahlobo, he was appointed into President Ramaphosa's cabinet as Deputy Minister of Water, Sanitation and Housing in May 2019. President Ramaphosa was asked to explain this appointment. He stated he was awaiting the outcome of the Commission's work. It was put to him that the question was not whether Mr Mahlobo was guilty, but whether he was suitable for such an appointment. President Ramaphosa repeated that he was awaiting this Commission's report.

71. The HLRP cited as a key finding that the Mr Mahlobo had presided over the SSA at a time when it showed "an almost complete disregard for the Constitution, policy, legislation and other prescripts" and that "there was more than enough information ... that former Minister Mahlobo, ..., involved himself directly in operations." It is unclear why President Ramaphosa would await further investigation.

72. Very serious findings were made against Mr Fraser over his co-ordination of the Principal Agent Network (PAN) and later during his tenure as DG of the SSA. Yet, in April 2018, he was redeployed by President Ramaphosa to be the DG of Correctional Services. When asked to explain this President Ramaphosa confirmed knowledge of some of the allegations against Mr Fraser, but said he was waiting for the Commission's report.

73. Three investigations have found evidence implicating Mr Fraser – the PAN report, the HLRP report and the Veza investigation. The PAN report recommends criminal prosecution of Mr Fraser. It is unclear why President Ramaphosa would not act until this Commission has made its recommendation.

74. The Chairperson noted that the release of the Commission's report is in no way a final end point, and that there is a high risk that nothing will be done for a long time while legal processes are ongoing. The President acknowledged that there might be delays but merely asserted that "we are going to take your findings very seriously."

75. The President's position is that it is acceptable to retain and actively appoint persons against whom serious allegations have been made, and against whom more than one official investigation has implicated serious misconduct and criminality.

76. The President's position is of great concern, particularly given his admission that the SSA, under the leadership of Mr Mahlobo and Mr Fraser, "was compromised and operating under the milieu of state capture." It is difficult to understand how he could reasonably consider them as suitable for appointment to senior positions.

77. President Ramaphosa was asked why he decided to take the SSA under his direct control within the Presidency. He explained that he was seeking to "realign" state security, to protect, professionalise and "disinfect it of any partisanship".

The Inspector-General of Intelligence

78. President Ramaphosa was asked to respond to allegations made by the Inspector General of Intelligence (IGI), Dr Dintwe, concerning the consultation process that took place before Dr Dintwe gave evidence at the Commission. He did so in his statement, but there was no time to discuss this during the hearings.

79. Section 7(8) of the Intelligence Services Oversight Act 40 of 1994 regulates the IGIs access to, and disclosure of, intelligence and information related to the performance of his functions.

    79.1 It is self-evident that the IGI may disclose any unrestricted intelligence or information without notifying any Service or the President. However, section 7(8)(b) sets three constraints on the IGI's power to disclose restricted intelligence or information. Applied to the present context, the IGI had a duty to consult the President and the Ministers before disclosing any restricted intelligence or information. This required that he engage in good faith and demonstrate a receptiveness to any concerns they may arise about disclosure of classified intelligence or information to the Commission.

    79.2 This duty to consult requires more than mere written notice, but it does not require approval for the intended disclosure. The IGI retains the discretion to disclose the relevant intelligence or information after consultation notwithstanding any disagreement that may arise.

80. Prior to any consultation with the Ministers, Dr Dintwe was approached by this Commission, and engaged with the investigators and the legal team. On 22 July 2020 the IGI sent a letter to the relevant Ministers and President in which he stated that the letter "serves to discharge the onus of consultation with the relevant persons as provided for in section 7(8)(b)(i) of the Oversight Act".

81. During his cooperation with the Commission's investigations, the IGI handed over three lever arch files on 28 July 2021. He retrieved these files from the Commission on 8 August 2020. The ensuing consultation with the President and Ministers was lengthy and difficult.

82. Dr Dintwe said that "an accusation" was made that he disclosed information to the Commission prior to the consultative process. Allegedly three Ministers lodged a complaint against him with the President and recommended his suspension. He received a letter from President Ramaphosa informing him that this complaint had been referred to the JSCI. Dr Dintwe believed this was done to intimidate him and prevent him from testifying at the Commission.

83. President Ramaphosa disagreed with the IGI's version. He believes that the IGI was not blameless, because he was in breach of the governing legislation by handing over files to the Commission "in blatant disregard of the legislative prescripts". He also said that it was "uniquely unfortunate that the IGI chose in his statement to this Commission to insinuate improper conduct on my part" and denied that he had taken any steps to intimidate Dr Dintwe or prevent him from testifying.

84. On the facts, the IGI disclosed information to the Commission prior to consultation. His letter to the Minister on 22 July 2020 did not discharge his legislative obligations of consultation. In this respect, the IGI was admittedly at fault, and the "accusation" that he had disclosed information prematurely was not baseless. However, it must be noted that in four days and 211 pages of evidence, the strongest language used by President Ramaphosa was that against Dr Dintwe. No other wrongdoer has been subject to such clear condemnation. Most have not even been named. Dr Dintwe's only fault was to release information to the Commission before consulting the President and three ministers. The following should be borne in mind:

    84.1 The Commission has a fact-finding mandate, and relies on the cooperation of witnesses, especially public functionaries. The IGI's co-operation with the Commission is consistent with its duty to act within the constraints of the law and its complementary duty to report criminal activity. It further reflects the openness and accountability that is characteristic of our new constitutional order based on a culture of justification rather than a culture of authority.

    84.2 The Commission's mandate is focused on inquiring into and reporting on criminal activity albeit particularly allegations of state capture, corruption and fraud. The SSA evidence, including that of the IGI, is critical to the Commission's work as allegations of state capture concern the kinds of activity that would pose a threat to national security and thus fall within the SSA's mandate. The IGI had a duty to cooperate with the Commission.

    84.3 In addition, the Constitution and the law does not afford protection to criminal activity in the security services under the guise of national security. On the contrary, the Constitution requires the security services to act in compliance with the law and, where it falls short, to be held to account.

    84.4 This has historically not been followed. There has been an overreliance on secrecy in the SSA, often to conceal criminality.

    84.5 It was only "restricted" information which the IGI consulted on. However, some of the evidence which the IGI shared with the Commission revealed criminality.

    84.6 Furthermore, on 7 October 2020, the Commission received a letter from the Presidency which stated, inter alia, that "declassification of the information they [the Commission] refer to or seek to make use of in fulfilling their terms of reference is not a prerequisite to them having access to or making use of the information at issue".

85. Dr Dintwe has a specific oversight mandate, as well as a duty to assist the Commission. In ensuring that the information did not reveal trade craft of the SSA or the names of any operatives, Dr Dintwe considered national security concerns. The corruption and criminality, he claimed, continued unabated. The response by the Ministers and the President therefore appears to be disproportionate, and the evidence suggests that the conduct of the Ministers amounted to intimidation and obstruction of the investigations.

86. It is remarkable that President Ramaphosa reserved his only harsh words and outright condemnation for Dr Dintwe. This position is starkly different to his position on Mr Mahlobo and Mr Fraser, who have had the benefit of waiting for the outcome of years of investigations, which have been obstructed at seemingly every turn – and possibly years of review proceedings after the release of the Commission's report – despite substantial evidence that they both have been complicit in compromising national security and subverting the SSA. President Ramaphosa appears to have no desire to act promptly in these cases.

THE PUBLIC DISCOURSE

87. After presenting his understanding of state capture, President Ramaphosa was asked to comment on the role of disinformation and misinformation in state capture. A 2017 statement he made concerning the terms “Radical Economic Transformation” (RET) and “White Monopoly Capital” (WMC) was put to him.

88. He stated that RET is a legitimate term describing a programme fostered by the governing party, but that it has been bastardised and mutated by “people doing wrong things”. He said that this was spread by media entities outside South Africa in order to achieve certain political objectives and advance state capture, and referred to Bell Pottinger, a UK-based firm which has been implicated in driving the spread of these narratives on behalf of the Gupta family. He added that these narratives had been used to destroy certain people, particularly through the spread of rumours on social media and media leaks.

ESKOM

Allegations made by Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Matshela Koko concerning Eskom

89. Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Matshela Koko, in their testimonies at the Commission, made certain allegations against President Ramaphosa. In the main, President Ramaphosa responded to three allegations:

    89.1 That his involvement in Optimum was designed to leverage his political influence to favour Glencore in its dealings with Eskom

    89.2 That his involvement in the "War Room" presented a conflict of interest due to his past interest in Optimum; and

    89.3 That he improperly interfered with the Eskom board in order to ensure the removal of Mr Koko in 2018, a decision which was motivated by state capture.

90. President Ramaphosa confirmed that he indirectly held 9.64% of Optimum Coal Holdings (OCH) through his company, Lexshell, from June 2012 to 22 May 2014. He was a non-executive chairperson of OCH from June 2012 until he resigned on 6 June 2013. He asserts that he had no operational involvement on OCH or Optimum Coal Mine (OCM) during this time.

91. President Ramaphosa refuted as false the allegation by Mr Molefe and Mr Koko that Glencore had sought to involve him in a business relationship with OCM in return for his political influence, as Glencore did not first acquire shares in OCH /OCM and then sell a percentage to him. Rather, President Ramaphosa was, through Lexshell, part of a consortium with Glencore that acquired shares in OCH jointly.

92. Mr Molefe and Mr Koko further alleged that Glencore/OCH failed to conduct a due diligence when they acquired OCM because they knew they could rely on President Ramaphosa’s political influence to ensure Eskom treated them favourably.

93. President Ramaphosa testified that he was not in government at the time Glencore acquired OCH. Furthermore, according to him, listed entities are often purchased without due diligence exercises as they rely on published information; and OCM was merely a subsidiary of OCH, so a due diligence wouldn’t have been performed on (potentially one of many) subsidiaries.

94. President Ramaphosa sought to clarify some confusion on the matter of the "War Room".

    94.1 The former President assigned him to oversee two intervention measures decided upon by Cabinet in December 2014.

    94.2 The first intervention measure concerned the establishment and implementation of turnaround strategies for Eskom and two other SOEs (South African Airways and South African Post Office). President Ramaphosa emphasised this was a supervisory role and he was not involved in operational decisions.

94.3 The second intervention measure was a five-point plan for Eskom in order to address the pressure on the country's electricity system. A "Technical Implementation War-room on the Electricity Crisis", known as the "War Room", was established to focus on issues that required collaboration between departments and entities concerned, and resolve blockages where they occurred, relating to Eskom's electricity supply shortages. War Room matters were dealt with by department officials, overseen in day-to-day matters by a set of Deputy Ministers.

94.4 President Ramaphosa provided political leadership, as he was the Chair of the IMC on Energy, which functioned above the War Room, to coordinate the relevant work at cabinet and ministerial level.

95. President Ramaphosa testified that, as he had no operational involvement in the "War Room" he had no conflict of interest.

96. Mr Molefe further alleged that President Ramaphosa had failed to allow for a "cooling off" period after he disposed of his interests in Optimum, so that any potential conflict of interest could be dissipated. President Ramaphosa said he was appointed by former President Zuma, who had full knowledge of his past and present financial interests. He considered his disposal of assets and declaration of interests to be sufficient to rule out any conflict of interest.

97. He testified that he and Ms Lynne Brown, the former Minister of Public Enterprises, took the decision to remove Mr Matshela Koko. He said that this was an exceptional situation as Eskom was in "dire straits" which justified the government "taking control of the impending crisis". He further asserted that Mr Koko's removal was part of a package of reforms intended to avert a crisis.

The suspension of Eskom executives and the appointment of Brian Molefe

98. President Ramaphosa testified that he was unaware of the meeting between former President Zuma, Ms Dudu Myeni, Mr Zola Tsotsi and others in March 2015, in which a plan was conceived to establish an inquiry within Eskom and suspend certain Executives.

99. When asked whether he inquired into these suspensions, given his stated decision to resist activities related to corruption or state capture, he stated that that the suspensions caused him to realise that "there were just too many initiatives that were all happening at the same time". Although he was frustrated with the situation at Eskom, he did not suspect anything untoward at the time, and was unaware of the appointments of persons linked to the Gupta family.

100. He stated that, subsequent to the suspension of Eskom's CEO, Mr Matona, he had suggested the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe as CEO to the former President. He had no knowledge of Mr Molefe's connection to the Gupta family.

101. He was asked to explain why things "went south" at Eskom when the IMC was supposed to oversee the turnaround, which he claimed made notable progress in 2015. He responded that the IMC had only dealt with 'strategic issues', not operational issues, and that Eskom was a complex operation.

PRASA

Allegations made by Mr Popo Molefe, former Chairperson of the PRASA Board

102. President Ramaphosa was asked to address Mr Popo Molefe's evidence that he was informed as a member of the ANC Top Six about corruption and state capture at Public Rail Association of South Africa (PRASA) and failed to act.

103. He testified that he attended a meeting with Mr Molefe, as a member of the Top Six, in July or August 2015. He recalled that Mr Molefe raised acts of corruption at PRASA as well as attacks against himself and the board by Mr Lucky Montana. He did not recall that Mr Molefe raised the issue of a beneficiary of a R3,5 billion locomotive contract who had been asked to donate R79 million to the ANC.

104. Mr Molefe had testified that the ANC leadership had remained silent and failed to act against ongoing attacks on PRASA and the board, which he had been deployed to lead by the ANC. President Ramaphosa testified that Mr Molefe "received nothing else but support" and that the ANC leadership was of the view that Mr Molefe had to use the structures of the state, and not the party, to deal with these challenges:

105. President Ramaphosa said that Mr Molefe had the capability to act, and that it was disingenuous to suggest that he needed support from the ANC leadership. The Chairperson noted that Mr Molefe had indeed attempted to use the means at his disposal to address the issues at PRASA, but that the state machinery was not operating as it should, and that he therefore may have sought the help of the party.

106. President Ramaphosa denied as "inconceivable" the allegation made by Mr Molefe that the ANC leadership remained inactive because they wanted the board to collapse.

107. The evidence shows that Mr Molefe tried to address corruption at PRASA through all the means available to him. He approached the Top Six and the Deputy President, who did nothing. President Ramaphosa did not adequately explain why he and the Top Six failed to support Mr Molefe.

The failure to appoint the Board and CEO

108. President Ramaphosa was questioned on the failure of the minister and cabinet to appoint a PRASA board for more than three years (until forced to do so by the High Court), and the failure to appoint a CEO for more than five years. The consequent instability in the institution had "contributed to the collapse of the control environment of PRASA" during a period of ballooning irregular expenditure.

109. President Ramaphosa responded that it is the responsibility of the Minister to make these appointments. The Chairperson of the Commission pointed out that a minister is under the supervision of the President and Cabinet, "so if the minister failed to do her job, then the President ought to pick that up."

110. President Ramaphosa conceded that "errors have occurred" because of the "silo style of work" in the Executive. He claimed his reforms would prevent lapses in the future.

TRANSNET

Implicated persons

111. President Ramaphosa was questioned in relation to four individuals: Mr Siyabonga Gama, Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Iqbal Sharma and Mr Malusi Gigaba.

112. He stated that he had no knowledge of former President Zuma's support for Mr Gama. In relation to Mr Gama's appointment as Group CEO in 2016, he confirmed that his appointment was discussed by the ANC Deployment Committee and that he was the only candidate considered.

113. He confirmed that he had proposed to former President Zuma his secondment from Transnet to Eskom as he was unaware of Mr Molefe's links to the Guptas, despite the relationship not being secret.

114. President Ramaphosa stated that it was not unusual that Mr Gigaba was promoted from Deputy Minister of Home Affairs to Minister of Public Enterprises. President Ramaphosa averred that he had no knowledge of Mr Gigaba's links to the Guptas and the evidence that Mr Gigaba acted in their interests.

115. It was put to the President that "the Transnet experience shows abuse by unscrupulous individuals and organisations of the supplier development partner initiative." President Ramaphosa testified that his SOE council would look at the management of the BEE process.

116. He was asked to address the unnecessary use of consultants where state institutions have the expertise and capacity to do the work. He agreed that this should be addressed by the SOE council and by the government generally.

117. Given the scale and circumstances of the looting identified by the Commission he was asked: "How is it possible that no-one in a position of power that was not complicit identified this and raised the red flag as you call it? How is it conceivably possible?"

118. President Ramaphosa responded:

> It is possible and conceivable in a state capture type of environment, where the capture of the state goes through a number of structures, and where those who will then (sic) everything into action have got protection. They have got the connections. They have got the access and made sure that people who are going to implement this [are] also their appointed people.

OTHER ISSUES

Mr Nkwinti

119. The legal team had intended to deal with issues related to the affidavit of Mr Gugile Nkwinti and the Department of Rural Development and Land Reform (DRDLR). Unfortunately, there was no time to do so. Mr Nkwinti's allegations are summarised here, although President Ramaphosa did not have an opportunity to respond.

    119.1 Mr Nkwinti claimed he had informed President Ramaphosa (and other ANC officials) of a scheme called 'Project Mangaung', to raise funds for former President Zuma's campaign to be re-elected at the 2012 National Conference of the ANC, by using the DRDLR to purchase certain farms at inflated prices. Nothing came of his report.

    119.2 He gave evidence about his attempt to discipline his former Director-General, Mr Mduduzi Shabane. He received permission from President Ramaphosa but claimed that President Ramaphosa later asked him to withdraw disciplinary action as he was "in trouble" with the former President.

    119.3 Mr Nkwinti also expressed concern that President Ramaphosa had appointed Mr Shabane as DG in 2019, even though he had been dismissed in 2017 and had been implicated in an SIU corruption report.

SAA

120. President Ramaphosa briefly addressed the 2016 SAA board in his statement:

> On 31 August 2016 . . . the Cabinet agreed to a new Board being appointed for SAA. . . . Since President Zuma was overseas at the time and I was Acting President, I discussed the matter with him over the phone . . . , and the resulting decision was made with his concurrence. Ms Dudu Myeni was retained on the Board and as chairperson, on the understanding that her final term on the Board would end in 2018.

121. Unfortunately, there was no time to pursue this issue with President Ramaphosa. His preliminary evidence shows that former President Zuma was personally involved in the appointment of the SAA board in August 2016.

ADDRESSING STATE CAPTURE

122. President Ramaphosa detailed a number of steps taken to address both the causes and consequences of corruption and state capture.

123. In his estimation, the primary means of preventing corruption is through the appointment of "fit for purpose" persons, strengthening of procurement systems, and systematic implementation of the legislation controlling public funds, such as the PFMA and MFMA.

124. The National Anti-Corruption Strategy was approved by Cabinet in November 2020. It has six pillars which he believes will address and prevent future corruption.

Institutional changes

125. President Ramaphosa stressed the “critical need to strengthen the capacity of the state, at all its levels”. Many steps have already been taken to this end and have been discussed here and in other testimonies. Others have not been finalised and appear to remain proposals.

As Deputy President

126. In terms of SOE reforms, President Ramaphosa detailed the following processes and reforms:

    126.1 In December 2014 he was tasked to oversee the turnaround of SAA, SAPO and Eskom.

    126.2 In February 2015, Cabinet approved twelve reforms drawn from the report of the Presidential Review Committee (PRCs) on SOEs and established an IMC to build on the work done in respect of SAA, SAPO and Eskom. The SOE IMC was to report back to Cabinet in June 2015.

127. By the Cabinet lekgotla of August 2016, the following had been done:

    127.1 A draft shareholder policy had been drafted

    127.2 A draft handbook for SOE board appointments had been drafted

    127.3 A draft policy to address the empowerment of SOE boards had been produced

    127.4 The Committee of DGs and a Technical Committee to support the IMC had been established and was operational

    127.5 A draft framework for private-public partnerships for infrastructure projects had been drafted; and

    127.6 An SOE Council had been established.

WHAT DID HE KNOW, WHEN DID HE KNOW IT, AND WHAT DID HE DO ABOUT IT?

128. The President’s answers go some way towards answering these questions, but unfortunately leave some important gaps.

129. He readily acknowledges the existence of state capture as a coordinated project and has made much of his drive to right the wrongs of state capture. But the question of what he knew is still opaque. He mentioned very little in the way of personal, first-hand evidence, and stressed that those involved in state capture conducted their business in secret. He claims to have only known as much as the general public.

130. Yet, he was at the heart of government from May 2014. His version was that he saw nothing during this time – except for the removal of Minister Nene, the removal of Minister Gordhan, and the attempt by some Ministers to intervene in the bank accounts matter – that raised any alarm bells. As Deputy President he purports he had no real insight into the workings of government. Given how many other senior government officials, including former ministers, have testified to witnessing blatant corruption, however, it is difficult to accept this explanation as complete.

131. He failed to give a concrete answer to the question of when he knew that state capture was occurring. Given the evidence above, it must have been before December 2015, It is not clear what occurred between the Waterkloof landing in April 2013, which he conceded was not adequately responded to, and December 2015 that led the him to this conclusion.

132. The when is important. His first act of "resistance", according to him, occurred in December 2015. The ruling party failed to respond in any significant way until 2017. How long was he aware of state capture before he decided to act? Was he aware of various corrupt activities during his term as Deputy President, but not yet cognisant of state capture? If so, what did he do about them? The Commission must understand the when in order to determine whether those at the very centre of the Executive were complicit, negligent, or ignorant of what was occurring.

133. Serious and credible allegations of corruption against the Gupta family and several powerful individuals, including former President Zuma, were consistently raised by journalists and civil society as early as 2010. It is unclear when President Ramaphosa concluded that these concerns were valid and needed to be acted upon, and what was the tipping point in his reaching that conclusion.

134. The question what did he know must be accompanied by another question: ought he to have known? The wealth of evidence before this Commission suggests that the answer is yes. There was surely enough credible information in the public domain, long before December 2015, to at least prompt him to inquire and perhaps act on a number of serious allegations. As the Deputy President, he surely had the responsibility to do so.

135. The next question is: what did he do about it? He claimed that he chose to remain within government in order to resist state capture. Yet, he only gave three examples of his resistance.

136. He claimed that he would have been dismissed if he had been more confrontational. Yet he provided no evidence as to why he believed this was the case.

137. He must have believed that the ruling party would not defend him and that the ANC would have protected a President who fired his Deputy President for the crime of confronting corruption. This aligns with his broader contention that his ability to act was curtailed by the political reality of the time – the "balance of forces" in power in the ruling party and in the National Executive. This is an indictment on the party and its leadership.

138. However, his intervention in preventing the permanent appointment of Mr van Rooyen as Finance Minister was confrontational and effective. It worked, despite the balance of power. He was not dismissed and did not face any consequences for his action. It is difficult, then, to understand why other allegations in the public domain continued to go unaddressed for so long.

139. He asserted that those who pushed back from within were able to curb some of the excesses of state capture. Was this enough? It is indisputable that state capture continued during the years that he was "resisting", and that the consequences (to the economy, to government, to South African society) have been severe. Considering the dire straits the country finds itself in, the effectiveness of President Ramaphosa's decision to remain and resist within the state and party is not a given.

140. While no counterfactual can be proven, we must ask whether these processes could have been arrested sooner had powerful figures, like President Ramaphosa, been willing to act immediately. The crux of President Ramaphosa's "balance of forces" explanation is that any other approach would not have been allowed by the ruling party, and he and others were unwilling to damage the ANC by publicly going against it.

141. This is one of the reasons we must now turn our attention to the role of the ANC in state capture - the subject of the next section of this report.

THE ROLE OF THE RULING PARTY

INTRODUCTION

1. Understanding the role of the African National Congress (ANC) is vital to understanding state capture in South Africa. It has been the only governing party since the advent of democracy in South Africa in 1994, and specifically during the years under review. It has been responsible for deploying persons to the highest positions in the state. It has a significant majority in Parliament, allowing it effectively to control oversight of the Executive. State capture happened under its watch.
2. In addition, various ANC leaders have been implicated by witness testimony at the Commission. There has also been substantial evidence that the party itself was a beneficiary of state capture, as it received payments from third parties who are alleged to have corruptly acquired government contracts.
3. It is necessary therefore to interrogate the role of the party in:
   3.1 Actively engaging in corrupt activities for its own gain
   3.2 Allowing corrupt activities to continue under its watch and failing to intervene to prevent or halt such activities; and
   3.3 Creating the framework for corruption and state capture to flourish.

STRUCTURES OF THE ANC

4. The National Conference is the supreme ruling and controlling body of the ANC and is convened every five years. It decides on and determines the policies and programmes of the ANC.
5. The National Executive Committee (NEC) is the highest organ of the ANC between National Conferences and has the authority to lead the organisation, subject to the provisions of its Constitution.
6. The President, Deputy President, National Chairperson, Secretary-General, Deputy Secretary-General and Treasurer-General of the ANC are known collectively as the National Officials or, informally, the "Top Six".
7. The National Working Committee (NWC) is elected by the NEC and is expected to conduct the current work of the ANC and to ensure ANC structures carry out the decisions of the party. It is composed of the Top Six, up to twenty directly elected NEC members, and one representative from the Women's League and one from the Youth League. The NWC meets every two weeks.

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PARTY AND STATE

8. In his first appearance before the Commission on behalf of the party, the ANC's Secretary-General Gwede Mantashe stated that "the ANC believes that a key outlook of the Commission should be the relationship between the party and the state."
9. As correctly noted by Mr Mantashe and President Ramaphosa, the party is an essential part of South Africa's democratic framework, which is that of a multiparty system with proportional representation. It is not in question that the ruling party, by virtue of its election, sets the policy of the government of the day. However, the interface between the party and state is of concern to the Commission.
10. It is clear that the ANC took on the responsibility of being the leader in society, in the process of liberation, in the establishment of the constitutional and democratic state, and the furtherance of the interests of the population as a whole. This is evident from this statement made by President Ramaphosa:

In such circumstances, political parties do not merely represent their members, but often act as instruments to advance the needs and interests of entire sections of society. ... This is among the reasons that the ANC describes itself as a "liberation movement" first and foremost that, among other things, contests elections as a registered political party.

10.1 However, the decision by the ANC to ignore a number of allegations directed at Mr Jacob Zuma and the influence of the Gupta family on key functions in the state, as well as obstructing various avenues to achieve accountability in this regard, has seen the ANC sacrifice its public duty in order to protect itself.

10.2 The justification for the latter is the belief that the fate of the ANC is inextricably linked to that of the public or society. Mr Mantashe told the Commission that “Impulsive action, I believe, could unleash a set of negative forces which would have a detrimental impact on the democratic gains we have made thus far. The ANC can never take the Samson option.”

11. Mr Mantashe was also unequivocal about the role of the party in terms of state power. He said: “Our immediate goal is to deepen the hold of the liberation movement over the levers of the state.” He explained that the ANC did not cease to govern after it is elected, and that it must meaningfully engage in governing, and that in fact “state entities are tools in the hands of the governing party in order to execute its programs.”

12. President Ramaphosa said that some degree of political involvement in administration is “essential for the proper functioning of a democracy” as the political administration needs to be able to change policy direction. However, he said that the ANC recognises that political involvement in administration should be “circumscribed by legislation, convention and practice.” He said that there needed to be a “balance” between political considerations, technical proficiency, and objectivity.

13. Mr Mcebisi Jonas gave his opinion during his evidence on the conflation of party and state. He stated that the easiest vehicle through which to capture the state is through the capture of the ruling party, where the party becomes an instrument for the project of wealth accumulation. State institutions, particularly the public service, are the product of and are bound to the political life cycle where elections are the beginning and the end. He said that even within the elected ruling party there exist factions and contests which affect the constitution of the public service. Mr Jonas said:

> It is what I would call the political system that we have. ... In our system, if you kind of cut out the frills again, you have a particular relationship between the state and the party. Now firstly the – you go into elections and elect a party. And normally whilst the party gets elected of course, the party goes to its own conference. Once it goes to its own conference, it takes power to provinces, it takes to provincial executives, it notionally takes it to the national executive. Ultimately power then gets taken to the working committee, and at a later point then power gets taken to another committee, the Top Six. Then later on it gets taken to the President basically. ... I think ultimately you going to have a problem where capturing the party is the easy vehicle of capturing the state.

CORRUPTION AND STATE CAPTURE

14. President Ramaphosa has conceded the existence of corruption, the existence of state capture, and the role of the ANC therein. He has conceded not only that there has been corruption, but that it is both continuing and pervasive, in government and in the party.

15. A particularly clear example of this appears in a letter written by President Ramaphosa to ANC members in August 2020, titled "Let this be a turning point in our fight against corruption". The letter discusses the corruption problem at length and says that the ANC “needs to take responsibility.” In the letter he continued:

> We must acknowledge that our movement, the African National Congress, has been and remains deeply implicated in South Africa’s corruption problem. ... Today the ANC and its leaders stand accused of corruption. The ANC may not stand alone in the dock, but it does stand as Accused No.1. This is the stark reality that we must now confront.

16. President Ramaphosa repeatedly emphasised that the party has "drawn a line in the sand" and is committed to renewal and change. However, these statements – acknowledging corruption within the party and promising to fight it – are not new. As he put it in his statement, the ANC has long recognised the existence of corruption within the democratic state, that some members of the ANC are complicit in this corruption, and that such corruption undermines our democracy and the integrity of the ANC.

17. It is uncontested that:

    17.1 Corruption, within the ranks of the ANC, had been recognised and acknowledged for over twenty years.

    17.2 The various forms of corruption so acknowledged included: the looting of public resources; the abuse of state power; patronage; bribery; vote-buying; nepotism; state capture; and others.

    17.3 Corruption has not declined but worsened as evidenced in the media.

    17.4 The ANC as a "leader of society," as controller of the "levers of power," has been unable to halt or even significantly slow down corruption.

18. Unfortunately, neither President Ramaphosa nor Mr Mantashe offered any explanation of why the party's previous attempts to deal with these problems have failed, and why any such attempts might now succeed. If Mr Mantashe gave any explanation, it would be that he said that the ANC is a very "slow" organisation.

THE ANC'S RESPONSE TO STATE CAPTURE

19. In his opening statement to the Commission, President Ramaphosa said:

> State capture took place under our watch as the governing party. It involves some members and leaders of our organisation and had fertile ground in the divisions and weaknesses and the tendencies that have developed in our organisation since 1994. ... We all acknowledge that the organisation could and should have done more to prevent the abuse of power and the misappropriation of resources that defined the era of state capture.
> Particularly the period under review by this Commission, the ANC does admit that it made mistakes as we have admitted in our various conferences. We made mistakes as it sought to execute the mandate that it was given by the voters. It had shortcomings and living up to the expectations of the people of South Africa in relation to enforcing accountability and in generating a culture of effective of consequence management.

20. Despite the general acknowledgement by President Ramaphosa that the ANC was itself 'implicated' in relation to corruption and state capture, both he and Mr Mantashe also denied that the party itself was complicit in state capture.

    20.1 Mr Mantashe was emphatic that individual members may have been 'captured' but that the party remains innocent. However, it appears that the party did little to prevent the abuse of power from those "captured" members.

21. The party's failure to act against state capture for an extensive period of time was discussed during both President Ramaphosa's and Mr Mantashe's evidence.

22. The early warning signs of state capture included the following:

    22.1 It is clear that the particular issue of the influence of the Gupta family was being discussed within the party as early as 2011.

22.2 Mr Fikile Mbalula reported to the NEC in 2011 that the Guptas had foreknowledge of his appointment to as Minister of Sport and Recreation.

22.3 The Waterkloof landing in April 2013 caused much consternation.

22.4 Various newspaper articles demonstrated that credible allegations that the Gupta family were engaged in corruption were publicly known since at least 2011.

23. The ANC failed to act on these claims in any way over a span of at least five years. President Ramaphosa conceded that "there was a dropping of the ball," and that, in hindsight, the party should have been more alert to such warning signs. President Ramaphosa remarked in his statement that the ANC did not have direct evidence of state capture "at the time" and did not have the investigative capacity to probe various allegations as they emerged.

24. Mr Mantashe testified that the Integrity Commission of the ANC had recommended that Mr Zuma step down in 2013, following the Waterkloof incident. Nothing came of this recommendation.

25. Dr Popo Molefe testified that he had met with the ANC Top Six to inform them of serious corruption at PRASA. Dr Molefe had testified that the ANC leadership had remained silent and failed to act against ongoing attacks on PRASA and the Board, which he had been deployed to lead by the ANC. President Ramaphosa admitted that that meeting took place. He said that Mr Molefe had said he was going to use to state institutions to deal with corruption at Prasa and that was supported. The ANC leadership was of the view that Dr Molefe had to use the structures of the state, and not the party, to deal with these challenges:

25.1 President Ramaphosa said that Dr Molefe, as Board chairman, had the capability to act, and that it was disingenuous to suggest that he needed support from the ANC leadership to do so. However, the fact is that Dr Molefe did try to address corruption at PRASA through the means available to him is borne out by the evidence. Mr Molefe and his Board approached the courts to deal with corrupt contracts. They received no support from the Minister, the Portfolio Committee, nor the Speaker of Parliament. The Hawks failed to act. He approached the ANC leadership for support in light of the obstacles they were facing.

25.2 President Ramaphosa denied as "inconceivable" the allegation made by Dr Molefe that the ANC leadership remained inactive because they wanted the Board to collapse.

26. In December 2015, the former President, Mr Zuma, dismissed the finance Minister, Mr Nene, and replaced him with Mr Des van Rooyen. President Ramaphosa, with other senior ANC officials, managed to convince the former President to appoint Mr Gordhan in the position instead. Despite President Ramaphosa's conviction that this was a clear sign of state capture, and their apparent success in resisting it, the party did not act further, in relation to other matters.

27. In 2016 various approaches were made to the ANC to report corruption and state capture, or to call for action from the party.

27.1 In March 2016, Mr Mcebisi Jonas issued a media statement that the Guptas had attempted to bribe him. Mr Jonas's revelation was swiftly followed by others, including reports by Ms Barbara Hogan, Ms Vytjie Mentor and Mr Themba Maseko.

27.2 Party veterans Mr Jeff Maqetuka, Mr Moe Shaik, General Siphiwe Nyanda and Mr Jabu Moleketi met with Ms Jessie Duarte, Mr Gwede Mantashe and Mr Zweli Mkhize at ANC Headquarters, Luthuli House on 31 March 2016 to discuss their concerns. These included a view that ANC polices were being subordinated due to the influence of a few comrades and that many people working in state institutions were beholden to the Gupta family; and that many members of the NEC expressed the view that the environment was such that they were afraid to speak out about what was happening in the ANC.

27.3 In March 2016, the Oliver and Adelaide Tambo Foundation, the Nelson Mandela Foundation and the Ahmed Kathrada Foundation wrote jointly to the NEC, calling for "urgent corrective action". The letter reads in part as follows:

> All South Africans have a living memory of the freedoms we have won and experienced. We cannot sit back and watch those freedoms being taken away. It is in this respect that it seems to us that the ANC has significantly drifted away from the ideals to which our Founders and many others, dedicated their lives. We are disturbed by accounts we receive from students, religious leaders, members of our community, the media and from civil society organisations about the disillusionment of our people and their waning trust in the ANC as a result of the unfolding events. We believe we have reached a watershed moment. We appeal to the National Executive Committee of the ANC as they meet over the weekend to take note of the mood of the people across the country, to reflect deeply on their solemn responsibilities, to make urgent choices, and to take urgent corrective actions in the best interest of South Africa and its peoples. We make this call to remain true to our Founders and to continue their life's work to champion the cause of freedom and democracy for our people. It is for these that they were "prepared to die". History will judge the ANC leadership harshly if it fails to take the decisions that will restore the trust and confidence of the people of South Africa. In the true spirit of our Founders we offer our experience and expertise in any manner that might assist in facilitating a critical process of dialogue in which South Africans can find one another in the restoration of visionary cohesion and nation-building at this hour of need. Our doors are open!

27.4 In March 2016, a memorandum was sent by 101 former members of uMkhonto we Sizwe to the Top Six of the ANC expressing their concerns about developments in the country and the ANC, in particular with regard to the Guptas.

27.5 In April 2016, a group of former Directors-General with histories in the liberation movement, wrote a letter to members of Cabinet calling for various interventions to address state capture. Nothing ever appeared to come of this and the group of former officials disbanded.

27.6 In May 2016, the Top Six met with General Anwa Dramat, Mr Robert McBride, Mr Ivan Pillay and others, all of whom held senior positions in law enforcement. They "provided details of efforts to isolate them and drive them out of their positions in the State."

27.7 Further meetings were held by members of the Top Six (Ms Duarte, Mr Mantashe and Mr Mkhize) with representatives of Business Leadership South Africa, with ANC veterans, the South African Council of Churches and senior ANC comrades where it appears all groups highlighted serious concerns about corruption and state capture.

27.8 President Ramaphosa also cited a number of other actions taken by those within the Tripartite Alliance.

28. This chronology reflects just how long the ANC waited to do anything, despite repeated calls from its own members and political allies to act.

The ANC acts

29. In March 2016, the ANC NEC published a media statement in which it rejected the notion of any business or family group seeking influence over the ANC. The NEC simultaneously mandated the Top Six and the NWC to gather information about the allegations concerning the Gupta family and their purported influence in the State appointments, in order to "enable the ANC to take appropriate action on this matter."

30. In May 2016, Mr Mantashe reported that, in response to the ANC's invitation to its members that those with knowledge of state capture should approach the Secretary General, only eight ANC members had made oral submissions, only one of whom made a written submission. Among the issues raised were:

30.1 The public allegations about the Gupta family offering cabinet positions to people

30.2 The fact that three former Directors-General had spoken about the authority that the Gupta family appeared to have; they firmly believed that failing to comply with instructions issued by the Guptas would be career-limiting

30.3 Concerns that the "playing field" was not level in competing for business opportunities and that the BEE program was being undermined. (“If you are not working with the Guptas you get elbowed out”); and

30.4 The systematic corroding of SOEs such as Transnet, Eskom, Safcol, South African Airways and Alexkor.

31. Mr Mantashe also reported that ANC members believed that making submissions to the ANC would have the effect of exposing them instead of helping the organisation to deal with the problem, and that “for their own protection” they would rather make their submissions to an independent body. Mr Mantashe said that ultimately, the NEC “accepted that eight comrades should make their submissions to an independent body, and we accepted that. That was the beginning of the process of discussing ANC supporting the establishment of a Commission.” The NEC did not further address the submissions made to them.

32. President Ramaphosa told the Commission that the ANC had realised that the problem was much bigger than they could deal with. He also stated that the complainants had wanted a more formal process so that a thorough investigation could be conducted, and so that they could be shielded.

33. The statement which announced the NEC’s inquiry simultaneously affirmed the NEC’s confidence in President Jacob Zuma. This was clearly not an independent or neutral space.

34. It should be noted that President Ramaphosa had, at the time, publicly promised that the ANC would conduct a further methodical and rigorous investigation. This clearly did not occur. There is in fact no evidence that the ANC ever proactively sought to make even basic inquiries.

35. The ANC had the opportunity to get Parliament to initiate a public inquiry in terms of the Rules of Parliament to look into the allegations of the influence of the Gupta family on President Zuma but, not only did they not do so but even when another political party, the DA tabled a motion for the initiation of such enquiry the ANC opposed that motion. It was only in 2017 that the ANC changed its position and began to support the idea of public inquiries.

36. In November 2016 the Public Protector’s State of Capture report was released. When the report was discussed by the NEC, that Committee resolved not to support the call for the former President to step down. The NEC felt that “it was more urgent to direct the energies of the ANC in its entirety to working towards the unity of the movement.” On some occasions the NEC would criticise state capture and corruption and say how unacceptable corruption is but in the next sentence they would reaffirm their confidence in President Zuma.

37. The evidence heard by the Commission has revealed that it was the approach taken by the ANC as the majority party in Parliament which prevented Parliament from establishing public inquiries before 2017. If the ANC had supported the motions for the initiation of public inquiries into the allegations of undue influence of the Gupta family on President Zuma, state capture may have been stopped in its tracks. However, the ANC opposed those motions and this resulted in the Gupta brothers and Mr Zuma continuing with their state capture project.

38. The implication of all of this evidence is that the NEC decided to prioritise the survival and success of the party over acting on the allegations of state capture. This is consistent with President Ramaphosa’s own evidence before the Commission as to why he had been constrained from speaking out earlier than he did.

39. In May 2017 the NEC again decided not to act against Mr Zuma. It did, however, endorse the proposal for a judicial commission of inquiry.

40. The ANC’s 54th National Conference in December 2017, at which President Ramaphosa was elected as President of the ANC, the Conference adopted a resolution noting the following:

> an increase in corruption, factionalism, dishonesty and other negative practices that seriously threaten the goals and support of the ANC;

that the lack of integrity perceived by the public has seriously damaged the ANC's image, the people's trust in the ANC, its ability to occupy the moral high ground, and its position as leader of society; that current leadership structures seem helpless to arrest these practices, either because they lack the means or the will, or are themselves held hostage by them; that the state investigative and prosecutorial authorities appear to be weakened and affected by factional battles, and unable to perform their functions.

41. The Conference resolved that:

41.1 ANC members accused of corruption must account to the Integrity Commission or face disciplinary processes.

41.2 Those who fail to give an acceptable explanation must voluntarily step down while they face disciplinary, investigative or prosecutorial procedures, or must be suspended.

41.3 The party should publicly disassociate itself from anyone accused of corruption.

41.4 Party members and structures must cooperate with law enforcement agencies.

41.5 ANC deployees to Cabinet must strengthen state capacity to successfully prosecute corruption and account for any failure to do so.

42 In February 2018, the ANC NEC decided to recall Mr Zuma from his position as President. Mr Zuma resigned as President of the country on 14 February 2018 and on 15 February 2018 President Ramaphosa was elected as President of South Africa.

THE ANC IN PARLIAMENT

42. President Ramaphosa remarked that the ANC did not have direct evidence of state capture "at the time" and did not have the investigative capacity to probe various allegations as they emerged. It was put to him in evidence that Parliament would have this investigative capacity, which he conceded.

43. A number of allegations against the Guptas had surfaced since 2011, but Parliament failed to investigate these claims in any way over a period of about five years. He said that the party did eventually realise it could not sufficiently investigate on its own and referred the matter to Parliamentary structures.

44. President Ramaphosa agreed that the ANC's opposition to a proposed Parliamentary investigation into allegations of state capture in March 2016 was "ill-advised". This error, he claimed, was later corrected. He said that the ANC had opposed the proposal, earlier because there was contestation between the political parties.

45. The ANC's counter motion in Parliament was to direct all allegations of state capture to law enforcement authorities or Chapter Nine institutions. According to President Ramaphosa, at the time they believed that these structures would be more effective than Parliament. Although there was initial inertia, President Ramaphosa stated that ultimately the ANC was determined to let the allegations be probed by Parliament.

46. Despite the explanations offered by President Ramaphosa and Mr Mantashe, the evidence shows that there was a determined resistance and unwillingness on the part of the ANC in Parliament for Parliament to investigate and exercise oversight in relation to allegations of state capture.

47. Further questions were raised over the role of 'party discipline' and the ANC's insistence that its MPs must vote against a motion of no confidence in Mr Zuma. President Ramaphosa and Mr Mantashe both emphasised the need for party discipline and the idea that MPs were supposed to represent the party position.

48. This is part of the problem which enabled the Gupta-Zuma state capture to happen, flourish and allow the Guptas to steal billions of the taxpayers' money. It is this idea that an opposition party can never be justified in calling for a President of the ruling party to be removed from his or her position as President of the country. The ruling party needs to abandon the idea that whenever an opposition party moves a motion of no confidence in the President, the motion is wrong and unjustified irrespective of the facts. It is this attitude that allowed state capture to continue under former President Zuma.

49. Mr Mantashe and President Ramaphosa also stressed the need to avoid dividing the party. Mr Mantashe testified:

> I have a responsibility to keep the ANC intact for it to have the vibrancy and the capacity to govern. ... obviously it will be a huge call for any ANC member to destroy the ANC because he thinks it is in the interest of the country ... I can tell you with my eyes closed, you allow an opposition party to remove your president and you remove that president there will be a massive split in the ANC and collapse.

50. The natural conclusion of this particular argument is the recurring theme that the ANC prioritises its own survival and strength over the interests of the country. It seems that Mr Mantashe was preoccupied with the survival of the ANC irrespective of what happened to the country and its economy. The Guptas were alleged to be involved in all kinds of wrong things abusing their proximity to President Zuma and President Zuma did not want to end his friendship with the Guptas but Mr Mantashe was not prepared to let Parliament hold President Zuma to account or to let Parliament initiate a public inquiry.

51. The constitutional framework – including Members of Parliament's oaths of office – does not allow MPs to vote according to the party's wishes if they believed that to do so would be against the interests of the people of South Africa. The oaths of office of the President, Deputy President, and Members of the National Assembly includes these words: "I, A.B, swear / solemnly affirm that I will be faithful to the Republic of South Africa. . . ." This suggests that, if the interests of the Republic clash with the interests of your party, then a person who has taken that oath should choose to be faithful to the Republic. When they do something else, prefer their political party over the Republic, they will be in breach of their oath of office.

52. The Chairperson posited that the imposition of a party decision on MPs in a vote of no confidence would render this mechanism of accountability ineffective, given that the President would enjoy majority support in the party and therefore in Parliament.

53. President Ramaphosa said that, while a motion of no confidence is an important "check and balance" embedded in the Constitution, the party system is a part of our constitutional architecture and also provides important checks and balances. 54 Unfortunately, this approach fails to grapple with the core issue, which is that the ANC's internal checks and balances failed, and that the party sought to prevent the proper exercise of a constitutional mechanism of accountability by forcing its members to vote according to the party line.

54. Mr Mantashe highlighted that "the effectiveness of legislative oversight is not a function of oversight capacity but of political will." That is the crux of the matter. Although Mr Mantashe stated that the ANC had the political will to "make Parliament work and to ensure effective oversight and accountability," the evidence shows that there was no political will to act by Parliament until 2017. This was because the ANC majority had no political will to deal with the Guptas.

Was it enough?

55. When asked to be specific about the party's shortcomings, President Ramaphosa had this to say:

    55.1 In the context of inequality in South Africa, political office presents one of the few opportunities for material advancement, which could lead to political patronage. This is an issue where the ANC "made some huge missteps on."

55.2 There was a “decline of organisational integrity” in which internal party processes were manipulated in order to advance the interests of certain individuals and people.

55.3 Divisions and factionalism compromised the party’s ability to tackle corruption. Factionalism “led to a number of people having a vested interest in maintaining certain wrong practices.”

55.4 A system of patronage emerged within the party’s ranks.

55.5 The lack of an official policy on party funding led to “enormous problems” within the organisation.

55.6 The party’s internal problems led to the weakening of institutions, including government institutions, which themselves became factionalised.

56. Concerning state capture specifically, President Ramaphosa stated that “there was some action but it was not enough.” Mr Mantashe explained that the ANC had to move slowly and with care in order to protect itself.

57. President Ramaphosa agreed that there was a “delay” in the party’s response to allegations which “did not service our country well.” He attributed this delay to the ANC’s nature as a “political organism” beset with continuous debates and contestations. He said it was the ‘balance of power’ within ANC structures which was responsible for the slow response.

58. President Ramaphosa spoke in his evidence about what he referred to as contestation concerning the meaning of state capture as a concept. He did not elaborate. This contestation meant that it was not easy to have agreement on certain issues connected with allegations of state capture.

59. The "contestations" referred to by President Ramaphosa allowed competing factions and persons to paralyse (in the words of the Party itself) the organisation where the leadership was unable or unwilling to hold them accountable for their actions.

60. President Ramaphosa testified that the party lost significant support due to corruption, which made addressing those allegations an “existential challenge”.

61. The characterisation of the party’s seven years of inaction as a “delay” is itself problematic. The party did not simply take a long time to consider the allegations and arrive at decisions. This was not one continuous process. As is made clear by the evidence, the party made a series of decisions over a number of years not to act against Mr Zuma and other complicit parties. That the party later decided otherwise does not absolve it of accountability for those earlier decisions.

CADRE DEPLOYMENT POLICY

The political-administrative interface

62. The Constitution envisages a public administration that maintains a high standard of professional ethics; that is efficient, economic and effective in its use of resources; is development-oriented; provides services in a manner that is impartial, fair, equitable and without bias; encourages participation in policymaking; and is accountable and transparent. It should support good human-resource management and career development. It should promote "employment and personnel management practices based on ability, objectivity, fairness and the need to redress the imbalances of the past to achieve broad representation."

63. Section 197 requires the public service to “loyally execute the lawful policies of the government of the day”, while also stipulating that “no employee of the public service may be favoured or prejudiced only because that person supports a particular political party or cause.” There is no provision for political criteria to enter into decisions about appointments to fixed posts within the public administration.

The ANC’s version

64. Mr Mantashe and President Ramaphosa testified about “cadre deployment”.

65. The ANC is guided in this regard by the ANC Cadre Development and Deployment Policy, as well as other party documents. The Deployment Committee (the Committee) is headed by the ANC Deputy President and comprises fifteen NEC members, including the Deputy Secretary-General.

66. According to Mr Mantashe, the strategic deployment of ANC members is an important part of the ANC's strategy to control the levers of power in the state. The party seeks to exercise control over the public administration, including the public service and the state-owned enterprises. According to both Mr Mantashe and President Ramaphosa, the ANC accepts the principle that the public service is required to be non-partisan, but they say that there is no conflict or tension between this principle and the ANC's policy.

67. According to President Ramaphosa, the deployment policy is aimed at ensuring that the person most "fit-for-purpose" is appointed whatever critical position has been identified. He stated in his evidence that the relevant policy aims to ensure the transformation of South Africa's institutions following the end of apartheid. He said that Deployment ensures that these institutions reflect the demographics of the country. He said that some of the considerations of the Deployment Committee were political, regarding "key positions where we seek to advance the mandate of the governing party."

68. President Ramaphosa stressed that this policy was not unique to the ANC and was practised in various forms worldwide and by other parties in South Africa.

69. The version put forward by President Ramaphosa and Mr Mantashe is that the ANC's Deployment Committee is a "recommending structure" that:

    69.1 Identifies vacancies in strategic positions in the state

    69.2 Encourages suitable persons to apply for positions; and

    69.3 Provides advice and recommendations to appointing authorities (such as Ministers) on important appointments.

70. They contend that the Committee has no power to decide on appointments and issues no instructions. They said that the Committee simply presents recommendations based on the outcomes of the mandated appointment processes.

71. However, the above evidence is not borne out by other evidence before the Commission.

Records and minutes

72. The Commission requested the minutes of the ANC Deployment Committee under the chairmanship of President Ramaphosa. The Commission was informed that there were no minutes for the period 2012 to 2017. The Commission then requested to be provided with Deployment Committee minutes for the later period. These records were received shortly before the President Ramaphosa's second appearance before the Commission in August 2021.

73. President Ramaphosa was asked whether minutes were lost or destroyed or were simply never taken. He responded that he did not recall minutes ever being taken, which he attributed to "unfortunate record-keeping processes."

74. It is concerning that basic record-keeping, arguably a necessity for ensuring transparency and good governance, may have been neglected for at least five years under President Ramaphosa. It is difficult to conceive how the Party would have any oversight over the Committee without any records. It is also difficult to conceive how the Committee would report on its activities to the party membership and leaders. Finally. only with an accurate and comprehensive written record could the Committee be held accountable for its decisions and recommendations.

What is the scope of the Deployment Committee?

75. There is a difference between the deployment of public representatives to elected positions in legislative and executive bodies in government, and the deployment of cadres to strategic positions in the state and state employment. The appointment and election of public representatives (for example, to Parliament or Provincial Legislatures or Municipal councils) is the prerogative of the party. The Commission is concerned largely with the deployment of party cadres to positions in state institutions and in the civil service.

76. According to President Ramaphosa and Mr Mantashe, the ANC deployment policy applies to senior positions in government such as Directors-General and Deputy Directors-General as well as leadership in critical institutions including the private sector. It does not apply to the appointment of Ministers, which is the prerogative of the President.

77. The ANC Cadre Deployment Policy contains the following provisions:

> 10. The following are the key centres of authority and responsibility within the state that should be given priority:
> 10.1 Cabinet
> 10.2 The entire civil service, but most importantly from director level upwards
> 10.3 Premiers and provincial administrations
> 10.4 Legislatures
> 10.5 Local Government
> 10.6 Parastatals
> 10.7 Educational institutions
> 10.8 Independent statutory committees, agencies, boards and institutes
> 10.9 Ambassadorial appointments; and
> 10.10 International organisations and institutions ...
> 20. A core or pool of comrades needs to be identified for deployment in each of the key strategic centres of authority and responsibility, particularly in relation to the legislatures, civil service, parastatals, independent bodies and ambassadorial appointments.

78. President Ramaphosa confirmed that this list falls within the scope of activity for the Deployment Committee, although in practice the Committee did not consider all of these categories. The Committee, he said, "has set itself its own limit." He said that of the above categories, the Committee tends to focus on civil servants of DDG level and above and SOE executives and Board members only.

79. The question of judicial appointments was a contentious issue. It was eventually conceded that the Committee does sometimes make recommendations on judicial appointments. There is a danger that this could compromise the transparency and independence of the Judicial Service Commission (JSC) process, and that internal party concerns such as factionalism could be carried into the judiciary.

Does the Committee give recommendations or instructions?

80. Echoing Mr Mantashe, President Ramaphosa testified that the Deployment Committee operates "like a recommendations committee" and does not make appointments or instruct appointing authorities to appoint certain persons.

81. However, the Committee may have more power in reality than it does on paper. The Chairperson noted that appointing authorities, who are themselves ANC members and therefore bound to the decisions of the party, such as Ministers, might feel pressured to appoint the Committee's chosen candidate, and that this would give such candidate an unfair advantage.

82. President Ramaphosa testified in response to this proposition that Ministers often convince the Committee to support their choice. President Ramaphosa's argument was that the Committee therefore served as a “filter” or a type of “quality assurance” in order to ensure that the Minister’s candidate was fit-for-purpose.

83. The Deployment Committee records (2017 - 2021), which were carefully reviewed by the Commission, showed the following trends:

    83.1 While the language is consistent in part with the Committee making recommendations, in other parts the language is peremptory.

    83.2 The Ministers make recommendations to the Deployment Committee and seek permission to appoint their chosen candidates, which the Committee “approves” or sends back for “refinement”.

    83.3 Ministers have been taken to task by the Deployment Committee for presenting their choices as final and irrevocable, or presenting names to Cabinet which were not approved by the Committee.

    83.4 The Committee insists that even before posts are advertised the Deployment Committee should be notified.

84. It therefore appears that the Committee does not always merely make recommendations but in fact often instructs appointing authorities on whom to appoint.

85. President Ramaphosa insisted that cadre deployment is “safe” as the Committee has no formal power to appoint, and appointments are still governed by the legally mandated processes. However, this sidesteps the question of how deployment actually functions in reality, and whether appointing authorities have to accept or rubber-stamp decisions made by the Committee.

86. The minutes reveal that the Committee has been frustrated that people accountable to the Committee do not really understand the principle of “democratic centralism”. President Ramaphosa explained that, according to democratic centralism, party members are bound by decisions taken by higher bodies. It is therefore “a sign of indiscipline” in the ANC to disobey and not follow the decisions of a higher structure. It is also notable that the party’s deployment policy states that “decisions of the organisation . . . are final and a breach of this policy shall constitute a serious offence.” Democratic centralism, applied to the system of deployment, would ensure that the power to appoint did indeed lie with the party, in its higher echelons.

87. Other witnesses have testified to the effect that the Deployment Committee has and exercises more power than the Party would like to concede:

    87.1 In her testimony, Ms Hogan claimed that the Committee determines who gets certain positions in government, and that the NWC instructs Ministers on appointments, which is an abuse of power.

    87.2 Ms Lynne Brown, in her affidavits to the Commission, made repeated references to consultations with the Deployment Committee concerning appointments to SOEs. For example, she stated that “before the names of proposed Directors were relayed to Cabinet for approval, the ANC Deployment Committee had to give its endorsement first” and “all appointments to the boards of State-owned Entities must also be approved by the African National Congress’ Deployment Committee whereafter it gets approved by Cabinet.”

    87.3 Dr Ben Ngubane spoke about cadre deployment unprompted. He said:

        > There has been a very strong deployment of cadres. So it may be competitive, but when the elite, the governing party, knows someone they think can fulfil their objectives, they will make sure that person gets it . . . people are earmarked for some type of jobs.

    87.4 Ambassador Francis Moloi said that ambassadorial and Head of Mission positions have consistently been dominated by political appointees and party deployees to the exclusion of professional diplomats, and that this is driven by the ANC’s policy of cadre deployment.

88. The evidence referred to above gives credence to the proposition that appointing authorities, including Cabinet, are de facto bound by the decisions of the Committee, which means that its "recommendations" are in fact instructions.

What are the Committee's selection criteria?

89. Appointments in the public service are governed by a number of laws and policies, most significantly the Public Service Act, which seeks to ensure that appointment processes are fair, effective, and in line with the Constitution. If appointment decisions are not made within this governance regime, but made behind the closed doors of the party, these checks and balances are circumvented.

90. Furthermore, if the party does have the power to decide appointments, the concern is that the Party can abuse this power to achieve ends which are not in the best interests of the country. If the Party prioritises loyalty or party membership as selection criteria, there is a risk that it will not select the best person for the job, and moreover that deployees will serve the interests of the party even to the detriment of the country.

91. In her testimony, Ms Hogan claimed that the Committee did have power and deliberately chose candidates for their loyalty to the party, and after the ANC 2007 Polokwane conference, for loyalty to a particular faction.

92. President Ramaphosa responded that appointing authorities, such as Ministers, do use selection committees or panels and external entities as a "layer" in the appointment process. He also asserted that the Committee is composed of diverse and knowledgeable persons, which produces a "wealth of wisdom".

93. Mr Zuma stated that, of course, they would want people who are known to the party, who "would implement the policies appropriately" and that this was normal in other countries where the winning party would "remove everybody out and put their people." He also stated that the party could not take people they did not know and "of course" there were people who were there because they were loyal to the party and believe in its policies.

94. Furthermore, many of the minutes scrutinised by the Commission show that the Committee did consider loyalty and party membership when evaluating candidates. This would give an unfair advantage to ANC members, which would effectively contravene section 197(3) of the Constitution, which states that "[n]o employee of the public service may be favoured or prejudiced only because that person supports a particular political party or cause."

The possible role of deployment in state capture

95. Even if it is true that the Committee has no formal power, and that it does not issue explicit instructions to appointing authorities, the evidence shows that this is not the end of the matter.

96. The ANC recognises that "there are several instances where individuals appointed to positions may not have been fit for purpose." The ANC claims to have addressed this problem at its 54th National Conference by resolving that "the merit principle must apply in the deployment to senior appointments, based on legislated prescripts and in line with the minimum competency standards." The unfortunate implication is that the merit principle did not apply to such deployments until the resolution in December 2017, thus rendering the resolution necessary.

97. The danger of political influence in appointments is perhaps best articulated in the ANC's "Eye of a needle" document from 2001:

> Because leadership in structures of the ANC affords opportunities to assume positions of authority in government, some individuals then compete for ANC leadership positions in order to get into government. Many such members view positions in government as a source of material riches for themselves. Thus resources, prestige and authority of government positions become the driving force in competition for leadership positions in the ANC.
> Government positions also go hand-in-hand with the possibility to issue contracts to commercial companies. Some of these companies identify ANC members that they can promote in ANC structures and into government, so that they can get contracts by hook or by crook.

> Positions in government also mean the possibility to appoint individuals in all kinds of capacities. As such, some members make promises to friends, that once elected and ensconced in government, they would return the favour. Cliques and factions then emerge within the movement, around personal loyalties driven by corrupt intentions. Members become voting fodder to serve individuals' self-interest.

98. President Ramaphosa was asked about the appointments of specific individuals who have been implicated in corruption and state capture at the Commission, and whether these individuals were "deployed". He responded:

> Let us accept, Chairperson, that some of those deployments were done in a particular era and in a particular way and right now as we look at that past slate we were able to look at it and say we actually need to do things differently.

99. He went on to say that the Deployment Committee "would not have dealt with a whole lot of those" appointments during his chairmanship of the Deployment Committee. There were some cases where former President Zuma bypassed the Committee entirely, which he believed was unintentional. In these cases, President Ramaphosa would approach Mr Zuma to ask why the Deployment Committee was not consulted on an appointment and Mr Zuma who would take responsibility and apologise.

100. It must be noted that President Ramaphosa was the Chairperson of the Deployment Committee for a period of five years, between December 2012 and December 2017, and that many of these appointments (and indeed the excesses of state capture) occurred during this period. Notably, this is also the period for which the party could produce no minutes or records. It is not sufficient for President Ramaphosa to focus on the future of the party and his envisaged renewal process. Responsibility ought also to be taken for the events of the previous "era." He did so, partially and only in the most general terms.

101. According to President Ramaphosa, some of those appointments did go through the Deployment Committee, but the Committee did not know that those individuals would engage in any corrupt acts. If this was the case, Deployment Committee had been unable to select or recommend individuals who were "fit for purpose." What is true is that during a certain period many people who occupied senior positions in SOEs and government departments as well as in Boards of SOEs would have been appointed to those positions after their names were put forward and approved by the Deployment Committee. Many of these are people who enabled state capture.

102. Yet President Ramaphosa repeatedly stressed the importance of cadre deployment and said that the Deployment Committee process is "vigorous" and adds an extra level of scrutiny (a "filter") to the selection process. His argument was that the deployment process makes appointments processes more, not less, rigorous.

103. President Ramaphosa conceded that there was "massive system failure" in the state and SOEs and some of that occurred because "certain people were put in certain positions to advance certain agendas." He also conceded that there was a practice of "poorly qualified individuals being parachuted into positions of authority through political patronage." It may be that many politically motivated appointments in fact occurred independently of the Deployment Committee. The party has indeed had to struggle with factions and divisions.

104. The evidence has demonstrated that state capture has been facilitated by the appointment of pliant individuals to powerful positions in state entities. The danger remains that appointment processes which are conducted behind closed doors and outside of the constitutionally and legally stipulated processes are open to abuse.

The legislative scheme rendering the deployment policy unlawful

105. To begin with the Constitution, certain provisions of section 195 of the Constitution are paramount in this regard. These are the provisions of section 195(1)(a), (b), (f), (g), (i). They read:

> Basic values and principles governing public administration -

195(1) Public administration must be governed by the democratic values and principles enshrined in the Constitution, including the following principles:

(a) A high standard of professional ethics must be promoted and maintained.

(b) Efficient, economic and effective use of resources must be promoted.

(f) Public administration must be accountable.

(g) Transparency must be fostered by providing the public with timely, accessible and accurate information.

(i) Public administration must be broadly representative of the South African people, with employment and personnel management practices based on ability, objectivity, fairness, and the need to redress the imbalances of the past to achieve broad representation.

106. Section 195(2) and (3) of the Constitution provides:

(2) The above principles apply to -

(a) Administration in every sphere of government;

(b) Organs of state; and

(c) Public enterprises.

(3) National legislation must ensure the promotion of the values and principles listed in subsection (1).

107. Section 196 of the Constitution establishes the Public Service Commission for the Republic whose powers and functions are set out in section 196(4). Section 196(2) and (3) reads:

(2) The Commission is independent and must be impartial, and must exercise its powers and perform its functions without fear, favour or prejudice in the interest of the maintenance of effective and efficient public administration and a high standard of professional ethics in the public service. The Commission must be regulated by national legislation.

(3) Other organs of state, through legislative and other measures, must assist and protect the Commission to ensure the independence, impartiality, dignity and effectiveness of the Commission. No person or organ of state may interfere with the functioning of the Commission.

108. Section 196(4) of the Constitution reads as follows as far as it is relevant:

(4) The powers and functions of the Commission are -

(a) To promote the values and principles set out in section 195, throughout the public service;

(b) To investigate, monitor and evaluate the organisation and administration, and the personnel practices of the public service;

(c) To propose measures to ensure effective and efficient performance within the public service;

(d) To give directions aimed at ensuring that personnel procedures relating to recruitment, transfers, promotions and dismissals comply with the values and principles set out in section 195;

(e) To report in respect of its activities and the performance of its functions, including any finding it may make and directions and advice it may give, and to provide an evaluation of the extent to which the values and principles set out in section 195 are complied with; and

(f) Either of its own accord or on receipt of any complaint—

(i) To investigate and evaluate the application of personnel and public administration practices, and to report to the relevant executive authority and legislature;

(ii) To investigate grievances of employees in the public service concerning official acts or omissions, and recommend appropriate remedies;

(iii) To monitor and investigate adherence to applicable procedures in the public service; and

(iv) To advise national and provincial organs of state regarding personnel practices in the public service, including those relating to the recruitment, appointment, transfer, discharge and other aspects of the careers of employees in the public service; and

(g) To exercise or perform the additional powers or functions prescribed by an Act of Parliament.

109. In terms of section 196(5) of the Constitution, the Public Service Commission "is accountable to the National Assembly".

110. Section 197(1) of the Constitution provides:

> Public Service
> 197(1) Within public administration there is a public service for the Republic, which must function, and be structured, in terms of national legislation, and which must loyally execute the lawful policies of the government of the day.

111. Very importantly, section 197(3) of the Constitution precludes the favouring and prejudicing of any employee for supporting a particular political party or cause. The section reads:

> No employee of the public service may be favoured or prejudiced only because that person supports a particular political party or cause.

112. Apart from the Constitution, it is also necessary to consider certain provisions of the Public Service Act, 1994 (PSA). Section 9 reads:

> 9. Powers of executing authority -
> (1) The appointment of any person or the promotion or transfer of any officer or employee in the employ of a department shall be made by the relevant executing authority or by an officer or officers to whom the said authority has delegated his or her power of appointment, promotion or transfer.
> (2) Subject to the provisions of this Chapter, appointments and promotions in, and transfers in or to, the public service shall be made in such manner and on such conditions as may be prescribed.

113. In the PSA, the word "prescribed" is defined as meaning "prescribed by or under this Act". In other words, no appointment, promotion or transfer may be made, effected, or decided upon in a manner that is not prescribed by or under the PSA. Anything in the appointment, promotion or transfer of an officer or employee in the public service that is not prescribed by or under the PSA is unlawful or renders the appointment, promotion or transfer unlawful.

114. A particularly important provision of the PSA concerning appointments and the filling of posts is section 11. It provides:

> 11. Appointments and filling of posts -
> (1) In the making of appointments and the filling of posts in the public service due regard shall be had to equality and the other democratic values and principles enshrined in the Constitution.

115. What this provision does is to direct anyone who seeks to make an appointment or to fill a post in the public service to have due regard to "equality and the other democratic values and principles enshrined in the Constitution." The phrase "democratic values" means or at least includes within its ambit the democratic values referred to in section 7 of the Constitution, namely "human dignity, equality and freedom". Equality is already expressly mentioned in section 11(1) of the PSA. The reference to democratic values may well also include some of the values listed in section 1 of the Constitution:

(c) Supremacy of the Constitution and the rule of law.

116. The term "principles" in section 11 of the PSA is qualified by the phrase "enshrined in the Constitution". Those principles must include the principles listed in section 195 of the Constitution (see above). It may well be that the principles to which section 11 refers go beyond those listed in section 195 of the Constitution. The constitutional and statutory framework reflected in section 11 includes the following requirements in the context of the appointment and filling of posts:

    116.1 There must be equality in the treatment of candidates

    116.2 There must be transparency

    116.3 There must be accountability; and

    116.4 There must be fairness.

117. Section 11(2) of the PSA reads:

> In the making of any appointment or the filling of any post in the public service -
> (a) All persons who qualify for the appointment, transfer or promotion concerned shall be considered; and
> (b) The evaluation of persons shall be based on training, skills, competence, knowledge and the need to redress the imbalances of the past to achieve a public service broadly representative of the South African people, including representation according to race, gender and disability.

118. Section 11(2)(b) is of cardinal importance because it prescribes which matters count in the evaluation of candidates for appointment to a post. In other words, anyone who decides to recommend or appoint a particular candidate among candidates who are competing for appointment to a particular position can only base his or her decision on the matters listed in section 11(2)(b) and on no other matter. Those matters listed in section 11(2)(b) are:

    118.1 Training

    118.2 Skills

    118.3 Competence

    118.4 Knowledge; and

    118.5 The need to redress the imbalances of the past to achieve a public service broadly representative of the South African people including representation according to race, gender and disability.

119. There is no mention in section 11(2) of membership of a political party including the ANC or current ruling party, nor is there mention of a recommendation made by the Deployment Committee of the ANC or any political party. It is only the policies of the government that may legitimately be taken into account if they are relevant to a particular post. Any policy or policies that are ANC policies or policies of any political party that have not been adopted by the government may not be considered. Taking it or them into account would be unlawful since that would fall outside of section 11(2) of the PSA.

120. Section 11(3) of the PSA reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (2), the relevant executing authority may, subject to the prescribed conditions, approve the appointment, transfer or promotion of persons to promote the basic values and principles referred to in section 195 (1) of the Constitution.

121. The reference to "prescribed conditions" is a reference to conditions prescribed by or under the PSA.

122. For purposes of determining whether the ANC's Deployment Policy or its implementation is unlawful, section 11(3) does not contain anything that would make it lawful to consider a recommendation of the ANC's Deployment Committee or recommendation of any committee or official of any other political party in evaluating various candidates for appointment.

123. The MSA contains provisions that are similar to those contained in the PSA. Section 54A deals with the appointment of a municipal manager and acting municipal manager. Section 54A (2) provides:

> A person appointed as municipal manager in terms of subsection (1) must at least have the skills, expertise, competencies and qualifications as prescribed.

124. The term "prescribed" means "prescribe[d] by regulation or guidelines in terms of section 120" of the MSA.

125. Section 54A(3)(a) goes on to provide that a decision to appoint a person as municipal manager, and any contract concluded between the municipal council and that person in consequence of the decision, is null and void if "the person appointed does not have the prescribed skills, expertise, competencies or qualifications".

126. Importantly, section 54A (4) and (5) of the MSA provides:

> (4) If the post of municipal manager becomes vacant, the municipal council must-
> (a) Advertise the post nationally to attract a pool of candidates nationwide; and
> (b) Select from the pool of candidates a suitable person who complies with the prescribed requirements for appointment to the post.
> (5) The municipal council must re-advertise the post if there is no suitable candidate who complies with the prescribed requirements.

127. Section 56 of the MSA deals with the appointment of managers directly accountable to municipal managers. It contains provisions that replicate those outlined above in relation to the appointment of municipal managers.

128. The findings made above in relation to the PSA are equally applicable to the provisions of the MSA. In short, a recommendation by the Deployment Committee would fall outside the scope of legitimate selection criteria (unless expressly prescribed as a requirement).

129. Turning finally to the provisions of the LRA, section 186(2) defines an "unfair labour practice" as including:

> (a) Unfair conduct by the employer relating to the promotion, demotion, probation (excluding disputes about dismissals for a reason relating to probation) or training of an employee or relating to the provision of benefits to an employee.

130. If a government official were to make an appointment regulated by the PSA or MSA based on the recommendation of the ANC Deployment Committee, which would be an impermissible consideration, and pass over an internal candidate for promotion on this basis, this would be actionable as an unfair labour practice.

131. What is said above makes it clear that within the current constitutional and statutory framework it is unlawful and unconstitutional for a President of this country and any Minister, Deputy Minister or Director-General or other government official, including those in parastatals, to take into account recommendations of the ANC Deployment Committee or any deployment committee or any similar committee of any other political party in deciding who should be appointed to a position in the public service or in organs of state or parastatals.

President Ramaphosa's evidence: Undue weight will be attached to recommendations

132. Reverting to the evidence of President Ramaphosa, the composition of the Deployment Committee exacerbates concerns about the legality of the Deployment Policy.

133. The Deployment Committee is of high status within the structures of the ANC. It is a committee that is chaired by the second-in-command in the ANC, the ANC's Deputy President. That is the second highest ranking office-bearer or official of the organisation. In the period of about 28 years since 1994 except for one, every one of those who occupied the position of Deputy President of the ANC became President of the ANC.

134. The significance of the fact that the Deployment Committee is chaired by the Deputy President of the ANC, and this is the second point, is that it naturally will make it very difficult for any Cabinet Minister – not to speak of a Deputy Minister or Director-General – who is an ANC member to go against a position taken by a Committee headed by the Deputy President of the organisation. To deviate from such a position may be a career limiting decision.

Problems with equality, fairness and transparency arising from President Ramaphosa's evidence

135. Out of President Ramaphosa's evidence as contained in his affidavit, there are certain additional features that need special consideration. President Ramaphosa said that in the case of the deployment of candidates to positions in the state and society – as opposed to the deployment of candidates to legislative bodies and executive bodies – the ANC identifies candidates who would be suitable, by virtue of their skills, experience and personal attributes, to be considered for positions in various entities in the public sector.

136. President Ramaphosa testified that the ANC's Deployment Committee does not decide who should assume specific positions. He said that it discusses who should be encouraged to apply for various positions and makes recommendations to the persons making the appointments. There were, however, certain indications during the hearing that the Deployment Committee effectively decides who must be appointed to certain positions, unless there is a strong reason that emerges why their decision should not be given effect to even if their decisions may be dressed up as recommendations.

137. Part of the difficulty with the recommendation of the Deployment Committee is that it is made by a Committee that would not have interviewed the other candidates who would have applied for a particular position. Indeed, it is made by a Committee that will not have considered any information about other candidates against whom the candidate it recommends is competing. The Commission was not told that the Deployment Committee ensures that it has seen the CVs of other candidates applying for the same position.

138. Since the Deployment Committee makes its recommendations in favour of a particular candidate without having compared the credentials of that candidate with the credentials of other candidates, its recommendations cannot sensibly and legitimately be taken into account. If it is considered when it was made by a body that knew nothing about the credentials of the other candidates, that is unfair and is in breach of, amongst others, the injunction in section 195 of the Constitution and section 11 of the Public Service Act that there must be equality and fairness in the appointment of persons and the filling of posts in the public service. Indeed, when a Minister and Director-General, for example, takes into account such a recommendation, he or she will be in breach of the constitutional principle of transparency to be found in section 195 of the Constitution because that recommendation will not have been made known to all concerned including the other candidates. So, the other candidates would not know that there is a candidate who, apart from what is in his or her CV, profile and supporting documents that are official, also carries the special advantage of a recommendation of the ANC's Deployment Committee. The considering of such a recommendation also means that the candidates are not treated equally because they would not have been given an opportunity to compete with that candidate for the recommendation of the Deployment Committee.

139. Furthermore, as is reflected elsewhere in this section of the Report, recommendations of the ANC's Deployment Committee fall outside the constitutional and statutory framework for the appointment, promotion and transfer of public servants or candidates. Our law does not provide for any government official or body or Minister or the President to take into account a recommendation of the ANC's Deployment Committee or similar body of any political party in filling posts in the public service or in parastatals. If the ANC or any political party wants the recommendations of its Deployment Committee or similar body to be considered in the filling of posts in the public service and in parastatals, it should take steps to ensure that the relevant legislation is amended to include a provision accommodating such a recommendation. Otherwise, taking such a recommendation into account while it is outside the legal framework is unlawful.

140. President Ramaphosa pointed out that, because the ANC's view is that the practice of cadre deployment should not be inconsistent with the principles of fairness, transparency and merit, it seeks to continually revise its cadre deployment policies and practices. He said that that was also why his administration had proceeded to implement ANC resolutions on the professionalisation of the public service.

141. However, if the ANC wants the most fit-for-purpose candidate to be appointed, making a recommendation through its Deployment Committee in the way it does at the moment and in the way it has been doing all these years is not the way to go. The way to go, if that is what it wants, is to allow government officials and bodies to make appointments in accordance with the Constitution and the law. After all, many of those officials who will make those decisions are its deployees such as the President, Deputy President, Ministers, Deputy Ministers, Directors-General, Deputy Directors-General, etc. At the moment, when the ANC insists that these officials should consider its Deployment Committee's recommendations in making certain appointments in the public service or in parastatals, it requires them to consider something that is not provided for in the law that governs those appointments and, therefore, requires them to act unlawfully.

Why the need for the Deployment Committee?

142. An important question that arises about the ANC's Deployment Committee and its role in the implementation of the ANC's Deployment Policy is why it is necessary for there to be a Deployment Committee that makes recommendations to the President, Deputy President, Cabinet Ministers, Deputy Ministers, Directors-General and other Government officials most of whom would be ANC leaders and members and, therefore, would understand ANC policies very well? In other words, why can the ANC not leave its President, Cabinet Ministers and Directors-General to make the staff appointments that need to be made without any recommendation by the Deployment Committee, on the basis that they trust those ANC Ministers etc to make the right decisions?

143. It is difficult to understand this alleged need because, if the need is said to be justified on the basis that an ANC government needs personnel who understand the ANC's policy very well and can implement them effectively, there is no reason why the President, Ministers and Directors-General who are ANC deployees cannot be trusted to have due regard to that factor in making appointments if it is lawful to have due regard to it.

144. It could be said that the advantage or benefit which the ANC obtains if it has a Deployment Committee that makes recommendations to those in government as to who should be appointed to certain positions is that the ANC individuals who get appointed will feel grateful to the party for giving them such jobs. That may strengthen their loyalty to the party and may make them beholden to the party. This may be particularly so in the case of senior officials such as Directors-General and SOE Chief Executive Officers who are appointed on fixed-term contracts of five years, because at the end of the contract they would be needing the support of the party in the form of another Deployment Committee recommendation for appointment to another post. So, such people become beholden to the party. That is highly undesirable because such an official should put the interests of the people of South Africa first and there should be no risk that he or she may put the interests of the party above those of the country or of the people, if a conflict arose between the interests of the party and the interest of the country or of the people.

PARTY FUNDING

145. The Commission has heard evidence that suggests that the ANC may have been the recipient of donations from individuals and companies that received contracts from the state, including instances where the awarding of those contracts is alleged to have been unlawful.

The Political Party Funding Act

146. In his evidence, President Ramaphosa addressed the legislative framework for political party funding in South Africa, including the recently adopted Political Party Funding Act (PPFA). He noted that, until the adoption of the PPFA, there were few restrictions on donations to political parties and no reporting requirements. Political party donations were previously only subject to the general laws relating to financial transactions, taxation and the prevention of corruption, money laundering and other financial crimes.

147. President Ramaphosa noted that a lack of transparency in this regard increased the potential for corruption, and that the ANC had therefore resolved to address this at its 52nd National Conference in December 2007. The Political Party Funding Bill, however, was not formally introduced into Parliament until November 2017, ten years later. President Ramaphosa assented to the Political Party Funding Bill in January 2019 to make it the Political Party Funding Act 6 of 2018 (PPFA). The PPFA did not take effect for another two years and came into operation on 1 April 2021.

148. President Ramaphosa also noted that the Promotion of Access to Information Amendment Act, which also took effect on 1 April 2021, makes political party finances subject to applications for information in terms of that Act.

Evidence of money flows to the ANC

149. The Commission heard evidence that the ANC received donations from persons and entities which had benefitted from corrupt government contracts.

    149.1 The Guptas sponsored various events, including buying tables at fundraising dinners. The ANC received substantial donations from entities linked to the Gupta enterprise.

    149.2 Bosasa bribed government officials to the tune of around R66 million per annum. Bosasa directed extensive benefits to the ANC, by catering for rallies, setting up a "war room" for elections, hosting parties, and donating money.

    149.3 Blackhead Consulting received payments from the Department of Human Settlements in excess of R1 billion over the 12 year period 2008-2019; whilst outflows show that between 2013 and 2018 payments to the ANC by Blackhead alone was in excess of R10 million for the period in question. There were also payments to the ANC for T-shirts and for volunteers amounting to R3.5 million; some of it was paid directly to the ruling party, some of it to pay service providers.

150. The EOH Group donated money to the ANC and ANC Youth League (Greater Johannesburg branch), coinciding with contracts being awarded to EOH at the Johannesburg municipality. Of particular note was R50 million donated to the ANC for the 2016 local government elections.

151. A former Group CEO of Prasa, Mr Lucky Montana, claimed that the ANC had a history (not limited to the period under Mr Zuma) of its leaders putting pressure on CEOs of public entities to assist with funding – including through asking their contractors to contribute to the party, and of organising meetings for business with government in return for being paid facilitation fees. Mr Montana said that Prasa buses had been used to transport supporters to ANC events.

The ANC's donations policy

152. President Ramaphosa stated that ANC relies on several sources of funding, including funds allocated from the Represented Political Parties' Fund, membership subscriptions and levies, fundraising initiatives like the Progressive Business Forum, fundraising dinners and other events, and donations from individuals and companies.

153. The finances of the ANC are the responsibility of the Treasurer-General, and corresponding Treasurers in sub-national structures. An NEC sub-committee, the Finance Committee, supports the Treasurer-General in managing the party's finances.

154. Ms Nomvula Mokonyane testified that ANC fundraising could not be conducted without the involvement of party leadership, and specifically the Treasurer-General. Although her testimony concerned Bosasa specifically, she spoke about ANC funding processes generally. She said:

> The fund-raising committee of the ANC is headed by the Treasurer-General of the ANC. There is a fund-raising committee and there are fund-raising initiatives it is not the individual, no individual has the capacity and the ability to go all out and go and look for resources, you have to actually work and even be led by a Treasurer-General of the African National Congress. ... The ANC has never hidden its fund raising initiatives, people have come to the gala dinners of the ANC, people have been acknowledged.

155. In 2017, when asked about donations from the Guptas, the then-ANC Treasurer, Dr Zweli Mkhize, told the media: "There is not a single donor who can claim to control the ANC ... We will not accept a donation we can't accept publicly." However, this was clearly not always the case.

156. President Ramaphosa confirmed that the ANC has no official policy on donations. He stated:

> There is an expectation – based on the ANC Constitution, its principles and its values – that the ANC would not knowingly accept monies that are the product of a criminal act, are offered in exchange for favours or are from a source known to engage in illegal or unethical activities.

157. When asked to explain how breaches in respect of this principle occur, President Ramaphosa posited that these breaches happened when the unlawful or unethical conduct of a donor only became known after the donation was made. So, the breach happened "after the fact".

158. The evidence shows that the ANC had accepted donations from companies that were heavily reliant on government contracts, such as Bosasa, without investigating them. It was put to President Ramaphosa that the unlawful activities of Bosasa had been the subject of media reports since at least 2009, and that it was difficult to accept that vigilant members of the ANC would not have been aware that Bosasa was the recipient of large government contracts under dubious circumstances. How, then, it may be asked, could the party continue to accept donations and other benefits from Bosasa?

159. President Ramaphosa conceded that this "should be regarded as a major lapse" on the part of the ANC, and that, in hindsight, the party should have been more alert and should have become aware of the issue earlier.

160. It was put to President Ramaphosa that it was difficult to believe that the issue only became clear in hindsight, and that party leaders must have known at the time the donations were received.

161. It was put to President Ramaphosa that the reason for this lapse must have been that Mr Zuma was in control of the party. President Ramaphosa did not dispute this proposition, although he did not directly answer the question. He said: "Yes, certainly the President plays a very key role in the life the party, it leads or she leads the party and provides leadership and gives direction. That is so."

162. President Ramaphosa agreed that the donations received by the ANC from the Gupta's and Bosasa should have been investigated or examined by the party, as there was enough information in the public domain about these entities to raise suspicions.

Internal elections

163. According to President Ramaphosa, the ANC has for many years been concerned about the role of money within the organisation, and particularly in the contestation for leadership positions. The ANC, he stated, has identified weaknesses in its approach to the funding of internal contests and has initiated a process to review its policies. In raising this issue during an NEC meeting in July 2019, President Ramaphosa stated:

> In the absence of clear, appropriate and realistic guidelines, our leadership contests will continue to play themselves out in the shadows, in conditions of secrecy and mistrust, encouraging patronage and factionalism.

164. President Ramaphosa also cited the ANC's 2020 review of "Through the eye of a needle", one of the discussion documents for that year's National General Council (NGC). The document notes that "something deeper has gone wrong in the movement":

> There has emerged a strong tendency for the emergence of leaders whose sole objective is to use the membership of the ANC as a means to advance their personal ambitions to attain positions of power and access to resources for their own individual gratification.

165. This is a clear admission that the role of money in contests for ANC leadership positions contributed to the conditions in which corruption and state capture could take place. Given the dominance of the ANC in national elections over the past twenty-eight years or so, those in party leadership hold significant power in both the party and state. Patronage relationships do not have to involve donations to the party itself in order to flourish. The PPFA therefore does not alleviate the risk posed by these internal electoral contests and the financing thereof.

Levies

166. President Ramaphosa was questioned on the affidavit of Ambassador Moloi, a career diplomat at DIRCO who had made substantial allegations about the role of the party in appointing ambassadors and soliciting payments from diplomats. One of his allegations was that ambassadors were required to sign debit forms for monthly payments to the ANC.

167. President Ramaphosa testified that it is standard for members of the ANC to sign a levy form in order to pay a certain amount from their monthly salaries or accounts to the party. This occurs in both public and private sectors, and includes all persons deployed into public office.

168. However, this does not address Ambassador Moloi's allegation that persons who were not members of the ANC were persistently solicited for levies. This was put to President Ramaphosa. His response was that "I do not know anything about that, I would have a huge question mark around that."

169. The party plays a decisive role in appointing ambassadors through its Deployment Committee. As Ambassador Moloi contended in his affidavit, this allowed the party to appoint its members to high-paying positions and consequently to benefit financially from those appointments.

DISCIPLINE AND ACCOUNTABILITY

170. President Ramaphosa addressed the issue of accountability in his opening statement on his first day of testimony:

> The position of the ANC on leaders and members who have been complicit in acts of corruption and other crimes is clear. Their actions are a direct violation, not only of the laws of the land, but also of the ANC Constitution, its values and principles, and the resolutions and decisions of the ANC's constitutional structures. Such members must face the full legal consequences of their actions. They cannot rely on the ANC for support or protection, nor may they appeal to the principle of collective responsibility. In accounting for their actions they must be accountable for their actions themselves because the ANC did not and could never direct its members of leaders to commit acts of corruption.

171. However, if members of the party are not so held accountable it is inevitable that they would continue to exploit the advantages of party membership and all that that entails for their own unlawful gain.

172. Furthermore, as admitted by President Ramaphosa, law enforcement institutions were themselves weakened and rendered unable to ensure corrupt individuals are held accountable. Parliament too, has failed to use the oversight and accountability measures at its disposal.

173. In these circumstances, but not only in these circumstances, party discipline could and should play a significant role in curtailing corruption where it is likely to continue to occur and in ensuring that state capture does not recur.

Internal disciplinary proceedings

174. President Ramaphosa remarked in his statement that:

> Members of the ANC also affirm that they join the organisation selflessly, without anticipation of any personal reward. Clearly, any member that is involved in corrupt activities or seeks in any other way to use their position for undue self-enrichment is in violation of this basic undertaking.

175. Rule 25.27.9 of the ANC Constitution prohibits the "abuse of elected or employed office in the Organisation or in the State to obtain any direct or indirect undue advantage or enrichment." Rule 25.17.4 prohibits "Engaging in any unethical or immoral conduct which detracts from the character, values and integrity of the ANC, as may be determined by the Integrity Commission, which brings or could bring or has the potential to bring or as a consequence thereof brings the ANC into disrepute." Other offences include being convicted of fraud, theft, corruption, or other acts of financial impropriety (rule 25.17.18), soliciting or accepting a bribe (rule 25.17.19), and bringing the organisation into disrepute (rule 25.17.5).

176. The ANC Constitution mandates that ANC members who violate its rules must be subject to disciplinary proceedings. The Commission requested the ANC disciplinary records. It received records of the ANC's National Disciplinary Committee (NDC) and National Disciplinary Committee of Appeal (NDCA) for the period 2014-2021.

    176.1 In respect of all of the records of disciplinary proceedings which were made available to the Commission, the most serious sanction was (temporary) suspension from the party. This was often only after numerous appeals.

    176.2 The cases provided to the Commission concerned misconduct such as: disrupting meetings or conferences, issuing unauthorised statements to the press, taking the party to court, assault and sexual assault, theft, failure to comply with party policy, insulting other ANC members, participating in "organised factional activity", and bringing the party into disrepute.

    176.3 None of the cases concerned corruption. It is remarkable that the ANC has been grappling with corruption within its ranks for years and has promised change and renewal but has not held a single person to account since at least 2014.

177. The above was put to President Ramaphosa during his evidence. He stated in response that discipline had been taken in some cases but did not surface at the level of the NDC and NDCA. He conceded that these mechanisms had "not been as robust as they should be and they have not been overarching as they should be." He also reiterated that the ANC has "drawn a line in the sand" and would now deal with corruption seriously.

178. The disciplinary records received encompass a period up to and including August 2021. The Commission is unable to conclude if the proverbial line has indeed been drawn, and what that might mean for ensuring accountability within the party.

Concurrent criminal proceedings

179. In his statement, President Ramaphosa stated that, in certain instances, particularly concerning corruption and fraud, "the institution of disciplinary proceedings is dependent on a conviction in a court of law." He stated that the organisation had therefore been unable to act against members facing serious charges of financial impropriety until the completion of court processes, which could often be lengthy.

180. However, it is not true that the organisation cannot act. While rule 25.17.18 refers to those convicted of specific offences, many other rules relate directly to corruption and are not dependent on prosecutions. It was pointed out that there was no necessary legal barrier to internal disciplinary proceedings being instituted and completed before criminal conviction.

181. President Ramaphosa responded that it would pose a problem for the ANC if they disciplined a member for an offence that they were later found not guilty of in a court of law. He explained that this was the reason for the party's "step-aside" rule, which requires members who have been charged with a serious crime to step aside from their positions until they cleared their names. This was determined by the ANC to be the safest route.

182. While there may be certain cases that the ANC disciplinary bodies are ill-equipped to consider, this cannot be true for all alleged instances of corruption. It may be that a disciplinary committee will conclude in a particular case that it cannot make a finding based on the evidence available to it. However, for the ANC to decide not to consider any corruption cases is not acceptable. One would also expect that the ANC would hold its members, and especially its leaders, to higher standards than "has not been convicted in a court of law".

183. Furthermore, President Ramaphosa himself admitted that "the weakening of law enforcement agencies allowed corruption to go unpunished, perpetrators to be protected and the public purse to be looted without consequence." It was known to the party that the criminal justice system could not be relied upon to act against corrupt individuals. Yet the party has continually abdicated its responsibility to its members and voters to enforce its own rules and preserve the integrity of the organisation.

184. It is clearly against the party's best interest to allow its leadership positions to be occupied by those credibly accused of corruption and other crimes. Not only does this practice bring the ANC into disrepute, but there is an elevated risk that corrupt persons in powerful positions will continue to abuse their offices. This is a risk that the party, by failing to discipline those accused of corruption, has deemed acceptable. This certainly does not augur well for the prevention of corruption in the future. Nor does it give positive reassurance that state capture will not recur. The "step aside' rule will not address this problem.

The Integrity Commission

185. In addition to disciplinary processes, the ANC has another structure called the Integrity Commission which can recommend action against leaders and members of the ANC who face allegations of improper conduct. President Ramaphosa stated that "while the work of the Integrity Commission would not substitute for disciplinary action, it was established with the expectation that it would assist in dealing with allegations that had not yet been tested in court."

186. In resolving on the establishment of the Integrity Commission, the 53rd National Conference noted the following:

> More urgent steps should be taken to protect the image of the organisation and enhance its standing in society by ensuring among others, that urgent action is taken to deal with public officials, leaders and members of the ANC who face damaging allegations of improper conduct. In addition, measures should be put in place to prevent abuse of power or office for private gain or factional interests. The ANC can no longer allow prolonged processes that damage its integrity.

187. What is clear is that the Integrity Commission does not have the power to discipline any member. Since 2018, the Integrity Commission has had the power to make recommendations on alleged unethical conduct by ANC members, including recommendations for disciplinary action. There is no evidence that Integrity Commission recommendations have resulted in disciplinary action against any ANC member accused of corruption, save for recommendations that certain individuals should step aside from their positions.

The absence of accountability

188. It was noted in the ANC's 2020 "Through the eye of a needle" review that the party has been unable to deal with various challenges identified in 2001 – of patronage, factionalism, money politics, corruption, among others – because "little emphasis has been placed on consequence management for dereliction of duty and the undermining of the value system of the movement." The document attributes the failures of the party to a lack of accountability:

The failure of the ANC to fully implement the guidelines in Through the Eye of a Needle and other documents arises from, amongst others, the inability to exercise political and organizational leadership functions. It is the inability to act when members deviate from established policy positions and ill-discipline. The tone is not being set from the top. The ANC is engulfed with paralysis in decision-making. The notion of democratic centralism suggests that while there is a need to allow for democratic expressions at different levels of the organization, the exercise of leadership is an important variable in the mix. The preponderance of factional activities has resulted in the emergence of what can be characterized as organizational populism: that is, the inclination to shy away from taking difficult decisions and to cave in to the conduct and demands of rogue elements.

Related to the above, there is a lack of accountability for our actions as leaders and members, in terms of owning up when we deviate from the values/culture of the ANC and our struggle for the attainment of a new society. And arising out of this is the inability to effect consequence management. The organization is ceasing to act as an integral whole, but a collection of individuals pursuing their own self-interest.

Accountability also means holding our leaders, cadres and general member's feet to fire. It is to ensure that they do what they were elected to do – serving the people of South Africa. It is also to ensure that everybody is accountable for his or her actions.

THE "RENEWAL" OF THE PARTY

189. President Ramaphosa spoke frequently of the "process of renewal" upon which the ANC had ostensibly embarked. He spoke at length in evidence about the party's process of renewal and the corrective measures he stated are being implemented. This includes the "cleansing" of certain government institutions, the strengthening of the party's Integrity Commission, the new legislation on party funding, and processes such as lifestyle audits.

190. The ANC takes the position that it will not take disciplinary action against its members who are accused of corruption until they have been convicted by a court of law. As long as that is the ANC position no disciplinary action will be taken against them timeously. It is difficult to see how the ANC will succeed in getting the people to think that it is serious about fighting corruption if it continues to adopt this position. 192 What needs to be said about the ANC and its contribution to state capture is that it opposed proposals by opposition parties for Parliament to establish public inquiries to investigate allegations of corruption and wrong doing by the Guptas and yet it did not itself make any investigations because it said it did not have capacity to investigate the allegations against President Zuma and the Guptas. In that way the Guptas continued to pursue state capture to the detriment of the people of South Africa.

191. Furthermore, the ANC's deployment policy has ensured that many institutions of state are weakened because very often the people who are appointed to certain positions are either not qualified for the positions they occupy or do not have the necessary experience to perform the work all of which provide fertile ground for corruption and state capture.

192. The ANC's further contribution to state capture is that when opposition parties tabled motions of no confidence in President Zuma because of the allegations of corruption and state capture and what the Guptas were reported to be doing such as summoning Ministers to their home, the ANC protected President Zuma and ensured that he remained in office as President. If the ANC had not protected President Zuma and had he been removed from office, the Guptas would probably have fled as they did in 2018 and therefore would not have continued looting the way they did.

PARLIAMENTARY OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION

1. Parliament has a constitutional duty to exercise oversight over the Executive branch of government, including organs of state such as State-Owned Entities (SOEs); and the executive is accountable to Parliament. The matter considered in this section of the Commission's report is whether Parliament exercised effective oversight over the executive and SOEs in respect of allegations of state capture or corruption; whether it held the executive properly accountable; and, if not, whether this failure contributed to the perpetuation or scale of state capture or corruption.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

2. The Constitution is explicit that Parliament is obliged to exercise oversight over the executive and that the executive is accountable to Parliament.

3. Section 42(3) of the Constitution provides: The National Assembly (NA) is elected to represent the people and to ensure government by the people. It does this by choosing the President, by providing a national forum for public consideration of issues, by passing legislation and by scrutinizing and overseeing executive action.

4. The parliamentary oversight model adopted by Parliament indicates that:

> oversight entails the informal and formal, watchful, strategic and structured scrutiny exercised by legislatures in respect of the implementation of laws, the application of the budget, and the strict observance of statutes and the Constitution. It also oversees the effective management of government departments by members of Cabinet for improved service delivery for the achievement of a better quality of life for all citizens.

5. Section 55(2) of the Constitution provides that:

> The NA must provide for mechanisms- (a) to ensure that all executive organs of state in the national sphere of government are accountable to it; and (b) to maintain oversight of (i) the exercise of national executive authority, including the implementation of legislation; and (ii) any organ of state.

6. Section 56 of the Constitution reads:

> The NA or any of its committees may – (a) summon any person to give evidence on oath or affirmation, or to produce documents; (b) require any person or institution to report to it; (c) compel, in terms of national legislation or the rules and orders, any person or institution to comply with a summons or requirement in terms of paragraph (a) or (b); and (d) receive petitions, representations or submissions from any interested persons or institutions.

7. Other examples of Parliamentary oversight includes Section 89(1) that empowers the NA, by a resolution adopted with a supporting vote of at least two thirds of its members, to remove the President from office on specified grounds. Section 102 empowers the NA, by a vote supported by a majority, to pass a vote of no confidence in the Cabinet excluding the President, or in the President. Section 92(2) provides that members of the Cabinet are "accountable" collectively and individually to Parliament for the exercise of their powers and the performance of their functions. Section 92(3) provides that members of the cabinet must provide Parliament with full and regular reports.

   7.1 The constitutional duties of oversight and accountability must be seen in conjunction with schedule 2 to the Constitution, to be sworn or affirmed when members of the NA and delegates to the National Council of Provinces (NCOP) assume office. Item 4(1) of that schedule provides that Members of the NA, permanent delegates to the NCOP and members of provincial legislatures, before the Chief Justice or a judge designated by the Chief Justice, must swear or affirm as follows:

> I, A.B., swear/solemnly affirm that I will be faithful to the Republic of South Africa and will obey, respect and uphold the Constitution and all other law of the Republic, and I solemnly promise to perform my functions as a member of the NA/permanent delegate to the NCOP/member of the legislature of the province of C.D. to the best of my ability [in the case of an oath: So help me God] (emphasis added).

THE CORDER REPORT

8. Parliament (1994-1999) commissioned a report entitled “Report on Parliamentary Oversight and Accountability” (“the Corder report”) by Hugh Corder, Saras Jagwanth and Fred Soltau to advise it on how to exercise its oversight responsibilities.
9. The Corder Report’s recommendations were, in summary:
   9.1 Legislation in the form of an Accountability Standards Act and an Accountability and Independence of Constitutional Institutions Act
   9.2 Amendment to the Rules of the NA and the NCOP, for the regulation of reporting to parliamentary committees; and 9.3 The establishment of a Standing Committee on Constitutional Institutions.

The “Oversight and Accountability Model” adopted by Parliament

10. Some of the recommendations in the Corder report and proposed legislation were not implemented according to a report submitted by Professor Richard Calland (“the Calland report”). Consequently, a parliamentary joint committee established a “Task Team on Oversight and Accountability”, to develop a “model” for Parliament’s oversight function. The task team proposed an “Oversight and Accountability (‘OVAC’) Model”, which was adopted by the Joint Rules Committee and the NA and NCOP in 2009. The OVAC Model expresses Parliament’s view of how it should go about implementing its constitutional oversight and accountability responsibilities.
11. The Calland Report summarises some of the principal recommendations contained in the OVAC model as follows:
   11.1 The establishment of a Joint Parliamentary Oversight and Government Assurance Committee
   11.2 An Oversight and Advisory Section to "provide advice, technical support, co-ordination, and tracking and monitoring mechanisms on issues arising from oversight and accountability activities of Members of Parliament and the committees”
   11.3 Development of rules to assist Parliament "further in sanctioning Cabinet members for non-compliance after all established existing avenues and protocols have been exhausted”
   11.4 Improved reporting of committees to the House
   11.5 Ensuring sufficient and appropriate resourcing and capacity to develop specialised committees to deal with crosscutting issues of departments and ministries
   11.6 Splitting training between legislative and oversight work, and increasing training for members in core competencies, including use and application of the OVAC model and budget analysis; and 11.7 Parliament’s public participation function should be integrated within its overall oversight mechanism.
12. Some recommendations must still be implemented but this will be dealt with later in this report. However, both before and after the adoption of the OVAC report, the rules of the NA were adapted to facilitate oversight taking place, primarily in portfolio committees.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PARLIAMENT'S PORTFOLIO COMMITTEES

13. Many commentators have referred to portfolio committees as the "engine room" in relation to parliamentary oversight, while Prof Calland felt that the parliamentary committee system is "the most important institutional infrastructure for exercising meaningful executive oversight".

RELEVANT RULES OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

14. The current version of the Rules of the NA is the 9th edition (26 May 2016) and this report will refer to the rules as presently numbered.

    14.1 Rule 225 provides for the establishment by the Speaker of a range of portfolio committees and the assignment of a portfolio of government affairs to each such committee.

    14.2 Rule 227(1) sets out the functions of portfolio committees as follows:

> A portfolio committee —
> (a) Must deal with Bills and other matters falling within its portfolio as are referred to it in terms of the Constitution, legislation, these rules, the Joint Rules or by resolution of the Assembly
> (b) Must maintain oversight of — (i) The exercise within its portfolio of national executive authority, including the implementation of legislation (ii) Any executive organ of state falling within its portfolio (iii) Any constitutional institution falling within its portfolio; and (iv) Any other body or institution in respect of which oversight was assigned to it
> (c) May monitor, investigate, enquire into and make recommendations concerning any such executive organ of state, constitutional institution or other body or institution, including the legislative programme, budget, rationalisation, restructuring, functioning, organisation, structure, staff and policies of such organ of state, institution or other body or institution
> (d) May consult and liaise with any executive organ of state or constitutional institution; and
> (e) Must perform any other functions, tasks or duties assigned to it in terms of the Constitution, legislation, these rules, the Joint Rules or resolutions of the Assembly, including functions, tasks and duties concerning parliamentary oversight or supervision of such executive organs of state, constitutional institutions or other bodies or institutions (emphasis added).

15. Portfolio committees also have the general powers conferred on parliamentary committees by Rule 167. This rule provides:

> For the purposes of performing its functions a committee may, subject to the Constitution, legislation, the other provisions of these rules and resolutions of the Assembly —
> (a) Summons any person to appear before it to give evidence on oath or affirmation, or to produce documents
> (b) Receive petitions, representations or submissions from interested persons or institutions (c) Permit oral evidence on petitions, representations, submissions and any other matter before the committee
> (d) Conduct public hearings
> (e) Consult any Assembly or Council committee or subcommittee, or any joint committee or subcommittee
> (f) Determine its own working arrangements
> (g) Meet at a venue determined by it, which may be a venue beyond the seat of Parliament

(h) Meet on any day and at any time, including — (i) On a day which is not a working day (ii) On a day on which the Assembly is not sitting (iii) At a time when the Assembly is sitting; or (iv) During a recess; and

(i) Exercise any other powers assigned to it by the Constitution, legislation, the other provisions of these rules or resolutions of the Assembly.

The official stance of the majority party on parliamentary oversight

16. The official stance of the ANC, as articulated by its conference resolutions and statements by its leaders, has been at times to encourage vigorous parliamentary oversight. For example:

    16.1 The ANC's then Secretary General, Mr G Mantashe, was reported in a newspaper article (22 May 2009) as having given the ANC's MPs strict instructions to be robust and not to be afraid of holding cabinet ministers to account for their actions.

    16.2 President Ramaphosa testified that the ANC decided at its December 2012 conference "that we now need to get our parliamentary structures to be more activist, to be more alert when it comes to the issue of oversight, to exercise more accountability or to demand more accountability on the executive. . . "

17. However, the official stance on parliamentary oversight by both the "ordinary" ANC Members of Parliament and members of the executive, including cabinet ministers has often not been reflected in practice.

DID PARLIAMENT HAVE A DUTY TO INVESTIGATE OR ENQUIRE INTO ALLEGATIONS

18. Parliament is not a law enforcement agency nor is it primarily an investigatory body. It is therefore fair to ask whether Parliament, or any of its committees, could properly have been expected to investigate or enquire into allegations in the public domain of state capture, corruption in the public sector or the like, where the facts were not uncontested.

19. Parliament is simply not obliged to investigate or enquire into every allegation of public-sector corruption or every allegation of malfeasance but Parliament does have obligations under the Constitution to scrutinise and oversee executive action and to ensure that all executive organs of state are accountable to it.

20. It is the Commission's view that Parliament must exercise oversight over the executive and senior representatives of the executive and hold it to account and that this duty includes to investigate or enquire where there is reasonable cause to suspect unconstitutional, unlawful or improper conduct on the part of a senior representative of the executive.

21. President Ramaphosa, testifying in his capacity as the President of the ANC and former Deputy President of the ANC, accepted the proposition that, where there is information in the public domain which – if true – would implicate a president in conduct which is allegedly unconstitutional, illegal or improper, the NA is obliged to do what it can, firstly to establish whether there is any merit in the allegations and, secondly, if it finds that there is, to take appropriate action.

22. Ms Modise (who served as Speaker of the NA and previously served as Chairperson of the NCOP), accepted the propositions that it is it is incumbent on MPs, when serious allegations of corruption have been made known to them within their respective portfolios, to investigate it accordingly, and when members of portfolio committees become aware of media reports that fall within their portfolios "they need to consider them and if serious enough, they need to investigate accordingly".

23. Ms Mbete, the former Speaker, accepted that Parliament could not wait until a court of law had made a finding, provided enough grounds could be shown to justify Parliament investigating a matter.

PARLIAMENTARY OVERSIGHT IN RELATION TO ALLEGATIONS OF STATE CAPTURE

Events in 2011

24. Allegations of state capture and / or of improper influence by the Gupta brothers have long been in the public domain. It is acknowledged that some degree of effective parliamentary oversight commenced in about mid-2017, but it was still patchy. Before that, the record is disturbing.

25. Although allegations of an improper relationship between the Gupta and Zuma families had started to appear before 2011, this report's examination starts with articles that appeared in the Sunday Times newspaper on 30 January 2011 ("the Guptarisation of South Africa") and 27 February 2011 ("Zuma faces revolt over Guptas") alleging improper influence by members of the Gupta family. Essentially, the allegations the articles made about the Gupta brothers were among other that they had so much power that they often summoned cabinet ministers and senior government officials to their family compound in Saxonwold; they told ministers that they were to be promoted or that their jobs were secure ahead of President Zuma's announcement; and that they pressured several government officials at the government communications section, and directors of communications at various departments to place advertisements in their newspaper The New Age.

26. President Ramaphosa in his testimony at the Commission reiterated that the appointment of ministers and deputy ministers and the announcement thereof, should be the sole preserve of the President. President Ramaphosa said that it would be a subversion if people who have no real role either in the executive or in the party have influence in the appointment of CEOs and chairpersons of SOEs.

27. Mr Mantashe, who served as Secretary General of the ANC at that time also accepted that the allegations should have been investigated but Mr Mantashe indicated that the NWC after a meeting issued a statement dismissing criticism of the Gupta family's political influence as "racial prejudice". However, President Ramaphosa accepted, with the benefit of hindsight, that there was no basis for the dismissal of the allegations as racist because they had been "blinded by the events of the time".

28. In an NEC meeting (August 2011), Mr Fikile Mbalula also made claims that the Guptas should have been investigated because they informed him of his imminent appointment as Minister before the official announcement by President Zuma. President Ramaphosa stated in an affidavit submitted to the Commission that he recalled the incident but did not "prompt any specific concerns about the capture of the state". However, in his oral evidence President Ramaphosa conceded that "we should have been more alert at looking at them, but we did not at the time".

29. Although Mr Mantashe repeatedly indicated that the ANC, including the Secretary General's office, does not have investigatory powers, Parliament does have the power to investigate the allegations referred to above, including allegations as to what had transpired at the NEC meeting, already in the public eye. Ms Modise accepted in her evidence, there was no reason why an MP should not have questioned Mr Mbalula about his reported allegations or should not have put the question to President Zuma himself. However, there is no evidence that the allegations above were probed in Parliament in 2011 or in the immediate aftermath.

30. Ms Z. Rantho, who became a member of the ANC's Parliamentary caucus from mid-2009, gave evidence that the 2011 press reports were not discussed in the caucus, nor between the party leadership and its MP's in any portfolio committees before the Waterkloof incident of March 2013.

Events in 2013

31. In 2013, further developments should have prompted closer and more effective parliamentary scrutiny or action because it was openly acknowledged that public monies, including monies from SOEs, were being directed towards the Gupta's media empire, including The New Age. This was not due to Parliament's inability to find out the truth, but the ANC's stance that there was nothing wrong with this.

32. The Sunday Times published a report (17 March 2013) alleging that Mr Rajesh Gupta offered a bribe of R100 000, later increased to R500 000, to the then chairperson and acting CEO of SAA, Mr V. Kona, and that this was rejected by Mr Kona. The Waterkloof saga (late April 2013) also raised allegations of improper influence of the Guptas when they made use of the Waterkloof airforce base that was allegedly approved by President Zuma. Unfortunately, no parliamentary inquiry into the allegations of improper Gupta influence took place, in 2013 or indeed before mid-2017. This is concerning despite Mr Mantashe's evidence in 2013 that the ANC's Integrity Commission submitted a report "connected to the Gupta influence", recommending that President Zuma should step down. It is therefore difficult to accept that MPs did not yet have sufficient cause to probe the serious allegations of improper Gupta influence by 2013.

Events in 2014-2015

33. Between 2014 and 2015 several reports alleged improper Gupta influence. For example, the Mail & Guardian (4 July 2014) reported the R50 billion locomotive tender at Transnet and the AmaBhungane report (31 July 2015) reflected on the Kickback scandal that engulfed Transnet. There were reports about the Guptas and their companies' dealings with Eskom. All this prompted opposition parties such as the Democratic Alliance (DA) to start asking questions. Consequently, eight motions of no confidence were proposed in President Zuma but all were unsuccessful because all ANC MPs were instructed by their party to vote against these motions.

Events in January to March 2016

34. Widely publicised allegations of state capture came to a head in early 2016 and Mr Mantashe was quoted in The Sowetan as saying that the Guptas had "captured" individual ANC leaders but not the party itself. He confirmed this in his evidence.

35. On 14 February 2016, then Deputy President Ramaphosa also confirmed that he had been correctly quoted in an interview with a Sunday Times journalist that he believed that politically connected people had been involved in the "capture" of government institutions.

36. Several other allegations against the Guptas were made between January and March 2016. For example, Mr Mcebisi Jonas then deputy finance minister alleged that he was offered a position of finance minister by the Guptas. Mr Themba Maseko alleged that he had been forced to resign from the Government Communication and Information Service (GCIS) after a threat from Mr Ajay Gupta and pressure to place government advertisements. Ms Vytjie Mentor alleged that the Guptas offered her the position of Minister of Public Enterprises on condition that she would drop the SAA route to India in favour of Jet Airways.

37. These events prompted the DA's Ms N Mazzone to push on 8 March 2016 for an inquiry by the Portfolio Committee on Public Enterprises (PCPE) when she wrote to the then chairperson of the PCPE, Ms Dipuo Letsatsi-Duba to summon the Gupta brothers to answer about their undue influence over President Zuma, the government and its officials. Ms N Mazzone also followed up with another letter to Ms Letsatsi-Duba requesting that the PCPE conduct an inquiry "into the capture of SOE's by the Guptas". Essentially, she requested that PCPE 1) summon the Guptas to provide answers for the allegations, 2) call former Ministers of Public Enterprises, Barbara Hogan and Malusi Gigaba, to provide full details of their relationship with the Guptas, and 3) summon the CEOs and Chairpersons of the largest SOEs to appear before it to answer questions about their ties to the Guptas. At the time, Dr Ben Ngubane was the Chairperson of the Eskom Board, Mr DL Mantsha, the Chairperson of the Denel Board, Ms Linda Mabaso, Chairperson of the Transnet Board, and Ms Dudu Myeni, the Chairperson of the SAA Board. Dr Ngubane, Mr Mantsha and Ms Mabaso had links to the Guptas or their associates. Ms Myeni is close to President Zuma.

38. It is against this background that the NEC of the ANC on 20 March 2016 issued a statement on the "Alleged Business Influence of the State". In this statement the NEC 1) recognized the allegations surrounding the Gupta family and its purported influence in the appointment of ministers as "serious" and 2) mandated the Officials and the NWC to “gather all pertinent information about the allegations” to enable the ANC to take appropriate action. However, no support was given to an inquiry by Parliament or any of its committees into the allegations. The newly appointed chief whip Mr Jackson Mthembu was also quoted in the Mail & Guardian (29 March 2016) that allegations against the Guptas should be investigated by the Hawks and the Public Protector. Despite the seriousness of the allegations the ANC continued to confirm its full confidence in then President Jacob Zuma.

39. On 31 March 2016, the Constitutional Court handed down its "Nkandla" judgment. This case concerned the constitutional obligations of the NA to implement remedial action against President Zuma recommended by the Public Protector, then Adv Thuli Madonsela. The Public Protector had found that President Zuma and his family had been unduly enriched by an upgrade of his private residence and ordered that the President repay a to-be-determined percentage of the undue enrichment. The NA, having conducted its own investigation of the matter, adopted a resolution absolving the President from all liability.

40. The Constitutional Court’s finding that the NA had failed to comply with its constitutional obligation to hold the executive accountable attracted considerable attention, including from MPs; but it did not cause the NA to change its approach in respect of the allegations of state capture and corruption.

41. On 5 April 2016, another DA-proposed motion of no confidence, this time based on President Zuma’s failure to comply with the Public Protector’s Secure in Comfort (Nkandla) report, was opposed by the ANC and consequently failed to attract majority support.

Refusal of request by the PCPE for an enquiry

42. On 6 April 2016, Ms Letsatsi-Duba, the chair of the PCPE, replied to Ms Mazzone’s request for an enquiry by that committee, stating that, according to the legal advice that she obtained from the Parliamentary Legal Service that the 1) NA Rule 138 "requires a House resolution to initiate an investigation"; 2) The PCPE "is not authorised by law to initiate such a parliamentary inquiry on its own"; and 3) Any member of the NA may move a motion to have a draft resolution pertaining to a parliamentary inquiry put before the NA for approval as a resolution of the NA in terms of rule 94.

43. Ms Mazzone replied in writing on 6 April 2016, disputing the Parliamentary legal advice by indicating that NA Rules 138 and 201, read with section 56 of the Constitution, empowered the committee to summon members of the Gupta family to give evidence and to produce documents, without any requirement of a resolution of the NA. It may be noted that all witnesses asked about the legal advice that the PCPE was not empowered to decide to conduct the inquiry requested without a House resolution agreed that this was clearly wrong.

44. Further exchanges between the Commission’s evidence leader and Ms Letsatsi-Duba about the period during her tenure as chairperson of the PCPE (May 2014 to March 2017) revealed that the PCPE did not effectively exercise its oversight powers and that the ANC members of the PCPE had no willingness to conduct an inquiry as requested by Ms Mazzone. A similar view was expressed by Ms Rantho in her affidavit that little effective oversight took place in respect of allegations of fraud or corruption. It became clear that ANC MPs acted in accordance with what was or may have been decided in party structures. Consequently, the ANC’s attempt at an internal investigation after its March 2016 NEC meeting had failed.

45. Eight submissions were made; but only Mr Themba Maseko was willing to put his evidence in writing. Mr Mantashe’s stated in evidence that was there was “suspicion in the ANC people do not want to do anything that is career limiting, they fear being persecuted.” The ANC did not move to support any type of parliamentary inquiry into the allegations of state capture.

46. Even when President Zuma was blamed in August 2016 for the decrease in the ANC’s share of the national vote (from 62% in 2011 to 54% in 2016) in the municipal elections, Mr Mantashe, then secretary general of the ANC, issued a statement after an NEC meeting that indicated that “all of us within the NEC must take responsibility, all of us. We don’t point fingers.”

Rejection of the DA motion in 2016 to establish an ad hoc committee

47. Having failed in its attempt to bring about a portfolio committee inquiry, the DA attempted to get support from the NA for a resolution appointing an ad hoc committee to investigate the alleged capture of state resources and undue influence over the government. Mr D Maynier (DA MP) therefore proposed a motion on 8 September 2016 to establish an ad hoc committee in terms of Rule 253(1)(a) that would, among others, investigate alleged capture of state resources and undue influence over the government; recommend measures in line with the NA's oversight mandate to prevent such incidents from occurring and exercise the powers in rule 167 as it may deem necessary for the performance of its task; and report to the Assembly by no later than 30 October 2016. However, the DA failed in its attempts to get the allegations of state capture investigated.

48. It became clear that the ANC adopted the stance that it was not Parliament that should investigate the allegations of state capture but SAPS or the Chapter 9 institutions. Nevertheless, President Ramaphosa conceded in response to the question why Parliament should not have investigated the allegations at the Commission that "... if you look at it with hindsight, I would say the two would not be mutually exclusive and if anything, both checks could easily have been followed".

49. The Commission agreed that Parliament was constitutionally obliged to oversee and hold the executive to account and not leave it exclusively to other agencies to investigate.

Events up to May 2017

50. Allegations of state capture had been made to the Public Protector, Ms Thuli Madonsela, by several persons. Her report entitled "State of Capture" was made public on 2 November 2016. The Public Protector made multiple "observations" such as the possible involvement of the Guptas in the removal and replacement of the finance minister in December 2015; apparent failures to investigate the allegations made by Mr Jonas, Ms Mentor and Mr Maseko and allegations of an cosy relationship between Mr Brian Molefe and the Gupta family; possible improprieties in the award of state contracts or tenders to Gupta-linked companies or persons; and possible improper interference by President Zuma or members of his cabinet in the relationship between banks and Gupta-owned companies.

51. The remedial action that the Public Protector took included inter alia directing that President Zuma should, within thirty days, appoint a commission of inquiry headed by a judge solely selected by the Chief Justice. She directed that the commission of inquiry should complete its task within 180 days. Because of delays the present Commission was only appointed on 23 January 2018.

52. In contrast to the above challenges and delays, the case of the SABC is a good example of appropriate parliamentary oversight. On 3 November 2016 the NA resolved to establish an ad hoc committee into the fitness of the SABC board and related matters after concerns expressed about the SABC's ability to exercise its mandate as the public broadcaster. The committee considered the SABC's financial status and sustainability; its response to a report by the Public Protector entitled "When Governance and Ethics Fail"; its response to recent judgments affecting it; the SABC board's ability to take legally binding decisions following the resignation of several of its non-executive board members; the SABC's adherence to the Broadcasting Charter; and its ability to carry out its duties under its governing legislation. The committee also held public hearings in which numerous witnesses gave evidence that the SABC's primary mandate as a national public broadcaster had been compromised by a lapse of governance and that the board had not discharged its fiduciary duties.

53. Further allegations of state capture and corruption in the public sector continued to mount. For instance, on or about 6 November 2016, Ms Mazzone attempted to have Mr Brian Molefe summoned to testify before the PCPE concerning developments at Eskom, without success. The DA on 10 November 2016 also proposed a vote of no confidence in President Zuma which was defeated.

PCPE decision on 23 May 2017 to conduct an enquiry

54. Significant developments took place within the PCPE in May 2017 when Ms Zukiswa Rantho was appointed as acting chair and Mr Gordhan also joined the PCPE. On 17 May Ms Rantho acceded to a request by Ms Mazzone that the Minister of Public Enterprises, Ms Lynne Brown, and the Eskom board be required to attend a PCPE meeting on 23 May where the minister and board members explained the circumstances of Mr Molefe's resignation, retirement, pension, leave, and re-appointment.

55. All members of the PCPE found the explanations to be unsatisfactory and took a decision in favour of conducting an inquiry and its members decided to invoke the power under the rules of the NA to summon witnesses and documents.

56. In the testimony that followed, Ms Mazzone made it clear that it is "evident that there had been a change of view on the part of the representatives of the ANC on the Committee and this change of view can be attributed to the shifting balance of factional forces within the ANC."

The "Gupta leaks" and the "Frolick letters"

57. A further turning point was reached with the publication of the voluminous set of Gupta-linked emails (the so-called "Gupta leaks"). It was asserted that these emails substantiated allegations of state capture and prompted senior ANC representatives in Parliament that four portfolio committees should be directed to enquire into the allegations insofar as they pertained to their portfolios.

58. On or about 15 June 2017, Mr Cedric Frolick, the House Chairperson of Committees, addressed letters ("the Frolick letters") to the chairpersons of four portfolio committees, namely the Portfolio Committees on Public Enterprises, Transport (in relation to Prasa), Home Affairs and Mineral Resources. In essence, Mr Frolick asked the chairpersons to, within the parameters of the NA Rules governing the business of committees and consistent with the Constitutionally enshrined oversight function of Parliament, ensure immediate engagement with the concerned Ministers to ensure that Parliament gets to the bottom of the allegations.

What explains the shift in stance?

59. The ANC as an organisation was unwilling before mid-2017 to initiate or to support a parliamentary inquiry or inquiries into the allegations concerned. The allegations implicated senior ANC leaders, right up to the President, as well as others regarded by the ANC as its cadres and deployees. However, the ANC leadership was unwilling to expose the allegations of malfeasance to transparent public scrutiny. It is also argued that those who supported proper parliamentary investigation of the allegations may, not unreasonably, have feared the personal and political consequences if they should deviate from the "party line". The Commission believes that the balance of power between competing factions within the ANC played a significant role in support of an inquiry.

The role played by the ANC's Political Committee

60. President Ramaphosa, who, as Deputy President at the time chaired the Political Committee, informed the Commission that when the Gupta Leak emails came out it was clear that there needed to be a response and that Parliament would be one of the structures to deal with it. If the delay in Parliament taking the decision to institute inquiries into allegations of state capture was attributable to the balance of power within the ANC, then it must mean that the balance of power initially favoured those in the ANC who did not want such inquiries to be held and that there was a change in the balance of power in the ANC in 2017 which favoured those who wanted such inquiries to be held. The two views were held, respectively, by those within the ANC who supported Mr Jacob Zuma and those who supported Mr Cyril Ramaphosa. Apart from the Gupta leaks the ANC elective conference in which a new president of the organisation would be elected also played a key role in shifting the balance of power.

61. As will appear below, the struggle as to whether to support or suppress parliamentary inquiries and effective oversight over the executive continued even after mid-2017. This is demonstrated by the way in which the four committees to whose chairs Mr Frolick addressed his letters dealt with his requests.

The PCPE's Eskom inquiry

62. The PCPE had already decided to commence an inquiry on 23 May 2017, before it received its "Frolick letter" of 15 June 2017. However, after numerous delays and problems regarding resources an evidence leader was appointed, and a decision was taken that the inquiry would focus on Eskom, Transnet and Denel, starting with Eskom. The inquiry proper commenced on 17 October 2017.

63. There was considerable resistance to the inquiry, both from within the ranks of the ANC caucus and from those under scrutiny. Notwithstanding the divisions in the caucus, the Chief Whip, Mr Mthembu, supported the inquiry, told PCPE members that there was support for the inquiry from influential members of the ANC's leadership and gave what assistance he could. There was resistance against committee members; in particular Ms Rantho and her family were subjected to threats and intimidation. There were baseless legal challenges and attempts to delay and subvert investigations by persons and organisations to undermine the authority and function of the Committee.

64. Despite the difficulties, the inquiry heard evidence from numerous witnesses and considered numerous documents. Because the present Commission had been established and was well under way, it was eventually decided not to proceed with the intended inquiries in relation to Transnet and Denel. On 28 November 2018 the PCPE unanimously adopted, with amendments, its final report was made available to the Commission and has been of considerable assistance to it.

Failure by the PCT to act on its "Frolick letter"

65. The Chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Transport (PCT), Ms PD Magadzi, received a letter dated 15 June 2017 from Mr Frolick about allegations of state capture that involved members of the board of the Passenger Rail Agency of South Africa (Prasa). It requested the committee to investigate these allegations and report back to the NA as a matter of urgency. However, evidence by Mr MS F de Freitas revealed that Ms Magadzi did not table Mr Frolick's letter before the Committee.

66. Based on the evidence presented at the Committee, it appears doubtful that Ms Magadzi tabled the letters of 15 June 2017 or 27 August 2017 before the PCT. Mr Frolick says in his affidavit that the PCT "failed to implement" the decision conveyed in his letter of 15 June 2017. This illustrates the Commission's view that there seems to be continued resistance to the parliamentary oversight in relation to the allegations of state capture and corruption. A discussion of the general inadequacy and ineffectiveness of oversight exercised by the PCS in relation Prasa (as distinct from the way it dealt with Mr Frolick's letters) will follow later in this report.

Portfolio Committee on Minerals

67. The chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Minerals (PCM), Mr S Lusipo, also received his "Frolick letter". Like the PCT, the PCM ultimately failed to inquire effectively into the allegations of state capture because several PCM ANC members expressed concerns regarding what the committee was being asked to do. PCM also felt that the Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr M Zwane, should be called to attend a meeting but Minister Zwane was evasive and only attended the PCM meeting on 18 October 2017.

68. After a lengthy delay, the TORs for an inquiry were finalised at a meeting on 25 April 2018 where it was agreed that the inquiry would focus, inter alia, on the role of Minster Zwane and the Department of Mineral Resources (DMR) in facilitating the sale of Glencore assets; non-compliance with the PFMA resulting in fruitless and wasteful expenditure; an alleged conflict of interest on the part of the Minister; and whether officials had been subject to outside influence. The inquiry never got off the ground because there was no budget for support staff to travel to interview witnesses.

69. It appears to the Commission that, by the time that the PCM lost patience with the Minister's evasiveness and decided to commence a formal inquiry, the reason for its failure to proceed was that the resources required and requested were not made available. This raised concerns about the extent of resources available for necessary parliamentary oversight as well as how committed Mr Frolick and the ANC's parliamentary leadership were to the investigative process sought in Mr Frolick's letters of June 2017. In essence, very little of substance occurred within the PCM by way of parliamentary oversight.

Portfolio Committee on Home Affairs

70. The letter of 15 June 2017 from Mr Frolick to the chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Home Affairs (PCHA), Mr B Mashile, requested the PCHA to investigate allegations involving the former Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Malusi Gigaba, in the granting of citizenship to non-South Africans and to report its findings to the NA "as a matter of urgency".

71. The PCHA discussed the letter on 20 June 2017 and invited former Minister Gigaba, and the then minister, Ms HB Mkhize to attend a meeting with the committee on 22 June. Both ministers failed to attend, but the director-general presented an overview of the processes with respect to applications for naturalisation by the Gupta families. Nevertheless, the proceedings of the PCHA progressed slowly and on 28 February 2018 the PCHA requested support of Parliament's research and legal services to engage with the documentation submitted to the committee. On 6 March 2018 Mr Gigaba made a presentation to the committee, on 12 September 2018 the formal hearings commenced, and on 13 March 2019, the PCHA discussed and adopted its final report. Amongst its concluding "observations" was that the approval of the early naturalisation application of Mr Ajay Gupta's family by Mr Gigaba was "incorrect" and that criminal charges should be laid against Mr Ashu Chawla and members of the Gupta family relating to false information submitted in their early naturalisation applications.

72. Ms Modise, the Speaker of the NA, mostly blamed Mr Frolick for the long delay but it may be prudent to spell out in the rules where accountability lies for the delay to ensure that appropriate oversight is being carried out.

Other evidence of inadequate parliamentary oversight

73. The problem of inadequate parliamentary oversight has not been confined to the way Parliament dealt, or failed to deal, with the relatively recent allegations of state capture and corruption. Another long-standing failure as regards parliamentary oversight, which will be reverted to shortly, relates to multiple allegedly corruptly-procured contracts between the Bosasa group of companies and (amongst others) the Department of Correctional Services (DCS), despite evidence of corruption which appeared in the press from 2006 onwards, the apparent veracity of which was confirmed by an SIU investigation reported to Parliament in November 2009.

74. A further example is the Nkandla affair. As referred to above, the CC found that the NA's resolution in 2015 absolving President Zuma from liability for any of the expenditure incurred in relation to Nkandla was inconsistent with the Constitution and unlawful. It is doubtful that this failure on the part of the NA was unconnected to a fear on the part of at least some majority-party MPs of the consequences to them should they step out of line.

75. Leaving aside for the moment the fallout of her stance as regards the vote of no confidence, the evidence of Dr Khoza on her experience in relation to the prevailing culture on parliamentary oversight is also disturbing and will be referred to below.

76. These instances of a regrettable political culture fail to be distinguished from those instances where there is a genuine will to exercise oversight; but difficulties are experienced in making such oversight effective. That is a separate topic.

Pressure to "look the other way" regarding Bosasa corruption allegations

77. Mr A Agrizzi testified about extensive corruption involving the Bosasa group of companies and the DCS from about 2004. Allegations were widely reported in the press and some allegations were eventually investigated by the SIU which – as it made clear to the Portfolio Committee for Correctional Services (PCCS) at a hearing on 16 November 2009 – found them to be well-founded and recommended prosecution. Mr Agrizzi also testified that he had been party to the payment of bribes to MPs on the PCCS to look the other way.

78. However, much of the work of the PCCS was done under severe pressure from a former minister and chief whip not to scrutinise the Bosasa allegations. For example, Mr Dennis Bloem, then an ANC MP and Chairperson of the PCCS, testified before the Commission that he personally raised his concerns in meetings with the Minister but was told not to "interfere". Mr Bloem also testified that the ANC's PCCS study group in the presence of the minister and chief whip were told: "Do not fight, because this is an ANC Government. Do not fight Comrades." Mr Bloem said it was quite clear that Mr Mti, the then Commissioner of the DCS, had the support and protection of the Minister.

79. Pressure on Mr Bloem continued and is supported by the testimony of Mr J Selfe, a DA MP who served for many years on the PCCS with Mr Bloem. Mr Selfe testified that Mr Bloem would telephone him from time to time to tell him about the difficulties he had with his own organisation, to pass on certain information, to encourage him to ask certain questions and to pursue certain issues in the committee.

Bribing of PCCS members by Bosasa

80. Mr Agrizzi also testified about outright bribes he said were paid by Bosasa to Mr Vincent Smith, Ms Winnie Ngwenya and Mr VV Magagula, all ANC MPs on the PCCS at the time of the payment of the bribes, as well as to Mr C Frolick, to whom much reference has been made above. Mr Frolick denies this.

81. An MP who takes a bribe to influence the manner in which a portfolio committee discharges its duties not only commits a serious criminal offence but is also guilty of a gross dereliction of his or her constitutional oversight responsibilities as an MP.

Evidence of Dr M Khoza on the culture regarding oversight and accountability

82. Dr Makhosi Khoza was an ANC MP from May 2014 to September 2017 and served on the Standing Committee on Finance ("the SCOF") from June 2014 to February 2017, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Inquiry into the Fitness of the SABC Board ("the SABC inquiry") and as chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Public Service Administration from February to September 2017.

83. Dr Khoza essentially testified that she received criticism from some ANC members because she asked pointed questions or made critical comments. Her criticisms concerned issues relating to accountability, corporate governance, and the like. Dr Khoza said that, whilst she received some support from Mr J Mthembu, the then Minister of Communications, for her stance during the SABC inquiry, she also received a great deal of criticism within the ANC.

84. Dr Khoza fell out with the ANC over the stance it adopted in relation to a motion of no confidence in President Zuma on 8 August 2017. It is therefore not surprising that an ANC study group meeting asserted that Dr Khoza had brought the name of the ANC into disrepute. Dr Khoza was eventually told that those present at the study group meeting had decided to remove her as chairperson of the portfolio committee.

85. The removal of Dr Khoza occurred a month after Mr Frolick's letters of 15 June had been sent to the chairpersons of four portfolio committees and supports the views already alluded to above (i) that there was serious factional division within the ANC regarding the approach to be adopted in relation to parliamentary oversight and holding the executive accountable; and (ii) that this persisted after the distribution of the Frolick letters.

Party discipline

86. Party discipline is a legitimate and indispensable feature of a party-based democratic system. However, there can be a tension between party discipline and the oversight obligations of MPs under the Constitution. This has been recognised by the Constitutional Court. Compare the judgment of the CC sometimes referred to as the "secret ballot" judgment:

> Members are required to swear or affirm faithfulness to the Republic and obedience to the Constitution and laws. Nowhere does the supreme law provide for them to swear allegiance to their political parties, important players though they are in our constitutional scheme. Meaning, in the event of conflict between upholding constitutional values and party loyalty, their irrevocable undertaking to in effect serve the people and do only what is in their best interests must prevail.

87. Having regard to the applicable provisions of the Constitution and the above judgments of the CC, the Commission is of the view that every MP takes an oath or solemn affirmation to uphold.

88. It follows that:

88.1 Party discipline may not legitimately be directed at obstructing Members of Parliament from doing what they believe to be appropriate in order to address concerns as to allegations of corruption or state capture.

88.2 It is unacceptable for a minister or fellow party members to castigate a member of Parliament for attempting to hold a minister to account, or for asking difficult questions of persons regarded as comrades or deployees of the same party.

88.3 It is inappropriate for a party caucus to resolve not to permit, or to discourage, conduct amounting to legitimate parliamentary oversight over the executive.

88.4 It is inappropriate for members of Parliament not to enquire into allegations of misconduct for which there appears to be plausible evidence, on the basis that to do so could cause embarrassment to, or divisions within, a political party.

89. The question as to how these principles have application where a motion of no confidence is under consideration by Parliament is dealt with separately below.

HOLDING THE PRESIDENT ACCOUNTABLE

90. Parliament is obliged to exercise oversight over the executive and hold it accountable. There are various constitutional mechanisms for holding the President as head of the national executive accountable.

91. The President may, by a resolution adopted with a supporting vote of at least two-thirds of its members, be removed from office by the NA on certain specified grounds. Alternatively, the NA can, by a vote of a majority of its members, pass a vote of no confidence in the President; if it does this, the President and the other members of the Cabinet must resign.

92. The President can also be held accountable to answer specific questions raised by Parliament.

93. However, there are no portfolio or other parliamentary committees whose function is, or includes, oversight over the President.

Instructions not to support a vote of no confidence

94. During the presidency of President Zuma eight votes of no confidence were proposed by opposition parties in the NA. None succeeded. The ANC instructed its members to vote against them and, in general, they complied. However, the eighth vote of no confidence in President Zuma, held on 8 August 2017, was somewhat different because the Speaker (Baleka Mbete from 21 May 2014 to 22 May 2019) determined that the vote would this time be by secret ballot based on a decision of the Constitutional Court. Because the vote was secret it appeared that several ANC MPs acted in breach of the instruction received from the party and supported the motion. Most did so without disclosing their identities.

Conflict between MP's oath / affirmation and party instructions

95. The Commission heard evidence of numerous persons on the legitimacy of party instructions by the ANC, as the majority party, to its MPs not to support an opposition-proposed vote of no confidence in a President of the country as well as leader of the ANC. On the whole members of the ANC defended the right of the party to issue such an instruction and its right to expect compliance with such an instruction by its MPs.

96. However, it is the Commission's view that there must be some limit to the power of a political party to discipline an MP. Even President Ramaphosa conceded that there must be limits and that MPs have got to put the interests of the people of South Africa first.

A parliamentary committee to exercise oversight over the President?

97. The Commission heard the views of several witnesses on whether there would be merit in Parliament establishing a committee whose function would be, or would include, oversight over the President. It became apparent that this is a contested issue with some suggesting that there is little need for such a committee, as all executive functions are delegated by the President to a department led by a minister, which is overseen by a portfolio committee.

98. Questions put to the President at question time in the NA also serve as an important and useful method of exercising oversight and holding to account.

99. In short, the Commission is of the view that Parliament should consider whether it is appropriate for it to establish a committee whose function is, or includes, oversight over acts or omissions by the President and Presidency which are not overseen by existing portfolio committees. If it supports this in principle, it will need to determine the details as to how this is to be done and whether it need to operate in the same manner as the existing portfolio committees.

ELECTORAL REFORM?

100. Under the South African party-list system of proportional representation, MPs do not represent a particular constituency. However, there is a view that under the constituency-based system of proportional representation MPs will be more responsive to the political views and interests of their constituents and less beholden to "party bosses". This would strengthen the capacity and resolve of MPs accountable to a constituency to exercise better oversight over the executive.

101. Both the majority report of the Electoral Task Team chaired by Dr Van Zyl Slabbert in 2003 and the 2017 High Level Panel Report on the Assessment of Key Legislation and the Acceleration of Fundamental Change recommended that Parliament should advocate for an electoral system that makes MPs more accountable.

Section 47(3)(c) of the Constitution

102. As previously noted, section 47(3) (c) of the Constitution has the effect that a person loses membership of the NA if that person ceases to be a member of the party that nominated him or her as a member of the Assembly. Given South Africa's party-based, proportional representation electoral system, the existence of such a provision is understandable.

103. Parliament should consider whether it would be desirable to enact legislation which protects MPs from losing their party membership (and therefore their seats in Parliament) merely for exercising their oversight duties. Consideration should be given to whether such protection should be limited to the duration of the Parliament to which a member has been elected.

THE PROBLEM OF INEFFECTIVENESS

104. In contrast to the above where ANC members were unwilling to exercise parliamentary oversight, the Commission found that even where the will has existed, parliamentary oversight was often ineffective. It is to that issue the problem of ineffectiveness, even where the will to oversee exists, that this report now turns.

SCOPA's inability to resolve serious failures of financial control

105. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts (SCOPA) is required by Rule 245 of the NA to consider the financial statements of all organs of state, any audit reports issued on those statements and any reports issued by the Auditor-General (AGSA) on the affairs of any organ of state. It may report on any of these financial statements or reports to the NA and may initiate an inquiry in its area of competence. It is traditionally chaired by an opposition MP. Despite excellently discharging its functions the chairperson of SCOPA Mr Godi felt there is not sufficient political and administrative will to do what is right for the country to stop the looting of public funds. SCOPA had consistently called out the malfeasance at SABC, SAA, Eskom, the Compensation Fund, Correctional Services, Water and Sanitation, Public Works, Transnet, SAPS, PIC, among others, to no avail.

106. Parliamentary oversight was also ineffective in addressing the staggering annual increases in irregular expenditure on the part of Prasa from 2014 to 2018. An exponential increase in irregular expenditure serves as a "red flag" and as a "warning sign". Yet despite this being well understood by the AGSA and SCOPA, amongst others, Parliamentary oversight proved to be unable to resolve this problem.

107. Mr Godi also indicated that SCOPA through its reports regularly made recommendations with regards to corrective actions. According to Mr Godi the non-implementation by the executive of remedial measures required by SCOPA reports remained a significant problem, right up to the end of his tenure as chair of SCOPA.

108. The evidence heard by the Commission indicates that there is merit in the view that the executive all too frequently 1. failed to ensure adherence to financial controls in the first place; and 2. was also not sufficiently responsive to Parliament's recommendations to address such concerns when they came to light. This is extremely disturbing because it implies that our country's system of financial control in respect of public expenditure became untenably ineffective. Regrettably it also seems clear that parliamentary oversight, whether via SCOPA or via the portfolio committees, did not manage to resolve this problem.

THE JOINT STANDING COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

109. The Intelligence Services Oversight Act 40 of 1994 is national legislation which establishes a parliamentary committee, to be known as the Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence (JSCI) and determines its oversight role over the security services. The JSCI is required to perform the oversight functions set out in that Act in relation to the intelligence and counter-intelligence functions of the State Security Agency (SSA), the National Defence Force (SANDF) and the South African Police Service (SAPS) and to report thereon to Parliament.

110. The Oversight Act also provides for the appointment of an Inspector-General of Intelligence (IGI), accountable to, and required to report to, the JSCI. The IGI's functions in terms of the Oversight Act include to monitor compliance by the security services with the Constitution, applicable laws and relevant policies and to submit certain "certificates" to relevant ministers. These certificates are central to the scheme of the Oversight Act to address unlawful activities which may occur within the intelligence services.

111. The JSCI's primary duty is to report its concerns and recommendations to Parliament. The issue presently of concern to the Commission is whether the JSCI has been shown to be ineffective in performing its oversight duties in respect of such abuse. The Commission concluded that, while the evidence available to it is insufficient to draw firm conclusions, there is nonetheless reason to be concerned that it has not been effective.

Dr Dintwe's evidence

112. Dr Setlhomamaru Dintwe was appointed by the NA as IGI in November 2016 and assumed office in March 2017.

113. Dr Dintwe made available to the Commission redacted versions of certificates which had been made available to the JSCI in respect of the SSA, the SANDF (Defence Intelligence) and the SAPS (Crime intelligence) for the years 2017/17, 2017/18 and 2018/19. The first set of certificates he issued in terms of section 7(7) of the Oversight Act related to the year ending March 2017.

114. In a nutshell, Dr Dintwe reported that the SSA resisted oversight and denied him access to information and that the DG of the SSA made it impossible for the OIGI to fulfil its legislative mandate.

115. Matters deteriorated to the extent that, in April 2018, Mr Fraser revoked Dr Dintwe's security clearance. Dr Dintwe brought an urgent court application for reinstatement of his security clearance. The Minister intervened and the security clearance was reinstated.

116. According to Dr Dintwe, he could "confidently say" that oversight by the JSCI (during the 2014-2019 parliament) was "never adequate" and that "our recommendations are just being ignored willy nilly".

117. Dr Dintwe said that recommendations he made, and reports produced by the OIGI are largely ignored by the Ministry, the DGs of the intelligence services and the JSCI. He made the point that, where the accounting officers concerned have not implemented the IGI's recommendations and reports, the JSCI ought to exercise oversight, in addition to the Ministers' superintendence role.

Mr Jafta's evidence

118. Mr Loyiso Jafta, who served as Acting DG of the SSA from 17 April 2018, also indicated that oversight by the JSCI had been "uneven and ineffective" and that it lacks necessary research capacity but was unable to go into much detail regarding this when testifying.

The High-Level Review Panel's report

119. In June 2018 President Ramaphosa set up a High-Level Review Panel (HLPR) on the SSA, chaired by Dr Sydney Mufamadi, with the key objective to reconstruct a professional national intelligence capability for South Africa that would respect and uphold the Constitution and the relevant legislative prescripts.

120. The Panel completed its work in December 2018 and reported that the JSCI over the past few years has been largely ineffective and impacted by the factionalism of the ANC.

Reports of the JSCI to Parliament

121. Several affidavits submitted to the Commission and an affidavit from the former Speaker, Ms Mbete, show that, during the Fifth Parliament, the JSCI tabled an initial report to Parliament on 25 February 2015, followed by reports in respect of the years ending 31 March 2015, 2016, 2017 and 2018 but no report was submitted in respect of the year ending 31 March 2019.

Ms September's affidavit

122. Ms September correctly points out that Dr Dintwe's certificates relate to periods after she had ceased to chair the JSCI and can therefore not comment on them. As to the allegations regarding the Principal Agent Network (PAN) programme, she says that, without access to classified material she is unable to respond to this issue. She says, however, that one of the recommendations in the JSCI's 2015 report was for the JSCI and SSA to address challenges related to companies owned by former intelligence officers.

123. She also makes the point that Mr Arthur Fraser was appointed as DG of the SSA in or about September 2016, after she had resigned from the JSCI.

Mr Nqakula's affidavit

124. Mr Nqakula emphasised the secrecy obligations of members of the JSCI, particularly those imposed by section 5 of the Oversight Act.

125. As regards the IGI's certificates referred to above, Mr Nqakula said that the IGI did not revert to the JSCI regarding this issue until his departure from Parliament on 15 June 2018.

126. Mr Nqakula confirmed that the JSCI received the report from the PAN and that the Committee engaged with the report at one or more of its meetings.

127. Mr Nqakula stated in his affidavit that the JSCI had made a case, in its December 2018 report, for the reconstruction of the state security agencies given the many weaknesses within the entity, but that the inner workings of the Committee could not be revealed.

128. Asked to comment on the various criticisms of the effectiveness of the JSCI his response was that the recommendations made by the HLRP were informed by the findings of the JSCI. Mr Ngakula said that it was "simply disingenuous and opportunistic to blame the ANC and the purported factionalism within the JSCI, as contributing to unsubstantiated grounds for its purported ineffectiveness" and said that he could only account for the 21 months period in which he was the chairperson of the JSCI. He said that the JSCI had made meaningful contributions to the President and Parliament.

Mr Gamede's affidavit

129. Mr Gamede said in his affidavit that in his experience the JSCI is unable to function without a chairperson and that the period Mr Nqakula stepped down until Mr Masondo was appointed to replace him contributed to the lack of a report in respect of the financial year ending 31 March 2019.

130. Mr Gamede said that Dr Dintwe had raised with the committee the breakdown of his working relationship with the then DG, Mr Arthur Fraser. He said that the JSCI had discussed this matter with President Ramaphosa and that Mr Fraser had, as a consequence, been transferred to a position outside the intelligence agencies and this intervention contributed to Dr Dintwe's security clearance being reinstated.

131. Mr Gamede also said that most if not all problems raised by the IGI were also raised by other structures like the Auditor-General. The JSCI could only recommend for action. The implementation was/is with the accounting officer or the political head.

132. As regards the criticisms levelled by the HLRP's report, Mr Gamede said that it was the JSCI which had recommended that panel's appointment. He disputed almost all of the criticisms of the JSCI in the report. Mr Gamede also agreed that the Committee was "divided and unable to articulate a coherent collective response on the state of intelligence in the country".

Mr Schmidt's affidavit

133. Mr Schmidt's said that the certificates from Dr Dintwe in respect of 2018-19 would only have been submitted to the committee after termination of his membership of the committee in May 2019. He could not recall whether the certificates for the preceding two years had been produced in the (redacted) format later disclosed to the Commission but said that certificates submitted by the IGI were submitted to the committee without reference to the names of intelligence operatives, methods used and organisational weaknesses, as testified by Dr Dintwe.

134. Mr Schmidt said that of significant concern is the strong presumption which existed with members of the JSCI during the relevant period (at least with certain members) that the Minister of the SSA and the Chairperson of the JSCI controlled the information served before the JSCI. This pre-supposes that the Chairperson and the Minister of the SSA had the necessary authority to prevent information being provided to the SSA, which is not in accordance with the legislation nor the Constitution. It is, therefore, to be expected that oversight over the Services by the JSCI would be negatively affected by not having access to information.

135. As to the adequacy of the Committee's reports to Parliament, Mr Schmidt said that when the content of the IGI certificates for 2016/2017 are compared to the annual reports of the JSCI for the same financial year, the lack of accountability to Parliament is indicated. It appears that limited information was provided to Parliament on the issues discussed by the JSCI.

136. Mr Schmidt could not recall whether the JSCI had submitted an annual report for 2017-2018.

137. As regards the JSCI'S task of considering and making recommendations on the reports and certificates submitted by the IGI, Mr Schmidt said that the recommendations of the JSCI ". . . were indicated primarily in closed committee sessions to the IGI and various services after conclusion of the closed committee briefings to the Committee".

138. Mr Schmidt said that the JSCI on which he served had received a report on a previous investigation during the term of the previous JSCI (2009-2014) into the PAN, despite "certain members, in particular ANC members" not wanting the PAN report to be discussed by the JSCI. At approximately the same time the IGI had reported to the JSCI on the PAN investigation. Both these reports had directly implicated the then director-general of the SSA, Mr Arthur Fraser, in alleged activities which, if proven to be true, constituted serious criminal conduct. They also alleged a prevalence within the SSA of fraud and theft of large sums of cash.

139. Mr Schmidt alleged that the JSCI functioned in a politically partisan manner.

140. Asked to comment on whether the annual report by the JSCI for the year ending 31 March 2017 adequately addressed the issues which had been reported to the JSCI by the IGI, Mr Schmidt said that it failed to do so because the level of reporting to Parliament was more generic due to the lack of security clearance and the level of accountability by the IGI to the JSCI was on a lower level than would be expected because the IGI redacted certificates to exclude the names of individuals, methods used, and organisational weaknesses as testified by the IGI.

141. Mr Schmidt also indicated that despite the JSCI having oversight responsibility for the SSA and a duty to make recommendations, it has no decision-making power in respect of the Services nor any other institution. He also said that members of the JSCI from the majority party were often hesitant to criticise senior office bearers in the executive or the departments due to political considerations.

Evaluation

142. The issues on which the Commission primarily focussed were whether the oversight by the JSCI was ineffective with regards to Mr Fraser allegedly seeking to avoid oversight by the IGI and allegations of criminal conduct within the security services.

Mr Fraser and oversight by the IGI

143. The issues related to the SSA are dealt in another section of this report. This section thus contains only a summary of issues related to parliament's oversight function.

144. Mr Fraser was appointed as director general in or about September 2016. Dr Dintwe assumed office as IGI in March 2017 and his 2016/2017 certificate alluding to the conflict between himself and the SSA, led by Mr Fraser, appears to have been completed in about February 2018. In April 2018, Dr Dintwe's security clearance was revoked by Mr Fraser but was shortly thereafter reinstated by the Minister. In the same month, Mr Fraser was removed by President Ramaphosa as DG of the SSA and transferred to the DCS.

145. The affidavits of Mr Nqakula, Mr Gamede and Mr Schmidt indicate that the JSCI met President Ramaphosa to discuss concerns regarding the relationship between Dr Dintwe and Mr Fraser; and that this may have contributed to the President's decision to remove Mr Fraser as DG of the SSA. In the Commission's view, the JSCI can therefore not fairly be criticised for failing to exercise appropriate oversight as regards the concerns expressed in Mr Dintwe's certificates about Mr Fraser's avoidance of IGI oversight.

146. The JSCI can also not be faulted for failing to alert Parliament to this issue in its 2016/7 report that was tabled in Parliament on 31 October 2017, which was before Dr Dintwe's 2016/2017 SSA certificate had been finalised. The issue was alluded to in the JSCI's 2017/2018 report and tabled in Parliament on 12 December 2018.

147. Parliament was informed in that report that a "major presentation" by the IGI "related to the submission of certificates issued by him regarding an assessment of the intelligence community"; that this had "generated substantial discussion and raised questions, in particular to matters of principle as well as governance relating to how the process had been managed"; and that it was suggested that time be found for a thorough engagement between the IGI and the Ministers in the cluster.

148. In the view of the Committee the following assessment was made:

    148.1 The IGi did not consult the relevant Ministers before presenting the certificates to the JSCI

    148.2 The IGI exceeded the reporting on the mandate of the period under review

    148.3 The report painted a compromised intelligence services, an intelligence community rife with corruption, unqualified people doing the job and questionable undercover fraud; and 148.4 The Committee is expecting a report with regards to the suggested interface.

149. The Commission is not in a position on the evidence available to it to accept or reject the criticism made that the IGI failed first to submit his certificates to the Minister. It is, however, of the view that, broadly speaking, the JSCI cannot be criticised for the manner in which it reported to Parliament on the conflict which arose between Dr Dintwe and Mr Fraser.

Allegations of criminal conduct within the intelligence services

150. Having regard to the limited evidence that the Commission received as to the effectiveness of the manner in which the JSCI addressed allegations of criminal misconduct within the intelligence services, the Commission is not in a position to make any conclusive finding but thinks it is appropriate to express its prima facie concerns in this regard.

151. The evidence does appear to show prima facie 1. that the JSCI was made aware of allegedly criminal conduct within the intelligence services; and 2. that the JSCI failed to ensure that adequate steps were taken to address this timeously.

152. Of particular concern in this regard is the evidence of Dr Dintwe, not least his allegations of criminal conduct associated with the PAN 1 project and the JSCI's failure to deal effectively with this issue. Dr Dintwe asserted that the allegations of criminal conduct associated with the PAN 1 project were long-standing and that recommendations made by his predecessor remained unimplemented. The answering affidavits confirm that these issues were drawn to the Committee's attention and discussed by it. But little concrete was done over the years to resolve the problem. The Committee seems to have been fobbed off by assurances that investigations remained ongoing and appears to have left it to the affected services themselves to refer matters for prosecution if appropriate.

153. The Commission is not impressed by the stance adopted by Mr Nqakula When asked whether the committee had received reports from the IGI in respect of the PAN which disclosed criminal conduct or conduct reasonably suspected of being criminal and, if so, what steps if any the Committee took or recommended, his response was that this is classified as confidential and cannot be divulged.

154. Mr Nqakula cannot be faulted for drawing attention to – and adhering to – section 5 and other provisions of the Oversight Act which bear on secrecy. The Commission does not accept however that, interpreted in line with the Constitution, section 5 renders it unlawful to disclose to the Commission whether criminal conduct was reported to the Committee and, if it was, to disclose what steps, if any, the Committee took or recommended to ensure that such criminal conduct was addressed. This could be disclosed without having to "disclose any intelligence, information or document the publication of which is restricted by law. . . ", as referred to in section 5(2).

155. It should be borne in mind that section 6(3) of the Oversight Act requires the Committee, when reporting to Parliament, not to include anything in its report "the inclusion of which will be more harmful to the national security than its exclusion would be to the national interest". The national interest would lie in disclosing to Parliament whether criminal conduct was reported to the JSCI and, if so, what steps it took in this regard. Whatever is disclosed to Parliament is disclosed to the public at large. Information that can lawfully be provided to Parliament can lawfully be disclosed to this Commission.

156. Whilst it is true that the Oversight Act does not empower the JSCI to make executive decisions and only explicitly empowers it to make recommendations or to issue reports, the JSCI's fundamental role is, in terms of the Constitution, to "have oversight of" all security services. If the security agencies or their ministers fail to ensure that those services operate lawfully, the JSCI is, in the Commission's view, duty bound to "blow the whistle" on this by drawing it to the attention of Parliament. The object sought to be achieved by section 198(8) of the Constitution is that there should be "accountability" in respect of the security services to Parliament. Impotent deference or abdication is the antithesis of holding accountable.

157. A difficult balance must undoubtedly be drawn between the need to protect national security and the need to hold the intelligence services to account. But the JSCI cannot properly adopt a supine attitude and defer to whatever may be decided as regards the security services by the accounting officer or Minister.

Inadequacy of reports to Parliament

158. If, in the JSCI's judgement, the accounting officer or Minister is acting unconstitutionally or unlawfully or is not taking effective steps to address such conduct, the JSCI is not only entitled to alert Parliament of this; it is under a duty to do so.

159. The annual reports to Parliament during the Fifth Parliament did very little, if anything, to alert Parliament to malfeasance within the intelligence services of the type and degree revealed to the Commission and revealed in the IGI's reports to the JSCI. The JSCI is meant to serve as Parliament's "watchdog"; but it failed to act.

160. This was compounded by the JSCI's failure to submit any report to Parliament in respect of the year ending March 2019. That was a breach of a legal obligation imposed by section 6(1) of the Oversight Act. If it is correct, as Mr Gamede says, that the reason for this was the failure to appoint a chairperson to replace Mr Nqakula timeously, this would not excuse the JSCI. It may, however, suggest that the fault also lies with the appointing authority.

NO PARLIAMENTARY MECHANISM TO "TRACK AND MONITOR"

161. One of the primary practical problems to which various witnesses drew attention was the absence of any parliamentary system to "track and monitor" implementation or non-implementation by the executive of undertakings given by the executive or of corrective action proposed in reports adopted by Parliament.

162. Mr Godi referred to an occasion, during the fourth Parliament, when he approached Mr Frolick about this problem and was given an assurance that the office of the Speaker would configure a "dashboard" which would keep track of deadlines and follow up and ensure compliance with House resolutions. However, no such dashboard was configured and no alternative mechanism was adopted to monitor and enforce House resolutions. As Mr Godi pointed out, this is not a new problem. Paragraph 4.1.4 of the OVAC model adopted by Parliament in 2009 commences:

> In developing the oversight model, the need was identified for support services relating to the monitoring and tracking of issues between Parliament and the Executive, and on all other related matters within Parliament's broader mandate. An Oversight and Advisory Section ought to be created in response to the need identified. Its main functions will be to provide advice, technical support, co-ordination, and tracking and monitoring mechanisms on issues arising from oversight and accountability activities of members of Parliament and the committees to which they belong.

163. Virtually all the witnesses – and there were many – who were asked about this agreed on the need to implement, as a matter of priority, a suitable "tracking and monitoring system". For example, in an affidavit submitted on behalf of the ANC by its (suspended) Secretary General, Mr Elias Sekgobelo ("Ace") Magashule the following was stated: To monitor and track issues between parliament and the executive, the ANC proposes the establishment of an Oversight Advisory Section in parliament that will include a financial scrutiny unit, tracking and monitoring unit, an advisory unit and a system to capture and manage information within Portfolio Committees.

164. Mr Gwede Mantashe, also a former Secretary-General of the ANC who is now its Chairperson, associated himself with this. Ms Modise, former Speaker, agreed that this was a priority and testified that "we have actually started with that".

165. The Commission welcomes this and recommends that this be given the urgent priority that it requires.

ABSENCE OF CONSEQUENCES

166. Much more difficult is what Parliament can and should do to address the complaint about frequent and persistent failures by ministers and other representatives of the executive to ensure that corrective action, required by committee reports adopted by the Assembly, is implemented.

167. Some Members of Parliament displayed a resigned acceptance of Parliament's impotence to fix problems. For example, Mr Vincent Smith said as follows in an affidavit: "Under the current practice, Parliament and/or the legislature can only persuade and not instruct nor micro-manage the department or the Executive Authority." Underlying this view is, one supposes, a recognition that the separation of powers between the legislative and executive branches of government requires the legislative branch to refrain from exercising executive authority. The question that arises is: is Parliament so impotent? What does the Constitution mean when it provides that the NA is elected to ensure government by the people "by scrutinising and overseeing executive action"; that it must ensure that executive organs of state "are accountable to it"; and that members of the Cabinet are "accountable", "collectively and individually" to Parliament for the exercise of their powers and the performance of their functions? How should these provisions be interpreted, given not only the doctrine of the separation of powers, but also the foundational constitutional values of "accountability, responsiveness and openness" (emphasis added) which underlie our democracy?

168. Amongst the recommendations made in the Corder report was the enactment of legislation, including an Accountability Standards Act. In Professor Corder's evidence to the Commission he expressed the view that legislative reform remains desirable to "flesh out the skeleton", so to speak, of the provisions in the Constitution which provided for Parliamentary oversight and accountability to Parliament. An Accountability Standards Act would, he said, serve the purposes of (i) partially fulfilling the NA's constitutional obligations for establishing accountability mechanisms; (ii) setting the broad framework and minimum requirements for accountability; and (iii) providing an authoritative and mandatory framework within which committee members can perform their oversight task.

169. In his view the Act should provide for "amendatory accountability" which should oblige executive and organs of state to answer and submit to scrutiny, as well as imposing on them an obligation to redress grievances. This means that remedial action should be authorised for exposed errors, defects of policy or maladministration. This form of amendatory accountability is essential for an effective system of reporting.

170. Prof Corder also said at present there seem to be few if any mechanisms in place, short of the tabling of a motion of no confidence in either the President or his Cabinet (s 102 of the Constitution), an admittedly radical step, which should not be lightly countenanced. What is necessary are steps short of a motion of no confidence, through which individual or groups of ministers may be required to take amendatory action, sufficient to satisfy Parliament.

171. The official submission of the ANC to the Commission on parliamentary oversight said that the ANC proposes that the recommendations of the Hugh Corder Report be considered to further strengthen parliament's accountability and oversight model, in particular a key recommendation that accountability also requires that a person, in addition to explaining and justifying decisions and actions, goes on to make amends for any fault or error and takes steps to prevent its recurrence in the future.

172. The Commission recommends that Parliament should consider whether it supports the principle of "amendatory accountability" and, if it does, whether it would be desirable to give detailed substance to this principle in an Act of Parliament along the lines suggested in the Corder report. In doing so, it will be necessary for Parliament to consider the implications of the separation of powers between the legislative and executive branches of government under the Constitution. However, the Commission believes that it should not be beyond the ingenuity of Parliament to devise mechanisms which promote responsiveness and effective accountability in a manner which does not infringe the separation of powers.

173. If Parliament does not agree to enact legislation of the above type, the Commission is of the view that serious consideration should be given by Parliament to amendments to its own rules to address the problem of ministers who fail to report back to Parliament on what if anything has been done in respect of remedial measures proposed by Parliament or on alternative methods preferred by them to address defective performance highlighted by Parliament.

174. In particular, the Commission supports the recommendation made in para 4.1.9 of the OVAC model - which has not yet been implemented since 2009 - that Parliament develop rules to assist it further in sanctioning Cabinet members for non-compliance after all established avenues and protocols have been exhausted, for example naming the Cabinet member by the Speaker of the NA or the Chairperson of the NCOP.

175. Also worthy of consideration by Parliament is the suggestion made by Prof Corder in his affidavit that, with the support of a majority of members of a portfolio committee, a portfolio committee could put a minister to terms in respect of remedial action, and could thereafter, through the Speaker, intercede with the President, as head of the national executive, in the event of non-compliance. The Leader of Government Business could also play a role in such a process.

The critical role of "political will"

176. Several witnesses expressed the view that an absence of political will lay at the heart of Parliament's inability to effectively hold the executive to account. For example, in his affidavit Mr Godi contended that the lack of progress in implementation of remedial measures required by SCOPA reports can be attributed to "lack of political will, within the structures of the governing party at the time, to resolve the serious problems of financial mismanagement".

177. Prof Calland argued in his submission that ". . . the political attitude and disposition of the ruling party" will determine the extent to which Parliament makes use of its oversight and accountability powers.

178. To facilitate proper oversight over the executive, the Commission is of the view that leaders of political parties should provide the political space for individual MPs to ask difficult questions without prejudice to themselves, with the assurance that their concerns will be taken seriously and properly answered.

179. In his affidavit, Mr Magashule said "On behalf of the ANC I give an unconditional undertaking that the ANC has the political will to make parliament work and to ensure effective oversight and accountability".

180. This undertaking, which Mr Mantashe reiterated in his testimony, is welcomed. However, the force of this undertaking is diminished by Mr Mantashe's testimony that the ANC has always had the political will to make Parliament work and to ensure effective oversight and accountability. The evidence simply does not sustain this view. Much of the evidence referred to above shows a marked unwillingness to exercise vigorous and effective oversight.

181. It is idle to suppose that with the wave of a magic wand the requisite political will can be created. However, party leadership clearly plays an important role.

The vital importance of sound leadership

182. Prof Calland said the following about leadership in his submission:

> Where the leaders of the political party concerned are willing to set the tone and define a set of principles of accountability that parliamentarians, including backbench members of his or her own party, can freely enjoy. Such leadership will provide the political space for individual MPs to ask difficult questions of the executive without prejudice, and in the realistic expectation that they will be taken seriously and answered by the executive branch of government.

183. The Commission agrees with this view that sound leadership facilitates proper oversight and accountability.

RESOURCES

Financial resources

184. A constant refrain in the evidence of MP's was that Parliament's budget for conducting its oversight is inadequate. The Commission was told that, out of its total budget of in excess of R2 billion, Parliament allocates R50 to 60 million to cover all the financial requirements of portfolio committees. These include costs of their regular meetings, advertisements, inviting public comment on legislation, oversight visits (including travel and accommodation costs, hall hire and refreshments), etc.

185. The OVAC model adopted by Parliament in or about 2009 also referred to the need to ensure sufficient and appropriate resourcing of committees to enable effective oversight.

186. Mr Frolick testified that, when a need was identified in 2017 for four committees to do specific oversight work, the Secretary of Parliament had to be approached for money to fund those activities, which had to be taken from other programmes which had not been implemented or not implemented in full. As he correctly observed: ". . . this is not sustainable to exercise oversight".

187. The Speaker during the fifth Parliament, Ms Mbete, addressing the question of inadequacy of parliamentary oversight in respect of allegations of state capture and corruption, said that it may have been inadequate, but that this was actually because of inadequate resources.

188. Inadequacy of financial resources is, in the Commission's view, not an adequate explanation for all the failures of parliamentary oversight; but it is nonetheless a concern. It goes without saying that, where a portfolio or other committee of Parliament needs to incur reasonable expenses to enable it to discharge its oversight obligations, sufficient money needs to be made available for this.

189. It is therefore recommended that Parliament ensures that adequate funds are allocated, particularly to portfolio committees, to enable effective parliamentary oversight.

Skills

190. The present Speaker, Ms Modise, also referred to the resource constraints but highlighted in this regard the need to capacitate MPs. The evidence seems to support the view that many MPs lack the training and skills which are essential for Parliament to discharge its oversight responsibilities effectively. This aspect should perhaps be borne in mind when candidates are being selected for party lists and when new members are inducted and prepared for the responsibilities associated with the committees to which they are allocated.

Research and technical assistance

191. Though this aspect was not investigated by the Commission – being only indirectly relevant to its TORs – it would appear from the evidence heard that, to the extent that available resources permit, it would be desirable to enhance the scale and skills of the research and technical assistance made available to portfolio committees. It is recommended that this issue be considered by Parliament.

INADEQUATE REPORTS AND PRESENTATIONS FROM DEPARTMENTS AND ENTITIES

192. Regular, timeous and proper reporting to Parliament by representatives of the executive (including SOEs and other organs of state) is essential if Parliament is to exercise proper oversight. This was recognised some years ago by the Corder report. Though considerable reporting by representatives of the executive to portfolio committees does clearly take place, it appears to the Commission that such reporting is all too often not timeous and largely inadequate.

193. It is important that, if written presentations are to be submitted, they should properly address the requirements of the committee and be submitted sufficiently long in advance of the relevant committee meetings to give the MPs enough time to read and consider the reports. The apparent frequency with which late submissions occurs makes one wonder whether it is sometimes done deliberately, precisely in order to obstruct proper oversight.

194. Parliament needs to make it clear that this type of practice will not be tolerated. It needs to ensure that consequences follow for those who, without adequate cause, make proper and timely oversight impossible. It is recommended that the Portfolio Committees must reject this culture where documents are only being made available to portfolio committees late or on the day of the presentation.

195. The Commission also recommends that Parliament should consider whether there is a need to legislate on the issue of reports by representatives of the executive to Parliament. It may be that, absent such legislation, the present sometimes unsatisfactory situation will persist.

196. An alternative might be to amend the Rules of Parliament to deal with this. However, since the objects to be achieved include placing duties on persons outside of Parliament and possibly visiting appropriate sanctions on those who are recalcitrant or unacceptably inefficient, the Commission's prima facie view is that legislation would probably be preferable to amending Parliament's rules.

MINISTERS AND OTHERS WHO FAIL TO ARRIVE AT SCHEDULED MEETINGS

197. Another refrain repeatedly heard is that far too frequently ministers and others scheduled to appear at meetings of portfolio committees fail to arrive, with or without belatedly tendered excuses.

198. President Ramaphosa admitted that, when he served as Leader of Government Business, he became aware of quite a few instances when ministers were due to attend meetings of portfolio committees and simply did not turn up. He saw it as part of his role at the time to exert pressure on ministers to fulfil their obligations.

199. Once again, it is for Parliament to make clear that absence without reason from portfolio meetings will not be tolerated and to there will be consequences for those who offend without adequate cause.

200. It has been suggested above that Parliament should consider legislating on the issue of reporting by the executive to portfolio committees. The same legislation could, if this is deemed appropriate, regulate non-appearance without adequate cause of persons scheduled to attend committee meetings.

MINISTERS WHO FAIL TO ANSWER QUESTIONS

201. Under the Rules, ministers are obliged to answer questions put to them and to do so within ten working days but the Commission heard evidence that this is frequently not happening.

202. Another complaint heard is that ministers who purport to answer questions do so evasively and in a manner which does not actually answer the substance of the question put. This appears to be a significant problem, for a minister who fails to answer the substance of a clearly put question breaches his or her constitutional obligation of accountability. Ms Mbete, the former Speaker, acknowledged the existence of this problem but adopted the stance that there was nothing the Speaker could or should do about this and that the only remedy is for the member to “ask a follow up question”.

203. If a minister is permitted to evade answering a direct question, one wonders how asking a follow up question resolves the problem? Why is there not a similar duty to the duty acknowledged above, that the Speaker and Leader of Government should ensure that the minister is “named and shamed” if he or she is unwilling to fulfil his or her obligation?

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE ROLE OF COMMITTEE CHAIRS

204. Many witnesses agreed that the role played by the chair of a portfolio committee is influential in determining the extent to which a committee succeeds or fails in its oversight mandate. It is a matter of considerable concern that not all persons appointed as committee chairs have the requisite inclinations or demonstrated capacities.

205. Traditionally, only SCOPA is chaired by an opposition MP but several witnesses suggested that chairpersons of portfolio committees should be appointed from parties represented in the NA according to a proportional formula.

206. One witness who regularly observes portfolio committees stated that, once presentations have been made to portfolio committees, “opposition party members tend to ask questions very directly, but what happened here, why is this not here?” By contrast when ruling party MPs get their chance “it is inevitably, you have done so well and only the good side and I really have to praise you for this”.

207. It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether representatives of opposition parties should be appointed as chairs of portfolio committees.

IMPLEMENTATION OF OTHER PROPOSALS MADE IN THE CORDER REPORT AND OVAC MODEL

208. There was widespread agreement from witnesses that the recommendations in the Corder report should be given serious reconsideration. The Commission also agrees that Parliament should consider the Corder recommendations, but also the other recommendations made.

209. The same applies to those parts of the OVAC model that have not yet been adopted. That would include the establishment of an Oversight and Advisory Section, development of rules to assist Parliament "further in sanctioning Cabinet members for non-compliance after all established existing avenues and protocols have been exhausted and ensuring sufficient and appropriate resourcing and capacity to develop specialised committees to deal with issues that cut across departments and ministries".

PARLIAMENT'S ROLE IN APPOINTMENT PROCESSES

210. Corruption Watch made a submission to the Commission dealing with the appointment processes of leaders of key institutions, with recommendations in relation to parliamentary appointment processes. It referred to evidence which had been submitted to this Commission and other recently established commissions of inquiry highlighting how the appointments of certain compromised persons to prominent leadership positions within the criminal justice system led to the manipulation of these agencies and to the harmful effects of these politically motivated appointments. It noted Judge Nugent's proposal for an open, transparent and apolitical selection process for the SARS commissioner to ensure that the best possible candidate is selected for that position; and noted that this is not dissimilar to the process taken by the Judicial Services Commission (JSC).

211. After describing the processes followed in the appointment of a Public Protector and regarding renewal of an IPID executive director's term, it asserted that there is a need for selection processes to be amended. In summary, it suggested a review of the necessary legislation to ensure that it provides guidance on fair and objective appointment processes, the development of multi-stakeholder structures to oversee the appointment proceedings, ensure that all parliamentary selection processes are transparent and open, and that candidates must be tested for integrity and ethics as well as their skills and expertise, using clear, merit-based, and objective criteria.

212. The commission endorses these recommendations, which are spelt out in more detail both in the Corruption Watch submission and in the testimony of its executive director, Mr David Lewis. It is recommended that Parliament consider whether it is desirable to amend its rules to give effect to the proposals by Corruption Watch on appointments by Parliament.

CONCLUSIONS

213. In what follows the Commission summarises many of the primary findings made by it above. The Commission essentially concerned itself with determining whether state capture, corruption or fraud occurred in the public sector, the nature and scale thereof and who participated in this. To make recommendations to prevent similar problems in the future, there is a need to explain why it became so entrenched and persistent over an extended period and to establish why institutions tasked to detect or address these maladies may not have been so effective as one would have hoped. Amongst these institutions is Parliament.

214. Parliament has a constitutional duty to exercise oversight over the executive branch of government, including organs of state such as SOEs. The executive is accountable to Parliament.

215. Key to the performance of parliamentary oversight over the executive in South Africa is the institution of the portfolio committee.

216. Despite room for improvement, parliamentary committees have, throughout the period of concern to the Commission, enjoyed the essential powers required to exercise oversight over the executive and SOEs and to hold them accountable.

217. Since 1994, the ANC has enjoyed majority representation in Parliament and this has influenced the practical implementation of parliamentary oversight, throughout the democratic era, and the stance adopted by the ANC towards every structure of Parliament, including the NA, as well as portfolio, joint, and ad hoc committees.

218. The official stance of the ANC, according to conference resolutions and statements, has been to encourage vigorous parliamentary oversight but this has all too often not been reflected by the ANC's representatives' conduct in practice.

219. Parliament is not obliged to investigate or enquire into every allegation of public-sector corruption or every allegation of malfeasance within the executive, particularly where the evidence available is scant. Parliament's duty to exercise oversight over the executive and to hold it to account does, however, include a duty to investigate where there is reasonable cause to suspect unconstitutional, unlawful or improper conduct on the part of a senior representative of the executive.

220. The same applies where there is reasonable cause to suspect a failure by a senior representative of the executive to ensure that other persons reasonably suspected of such conduct are not themselves being appropriately dealt with. The oath of office by every MP to "respect and uphold the Constitution and all other law of the Republic" requires nothing less.

221. Allegations of state capture and/or of improper influence by the Gupta brothers have long been in the public domain. It is therefore unacceptable that MPs did not yet have sufficient cause to probe the veracity of the allegations of improper Gupta influence by 2013, at the latest.

222. Widely publicised allegations of state capture came to a head in early 2016; but the ANC was unwilling to support requests by opposition parties for a portfolio or an ad hoc committee to inquire into these allegations.

223. The fact that the allegations had been referred to the SAPS or chapter 9 institutions does not excuse Parliament's inaction. The issue were serious and plausible allegations which, if found to be substantiated, revealed a threat to our constitutional democracy. The exclusive reliance on other agencies to investigate the allegations of state capture at the time was not consistent with Parliament's constitutional responsibilities.

224. Another turning point was reached with the publication in the press of what were claimed to be a voluminous set of Gupta-linked emails (the so-called "Gupta leaks"). It was asserted, by some, that these emails substantiated allegations of state capture which had long been in the public domain.

225. On or about 15 June 2017 Mr Cedric Frolick, the House Chairperson of Committees, addressed letters to the chairpersons of four portfolio committees, namely the Portfolio Committees on Public Enterprises ("PCPE"), Transport ("PCT", in relation to PRASA), Home Affairs ("PCHA") and Mineral Resources ("PCMR"), calling on them to investigate allegations of state capture that had appeared in the media recently and report their findings to the NA as matter of urgency.

226. Up to this time, the ANC as an organisation has been unwilling to initiate or to support a parliamentary inquiry or inquiries into the allegations concerned. The allegations implicated senior ANC leaders, right up to the President, as well as others regarded by the ANC as its cadres and deployees but the leadership of the ANC was unwilling to expose the allegations of malfeasance to public scrutiny.

227. The ANC has been divided between those allegedly implicated together with their supporters, on the one hand, and those who would be more inclined to support proper parliamentary oversight but who lacked sufficient support within party structures, on the other hand. Those who supported proper parliamentary investigation of the allegations may, not unreasonably, have feared the personal and political consequences to them if they should deviate from the "party line".

228. The decision to implement portfolio committees to investigate allegations of state capture must have been preceded by, or at least endorsed by, a decision of the ANC's Political Committee. In regard to President Ramaphosa's evidence that the delay in Parliament's decision to institute inquiries into allegations of state capture was attributable to the balance of power within the ANC, then this implies that the balance of power initially favoured those in the ANC who did not want such inquiries to be held and that there was a change in the balance of power in the ANC in 2017. While the Gupta leaks may have been an important factor in the shift in the balance of power, another important factor was probably knowledge of the elective conference in which a new president of the organisation would be elected.

229. The struggle to support or suppress parliamentary inquiries and effective oversight over the executive in respect of allegations of state capture or corruption continued after mid-2017. This is demonstrated by the way in which the four committees to whose chairs Mr Frolick addressed his letters dealt with his requests.

230. In short:

    230.1 The Portfolio Committee on Public Enterprises showed courage and determination and managed to conduct an effective enquiry into the allegations relating to Eskom. Because of the time taken by its Eskom enquiry and the establishment of the present Commission, its inquiry did not, as it had intended, reach the issues relating to Transnet and Denel.

    230.2 The Portfolio Committee on Transport failed to conduct any inquiry and may not even have been informed by its chairperson of Mr Frolick's letter.

    230.3 The Portfolio Committee on Mineral Resources failed to hold an adequate inquiry, initially due to evasive conduct on the part of Minister Zwane and thereafter because of (i) a failure to provide required resources when the committee finally decided that it wanted to hold a formal inquiry; and (ii) the establishment of the present Commission.

    230.4 The Portfolio Committee on Home Affairs did not demonstrate much willingness to proceed with due expedition. Although it did ultimately conduct an effective enquiry, it acted far too slowly.

231. Similar failures to exercise adequate oversight took place from 2006 onwards in respect of allegations of corruption on the part of companies in the Bosasa group of companies and the DCS. There is evidence that a minister and the chief whip placed the chair of the PCCS under pressure not to scrutinise these allegations. There is also evidence that Bosasa paid bribes to members of the PCCS (Mr Vincent Smith, Ms Winnie Ngwenya and Mr VV Magagula) and Mr C Frolick, all with a view to avoiding proper parliamentary scrutiny of Bosasa.

232. Party discipline is a legitimate and indispensable feature of our party-based democratic system. But there can be a tension between party discipline and the oversight obligations of MPs under the Constitution.

233. Having regard to the applicable provisions of the Constitution and relevant judgments of the Constitutional Court, the Commission is of the view that:

    233.1 Corruption is the antithesis of the Constitutional values that every MP takes an oath or solemn affirmation to uphold. So too is conduct which may be described as "state capture".

    233.2 Promoting, facilitating, or conniving with corruption or state capture cannot be a lawfully adopted policy of a political party.

    233.3 It follows that party discipline may not legitimately be directed at obstructing MPs from doing what they believe, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, to be appropriate to address concerns as to allegations of corruption or state capture.

    233.4 It is also unacceptable for a minister or fellow party members to castigate a MP for attempting to hold a minister to account, or for asking difficult questions of persons regarded as comrades or deployees of the same party.

    233.5 It is inappropriate for a party caucus to resolve not to permit, or to discourage, conduct amounting to legitimate parliamentary oversight over the executive.

    233.6 It is also inappropriate for MPs not to enquire into allegations of misconduct for which there appears to be plausible evidence, on the basis that it could cause embarrassment to, or divisions within, a political party.

234. However, even where the will to oversee the executive existed, parliamentary oversight was often ineffective. This is illustrated by the Parliament's ineffectiveness in addressing the staggering annual increases in irregular expenditure on the part of Prasa in 2014 to 2018, which were disclosed to the SCOPA and to the PCT. Although SCOPA made repeated recommendations to address the problem of increasing irregular expenditure (both within Prasa and elsewhere), the executive all too frequently failed to implement such recommendations.

235. The failure of the executive to implement recommendations in parliamentary reports seems to be attributable to a lack of political will to address the problems identified. That Parliament failed to compel the executive to address the problems identified in its reports suggests a similar lack of political will on its part.

236. Broadly speaking, the JSCI cannot be criticised for how they reported to Parliament on the conflict which arose between the IGI, Dr S Dintwe and the then DG of the SSA, Mr A. Fraser. However, the JSCI was made aware of allegedly criminal conduct within the intelligence services and prima facie appears to have failed to ensure that adequate steps were taken to address this timeously.

237. A balance must be found between the need to protect national security and the need to hold the intelligence services accountable. But the JSCI cannot properly adopt a supine attitude and defer to whatever may be decided as regards the security services by the accounting officer or minister.

238. The annual reports to Parliament during the Fifth Parliament did very little to alert Parliament to malfeasance within the intelligence services of the type and degree revealed to the Commission and revealed in the IGI's reports to the JSCI. If, in the JSCI's judgement, the relevant accounting officer or minister is acting unconstitutionally or unlawfully or is not taking effective steps to address such conduct, the JSCI is not only entitled to alert Parliament of this; it is under a duty to do so.

239. The criticisms expressed by the Commission should not be construed as any more than prima facie views, based on what is recognised by it as being insufficient evidence on which to base a reliable conclusion. However, the available evidence to it gives it no reasons to reject the conclusion reached by the High-Level Review Panel that the JSCI was ineffective and dysfunctional.

240. One of the primary practical problems to which various witnesses drew attention was the absence of any parliamentary system to "track and monitor" implementation or non-implementation by the executive of corrective action proposed in reports adopted by Parliament. The Commission recommends implementing such a system as a matter of priority.

241. To facilitate proper oversight over the executive, the Commission believes that leaders of political parties should provide the political space for individual MPs to ask difficult questions without prejudice to themselves, with the assurance that their concerns will be taken seriously and properly answered.

242. Inadequacy of financial resources is, in the Commission's view, not an adequate explanation for all the failures of parliamentary oversight noted, but it is nonetheless a concern.

243. Presentations to portfolio committees are often submitted late, or often frequently at the time of the very same meeting at which they are then presented. This makes it impossible for the MPs to read and consider the reports and is clearly unsatisfactory. The apparent frequency with which this occurs makes one wonder whether it is done deliberately, precisely to obstruct proper oversight.

FLOW OF FUNDS

PART A: PUBLIC FUNDS DIVERTED TO THE GUPTA ENTERPRISE

INTRODUCTION

1. From at least 2011 onwards, government departments and SOE's were targeted for capture by the Gupta Enterprise. This led to the awarding of a vast array of contracts and the payment of billions of rand to entities paying kickbacks to, or controlled by, the Gupta Enterprise. This chapter details the flow of funds from SOE's or government departments in this regard.

THE CAPTURE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE FREE STATE

2. In the earliest phase of state capture, the Gupta Enterprise operated according to a crude modus operandi, namely, to work with officials to generate projects from which the Gupta Enterprise would directly steal funds that were directed to the Gupta's offshore network. This model was used most notably in the provincial governments of the Free State and North-West Province.

The Free State Government contract with Nulane Investments

3. On 31 October 2011, the Free State Department of Agriculture and Rural Development entered into a contract with Nulane Management Services.
4. The contract was irregularly awarded without any competitive bidding process and appears to have been designed primarily as a device to funnel Free State public funds into the Gupta Enterprise.
5. Nulane was paid R24,984,240 by the Free State Department of Agriculture. The only apparent deliverable work provided by Nulane to the Free State Department of Agriculture in respect of this contract appears to have been performed by Deloitte who concluded a subcontract with Nulane to provide consulting services on the core topics covered by the project.
6. Deloitte received an amount of R1 538 547 from Nulane in relation to the Free State project. Nulane thus earned a profit of R23 445 693 on the contract.
7. Mr Holden shows that after being received by Nulane, R21 300 000 of the R23 445 693 profit was laundered through several companies controlled by the Gupta family before being expatriated to the Dubai Gupta family company, Gateway Limited in Nulane payments of $1 067 500 and $1 227 500 on received aggregate amounts of Nulane made on 3 and 7 July 2012 respectively.

The Free State Government and the Estina / Vrede Dairy Project

8. A separate chapter of this report addresses the irregularities relating to the Estina / Vrede Dairy Project and the payment of hundreds of millions of Free State government funds to the Gupta enterprise under cover of that project.
9. For present purposes it noted merely that of the total amount of R287 220 534.88 in payments from the Free State government to Estina aggregating to R280 202 653.00 and accumulated interest on these payments.
    9.1 R229 038 271.82 was transferred to Gateway and Vargafield, two companies forming part of the Gupta enterprise.
    9.2 A further R34 563 580.12 was transferred to SARS to settle Estina's VAT obligations.
    9.3 A mere R21 746 697.18 was transferred to accounts or recipients other than SARS, Gateway and Vargafield. Many of these transfers, moreover, were made as salary or other payments to individuals closely associated with the Gupta enterprise such as Messrs Kamal Vasram and Chandrama Prasad.

The Free State Government and the purchase of laptops from Sunbay Trading

10. The contract concluded by the Free State Government with Sunbay Trading was another contract irregularly concluded with a Gupta enterprise company.
11. As part of a "laptops for bursaries" program announced in Premier Ace Magashule's State of the Province address in March 2012, the Free State government ordered laptops from Sunbay Trading for distribution to learners. Sunbay Trading was nominally controlled by Mr Kamal Vasram, who also nominally controlled Estina.

12. The laptops for bursaries program was directed out of the Office of the Premier where Mr Ashok Narayan was an advisor to Premier Magashule, and, to the knowledge of the parties driving the program in the Premier's Office, actively involved on the Sunbay Trading side of the contract with the Free State.

13. While Sunbay Trading was the contracting party, the actual supplier of laptops was Sahara Computers. The price paid per laptop by the Free State government was considerably more than Sahara's standard retail price.

14. Sunbay Trading was paid R28 500 000.00 by the Free State Department of Education in 3 payments in September 2012. It was paid a further R4 578 810.00 by the Free State Office of the Premier on 28 May 2014.

15. Sunbay Trading's bank records reflect that it received no other large inward payments from other suppliers following these payments, nor was the account properly active from its opening on the 29th of June 2011 until the first Free State government payment on the 6th of September 2012.

16. Of the R33 078 810.00 paid to Sunbay Trading by the Free State government, R32 211 030.00 was paid to Sahara Computers.

Contracts placed with Dinovert / Cureva / Mediosa

17. Dinovert (Pty) Ltd was a Gupta enterprise company that was incorporated on 13 March 2015, and changed its name to Cureva in September 2015 before changing it again to Mediosa in late 2017.

18. With the assistance of Mr Ashok Narayan and Mr Tony Gupta, Dinovert / Cureva / Mediosa appears to have been irregularly awarded contracts to provide mobile medical services to the Free State and North West Provincial Governments at inflated prices.

19. Dinovert / Cureva / Mediosa was paid R25 111 188.00 by the Free State Department of Health and R30 000 000.00 by the North West Province's Department of Health.

20. Cureva paid aggregate amounts of R15 960 000.00 and R1 000 000.00 respectively to the Gupta enterprise laundry vehicles Shacob Commerce and Albatime. It also made aggregate payments of R1 556 561 49 to the Gupta enterprise company Sechaba Computers and paid Mr Kuben Moodley, the sole director of Albatime, R1 538 948.00.

The Free State contracts with Tsebo Business Intelligence Services and Pygma Consulting

21. Following a recommendation made by the Free State Department of Agriculture and Rural Development Bid Evaluation Committee at its meeting of 8 June 2012, the Department awarded a contract to Tsebo Business Intelligence Services (Tsebo) to provide engineering services to the Department.

22. The award of the contract to Tsebo was manifestly irregular because the Bid Evaluation Committee scored Sebogo Maloka and Viljoen Civil Engineers (Pty) Ltd considerably higher than Tsebo, but decided nevertheless to award the contract to Tsebo "as that is what the Department requires".

23. In total, Tsebo Business Intelligence was paid R12 492 500.00 in relation to this contract out of which it transferred a total of R9 390 350.89 to Innova Management Services.

24. Innova Management Solutions ("Innova") was owned by Ms Chwayita Mabude who was an Eskom board member from 2011 to 2017 and whose conduct in that capacity is discussed in the Eskom Chapter of this report. Innova appears to have been managed by Mr Salim Essa and Mr Ashok Narayan. Thus, Mr Narayan used the email address innova.management2012@gmail.com and the Free State Department of Tourism and Economic Affairs treated Mr Essa as Innova's representative.

25. At the same meeting of 8 June 2012, the Free State Department of Department of Agriculture and Rural Development Bid Evaluation Committee also awarded a bid to Pygma Consulting. This bid was to assist the Department in relation to the rollout of broadband internet across the Free State Province.

26. The Department of Agriculture had no budget for the roll-out of broadband in the Free State which would not ordinarily have fallen within its mandate. So, it ended up having to fund the Pygma Consulting contract by means of a budget allocated to its Mohoma Mobung project which appears to have functioned as a slush fund for payments to the Gupta enterprise.

27. There is no evidence that Pygma was party to, or aware of, any irregularity in the award of the Free State contract to it. However, after Pygma received its letter of appointment, Mr Narayan, ostensibly in his capacity as advisor to the Premier, convened meetings between Pygma and the Free State government at which Pygma was persuaded to conclude a sub-contract with Innova.

28. Pygma was paid a total of R2,487,480 by the Free State Department of Agriculture of which R1,271,920 was paid on to Innova Management Services under the subcontract that Pygma had been pressurised to sign.

29. Innova laundered on to Aerohaven, a Gupta enterprise company, R8,900,000.00 of the payments made to it by Pygma and Tsebo.

30. On 15 November 2013, Aerohaven Trading returned the R8 900 000 into Innova's account by means of bank transfer. The payment commingled with a deposit of R1 052 631.58 paid in by Tsebo on 3 October 2013. Later on 15 November 2013, Innova transferred R9 756 500.00 ($950 000.00) to Gateway Limited, the Gupta enterprise entity in Dubai.

31. Of the amounts transferred by Tsebo and Pygma to Innova that were not paid to Aerohaven/Gateway, R470 000.00 was paid by Innova to Mr Tau Mahumapelo, then North West Premier Supra Mahumapelo's younger brother of who was elevated by Minister Lynne Brown to the Denel Board in July 2015.

The Free State contract with Innova

32. In 2014, the Free State Department of Economic Development, Tourism and Environmental Affairs awarded Innova a contract with a total value of R6 972 395.04.

33. Of the R6 972 395.04 paid to Innova under this contract, an aggregate amount of R6 384 000 was immediately paid by Innova to Homix, a primary Gupta enterprise laundering vehicle.

TRANSNET CONTRACTS AND OFFSHORE KICKBACKS

34. The Gupta enterprise received kickbacks that were paid offshore in respect of at least six major contracts:

    34.1 The ZPMC cranes contract in respect of which kickbacks were paid to JJ Trading

    34.2 The Liebherr cranes contract in respect of which kickbacks were paid to Accurate Investments; and

    34.3 The four Chinese locomotive contracts in respect of which kickbacks were paid to JJ Trading, Century General Trading, Regiments Asia and Tequesta:

        34.3.1 The China South Rail 95 locomotives contract

        34.3.2 The China South Rail 100 locomotives contract

        34.3.3 The China South Rail 359 locomotives contract; and 34.3.4 The China North Rail 232 locomotives contract.

35. Apart from the offshore kickbacks paid in respect of the China North Rail 232 locomotives contract, kickbacks aggregating to R76 586 903.16 were paid inside South Africa by China North Rail to Business Expansion Structured Services. These kickbacks were for the contract concluded by Transnet and China North Rail to relocate the local workshops on the 232 locomotives contract to Durban. CRRC (the entity into which China South Rail and China North Rail merged) also paid kickbacks aggregating to R7 892 226.77 inside South Africa to the Gupta enterprise laundry vehicle, Fortime Consultants.

36. The irregularities in all of the Transnet locomotive and crane contracts are discussed elsewhere in this Report. For present purposes we merely record that Transnet paid a total amount of R28 046 227 991.66 in respect of these contracts, made up as follows:

Contract	Total amount (ZAR)
95 Locomotives (CSR)	3 432 869 565.21
232 Locomotives all-in cost incl. Durban relocation (CNR)	2 823 869 773.71
100 Locomotives all-in cost (CSR)	5 159 831 654.92
359 Locomotives all-in cost (CSR)	14 910 751 921.66
Sub-total: Locomotive contracts	26 327 322 915.50
Liebherr crane contract	841 098 842.64
ZPMC crane contract	877 806 234.00
TOTAL	28 046 227 991.66

37. Over and above the R76 586 903.16 paid inside South Africa by China North Rail to Business Expansion Structured Services and the R7 892 226.77 paid to Fortime Consulting by CRRC, Holden calculates that an aggregate amount of R7 305 156 943.30 was paid to the Gupta enterprise in offshore kickbacks on these Transnet contracts, made up as follows:

Project	Kickback amount (ZAR)
Purchase of Liebherr Cranes	26 586 799.49
Purchase of ZPMC Cranes	33 379 031.04
95, 100, 359, 232 Locomotive procurements including maintenance contracts: Payments confirmed by primary documentation	3 400 558 016.24
CNR relocation contract	76 586 903.13
95, 100, 359, 232 Locomotive procurements including maintenance contracts: Suspected further kickbacks	3 768 046 193.40
TOTAL	7 305 156 943.30

REGIMENTS CONTRACTS AND PAYMENT OF KICKBACKS

38. In 2012, the Regiments group of companies concluded an arrangement with Issar Capital, the then company of Mr Iqbal Sharma and Mr Essa in terms of which Regiments would pay substantial kickbacks to Issar in return for Messrs Sharma and Essa's assistance in securing Regiments' appointments to contracts with organs of state. Issar was ultimately sold to the Gupta family company Islandsite for the nominal amount of R100 and it appears that the arrangement with Issar was a vehicle for the Gupta enterprise to take substantial kickbacks on contracts that they procured for Regiments with organs of state.

39. Pursuant to this original arrangement:

    39.1 Regiments went on to pay laundry vehicles nominated by Mr Essa or Mr Narayan "business development" fees in the form of commissions ranging between 50% and 95% on payments made to it by organs of state who had apparently been influenced by the Gupta enterprise to appoint Regiments; and 39.2 Regiments also paid much smaller commission on these payments (between 1% and 5%) to Albatime, the company of Mr Kuben Moodley who had introduced Regiments to Messrs Essa and Sharma.

40. This arrangement was plainly unlawful from the beginning.

41. There are no legitimate "business development" services that could justify commissions of 50% and more for assistance to obtain appointments by organs of state who are constitutionally bound to make those appointments on the basis of procurement systems that are "fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective."

42. Furthermore, many of the original "opportunities" identified by Issar and Regiments were appointments to be made by Transnet where Mr Sharma chaired the Board Acquisitions and Disposals Committee, and the bulk of the fees ultimately extracted by Regiment out of this kickback arrangement were fees paid by Transnet. So Issar was, for the most part, selling Mr Sharma's influence over Transnet procurement.

43. Pursuant to the kickback arrangement that it originally concluded with Messrs Essa and Sharma in 2012, Regiments ultimately was paid aggregate amounts of R1 303 272 979.09 in fees paid by various organs of state and amounts misappropriated from the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund by Regiments Fund Managers. Holden provides full details of the payments by these organs of state to Regiments and the onward kickbacks aggregating to R666 364 807.09 from Regiments to laundry vehicles nominated by Messrs Essa and Narayan and to Albatime. For present purposes, the Commission merely documents the aggregate amounts paid to Regiments by each organ of state in the contracts governed by these kickbacks:

SOE	Amount (ZAR)
Transnet	1 023 161 529.89
Transnet Defined Benefit Pension Fund (amounts misappropriated by Regiments Fund Managers and paid to Regiments Securities)	248 729 210.00
SA Airways	6 241 500.00
SA Express	8 218 123.20
Free State Provident Fund	2 319 216.00
SAFCOL	6 623 400.00
Denel	7 980 000.00
TOTAL	1 303 272 979.09

TRILLIAN CONTRACTS WITH ORGANS OF STATE

44. With effect from 1 March 2016, Mr Eric Wood left Regiments to join Trillian with Mr Essa. Mr Wood took with him to Trillian the Transnet, Eskom and SA Express advisory mandates which had been procured through the unlawful kickback arrangement originally concluded with Messrs Sharma and Essa in 2012. On his own version, the then Group CFO of Transnet, Mr Gary Pita met Mr Essa at the Gupta compound in Saxonwold to discuss the cession of Transnet's Regiments contracts to Trillian. Trillian continued to pay kickbacks in respect of these contracts to laundry vehicles nominated by Mr Narayan.

45. In addition, Mr Essa and Trillian used the Gupta enterprise's influence over Transnet and Eskom to secure Trillian new contracts with the two SOEs. Details of the irregularity of these contracts are traversed in the respective volumes of the Commission's Report dealing with Transnet and Eskom.

46. Trillian ultimately secured an aggregate amount of R935 319 263.28 in fees from Transnet, Eskom and SA Express and amounts misappropriated by Regiments Fund Managers from the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund. Holden provides full details of the payments by these organs of state to Trillian and the onward kickbacks aggregating to R192 649 514.00 from Trillian to laundry vehicles nominated by Essa and Narayan and to Albatime. For present purposes, the Commission merely documents the aggregate amounts paid to Regiments by each organ of state in the contracts governed by these kickbacks:

SOE	Amount (ZAR)
Eskom	595 228 913.29
Transnet (net total)	169 859 999.91
Transnet Defined Benefit Pension Fund	185 530 350.08 (included in the 228 983 985 misappropriated by Regiments Fund Managers)
SA Express	5 700 000.00
TOTAL	956 319 263.28

PAYMENTS MADE TO MCKINSEY

47. Pursuant to the kickback arrangement originally reached between Regiments and Issar Capital, Regiments and Trillian secured considerable work as a partner to McKinsey in contracts with Transnet and Eskom in a succession of contracts awarded to McKinsey without any competitive process.

48. The McKinsey partner, Mr Vikas Sagar, appears to have been aware of the impropriety linked to Regiments and Trillian's appointments at Eskom and Transnet. Mr Sagar had a longstanding relationship with Mr Sharma and was dealing with Mr Essa in relation to McKinsey fees and contracts at Transnet as early as February 2014. Mr Sagar met regularly with Mr Essa from 2014 to 2016 and dealt directly with Mr Essa in November 2015 in relation to the proposed McKinsey appointment at Eskom for the MSA contract. Other irregularities in McKinsey's appointments at Transnet and Eskom are discussed in detail in the Transnet and Eskom chapters of this report.

49. A Regiments / McKinsey consortium secured a contract at SAA through the corrupt relationship between Mr Wood and Mr Phetolo Ramosebudi who was the then SAA Treasurer although the Commission could find no evidence that McKinsey, as opposed to Regiments, was aware of this corrupt relationship.

50. In total, McKinsey was paid R1 898 695 074.26 with regards to contracts shared with Regiments or Trillian and tainted by state capture, as set out below:

SOE	Amount (ZAR)
Eskom	1 108 164 558.26
Transnet	784 287 306.00
SAA	6 243 210.00
TOTAL	1 898 695 074.26

51. After being informed by the Commission of the irregularities underlying its Transnet and SAA contracts, McKinsey undertook to repay these amount in full to the two SOEs and has now done so. It had previously repaid the full amount of the fees it was paid by Eskom. McKinsey is the only beneficiary of contracts tainted by state capture to have taken this position. It is to be commended for doing so.

THE T-SYSTEMS CONTRACTS WITH TRANSNET AND ESKOM

52. On 19 December 2009, T-Systems and Transnet concluded a contract for the provision by T-Systems of IT equipment and data services to Transnet for a period of 5 years. The contract provided for Transnet to have a two year right of renewal. T-Systems appears to have used Gupta enterprise connections to secure its position at Transnet and to more than double the term and value of its MSA contract.

53. Over the period August 2012 until mid-July 2015 T-Systems paid an aggregate amount of R3 051 639.21 to Zestilor, the company of Ms Zeenat Osmany who is married to Mr Essa. This amount was paid in made regular monthly payments of R81 830.91.

54. T-Systems relationship with Mr Essa and Zestilor was cemented when T-Systems ceded to Zestilor the equipment sale and rental elements of the MSA with effect from 19 May 2015 after Transnet agreed to extend the MSA for the full two years allowed for extension under the MSA. The cession agreement between T-Systems and Zestilor was concluded on 1 December 2014, less than a month before the original term of the T-Systems MSA would have expired. Pursuant to the cession, Zestilor was paid aggregate amounts of R13 407 883.18 directly by Transnet and R222 839 809.93 by Innovent Rental and Asset Management Solutions, a SASFIN subsidiary to which it on-ceded the agreement in mid-2015 when it experienced difficulties delivering on the obligations to Transnet which it had taken over from T-Systems.

55. In November 2015 Transnet initiated a new procurement process to replace the MSA. As the procurement process dragged on, the MSA was extended with a succession of short term extensions. In February 2017, Transnet resolved to re-appoint T-Systems despite the fact that Gijima had submitted a higher ranked bid at a substantially lower price than T-Systems. The manifest irregularity of the Transnet decision is discussed in detail elsewhere in this Report.

56. During the period in which T-Systems derived income from the extension of its contract with Transnet, it not only ceded the equipment sales and rentals business to Zestilor, but also facilitated the diversion of Transnet funds to the Gupta enterprise Sechaba, the Gupta family company which was appointed as T-Systems' supplier development partner. In total T-Systems transferred R323 413 332.51 to Sechaba between February 2015 and December 2017.

57. Transnet rewarded T-Systems for its new relationship with the Gupta enterprise, not only by extending the term of the T-Systems MSA, but also by dramatically increasing the value of the payments made under the MSA. In the five years of the original term of the MSA, Transnet made MSA payments to T-Systems in the aggregate amount of R1 317 043 801.63. In the two-year extension of the MSA from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2016, Transnet made MSA payments to T-Systems which aggregated to R1 533 626 953.39, almost 3 times as much in annual payments as it had made in the original term of the MSA, despite the fact that from May 2015 the T-Systems MSA turnover no longer included any equipment rental or sale business because that had been ceded to Zestilor. This trend continued over the additional extensions of the MSA until its termination in December 2018. So in the four years of extensions of the MSA from January 2015 to December 2018, T-Systems received aggregate payments of R3 213 333 995.83 from Transnet.

58. At Eskom, T-Systems exploited its relationship with the Gupta enterprise to even greater effect. Events at Eskom followed a pattern strikingly similar to those at Transnet.

59. On 10 November 2009, the Eskom Board Tender Committee approved the award to T-Systems of five year MSA from January 2000 to December 2014 for an amount of R2 575 642 000.00 exclusive of VAT (R2 936 231 880.00 inclusive of VAT).

60. The MSA was ultimately modified and extended repeatedly so that the total amount Eskom paid T-Systems under the MSA rose to R7 805 558 985.49. In the period 2014 to 2019, Eskom repeatedly cancelled the RFPs that it had issued to replace the T-Systems MSA and the T-Systems contract was renewed five times.

61. These extraordinary extensions and modifications of the MSA took place notwithstanding the fact that Eskom repeatedly decided not to extend the MSA beyond its original 5-year term and twice notified T-Systems of this fact.

62. The payment of just under R8 billion to T-Systems on a contract which had been awarded pursuant to an open tender process for an amount of less than R3 billion was, on its own terms, irregular. However, the irregularity went much further. An internal T-Systems Group compliance report dated 24 June 2015 shows that T-Systems flouted their own internal rules informally to engage Salim Essa as a consultant inter alia because T-Systems recognised that he "has a strong network to Eskom officials and its stakeholders". The informal engagement of Salim Essa occurred after T-Systems had taken advice on its exposure under the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 and "decided not to formally engage with S.E. [Essa] as a sales agent but to informally use his network".

63. The "informal" use of Mr Essa's network appears to have involved the T-Systems' payments to Zestilor and subcontract with Sechaba that have been mentioned above and that straddled both the Eskom and Transnet contracts. It also involved T-Systems' cession of part of its contract back to Eskom so that Eskom could contract directly with T-System's service providers in respect of Wide Area Network services. Through this device, Eskom paid Zestilor an amount of R2 490 484.50 over the period 2015 to 2018.

THE SAP CONTRACTS WITH TRANSNET AND ESKOM

64. Transnet and Eskom awarded Systems Applications Products (SAP) for contracts for which SAP paid kickbacks in the form of sales commission fees to Gupta enterprise companies, Global Softech Solutions and Cad House. The total contract value of these four contracts was R790 616 247.45.

65. The first contract was awarded to SAP on the 27th of December 2014 by Transnet. SAP South Africa were contracted to deliver services related to a Software License and Support Agreement. The total value of the contract (excluding annual support fees) was R98 132 000 plus VAT (R111 870 480.00) against which a VAT exclusive Transnet credit of R33,132,000 was set off leaving an amount of R74 100 000 to be paid (R65 million plus VAT). On 23 June 2015, SAP South Africa paid Global Softech Solutions R7 410 000 – a 10% commission on the payment made by Transnet.

66. The second contract was awarded to SAP on 30 September 2015 by Transnet. SAP South Africa were contracted to deliver services related to a Software License and Support Agreement related to Hybris and Remix software. The total contract value (excluding annual support fees) was R114 012 644.88 inclusive of VAT and was paid by Transnet on 1 April 2016.

67. The third contract was awarded to SAP on 31st of March 2016 by Eskom. SAP South Africa were contracted to deliver services related to a Software License and Support Agreement. The total contract value (excluding annual support fees) was R70 158 284.70 and was paid by Eskom on 17 June 2016.

68. The fourth contract was awarded to SAP on the 25th of November 2016 by Eskom. SAP South Africa was contracted to deliver services related to a Software License and Support Agreement. The total contract value (excluding maintenance) was R494 574 837.87 and was paid by Eskom on 23 December 2016.

69. On the second to fourth contracts, SAP paid CAD House aggregate amounts of R99 924 993.94 in sales commission payments over the period 8 April 2016 to 28 December 2016.

CONTRACTS AWARDED BY ESKOM AND TRANSNET TO NKONKI

70. In 2016, Trillian acquired the auditing firm Nkonki. In the same period, Nkonki was appointed as supplier development partner to a series of contracts at Eskom in which the primary partner was Deloitte, KPMG or PWC. All of these contracts were irregular.

71. Deloitte have acknowledged as much in respect of Eskom task orders SM002 and SM004 on which Deloitte engaged Nkonki as a subcontractor and have agreed to repay Eskom R150 million from the R207,716,243.80 fees paid to them on the relevant contracts.

72. PWC's Eskom contract with Nkonki was the "Capital Scrubbing" contract. PWC's engagement of Nkonki on the Eskom Capital Scrubbing contract followed an unsuccessful attempt in September 2016 by Trillian to partner directly with PWC. Eskom allowed Nkonki to be considered for partnering with PWC despite the fact that Nkonki had not met the requirements for Eskom's Panel B – the pool from which partner firms previously were to be drawn. It appears that Eskom constituted a Panel C specifically to accommodate the position of Nkonki. Eskom then concluded a "risk based" contract with the PWC Nkonki consortium. This was irregular because Eskom had not obtained the necessary

Treasury approval for such a contract but Eskom misrepresented to PWC that it had obtained the necessary Treasury approval.

73. KPMG's Eskom contract with Nkonki was in respect of task order SM008. The process for task order SM008 was manifestly irregular and appears to have been designed to ensure that 40% of the value of the contract would be allocated to Nkonki. KPMG ended up submitting proposals for this Task Order four times as the requirements kept on changing. KPMG was appointed on the basis of its fourth submission which proposed subcontracting to four different subcontractors, Nkonki who (as pointed out above) had failed to qualify for Eskom's Panel B and three other subcontractors who had qualified for Eskom's Panel B. After being appointed KPMG were told by Eskom that they could subcontract only to subcontractors on Eskom's Panel C. This effectively ensured that the full 40% value for subcontractors was subcontracted by KPMG to Nkonki.

74. Aggregate amounts of R85 447 833.60 were paid to Nkonki by Deloitte, KPMG, PWC and Eskom in relation to these contracts:

Period	Lead auditing firm	Value (ZAR)
Jan to Dec 2017	PWC	16 031 535.00
Oct 2017 to Mar 2019	KPMG	11 379 802.62
Oct 2016 to Dec 2017	Deloitte	42 401 008.38
Mar to Jun 2017	KPMG (Nkonki invoices paid directly by Eskom)	5 141 894.00
	Total (VAT excl)	74 954 240.00
	VAT	10 493 593.60
	TOTAL (VAT incl)	85 447 833.60

75. The aggregate amount paid by Eskom to Deloitte, KPMG, PWC and Nkonki in relation to these contracts (which include all amounts that Deloitte, KPMG and PWC paid on to Nkonki and to other subcontractors) was R413 142 093.15 inclusive of VAT made up as follows:

Source	Amount (ZAR) (VAT exclusive)	Amount (ZAR) (VAT inclusive)
Payments to PwC by Eskom	94 538 104.00	107 773 438.56
Payments to Deloitte by Eskom	207 216 243.80	236 226 517.93
Payments to KPMG by Eskom	55 509 103.07	63 280 377.50
Direct payments to Nkonki by Eskom	5 141 894.00	5 861 759.16
TOTAL	362 405 344.87	413 142 093.15

76. Prior to its acquisition by Trillian, Nkonki was appointed as service provider to Transnet for an internal audit function which went out on open tender in 2013. The total contract was for R500 million over five years.

77. In January 2017 Transnet received unsolicited bids from Nkonki and Oliver Wyman for a variety of proposed non-audit services. The Transnet executives proposed that Transnet utilise the existing internal audit contract with Nkonki for these unsolicited proposals, many of which duplicated services that were supposed to be rendered by McKinsey and Regiments. This was patently unlawful and the contention that the existing contract allowed for non-audit "ancillary services" was simply false.

78. To facilitate the new mandate, the Nkonki internal audit contract was extended by 20 months to March 2020. The value of the contract was also increased by R500 million (100%). This contract extension was in violation and contravention of Transnet's procurement rules, the PFMA, and the National Treasury instruction and practice notes.

79. Transnet had paid R26.1 million to Nkonki in respect of these irregularly procured non-audit services.

THE TRANSNET NEOTEL CONTRACTS

80. Neotel received two contracts from Transnet, from which payments aggregating to R75 573 519.88 were made to the Gupta enterprise laundry vehicle, Homix. These contracts were a Cisco equipment contract concluded on 21 February 2014 and an MSA concluded on 19 December 2014 to provide Network Services to Transnet (including provision for an asset buy back). In addition to these contracts, in May 2014 and March 2015, Neotel concluded two CCTV contracts with Transnet, from which payments aggregating to R286 635 487.77 were made to the Gupta enterprise company, Techpro. Techpro then paid R119 700 000.00 on to Homix directly and another R51 300 000.00 indirectly to Homix via Digital Video Solutions trading as Central High Trading.

81. The irregularities in the awards of the Neotel contracts are addressed in Chapter 10 of Part 2 of this Report. For present purposes it suffices to point out that Neotel's auditors, Deloitte, identified payments made by Neotel to Homix in connection with these contracts as reportable irregularities that gave rise to reasonable inferences of corruption. Indeed, it was through Deloitte's professional approach to their auditing responsibilities in their Neotel audit, that the Gupta enterprise's corrupt influence over public enterprises first came to light.

82. The payments made by Transnet to Neotel on these contracts aggregated to R5 581 955 471.63, made up as follows:

Date / Period	Contract	Payment
7 March 2014	Cisco equipment	69 067 039.72
14 May 2014	Cisco equipment	276 268 158.90
23 December 2014	MSA asset buy-back fee	228 000 000.00
23 December 2014	MSA mobilisation fee	256 500 000.00
2015-2018	CCTV	827 441 799.18
2015-2019	MSA fees	3 924 678 473.83
TOTAL		5 581 955 471.63

SECURITY SERVICES CONTRACTS AWARDED TO CPI

83. Combined Private Investigations (CPI) is a security services provider that received a large number of contracts from organs of state. Between January 2013 and the January 2016, CPI paid aggregate amount of R47 475 362.22 to the Gupta enterprise laundry vehicles Homix, Forsure Consulting, Medjoul and Fortime Consultants. The payments were made monthly. Initially the monthly amount was R500,000. This increased to R1,459,200 per month from October 2013, and to R1,575,760.37 from 17 November 2015 until the final payment at the end of January 2016.

84. On its own version, CPI states that it was approached in late 2012 by Mr Salim Essa on behalf of Chivita. Mr Essa indicated that he could assist CPI secure further business as he was "well-connected", and a "deal broker" and "rainmaker". CPI further alleges that Mr Essa worked alongside and with Mr John Duarte (the son of Mrs Jesse Duarte) and Mr Malcolm Mabaso, the latter a former advisor to Mr Mosebenzi Zwane, and that the three members would provide "consultancy services" through Chivita to CPI to help it secure business.

85. CPI did not provide any detail in relation to the precise services provided by Chivita or any of the other laundry vehicles to which it subsequently made payments. The invoices against which Chivita and other entities were paid simply stated that they provided "consultancy services", or undertook the "management of information" and provided "logistic support services". CPI's attorneys state that the commercial rationale for contracting the Gupta enterprise entities was that "the team presented to our client that it was 'well connected' and could add commercial value to our client's business." CPI does not indicate whether "the team" assisted in securing any contracts, nor do CPI provide any indication of what services could have been legitimately provided by Mr Essa et al. in securing work for CPI.

86. Over the period that CPI paid kickbacks to laundry vehicles designated by Mr Salim Essa, organs of state paid it an aggregate amount of R426 453 577.70 made up as follows:

State entity / SOE	Amount (ZAR)
Eskom	71 937 415.05
City Power (City of Johannesburg)	47 802 005.78
City of Tshwane	59 269 561.31
City of Ekurhuleni	95 746 222.42
Transnet	151 698 373.17
TOTAL	426 453 577.70

CONTRACTS AWARDED TO DENTONS SOUTH AFRICA

87. Kapditwala Incorporated is a law firm that trades as Dentons South Africa. Dentons' senior partner, Mr Noor Kapdi, has deposed to an affidavit in which he approached Rafique Bagus, a client of Dentons South Africa and then Chairperson of Alexcor, to "advertise" Dentons to the public sector.

88. On 17 April 2015, Dentons was appointed by Eskom to perform a forensic investigation. The contract was referred to by Dentons and Eskom as "Project Picardie".

89. Mr Kapdi states that, subsequent to being awarded the Project Picardi contract, he contacted Mr Bagus to "thank him for his efforts to market the Firm [Dentons]. I also raised the issue of remuneration to which I believed he would be entitled for work done in marketing the Firm." According to Mr Kapdi, Mr Bagus indicated that he would not require any remuneration but that a third party would contact Dentons in relation to payment for marketing their services.

90. Mr Kapdi was subsequently contacted by Mr Ashok Narayan to discuss arranging payment. Mr Kapdi states that he then entered into a consultancy agreement with an entity designated by Mr Narayan to provide for payment to Mr Narayan in relation to the Eskom contract. The entity designated by Mr Narayan was Fortime Consultants, which was the then current laundry vehicle used by the Gupta enterprise to receive kickbacks on public contracts.

91. Mr Bagus admits to introducing Mr Kapdi to the Guptas but denies Mr Kapdi's version in relation to the Dentons contracts. In particular, he denies agreeing to advertise Dentons, knowing Mr Ashok Narayan or being aware of the fact that Dentons was tendering for an Eskom contract.

92. Dentons SA was paid R20 892 885.56 by Eskom Holdings in relation to Project Picardie. On 22 August 2015, it paid Fortime R1 231 200.00 in relation to this contract.

93. In 2015, Dentons was appointed to Denel's legal panel. According to Mr Kapdi, he was approached in September 2015 by the Head of Legal at Denel and informed that Dentons had been selected to submit a Request for Proposal in relation to an investigation that was required by Denel. Dentons submitted a bid for the work, quoting a fee capped at R4 100 000.00. On 9 October 2015, Dentons was formally appointed by Denel to undertake the work under the name "Project Betty".

94. Dentons invoiced Denel R5 971 266.24 under Project Betty. This exceeded the capped fee of R4,100,000 in the bid.

95. According to Mr Kapdi, in January 2016, following the completion of the work at Denel, Dentons was once again approached by Mr Narayan to negotiate a marketing fee in relation to this contract. Mr Kapdi agreed to negotiate a fee with Fortime. Fortime was ultimately paid R642 588.36 in relation to this contract in three payments between December 2015 and February 2016.

96. It is not possible to resolve the dispute of fact between Mr Bagus and Mr Kapdi as to how Mr Ashok Narayan was introduced to Dentons. This is a matter that must be investigated further by the appropriate authorities. For present purposes, it suffices to point out that on any version, the involvement of Mr Ashok Narayan and Fortime points to irregularity in relation to the appointment of Dentons at Eskom and Denel:

    96.1 In both cases, the "marketing fees" paid by Dentons to Fortime were only negotiated after the relevant contracts had been awarded.

96.2 There was no written agreement between Dentons and Fortime in relation to the Denel contract. In the case of the Eskom contract, the written agreement that was concluded was backdated to 1 February 2015 to give the appearance of an agreement that was signed prior to the award of the contract to Dentons. However, it is clear that the agreement was signed long after the contract had been awarded because the parties were still exchanging drafts of the agreement as late as 21 August 2015.

96.3 The backdated agreement contained detailed provisions purporting to regulate the services that Fortime was to provide but on Mr Kapdi's version any "services" provided by Fortime had been provided before he or Dentons was aware of the existence of Mr Narayan and Fortime.

96.4 Dentons was unable to produce any marketing material or reports that Mr Narayan or Fortime had ever produced for Dentons. So, it appears that the "marketing" work performed by Mr Narayan could only have been influence peddling. Given the identity of Mr Narayan, that influence would have been the influence of the Gupta enterprise over Eskom and Denel.

PAYMENTS MADE BY SABC TO LORNAVISION

97. In 2017, the Special Investigating Unit successfully procured a high court judgment to set aside a contract entered into between Lornavision and the SABC. Lornavision, of whom Mr Kuben Moodley was a director, were contracted by the SABC to provide debt collection services.

98. Lornavision was ultimately paid R62 733 557.24 by the SABC between September 2015 and February 2017. Out of these funds Lornavision diverted an aggregate amount of R8,799,544.63 to, to Shacob Commerce and Birsaa Projects, two Gupta enterprise laundry vehicles.

PAYMENTS TO COMPANIES UNDER DIRECT GUPTA CONTROL

99. The irregularities in the award of contracts by state departments directly to companies under the direct control of the Gupta enterprise are traversed in other sections of this Report. This section documents the amounts paid out of public funds pursuant to these contracts:

99.1 Eskom paid an aggregate amount of R2 442 523 980.56 to Tegeta Resources and Exploration.

99.2 In the period from 14 April 2016, after Optimum Coal Holdings passed into the hands of the Gupta enterprise, Eskom made aggregate payments of R1 682 026 066.26 to Optimum.

99.3 On 11 April 2010, the Industrial Development Corporation advanced R250 000 000.00 to Oakbay Resources and Energy to enable it to purchase Shiva Uranium from the erstwhile owner, Uranium 1.

99.4 The New Age Media ("TNA") was paid R254 752 699.30 by Eskom, Transnet, Department of Water and Sanitation, the Offices of the Premier for Free State, North West and Mpumalanga, and the Free State Provincial Treasury through irregular procurement practices between February 2011 and May 2016.

99.5 Denel paid VR Laser aggregate amounts of R242 425 736.70 in respect of the following irregularly procured contracts:

99.5.1 The platform hulls contract awarded to VR Laser Services in October 2014

99.5.2 The single source supplier contract awarded by Denel Land Systems ("DLS") to VR Laser in May 2015; and

99.5.3 the single source supplier contract awarded by Denel Vehicle Systems ("DVS") to VR Laser in December 2015.

99.6 After Sahara Systems acquired a 50% share in Global Softech Solutions in 2014, Transnet Awarded Global Softech Solutions the Wagon Performance Optimisation Contract which was valued by Transnet at R500 000 000 but ultimately resulted only in the payment of a once off fee to Global Softech Solutions of R16 199 400.00 on 11 April 2017.

99.7 After Sahara Holdings acquired a controlling interest in Cutting Edge Commerce (previously known as Leonardo Business Consulting) in 2014:

99.7.1 Transnet concluded a two-year contract with Cutting Edge to provide Transnet with a "Solution for a Systems Analytical Tool and capability to Report on Key Procurement Metrics". The contract was awarded to Cutting Edge on a confinement basis without any competitive bidding and resulted in aggregate payments of R41 294 949.60 from Transnet to Cutting Edge

99.7.2 On 9 May 2016 Eskom concluded a contract with Cutting Edge in the amount of R71 166 780.00 on the basis of an unsolicited proposal that was not subject to competitive bidding and in respect of which the full contract price of R71 166 780 was paid by Eskom to Cutting Edge within 17 days of submission of the unsolicited proposal.

99.7.3 Eskom paid Cutting Edge additional amounts aggregate to R24 432 133.44 in the course of 2017 under ad hoc appointments of Cutting Edge to contracts by virtue of its position on the Eskom IT Panel of service providers.

99.8 The Commission has identified payments aggregating to just over R102 million made to Sahara by organs of state who have been unable to produce evidence to the Commission to show that these payments were made in terms of acceptable procurement practices. The Commission is not in possession of evidence that proves that these payments were the product of irregular procurement practices, so they are not included in the overall totals of irregular payments made to the Gupta enterprise.

STATE CAPTURE: THE AGGREGATE AMOUNTS

100. Mr Holden has produced a detailed analysis of the payments from public funds affected by state capture. On the basis of his analysis, the Commission estimates that the total amount disbursed by organs of state in expenditure tainted by state capture was R57 387 681 029.74,[33] broken down as follows:

Government entity	Paid to	Total state expenditure (ZAR)	Percentage of total
FS Department of Agriculture and Rural Development	Nulane Investments 204	24 984 240.00	0.04
FS Department of Agriculture and Rural Development	Estina	280 202 652.00	0.49

FS Department of Agriculture and Rural Development	Tsebo Business Intelligence	12 492 500.00	0.02
FS Department of Agriculture and Rural Development	Pygma Consulting	2 487 480	0.00

[33] This figure differs slightly from Mr Holden's figure of R57,269,900,004.43 in his Table 73 because Holden appears to have transposed incorrect figures into his table in respect of the Transnet McKinsey payments, the Transnet Cutting Edge payments and the Denel Dentons payments. His table also did not take account of the R26.1 million aggregate payment made by Transnet to Nkonki in respect of the non-audit services because he was not aware of the amount paid in this regard. All of the relevant discrepancies are noted in the table below.

102. Holden calculates that the Gupta enterprise was paid directly or indirectly via money laundering vehicles, a total of R16 217 793 047.18 out of public funds tainted by state capture. The Commission has performed its own independent calculations and concluded that the Gupta enterprise benefited at least to the amount of R15 543 960 171.22. There are two primary reasons for the discrepancy between the Commission's figure and the figure reached by Holden.

102.1 First, the Commission has erred on the side of caution in relation to the risk of double counting amounts.

102.2 Second, for the purposes of his calculation, Holden does not treat Trillian, or its subsidiary, Nkonki as Gupta enterprise entities and, instead, accounts only for the amounts traceable as having been paid out of Trillian or Nkonki to known Gupta enterprise subcontractors or laundry vehicles. Given the fact that Mr Essa at all relevant times held a controlling interest in Trillian, the Commission sees no basis for treating Trillian as an entity independent of the Gupta enterprise. So in this report, for the purposes of calculating amounts paid to the Gupta enterprise in relation to state capture contracts, payments to Trillian and Nkonki are included in the calculation.

103. The full breakdown of the Commission's amount of R15 543 960 171.22 is shown in the following four tables.

Payments to first-level laundry entities by state capture partners

104. With reference to the following table, Holden's Table 248 includes amounts paid to laundry vehicles by the Gupta Enterprise companies Trillian, Sechaba Computers, Zestilor, Techpro and CAD House. Now that the primary payments to these companies have already been included in this table in the two categories above, the laundry payments by those vehicles have been removed from the table to avoid double counting. Similarly, the amounts under the heading "Regiments and Trillian laundry cases" in Holden's Table 248 have been removed from this table to avoid double counting now that the primary payments are already included in this table under earlier categories.

[42] Holden's Table 248 includes amounts paid to Zestilor by Trillian and Sechaba Computer Systems. These have been removed to avoid double counting.

105. The grand total of these three payments and the kickbacks - direct payments to the Gupta enterprise by organs of state, payments by state contractors derived from state capture contracts, payments to first-level laundry entities by state capture partners, and kickbacks to the Gupta enterprise - amounts to R15 543 960 171.22.

[45]The amount in Holden's Table 248 under the heading "CNR Relocation Contract" has been removed because it is already included under the CNR Durban Relocation/Bex line items above.

ASSESSING THE FINANCIAL COST OF STATE CAPTURE

106. The amounts set out above do not represent the full loss suffered by the state as a result of Gupta enterprise related state capture. The first amount of R57 269 900 004.43 is the aggregate amount of total payments made to contractors in contracts with the state in which the Gupta enterprise was involved in state capture activities. The second amount of R15 543 960 171.22 is the aggregate amount of total payments to the Gupta enterprise made by the state itself, or by contractors in contracts with the state in which the Gupta enterprise was involved in state capture activities. In order to calculate the total cost to the state of state capture activities it would be necessary to conduct eight different quantification exercises:

106.1 The total value of kickbacks paid to the Gupta enterprise by third party contractors who concluded contracts with the state whether in the form of direct kickbacks or indirect kickback paid to laundry entities. This amount can be assumed to be a loss by the state because in an open and honest competitive procurement process without interference by the Gupta enterprise or other corrupt parties, it can be assumed that bidders would have fixed prices at a level that did not need to accommodate the kickbacks that they had committed to pay to the Gupta enterprise.

106.2 The total value of gratuitous expenditure where such expenditure was incurred with little motivation beyond ensuring the enrichment of the Gupta enterprise.

106.2.1 By way of illustration, organs of state made aggregate payments of R248 833 365.86 to TNA for advertising, marketing and newspapers. It can safely be assumed that most, if not all of this expenditure would have been avoided if the Gupta enterprise had not exercised the influence over the state that it did, and that very little of this expenditure resulted in any real value for the state.

106.2.2 Likewise, the entire Estina Dairy project seems to have been conceived for the primary purpose not of providing any value to the Free State Provincial Government and the residents of the Free State but rather to provide a pretext for the transfer of public funds to the Gupta enterprise. There was little, if any value that the province derived from the project.

106.3 The total value of gratuitous expenditure where entities were entities linked to the Gupta enterprise were given new contracts for which they had already been paid or for which other entities linked to the Gupta enterprise had already been paid. The state capture at Transnet abounds with examples in this category:

106.3.1 The R189 million “success fee” paid to Regiments in relation to the China Development Bank loan when Regiments had already been paid for all services relating to this work

106.3.2 The R93 million paid to Trillian for services for which Regiments had already been paid in respect of the Club Loan; and

106.3.3 The R26.1 million paid to Nkonki for services for which Regiments and McKinsey had already been paid.

106.4 The payment by organs of state of amounts far in excess of the contract values awarded to entities linked to the Gupta enterprise. The most obvious example of this is the 745% increase in the payments made to Regiments Capital for its services relating to funding for the 1064 locomotive procurement. So Regiments fees escalated from the R35.2 million in the initial contract to R265.5 million.

106.5 The price inflation attendant on contracts made with the Gupta enterprise by state entities, especially in the cases where no competitive bidding process took place, where such contracts incurred significantly higher costs for the delivery of goods and services compared with going market rates, or even the usual rates charged by the Gupta enterprise for its non-state clients. An obvious example of this is the case of Sunbay Trading and its contracts with the Free State government to supply laptops for needy learners. As set out above, Sunbay Trading was paid an aggregate amount of R33,078,810.00 to deliver laptops. Almost all of this was transferred to Sahara Computers, who supplied the laptops. Sunbay Trading was effectively a front company for Sahara. The unit price charged by Sunbay Trading/Sahara Computers in this regard was nearly double the unit price charged by Sahara Computers to its commercial and corporate clients. There was no competitive bidding process for the award of the contracts.

106.6 The price inflation in the contract prices charged to the state by third party contractors who did business with the state in circumstances where they were protected by their relationship with the Guptas, over and above the value of the kickbacks those third party contractors paid to the Gupta enterprise.

106.6.1 Gupta enterprise state capture created a culture of corruption and indifference to cost in many State Owned Enterprises and government departments. There is reason to believe that third party contractors who were protected by their relationship with the Gupta enterprise, exploited this culture to charge the state excess amounts even beyond those necessary to recover the cost of the kickbacks they were paying to the Gupta enterprise.

106.6.2 By way of illustration, T-Systems was awarded a five-year MSA agreement with Transnet from January 2010 to December 2014. T-Systems used its relationship with Mr Salim Essa to procure the extension of this contract from January 2015 to March 2019. Over the four-year period of the extension to December 2018, the average annual amount paid by Transnet to T-Systems was more than three times the average annual amount paid to T-Systems under the same contract from January 2010 to December 2014.

106.7 The total value of contractual damages suffered by organs of state in their contracts with the Gupta enterprise itself or with third party contractors who were protected by their relationship with the Gupta enterprise.

106.7.1 In some cases, the counterparties of the state would have properly performed their contractual obligations and the state would have suffered no contractual damages. In others, however, the Gupta enterprise linked counterparties would not have performed and the state would have suffered losses which may even have exceeded the amounts paid to the relevant counterparties.

106.8 The OCM Eskom state capture case illustrates the potential extent of such losses. In case 35689/20 in the Gauteng High Court, Pretoria, Eskom seeks to recover from parties implicated in state capture the losses that it alleges that it suffered as a result of OCM's failure to deliver the quantity and quality of coal it was obliged to deliver while under the control of the Gupta enterprise. It quantifies its losses at R2 441 161 443 in relation to coal quantity and at R89 335 464.07 in relation to coal quality.

106.9 These alleged losses far exceed the total amount of R1,682,026,066.26 that Eskom paid OCM while it was under the control of the Gupta enterprise.

106.10 Collateral wasteful expenditure incurred by organs of state to accommodate state capture contracts. Apart from the payments to Gupta enterprise companies and third party contractors paying premiums to Gupta enterprise companies, state capture caused indirect loss to the state in the form of excessive payments to "innocent" third party contractors so as to prevent the inflated payments to Gupta linked third party contractors from standing out. The 1064 locomotive procurement is an illustrative case – China North Rail and China South Rail were paid prices that accommodated kickbacks to the Gupta enterprise of amounts in excess of 20%. In order to make this possible, the prices paid to Bombadier and General Electric also had to be increased to levels where the China North Rail and China South Rail prices did not look excessive.

107. Of the eight categories of losses set out above, the Commission has been able to quantify the first category of losses. The amount of the kickbacks paid can be determined with some degree of accuracy. As is set out above the direct kickbacks aggregated to R7 228 570 040.17 and the indirect kickbacks aggregated to R919 968 226.83. So the total known value of kickbacks was R8 148 538 267.

108. The Commission has not, however, attempted to quantify the other seven categories of loss. So this report does not purport to quantify the total loss suffered by the state as a result of Gupta related state capture. It can safely be predicted, however, that this amount would far exceed the amount of R15 543 960 171.22 that was paid directly or indirectly from public funds to entities forming part of the Gupta enterprise.

PART B: DISSIPATION OF FUNDS THROUGH MONEY LAUNDERING NETWORKS

INTRODUCTION

109. The Gupta enterprise used a range of different money laundering networks to dissipate the funds it generated from state capture. These money laundering networks became more sophisticated over time:

110. To begin with, the Gupta enterprise externalised its state capture profits with extremely simple money laundering devices:

    110.1 Domestic Gupta companies that received irregular contracts with the South African State would transfer the benefits of those contracts directly into Gupta companies in the UAE whereafter they would circulate through offshore Gupta enterprise accounts before being reintroduced to Gupta companies in South Africa; and 110.2 Kickbacks extracted from third party foreign contractors with Transnet would be paid directly into the accounts of Gupta companies in the UAE or to JJ Trading FZE and Century General Trading FZE. The latter were companies within the Worlds Window Network of companies and laundered these payments directly into UAE accounts of Gupta enterprise companies.

111. From around 2013, the Gupta enterprise started using sophisticated domestic and international money laundering networks to move its proceeds of crimes against the South African State:

    111.1 In respect of the Transnet locomotive kickbacks, CRRC and related companies paid offshore kickbacks into HSBC accounts of Tequesta and Regiments Asia in Hong Kong, out of which accounts the kickbacks were laundered through a Hong Kong / China money laundering network; and

    111.2 Domestic Gupta companies that received irregular contracts with the South African State would launder the proceeds of those contracts through established South African money laundering networks, which, in turn, would launder the relevant funds into international money laundering networks, including the Hong Kong China money laundering network referred to in the previous paragraph.

112. These domestic and international money laundering networks used by the Gupta enterprise to move proceeds of crime for around 2013, are independent of the Gupta enterprise. They seem to have pre-existed the Gupta enterprise and to have serviced a wide range of clients other than the Gupta enterprise.

113. Because the Commission had no extra territorial information gathering powers, it was able to investigate the domestic money laundering networks much more effectively than the international money laundering networks. The primary focus of this Chapter is accordingly on the domestic money laundering networks used to dissipate the proceeds of state capture and a range of remedial measures that should be considered to target these domestic money laundering networks. Before reaching this primary domestic focus of the chapter, however, it is possible to make some observations in relation to an international money laundering network that was used to launder billions of Rands of proceeds of state capture. This is the money laundering network based in Hong Kong / China that was used to launder the kickbacks paid to the Gupta enterprise by the Chinese locomotive companies in respect of the Transnet locomotive contracts. The same money laundering network also appears to have been used to launder state capture kickbacks paid inside South Africa, after these were laundered out of the country through domestic money laundering networks.

USE OF HONG KONG / CHINA MONEY LAUNDERING NETWORK

114. Holden shows that, over the period 8 December 2014 to 1 September 2016, an aggregate amount of $145 177 086.91 was paid into the Hong Kong HSBC accounts of by CRRC and its related companies as kickbacks in respect of the Transnet locomotive contracts awarded to China South Rail and China North Rail, two locomotive companies which merged to create CRRC.

115. The kickbacks paid into the Regiments Asia and Tequesta HSBC accounts were dissipated through transactions which have obvious hallmarks of money laundering:

    115.1 The funds paid into the Regiments Asia and Tequesta HSBC accounts were dissipated almost immediately after they were received:

    115.2 A large proportion of the funds received by Regiments Asia and Tequesta were paid into Chinese textile and domestic appliance exporters, which were companies with which there was no plausible reason for Regiments Asia or Tequesta to be doing business

    115.3 There were obvious signs of "smurfing" in the dissipation of the payments made by the Chinese locomotive companies into the Regiments Asia or Tequesta HSBC accounts. Thus, individual payments from the Chinese locomotive companies were invariably broken up into a series of smaller payments out of Regiments Asia or Tequesta so as to avoid the attention and regulatory compliance checks that may have been drawn by the movement of single large amounts out of Regiments Asia or Tequesta; and 115.4 Most of the amounts paid out of Regiments Asia and Tequesta were round number amounts.

116. Despite these obvious signs of money laundering, which were present from December 2014, HSBC Hong Kong allowed the Tequesta and Regiments Asia accounts to continue operating until well into 2017, long after all of the payments from the Chinese locomotive companies had been dissipated in full and the HSBC accounts had become empty shells with the Gupta enterprise having redirected kickbacks from the Chinese locomotive companies into Tequesta and Regiments Asia accounts at Habib Bank in Dubai.

117. The amounts paid out of Regiments Asia and Tequesta were paid into what appears to be a substantial pre-existing money laundering network operating out of Hong Kong and China.

    117.1 An internal HSBC investigation into HSBC's exposure to the Gupta enterprise with regards to Regiments Asia, Tequesta and Morningstar (another entity laundering kickbacks for the Gupta enterprise) showed that 92 of the companies receiving payments from these three entities held accounts at HSBC bank. As of late 2016, 60 of these accounts were active. HSBC's investigation revealed that just these 60 accounts received 50339 payments worth $4.2 billion. These 60 accounts made onward payments to 5576 further beneficiaries, of which 55 were also paid by Regiments Asia, Tequesta Morningstar. The total value of onward payments was $3.78bn in 32,653 transactions.

    117.2 HSBC's investigation was limited to only 60 accounts paid by Tequesta, Regiments Asia and Morningstar. It is likely that, as a result, HSBC's internal investigation only apprehended a portion or sliver of the entirety of this global money laundering network which appears to have been laundering billions of dollars internationally.

118. As we show below, the Hong Kong / China money laundering network identified by HSBC was also receiving laundered funds from a range of South African money laundering companies which performed the function of "onshore-offshore bridges" - joining domestic South African money laundering networks with international money laundering networks and laundering proceeds of state capture (and other criminal activity) in this way.

LOCAL MONEY LAUNDERING NETWORKS USED BY GUPTA ENTERPRISE

119. The preceding section has addressed the laundering of state capture-related kickbacks which were paid by the Chinese locomotive companies into accounts held by Gupta enterprise companies in Hong Kong. This section addresses the laundering of state capture related kickbacks that were paid within South Africa.

120. The first stage of the laundering of state capture-derived funds within South Africa involved payments to "first-level" laundry entities. The first-level laundry entities received kickback payments from third party companies in return for contracts that those companies had been awarded by state owned enterprises and government departments, apparently under the influence of the Gupta enterprise. The Gupta enterprise made use of 15 known first-level laundry entities. These first-level laundry entities were used in roughly chronological fashion, and made use of four separate laundering routes.

121. In total, R1,232,286,003.48 was paid by contractors to the state to the first level laundry entities, as follows:

Name	Amount (ZAR)
Albatime	320,596,621.86

124. The Gupta enterprise made use of four roughly distinct local money laundering networks that were used chronologically or sequentially to receive and dissipate funds from 'first-level' laundry vehicles, a substantial portion of which was dissipated abroad into pre-existing international money laundering networks. The payments were made into the international laundry networks by what Holden calls 'onshore-offshore bridges.' These bridges acted as the final stop of the local money laundering chain. The bridges were used to receive payments from multiple sources and, once bulked, transfer the funds abroad into further international money laundering networks, in particular the Hong Kong/China money laundering network, which is described in further detail below.

The first money laundering network: Chivita, Ballatore Brands, Gamso Trading and Syngen Distribution, May 2013 to May 2014

125. The first money laundering network was centered on Chivita Trading and ran from May 2013 to May 2014. Chivita Trading operated as a high-volume laundry entity prior to its receipt of funds for the Gupta enterprise Chivita was paid R154,406,247 by Regiments, Combined Private Investigations, Zestilor, Homix and Denel.

126. The payments made to Chivita were dissipated in two streams. Firstly, Chivita paid funds into Ballatore Brands, which records show acted as a laundry entity prior to receiving payments from the Gupta enterprise. The Gupta enterprise funds commingled with an extremely large number of cash payments from mixed sources, and, once bulked, paid to an entity called Gamso Trading. In total, R5,321,776 was paid to Gamso Trading deriving from state capture funds.

127. Gamso Trading was an "onshore-offshore bridge". Gamso Trading received and bulked payments from multiple sources, but most notably Chivita, and paid vast sums abroad into the Hong Kong/China money laundering network. Gamso Trading made use of AngloRand Forex or Foremost Finance - forex brokers that were involved in movement of extraordinary sums from South Africa into, inter alia, the Hong Kong/China money laundering network. 366. In the second stream, Chivita paid funds directly into an entity called Syngen Distribution Pty Ltd (Syngen). Syngen acted as an onshore-offshore bridge. Syngen also made use of AngloRand Forex and Foremost Finance as its Forex broker. According to Holden's calculations, a total R141,959,811.61 was paid to Syngen by Chivita using state capture funds and approximately R1 million of commingled funds from other sources. These funds were then distributed into the same Hong Kong / China money laundering network that was used by Tequesta and Regiments Asia to launder the kickbacks paid into their HSBC Hong Kong bank accounts by CRRC and related parties in relation into the Transnet locomotive contracts.

The second money laundering network: Homix, Bapu, FGC Commodities and Morningstar International

128. The second local money laundering network ran from April 2014 to May 2015, during which time Homix acted as the Gupta enterprise's primary first-level laundry vehicle. In total, Homix was paid R395,418,856.44 from state capture proceeds.

129. Homix also used two separate streams to launder its funds.

130. First, Homix transferred state capture funds from its Standard Bank account into its Mercantile Bank account. From there, the funds were transferred to one of two Hong Kong-based companies, Morningstar International and YKA International. Bank records released by HSBC, who banked Morningstar, show that the funds paid into Morningstar were paid into, inter alia, the broader Hong Kong/China money laundering network described in the previous section. In total, Homix paid R66,329,001 into its Mercantile Bank account for transfer to YKA and Morningstar.

131. Second, Homix transferred R324,095,719.87 into an entity called Bapu Trading ("Bapu") in 130 transactions between September 2013 and June 2015. The only other sources of funds paid into Bapu were other first-level laundry entities. Holden suggests that this indicates that Bapu was used exclusively for laundering Gupta enterprise funds.

132. Bapu Trading made the following payments using state capture funds to known entities:

    132.1 R4,413,369 on 9 April 2014 to Hulley & Associates

    132.2 R2,830,000 on 10 April 2014 to Abbas Latib

    132.3 R1,000,000 in two payments of R500,000 on 8 and 9 April 2014 to Isidingo Personnel, a company with connections to the Gupta enterprise

    132.4 R450,000 on 30 September 2014 to Targatorque, of which Mr Salim Essa was a director

    132.5 R593,500 on 5 September 2014 to LSM Distributors, which acts as the sole distributor of luxury Bentley Cars in South Africa

    132.6 R590,000 in two payments of R550,000 and R40,000 on 30 September 2014 and 8 October 2014 to Land Rover Vereeniging; and 132.7 R630,000 on 10 April 2014 to Union Motors Lowveld, a dealer in Mercedes Benz cars.

133. Of the R4,413,369 paid to Hulley & Associates, R200,000 was paid to Advocate Kemp J Kemp SC. Of this amount paid to Advocate Kemp SC, R60,676.37 settled an outstanding bill in respect of professional fees provided by Advocate Kemp SC to President Jacob Zuma in relation to President Zuma's unsuccessful attempt to oppose an application by the Democratic Alliance to overturn the NDPP's decision not to prosecute Zuma in relation to the Arms Deal.

134. A further R543,706.92 was paid to ENS by Hulley & Associates using funds paid to it by Bapu. This payment was made to settle an outstanding invoice issued by ENS to Nemascore (Pty) Ltd

(Nemascore). ENS conducted due diligence for Nemascore on Evraz Highveld Steel in the context of a possible acquisition of Evraz by Nemascore. At the time of the payment, one of the three directors of Nemascore was Linda Makatini, an associate of the Zuma family who served as President Zuma's legal advisor when President Zuma was then Deputy President. In 2014, Makatini became a co-director in Deviate Information Technology (Pty) Ltd alongside Mr Duduzane Zuma.

135. In addition to the above, Bapu paid R71,922,955.65 to Syngen, which was then transferred into the Hong Kong/China money laundering network described above.

136. Bapu also paid R10,900,000 to Bay Breeze Trading/Holdings, the majority of which was withdrawn in cash.

137. Finally, Bapu paid R186,700,560.81 to FGC Commodities (FGC) in 71 transactions between October 2014 and May 2015. FGC Commodities acted as an onshore-offshore bridge used to transfer funds into the Hong Kong/China money laundering network.

138. Of the R387,629,804.58 paid to Homix from state capture funds, Holden identifies that R324,952,517.46 was paid into the Hong Kong/China money laundering network by Homix directly, or via either Syngen Distribution or FGC Commodities.

The third money laundering network: Forsure Consultants and Hastauf, May to July 2015

139. In May 2015, Homix was subject to freezing orders issued by the South African Reserve Bank. Homix was thus jettisoned in favour of Forsure Consultants and Hastauf by the Gupta enterprise.

140. Forsure Consultants was paid R16,890,928.70 by Regiments in relation to state capture contracts. Hastauf was paid R12,360,369.62 by Regiments in relation to state capture contracts.

141. Forsure Consultants was also paid R14,820,000 by Albatime emanating from funds paid to Albatime in relation to the fee paid by Transnet to Regiments regarding the China Development Bank loan. Hastauf was paid R17,670,000 by Albatime from the same source.

142. The funds paid to Forsure and Hastauf were dissipated in two ways. Firstly, R4,105,000 was paid by Forsure and Hastauf to Bapu for onward payment into the Hong Kong/China money laundering network.

143. Secondly, Forsure paid R11,356,000 and Hastauf R14,201,614.53 to IPocket Global.

144. IPocket Global was an offshore-onshore bridge that was represented by, Ms. Tian Wang who was convicted in a sting arranged by SARB and DIPCI after Ms. Tian Wang had indicated she was willing to bribe a SARB official.

The fourth money laundering network: July 2015 to July 2017

145. From late July 2015 until July 2017, the Gupta enterprise made use of an extraordinarily busy and complex money laundering network. Holden dubbed this network the "spider web".

146. The "spider web" made use of four sets of first-level money laundering entities that were used roughly chronologically (monetary figures are from Holden's Table 114):

First-level entity	Period of operation as a first-Level laundry for the Gupta enterprise	Total paid from state capture contracts (ZAR)
Fortime Consultants	July 2015 to August 2016	105,543,369.69
Medjoul	August 2015 to August 2016	95,148,371.74
Birsaa Projects	January 2016 to September 2016	49,230,737.23
Maher Strategy	November 2015 to January 2017	28,928,450.00
Pactrade	October 2016	4,291,766.00
Matson	October 2016	1,970,000.00
Jacsha	October 2016	2,150,000.00
Shacob Commerce	October 2016 to July 2017	24,589,767.40
Birtusa	April 2017	3,097,200.00
TOTAL		314,949,662.06

147. Holden describes how the first-level laundry entities made payments into what he called 'intermediary' accounts. These accounts bulked payments from the first-level laundry vehicles and then made onward payments into streams that led to onshore-offshore bridges and the Hong Kong/China network, or into streams whose end-point was not traceable by Holden during the period of his inquiry.

148. The three primary intermediary accounts identified by Holden were Ismer, Saamed Bullion Group and Taraqhi Traders.

149. The sole director of Ismer was Mohamed Ismail Maher who also directed Maher Strategy. The sole director of Saamed Bullion Group was Sabbir Ahmed, who also directed Fortime, Medjoul and Birsaa. The sole director of Taraqhi Traders was Mohamed Patel.

150. The amounts these three intermediaries were paid by first-level laundry entities was as follows:

Name	Ismer (ZAR) [Holden Table 155]	Saamed Bullion Group (ZAR) [Holden Table 161]	Taraqhi Traders (ZAR) [Holden Table 172]	TOTAL (ZAR)
Bex Structured Products	14,147,400.00			14,147,400.00
Fortime Consultants	13,671,430.77	47,417,009.85		61,088,440.62
Medjoul	7,764,180.22	73,183,392.73		80,947,572.95
Ismer		5,238,299.74		5,238,299.74
Maher Strategy	6,722,019.94	900,000.00		7,622,019.94
Birsaa Projects		65,579,556.66		65,579,556.66
Pactrade			2,168,000.00	2,168,000.00
Jacsha Projects			2,147,843.14	2,147,843.14
Matson Capital			1,965,767.37	1,965,767.37
Shacob Commerce			17,111,444.82	17,111,444.82
Birtusa			3,049,915.00	3,049,915.00
TOTAL	42,305,030.93	192,138,258.98	26,442,970.33	260,886,260.24

151. The funds paid into Ismer, Saamed and Taraqi Traders were transferred into an extended web of individuals and companies, and also drawn out in cash. The Commission was unable to complete a full tracing of the onward flow of these funds. However, Holden identifies the that the following entities were paid by Ismer: Park Village Auctions, Mykatrade 87CC, Saiyan Textiles, Triple Desire Trading, Universal Auctions, Dial Square Commodities, Bongos Products, ERZ Telecom, Firzaz Cosmetics, I7 Trading, Matayo Trading, Rich Rewards Trading 409, Trend Mania 1123CC and Zak's Radio and TV.

152. Ismer also paid R5,143,000 to ENY International and R1,250,000 to Charly Wholesalers; both of which acted as conduits to onshore-offshore bridges and the Hong Kong/China money laundering network.

153. Holden also makes the following observations in relation to the onward distribution of the funds paid into Saamed Bullion:

153.1 In total, R17,704,920 was paid to individuals from Saamed Bullion. Six payments of R1,000,000 were made to six individuals, who then immediately transferred the funds abroad. R2,000,000 of these funds were transferred into Morningstar International. R4,000,000 was paid into PAI International, a Hong Kong/China laundry vehicle.

153.2 Investigations undertaken by SARB indicate that the payments were actually overseen by Sheldon Jared Breet. Sheldon Breet is currently facing charges of conspiracy to commit murder and to commit housebreaking to commit murder related to the killing of Brian Wainstein, the so-called 'Steroid King' of the Western Cape. Sheldon's brother, Matthew, pleaded guilty to conspiring to kill Wainstein.

153.3 An aggregate of R20,665,754.47 was paid into entities that received a maximum of two payments. These entities included AC Cash & Carry, Calicom Trading, Centwise 66CC, Fouche Motors, Lappie Motor CC, Momobile Trading, Shibis Cash & Carry and Syed Cellular.

153.4 Most notably, an aggregate of R156,236,698.33 was paid into companies that acted either directly as onshore-offshore bridges, or as conduits that passed funds onto onshore-offshore bridges, as follows:

Entity	Amount	Route offshore
Pine Peak Wholesalers	58,003,894.70	Payments made directly to Hong Kong / China Laundry
ENY International / Studio De Pablo	35,174,496.46	Payments made directly to Hong Kong / China laundry
Shazari Trading	23,509,527.16	Payments made to Seattle Clothing Manufacturers or Lion Head Trading for payment into Hong Kong / China laundry
Graincor Distribution	11,637,501.85	Payments made to ENY International or Pine Peak Wholesalers for payment into Hong Kong / China laundry
Dial Square Commodities	10,033,078.16	Payments made to Damla Trading for payment into Hong Kong / China laundry
Zokubyte	9,175,000.00	Payments made into Varlozone, Coral General Traders or additional Zokubyte accounts at Sasfin for payment into Hong Kong / China laundry or Griffin Line Trading LLC
Charly Wholesalers	6,370,000.00	Payments made into Damla Trading for payment into Hong Kong / China laundry
ENG 38 Project	2,333,200.00	Payments made directly into Hong Kong / China laundry
TOTAL	156,236,698.33

154. Saamed Bullion also paid R5,384,728.64 derived from state capture funds to Lechabile Technology. These funds were transferred outwards to a company called Success Stand Limited, which appears to be part of the Hong Kong / China laundry.

155. Lechabile Technology's two directors are Mr Zainul Abadeen Nagdee and Mr Sarfaraz Nagdee. Mr Nagdee was appointed to Transnet's notorious Board and Acquisitions Disposal Committee (BADC) on 11 December 2014. Mr Nagdee was thus receiving and dissipating state capture funds while serving on the BADC. Mr Nagdee informed the Commission that the payments to Success Stand were for the purchase of I-Tunes vouchers.

The dissipation of payments from China North Rail to Bex Structured Products using the fourth money laundering network

156. Bex Structured Products was paid R76,586,903.16 by China North Rail pursuant to the CNR relocation contract on the 25th of September 2015.

157. R33,730,000 was paid to the Gupta family property company, Confident Concepts, from these funds. The funds were paid to Confident Concepts in three streams by three separate first-level laundry entities: Fortime, Medjoul and Ismer. Upon receipt of funds from Bex, these three entities paid funds onto a company by the name of Universal Auction. From Universal Auction, the funds were transferred to Confident Concepts.

158. Another notable recipient of funds from the CNR payment to Bex was Integrated Capital Management (ICM). ICM's directors at the time included Stanley Shane, a Transnet director. Holden calculates that ICM was paid R9,370,800 in November 2015 deriving from the payments made to Bex by CNR. The route to ICM was as follows: funds were paid from Bex into a company called Block Mania in three transfers, from where a portion was paid onwards to company called Green Blossom and, finally, from Green Blossom to ICM.

The onshore-offshore bridges

159. The act of tracing state capture funds has led to the identification and examination of twelve companies that performed the function of onshore-offshore bridges for established money laundering networks within South Africa. The volume of funds leaving South Africa through these routes is extremely alarming.

160. Holden calculates that R388,630,198.41 emanating from state capture funds that were paid to onshore-offshore bridges, the vast majority of which was paid into the Hong Kong/China laundry. The funds followed the routes set out below:

Onshore-offshore bridge	Route of funds	Amount (ZAR)
FGC Commodities	Homix to FGC Commodities	186,700,560.81
IPocket	Hastauf to IPocket	14,201,614.53
IPocket	Forsure to IPocket	11,356,000
One Last Trading	Fortime to One Last Trading	34,919,987.01
ENY / Studio de Pablo	Ismer and Saamed Bullion directly to ENY	33,851,201.30
ENY / Studio De Pablo	Saamed Bullion to Graincor to ENY	6,287,522.61
ENY / Studio De Pablo	Saamed to Dial Square to ENY	3,584,078.16
Pine Peak Wholesalers	Saamed to Pine Peak Wholesalers and Saamed to Graincor to Pine Peak	43,536,506.83
Eng 38 Pty Ltd	Saamed to Eng 38 Pty Ltd	2,833,200.00
Damla Trading	Saamed to Dial Square and Charly Wholesalers to Damla Trading	19,175,000.00
Seattle Clothing Manufacturers / Lionhead	Saamed to Shazari to Seattle / Lionhead	23,509,527.16
Varlozone	Saamed to Zokubyte to Varlozone	7,675,000
CCE Holdings	Saamed to CMC to CCE Holdings	1,000,000
TOTAL		388,630,198.41

161. Certain features of these onshore-offshore bridges are worth noting:

161.1 A number of the onshore-offshore bridges, most notably Syngen Distribution, Gamso Trading and Studio de Pablo, made use of the Forex brokers AngloRand Forex and Foremost Finance. Foremost Finance was run by Shaheem Humby; Bank records provided by Mercantile Bank indicate that ENY International and Studio de Pablo were directed by the same person, Wesley Botha. However, further details provided by Mercantile Bank show that Botha was introduced to the Bank by Shaheem Humby of Foremost Finance. Mandate documents signed by Studio de Pablo appointed Foremost Finance as the company's treasury agent.

161.2 The links between the onshore-offshore bridges and other forms of criminality are striking. In the case of Ukuzuza, for example, the company was represented by Tian Wang, later convicted of attempting to bribe a SARB official during a 'string.' Upon SARB's seizure of Ukuzuza funds, Yusuf Omarjee, a convicted fraudster, presented himself as the company's representative.

161.3 On two occasions, onshore-offshore bridges made payments abroad to only one or two companies, rather than a raft of Chinese/Hong companies apparently forming part of the Hong Kong / China money laundering network. The company One Last Trading, which was paid R34,919,987.01 by Fortime Consultants and Medjoul, made all of its payments to an entity called Discovery Trading based in the UAE. Studio de Pablo transmitted the majority of its funds abroad to a company called Flybridge DMCC. Flybridge DMCC was one of the only companies that received funds from all of Regiments Asia, Tequesta Group and Morningstar. Studio de Pablo transferred R326,753,139.35 abroad between September 2007 and July 2016, of which R313,794,562.84 was paid to Flybridge between July 2015 and July 2016.

161.4 A large number of the onshore-offshore bridges were identified by SARB and were subject to seizure orders. The records appended to Holden's evidence from SARB indicates that SARB conducted substantial and detailed investigations into these entities and issued forfeiture orders in respect of funds held by several of these entities. However, the NPA does not appear to have instituted any money laundering prosecutions arising out the SARB investigations.

PAYMENTS THROUGH THE LOCAL LAUNDRY NETWORK AND ONSHORE-OFFSHORE BRIDGES

162. In most cases, the state capture funds laundered through the domestic money laundering networks were transferred through the onshore-offshore bridges into companies that appear to form part of offshore money laundering networks. Once funds cross over the border, it is not possible to follow their flow from within South Africa. So the Commission has not been able to trace these funds to their final destinations. However, there were cases where those responsible for laundering these funds became undisciplined and allowed them to be transferred directly into the offshore Gupta company, Griffin Line Trading.

162.1 Griffin Line Trading, was a Gupta family company registered in Dubai. Griffin Line funding was the ultimate source of R842 million of the purchase price paid by Tegeta for the Optimum Coal Mine.

162.2 On 22 April 2016, the onshore-offshore bridge Seattle transferred $200,000 emanating from state capture funds into Griffin Line Trading. The funds paid to Seattle for onward payment to Griffin Line were the unlawful proceeds of frauds on Transnet and thefts from the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund which had been laundered into a fixed deposit held by Albatime at the Bank of Baroda before being laundered domestically through to Seattle.

162.3 A further four payments equal to $245,416 were made to Griffin Line by the onshore-offshore bridge Varlozone between 22 and 26 April 2016. This amount also derived from the closure of Albatime's Fixed Deposit used to purchase Optimum Coal Holding, and thus also derived from by frauds on Transnet and thefts from the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund.

SCALE OF LOCAL FUNDS MOVED INTO HONG KONG / CHINA MONEY LAUNDERING NETWORK

163. The Gupta enterprise made use of multiple existing local money laundering networks, all paying into the Hong Kong/China laundry. The following table sets out the alarming scale of transfers into the Hong Kong/China laundry from South Africa:

Onshore-offshore bridge	Number of transactions	Value (ZAR)
Ukuzuza	1586	3,839,193,805.63
Syngen Distribution	409	1,325,007,774.56
FGC Commodities	360	1,030,605,584.68
Lionhead	613	940,048,019.02
CCE Motor Holdings	360	767,601,728.73
Studio De Pablo	185	328,326,130.97
Seattle Clothing Manufacturers	215	256,842,214.20
Truhaven	143	146,208,484.42
Pine Peak Wholesalers	53	116,676,411.57
Damla Trading	20	40,419,762.00
Varlozone	37	26,788,55.71
Eng 38 Pty Ltd	38	17,860,180.84
TOTAL	4019	8,808,816,940.33

LOCAL MONEY LAUNDERING NETWORKS AND KHANANI LAUNDERING ORGANISATION

164. The domestic South African money laundering networks clearly had international partners beyond the Hong Kong China money laundering network. As mentioned above, One Last Trading, made all of its onshore-offshore bridge payments to an entity called Discovery Trading based in the UAE. Studio de Pablo transmitted the majority of its funds abroad to a UAE based company, Flybridge DMCC which also received payments from Tequesta, Regiments Asia and Morningstar. So, it is possible that there is a separate UAE based money laundering network with which the South African domestic money laundering networks are interacting.

165. Moreover, at least South African laundry vehicles – Truhaven and Donsantel 133CC - were making payments both into the Hong Kong laundry and into companies that formed part of the Khanani money laundering organisation (MLO). The Khanani MLO was placed under US OFAC sanctions in 2016, along with its mastermind Altaf Khanani, described as the world's most wanted money launderer and his family. The Al Khanani MLO allegedly laundered money for international drug cartels and for terrorist groups including Al Qaeda. The US OFAC sanctions designated five companies associated with the MLO: Mazaka General Trading LLC, Jetlink Textiles Trading, Seven Sea Golden General Trading LLC, Aydah Trading LLC and Wadi Al Afrah Trading LLC.

166. SARB records show that Donsantel 133CC paid R23,966,952.69 ($2,060,231) in February and March 2015 to Seven Sea Golden Trading and R19,480,113.37 ($1,670,940) between February and May 2015 to Aydah Trading. Donsantel 133CC was simultaneously paying funds into Hong Kong/China laundry entities such as Pavantex HK, Samantha Trading, Champion Merit and Derik Fashion. Donsantel 133CC was subject of a SARB forfeiture order executed in 2018 for violations of exchange control regulations.

167. The director of Donsanetel 133CC also directed a company called StyleUp Fashions CC. StyleUp also made payments into the Hong Kong/China money laundering network, including payments to Paventex and Derik Fashion.

168. Truhaven transferred R52,202,220 ($3,945,000) to four different Khanani MLOs including Aydah Trading, Jetlink Trading, Seven Seas Golden Trading and Wadi Al Alfrah Golden Trading. Truhaven also made payments to the Hong Kong/China laundry, including many of those paid by Donsantel 133CC such as Pavantex and Samantha Trading. Like Donsantel 133CC, Truhaven was subject to a SARB forfeiture order executed in 2018.

169. Holden shows that at the same time that Truhaven and Donsantel were using the Khanani MLO, they were also paying funds into the local laundry used by the Gupta enterprise.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The offshore laundering of state capture proceeds of crime

170. Billions of Rands were paid to the Gupta enterprise as kickbacks related to state capture contracts. If the South African state is to recover any of these amounts from offshore, it will first have to trace the current whereabouts of these funds. To this end it is recommended that:

    170.1 South African authorities should urgently engage with HSBC to require HSBC to assist in the tracing and dissipation of the funds out of Tequesta, Regiments Asia and Morningstar and into the Hong Kong/China laundry network using HSBC accounts.

    170.2 The Financial Intelligence Centre (FIC) and the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) should engage with their counterparts in Hong Kong and China to seek their assistance in the tracing and dissipation of the funds out of Tequesta, Regiments Asia and Morningstar and into the Hong Kong / China laundry network using HSBC accounts.

    170.3 The FIC and the NPA should engage with their counterparts in the UAE to seek their assistance in the tracing and dissipation of the funds out of the Tequesta and Regiments Asia accounts in Dubai.

    170.4 If the current whereabouts of any proceeds of state capture payments made to Tequesta, Regiments Asia or Morningstar can be located, the Asset Forfeiture Unit (AFU) of the NPA should approach its counterparts in the relevant jurisdiction(s) with a view towards having those proceeds frozen and then forfeited to the South African State as proceeds of state capture crimes.

The South African laundering of state capture proceeds of crime

171. Tracing the flows of state capture proceeds of crime has revealed the existence of widespread sophisticated money laundering networks operating within South Africa. The money laundering networks used by the Gupta enterprise were complex, well established and embedded in a pre-existing milieu of criminality and wrongdoing. The money laundering networks appear to service criminal enterprises straddling offences currently regulated and policed by multiple enforcement agencies and have links with international money laundering networks with multi billion rand turnovers.

172. It appears that, thus far, enforcement action against these networks has been confined primarily to forfeiture orders issued by the South African Reserve Bank. Important though these forfeiture orders are, they are unlikely to have any significant deterrent effect on the domestic money laundering networks because the scale of their operations is such that forfeiture orders can be absorbed as a cost of doing business. If money laundering is to be brought under control in South Africa, it is essential that those controlling and participating in the domestic money laundering networks in South Africa are prosecuted and subjected to asset forfeiture proceedings so that the costs of the money laundering profession can be made to outweigh its benefits.

173. Sections 4 to 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act 108 of 1998 create statutory money laundering offences in the following terms:

    > 4. Money laundering
    > Any person who knows or ought reasonably to have known that property is or forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities and-

(a) Enters into any agreement or engages in any arrangement or transaction with anyone in connection with that property, whether such agreement, arrangement or transaction is legally enforceable or not; or

(b) Performs any other act in connection with such property, whether it is performed independently or in concert with any other person, which has or is likely to have the effect-

(i) Of concealing or disguising the nature, source, location, disposition or movement of the said property or the ownership thereof or any interest which anyone may have in respect thereof; or shall be guilty of an offence.

5. Assisting another to benefit from proceeds of unlawful activities

Any person who knows or ought reasonably to have known that another person has obtained the proceeds of unlawful activities, and who enters into any agreement with anyone or engages in any arrangement or transaction whereby-

(a) The retention or the control by or on behalf of the said other person of the proceeds of unlawful activities is facilitated; or

(b) The said proceeds of unlawful activities are used to make funds available to the said other person or to acquire property on his or her behalf or to benefit him or her in any other way, shall be guilty of an offence.

6. Acquisition, possession or use of proceeds of unlawful activities

Any person who-

(a) Acquires

(b) Uses; or

(c) Has possession of,

property and who knows or ought reasonably to have known that it is or forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities of another person, shall be guilty of an offence.

174. The evidence contained in the three reports of Mr Holden to the Commission should provide ample basis for the investigation and prosecution of a wide range of individuals under sections 4 to 6 of POCA for their role in laundering proceeds of state capture crimes. It is accordingly recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority consider the three reports of Mr Holden with a view to instituting criminal prosecutions under sections 4 to 6 of POCA against persons involved in laundering the proceeds of state capture crimes.

175. However, one of the hall marks of the money laundering networks that laundered proceeds of state capture crimes within South Africa was their flexibility. As soon as particular companies were exposed as laundry vehicles, the networks were able to bypass those companies and to reroute state capture funds through different entities built into different networks. So, prosecutions for historical contraventions alone, are unlikely to make much of an impact on the money laundering industry within South Africa unless they are part of a sustained ongoing process to target that criminal industry.

176. How best to target money laundering within South Africa is not something that this Commission can prescribe. It is possible however to make a number of general observations in this regard:

176.1 First, because the money laundering industry services a range of criminal enterprises operating across fields regulated or policed by different regulatory and law enforcement agencies, a holistic approach is required on the side of government. A co-ordinated and co-operative approach to targeting money laundering is required from all of the relevant enforcement agencies, and at least the:

176.1.1 Asset Forfeiture Unit of the NPA

176.1.2 Directorate of Priority Crime Investigation (Hawks)

176.1.3 Financial Intelligence Centre (FIC)

176.1.4 Investigating Directorate of the NPA (ID)

176.1.5 South African Revenue Service (SARS)

176.1.6 South African Reserve Bank (SARB); and

176.1.7 Special Investigating Unit.

176.2 Second, it is necessary to use the anti-money laundering resources of the banks in a more proactive manner than is currently the case. The South African Anti-Money Laundering Integrated Task Force (SAMLIT) has been set up under the auspices of the FIC to enable banks to share with each other and with the authorities anonymized information and to discuss general trends. However, the absence of a statutory framework providing for the controlled sharing of detailed anti-money laundering information by banks appears remain an obstacle to fighting financial crime.

176.3 Third, there is a need to investigate the effectiveness of the current system of suspicious transaction and cash threshold reporting to the FIC under the FIC Act. If banks are failing to make the necessary reports to the FIC, the FIC needs to take action against them, but if Banks are making the necessary reports to the FIC but no action is being taken against the money laundering networks, that suggests either a flaw in the current system or its implementation by the FIC and downstream enforcement agencies. In this context, the Commission recommends that the FIC should conduct an urgent review of:

176.3.1 The compliance of the South African banks with the FIC Act in relation to proceeds of state capture laundered through accounts held by them, identifying whether, and to what extent, the FIC was alerted to these activities by reports under the FIC Act

176.3.2 What action was taken by the FIC pursuant to any relevant reports received from South African banks in this regard

176.3.3 What reports or recommendations were made by the FIC to other law enforcement agencies; and

176.3.4 What steps, if any, were taken by those enforcement agencies to act on the recommendations of the FIC.

THE ACQUISITION OF THE OPTIMUM COAL MINE

INTRODUCTION

1. The acquisition of Optimum Coal Holdings Ltd (OCH) by Tegeta Exploration and Resources (Pty) Ltd (Tegeta) is part of what triggered the establishment of this Commission. That acquisition was the central focus of the Public Protector's investigation that culminated in her October 2016 "State of Capture" Report.
2. The investigations of the Commission have borne out the findings of the Public Protector in relation to the acquisition of OCH and have shown that this acquisition was a State Capture project pursued through unlawful means and funded almost entirely by proceeds of crime.

THE OWNERSHIP OF TEGETA

3. The ownership structure of Tegeta at the time of the acquisition was follows:
   3.1 29.05% was owned by the Gupta family company Oakbay Investments (Pty) Ltd.
   3.2 28.53% was owned by Mabengela Investments (Pty) Ltd in which:
      3.2.1 Mr Duduzane Zuma held a 45% interest
      3.2.2 Mr Rajesh "Tony" Gupta held a 25% interest
      3.2.3 Aerohaven Trading, a company wholly owned by Ms Ronica Ragavan, held a 15% interest
      3.2.4 The Gupta family UAE-based company Fidelity Enterprise Limited held a 10% interest; and
      3.2.5 Mr Ashu Chawla and other Gupta Enterprise employees held an aggregate 5% interest.
   3.3 21.5% was owned by Elgasolve (Pty) Ltd in which Mr Salim Essa held a 31.29% interest and Mabengela Investments (Pty) Ltd. held a 68.71% interest
   3.4 12.91% was held by the Gupta family UAE-based company Fidelity Enterprise Ltd.; and
   3.5 8.01% was held by the Gupta family UAE-based company Accurate Investments Ltd.
4. So, the ultimate beneficial ownership of Tegeta was the following:
   4.1 65.13% was owned directly or indirectly by Gupta family members and their companies
   4.2 19.49% was indirectly owned by Mr Duduzane Zuma
   4.3 6.73% was indirectly owned by Mr Salim Essa
   4.4 6.49% was indirectly owned by Ms Ronica Ragavan; and 4.5 2.16% was indirectly owned by Mr Ashu Chawla and other Gupta enterprise employees.

THE CRIMINAL PROJECT TO ACQUIRE OCH

5. The criminal project to acquire OCH is described in the Eskom chapter of this report. It involved the following steps, all of which appear to have been performed under the improper influence of the Gupta family and / or Mr Salim Essa:
   5.1 In March 2015 four senior Eskom executives including the Group CEO of Eskom, Mr Tshediso Matona, were suspended.
   5.2 In April 2015, Mr Brian Molefe was seconded from Transnet to Eskom in April 2015 as Acting Group CEO.
   5.3 Mr Molefe immediately set about scuppering advanced settlement negotiations between Eskom and Glencore over a penalties claim by Eskom against OCH.
   5.4 In July 2015 the suspension of Mr Matshela Koko was lifted.
   5.5 Also in July 2015 Eskom demanded immediate payment from OCH of a R2.17 billion penalty claim, despite the fact that its own attorneys had questioned the merits and quantification of this claim.
   5.6 In September 2015 Mr Molefe and Eskom Board Chairperson, Dr Ben Ngubane, unsuccessfully attempted to persuade the then Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr Ngoako Ramatlhodi, to suspend all mining licences of Glencore.
   5.7 On 22 September 2015, President Zuma replaced Mr Ramathlodi as Minister of Mineral Resources with a long term friend of the Gupta family, Mr Mosebenzi Zwane.

5.8 In October 2015, Mr Brian Molefe scuppered the sale of OCH to Phembani Group (Pty) Ltd by insisting that Eskom would not consent to the transaction unless Phembani assumed responsibility for the full R2.15 billion penalty claim made by Eskom (a claim that would drop to R255 million after Tegeta had acquired control of OCH).

5.9 On 4 November 2015, Mr Koko leaked to Mr Essa's infoportal1@zoho.com address, legal advice given to Eskom that it could not remove the business rescue practitioners of OCH.

5.10 On 12 November 2015 Oakbay / Tegeta concluded a non-binding term sheet with the OCH business rescue practitioners for the sale of the OCH shares.

5.11 Later, in November 2015, the Department of Mineral Resources (DMR) and Mr Koko intervened to insist that the sale should relate not only to OCH but to all the subsidiaries of OCH which included Koornfontein Mine (Pty) Ltd and Optimum Coal Terminal (Pty) Ltd which held the lucrative coal export allocation at Richard Bay Coal Terminal.

5.12 On 22 November 2015, Eskom Board member, Mr Mark Pamensky, advised Mr Atul Gupta that Oakbay should ensure that a condition precedent for the OCH acquisition sale should be Eskom's withdrawal of the R2.17 billion penalty claim and his invitation to Mr Atul Gupta to involve him in the OCH acquisition.

5.13 On 25 November 2015, Mr Koko leaked to Mr Essa's infoportal1@zoho.com address, a confidential internal Eskom document setting out its investments in cost plus mines.

5.14 After Glencore rejected a R1 billion offer from Oakbay for OCH on 25 November 2016, the DMR issued a series of spurious notices under section 54 of the Mine Health and Safety Act 29 of 1996 to shut down operations at several Glencore owned mines between 26 and 30 November 2015.

5.15 Gupta family associates, Mr Kuben Moodley and Mr Malcolm Mabaso, attempted to direct the inspections that gave rise to the section 54 notices.

5.16 After Glencore decided on 29 November 2015 to fund OCH so as to take it out of business rescue, Minister Zwane met Mr Glasenberg of Glencore on 1 December 2015 in Zurich, urged Glencore to sell the Optimum mine to the Guptas and informed him that Mr Rajesh "Tony" Gupta wanted to meet Mr Glasenberg the following day in Zurich.

5.17 Mr Zwane's attended the meeting of Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Essa with Glencore in Zurich on 2 December 2015.

5.18 Mr Zwane accompanied Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Essa when they flew back from the Zurich meeting to India in the Gupta family jet.

5.19 Mr Zwane then flew with Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Essa to Dubai from India in the Gupta family jet and the Guptas paid for a chauffeured BMW for Mr Zwane in Dubai on 7 December 2015.

5.20 On 7 December 2015, the DMR addressed a letter to Eskom promising to fast track the transfer of mining rights application in relation to the Optimum transaction and making the unsolicited suggestion that Eskom should pre-pay Tegeta / Oakbay for a year's supply of coal.

5.21 On 7 December 2017, Mr Koko and Mr Singh prepared a motivation for Eskom to prepay Tegeta R1.68 billion for coal to be acquired from the Optimum mine.

5.22 A draft of the motivation was provided to Mr Essa, who sent instructions to Mr Eric Wood of Regiments to remove all references to the need for National Treasury approval for the prepayment as required under the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 (PFMA).

5.23 The final motivation that served before the Board to support a round robin resolution made no reference to Treasury approval under the PFMA.

5.24 The motivation inexplicably sought approval for a pre-payment, not to OCH which would be supplying the coal to Eskom but rather to Tegeta, which was not yet the owner of OCH but which was attempting to acquire it from Glencore. The motivation was transparently designed to benefit not Eskom, but Tegeta that would have to come up with a R2.1 billion purchase price if it was to acquire the mine.

5.25 To this end, the motivation contained several fraudulent misrepresentations designed to secure the pre-payment for the benefit of Tegeta:

5.25.1 It referred to a "potential proposal from the business rescue practitioner" for the prepayment when no such proposal had ever been contemplated by the business rescue practitioners

5.25.2 It invoked a risk of coal supply to the Hendrina power station when no such risk existed because OCH and Glencore had committed to honouring the Coal Supply Agreement and Eskom had concluded an interim arrangement with the business rescue practitioners that secured Eskom's coal supply to Hendrina until the end of July 2016. In fact, Hendrina appeared to be oversupplied because in January 2016, Eskom informed the business rescue practitioners that it did not require the minimum contracted supply of coal from OCH

5.25.3 It suggested an urgent need for prepayment (and hence the need for a special Board meeting by round robin resolution) when no apparent urgency was present for the reasons set out in the preceding paragraph; and

5.25.4 It invoked the spectre of liquidation and job losses at OCH when Glencore had already committed to Eskom that it would fund OCH and honour the terms of the coal supply agreement.

5.26 When some board members raised queries in relation to the motivation, Mr Singh forwarded those queries to Mr Wood, Mr Mohammed Bobat of Regiments, Mr Nazeem Howa of Oakbay and Mr Essa and then sent their responses to the board members as his own.

5.27 Despite the fact that the pre-payment was in the interests only of Tegeta, and not Eskom, it was unanimously adopted by the Board on 9 December 2015.

5.28 On 10 December 2015 the business rescue practitioners signed the Optimum sale agreement ("the Optimum agreement"). On the same day, Mr Essa emailed Mr Koko setting out the terms of a pre-purchase agreement he wanted Eskom to conclude with Tegeta and which would provide for a guarantee to be procured by Eskom in favour of Tegeta for the full pre-purchase amount.

5.29 Mr Koko forwarded the email to Ms Daniels, the Eskom legal advisor, and she instructed Eskom's attorneys, CDH, to draft a pre-purchase of coal agreement on the terms set out in Mr Essa's email. When the draft agreement was returned by CDH, Mr Singh forwarded it to Mr Wood who forwarded it on to Mr Essa.

5.30 The Board resolution made no provision of any guarantee and was predicated on an urgent need for the coal supply to Hendrina to be supplied immediately. Nevertheless, Mr Singh proceeded to conclude the guarantee agreement (which was not authorised by the Board) and which included suspensive conditions that could be fulfilled as late as 31 March 2016 thus negating the ostensibly acute urgency upon which the Board resolution had been predicated.

5.31 The purpose of the guarantee seems now to be clear. The guarantee was shown by the Guptas to the Bank of Baroda to persuade the Bank of Baroda to issue a letter of comfort for the consortium of banks to whom the purchase price under the Optimum agreement was to be paid, confirming that the Bank of Baroda would make payment of the Optimum acquisition purchase price of R2.15 billion.

5.32 On 18 December 2015, the Bank of Baroda issued the letter of comfort that Tegeta required and this served to persuade the consortium of banks to consent to the Optimum agreement.

5.33 Pursuant to the Optimum agreement, Eskom released OCH from its guarantee of the liabilities of OCH under the coal supply agreement, thus freeing Glencore from its exposure to the R2.17 billion penalty claim of Eskom. Although the Optimum agreement required Tegeta to provide a substitute guarantee for the obligations of OCH to Eskom, Eskom never required Tegeta to furnish such a guarantee.

5.34 By early April 2016, it was clear that Tegeta was R600 million short of the R2.15 billion purchase price it had to pay the consortium of banks by 14 April 2016 barring which the Optimum sale would fail.

5.35 After Glencore and the consortium of banks refused to assist Tegeta to come up with the R600 million shortfall, under the Optimum sale agreement, Tegeta contrived to procure the shortfall from Eskom by means of an immediate pre-payment of R659 million for coal sourced from Optimum, ostensibly to avert a potential coal supply crisis at the Arnot power station.

5.36 A Board Tender Committee was scheduled for 21h00 on 11 April 2016. At 20h17 the members of the committee were emailed a motivation prepared by Mr Koko for the prepayment.

5.37 Mr Koko's motivation was predicated on a central fraud – there was no shortage of coal for the Arnot power station in April 2016. In fact, the Arnot power station had healthy stock levels of coal until September 2016. Moreover, even if Arnot was in need of coal, the obvious way for Eskom to address that problem would have been to take up its full contractual entitlement from the Optimum Coal Mine (which was adjacent to the Arnot power station) under the Hendrina coal supply agreement rather than declining to do so and instead pre-paying Tegeta for coal that it would source directly from Optimum.

5.38 None of the Board Tender Committee members interrogated the alleged urgency that required them to consider a pre-payment of R659 million at an extraordinary meeting called for 21h00 on the strength of a motivation that had been emailed to them less than an hour before the meeting. Instead they duly authorised the pre-payment without demur and thereafter appear to have contrived to submit emailed questions to allow falsified minutes to be prepared to give the impression that they had interrogated the reasons for the prepayment prior to approving the resolution.

5.39 On 13 April 2016, Mr Singh belatedly disclosed to the Board Tender Committee that there was doubt whether Tegeta was able to continue as a going concern because of the refusal of the banking sector to provide Tegeta with banking facilities. With full knowledge of the insecure status of Tegeta, the Committee nevertheless proceeded to implement the pre-payment decision – thus extending R659 million credit to a company that may not be able to continue as a going concern.

5.40 The prepayment agreement was signed by Mr Singh and Mr Koko on 13 April 2016. By this stage, Eskom had already accepted a Tegeta invoice for the prepayment on 12 April 2016.

5.41 The payment was then rushed through on 13 April 2016 under pressure from Mr Molefe and Mr Singh.

6. Quite apart from the fact that the acquisition of the OCH was itself a criminal project, the funds used in this acquisition were, for the most part, proceeds of crime.

7. On 14 April 2016, Tegeta paid the amount of R2 084 210 as its share of the purchase price under the Optimum sale agreement.

8. Tegeta obtained the money to pay this purchase price from seven sources which are set out in the table reproduced from Holden's report below:

Date	Amount	Source
13/04/2016	660,000,000.00	Eskom pre-payment
13/04/2016	68,000,000.00	Eskom payment to Tegeta
13/04/2016	158,500,000.00	Oakbay "loan" to Tegeta
14/04/2014	104,500,000.00	Albatime "loan" to Tegeta
14/04/2016	152,000,000.00	Trillian "loan" to Tegeta
14/04/2016	842,231,000.00	Centaur Mining "loan" to Tegeta
	100,479,206.10	Residual funds in Tegeta's Bank of Baroda account derived from multiple sources
TOTAL	2,085,710,206.10

9. It can be concluded that at least R1,758,942,861.16 of the R2,084,210,206.10 used to purchase Optimum derived from criminally sourced funds. These are all of the funds identified in the above table other than the R68 million Eskom payment, the Oakbay loan and the residual funds in Tegeta's Bank of Baroda account.

10. The Eskom prepayment of R660 million has been discussed above.

11. The R104 500 000.00 Albatime loan was sourced in two unlawful payments to Albatime (Pty) Ltd (Albatime):

    11.1 A payment of R42 000 000.00 from Regiments Capital. This was part of R56 179 779 stolen from the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund (TSDBF) on 4 December 2015.

    11.2 A payment of R74 784 000.00 from Trillian Asset Management. This was part of R93 400 000 fee unlawfully paid by Transnet pursuant to the so called Club Loan on which Trillian did not work whatsoever.

    11.3 Holden shows that from these two sources, Albatime transferred R110 000 000.00 into a fixed deposit account at the Bank of Baroda on 14 April 2016.

    11.4 This Albatime fixed deposit was then made available as security against which the Bank of Baroda advanced a loan of R104 500 000.00 to Tegeta on the same day.

12. Trillian contributed R152 000 000.00 to Tegeta's acquisition of Optimum. The funds for this loan are directly traceable to funds that Regiments Fund Manager stole from the TSDBF in the following tranches:

    12.1 R63 916 019.00 on 8 March 2016

    12.2 R1 093 115.00 on 9 March 2016

    12.3 R67 403 305.00 on 5 April 2016; and

    12.4 R39 851 767.00 on 11 April 2016.

13. Once stolen from the TSDBF, the funds moved from Regiments to Trillian group companies and into the Trillian Management Consulting account with the Bank of Baroda.

14. On 14 April 2016, Trillian Management Consulting transferred R160 246 000.00 of these funds, and interest thereon into a fixed deposit account with the Bank of Baroda. That fixed deposit was then made available as security against which the Bank of Baroda advanced a loan of R104 500 000.00 to Tegeta on the same day.

15. Centaur Mining contributed R842 231 000.00 towards the purchase of Optimum. It obtained the funds from back-to-back loan facilities. The modus operandi was as follows:

    15.1 Centaur Ventures Limited (CVL) is the parent company of Centaur Mining. CVL is a Bermuda-based joint venture between Mr Daniel McGowan's Centaur Group Limited and Mr Akash Gargh, the bridegroom at the Gupta Sun City Wedding.

15.2 Griffin Line was a Gupta family company in Dubai, nominally controlled by Mr Kamal Singhala, the son of Mr Ajay Gupta. It was set up between 12 October 2015 and 19 December 2015 in a process in which Mr Tony Gupta and Ms Ronica Ragavan played a central role.

15.3 Holden shows that Griffin Line was a recipient of laundered proceeds of crime relating to Gupta Enterprise contracts within South Africa.

15.4 Griffin Line provided CVL with a $100 million loan facility on which CVL drew down aggregate amounts of $48 801 642.39 between 16 February 2016 and 22 March 2016.

15.5 CVL used the drawdowns on the Griffin Line loan to fund the bulk of R885 449 000 aggregate payments that it made to Centaur Mining between 26 February and 1 April 2016.

15.6 From these payments and interest thereon, Centaur Mining transferred R886 559 781.00 into a fixed deposit with the Bank of Baroda on 12 April 2016.

15.7 On 14 April 2016, Bank of Baroda advanced a loan of R842 231 000 to Tegeta against security of the Centaur Mining Fixed Deposit.

BENEFICIARIES

16. If the interests of the ultimate beneficial owners of Tegeta are applied to the aggregate amount of R1,758,942,861.16 of the R2,084,210,206.10 Optimum purchase price derived from criminally sourced funds we see the following:

16.1 The 65.13% beneficial interest of Gupta family members and their companies equates to a benefit of R1 145 527 852.53 from criminally sourced funds

16.2 The 19.49% beneficial interest of Duduzane Zuma equates to a benefit of R342 750 991.89 from criminally sourced funds

16.3 The 6.73% beneficial interest of Salim Essa equates to a benefit of R118 330 242.57 from criminally sourced funds

16.4 The 6.49% beneficial interest of Ronica Ragavan equates to a benefit of R114 250 330.63 from criminally sourced funds; and

16.5 The 2.16% beneficial interest of Ashu Chawla and other Gupta enterprise employees equates to a benefit of R38 083 443.54 from criminally sourced funds.

17. The persons who benefited from the acquisition of OCH by Tegeta as shown above benefited from the proceeds of crime. They include:

17.1 Members of the Gupta family and their companies, who received R1 145 527 852, 53

17.2 Mr Duduzane Zuma, who received R342 750 991, 89

17.3 Mr Salim Essa, who received R118 330 242, 57

17.4 Ms Ronica Ragavan, who received R114 250 330, 63; and 17.5 Mr Ashu Chawla and other Gupta enterprise employees, who received R38 083 443, 54.

RECOMMENDATION

18. Section 2 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act (POCA) makes it a criminal offence to receive proceeds of crime. It reads:

> 2. Offences
> (1) Any person who-

(a) Retains or receives any property derived, directly or indirectly from a pattern of racketeering activity ... within the Republic or elsewhere, shall be guilty of an offence.

19. There are reasonable grounds to believe that the persons referred to above, including Mr Duduzane Zuma, Mr Salim Essa, Ms Ronica Ragavan, Mr Ashu Chawla and members of the Gupta family, may be guilty of contravening section 2 of POCA. In the circumstances it is recommended that law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigation as may be necessary with a view to the possible criminal prosecution of the said persons by the NPA.

SUMMARY OF THE COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS

SOUTH AFRICAN AIRWAYS AND ITS ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

1. Below are the recommendations made by this Commission regarding South African Airways (SAA) and its associated companies.
2. The Commission's Terms of Reference required it to establish the extent to which state capture, corruption and fraud was prevalent in the public sector. In particular, the Terms of Reference required the Commission to investigate, make findings and report on whether public officials or functionaries had unlawfully awarded tenders to benefit any family, individual or corporate entity (paragraph 1.4 of the Terms of Reference). The Terms of Reference also required the Commission to determine whether any officials or functionaries within the various SOEs had benefitted personally from acts of corruption (paragraph 1.9 of the Terms of Reference).
3. These key aspects of the mandate of the Commission guided the investigation undertaken into the affairs of SAA, its subsidiary SAAT, as well as SA Express.
4. The investigation endeavoured to uncover not only what had happened within these entities but also why and how it happened. The investigation therefore had a broad compass because it was motivated by a desire to understand the weakness within the public sector that makes it vulnerable to state capture, corruption and fraud.
5. As the findings set out above show, SAA declined during the tenure of Ms Myeni to an entity racked by corruption and fraud. Despite this, she was retained as its Chairperson well beyond the point at which she should have been removed. Two successive Finance Ministers have explained to the Commission that this was because of the personal preferences of former President Zuma. This is the antithesis of accountability. President Zuma fled the Commission because he knew there were questions that would be put to him which he would not have been able to answer. He could not have justified his insistence that Ms Myeni be retained at SAA nor could he have credibly denied Mr Gordhan's and Mr Nene's evidence that he wanted Ms Myeni retained at SAA.
6. The appointment of individuals to boards of SOEs should be justifiable based on their skills expertise, experience and knowledge.
7. Functionaries within SOEs should be held to the highest standards of accountability because they use public funds to manage the businesses they oversee.
8. Those responsible for governance at SAA, SAAT and SA Express displayed a wanton disregard for these standards. Rather than acting in the entities' best interests, they were motivated by their own personal interest. This should never be allowed to occur again. In particular, the Commission makes the following recommendations for action following this report.

Mr X's evidence

9. The Secretary of the Commission has already laid a criminal complaint against Ms Myeni for her disclosure of Mr X's identity during her testimony. This matter needs to be brought to finality by the law enforcement agencies and the National Prosecuting Authority.

10. The evidence of Mr X also merits further detailed investigation and possible charges of corruption being laid against all the individuals involved in the scheme to securing millions of Rands for the personal benefit of Ms Myeni and the Jacob Zuma Foundation.

Pembroke transaction

11. Ms Myeni knowingly misrepresented to the Minister of Public Enterprises that the Board of SAA had taken two decisions when it had not. Those misrepresentations caused financial losses to SAA. It is likely that her conduct constitutes the crime of fraud. The Commission recommends that the National Prosecuting Authority considers, subject to such further investigation as may be considered necessary, whether Ms Myeni should be prosecuted for fraud.

LSG SkyChefs

12. Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana displayed a wanton disregard for the best interests of SAA in their decision-making on the lounge catering contract. They acted in gross disregard of their fiduciary duties to SAA when they took this decision. However, they both ceased being directors of SAA more than 24 months ago. Accordingly, the shareholder is not now in a position to bring proceedings to have them declared delinquent directors under section 162 of the Companies Act.

13. This time bar may be amended by Parliament in order to permit applications to be brought even after two years, on good cause shown. This will mean that in cases such as this one, where the true extent of the Board members' breaches of duty are only uncovered a number of years later, steps can still be taken by the executive to ensure that such directors are declared delinquent and are thereby prevented from serving on the boards of companies in the future.

Swissport

14. SAA's conclusion of a five-year ground handling contract took place a month after Swissport had concluded a service level agreement with JM Aviation in terms of which JM Aviation was paid R28.5 million. That money, according to Mr Daluxolo Peter, was then used to pay millions of Rands to those who had assisted in "facilitating" the finalisation of the SAA / Swissport contract. The people who received payments from that amount of R28.5 million were:

    14.1 Mr Daluxolo Peter

    14.2 Mr Vuyisile Ndzeku

    14.3 Mr Lester Peter; and

    14.4 Adv Nontsasa Memela.

15. These payments were therefore likely to have been kick-back payments to those who had secured the conclusion of the Swissport ground handling contract with SAA or were to be involved in its implementation. The Commission recommends that the law enforcement agencies should further investigate the role of Swissport in these dealings and where warranted, the National Prosecuting Authority should consider the prosecution of all those involved in criminal acts.

16. JM Aviation appears not to have paid VAT to SARS on the R28.5 million it received from Swissport prior to the ground handling contract being concluded with SAA. It is recommended that SARS should consider this matter further and take such steps as it may be advised to take.

AAR / JM Aviation components tender

17. The award of the components tender for five years to the Joint Venture of AAR and JM Aviation was unlawful, irregular and unfair.

18. AAR and JM Aviation were favoured during the process by the SAAT Head of Procurement, Adv Nontsasa Memela and its Board.

19. The then Head of Procurement, Adv Nontsasa Memela, and the Chairperson of the Board of SAAT, Ms Yakhe Kwinana, received payments from JM Aviation around the time that these decisions were taken.

20. The payments were likely kick-back payments to these officials. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority should seriously consider prosecuting the JM Aviation directors, the members of the Board of SAAT at the time, and Ms Memela for corruption or related crimes. It should also consider engaging with the United States Department of Justice regarding the role played by AAR in this scheme.

The concealment

21. The Commission's investigations revealed that Mr Ndzeku, Ms Memela, and Ms Mbanjwa, conspired to try to hide the true nature of the payments made by JM Aviation to Adv Nontsasa Memela through Ms Mbanjwa and that Mr Ndzeku and Ms Kwinana tried to hide the payments made by or on behalf of JM Aviation or Mr Ndzeku to Ms Kwinana's company.

22. They did so by fabricating agreements in order to ensure that they appeared as though they were arms-length transactions unrelated to the decision-making that took place in SAAT at the time. This conduct probably constitutes fraud. The Commission recommends that the National Prosecuting Authority seriously considers to prosecute them after such investigation as the National Prosecuting Authority may decide should be conducted.

23. In addition, both Ms Memela and Ms Mbanjwa are officers of the court. Ms Memela is an advocate and Ms Mbanjwa, an attorney. Despite this, they have participated in a fraudulent scheme to try to hide money that was paid as a kick-back to Ms Memela. It is recommended that the Legal Practice Council should investigate whether the two should not be removed from the roll of attorneys, in the case Ms Mbanjwa, and, from the roll of advocates, in the case of Ms Memela.

24. Furthermore, Ms Mbanjwa continued to act on behalf of Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana in circumstances where she was personally implicated in their impugned conduct. At times, Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana implicated each other. There is a clear apparent conflict of interest in Ms Mbanjwa's representation of either of them in these proceedings, and a conflict in representing both of them. Ms Mbanjwa's independence and objectivity would have been compromised by her personal involvement. The personal involvement of a lawyer in a case in which she acts as a legal representative has been found by the courts to be an undesirable practice. Her conduct in this regard should also receive the attention of the Legal Practice Council.

State security matters

25. It is recommended that the President should take note of the involvement of the State Security Agency in security vetting and take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that services of the State Security Agency are not abused in the future to serve the interests or agenda of certain individuals.

External service providers

26. The ACSA interest swap contracts with Nedbank and Standard Bank were procured through the corrupt involvement of Regiments Capital, Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Wood and Mr Niven Pillay.

27. It is recommended that:

27.1 ACSA take steps to recover from Regiments Capital, Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Wood and Mr Niven Pillay and failing them, Nedbank and Standard Bank, the amounts paid to Regiments Capital under the interest swap contracts and any additional losses suffered by ACSA on those contracts

27.2 The law enforcement agencies investigate these contracts with a view to:

27.2.1 The National Prosecuting Authority prosecuting Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Wood, Mr Niven Pillay and Regiments Capital on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted

27.2.2 The Asset Forfeiture Unit of the National Prosecuting Authority recovering the amounts paid to Mr Ramosebudi by Regiments Capital under Chapter 5 or Chapter 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act, 121 of 1998

27.2.3 The Asset Forfeiture Unit of the National Prosecuting Authority recovering the amounts paid to Regiments Capital by Nedbank and Standard Bank Chapter 5 or Chapter 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act, 121 of 1998

27.2.4 The law enforcement agencies investigate the role of Mr Brickman, Mr Visnenza and Nedbank in relation to these contracts with a view to the National Prosecuting Authority prosecuting Mr Brickman, Mr Visnenza and / or Nedbank on charges under section 6(b)(ii) of the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted; and

27.2.5 The Asset Forfeiture Unit of the National Prosecuting Authority recovering Nedbank's profits under the interest swap contracts under Chapter 5 or Chapter 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act, 121 of 1998 unless Nedbank has a valid defence to such recovery claims.

28. The SAA Working Capital tender awarded to the McKinsey and Regiments Capital Consortium under Bid No RFP 085/13 was procured through the corrupt involvement of Regiments Capital, Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Wood and possibly also Mr Indheran Pillay and Mr Tewedros Gebreselasie. There is no evidence that McKinsey was aware of any of the corrupt conduct linked to the award of Bid No RFP 085/13 and McKinsey has already repaid in full, the amount that it received from SAA in connection with its appointment under this tender.

29. It is recommended that:

29.1 The law enforcement agencies investigate the award of Bid No RFP 085/13 with a view to:

29.1.1 The National Prosecuting Authority prosecuting Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Wood and Regiments Capital on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted

29.1.2 The NPA prosecuting Mr Indheran Pillay and Mr Tewedros Gebreselasie on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted

29.1.3 The Asset Forfeiture Unit of the NPA recovering from Mr Ramosebudi under Chapter 5 or Chapter 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act, 121 of 1998 the amount of R375 606 paid to Riskmaths Solutions (Pty) Ltd by Regiments Capital on 7 November 2013; and

29.2 The Asset Forfeiture Unit of the NPA recovering under Chapter 5 or Chapter 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act, 121 of 1998 the amount of R6 241 500 paid to Regiments Capital by McKinsey in relation to the SAA Working Capital contract.

Proceeds of unlawful activities

30. Where the evidence before the Commission has revealed possible acts of corruption and fraud and has recommended that prosecutions take place, steps should be taken by the relevant authorities urgently to seek to recover the proceeds of these unlawful activities.

PRECCA reporting obligations

31. In order for the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 (PRECCA) to have any prospect of assisting in the fight against corruption, those who were duty-bound to report corruption but failed to do so, should also be held accountable.

32. Section 34(2) of PRECCA makes it an offence for anyone who holds a position of authority within an entity and who knows or ought reasonably to have known that an act of corruption has been perpetrated, to fail to report the conduct.

33. In her position as interim CFO, Ms Nhantsi held a position of authority within SAA. She ought, therefore, to have reported the BNP transaction and her suspicions concerning the true motives of Ms Duduzile Cynthia Myeni and Mr Masotsha Mngadi in pushing the transaction forward. Her failure to do so may constitute a crime. The Commission therefore recommends that the law enforcement agencies including the NPA should give the matter further consideration with a view to her possible prosecution.

Auditors

34. The Auditor-General's office should be further capacitated so that it can audit all public entities. To the extent that that is not practicable, serious consideration should be given to private firms being appointed to audit SOEs only if they can demonstrate that they have the requisite skills and also the requisite understanding of their obligations to the public at large when they audit an SOE. There should be a sufficient appreciation that, not only are the financial statements of cardinal importance, but also the entity's PFMA obligations are of great significance.

35. The South African Institute of Charted Accountants should investigate whether Ms Kwinana has the requisite knowledge and appreciation of her obligations as a Chartered Accountant and whether she is suitable to continue to practise the profession of a Chartered Accountant. The Commission believes that the answers she gave to certain questions during her evidence revealed either that she has no clue about some of the basic obligations that she should know as a Charted Accountant or she knew those obligations but dishonestly pretended that she did not know them because it was convenient for her to do so. In either case SAICA should be interested in investigating the matter because either explanation may mean she is not fit and proper to practise the profession of a Chartered Accountant. Her auditing firm's tax returns should also be investigated by SARS because there may have been a significant understatement of revenue (to the value of approximately R40 million) in the 2016 financial year. It is recommended that SARS should conduct its investigation in this regard.

SA Express

36. The Commission's investigations into SA Express's dealings with the North West Department of Transport has revealed an elaborate scheme of corruption, designed to take money out of the state's coffers for the benefit of those with power and influence who orchestrated the scheme.

37. The Commission recommends that all of the government and state officials, as well as private individuals who were involved in this looting scheme, should be brought to justice. There are investigations currently underway in this matter; the case has been open since 2016. They should be brought to a swift conclusion.

38. Mr Natasen's conduct should form an important part of the authorities' further investigations of this matter. The Commission recommends that serious consideration be given by the National Prosecuting Authority to charging Mr Natasen with money laundering and the use of the proceeds of crime after such further investigation as the law enforcement agencies may conduct and if the further investigations reveals possible contravention of the relevant law ; that his conduct be reported to the SAICA and that the South African Revenue Services should investigate the numerous respects in which Neo Solutions appears not to have accurately and fairly reported its income to the authorities.

39. The Reserve Bank should also investigate whether Ms Viljoen's AMFS operation was, in fact, a cash in transit business that merely failed to comply with its FICA obligations, or rather operating as a bank without any lawful licence to do so. The current SAPS investigation should also be extended to interrogate the role of AMFS in more detail. The question that needs to be answered is whether AFMS was providing general money laundering facilities to those who wished to have their proceeds converted to cash without the necessary checks required from the formal banking system.

40. Where prosecutions have been recommended in this section, it is also recommended that the Asset Forfeiture Unit of the National Prosecuting Authority takes steps to recover under Chapter 5 or Chapter 6 of Prevention of Organised Crime Act 121 of 1998 any amounts that constitute the proceeds of unlawful activities or the instrumentality of an offence.

THE NEW AGE

41. Below are the recommendations made by the Commission regarding The New Age.

42. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should investigate a possible crime of corruption against Mr Tony Gupta on the basis of Mr Kona's evidence that he offered him initially R100 000 and later R500 000 in their meeting at Saxonwold on or about 29 October 2012.

43. These matters should therefore be handed over to law enforcement agencies for further investigation and, where warranted, prosecution.

44. In so far as Eskom is concerned, the Commission's limited time and resources did not make it possible to consider the position of every one of the 2015 Eskom Board members. All of the 2015 Eskom Board members received rule 3.3 notices related to the Eskom TNA evidence presented at the Commission.

45. Only three responded:

    45.1 Ms Klein provided the statement that she had previously submitted to Parliament's Public Enterprises Portfolio Committee. She indicated that she had not supported the round robin resolution to ratify the third TNA contract.

    45.2 Both Dr Pathmanathan Naidoo and Ms Devapushpum Naidoo also responded to the Commission. Ms Naidoo explained that she was influenced by the Ledwaba Mazwai report in deciding to ratify the contract. In his affidavit, Dr Naidoo indicated that he was influenced by the impact the TNA contract had for the company's interim results.

46. The remaining board members did not respond to their rule 3.3 notices.

47. The position of each of the new 2015 Board members of Eskom will therefore need to be investigated further before any charges could be brought against any of them individually.

48. Given Mr Brian Molefe's role in the conclusion of the contracts referred to above between Transnet and TNA, particularly his misrepresentation that some of those contracts were partnerships when they were sponsorships, it is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigation as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe by the National Prosecuting Authority for fraud and/or contravention of the PFMA.

49. Given Mr Collin Matjila's role in the conclusion of the contracts referred to above between Eskom and TNA, particularly his misrepresentation that one or more was a partnership or were partnerships when they were sponsorships, it is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigation as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Collin Matjila by the National Prosecuting Authority for fraud and/or contravention of the PFMA.

SOUTH AFRICAN REVENUE SERVICE

50. Below are the recommendations made by this Commission regarding the South African Revenue Service (SARS) and its associated companies.

51. It is recommended that:

    51.1 In the light of the facts pertaining to Bain's unlawful role in SARS, all Bain's contracts with state departments and organs of state be re-examined for compliance with the relevant statutory and constitutional provisions

    51.2 Law enforcement agencies conduct such investigations as may be necessary with a view to enabling the National Prosecuting Authority to decide whether or not to initiate prosecutions in connection with the award of the Bain & Co contracts

    51.3 The SARS Act of 1997 as amended be amended to provide for an open, transparent and competitive process for the appointment of Commissioner of SARS; and 51.4 Mr T Moyane be charged with perjury in relation to his false evidence to Parliament.

PUBLIC PROCUREMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA

52. The Commission makes the following recommendations for consideration by the President.

Recommendation 1: The National Charter against Corruption

53. The Government, in consultation with the business sector, should prepare and publish a National Charter against corruption in public procurement, such Charter to include a Code of Conduct setting out the ethical standards which apply in the procurement of goods and services for the public.

54. The National Charter should be signed by or on behalf of:

    54.1 The President and the Cabinet

    54.2 The Provincial Premiers and members of the Provincial Cabinets

    54.3 The local authorities

    54.4 All State-Owned enterprises

    54.5 The political parties represented in Parliament

    54.6 Constitutional entities

    54.7 The institutional representatives of the business sector

    54.8 Listed public companies

    54.9 Trade unions; and

    54.10 Anti-corruption bodies in civil society.

55. Every procurement officer in the public service shall, on assuming duty, be required to sign a commitment to observe and uphold the terms of the National Charter.

56. Every natural or juristic person tendering or contracting to supply goods or services by way of public procurement should sign a like commitment to uphold and to adhere to the terms of the Charter and its Code of Conduct.

57. The contents of the National Charter and the Code of Conduct should be widely publicised.

58. The National Charter and Code of Conduct should be given legal status and effect by an Act of Parliament.

Recommendation 2: The establishment of an independent agency against corruption in public procurement

59. The Government should introduce legislation for the establishment of an independent Public Procurement Anti-Corruption Agency (PPACA).

60. Legislation should constitute the Agency:

    60.1 As an independent body subject only to the Constitution and the law

        60.1.1 Which has jurisdiction throughout the Republic

        60.1.2 Which is impartial and should perform its functions without fear, favour or prejudice; and

        60.1.3 Which is financed from:

            A. Money that is appropriated by Parliament for the Agency

            B. Fees payable to the Agency by all tenderers for public procurement contracts; and

            C. Money received from any other source.

61. Legislation should provide that the Agency comprises:

    61.1 The Council, consisting of five members:

        61.1.1 The chairperson, who shall be a senior legal practitioner with expertise in procurement matters; and

        61.1.2 Four members chosen for their special skills in accounting, finance and economics with expertise in public procurement matters one of whom shall be a member of the academic staff of a University who is a specialist in matters of public procurement.

62. The said members of the Council are to be selected by a panel consisting of the Chief Justice, the Auditor-General and the Minister of Finance following a public process, and include:

    62.1 An inspectorate

    62.2 A litigation unit

    62.3 A tribunal; and

    62.4 A Court.

63. The function of the Council is to:

    63.1 Initiate measures to protect procurement systems from corruption

    63.2 Issue guidelines for the betterment of procurement practice

    63.3 Prohibit any practice which facilitates corruption, fraud or undue influence in public procurement

    63.4 Formulate measures for the making of reports to the Agency by whistle blowers and for their protection and incentivisation

    63.5 Implement measures to increase the integrity and transparency of public procurement practices

    63.6 Negotiate agreements with any regulatory or oversight authority to co-ordinate and harmonise the exercise of jurisdiction over public procurement

    63.7 Participate in the proceedings of any regulatory or oversight authority and advise or receive advice from such authorities; and

    63.8 Issue regular reports for public and media attention, detailing the nature and extent of corruption, fraud and undue influence identified by the AACIPP.

64. The function of the Inspectorate is to:

    64.1 Monitor and inspect public procurement activity to detect and expose corruption

64.2 Establish, maintain and update a comprehensive and secure data base recording and listing:

64.2.1 Every public procuring entity, together with its procurement procedures and the names and qualifications of the procurement officials employed

64.2.2 Information obtained from whistle blowers and complaints registered by tenderers

64.2.3 Reports and information provided by oversight authorities

64.2.4 Reports of disciplinary proceedings relating to procurement officials conducted by any governmental, SOE or constitutional entity; and

64.2.5 Any other information in respect of the aforegoing

64.3 Institute electronic procedures to facilitate the monitoring and inspection of public procurement activity

64.4 Undertake in situ inspections, where necessary without notice, of public procurement activity by the procuring entities

64.5 Review the procurement systems utilised by the procuring entities to ensure the adequacy of in-built protections against corruption

64.6 Issue mandatory compliance notices requiring the prompt implementation of remedial measures by a procuring entity to address deficiencies or irregularities detected in any procurement system or in respect of any tender or the award of any contract calling upon the affected entity to take immediate steps to rectify same

64.7 Refer all instances of non-compliance with such notices to the Litigation Unit for further action

64.8 Promptly investigate any information received concerning fraud or corruption in the grant of tenders or contracts and take active steps to protect informants against intimidation or revenge

64.9 Investigate any circumstances suggesting the giving of a bribe or other gratification for the award of a tender or contract including the making of donations to political parties in connection with the award of tenders; and

64.10 Investigate all complaints concerning corruption made by tenderers or other informants and refer matters arising from such investigations to the Tribunal.

65. The function of the Litigation Unit is to:

65.1 Apply to the Tribunal for the giving of authority to the Inspectorate to exercise powers of search and seizure against any juristic or natural person including any political party in connection with any investigation into corruption, fraud or undue influence connected to public procurement

65.2 Receive and negotiate Deferred Prosecution Agreements and refer such Agreements to the Tribunal for approval

65.3 Seek remedial action from the Tribunal where Notices of Compliance issued by the Inspectorate have not been rectified

65.4 Institute proceedings before the Court for the recoupment of monies stolen from, or damages suffered by the State as a consequence of corruption, fraud or undue influence in the procurement process

65.5 Apply to the Tribunal for an order debarring any person from participating in any tender process or the grant of any procurement contract either permanently or for a stipulated time and either conditionally or unconditionally; and

65.6 Apply to the Tribunal for an order striking any procurement official from the roll of professional procurement officers either permanently or for a stated period and whether conditionally or unconditionally.

66. The function of the Tribunal is to:

66.1 Grant or refuse warrants of search and seizure of documents to the Inspectorate at the request of the Litigation Unit

66.2 Review and approve either with or without conditions any DPA or to reject same

66.3 Make any order requiring any procuring entity or other recipient of a compliance notice to comply forthwith or subject to such qualifications as the Tribunal may impose

66.4 Issue, where appropriate, an order interdicting any procurement entity from conducting any procurement activity until it has properly complied with any order issued by the Tribunal; and

66.5 Issue an order debarring any natural or legal person found guilty of corruption, fraud or exercising undue influence from again participating in any tender or receiving the grant of any procurement contract either for a period of time or permanently.

67. The function of the Court is to:

67.1 Determine civil actions instituted by the Litigation Unit for recompense to the State in respect of losses suffered through corrupt acts; and 67.2 Act as a Court of Appeal in respect of decisions of the Tribunal.

Recommendation 3: Protection for whistle blowers

68. The Government should introduce legislation or amend existing legislation:

68.1 To ensure that any person disclosing information to reveal corruption, fraud or undue influence in public procurement activity be accorded the protections stipulated in article 32(2) of the United Nations Convention Against Corruption

68.2 Identifying the Inspectorate of the Agency as the correct channel for the making of such disclosure

68.3 Authorising the Litigation Unit of the Agency to incentivise such disclosures by entering into agreements to reward the giving of such information by way of a percentage of the proceeds recovered on the strength of such information; and

68.4 Authorising the offer of immunity from criminal or civil proceedings if there has been an honest disclosure of the information which might otherwise render the informant liable to prosecution or litigation.

Recommendation 4: Deferred prosecution agreements

69. The government should introduce legislation for the introduction of deferred prosecution agreements by which the prosecution of an accused corporation can be deferred on certain terms and conditions:

69.1 Where a company has self-reported facts from which criminal liability could be inferred and has co-operated fully in making such report

69.2 Where the company has agreed to engage in specific conduct intended to ensure that such conduct is not repeated

69.3 Where the company has paid a fine

69.3.1 Or been subject to other remedial action; or

69.4 Where the terms and conditions of the agreement have been sanctioned by the Tribunal of the Agency.

Recommendation 5: The creation of a procurement officer's profession

70. It is recommended that consideration be given to enacting legislation that will establish a professional body to which all officials who work in the area of public procurement should belong.

71. Such professional body will fix the qualifications and the necessary training and experience necessary for membership of the profession.

72. Such training and qualifications should include high standards of integrity and a commitment to resist mismanagement, waste and corruption.

73. The procurement system in every procuring entity should be managed by a duly qualified public procurement official who is a member in good standing in the profession.

74. The Tribunal of the Agency should act as the disciplinary committee of the profession with power to strike a member from the Roll or to impose such other disciplinary sanction as the case may require.

Recommendation 6: The enhancement of transparency

75. The Commission recommends that set standards of transparency consistent with the OECD principles for integrity in public procurement be formulated by National Treasury for compulsory inclusion in every procurement system adopted by a public procurement entity.

Recommendation 7: Protection for accounting officers / authorities acting in good faith

76. It is recommended that the legislation dealing with the duties and responsibilities of Accounting Officers/Authorities be amended to insert a provision which reads:

> No person is criminally or civilly liable for anything done in good faith in the exercise or performance or purported exercise or performance of any power or duty in terms of this Act unless such person acts negligently.

Recommendation 8: Suggested amendment to the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004

77. In order to strengthen the duty of private sector entities to put in place measures against bribery it is recommended that PRECCA be amended by the introduction of a section 34A reading as follows:

> 34A Failure of persons or entities to prevent bribery
> (1) Any member of the private sector or any incorporated state-owned entity ('A') is guilty of an offence under this section if a person ('B') associated with A gives or agrees or offers to give any gratification prohibited under Chapter 2 to another person ('C') intending -
> > (a) To obtain or retain business for A; or
> > (b) To obtain or retain an advantage in the conduct of business for A, save that no offence shall be committed where A had in place adequate procedures designed to prevent persons associated with A from giving, agreeing or offering to give any gratification prohibited under Chapter 2.
> (2) For the purposes of section 34A(1), a person ('B') is associated with A if (disregarding any gratification under consideration) B is a person who performs services for or on behalf of A. The capacity in which B performs services for or on behalf of A does not matter.

Recommendation 9: Suggested amendment to the Political Party Funding Act 6 of 2018

78. It is recommended that the Act be amended to criminalise the making of donations to political parties in the expectation of or with a view to the grant of procurement tenders or contracts as a reward for or in the recognition of such grants having been made.

Recommendation 10

79. It is recommended that consideration be given to the enactment of legislation for:

    79.1 The greater centralisation of public procurement in certain aspects

    79.2 The better harmonisation of the legislation applying to public procurement

    79.3 The better guidance of public procurement officials in applying the legislation governing public procurement

    79.4 The better training of public procurement officials; and

    79.5 The discontinuance of any deviation based on the concept of a sole source service provider.

TRANSNET

Recommendations in relation to the kickbacks and laundering of the proceeds of unlawful activities

80. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution here or abroad of Mr Essa and his various companies (Regiments Asia, Tequesta, JJ Trading FZE and Century General Trading FZE) and the relevant functionaries of CSR Zhuzhou Electric Locomotives Co, CNR and CRRC on charges of corruption as contemplated in any law, including Chapter 2 of PRECCA, and the racketeering offences and the offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activities contemplated in Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA, in relation to the various contracts (including BDSAs and exclusive agency agreements) concluded between 2012 and 2016 that led to the payment of at least R7.34 billion in kickbacks to companies controlled by Mr Essa and the Gupta enterprise.

81. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with the view to the possible prosecution of Regiments Capital (Pty) Ltd, Mr Wood, Mr Essa (and any company under his control), Mr Moodley (and any company under his control) and Mr Singh, as well as any persons associated with them in illegal conduct, on charges of fraud, corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA, and the racketeering offences and the offences related to the proceeds of unlawful activities contemplated in Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA in relation to the alleged arrangement and agreement whereby it was agreed to appoint Regiments as an SDP on Transnet contracts in exchange for Regiments paying 30-50% of its fees to Mr Essa and/or his associated companies and 5% of its fees to Mr Moodley and/or his associated companies amounting to more than R1 billion for little or no consideration.

Recommendations in relation to the receipt of gratification by individuals

82. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Gigaba, Mr Gama, Mr Pita and Mr Jiyane on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to cash payments allegedly received by them during visits to the Gupta compound in Saxonwold in the period 2010-2018.

83. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Singh on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA in relation to cash payments that were allegedly made to them at the Three Rivers Lodge, Vereeniging in July 2014 by two unidentified Chinese men.

84. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Singh on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA in relation to his Dubai travel expenses during the period between April 2014 and June 2015, which were allegedly paid for by Sahara Computers.

Recommendations in relation to the unjustifiable reinstatement of Mr Gama

85. It is recommended that steps should be taken by Transnet in terms of section 77 of the Companies Act 71 of 2008 to recover from those members of the board who supported the unjustifiable settlement agreement between Transnet and Mr Gama concluded on 23 February 2011, the amount of approximately R17 million paid to and for the benefit of Mr Gama pursuant to the agreement.

86. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary to determine whether the crime of fraud was committed by any person in relation to the payment of R1 399 307.11 on 16 April 2015 by Transnet to Langa Attorneys (in respect of costs allegedly owed to Mr Gama).

87. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary, with a view to the possible prosecution on a charge of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, and/or a racketeering charge in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA, to determine whether the reinstatement of Mr Gama as CEO of TFR at the instance of Mr Zuma, Mr Gigaba and Mr Mkwanazi constituted an improper inducement to Mr Gama to do anything, thus amounting to corruption.

Recommendation in relation to the settlement agreement with GNS / Abalozi

88. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary to determine whether Mr Brian Molefe acted wilfully or grossly negligently in contravention of sections 50 or 51 of the PFMA with a view to his prosecution on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA in relation to his agreement on 16 January 2016 to pay GNS/Abalozi an unjustifiable payment of R20 million.

Recommendations in relation to the procurement of the 95 locomotives

89. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Gama on a charge of contravening section 50(1)(a) of the PFMA and/or on an offence relating to the proceeds of unlawful activities and/or racketeering as contemplated in Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA in relation to their decision to recommend to the board the change in the evaluation criteria in the procurement of the 95 locomotives so as to favour CSR as a bidder for the tender.

90. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary to determine if the board (the accounting authority) of Transnet wilfully or grossly negligently contravened section 51(1)(b)(i) of the PFMA by failing to recover delay penalties allegedly due to Transnet in terms of the LSA concluded between Transnet and CSR in 2012 in respect of the procurement of the 95 electric locomotives.

Recommendations in relation to the procurement of the 100 locomotives

91. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Jiyane and Mr Gama on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA of wilfully or grossly negligently contravening section 50 or 51 of the PFMA by presenting misleading information and failing to disclose material information to the board of Transnet in January 2014 regarding the acquisition of 100 electric locomotives from CSR by means of confinement.

92. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be required with a view to the possible prosecution of any official of Transnet in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA in respect of the authorisation of advance payments of approximately R3 billion to CSR in the period between March 2014 and November 2014 with no security in the form of advance payment guarantees being in place.

93. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of any member of the board or any official of Transnet on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA of wilfully or grossly negligently contravening section 50 or 51 of the PFMA by agreeing to or condoning an unjustifiable price increase in the amount of R740 million in relation to the procurement of 100 electric locomotives from CSR.

Recommendations in relation to the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives

94. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be required with a view to the possible prosecution of any official of Transnet on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA by wilfully or grossly negligently contravening section 51 of the PFMA by wrongfully deviating from the evaluation criteria of the instruction note of National Treasury of 16 July 2012 and the provisions of regulations 5 and 6 of the PPPFA regulations in relation to the evaluation of the bids for the 1,064 locomotives.

95. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Gama for fraud and on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA of contravening section 50(1)(b) of the PFMA by misrepresenting to the board of Transnet in April 2013 and May 2014 that the ETC of R38.6 billion for the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives excluded provision for forex and escalations when it in fact did so in the amount of R5.892 billion.

96. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Singh on a charge of fraud by misrepresenting to the Minister of Public Enterprises in an email of 31 March 2014 that the ETC of R38.6 billion approved by the Minister in August 2013 excluded provision for the impacts of foreign exchange and escalations when it in fact included provision for such costs in the amount of R5.892 billion.

97. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of any official or employee or former employee of Transnet on a charge of fraud or in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA in wrongfully adjusting the prices of the bid of CSR by an irregular adjustment for the TE scope and by an inappropriate reduction of CNR's Best and Final Offer ("BAFO") price in the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives so as to favour them and with the result that their bids succeeded when they should not have.

98. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Singh and Mr Jiyane on a charge of fraud or in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA by wrongfully agreeing to increase the price of the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives by including an unjustifiable provision of R2.7 billion for batch pricing when there was no contractual obligation to do so.

99. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of any member of the negotiations team that conducted the post tender negotiations on behalf of Transnet in relation to the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives on charges of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, or in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA for wilfully or grossly negligently contravening section 50(1)(b) of the PFMA, by acting corruptly or not acting in the best interests of Transnet in managing its financial affairs by agreeing to the payment of excessive advance payments to CSR and CNR and not complying with the local content requirements of the RFPs of the tender in relation to this transaction.

100. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Singh on a charge of fraud by misrepresenting to the board of Transnet that the 1,064 locomotive project was Net Present Value ("NPV") positive and profitable by applying an inappropriate hurdle rate of 15.2% when the project may in fact have had a negative NPV.

101. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of any member of the board or any official of Transnet on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA of wilfully or in a grossly negligent way contravening sections 50 or 51 of the PFMA by agreeing to or condoning an unjustifiable price increase in the amount of R9.124 billion in relation to the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives from the relevant OEMs.

102. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of the majority directors of CNRRSSA, BEX, Mr Shaw, Integrated Capital Management, Confident Concepts and any other associated persons and companies on a charge of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA, and the racketeering offences and the offences related to the proceeds of unlawful activities contemplated in Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA in relation to the payment of approximately R76.59 million made by CNRRSSA to BEX on 25 September 2015.

103. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gama, Mr Nair and the members of the negotiations team that represented Transnet in the negotiations with CNRRSSA and Bombardier concerning the relocation of the manufacturing and assembly lines to Durban in 2014-2015 on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA for contravening section 50(1)(b) of the PFMA by failing to act in the best interests of Transnet in managing its financial affairs by negotiating and agreeing to variation orders in the total amount of approximately R1.2 billion, when there may in fact have been no proper basis for agreeing to the payment of that amount.

Recommendations in relation to the financial advisors

104. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Wood, Regiments and any other person associated with them in illegal conduct on charges of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, racketeering and offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activity in terms of Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA, and in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA (where appropriate) for contravening section 50(1)(b) of the PFMA by acting corruptly and receiving and laundering an amount of R79.23 million paid by Transnet to Regiments on 30 April 2014.

105. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gama on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA for contravening section 51(h) of the PFMA by concluding a contract in 2017 with Nkonki valued at R500 million in contravention of paragraph 9 of National Treasury Practice Note 3 of 2016 thereby not complying with legislation applicable to Transnet.

106. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Singh on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA of contravening section 51(1)(b)(iii) of the PFMA in that on 27 August 2014 he breached his duty to prevent expenditure not complying with the operational policies of Transnet by recommending to the board a proposal made by Regiments that was not in line with Transnet's policy regarding the fixed-floating debt ratio.

107. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Singh on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA of contravening section 50(1)(b) of the PFMA by not acting in the best interests of Transnet by recommending to the board the conclusion of a loan of USD1.5 billion on 4 June 2015 at a price substantially above the market norm.

108. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gama, Mr Singh, Regiments, Mr Wood, Mr Moodley, Albatime and Sahara Computers on charges of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, racketeering and offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activity in terms of Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA and (where appropriate) in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA in relation to the payment by Transnet to Regiments on 11 June 2015 of an amount of R189.24 million and the on payment of R147.6 million of that amount to Albatime and Sahara Computers by Regiments.

109. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gama, Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Pita, Mr Wood, Mr Essa, Trillian and Albatime on charges of fraud, corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, racketeering and offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activities in terms of Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA in relation to the payment by Transnet to Trillian on 4 December 2015 of an amount of R93.48 million and the on payment of R74.78 million of that amount to Albatime.

110. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Ramosebudi and Mr Wood on a charge of corruption in terms of sections 12 and 13 of PRECCA and racketeering offences in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to his soliciting or offering to accept a gratification from Mr Wood, Trillian or Mr Nyhonyha on 12 September 2015 in the form of a discount or reduction of the price payable for a Range Rover Sport motor vehicle from Land Rover Waterford for his benefit as an inducement to award a contract appointing Trillian for a fee of R93.4 million to replace JP Morgan as the lead arranger of the ZAR12 billion club loan.

111. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Pita, Regiments Capital (Pty) Ltd, Regiments Fund Managers (Pty) Ltd, Mr Wood, Mr Shane and any other persons associated with them in illegal activity on charges of fraud, corruption or in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, racketeering and the offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activity under Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA, or where appropriate in terms of section 86(2) read with section 50(1)(b) of the PFMA, in relation to the realised losses of more than R1.5 billion caused to Transnet and the fees paid to Regiments Fund Managers in the amount of R229 million in respect of various interest rate swaps, cross-currency swaps and credit default swaps executed by Regiments on behalf of Transnet in the period between 2015 and 2019.

Recommendations in relation to the MEP

112. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Reddy and Mr Padayachee with corruption as contemplated in section 3, section 12(1) or section 13 of PRECCA in their offering in July 2013 to accept a gratification (in the form of an appointment as an SDP) from Hatch as an inducement for influencing officials at Transnet to award Hatch the tender in relation to phase 1 of the Manganese Expansion Project ("MEP").

113. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Essa and Mr Singh on charges of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA and racketeering offences in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in demanding or soliciting in early 2014 a gratification (an SDP appointment for a company favoured by Mr Essa) for the benefit of Mr Essa's company and himself and as an inducement (by influencing officials at Transnet) to award the tender in relation to a contract for performing work and providing services on phase 2 of the MEP to Hatch.

Recommendations in relation to the IT contracts

114. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Khan, Homix, Neotel and Mr Van der Merwe on charges of corruption in terms of section 13 of PRECCA and on racketeering and offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activity in terms of Chapter 2 and 3 of POCA in relation to the offering by Mr Khan to accept 10% commission, in the amount of approximately R34 million, from Neotel as an inducement to influence officials at Transnet to award a tender to Neotel for supplying equipment to Transnet from Cisco and in relation to the on payment of such funds to the laundering vehicles of the Gupta enterprise.

115. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Neotel, Mr Joshi, Mr Van der Merwe, Mr Khan, Homix and any other person associated with them in illegal activity on charges of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA, racketeering offences in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA and offences relating to the proceeds of unlawful activity in terms of Chapter 3 of POCA, in relation to the payment by Neotel of R41.04 million to Homix and the promise by Neotel to pay R25 million to Homix in the period between December 2014 and February 2015 supposedly for services rendered in relation to the MSA and asset buyback agreement concluded between Neotel and Transnet in December 2014.

116. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Shane and Mr Nagdee on a charge in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA for contravening section 50 of the PFMA by acting prejudicially to Transnet's financial interests in a meeting of the BADC on 13 February 2017 by unjustifiably favouring the bid of T-Systems on spurious grounds.

DENEL

117. The evidence heard by the Commission with regard to Denel is that at some stage this was a state owned entity that was highly regarded internationally. Yet now it is an entity that is almost on its knees. The question that arises is: how did this come about and why was it allowed to happen? It is quite clear that a very important reason relates to the quality of leadership or lack thereof that is given to these SOEs. By Minister Lynn Brown's own admission, the 2011-2015 Board of Directors performed its duties very well. She even said that their performance had placed Denel in a position which was "music" in her ears. By her own admission that Board had achieved 88% of its targets in the 2014/2015 financial year. That, by any standard was excellent performance. The Board only served one term and it could have been asked to serve another term. It was not. The question that arises is: why did Minister Brown not ask it to?

118. During the period 2011 to 2015 it was not only the Board that was performing excellently at Denel but also the Group CEO, Mr Riaz Saloojee. Early in 2014 the then Chairperson of the Board of Directors, Mr Z Kunene, had written to Mr Saloojee extending his term of appointment and had said in the letter that one of the reasons the Board was extending his term was that he had shown exceptional performance and leadership as Group CEO of Denel. Yet, the 2015 Board made sure that one of the first decisions it made was to suspend the Group CEO with the Group Chief Financial Officer and the Company Secretary. Consequently, from the second half of the new Board's first year in office and the whole of their second year Denel was without these exceptional performers, namely the 2011 Board and the Group CEO. The result in the year that followed tells it all. In media reports Denel is now associated with liquidation and business rescue.

119. The appointment of members of Boards of Directors and of Chief Executive Officers for state owned entities is a matter of serious concern. The evidence heard by the Commission in regard to not just Denel but also certain other state-owned entities has revealed that the Executive very often failed to appoint the right kind of people these positions in SOEs. In regard to Denel, Minister Brown appointed as Chair of the Board an attorney who had previously been struck off the roll of attorneys for a long lists of acts of misconduct. In SAA, as is reflected in Volume 1, Part 1 of this Commission's Report, the Executive appointed Ms Dudu Myeni who went on to do serious damage to the national airline. In Transnet the Executive appointed Mr Mafika Mkwanazi and certain other Board members in December 2010 who went on to enter into the strangest settlement agreement in regard to a dismissal dispute that has ever been seen which was very prejudicial to the interests of Transet and they reinstated Mr Gama as CEO of TFR in circumstances that even Mr Mkwanazi conceded made their decision indefensible. Also at Transnet the Executive appointed both Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Siyabonga Gama to the position of Group CEO one after the other and they caused serious damage to Transnet.

120. It was also the Executive who appointed Dr Ben Ngubane as Chairperson of the Eskom Board of Directors after Mr Zola Tsotsi had effectively been expelled by that Board and he went on to allow not only himself but also his Board to be dictated to by the Guptas or their associates what resolutions it should pass and, of course, he and his Board caused serious damage to Eskom. Even though this does not relate to an SOE, it is, of course, also true that it was the Executive who appointed Mr Tom Moyane as Commissioner of SARS and he went on to cause untold damage to SARS, an organisation that was once the envy of other similar organisation internationally.

121. When regard is had to all of the above, it is quite clear that the appointment of members of Boards of Directors of SOEs as well as senior executives such as Chief Executive Officers and Chief Financial Officers can no longer be left solely in the hands of politicians because in the main they have failed dismally to give these SOEs members of Boards and Chief Executive Officers and Chief Financial Officers who have integrity and who have what it would take to lead these institutions successfully. They are all going down one by one and, quite often, they depend on bail outs.

122. It is therefore necessary that a body be established which will be tasked with the identification, recruitment and selection of the right kind of people who will be considered for appointment as members of Boards of SOEs and those who will be appointed as Chief Executive Officers and Chief Financial Officers at these SOEs.

123. It would be completely unacceptable to allow this situation to continue as before without any change in how members of Boards of SOEs and Chief Executive Officers and Chief Financial Officers are appointed. However, the actual recommendation of the body that will be recommended to play a key role in this regard will be dealt with in Part III of the Commission's Report when other SOEs which have not so far been covered in Part I and Part II of the Report will have been covered.

124. On the evidence heard by the Commission the 2015 Board of Directors of Denel that was led by Mr L D Mantsha failed to carry out its fiduciary duties in suspending the three executives, in failing to ensure that a disciplinary inquiry was or inquiries were held within a reasonable time, in failing to agree to reasonable proposals made by the suspended executives which were aimed at and would have ensured that the allegations against the executives were tested expeditiously and the matter was resolved without undue delays and in making the payments that the Board made to the Executives to get them to leave Denel. In this regard it is recommended that law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to possible prosecutions of members of the Board of Directors of Denel appointed in 2015 who supported the decisions taken by the Board in regard to the Executives for possible contravention of Section 51 and 51 of the Public Finance and Management Act 1 of 1999.

125. Mr Mantsha and the other directors who supported his campaign against the three executives have prima facie shown themselves unfit to be directors of a company. Section 162 of the Companies Act prescribes that certain specified persons and bodies may apply to court for an order declaring a director or former director delinquent or under probation, amongst other situations where the director or former director grossly abused the position of director, intentional or by gross negligence inflicted harm to a company of its subsidiary. The court on making a declaration of delinquency may make a range of consequential orders, including orders precluding such a person from exercising the office of a director or imposing conditions on the exercise of such an office.

126. However, all the persons and institutions entitled to apply for such orders should do so at the latest within 24 months after the director ceases to hold office as a director. The measure does not necessarily count this period from the time the director left the company where he misconducted himself. It is sufficient if the allegedly errant person was a director within 24 months of the institution of proceedings,

127. Denel itself, the DPE and the Companies and Intellectual Property Commission established by s 185 of the Companies Act would all have standing to consider bringing appropriate proceedings against Mr Mantsha and other erstwhile members of the 2015 Denel board shown to have abetted Mr Mantsha in his efforts to capture Denel for the Guptas. It is therefore recommended that they all be asked by the Government to consider bringing such proceedings.

128. The Legal Practice Council should be made aware of the findings made by the Commission against Mr

Mantsha so that that body may conduct such investigation as it may consider necessary to establish whether Mr Mantsha is fit and proper to practise as an attorney.

129. The facts before the Commission have shown the inadequacy of punitive measures which currently form part of our law. Egregious violations of the Constitution have been demonstrated. Two forms of that abuse have been demonstrated by the evidence regarding Denel: the constitution of a board of directors for the purpose of achieving a result in direct conflict with the obligations imposed on directors by the Companies Act and other applicable legislation and measures; and the use of the suspension power in an administrative context for improper purposes. The methods by which unscrupulous persons can abuse public power are legion and abuses of public power pervade our public life. The present case merely demonstrates two of the potential violations of the duties attendant on public power which can arise.

130. Abuse of public power per se is not a criminal offence and, as has been shown in the present case, egregious abuses of public power tend not to be identified by legal processes until the perpetrators or those that protect them are out of power and then the assessment of the relevant facts will be a cumbersome, time consuming exercise, requiring as it does procedural fairness towards those accused of such abuse.

131. It is therefore recommended that the Government give consideration to the creation of a statutory offence rendering it a criminal offence for any person vested with public power to abuse public power vested in that person by intentionally using that power otherwise than in good faith for a proper purpose. Such potential violations might range from the case of a president of the Republic who hands a large portion of the national wealth, or access to that wealth, to an unauthorised recipient to the junior official who suspends a colleague out of motives of envy or revenge.

132. Such a statutory offence would therefore require considerable sentencing powers and might provide as follows in the operative section of the statute creating the offence:

133. Any person who exercises or purports to exercise any public power, including any such power vested in such person by the Constitution, national or provincial legislation, any regulation made pursuant to national or provincial legislation or by municipal bylaw, otherwise than in good faith and for the purpose for which such power was conferred, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine of up to R200 million or imprisonment for up to 20 years or to both such fine and imprisonment.

134. The Hulls contract, the Denel Land Services ("DLS") Single Source Contract and the DVS Single Source Contract (Land Systems South Africa (Pty) Ltd was renamed DVS) that Denel awarded to VR Laser were all irregularly awarded in breach of section 217 of the Constitution. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should conduct such investigations as may be necessary to establish whether the provisions of sections 38, 50 or 51 of the PFMA were contravened.

135. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigations as may be necessary to determine whether those members of the Board of Directors of Denel who supported the suspensions of the three executives and failed to agree to the executives' proposal for an expedited process to test the allegations against them and failed to convene a disciplinary inquiry against the three executives and supported the decisions to pay out the large amounts that were paid out to the three executives did not act in breach of section 50(1)(a), (2) – and section 51 of the PFMA with a view to their possible criminal prosecution.

BOSASA

136. The evidence establishes a prima facie case of money laundering in terms of section 4 of POCA against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

136.1 Mr Angelo Agrizzi

136.2 Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder

136.3 Mr Carlos Bonifacio

136.4 Mr Jacques van Zyl

136.5 Mr Riaan Hoeksma

136.6 Mr Gregg Lacon-Allin; and

136.7 The entities AA Wholesalers, Riekele Konstruksie, Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers, Lamozest, Equal Trade 4 and Equal Food Traders.

137. The evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption in terms of section 3 of PRECCA against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

137.1 Mr Angelo Agrizzi

137.2 Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder

137.3 Mr Jacques van Zyl

137.4 Mr Johannes Gumede

137.5 Mr Papa Leshabane

137.6 Mr Thandi Makoko

137.7 Mr Leon van Tonder

137.8 Mr Richard le Roux

137.9 Mr Petrus Venter

137.10 Mr William Daniel Mansell

137.11 Mr Sesinyi Seopela

137.12 Mr Linda Mti

137.13 Mr Frans Vorster

137.14 Mr Carlos Bonifacio; and

137.15 Mr Riaan Hoeksma.

138. The evidence establishes a prima facie case of fraud against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

138.1 Mr Angelo Agrizzi

138.2 Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder

138.3 Mr Carlos Bonifacio

138.4 Mr Jacques van Zyl

138.5 Mr Greg Lacon-Allin; and

138.6 Mr Riaan Hoeksma.

139. The evidence establishes that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of money laundering, corruption and/or fraud against the following persons and the matter is accordingly referred for further investigation:

139.1 Ms Carien Daubert

139.2 Ms Rieka Hundermark

139.3 Mr Gavin Hundermark

139.4 Mr Cedric Frolick

139.5 Mr Patrick Littler

139.6 Mr Danie van Tonder

139.7 Mr Ishmael Dikane

139.8 Mr Syvion Dlamini

139.9 Mr Trevor Mathenjwa; and

139.10 Mr Ryno Roode.

140. This should not, however, be taken as a finding by the Commission against any persons that did not receive rule 3.3 notices.

141. The evidence establishes a prima facie case of the failure to report suspicious or unusual transactions, in contravention of section 52 of FICA, against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

141.1 Mr Angelo Agrizzi

141.2 Mr Andries Johannes van Tonder

141.3 Mr Carlos Bonifacio

141.4 Mr Jacques van Zyl

141.5 Ms Carien Daubert

141.6 Ms Rieka Hundermark

141.7 Mr Gavin Hundermark

141.8 Mr Johannes Gumede

141.9 Mr Papa Leshabane; and

141.10 Ms Thandi Makoko.

142. The evidence establishes a prima facie case of assisting another to benefit from the proceeds of unlawful activities, in contravention of section 5 of POCA, against Mr Gregory Lawrence, in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution.

143. The evidence establishes that Mr Petrus Venter was aware of the illegal transactions taking place at Bosasa and failed to report them. Further investigations should take place for a failure to comply with section 34 of PRECCA and other relevant legislative requirements. The matter is referred to the SAPS for this purpose. The matter is also referred to SARS and the SA Institute of Tax Practitioners ("SAIT") for further investigation.

144. The evidence establishes prima facie instances of various tax offences. These matters are referred to SARS for further investigation in conjunction with relevant law enforcement agencies.

145. Messrs Agrizzi, van Tonder and Bonifacio are facing pending charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud. The matter is nonetheless referred to the SAPS, the DPCI and the Investigating Directorate, to ascertain whether those charges cover all instances of corruption revealed in the evidence before the Commission and, if not, for the charges to be expanded accordingly.

146. The matter of forms of inducement or gain being paid to persons in the NPA for Bosasa to have been able to gain possession of confidential documentation is referred for further investigation.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.4

Introduction

147. The questions raised by TOR 1.4 are:

    147.1 Whether any of the identified public office bearers facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in the governmental or SOE sectors

    147.2 Whether they thereby breached the Constitution, any relevant ethical code or legislation; and 147.3 If so, whether they did so in order to benefit any family, individual or corporate entity doing business with government or any organ of state.

148. The range of potential facilitators in respect of whom the question is asked, includes the President, members of the National Executive, including deputy ministers, public officials, and employees of SOEs.

149. The focus thus moves from those seeking to influence, discussed in relation to TOR 1.1, to those subject to the attempts at influence. The question raised is, in effect, whether the targets of the attempts responded by facilitating the unlawful award of tenders in the governmental or SOE sectors, for their own or another person or family's benefit.

150. This term of reference is approached by assessing particular tender awards and then focussing on those implicated in facilitating them.

151. The analysis is best commenced with reference to the evidence of what took place in relation to the DCS tenders.

Contracts with the Department of Correctional Services

152. A supply management system should be fair, equitable, transparent and competitive. The system requires a department to conduct a needs assessment for the provision of goods or services and to prepare precise specifications for the services to be procured to ensure inter alia that value for money is achieved.

153. In the analysis that follows, the award of four contracts (and various renewals and an extension of these contracts) by the DCS to Bosasa and its affiliate companies is assessed for compliance with these requirements and in order to establish whether or not there was corrupt facilitation of the kind contemplated by TOR 1.4.

Mr Mti

154. Given that Mr Mti was implicated in the evidence of Messrs Agrizzi, le Roux, Vorster, van Tonder, Blake and Venter, he was issued with five notices in terms of rule 3.3 as detailed above. He was also issued with a regulation 10(6) directive. Mr Mti refused to comply with the directive, primarily because he stated that it infringed his right to remain silent and his right to a fair trial. Mr Mti's position and the Commission's response is set out above.

155. Mr Mti facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in breach of the Constitution and legislation in order to benefit himself, his family, Bosasa and its associates and the Watson family. Mr Mti's conduct thus falls squarely within that contemplated by TOR 1.4.

156. With reference to TOR 7, in addition to offences already referred to, there is a prima facie case against Mr Mti in respect of at least the following offences:

    156.1 The general offence of corruption in section 3 of PRECCA

    156.2 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to public officers in section 4 of PRECCA

    156.3 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to members of the prosecuting authority in section 9 of PRECCA

156.4 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to contracts in section 12 of PRECCA

156.5 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to procuring of tenders in section 13 of PRECCA; and

156.6 The common law offences of fraud, theft and perjury.

157. Mr Mti is already facing pending charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud. The matter is nonetheless referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution, to the extent that the existing charges do not cover any of the conduct on the part of Mr Mti set out in this report.

Mr Gillingham

158. Mr Gillingham was summonsed to appear before the Commission but failed to do so. For the reasons given above, an adverse inference may be drawn from his failure to rebut the evidence that was given against him.

159. In the absence of Mr Gillingham appearing before the Commission to dispute the evidence implicating him, there is undisputed evidence that Mr Gillingham breached the Constitution and legislation by facilitating the unlawful award of tenders by the DCS to benefit himself, his family, the Watson family, Bosasa and its associated business entities.

160. It is established that Mr Gillingham facilitated the unlawful award of tenders as contemplated by TOR 1.4.

161. Based on the evidence, Mr Gillingham breached the following obligations applicable to him as a senior official of the DCS:

161.1 Sections 217 and 195 of the Constitution

161.2 The duty to ensure that the system of financial management and internal control established for DCS is carried out within his area of responsibility as CFO

161.3 The responsibility for the effective, efficient, economical and transparent use of financial and other resources within his area of responsibility

161.4 The obligation to take effective and appropriate steps to prevent irregular expenditure; and 161.5 The obligation to comply with the provisions of the PFMA.

162. In addition to the constitutional and statutory breaches detailed above, the evidence reveals a prima facie case that Mr Gillingham facilitated the award of tenders to benefit himself and his family in contravention of section 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA.

163. Mr Gillingham facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in breach of the Constitution and legislation in order to benefit himself, his family, Bosasa and its associates and the Watson family. Mr Gillingham's conduct thus falls squarely within that contemplated by TOR 1.4.

164. With reference to TOR 7, in addition to offences already referred to, there is a prima facie case against Mr Mti in respect of at least the following offences:

164.1 The general offence of corruption in section 3 of PRECCA

164.2 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to public officers in section 4 of PRECCA

164.3 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to members of the prosecuting authority in section 9 of PRECCA

164.4 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to contracts in section 12 of PRECCA

164.5 Offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to procuring of tenders in section 13 of PRECCA; and

164.6 The common law offences of fraud, theft and perjury.

165. Mr Gillingham is already facing pending charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud. The matter is nonetheless referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution, to the extent that the existing charges do not cover any of the conduct on the part of Mr Gillingham set out in this report.

Other officials

Mr Cedric Frolick

166. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Frolick assisted Bosasa in resolving an impasse with Mr Smith who was, at the time, Chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services and was considered "anti-Bosasa". He testified that, in return for doing so, a payment was made to Mr Frolick at a meeting held with him and Mr Butana Komphela (then chair of the parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Sport) at the office park where Bosasa is situated, and that further monthly payments were made to Mr Frolick after that.

167. Taking all of this into account there are at least reasonable grounds for suspecting that Mr Frolick's conduct in assisting Bosasa in the respects set out above and in the summary of the evidence, was in return for payments corruptly made to him in contravention of section 3 and 7 of PRECCA. Section 7 of PRECCA deals with offences in respect of corrupt activities relating to members of the legislative authority as described in section 43 of the Constitution.

168. With reference to TOR 7, the matter is referred to the relevant investigative authorities on the basis that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of corruption in terms of sections 3 and 7 of PRECCA.

Ms Jolingana and other DCS officials

169. According to Mr Agrizzi, during the period from 2007 until approximately 2016 payments were made to the following DCS officials on a monthly basis: Mr Josiah Maako; Ms Maria Mabena; Mr Shishi Matabella; Mr Mandla Mkabela; Ms Dikeledi Tshabalala; Mr Zach Modise; and Mr Mollet Ngubo. These officials had been identified to look after Bosasa's DCS contracts and Ms Jolingana is said to have ensured the extension of the catering contract. All of the officials are recorded in the extracts from Mr Agrizzi's black book.

170. The payments to Ms Jolingana recorded in Mr Agrizzi's black book were quid pro quo for the extension of the catering contract. Such conduct is, in addition to the contraventions of the Treasury Regulations, prima facie in contravention of sections 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA for purposes of criminal liability. By receiving the corrupt payments, she benefitted herself and by facilitating the extension of the catering contract, she benefited Bosasa, its associates, and the Watson family. Her conduct falls squarely within TOR 1.4.

171. With reference to TOR 7 there is a prima facie case against Ms Jolingana of offences under PRECCA as listed above and the matter is referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution accordingly.

172. The remaining officials said to have received cash payments from Bosasa to ensure that they continued to "look after" its contracts with the DCS were issued with notices in terms of rule 3.3. Save for Mr Josiah Maako and Ms Dikeledi Tshabalala, no official has challenged the evidence against them. There is therefore undisputed evidence establishing that they facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in the DCS in return for corrupt payments, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

173. With reference to TOR 7 there is a prima facie case against these officials of offences under sections 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA and the matter is referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution accordingly.

174. In relation to Mr Maako and Ms Tshabalala, while they have, through an attorney's letter, denied the allegations against them, they have not made an application in terms of rule 3.4, nor denied the allegations under oath. They have failed adequately to dispute the truth of Mr Agrizzi's evidence. On that basis it may be accepted that they facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in the DCS in return for corrupt payments, as contemplated in TOR 1.4 and in prima facie contravention of sections 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA.

175. With reference to TOR 7, there is a prima facie case of offences under the said provisions of PRECCA, and the matter is referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution accordingly.

Ms Ngwenya

176. In Mr Bloem's evidence, he referred to a fellow Portfolio Committee member, Ms Ngwenya, having shown bias towards Bosasa during the deliberations of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services. According to Mr Bloem, Ms Ngwenya informed him that there was money involved in meeting with Bosasa.

177. For her and the other members of Parliament referred to above, given that they were holders of a public office, "public official" includes within its ambit a member of Parliament. Her conduct therefore falls squarely within TOR 1.4.

178. With reference to TOR 7, there is prima facie case of a contravention of sections 3 and 7 of PRECCA and the matter is referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution accordingly.

Mr Vincent Smith

179. Mr Smith deposed to an affidavit on 3 August 2020 and testified before the Commission on 4 September 2020. Mr Smith's evidence was in response to evidence given by Mr Agrizzi, Mr Richard le Roux and Mr Blake. Initially, in response to a 10(6) directive, Mr Smith had relied on his right to remain silent and right to a fair trial as a basis not to respond to the directive issued by the Commission compelling him to answer certain evidence against him. Despite assurances from the Commission, Mr Smith initially failed to place his version before the Commission in response to rule 3.3 notices dated 23 January, 28 March and 1 July 2020 (the latter was addressed to Mr Smith's daughter, Ms Brumilda Doreen Smith), as well as the 10(6) directive.

180. With reference to TOR 7, Mr Smith is already facing pending charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy to commit fraud. The matter is nonetheless referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution, to the extent that the existing charges do not cover any of the conduct on the part of Mr Smith set out in this report.

Mr Mnikelwa Nxele

181. The evidence before the Commission is that the Regional Commissioner of the DCS in KwaZulu Natal, Mr Mnikelwa Nxele, received a monthly payment in exchange for ensuring that undue pressure was placed on Mr Petersen, the then National Commissioner of Correctional Services, and the DCS to continue the DCS's association with Bosasa.

182. Mr Nxele's name is recorded in the extracts from Mr Agrizzi's black book. Mr Nxele was issued with a notice in terms of rule 3.3 on 24 January 2019. He did not make an application in terms of rule 3.4 for leave to cross-examine Mr Agrizzi or present evidence at the Commission. This evidence implicating him in corrupt activities and in failing to discharge his duties as an official of the DCS in good faith is therefore unchallenged. He benefitted personally. His conduct is in breach of section 195 and 217 of the Constitution, section 45 and 57 of the PFMA and thus falls within the ambit of TOR 1.4.

183. With reference to TOR 7, this conduct gives rise to a prima facie case of corruption in terms of sections 3 and 4 of PRECCA. The matter is referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution accordingly.

Contracts with the DoJ&CD

184. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was instructed by Mr Watson to make cash available to Mr Seopela for purposes of making payments to influential persons.

185. Mr Agrizzi testified that Sondolo IT was awarded the contract with the DoJ&CD for the installation of access control across courts nationally, that the award of this contract was irregular and that certain officials received payments as lobbying fees or bribes. However, save for Mr Thobane and Ms Nyambuse, no particulars were given as to the identity of these officials.

186. Mr Thobane and Ms Nyambuse were implicated in Mr Agrizzi's evidence as having received bribes. He testified that he had direct evidence of these payments. Ms Nyambuse and Mr Thobane's names appear in Mr Agrizzi's black book. Neither Mr Thobane nor Ms Nyambuse was issued with a rule 3.3 notice informing them that Mr Agrizzi's evidence implicated them. No adverse findings are therefore made against them. Nevertheless, if Mr Agrizzi's evidence is true, Mr Thobane and Ms Nyambuse should be arrested and charged with corruption. However, it is up to the investigating authorities as to whether they decide to take the matter further insofar as these officials are concerned and, among other things, seek to obtain their version on this evidence if they elect to provide it. Although no finding is made against Ms Nyambuse and Mr Thobane, there is no reason why the law enforcement agencies should not have regard to this report, investigate the matter further including by taking statements from the two and if, thereafter, the law enforcement agencies believe no further investigation is warranted, terminate the investigation but, if they believe a further investigation is warranted, continue with the investigation.

Contracts with the Department of Transport

187. The evidence presented before the Commission by Mr Agrizzi that payments were made to a certain "Mlungise" at the Department of Transport in order to secure the award of the contract for fleet management to Kgwerano, and to other officials in that Department to secure the extension of the contract, is dealt with above in discussing TOR 1.1.

188. From the perspective of TOR 1.4, there is a lack of evidence about the identity of the persons alleged to have received corrupt payments from either Mr Leshabane or Mr Seopela and therefore of persons responsible for facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders. Further investigation would be required to ascertain their identities. No referral is made in this regard. It is up to the investigating authorities to decide whether to take the matter further.

Contracts with the Department of Health in Mpumalanga Province

189. In the light of Ms Kgasi and Ms Mogale's failure to respond to rule 3.3 notices and their failure to make an application in terms of rule 3.4, the evidence before the Commission is such that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that their conduct fell within the ambit of TOR 1.4.

190. For purposes of TOR 7, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case. The matter is referred to the relevant authorities for investigation accordingly.

Members of the National Executive

Mr Thabang Makwetla

191. Mr le Roux testified that Bosasa provided former Deputy Minister for Correctional Services Mr Thabang Makwetla, with a security installation and maintenance services to the value of more than R308,754.25. The installation was on the instruction of Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi was not aware of the installation.

192. A rule 3.3 notice was issued to Deputy Minister Makwetla on 18 March 2019. Mr Makwetla testified before the Commission on 19 March and 5 July 2021.

193. In respect of the benefits conferred upon him by Bosasa he was in breach of his constitutional, legislative and ethical duties, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

194. Mr Makwetla was also under a duty not to solicit or accept a gift or benefit in return for any benefit given in an official capacity and a duty to seek permission to receive and to disclose a gift worth more than R1,000. Mr Makwetla failed to do so.

195. With reference to TOR 7, despite the fact that Mr Makwetla's conduct in discussing the rates in terms of the Bosasa contract with the accounting office of the Department was not explored further in the course of Mr Makwetla's evidence, the evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption in terms of sections 3 and 4 of PRECCA against him. The matter is accordingly referred to the relevant authorities for investigation and prosecution.

Mr Jacob Zuma

196. Mr Zuma is the most senior public office bearer that Bosasa is said to have attempted to influence. Conduct falling within the Commission's terms of reference involving Mr Zuma is said to have occurred during his tenure as President of the Republic of South Africa.

197. Mr Zuma was issued with a notice in terms of rule 3.3 on 30 January 2019. On 30 April 2019, Mr Zuma was invited to appear before the Commission from 15 to 19 July 2020. The purpose of this appearance was to address the evidence of witnesses who had implicated him and to answer questions from the Commission.

198. With reference to TOR 1.1, Bosasa and its leadership clearly provided inducements and gain to Mr Zuma, aimed at gaining influence over him. Accordingly, on the basis of the evidence presented in relation to Mr Zuma, there was also conduct falling within TOR 1.1.

199. With reference to TOR 7, and based on the foregoing analysis, there is sufficient evidence to establish that (i) Mr Zuma accepted gratification; (ii) from another person, i.e. Bosasa (or its directors or employees), (iii) which held and sought to obtain contracts with government.

200. With reference to the presumption in section 24(1) of PRECCA, the state can likely show that, despite having taken reasonable steps, it was not able to link the acceptance of the gratification by Mr Zuma, to any lawful authority or excuse for receiving the gratification. This is because Mr Zuma, failed to provide evidence to the contrary to show a lawful authority or excuse for receiving the gratification, either at all or at a level that could give rise to a reasonable doubt. Indeed, he did not testify at all.

201. Section 24(1) of PRECCA would likely deem there to be sufficient evidence to establish that Mr Zuma accepted the gratification from Bosasa and in doing so breached his Constitutional and legislative duties as well as ethical obligations in order to act in one or more of the "manners" in paragraphs (aa) to (dd) of the PRECCA, being the different statutorily recognised forms of quid pro quo.

202. The matter is referred to the appropriate authorities for further investigation on the basis that there is a reasonable prospect that such further investigation will uncover a prima facie case in terms of section 3 and/or 4 and/or 11 and/or 12 and/or 13 of PRECCA. Section 11 of PRECCA deals with corrupt activities relating to witnesses and evidential material during certain proceedings.

Ms Nomvula Mokonyane

203. The evidence pertaining to Ms Mokonyane should be considered both from the perspective of TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. Whilst the focus of:

    203.1 TOR 1.1 is on whether there were "attempts through any form of inducement or for any gain ... to influence" public office bearers in the identified categories; and

    203.2 TOR 1.4 is on whether there was facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders by the listed office bearers, evidence about the inducements is relevant to both TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. This is because the conferral of benefits on a public office bearer by a person or entity doing business with the State or SOEs, particularly when the benefits are substantial, leads ineluctably to the question of whether anything was expected in return. The question is relevant to Ms Mokonyane because of the fact that there was evidence of substantial benefits having been conferred on her, some of which are not in dispute. Taking this into account, the evidence pertaining to Ms Mokonyane is dealt with under the rubric of TOR 1.4, whilst at the same time enquiring whether there was conduct as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

204. Ms Mokonyane falls squarely within the lists of public office bearers in both TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. She served in various senior roles in the executive at national and provincial level – Premier of Gauteng, Minister of Water and Sanitation, Minister of Communications and Deputy Minister of Environmental Affairs.

Breaches

205. In her various positions in the executive, Ms Mokonyane was subject to the Constitution, her oath of office under the Constitution, the Executive Members Ethics Act, and the Executive Ethics Code referred to in Appendix 1.

206. In terms of section 96 of the Constitution, a member of Cabinet may not expose him/herself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between his/her official responsibilities and his/her private interests. Further, he/she should act in accordance with a code of ethics prescribed by national legislation, i.e. the Executive Members' Ethics Act and the Executive Ethics Code published in terms of section 2 of that Act.

207. In terms of the Executive Ethics Code, she was not permitted to:

    207.1 Use her position or any information entrusted to her, to enrich herself or improperly benefit any other person

    207.2 Expose herself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between her official responsibilities and her financial and/or personal interests; or 207.3 Solicit or accept a gift or benefit which 1. Was in return for any benefit received from her in her official capacity; 2. Constituted improper influence over her; or 3. Constituted an attempt to influence her in the performance of her duties.

208. In respect of all of the benefits conferred upon her by Bosasa she was in breach of her constitutional, legislative and ethical duties, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

209. The facilitation provided by Ms Mokonyane in relation to the dams report did not benefit Bosasa within the meaning of TOR 1.4. However, it did benefit Ms Mokonyane herself in that she continued to receive benefits from Bosasa and efforts such as this one would probably have given the impression that she was attempting to look after Bosasa's interests.

210. With reference to TOR 7, and based on the foregoing analysis, there is sufficient evidence to establish that 1. Ms Mokonyane accepted gratification; 2. From another person, i.e., Bosasa (or its directors or employees), 3. Which held and sought to obtain contracts with government.

211. With reference to the presumption in section 24(1) of PRECCA, the state can likely show that, despite having taken reasonable steps, it was not able to link the acceptance of the gratification by Ms Mokonyane, to any lawful authority or excuse for receiving the gratification. This is because Ms Mokonyane, failed to provide evidence to the contrary to show a lawful authority or excuse for receiving the gratification, either at all or at a level that could give rise to a reasonable doubt.

212. Section 24(1) of PRECCA would, in the Commission's view, deem there to be sufficient evidence to establish that Ms Mokonyane accepted the gratification from Bosasa and in doing so breached her Constitutional and legislative duties as well as ethical obligations in order to act in one or more of the "manners" in paragraphs (aa) to (dd) of the PRECCA, being the different statutorily recognised forms of quid pro quo.

213. The matter is referred to the appropriate authorities for further investigation and prosecution of Ms Mokonyane on charges of corruption in terms of section 3 and/or 4 and/or 11 and/or 12 and/or 13 of PRECCA.

Ms Dudu Myeni

214. The evidence pertaining to Ms Myeni is in certain respects also relevant to TOR 1.1. In this regard she is a director of the board of an SOE as contemplated in that TOR.

Analysis of the evidence: Facilitation

215. There is more than sufficient evidence to support a finding that Ms Myeni facilitated the meeting with President Zuma in relation to the oil and gas regulations. In fact, this has been established beyond reasonable doubt. The question, however, is whether that amounts to the facilitation of the unlawful award of a tender as contemplated in TOR 1.4. There is insufficient evidence to sustain such a finding. The incident serves rather as evidence of the influence that Ms Myeni was able to exert over President Zuma and of the closeness of her association with him.

216. Having regard to the foregoing, it is established, in respect of Ms Myeni, that there were attempts made through inducements and gain to influence both her, as Chairperson of the Jacob Zuma Foundation or as someone close to Mr Zuma and director of an SOE and, through her, Mr Zuma, as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

217. With reference to TOR 7, and based on the foregoing analysis, there is a prima facie case of corruption against Ms Myeni of corruption in terms section 3 and / or 4 and / or 9 and / or 11 and / or 12 and / or 13 of PRECCA.

218. The matter is accordingly referred to the appropriate authorities for further investigation and prosecution of Ms Myeni.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.5

Contracts with ACSA

219. With respect to TOR 7, the evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

    219.1 Mr Thele Lesetsa Moema, Mr Reuben Pillay and Mr Mohapi Johannes Serobe (employees or former employees of ACSA).

220. The evidence also establishes that there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case of corruption against Siza Thanda for the facilitation of the unlawful award of a contract or tender and the matter is referred for this purpose. In respect of the following persons (all employees of ACSA), it is up to the investigating authorities to decide whether or not to investigate the matter further (starting, if considered necessary, with obtaining statements from them about their side of the story if they agree to provide statements):

    220.1 Mr Bongi Mpungose

    220.2 Mr Jason Tshabalala; and 220.3 Mr Mohammed Bashir.

Contracts with SAPO

221. With respect to TOR 7, The evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption against the following persons in respect of whom the matter is referred for further investigation and prosecution:

    221.1 Mr Siviwe Luthando, Mr Bongani Mapisa and Mr Maanda Benjamin Manyatshe (employees or former employees of SAPO).

Conclusion and findings in relation to TOR 1.5

222. None of those persons implicated in the evidence in this section of the report who were issued with rule 3.3 notices responded to those notices. In the circumstances, the evidence in relation to them remains undisputed.

223. Although the evidence is based on the single witness testimony of Mr Agrizzi, it is corroborated in some instances by the recordal of names in Mr Agrizzi's black book. The evidence also implicates Mr Agrizzi in criminal activity and is to his detriment, and it is unlikely that he would lie to prejudice himself. His evidence is also supported by the video evidence pertaining to the vaults and the safes where cash was stored and packaged for purposes of corrupt payments.

224. The evidence establishes that there was corruption in the award of contracts or tenders to Bosasa by Schedule 2 SOEs. The undisputed evidence was that the ACSA contract was unlawfully awarded in 2001 and was believed still to be in effect in 2019. The evidence of corruption was both for the facilitation of the original contract and the various extensions of the contract.

225. Returning to the questions arising from TOR 1.5, the evidence establishes that:

    225.1 There was corruption in the awarding of tenders in two SOEs that Bosasa had dealings with, ACSA and SAPO; and

    225.2 The corruption involved the payment of unlawful gratification by way of ongoing monthly payments to various persons to ensure the grant and extension of the contracts to provide security services.

226. An assessment of the extent of the corruption should await further investigation of the persons that did not receive rule 3.3 notices. A total of five implicated employees have received rule 3.3 notices and have not responded.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.9

227. The questions arising from TOR 1.9 are:

    227.1 Whether there was corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by government departments, agencies and entities, and if so

        227.1.1 What the nature of the corruption was 227.1.2 What the extent of the corruption was; and 227.1.3 Whether the corruption involved office bearers in the listed categories seeking to benefit themselves, their family members or entities in which they held a personal interest.

228. The focus of the enquiry required by TOR 1.9 is on corruption in the award of tenders by government departments, agencies and entities, as distinct from the major public entities. It also focuses on whether the relevant office bearers sought to benefit themselves, their family members or entities in which they had an interest.

229. To a significant degree, the questions whether there was corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by government departments, agencies and entities and whether the corruption involved office-bearers seeking to benefit themselves, their family members, or entities in which they held a personal interest, have already been answered in the analysis with reference to other terms of reference, particularly TOR 1.1 and TOR 1.4. That already establishes the existence and very substantial extent of the phenomenon of corruption in relation to the awarding of contracts and tenders by government departments involving office bearers in the categories concerned.

230. The analysis in this section will therefore focus on the nature and the extent of the corruption.

231. The evidence reveals that that there was widespread corruption in the awarding of contracts and tenders to Bosasa and its associated business entities or organisations, by Government departments, SOEs, agencies and entities. Members of the National Executive, public officials and functionaries of various organs of state influenced the awarding of tenders to benefit themselves, their families or entities in which they held a personal interest.

232. Mr Agrizzi's evidence suggested that the aggregate value of contracts awarded to the Bosasa Group of Companies by various public departments and entities between 2000 and 2016 was at least R2,371,500,000.00. Mr Agrizzi estimated that approximately R75,700,000 was paid out in bribes. The breakdown of the various contracts within the Bosasa Group and an estimated value that was paid out in bribes annually, per contract, was provided earlier. These values do not include the value of houses built, fixtures and fittings as well as furnishings, motor vehicles purchased and travel expenses incurred. Mr Agrizzi's estimations should be treated with a measure of caution. However, even on that basis, there was systemic corruption on what is described above as an industrial scale in the forms contemplated in TOR 1.9. Corruption was central to Bosasa's business model.

233. Mr Agrizzi, along with other witnesses, testified and demonstrated that Bosasa (and the Watson family) established a reasonably well-organised network of well-placed, well-connected and powerful people whose loyalty was secured with financial and other material incentives and bribes. It was through this network that they were able to promote and protect the private interests of Bosasa by irregular procurement and practices to extract money from the state in very substantial amounts. In Mr Agrizzi's experience, every one of the contracts in which Bosasa was involved was tainted with bribes and corruption. Where contracts were not awarded as a result of corruption, corruption would creep in once they had been awarded, to ensure their retention and their extension or renewal. These contracts spanned, at least, a 17-year period.

234. With respect to TOR 7, there was massive corruption in the awarding of tenders and contracts to Bosasa and its affiliates by government departments, agencies and entities. The corruption took the form of Bosasa through its directors and employees providing gratification in the form of cash payments and other material benefits to state office bearers as contemplated in TOR 1.9, in exchange for the unlawful award of tenders and contracts to Bosasa and its affiliates.

235. The referrals pursuant to TOR 1.9 are all covered by TOR 1.1 and 1.4.

Instances possibly not covered by terms of reference 1.1, 1.4, 1.5 and 1.9

236. The evidence reveals unlawful activities possibly not covered by the terms of reference detailed above. Those instances are detailed below and where appropriate, are referred for prosecution, further investigation or the convening of a separate enquiry to the appropriate body regarding the conduct of certain persons as contemplated in TOR 7.

237. There is evidence of corruption involving the following persons:

    237.1 Mr Simon Mofokeng, former General Secretary of CEPPWAWU for the acceptance of grocery items on a monthly basis to the value of R12,000 to R15,000 (for the offence of corrupt activities relating to the procuring and withdrawal of tenders in terms of section 13 of PRECCA); and 237.2 Mr Sydney Mantata, who purchased and delivered the grocery items to Mr Mofokeng.

238. But it is not clear whether rule 3.3 notices were issued against them and, in any event, there is a possibility that any crimes committed by them before February 2002 may have prescribed in terms of section 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 51 of 1977. This evidence may be considered by the relevant investigating authorities, but no referral is recommended in this regard.

239. There was evidence to suggest that a number of persons were involved in:

    239.1 The destruction of electronic data and files, as well as computer hardware, and documentation, to prevent this evidence being seized by the SIU

    239.2 The destruction of computers and invoicing books from Blake's Travel

    239.3 The destruction of files through the faked server crash

    239.4 The deletion of files because of the SIU investigation; and

    239.5 The intimidation of potential witnesses.

240. The persons implicated in this conduct were the following:

    240.1 Mr Angelo Agrizzi

    240.2 Mr Johannes Andries van Tonder

    240.3 Mr Leon van Tonder

240.4 Mr Matthew Robert Leeson (referred to by Mr Agrizzi as Max Leeson)

240.5 Mr William Brander; and

240.6 Mr Brian Blake.

241. Mr Brian Blake disputes that computers were removed from Blake's Travel, destroyed and later replaced. Mr Blake's version is improbable in the light of the corroborating evidence of Messrs Agrizzi, van Tonder and van der Bank. This is particularly the case as Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder implicate themselves in criminal activity, to their own detriment. It is unlikely that they would lie to prejudice themselves. Mr Matthew Leeson and Mr William Brander failed to respond to rule 3.3 notices issued by the Commission in February and March 2019, respectively and the evidence against them is undisputed.

242. Accordingly, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the above conduct occurred and that the persons implicated are guilty of defeating or obstructing the course of justice and/or fraud and/or corrupt activities relating to witnesses and evidential material in terms of section 11 of PRECCA and / or unacceptable conduct relating to witnesses in terms of section 18 of PRECCA and / or unacceptable conduct relating to witnesses in terms of section 19 of PRECCA.

243. There is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case. These matters are accordingly referred for further investigation and prosecution.

244. Having regard to the evidence pertaining to them, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation by the relevant professional bodies will reveal a prima facie case of professional misconduct on the part of the following persons or firms:

244.1 Mr Brian Biebuyck, through an investigation by the Legal Practice Council ("LPC")

244.2 Mr Petrus Venter, through an investigation by the SAIT

244.3 The various attorneys whose trust accounts were used by Bosasa to make various unlawful payments, through an investigation by the LPC; and 244.4 Mr D'Arcy-Herrman, through an investigation by the Independent Regulatory Board for Auditors ("IRBA").

245. The Commission report should be made available to SARS so that it may exercise its investigative powers derived from the provisions of the Tax Administration Act 28 of 2011 ("TAA") to determine whether any tax offences were committed by Bosasa or its associates. In particular, the following issues are referred to SARS for further investigation:

245.1 Whether Mr Papadakis breached his obligations in terms of the TAA as an official and / or a former official of SARS

245.2 The failure to disclose income and false invoicing deriving from the various cash accumulation mechanisms developed and used by Bosasa

245.2.1 Including the cost of benefits provided to various individuals and state functionaries through the Special Projects Team as operational costs to be deducted from income in Bosasa's tax returns

245.3 The deduction of the invoices issued by Mr Mansell for "work" done as expenses

245.4 Bosasa's utilisation of SeaArk's assessed loss, the existence of the assessed loss in BSCM and Bosasa Operations and the equipment write-offs; and 245.5 Phezulu Fencing in respect of receipts being hidden under contingent liabilities in the balance sheet instead of the income statement to avoid paying tax of R10.3m.

NATIONAL TREASURY

246. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority should give consideration to instituting criminal prosecutions against Mr Rajesh Tony Gupta for bribery / corruption arising out of his conduct in offering Mr Mcebisi Jonas millions of Rands if he agreed to be Minister of Finance and to work with the Gupta family.

EOH HOLDINGS AND THE CITY OF JOHANNESBURG

247. The law enforcement agencies should investigate the attempts of Mr Jehan Mackay described above to induce Mr Kodwa to interfere with procurement processes in the interests of EOH with a view to the prosecution of Mr Jehan Mackay and any other suspects identified in the investigation on charges under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 if the investigation reveals that such prosecution is warranted.

248. The President should consider the position of Mr Kodwa as Deputy Minister of State Security having regard to the fact that Mr Kodwa appears to find himself in a position where he is beholden to Mr Jehan Mackay.

249. The terms of reference of the Commission are so wide that it was required to investigate even all kinds of allegations of corruption, state capture, fraud and other wrongdoing even in municipalities. The Commission did not engage in any investigations involving municipalities other than Johannesburg and even then only two or so tenders. However, when one realises what EOH and Mr Makhubo were doing, one realises that there may be many municipalities in which certain entities do exactly what EOH used to do in relation to the City of Johannesburg.

ALEXKOR

Introduction

250. The Commission investigated various allegations that certain Gupta linked individuals or entities were irregularly or corruptly awarded certain contracts at Alexkor. This part of the Report relates to such investigation as the Commission was able to make within the time available to it.

251. Various allegations have been made of state capture at Alexkor Ltd (“Alexkor”) and its associated companies. Only two witnesses testified before the Commission in relation to Alexkor, namely: 1. Mr Gavin Craythorne, a marine mining contractor and a founding member and office bearer of the Equitable Access Campaign (“the EAC”), an organisation that seeks to advance the interests of marine miners contracted to exploit the marine diamond rights in the Richtersveld; and 2. Mr Albert Torres, a director of Gobodo Forensic and Investigative Accounting (Pty) Ltd (“Gobodo”), which was appointed by the Department of Public Enterprises in July 2019 to conduct an investigation into the relationship of Alexkor and its marine mining contractors. In addition, two investigators of the Commission, Mr Peter Bishop and Mr Jakob Dekker, filed detailed affidavits elaborating on some of the evidence tendered by Mr Craythorne and Mr Torres. Although their affidavits were admitted into evidence, neither Mr Bishop nor Mr Dekker testified before the Commission.

252. During the course of its investigation into state capture at Alexkor, the Commission issued several Rule 3.3 notices and requests for information to various implicated and interested parties in relation to the evidence of Mr Craythorne, Mr Torres, Mr Bishop and Mr Dekker. This resulted in the Commission receiving more than 20 statements, requests for additional information, applications for specific directives and applications to cross-examine witnesses, amounting in total to about 8000 pages of documentary evidence. Unfortunately, the constraints of time and resources made it impracticable for the Commission to formally admit this voluminous information to the record and to afford all the implicated and interested parties an opportunity to testify or to cross examine any witness. As a consequence, the Commission is not in a position to make definitive findings with regard to all relevant matters concerning state capture at Alexkor. There is however sufficient evidence in relation to certain matters that give rise to reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing that justifies recommendations for further investigation by the law enforcement agencies and the board of Alexkor and its associated companies.

Recommendations

253. It is recommended that the board of Alexkor conduct a full investigation into any contract with and fees paid to Regiments to determine the precise nature of any services rendered by Regiments and whether Alexkor received full consideration and value.

254. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, ABDC, Mr Daniel Nathan and the directors and employees of SSI, ABDC or any associated company on charges of contravening sections 18, 19, 20, 21, 44 or other relevant provisions of the Diamonds Act 56 of 1986.

255. It is recommended that the board of Alexkor and the PSJV investigate whether Mr Bagus, Dr Paul and Mr Korabie (the members of the tender committee) were in breach of their fiduciary duties as contemplated in section 76 of the Companies Act by making a misrepresentation to the board regarding SSI's compliance with the tender requirements with a view to an application to declare them delinquent in terms of section 162(5)(c) of the Companies Act.

256. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Bagus, Dr Paul and Mr Korabie (the members of the tender committee) for fraud or a contravention of section 214(1)(b) of the Companies Act by deliberately making a misrepresentation regarding SSI's compliance with the tender requirements.

257. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of any director, executive or employee of SSI (ABDC) an/or DNT for a contravention of section 86 of the Diamonds Act by wilfully furnishing false information to the SADPMR or making a false or misleading statement in relation to the right of ABDC to obtain a diamond licence.

258. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Carstens and Ms Kellerman for fraud or a contravention of section 214(1)(b) of the Companies Act for making a misrepresentation to the board that a proper due diligence was performed prior to the award of the tender to SSI.

259. It is recommended that the board of Alexkor and the PSJV investigate whether Mr Carstens and Ms Kellerman were in breach of their fiduciary duties as contemplated in section 76 of the Companies Act by making a misrepresentation to the board regarding the performance of a due diligence on SSI with a view to an application to declare them delinquent in terms of section 162(5)(c) of the Companies Act.

260. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Bagus, Mr Korabie, Dr Paul and other persons who purported to act as board members of the PSJV for contempt of the court order issued by the Western Cape High Court on 4 September 2014.

261. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, Mr Daniel Nathan Trading CC, Daniel Nathan Trading House, Alexander Bay Diamond Company Trading House, Alexander Bay Diamond Company, and the directors, executives or employees of these companies, for a contravention of section 86(c) of the Diamonds Act, by falsely giving out in the registers of SSI that such persons were holders of the required licence when the diamonds were in fact traded by SSI, an unlicensed trader.

262. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, or any director, executive or employee of SSI, on any relevant charge in relation to diamonds of 196.15 carats valued at R5.136 million allegedly not accounted for in the SSI register.

263. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of SSI, or any director, executive or employee of SSI on any relevant charge in relation to an alleged underpayment to the PSJV of an amount of R1.718 million in relation to a sale of the diamonds in parcel 248.

264. It is recommended that the SADPMR conduct an inquiry in terms of section 79 of the Diamonds Act to determine if all the buyers to whom SSI sold rough diamonds were in possession of the requisite licences as contemplated in Chapter IV of the Diamonds Act; and, where appropriate to refer any suspected contraventions of sections 18, 19, 20, 21 or other provisions of the Diamonds Act to the law enforcement agencies for any further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of such persons for offences under the Diamonds Act or any other law.

THE FREE STATE ASBESTOS PROJECT DEBACLE

265. It is recommended that law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Timothy Mokhesi by the National Prosecuting Authority for possible corruption arising out of his decision to enter into the agreement that he concluded with Blackhead Consulting/Diamond Hill Joint Venture and/or with a view to Mr Mokhesi's possible criminal prosecution for his possible contravention of sections 38(1)(a)(iii), 38(1)(b) and 38(1)(c)(ii) of the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 in concluding the agreement that he concluded with Blackhead Consulting and Diamond Hill Joint Venture.

266. It is recommended that the Government seek a legal opinion with a view to possibly taking all necessary legal steps to recover from Mr Mokhesi and any other Government Officials who were involved in the conclusion and implementation of the agreement between the Department of Human Settlements, Free State Province, and Blackhead Consulting Joint Venture all monies paid by the Free State Department of Human Settlements to Blackhead Consulting and Diamond Hill Joint Venture for which the Department did not receive appropriate value.

267. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations against Mr Mokhesi as may be considered with a view to his possible prosecution by the National Prosecuting Authority for a breach of any provisions of the Public Finance Management Act (PFMA) in the role he played in connection with the Asbestos Eradication Project.

268. It is recommended that every tender or contract between a government department and/or government entity and a service provider or a provider of goods or services should contain a prominent clause to the effect that no service provider may sub-contract or cede its/her/his right to provide the services or the goods to another person or entity or company unless the intended sub-contractor was disclosed in the bid documents as an entity to which the bidder would sub-contract. Consideration may also be given to whether there should not be a statutory provision to this effect that will apply to all tenders in the public service.

269. It is recommended that the Government obtains a legal opinion aimed at establishing whether it would not be able to successfully recover the moneys it paid to Blackhead Consulting and Diamond Hill Joint Venture in regard to the Asbestos Eradication Project for which it received no value or because Blackhead Consulting and Diamond Hill Joint Venture made a misrepresentation to the Department of Human Settlements that it had the qualifications or expertise or skills or experience necessary for the performance of the job when it had no such experience, qualifications, expertise or skills.

270. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority gives serious consideration to instituting a charge of corruption or any other applicable crime or offense against Mr Edwin Sodi and his company, Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd for their roles in paying an amount of R600 000,00 (Six hundred thousand Rand) to a car dealer based in Ballito, KwaZulu-Natal, for the benefit of Mr Thabani Zulu as a reward for Mr Zulu's role in the Asbestos Project or as a bribe to Mr Zulu so that he could do certain favours for Blackhead Consulting or Diamond Hill or the Joint Venture or Mr Edwin Sodi.

271. is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority gives serious consideration to instituting a criminal charge or criminal charges relating to corruption or any other applicable crime or offence against Mr Thabani Zulu for his arrangement with Mr Edwin Sodi and/or Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd to be paid an amount of about R600 000,00 (Six hundred thousand Rand) by Mr Edwin Sodi and/or Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd.

272. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority should give serious consideration to instituting criminal charges of corruption or any other applicable crime or offence against Mr Edwin Sodi and/or Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd arising out of the arrangement or agreement that was entered into between Mr Edwin Sodi and Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd and Mr Timothy Mokhetsi for the payment of about R600 000,00 to a firm of attorneys in the Free State to enable Mr Mokhetsi or his family Trust to pay for a property in which he would live.

273. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority should give serious consideration to instituting a charge of corruption or other applicable offences against Mr Timothy Mokhesi arising out of his role in the payment by Mr Edwin Sodi and / or Blackhead Consulting of an amount of about R600 000.00 into the trust account of a firm of attorneys in Bloemfontein to enable a property to be bought in which Mr Mokhesi was going to live.

274. It is recommended that to the extent that current legislation or government policies of state owned entities or companies do not prohibit the awarding of a tender or the concluding of a contract for the provision of services or delivery of goods by a person or entity or service provider that does not produce proof that it has the requisite educational qualifications, knowledge or skills and experience for the job awarded to it, consideration should be given to ensuring that legislation and policies of government departments or of state-owned entities require that no entity or person or service provider may be awarded a tender or may conclude any contract with a government department or a state-owned entity or company unless it has produced proof of relevant qualifications, skills experience or expertise required to perform the work.

275. It is recommended that consideration be given to the enactment of legislation that will make it a criminal offence for any official or office-bearer of a government department or of a state-owned entity or company to award a tender to or conclude a contract for the provision of services goods or with any person or entity unless he or she has satisfied himself or herself or itself that such person or entity has produced proof of possession of the minimum academic qualifications or experience or expertise.

276. It is recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority give serious consideration to instituting criminal proceedings against Mr Edwin Sodi and / or Blackhead Consulting for fraud or other applicable crimes arising out of the fact that, in order to obtain work from the Department of Human Settlements in the Free State, Mr Sodi and / or Blackhead Consulting (Pty) Ltd made a false representation to the Department of Human Settlements, Free State, that he or it had the knowledge, qualifications and/or experience, skills and expertise for the removal of asbestos when, to the knowledge of Mr Edwin Sodi, Blackhead Consulting, Mr Mpambani and Diamond Hill, neither of them had the qualifications, knowledge, expertise and experience needed for the removal of asbestos.

THE FREE STATE R1 BILLION HOUSING PROJECT DEBACLE

277. It is recommended that law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to a possible prosecution by the National Prosecuting Authority of Mr Moses Mpho "Gift" Mokoena, who was the Head of the Department of Human Settlements in the Free State in 2010 and early in 2011, for a possible contravention of sections 38(1)(a)(iii), (b), (c)(ii) and (g) of the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 as amended arising out of the abandonment of the competitive tender process and the decision to implement and the actual implementation of the advance payment scheme.

278. Section 38 of the Public Finance Management Act provides:

> (1) The accounting officer for a department, trading entity or constitutional institution—
> (a) Should ensure that that department, trading entity or constitutional institution has and maintains—
> (iii) An appropriate procurement and provisioning system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective.
> (b) Is responsible for the effective, efficient, economical and transparent use of the resources of the department, trading entity or constitutional institution;
> (c) Should take effective and appropriate steps to—
> (ii) Prevent unauthorised, irregular and fruitless and wasteful expenditure and losses resulting from criminal conduct.
> (g) On discovery of any unauthorised, irregular or fruitless and wasteful expenditure, should immediately report, in writing, particulars of the expenditure to the relevant treasury and in the case of irregular expenditure involving the procurement of goods or services, also to the relevant tender board.

279. Section 86 of the PFMA provides:

> (1) An accounting officer is guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years, if that accounting officer wilfully or in a grossly negligent way fails to comply with a provision of section 38, 39 or 40.
> (2) An accounting authority is guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years, if that accounting authority wilfully or in a grossly negligent way fails to comply with a provision of section 50, 51 or 55.
> (3) Any person, other than a person mentioned in section 66 (2) or (3), who purports to borrow money or to issue a guarantee, indemnity or security for or on behalf of a department, public entity or constitutional institution, or who enters into any other contract which purports to bind a department, public entity or constitutional institution to any future financial commitment, is guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years.

280. To the extent that money paid out by the Free State Department of Human Settlements for which the Department did not receive any value or that was paid out unlawfully in the implementation of the advance payment scheme has not been recovered, it is recommended that all steps that may lawfully be taken to recover such monies be taken against, among others, Mr Moses Mpho “Gift” Mokoena and Mr Mosebenzi Zwane for their respective roles in the approval and implementation of the advance payment scheme.

281. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigations as may be necessary to enable the National Prosecuting Authority to determine whether it should not charge Mr Moses Mpho “Gift” Mokoena, former Head of the Free State Department of Human Settlements, Mr Mosebenzi Zwane and other officials in the Free State Department of Human Settlements with fraud arising out of the misrepresentation on which the advance payment scheme was based with regard to the number of houses that that Department said it could build between November / December 2010 and the end of March 2011 which was known to the Department not to be true and not to be achievable but was done in order to prevent the National Department of Human Settlements from taking part of their allocated funds and giving them to better performing provinces.

ESKOM

282. The Eskom executives used their positions of authority and power within Eskom to benefit Trillian - a corrupt activity under the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act No. 12 of 2004. Messrs Molefe, Singh and Koko all benefited from the Guptas and / or Mr Salim Essa in various forms - Messrs Koko and Singh from an Eskom perspective and Mr Brian Molefe as already covered in other reports. This may have constituted the criminal offence of corruption. The conduct of Eskom officials, therefore, implicated several provisions of the Commission's terms of reference, namely ToR 1, ToR 4, ToR 5 and possibly ToR 6 (corrupt and irregular awarding of contracts to benefit the Gupta family or their associates) and ToR 9 (corruption to benefit the officials involved).

283. The conduct implicates ToR 1, in that some form of inducement or gain was offered to and received primarily by the three main executives at Eskom (Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Anoj Singh and Mr Koko), which would have served to influence them to act in the manner referred to above. ToR 4, regarding beach of the Constitution and legislation through the facilitation of unlawful awarding of contracts to McKinsey, is also implicated by the appointment of McKinsey on a sole-source basis and, in breach of section 217 of the Constitution, the National Treasury Instruction and Eskom's Policy on Cost Containment Measures. Also relevant are the provisions of ToR 5, ToR 6 and ToR 9 regarding corruption in the awarding of contracts by public entities to benefit the Gupta family and their associates and / or to benefit individual Eskom officials involved in the transactions. Rampant corruption is evident in the awarding of contracts and approval of payments to McKinsey and its BBBEE partner, Trillian, in circumstances described in this report.

284. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies should conduct such investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution by the National Prosecuting Authority of the former Eskom officials referred to above who are implicated in the facilitation of unlawful contracts, corruption and financial misconduct and breaches of the PFMA. It is also recommended that legal steps be taken by Eskom to recover from members of the 2014 Board and the former Eskom officials referred to above all losses that Eskom suffered as a result of their unlawful conduct.

285. Criminal prosecution should be extended to the 2014 Eskom Board, who failed to exercise their fiduciary duties and prevent financial prejudice to Eskom, as required in Sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA. They instead allowed irregular procurement in breach of both the law and Eskom policies, and allowed irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure in the face of legal instruments that enjoined them to act otherwise. The Board members acted unlawfully and committed financial misconduct, as envisaged in section 83 of the PFMA. Messrs Molefe and Singh were ex officio members of the Board and therefore equally responsible for the Board's various breaches of its fiduciary duties.

STATE SECURITY AGENCY

286. On the basis of the oral and documentary evidence placed before it, the Commission sets out below its Findings and Recommendations regarding certain aspects of the State Security Agency in line with the Commission's Terms of Reference. They are not made in any order of importance. The evidence revealed a plethora of problems that bedevilled the SSA; they are almost innumerable. It would serve no purpose to engage in a hair-splitting exercise. Therefore, in making both the Findings and the Recommendations, the Commission will address at least some of the root causes, and not the consequent symptoms.

Regarding the amalgamation, restructuring and re-organization of the erstwhile National Intelligence Agency (NIA) and the South African Secret Service (SASS) into the State Security Agency (SSA)

Findings

287. The period under consideration by the Commission is the period from 2009. Evidence was placed before the Commission presenting the organograms of the national intelligence services in three stages: the period from 1994 to 1997; and then for the period 1997 to 2009; and lastly, for the period 2009 to 2019. The last organogram reflects the structure brought about by former President Zuma through Proclamation 59 of 2009, 11 September 2019. It amalgamated the National Intelligence Agency (NIA) and the South African Secret Service (SASS) into a new structure, namely, the State Security Agency. Until then, the NIA's mandate was domestic intelligence, while the SASS mandate was foreign intelligence.

288. On the evidence presented to the Commission, it has to be accepted that the new intelligence regime resulted in a shift from the spirit, philosophy, and some principles of the Intelligence White Paper, which were reflected in the Constitution. The virtues of the Intelligence White Paper were articulated by amongst others Ambassador Maqetuka, the first Director General of the SSA, who had extensive experience in the field of intelligence, and Mr Shaik. Under the new intelligence regime there was for the first time a dedicated Minister of Security ("Minister of State Security") as opposed to the past, when a deputy Minister of Justice was only assigned to be responsible for the administration of the NIA but not involved in its working; there was therefore no reporting to a Minister, but directly to the President as also apparent from the two previous organograms.

289. The new 2009 regime also for the first time introduced the concept of "State Security" as opposed to "National Security". This brought in a paradigm shift: The emphasis fell on the security of the State, as opposed to National Security which laid emphasis on the security of the people; that is, the welfare of the people. As the evidence indicated, that paradigm shift paved the way for the use of the SSA to serve the power and interests of the incumbents, including especially former President Zuma. In fact, members of the SSA were made to take an additional oath in terms of which they swore allegiance to the President and also to recognize the authority of the Minister of State Authority who was Dr Siyabonga Cwele at the time whereas, prior to that, members only took oath of allegiance to the Constitution and to the Agency.

290. A special section, namely, the Presidential Security Support Services (PSSS) was created by Ambassador Thulani Dlomo within the DSCO to protect former President Zuma, a task that properly belonged to the SAPS; he also irregularly removed the President's health services from the SANDF to the DSCO. There was also political overreach by the Minister of State Security, Mr David Mahlobo, in becoming involved directly in the operations of the SSA as will be shown below. One of the consequences of the amalgamation was that the powers that were enjoyed separately by the Director General of the NIA, and the Director General of the SASS, were put in the hands of one person, namely, the Director General of the SSA. The result was the potential for its abuse. The evidence before the Commission has shown that such abuse did in fact occur. Most of the problems that beset the SSA were the consequence of the amalgamation. It indeed constituted a paradigm shift from what was espoused by the Intelligence White Paper. That abuse manifested itself in various ways; for example, using the SSA and its resources for political ends; being involved in the ANC's factional battles or to improve its political fortunes etc –more about which later. The proclamation also usurped the powers of Parliament; and the intelligence services were made to report directly to the Minister and no longer to the President.

291. The High-Level Review Panel, as testified to by Dr FS Mufamadi, the chair thereof, also made similar findings regarding the paradigm shift from the Intelligence White Paper.

Recommendations

292. The period prior to 2009 might have had its own challenges and therefore not perfect but the Commission has not been told of any major problems that existed prior to the amalgamation of the NIA with the SASS into the SSA. As already mentioned, in that period there was no dedicated "Minister of State Security" and there was no notion of "State Security", but of "National Security"; all these were in line with the Intelligence White Paper and the Constitution. The Commission therefore recommends a close look once more at the spirit, guidelines and principles of the Intelligence White Paper, while recognizing that it, too, might need to the adapted. As said in the evidence, it is still important and sound. Therefore, there is no need to reinvent the wheel. One of the characteristics of the pre-2019 era was that there being no dedicated Minister of intelligence, the NIA and the SASS reported directly to the President who directed their activities. Since about August 2021, the country seems to have reverted to that. However, concerns have been expressed, especially in the media, about the concentration of such powers in the President. It is not for the Commission to adjudicate on this, save to state that, in the course of discussions about the Intelligence White Paper, no doubt all the views would be heard and considered.

293. A lot of commendable work was done by the High-Level Review Panel. The Commission therefore commends the recommendations it made for consideration, together with the Intelligence White Paper, which the Panel's Report holds in high regard.

Regarding the barring or discontinuation of investigations against the Guptas and its probable consequences

Findings

294. The State Security Agency under the leadership of Ambassador Maqetuka as the Director General, Mr Shaik as Head of the Foreign Branch and Mr Njenje as the Head of the Domestic Branch (the trio) wanted to conduct investigations into the Guptas. This followed information that the Guptas had informed Minister Mbalula of his then forthcoming appointment as Minister of Sport and Recreation. In the trio's view, there were three possible sources of information to the Guptas, all of which warranted investigation. Firstly, whether there was a breach of national security in the office of the President in that there was a leak; secondly, whether the Guptas had overheard a discussion where the then President, Mr Zuma, was consulting someone, and they were peddling the information for their own benefit. Thirdly, whether they had suggested Mr Mbalula's appointment to the former President. All the three scenarios would have been serious, with the latter even more so because it would have meant foreign nationals suggested who should be in the Cabinet of another country. All the three issues fell within the purview of national security. The other concern was that, by informing Minister Mbalula in advance, the Guptas would be creating dependency on the part of Mr Mbalula as Minister of Sport on them that would make him feel beholden to them. This was serious as the Guptas had interests in businesses that included stadia. The Commission's finding is that the investigations were justified.

295. The Commission was, however, told that the investigations were stopped by Minister Cwele, then as Minister of State Security. With regard to President Zuma, although the trio agreed that he never instructed them to stop the investigation, it was clear from what he said and his body language that he disapproved of the investigation. In his evidence, Minister Cwele denied giving instructions that the investigations be stopped. Probabilities are, however, overwhelming that he did not want the investigations into the Guptas to continue and therefore that they be discontinued; for example, his version would not explain why the trio, would have decided of their own to stop the investigation if he did not make it clear to them that the investigation should be stopped or if he did not show himself to be against the investigation. Secondly, it would not explain why the three decided to go and see former President Zuma to pursue the matter; furthermore, at no stage did Minister Cwele ask for an update or progress report on the investigation. Moreover, Minister Cwele's position towards the investigation was given as one of the reasons for the breakdown of their relationship with Minister Cwele. It is also the Commission's finding that former President Zuma did not want the investigation to go on. He said, according to the evidence, that there was no need to investigate the Guptas and said that they were good people with whom he had a good relationship. He defended his friendship with them. Although Mr Zuma may not have given instructions that the investigation be stopped, he said enough at the meeting with the trio to make it clear to them that his view was that there was no justification for the investigation and, in his view, it should not be pursued.

296. It is also the Commission's finding that a Minister, in the person of Dr Cwele, involved himself in operations of the SSA by interfering with the investigation.

297. The stopping of the investigations into the Guptas demoralized at least some members of the SSA; not least the top three: Ambassador Maqetuka, Mr Shaik and Mr Njenje, to the point that they decided to leave, more or less at the same time for that matter. A question arises as to what otherwise would have prompted all three of them to decide to leave and more or less at the same time.

298. The stopping of the investigation into the Guptas was not a small matter. In all probability, considering all the evidence relating to, for example, their involvement in the businesses of State-Owned Enterprises such as Eskom, timeous investigations could probably have prevented at least some of their activities that led to the state capture and, by all indications, the loss of billions of Rands.

Recommendations

299. The basic reason why the investigation was discontinued was the interference by Minister Cwele; that is, it was discontinued through conduct which amounted to Ministerial interference in the operations of the country's intelligence services. The Commission recommends in the appropriate section and for the reasons therein stated, that a Minister should not be involved in the operations of the country's intelligence services.

300. The Commission's finding that former President Zuma also inhibited if not stopped the investigations might, as alluded to earlier, itself prompt debates about the President being involved inasmuch as the SSA reports to him/her and she/he directs their operations. It may, indeed, be an issue for debate, leading to discussions about appropriate checks and balances. This view is, moreover, based on the Commission's finding that a sitting President did in fact himself contribute significantly to the discontinuation of the investigation with serious consequences to the country; that is a sitting President himself interfered with legitimate operations by the country's three most senior intelligence officers who by all indications had legitimate reasons to pursue the investigation.

Executive / Ministerial involvement in operational issues and its probable consequences

Findings

301. The creation of the Ministry of State Security and the consequent appointment of "Minister of State Security" through the 11 September 2009 proclamation caused the SSA to report to a Minister, at the time Dr Siyabonga Cwele, who was later followed by Mr David Mahlobo; that paved the way for a Minister's involvement in the operations of the SSA, and that was exactly what happened. The evidence is overwhelming that both Ministers in particular did just that.

302. One of the ways in which that happened was when Minister Cwele, on the weight of the evidence before the Commission by the country's then top intelligence chiefs, interfered in the investigation against the Guptas; he said investigating them would amount to investigating former President Zuma. He was also against the Hawks investigating Mr Arthur Fraser. This issue is dealt with separately later.

303. Minister David Mahlobo, on the evidence, not only involved himself in the operations, but also directed them. He was actively involved in for example projects under Project Mayibuye such as Project Wave (about the media), Project Justice about alleged attempts to bribe some judges. Above all, there was a letter entitled "Projects approved by the Minister" which involved the spending of some R130m. In fact, one of his responses was that the law did not prohibit him from being involved. If what he says is correct, the situation would certainly require a very close look. However, even more worrying, was his involvement in the withdrawals, handling and distribution of large sums of money, an aspect that is dealt with separately herein. Former Minister Bongo also involved himself to some extent in the operations.

304. Some of the dangers attendant upon a Minister's involvement in operational matters were clearly articulated by witnesses, in particular, the top three. A few examples were given. The Minister of State Security would have knowledge of the identities of operatives, which knowledge the Minister would take along with upon leaving office; secondly, that he/she might acquire information about other fellow Ministers, which would make him/her better placed than them. Nothing further really needs to be said to make the point that a Minister should not be involved in operations, except to add political bias in favour of his or her own party or own faction in intra-party politics; all of which, on the evidence before the Commission, did happen.

Recommendations

305. Whether the two former Ministers deny involvement in operations or not does not detract from the importance of the principle against Ministerial involvement. The recommendation, therefore, holds good: the Commission recommends that a Minister should not be involved in the operations of the intelligence services.

Illegal operations by the State Security Agency (SSA)

Findings

306. Section 199(7) of the Constitution prohibits a security service or a member thereof, in the performance of their functions, to prejudice the interests of a political party that is legitimate in terms of the Constitution, or to further any interests of a political party in a partisan manner. Yet, there was evidence that some of the activities of the SSA did just that. There was evidence, for example, that SSA money was withdrawn, at the instance of Ambassador Dlomo, and used to transport, accommodate and feed ANC MK veterans, for the party's January 8 rally in Rustenburg in 2016.

307. A member of the SSA ("Dorothy") was also used to assist at the ANC NASREC Conference, for which she withdrew subsistence allowance. There were also some activities undertaken to improve the fortunes of the ANC in the Western Cape, Eastern Cape and Northern Cape amongst the Coloured people.

308. The Special Operations Unit (SOU) of the SSA, particularly under the direction of Ambassador Thulani Dlomo, was a law unto itself, launching many projects that operated illegally as indicated above.

309. Not only were the activities against the Constitution, but there is a strong indication that some of them contravened legislation governing intelligence services.

Recommendations

310. Investigations should be carried out internally for disciplinary action against members, and also by law enforcement agencies against possible criminal statutory contraventions. The use of the resources and services of national intelligence agencies to destabilize opposition parties, to benefit a ruling party and to fan intra-party factions in order to influence political or electoral outcomes amounts to a serious threat to democracy. Steps therefore need to be taken to deal with this.

Cash withdrawals, movement of cash and accountability for cash

Findings

311. In terms of cash withdrawals, large sums of money were withdrawn. Given the covert operations of the SSA, withdrawal in cash was inevitable. However, what was striking was the huge amounts at any one time - running literally into millions. There was a case where cash in the amount of R145m was stolen within the SSA offices. Varying amounts were withdrawn; for example R38.5m over the period March 2014 to September 2016; money withdrawn by then Minister Mahlobo for, allegedly, former President Zuma at R2.5 pm in 2015/2016 which was later raised to R4.5 pm in 2016/2017. Ambassador Dlomo approved and caused the withdrawal of cash in large amounts; for example, R5m, R13.5m and R4.510m. Mr Arthur Frazer instructed a junior to receive and take cash in the amount of R1.5m to the then Minister Mahlobo; signed in approval the withdrawal of R4.510m to be taken to the then Minister Mahlobo, and for yet another R4.510 the following month to be taken to the then Minister. All these are

312. In terms of the advance payment system, money would be paid in advance and in cash for operations. There were many problems with this; for example, the purpose for the money would be obscure or not set out, nor was the final destination (supposedly some operatives). To sum up, the motivation would be inadequate; and financial controls, such as were there, were poor or not adequately enforced.

313. In terms of accountability, there would be no verification as to what the money was used on because, to start with, the intended use would itself be obscure; no verification as to whether the intended recipient actually got the money, such as in the form of receipts; one of the service providers was found to be non-existent. Lack of accountability manifested itself in various ways; to give two astonishing examples: Firstly, whereas the person to whom an advance payment was made was disqualified from taking a further advance before accounting for the first one, this rule would be circumvented. A different person would be used in whose name the money was withdrawn and handed over to the one disqualified; one of the people whose name was used in this manner told the Commission as much. The second example was where a person simply acknowledged debt in terms of the money they were unable to account for – with the money amounting to millions – without any effective recovery of the money. Instead, the money, amounting to millions, would be offset against the person's pension; in some instances, such people simply resigned thereafter. A witness estimated that over the period 2012 to 2018 an amount of R1.5b was lost.

314. As shown above, Ambassador Thulani Dlomo, in his capacity as the Head of the Special Operations Unit, handled a lot of cash; in many respects, the use and destination of the monies remained obscure.

315. Minister Mahlobo, too, as shown above, then as Minister of State Security handled large sums of cash. For example, on the evidence, there was a time when he received R2.5m a month, later increased to R4.5 m a month, which he allegedly said was for former President Zuma. Details were given by two witnesses that in the presence of both of them on at least two occasions, millions in cash were delivered to Mr Mahlobo, and counted, apart from an earlier occasion when that was done by only one of them. The Commission noted the denials by Mr Mahlobo, now Deputy Minister Mahlobo. However, as said, there were at least two eyewitnesses; secondly, the details were too much to be a figment of their imagination. Probabilities are overwhelming against Mr David Mahlobo. After his appointment, the budget of the SSA increased hugely. This conclusion was based on the scrutiny of the budget as documentary evidence relating to the budget.

316. Mr Arthur Fraser, then DG of the SSA, also handled and caused a lot of cash to be withdrawn, as shown above. After his appointment, budgetary allocations increased from about R42m in the 2016/2017 financial year to about R303m in the 2017/2018 financial year, approximately 74% (R225m) of which was used for covert operations from his office. It was said by the Project Veza investigation team that an amount of about R125m remained accounted for by Mr Fraser, even as investigations were still going on. Add to all these, the findings of the PAN Report that were referred to the Hawks and the NPA.

Recommendations

317. To state the obvious, financial controls and accountability need to be tightened.

318. As already said, the handling and use of cash is inevitable, especially in covert operations. However, consideration should be given to minimising the amounts involved.

319. There should be consequence management, including the recovery of the monies lost.

320. There was a report, the PAN report, that had been compiled by an internal investigation team which revealed, amongst others, at least prima facie criminal activities, which recommended criminal investigations that could have involved Mr Fraser. After the report had been handed over to the Directorate of Special Crime Intelligence Unit (the Hawks), Minister Cwele ordered that the matter be taken from the Hawks. The resumption of the investigations should be reconsidered by the Hawks; it might be that whoever were involved, including Mr Fraser, get absolved; but the investigations should be allowed to take their normal course. The Commission has noted Ambassador Cwele's denial that he ordered the discontinuance of the investigations, but it would remain a puzzle why they stopped. In any event, the denial is irrelevant to the Commission's recommendations.

321. The role played by Ambassador Thulani Dlomo, Mr Mahlobo, Mr Arthur Fraser and other people involved in the withdrawal, handling and distribution of SSA's money should be looked into by the law enforcement agencies. 74. The Inspector General of Intelligence should be allowed greater access to the activities of the country's intelligence services. There has been evidence by the current IGI that attempts were made to frustrate some of his investigations.

322. Consideration should be given to allowing the Auditor-General adequate access to audit the country's intelligence agencies; without prescribing, consideration may be given to giving top clearance certificate to some staff of the Auditor-General; consultations with the IGI and the Auditor-General should be considered by the SSA. The Commission notes as commendable the efforts of Mr L Jafta, the former Acting Director-General of the SSA, that he has opened the door to the Auditor-General to audit the SSA. It is a step in the right direction and an indication that this recommendation is implementable, particularly subject to other conditions such as security clearance at the appropriate level.

Maintenance of secrecy: A balancing act

Findings

323. The Commission appreciates and agrees that there is a need for secrecy regarding covert operations. However, there is also a need to balance that with transparency and, in particular, accountability; be it in the form of financial accountability or accountability in respect of activities carried out to ensure compliance with the law; for example, that intelligence services are not abused to serve the personal interests of some individuals. As was said in the evidence, which should be accepted, not everything should be locked up in the vaults.

324. Various instances of the abuse of the secrecy principle were mentioned. The Commission gives a few examples of them. To start with, there was a ridiculous case in which SAPS Crime Intelligence reportedly withheld information in respect of the purchase of curtains for a house on the basis of secrecy, whereas details of the purchase could have been given without disclosing the address of the house such as where the curtains were bought. Regarding the SSA, it was as a result of reliance on the secrecy principle that no verification could be made that intended beneficiaries did receive monies intended for them; that some service providers were found to be non-existent; that attempts were made to thwart investigations by the Inspector-General of Intelligence; that the Auditor-General arranged with the SSA for a qualified audit annually; and the Hawks were taken off criminal investigations against certain people including Mr Arthur Fraser for the reason that it would not be in the interests of the State or national security to prosecute him, despite Mr Njenje's firm stance that that would not be the case.

Recommendations

325. The Commission recognizes the difficulty in balancing the maintenance of secrecy, on the one hand, with transparency and accountability, on the other.

326. The evidence has revealed abuse of secrecy. The situation should not be left entirely in the hands of the intelligence agencies themselves. There should be some measures to hold them to account, otherwise they would become law unto themselves. The role of the IGI, the AG, and Parliament through its Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence, should be sharpened. Secrecy should not be used to hide criminal activity; law enforcement agencies should therefore be able to investigate and, where appropriate, the NPA should prosecute, otherwise there would be criminal impurity under the cover of secrecy. A situation cannot be allowed where intelligence officers are their own guardian.

The use of SSA firearms and their disappearance

Findings

327. A few witnesses testified that firearms and ammunition were taken out of the SSA's Armoury, Musanda. On one occasion, they were taken out at the instance of Ambassador Dlomo, the person who collected them did not even have the competence to handle a firearm. They were therefore issued to that person in contravention of prescripts and the law. It was an assortment of firearms including rifles and submachine guns. When instructions were later given by Mr Fraser for their return, only some were brought back; some were still outstanding at the time of the evidence. The purpose for the arms was not explained. Issuing firearms under those circumstances amounted to the abuse of the assets of the SSA. One Johan, who was at the armoury, played a major role in facilitating the irregular issuance of the firearms.

328. The release and distribution of weapons from the SSA armoury appeared to have been laxed; for example, it would not be clear what they were to be used for or by whom, or whether the people for whom they were meant had the necessary competence to handle them.

Recommendations

329. The involvement of Ambassador Thulani Dlomo and Johan, constitute, prima facie, criminal conduct in violation of the Firearms Control Act, and the SSA prescripts governing the issuance and control of the SSA armoury. The matter calls to be referred to the law enforcement agencies for further and thorough investigation, particularly as some of the firearms and ammunition have not been returned. It is noted, in this respect, that the witness (Dorothy) who was involved in the collection of the firearms on the instructions of Ambassador Thulani Dlomo, testified that she opened a case of missing firearms with the police; the question is: what have the police done with that matter?

330. The process for the issuance of firearms out of the SSA armoury needs to be tightened up, bearing in mind that even rifles and sub-machine guns were issued. These are weapons of war. The country presently has a problem with the illegal possession and use of firearms. As indicated earlier, the emphasis of intelligence services should not be on the security of the State (State Security) but on the interests of the citizens (National Security). The wanton distribution of SSA weapons by the SSA undermines its very core function to ensure the security of the citizens.

The abuse of the vetting system

Findings

331. One of the issues before the Commission was the manner, and the purpose for which, the vetting system was conducted.

332. Firstly, the evidence established that, apart from the normal vetting system of the SSA, Ambassador Thulani Dlomo established a parallel vetting system which may well have been probably illegal. He also actually recruited somebody from outside the SSA to do the vetting of certain people. This created a potential danger to the country in that people who did not qualify were given security clearance. Evidence was further that the process of vetting was flawed in many ways. For example, some forms not being properly completed, a person being interviewed by more than one person thereby breaking the consistency; and names and information not being loaded onto the official system.

333. Then there was the abuse of the vetting system. For example, questions were asked about the regularity of Mr Arthur Fraser himself, the former DG of the SSA, regarding his top-secret clearance certificate which was said to have been issued on an expedited basis; while the practice of expedited clearance was acknowledged, questions arose about the need to do so in his case. Then there was the most glaring abuse of the vetting system by Mr Fraser himself. Once the Inspector General of Intelligence, Dr Dintwe, told him that he was investigating him because of certain activities, Mr Fraser invoked Dr Dintwe's clearance certificate! Dr Dintwe had to go to court to have his certificate restored but the matter was resolved without the Court deciding the matter. Another case of apparent abuse of the vetting system was the withdrawal, or refusal, of the security clearance certificate to the former National Director of Public Prosecutions, Mr Mxolisi Nxasana, who Mr Zuma may have feared was poised to reinstate criminal charges against former President Zuma.

Recommendations

334. It appears from the evidence that the parallel vetting system created and implemented by Ambassador Thulani Dlomo was discontinued. However, given the danger posed to national security by issuing security clearance certificates to people who might not have qualified, makes for a serious matter; moreover, Ambassador Dlomo and those involved might have transgressed the law. An investigation by law enforcement agencies is warranted. An internal investigation should also be conducted in respect of those whose certificates are suspect.

On the irregular recruitments and appointments to Intelligence Services

Findings

335. Evidence tendered was that there were no clear criteria for the recruitment of non-SSA members. Ministers were even involved in the recruitment of their relatives or people they knew. Ambassador Thulani Dlomo also became involved in the recruitment even before his appointment as General Manager: Special Operations on 18 January 2012. The danger with the recruitment based on connectivity was its potential to make the recruited people beholden to those who brought them in; they might tell those who recruited them only what the latter wanted to hear, thus compromising the objectivity of information. The recruitment was therefore not always done in the best interests of the SSA, but primarily to benefit individuals.

336. Cogent evidence was placed before the Commission by Dr Dintwe, the IGI, regarding irregular appointments, also as to their possible motive and impact on the issue of state capture. There were irregular appointments to both the SSA and to Crime Intelligence. Such appointments, said Dr Dintwe, created instability and a potential for state capture; in some instances, no criteria were either used or were not there. He gave a few examples, which also indicated executive overreach. In one instance, former Minister Bongani Bongo ordered the National Intelligence Co-ordinating Committee ("NICC") to appoint someone to a senior position on the basis that the person was personally known to him; shortly after the appointment, the person was promoted, again irregularly, to a higher position. In another instance a senior person caused the advertisement of a vacant post to be withdrawn because his preferred candidate was not shortlisted for interview. The many other instances mentioned by Dr Dintwe demonstrated beyond doubt that irregular appointments were made to intelligence services.

337. Despite queries raised with her, including prima facie evidence that her predecessor (Mr Bongo) contravened the provisions of the Intelligence Services Act, Minister Letsatsi-Duba, then Minister of State Security, failed to respond. There was nepotism including recruitment of families of Ministers. Former Minister Mahlobo, then Minister of State Security, also selected people for recruitment. Such instances were also found with Crime Intelligence; one General in the Free State acknowledged the practice and cited the recruitment of a girlfriend. Dr Dintwe indicated that the people appointed in that way later feel beholden to those who recruited them. The Commission is satisfied that, on the basis of the evidence before it, irregular appointments were made; that Ministers involved themselves in the recruitment and that such appointments were not in the best interests of the intelligence services as they held the potential of non-meritorious appointments; and also that the people would feel beholden to those who brought them in. It is also possible that at least some of them, especially those recruited by Ministers, could have contributed to state capture; at least such a suspicion, would be well founded. Such appointments should therefore be frowned upon. In one instance, the Director-General refused to recommend, but the Minister made the appointment anyway; in another, 26 people were irregularly promoted during the period of Minister Ayanda Dlodlo.

Recommendations

338. The recruitment criteria should be clear and be strictly adhered to; and certainly there should be no Executive involvement, let alone by bringing in people on familial or other non-professional considerations.

The use of questionable intelligence reports

Findings

339. Convincing evidence was placed before the Commission of the danger posed by the use of questionable Intelligence Reports. Those that were referred to as examples were by SAPS Crime Intelligence;

340. At his meeting with Ambassador Maqetuka, Mr Shaik and Mr Njenje to discuss the investigation into the Guptas, President Zuma first raised what was called the Mdluli Report, which was not even on the agenda. It was a report by Police Crime Intelligence which was at the time headed by General Richard Mdluli. The report alleged that there was a plan to topple President Zuma. It turned out that it had been rejected by the trio after a thorough analysis; despite that, former President Zuma told them that he believed it. In fact the people who prepared it were junior to the three.

341. In Mr Shaik's view, the raising of the Mdluli Report bore direct relevance to the issue of the investigation of the Guptas: the fact that the President believed Mr Mdluli over the three most senior intelligence chiefs at the time was an expression of lack of confidence in them meant to impact on the discussion they had come for, namely, the issue of the investigation of the Guptas. As Mr Shaik was to put it later in his evidence before this Commission, the discussion of the Mdluli Report, set the tone for the discussion; the rest is now history! A thoroughly discredited intelligence report had a bearing on that history. The Commission has already noted the probable consequences of the stopping of the investigations into the Guptas in relation to state capture.

342. The other discredited police crime intelligence report by General Mdluli also played a role in the breakdown of the relationships between former President Zuma and the above trio. The report was given to Ambassador Maqetuka by the then Minister of State Security, Dr Cwele, on the instructions of the former President for the SSA to have a look at. It alleged that there was a conspiracy by some generals within the SAPS to remove General Mdluli, at the time the Head of Crime Intelligence. After looking at it, the trio rejected it for a number of reasons such as that it was full of inaccuracies and, importantly, that it had been commissioned and prepared by General Mdluli himself thereby raising the issue of a conflict of interest; he should have stood aside and asked one of his senior colleagues to investigate.

343. The well-known alleged intelligence "report" was canvassed by the IGI, Dr Dintwe. It was a report on the basis of which Minister Pravin Gordhan and his then deputy Mr Jonas were recalled by former President Zuma from a trip abroad. The report was to the effect that Mr Gordhan and Mr Jonas were overseas to meet with some foreign agents who were calling for regime change in the country. Dr Dintwe received a complaint about the report from the Democratic Alliance and the South African Communist Party. What he set out to investigate was the origin, authenticity and veracity of the alleged intelligence report. Former President Zuma, according to Dr Dintwe, was the only person who said he had the report. Dr Dintwe set up a meeting with him to ask for the report. He said the former President did not say there was a report; the only thing he said was that, when the time was ripe, he would explain in order for Dr Dintwe to understand; he did not commit himself on whether the report existed or not. Soon after the meeting Dr Dintwe wrote to President Zuma to indicate he was awaiting further engagement to conclude his investigation.

344. As at the date of Dr Dintwe's evidence before the Commission, he has not heard from the former President; he did not furnish him with a copy of the alleged intelligence report, except to see a badly written document on social media which he could not act on as the former President had not taken ownership of it. Importantly, all the country's three intelligence agencies told Dr Dintwe that the report was not given by them. Based on all these, the Commission doubts the existence of any authentic intelligence report on the basis of which former President Zuma removed Mr Gordhan as Minister of Finance and his then Deputy Mr Jonas. It is to be noted that President Ramaphosa criticised the intelligence report when he spoke publicly about Mr Gordhan's removal.

345. Two more questionable intelligence reports were referred to and criticized by Dr Dintwe. They were also issued by Crime Intelligence during the time of Mr General Mdluli. The first report alleged a plot by General Shadrack Sibiya, Mr Robert McBride and Mr Paul O'Sullivan and others to overthrow the government. The second one related to the alleged unlawful rendition of foreign nationals involving Generals Sibiya and Dramat.

346. Dr Dintwe said both reports turned out to be untrue. The criminal charges against General Sibiya and General Dramat relating to the rendition matter were withdrawn. From the Commission's point of view, there was a relevant and important angle to this second report: at the time it was compiled, General Sibiya was, according to Dr Dintwe, involved in investigations against General Mdluli, then Head of Crime Intelligence.

347. Dr Dintwe had serious criticism of the two reports; for example, that they were incoherent, prepared in a clumsy manner, full of spelling errors and unintelligible and too substandard to be submitted to the Head of State. These reports were not put through the vigorous process of checks and balances. Yet, he said, they were dealing with the lives and rights of people. It is not for the Commission to adjudicate on the veracity of the two reports but there are three worrying things about them. Firstly, that General Sibiya was investigating General Mdluli who, incidentally, has since been convicted of some crime or crimes which might or might not be related to his investigation by General Sibiya. Secondly, the poor standard of the reports and, thirdly, the fact that not only did no prosecution ensure, but that, on the contrary, regarding the rendition matter, the charges were withdrawn. These considerations remind all and sundry, let alone those in power, to be cautious with intelligence reports. Again, as a matter of interest to the Commission, Dr Dintwe's view was that those who compiled the reports did so in the knowledge that their reports would not stand scrutiny before the courts, but were compiled to remove people from their positions who stood in the way of state capture or corruption and looting of state resources.

Recommendations

348. The peddling of false and unsubstantiated so-called intelligence reports can destabilize the country. The country's intelligence structures, as well as those in power to whom they report, need to be alive to those dangers. The bottom line is that sound and effective mechanisms should be in place to be able to sift out false reports. The Commission was told that former President Mandela rejected an intelligence report that there were people planning to overthrow him. A great deal of prudence is required in dealing with intelligence reports. You need to have professional people, appointed on the basis of merit, to be in charge of intelligence services.

South African Police Service: Crime Intelligence

Findings

349. Although there was not much evidence about the SAPS Crime Intelligence, enough evidence was given to enable the Commission to make adverse findings on the SAPS Crime Intelligence reports under the leadership of General Richard Mdluli; they were discredited. The danger of such false intelligence reports has already been pointed out. The findings and the recommendations have already been made. 102. It is SAPS Crime Intelligence which was allegedly involved in attempts to procure the grabber. The grabber was to be used at the ANC's NASREC Conference where the ANC's national leadership elections were to be held. The evidence was to the effect that part of the excessive price that was to be paid for the grabber would be used to buy votes at the conference. This would, of course, interfere in the internal politics of the party. The Commission finds that the attempts were indeed made as alleged, although it can't make a finding that Crime Intelligence was officially involved; there were, however, strong indicators that that was the case because the intention to procure the grabber was confirmed by a Divisional Commissioner to Dr Dintwe. 103. It is also the Commission's finding that there were irregular recruitments into the Crime Intelligence, because no less than a General admitted that much.

Recommendations

350. The recommendations made in respect of false reports, irregular recruitments and abuse of secrecy made earlier in this report in respect of the SSA, also hold good with regard to SAPS Crime Intelligence.

The role of Parliament as an authority of oversight

Findings

351. Section 3 of the Intelligence Services Oversight Act 40 of 1994 deals with the functions of the Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence (JSCI), namely, to exercise some oversight over the functions and activities of the intelligence services. In executing its duties, the Committee may, amongst others, request relevant officials to explain any aspect of reports furnished it, including reports by the SSA, Police Crime Intelligence, Defence intelligence and the Inspector General of Intelligence. Parliament's Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence (JSCI) failed to properly perform its oversight duty in respect of the SSA; to mention some examples: It is so that through the 11 September 2009 Proclamation, former President Zuma restructured the country's intelligence services. He did that by amalgamating the NIA and the SASS into the SSA, something that could not be done through a mere proclamation but through national legislation; that is, through Parliament. In paragraph 5.1.1 of its Annual Report "For the Financial Year Ending 31 March 2020 Including the Period Up to December 2020" published on 13 September 2021, the following is recorded: "The proclamation was announced in July 2019 but only approved in October 2010. The legislation that amended the changes was only approved later in the form of the General Intelligence Laws Amendment Act, No. 11 of 2013. The gap between 2010 and 2013 resulted in serious concerns and illegal functioning of the SSA. The new structure created a powerful DG with powers concentrated on a single individual. The amalgamation also enabled some members of the executive to issue illegal instructions to members of the SSA. These instructions amounted to executive overreach." True, the report was issued by the JSCI of the Sixth Parliament, but there is no evidence before the Commission that any committee before it did anything about such illegal functioning of the SSA in the period 2010 to 2013 when the above Act was passed. A committee could not have justified its failure to raise its voice or to exercise its oversight on the excuse that it would have acted in breach of any law relating to secrecy. Nor is there any evidence that the JSCI dealt with the matter of the executives' illegal instructions and overreach. The report also confirms in its paragraph 5.1.4 that information was given about challenges such as corruption, irregular recruitment of some members of the Special Operations Unit, illegal proactive services, parallel vetting structure that issued fake top secret clearance certificates and sniper training for some non SSA members as was attested to by various witnesses.

352. There was a time when there was no IGI appointed for a period of about 22 months; that is, for all that period, Parliament failed to fill a national position which played a very important oversight role. The Commission was told that a lot of malpractice within the SSA occurred during that period. There can be absolutely no justification for this failure and Parliament should have ensured that this did not happen or that the executive was held to account for this.

353. The Committee failed to act on the reports submitted to it by the IGI, which set out amongst others the misuse of money, and attempts to procure a grabber (by Crime Intelligence) irregularly.

354. The Committee failed to act on the advice and information given to it by the country's three most senior intelligence officers. The then Director-General of the SSA briefed the Committee for two days about the problems the SSA was experiencing in the execution of its duties; as he put it, that they were in deep trouble. The then chair of the Committee said at the end of the briefing, that they would be called back but nothing further happened; there was not even a follow up.

355. There was a failure on the part of the JSCI to hold the Ministers of the time accountable, especially former Ministers Cwele and Mahlobo. If the Committee accepted that the Ministers had the right to be involved in operations, it failed to hold them accountable given the issues placed before it by the IGI or senior intelligence officers; if the Ministers did not have the right to be involved in operations, that was all the more reason why they should have been hauled before the Committee; either way, there was a failure by the Committee to carry out its oversight duties.

356. By failing to properly carry out its oversight role and to heed the call by the country's then intelligence chiefs, Parliament has, at least to some extent, contributed towards state capture. Because its failure to do its job meant that acts of state capture and corruption were allowed to spread and deepen. It should have stepped in to ensure the continuation of investigations against the Guptas.

357. In terms of some of the findings of the JSCI and its recommendations, naturally, the report deals with a number of issues some of which have no bearing on the mandate of this Commission. The Commission therefore mentions only some of the findings in the report which are pertinent to some of the issues raised; these are set out in paragraph 8 of the JSCI's report. The findings are significant in that they show that all was not well within the SSA, Crime Intelligence and to some extent Defence Intelligence; a few examples are mentioned below to illustrate the point.

358. Regarding the SSA, the slow implementation of the High-Level Review Panel Report, security breaches that led to intelligence failures, threats to the Veza investigation team that was investigating irregularities within the SSA, challenges in the financial statements, and instability in the SSA's senior management. The problem of finance management is confirmed by the qualified opinion of the Auditor-General, which is an annexure to the Committee's report.

359. Regarding Crime Intelligence, audited financial statements revealed irregularities: its annual report revealed that some senior managers were not vetted, so too over and under expenditures were not reported. Certificates of activities by the Office of the Inspector General of Intelligence reported looting of funds from the Secret Services Account, and also lack of operational directives.

360. Regarding Defence Intelligence, audited financial statements showed non-compliance with legislation; failure to comply with competitive bid processes for the procurement of goods; lack of compliance with the National Treasury policy; and weak financial controls. Its annual report revealed amongst other things vetting and human resource challenges. The certificate of activities showed a vetting backlog and that some generals and senior managers were not vetted.

361. Regarding the Office of the Inspector-General of Intelligence, the JSCI noted that the office had human resource challenges and also that only 0% to 2% of the OIG's recommendations were implemented. This means that between 98% and 100% of the IGI's recommendations are not implemented.

362. It is to be noted that the above findings of the JSCI are in line with the evidence tendered by various witnesses before the Commission regarding challenges that plagued the above intelligence services.

Recommendations

363. It hardly needs mentioning that Parliament should exercise its oversight role properly and fully.

364. Returning to the report of the JSCI, it is to be noted that, in paragraphs 9 and 10 respectively, the Committee makes generic and specific recommendations. These recommendations are aimed at ensuring a better service by the country's intelligence services. It is hoped that they will be seriously considered; the report having been tabled before Parliament for consideration. It is a public document for anybody to access.

Law enforcement agencies

Findings

365. An internal team of the SSA conducted an investigation into a project known as the Principal Agency Network (PAN) which had been launched by Mr Arthur Fraser. The report revealed some criminal activity and was handed over to the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation (the Hawks) and to the NPA for prosecution, both of which indicated at one stage that they were ready to do so. The Hawks even reduced the costs they would charge. The prosecution was, however, stopped by Minister Cwele, who said it was on the instructions of President Zuma, at the time, on the ground that prosecuting Mr Fraser would compromise national security, this notwithstanding Mr Njenje's insistence that that would not be the case as what was being investigated was pure crime. It is public knowledge that, after Mr Zuma had served a few weeks of his 15-month term of imprisonment imposed on him by the Constitutional Court for defying its order that he appear before this Commission, Mr Fraser who was the National Commissioner of Correctional Services, granted him medical parole under questionable circumstances and against the recommendations of the Parole Board. That matter is the subject of pending litigation in the Courts. However, the picture that emerges is that Mr Zuma put a stop to an investigation that could well have led to Mr Fraser's arrest, prosecution and maybe imprisonment and Mr Fraser put a stop to Mr Zuma's continued incarceration despite the fact that Mr Zuma's incarceration was in terms of an order of the Constitutional Court.

366. Ambassador Cwele's denial that he stopped the investigation as alleged, was noted. However, it boggles the mind why the matter would be taken away from the Hawks, who were ready and willing to proceed; why the top three would abandon the matter after, as they put it, so much effort and resources had gone into the investigation. It also boggles the mind why Ambassador Cwele, having supported the referral to the Hawks, did not demand progress reports when he did not receive any. It also boggles the mind that, thereafter, in September 2016, former President Zuma appointed Mr Arthur Fraser as DG of the SSA. On the basis of all the aforegoing, it is the Commission's finding that while Ambassador Cwele might not have personally wished for the criminal investigation by the Hawks and the prosecution to stop, he did say that the former President said it should stop and also that former President Zuma did give instructions for the investigation to stop.

Recommendations

367. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies resume this investigation that was stopped by President Zuma on the basis that it would threaten national security as no evidence has been presented that pursuing the investigation would threaten national security with a view to the NPA possibly considering if there is enough evidence, possible criminal charges against all those implicated including Mr Arthur Fraser. The allegations are serious; they point to a massive abuse of the assets of the SSA, such as the purchase of some 300 vehicles now idling all over Gauteng, and many houses registered in the names of individuals. The issue of a possible compromise to national security can always be discussed with the National Prosecuting Authority with the appropriate intelligence heads, and should not be decided solely by politicians who might have other reasons, possibly political, not related to national security.

On the Inspector General of Intelligence

Findings

368. The Inspector General of Intelligence is meant to exercise oversight over the activities of the country's intelligence services; to that end, he or she accepts complaints from the public, including individuals, against such services. Yet it is the Commission's finding that obstacles were placed to inhibit the IGI in the execution of his duties. The current IGI has testified at length about such obstacles; for example, limited budget and no direct budget; being allowed only restricted or managed access to information by the DG's and other heads of intelligence services.

369. The IGI's complaints to Parliament's Joint Standing Committee on Intelligence would not attract adequate response and his reports were not acted upon. The office could only employ staff upon approval of the Minister through the DG of the SSA, the very body over which he was to exercise oversight; his office shared the IT system (the server) with the SSA, giving rise to some concern on the part of other intelligence services such as the Police Crime Intelligence.

370. The office of the IGI does not have enough personnel, with some important posts not filled even though funded. It has been indicated above how the Inspector General's security clearance was withdrawn by the then DG of the SSA, Mr Fraser, once the IGI had told Mr Fraser that he was investigating him. The budget of the office of the Inspector General is within that of the SSA, over which he is supposed to exercise oversight.

Recommendations

371. Instead of being weakened or undermined, the office of the Inspector-General needs to be strengthened in many ways. It needs more staff and a budget of its own. The Inspector General should enjoy unfettered access to classified information and be better equipped. The office of the IGI should be independent and respected.

372. The findings and reports of the IGI should be taken seriously by the Executive and Parliament. The IGI told the Commission that the issues he took to the JSCI Parliamentary were not being responded to.

373. The Commission cannot make an exhaustive list of all the steps that need to be taken to make the office of the IGI effective and capable of carrying out its duties; the bottom line is that all the necessary measures should be taken to achieve that objective.

374. The issue of the independence of the IGI is fundamental. In his evidence, Dr Dintwe made this point, and referred to the kind of independence enjoyed by the Hawks and IPID. In this respect, reference has to be made to the judgments of the Constitutional Court in the Glenister and the McBride cases.

375. In the Glenister case (popularly known as Glenister II), in which the independence of the Hawks was an issue, the Court made the point that it was a constitutional duty of the state, when creating an anti-corruption entity, to give it adequate independence. "We therefore find that to fulfil its duty to ensure that the rights in the Bill of Rights are protected and fulfilled, the state should create an anti-corruption entity with the necessary independence and that this obligation is constitutionally enforceable. It is an intrinsic part of the Constitution itself." The Court said that failure to create a sufficiently independent anti-corruption entity would infringe on people's fundamental rights, which would otherwise be corroded by corruption. It does not have to have full independence, but requires adequate levels of structural and operational autonomy to prevent undue political influence. Obviously, some of the issues that arose in the Glenister case do not arise with regard to the IGI: for example, security of tenure. The IGI does enjoy security of tenure, and the method of appointment is constitutionally sound. It is by the President, approved by a resolution of the National Assembly by at least two thirds of its members. However, there is one point that the Court made that applies with equal force, if not more, with regard to the IGI, namely, the issue of public perception as to whether or not the IGI is in fact independent. On this point, the Court said that the appearance or perception of independence plays an important role. In this respect, Dr Dintwe says that the other thing that compromises the independence of the office is that it is situated within the Ministry of State Security; the IGI is using the ICT infrastructure of the SSA and its server, which means that being the owner of the server, the SSA may access information that belongs to the IGI; this point also unsettles other intelligence services such as the SAP's Crime Intelligence and Defence Intelligence

376. The McBride case affirmed the principles set out in the Glenister case with regard to the importance of the independence of an anti-corruption entity. At issue was the power of the Minister of Police over and in relation to the Independent Police Investigative Directorate (IPID), in particular the power to unilaterally suspend its Executive Director and to institute disciplinary proceedings against him. The Court referred to and agreed with the majority judgment in the Glenister II judgment, that "a corruption-fighting entity will have the requisite independence if it can be established that the 'reasonably informed and reasonable member of the public will have confidence in an entity's autonomy protecting features'."

377. It is recommended that the Inspector General of Intelligence should enjoy adequate independence in line with the guidelines set out above.

On the Auditor-General

Findings

378. The evidence points to the need to have the Auditor-General authorised to audit the expenditure of the SSA. It has been pointed out already how large sums of money were not accounted for. Yet, the role of the Auditor-General is not properly fulfilled because some information is deemed classified for that office to access. The arrangement between that office and that of the Inspector General of Intelligence, in terms of which the Auditor-General directed the office of the Inspector General on how to carry out some audit, was not adequate; it amounted to a ticking box exercise without depth. An arrangement between the Auditor-General and the SSA to agree on a qualified report in respect of the so-called slush fund (which forms a substantial part of the budget) was also not acceptable. It is the Commission's view that the fact that there were the large sums of monies that could not be accounted for, was due at least largely to the fact that the office of the Auditor-General could not execute its duties as it should have, and that the implicated people acted with impunity as they were aware of the weaknesses in the system.

Recommendations

379. A way should be found to enable the auditing of the SSA by the Auditor-General while preserving the required secrecy; for example, by granting the appropriate security clearance to some staff within the office of the Auditor-General. As stated above, the Inspector General has indicated that his office does not have the expertise and capacity to audit the intelligence services. The bottom line is that the current situation cannot be left as it is; at the very least the office of the Inspector General should be properly capacitated – an exercise which might require a lot of resources. The Commission has noted that the former Acting Director-General of the SSA, Mr L Jafta had accepted that the SSA be audited by the Auditor-General.

The roles of some key players

Findings

380. In the midst of all the questionable activities of the SSA from the period after its formation in 2009, there are certain prominent role players. The role of each one of them was testified to by various witnesses, as appears in the summary of evidence. For the sake of convenience, the witnesses in respect of each such role player are grouped together, with their respective evidence being restated more or less as it appears in the summary.

381. One of the most important roles played by former President Jacob Zuma was to restructure the intelligence services by collapsing, through the 11 September 2009 Proclamation, the NIA and the SASS into the SSA. The amalgamation had disastrous consequences. For a start, it was not competent to do this through a mere proclamation; it concentrated powers of the former NIA and the former SASS in the hands of one person, namely, the Director-General of the SSA, Ambassador Maqetuka and later Mr Arthur Fraser; he, for the first time, created the Ministry of State Security and drifted away from the guidelines and principles of the Intelligence White Paper that were reflected in the Constitution; it was under him that Ministers of (of State Security) became involved in SSA's operational issues. Crucially, he discouraged the investigation against the Guptas, and stopped the Hawks investigations against inter alia Mr Arthur Fraser whom, some three years thereafter, he appointed Director-General of the SSA, notwithstanding the findings against him that were referred to the Hawks and the NPA which he knew about.

382. As it is known, former President Zuma failed to return to the Commission to put his own version with regard to evidence against him.

383. The Commission has already made a finding that stopping investigations against the Guptas was one of the factors that contributed towards state capture. Therefore, by discouraging investigations against the Guptas, former President Zuma, wittingly or unwittingly, contributed towards state capture.

In this respect, it may be convenient to restate and put together the evidence by the trio, Mr Shaik, Mr Njenje and Ambassador Maqetuka here.

384. In terms of Mr Shaik, the former President listened calmly; he did not scream or shout. In his response, he told them about his long-standing relationship with the Guptas; that they were business people; that they once assisted his son Duduzane Zuma when nobody was going to employ him; that they were introduced to the ANC by people associated with President Mbeki; that the relationship with them was of long standing, dating back to the Mbeki administration. To him there was no need to investigate. It was clear to them that he did not want the investigation to continue. President Zuma cast himself as a victim by peddling the narrative that the Gupta investigation was because they wanted to get at him, something that was hurtful to the three of them as they all had had a long relationship with him. Mr Shaik even had a feeling as though the three of them were seen as part of the people wanting to topple him. The bottom line of Mr Shaik's evidence was that former President Zuma did not want the investigation to go on as there was no need. His son stayed with the Guptas in India when he went there for studies; the relationship, according to the former President, was not on the basis of him being President; again, with the narrative of being a victim, he said people wanted to topple him. This narrative could also be linked to the Mdluli Report. However, although the former President did not in so many words instruct them to stop the investigation, he made it clear, by pointing to his long relationship with the Guptas that the investigation should stop. After the meeting with the President, they decided that the investigation should not continue; if it did, it would be at the cost of their jobs. He did not raise the issue of Mr Njenje's business interests as the Minister had done. With all the arguments the former President raised, he was making the point that it was not necessary to continue with the investigation. Mr Shaik's view was that from what the former President said, pushing the investigation would have made them appear as part of the people who wanted to topple the former President. The former President was very loyal to his friendship with the Guptas. The investigation did not continue, even though the top three wanted it to. However, Mr Shaik had no doubt that, had they proceeded with the investigation regardless, they would have been removed from office; he gave the case of one Billy Masetla, then Director General of the National Intelligence Agency, who was dismissed from a senior intelligence position.

385. Mr Njenje's evidence: Mr Njenje confirmed Mr Shaik's evidence that after the trio had had a difficult meeting with Mr Cwele when they insisted on investigating the Gupta family, they went to see the President to raise their concerns about Mr Cwele with President Zuma. At that meeting President Zuma confirmed his good relationship with the Guptas; how they had taken his son Duduzane into their company, and that they came from a good family. President Zuma's view was that the Guptas should not be investigated. The former President's statement that the Guptas did not need to be investigated had a negative effect on the morale of Njenje's teams The former President would say give me reports but on that occasion it was clear that he did not want the investigation to go on despite being told that those were intelligence matters justifying an investigation; he did not give adequate reasons but simply said that there was nothing wrong with the Gupta family.

386. In terms of the evidence of Ambassador Maqetuka, the former President listened throughout, though, according to the witness, his body language showed he did not like what he was being told; at one time he asked for the report which the witness said he could not give to him as he, the former President, was conflicted. The former President was calm, and also talked about his relationship with the Guptas; the meeting could have taken more than two hours; the former President would not rush them whenever they met with him. During the meeting the former President did not raise the issue of Mr Njenje's conflict of interest, even though he was told the Minister had raised it. According to the witness, the former President did not express a view as to whether the investigation should stop or not, except that he gave a long explanation about his relationship with the Guptas and how it started. When Mr Njenje briefed the former President, he was not presenting a formal report, but rather reading from his notes; nor did the witness see a formal report or a scoping report until he left in 2012 (the witness explained what a scoping report was).

387. The totality of the above evidence by the three witnesses shoes that although the witnesses differ on some details regarding what transpired at their meeting with the former President Zuma, they all agree that it became clear that he did not want the investigations against the Guptas to continue; that was why he went on and on about the fact that they were good people, his friends and that they had helped his son. Moreover, there are other pointers. He never asked for a progress report. Also important was what Mr Njenje said earlier in his evidence. He testified about an occasion when he accompanied the then Minister of Mining, Susan Shabangu, to the Presidential residence where she was to meet with one of the Guptas at the behest or with the blessing of the former President. They were actually received by Mr Gupta in the President's study. In that meeting Mr Gupta hassled the former Minister into expediting their application for some mining, until Mr Njenje objected to the way Mr Gupta was treating the former Minister. The incident points strongly to the Guptas having enjoyed a special relationship with the former President, something which would be consistent with the evidence that he did not want any investigations to be conducted against them. Yet another indicator was the pressure that was brought to bear on Ms Mtshali and her business partner to part with their shares in a company in favour of the Guptas.

388. As said already, it is the view of this Commission that the stopping of the investigation at the behest of former President Zuma contributed to state capture in the country. This conclusion is not reached simply on a default basis, but after thorough consideration of all the evidence placed before it, including evidence relating to some SOEs.

389. Regarding the amalgamation of the NIA and the SASS into the SSA, through the proclamation, compelling evidence by the country's three former most senior intelligence officers that it resulted in problems some of which are referred to above; that it was the case of a faction (within the ruling party) asserting power by taking control of the country's intelligence; those who refused to serve that broader agenda, including those who had been in exile with former President Zuma such as the above three were – like them – replaced to enable the pursuance of the agenda; the difficulties that arose when the three wanted to investigate the Guptas such as the fallout they found themselves in as a result, was given to demonstrate the point. Some of the appointees are referred to below. As said already, it is the view of this Commission that the stopping of the investigation at the behest of former President Zuma, if not the fundamental cause of state capture, certainly one of them. In the absence of explanations by the former President which he chose not to proffer despite compulsion, the Commission agrees with the above view. This conclusion is not reached simply on a default basis, but after thorough consideration of all the evidence placed before it, including evidence relating to some State-Owned Enterprises. The evidence relating to the State Security Agency cannot and should not be considered in isolation.

390. The evidence regarding Ambassador Thulani Dlomo shows Mr Dlomo's massive involvement in operational issues and, secondly, the handling of cash. In terms of Witness K and Mr Y's affidavit, the affidavit of Mr Y, who was too ill to come and testify in person, together with the evidence of Ms K, which confirmed the contents thereof, show Ambassador Thulani Dlomo's massive involvement in the activities and operations of the SSA. He was appointed to the SSA on 18 January 2012 as General Manager Special Operations. Investigations by the Veza team established that some of the operations that were run by the Chief Directorate Special Operations under him fell outside the lawful mandate of the SSA; prescribed procedures were not followed and applicable governance, financial and operation directives of the SSA totally ignored. Shortly after Ambassador Dlomo's appointment on 18 January 2012 (as General Manager Special Operations) the scope of his authority was expanded further. Presidential Security Support Service and the Cover Support Unit were brought under his control as General Manager Special Operations. He recruited non-SSA people outside of the vetting procedures of the SSA. Through the Chief Directorate Special Operations (CDSO) under him, the SSA assumed responsibility for former President Zuma's food and toxin security, his physical security and the static protection of the President's aircraft; and sources that should have been used by legitimate intelligence structures were channelled through this parallel structure that served the interests of President Zuma rather than national interests.

391. On the evidence of Witness "Dorothy", Ambassador Dlomo's activities included the irregular issuance and distribution of firearms from the SSA Armoury, some of which were said to be still missing at the time of the hearing; in the process, not only infringing prescripts within the SSA, but also the provisions of the Firearms Control Act 60 of 2000. He possibly could have contravened the law in terms of activities relating to the establishment of parallel vetting structures, providing protection to civilians, and taking away protection services to former President Zuma from the SAPS VIP protection services to the Special Operations Unit (SOU) he had created, thereby usurping the function of the SAPS; he did the same with the health services for former President Zuma that used to be the responsibility of the SANDF; his SOU also offered protection services to some private individuals, which should not have been given without a prior threat assessment by the SAPS; which protection could, at any rate, have only been given by the police once it was to be at the taxpayers' expense. Ambassador Dlomo, at least prima facie, acted irregularly.

392. Ambassador Dlomo was also involved in the withdrawal of large sums of cash and its movement, for which no proper accounting was made. This related largely to certain projects under the umbrella project, Project Mayibuye. There were a number of such smaller projects. Reference to only part of the evidence of Ms K will illustrate the point. The witness pointed out that, without describing activities for which the money was meant and without effective financial controls, an amount of R24million, over the initial R30million granted, was given without sufficient financial details, which was in contravention of the prescripts. Although she did not look at other units within the SSA to compare with, Ms K was sure that at least they would have indicated in their motivations the financial implication of their operation plans. It was also her evidence that regarding project Construcao, vague and undetailed invoices were paid (in cash). A company with pseudonym Carrot Export Company issued three invoices totalling R20million (R10m, R5m and R5m) using up almost all the money allocated within three months; the invoices simply said it was for services rendered; the point the witness was making was that no details were given on the invoices as to what was being paid for and the existence of the company could not be verified. How the monies were spent under the name of all the projects need to be looked into.

393. Minister Cwele was at the relevant time the Minister of State Security. He involved himself in operational issues; he, either alone or on the instructions of former President Zuma, inter alia, stopped investigations against the Guptas, and the criminal investigations by the Hawks against Mr Arthur Fraser and possibly others. The Commission has already dealt with the significance of the stopping of investigations against the Guptas, and the consequences thereof to the country. Regarding the stopping of criminal investigations and possible prosecution of Mr Fraser for his activities in relation to the PAN project, it is possible, without prejudging the outcome, that he might not have been appointed Director-General of the SSA, as it happened about three years after the criminal process had been stopped; therein might lie the significance of the stopping of the investigations against him. Minister Cwele was at the relevant time the Minister of State Security. He involved himself in operational issues. There were two vital investigations he was said to have stopped: Firstly, the investigation against the Guptas (acting alone or together with former President Zuma). Secondly, the investigations against, and possible prosecution of, Mr Arthur Fraser, the former DDG of the SSA. He also sought to argue that the well-known Proclamation 59 of September 2009 was a competent instrument by former President Zuma to amalgamate the former National Intelligence Agency (NIA) with the erstwhile South African Secret Service (SASS) into the State Security Agency (SSA).

Stopping investigations against the Guptas

394. Mr Shaik's evidence was that although in his affidavit Mr Maqetuka says he did not recall the Minister instructing directly that the investigation be stopped, his own recollection was that that was the case; but he contended that there was no debate that at the very least, the Minister did put pressure on them (which would be consistent with the fact that the trio sought to take the matter up with the President).

395. Mr Njenje said that Minister Cwele said that the investigations against the Guptas should stop because he felt that that would amount to investigating the former President, but the three told him that they were not investigating the President, but to help him and the Executive to know better how to deal with that family. Mr Cwele's view which he expressed forcefully, was that the investigations should not lead to the President. The Minister seemed to have had other interests in stopping the investigations other than national interests; in effect saying they would be investigating the President; he did not give any other reasons. But the three of them indicated to the Minister that they were not convinced why the investigation should stop, and that they were going to continue with it; but he remained unpersuaded.

396. Ambassador Maqetuka too was clear that in their meeting with Minister Cwele, he said investigations against the Guptas should stop. Although the witness could not recall the Minister giving direct instructions that the investigation should stop, his clear attitude was that it should stop; he said the investigation was Mr Njenje's agenda to safeguard his own interests against the Guptas. The witness could not say how long the meeting lasted, possibly three hours. In all that period the witness was not given the opportunity to explain to the Minister as to what gave rise to the investigation; the discussion went back and forth about Mr Njenje's alleged conflict of interest and the Minister's contention that it was an investigation about former President Zuma. When they could not agree with him, they told him that they wanted to take the matter to the former President.

397. Ambassador Cwele denied stopping the investigations against the Guptas. We now know that he said he called the meeting because he was concerned that there was some surveillance of the Guptas without a judge's permit; and also Mr Njenje's conflict of interest in investigating them, not because he was opposed to the investigation of the Guptas. It was pointed out to Ambassador Cwele that his evidence before the Commission that he was not opposed to the investigation, contradicted his affidavit in which he said that the absence of a judge's directive made Mr Njenje's conflict of interests even more untenable. It was also pointed out by the evidence leader to him that there was another divergence between his evidence and what stood in his affidavit. In his evidence he said the issue he raised and was concerned about, was the electronic "interception" (without a judge's directive); however, in his affidavit, he said what he raised with the top three and was concerned about was the "surveillance". Ambassador Cwele's response was that there was no difference between the two, yet, as it was pointed out to him, surveillance did not necessarily take the form of electronic interception and therefore that if it did not take that form, it did not require a judge's permission. The difference was significant in that Ambassador Cwele's objection against the investigation would have been unfounded because whereas indeed "electronic interception" required a judge's permission, the top three denied conducting it; in other words, they told him that they were conducting the kind of surveillance which did not require a judge's approval since their surveillance was not in the form of "electronic interception" (which required a judge's directive). The premise of Ambassador Cwele's objection was therefore misconceived.

398. His self-contradictions aside, there is in any case overwhelming evidence that he told the trio to stop the investigation against the Guptas. For one thing, his version does not explain why the three witnesses would have wanted to take the matter up with the former President, which they in fact did. Furthermore, it appeared that he never asked for a report on the investigations. The Commission has already dealt with the significance of the stopping of investigations against the Guptas, and the consequences thereof to the country.

Stopping criminal investigations against Mr Arthur Fraser

399. There is also the matter of the former Minister having stopped criminal investigations by the Hawks and the National Prosecuting Authority against Mr Arthur Fraser and possibly others. These were investigations into the Principal Agency Network (PAN). By 2011 significant progress had been made with the investigation by Mr Njenje's team. On this aspect the evidence came mainly from Mr Njenje. Him and his team handed over their report to the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation (the Hawks) and to the NPA and everybody was ready for the prosecution. The investigations involved mainly Mr Arthur Fraser. The crimes investigated were fraud and corruption; properties had been bought with ulterior motives which ended up with private individuals; people were employed without security clearance; 300 cars and computers were bought and not used. The PAN project was supposed to be an extension of the official intelligence structures, the domestic branch of the NIA. The cars were parked in warehouses all over Gauteng; had been bought by funds earmarked for other operations, thereby putting those operations at a disadvantage. The number of houses bought was substantial, all-over Gauteng; they were registered in the names of some private people including children. In all, an amount of about R600 million was spent in that way. Mr Njenje held a meeting with the above law enforcement agencies, following which they were all ready to prosecute. However, he got a call from Mr Cwele for a meeting at OR International Airport. When they met, Mr Cwele said the prosecution of Mr Fraser should stop. Despite Mr Njenje's protest that a lot of time and money had been spent in investigations, the Minister insisted and said it was President Zuma's decision; Mr Cwele said the President said the prosecution would compromise national security, despite Mr Njenje's protest to the contrary, and that what was in issue was pure crime. The Minister knew that Mr Njenje had handed over the file to the NPA as he was being briefed at all steps, and he was the one who had asked for the investigation; Mr Njenje therefore believed the Minister that it was the President's decision.

400. Ambassador Cwele denied stopping the investigations; he said he did not that the matter had been taken away from the law enforcement agencies; even though he had interest in the matter so much so that he referred it to the Inspector General of Intelligence; indeed, he had initially shown interest in the investigations continuing, after the meeting referred to above he did not make any follow-up; he made no inquiries when he did not get any update. In all probability, that was because he was aware that the investigations had been stopped.

401. Regarding the stopping of criminal investigations and possible prosecution of Mr Fraser for his activities in relation to the PAN project, it is possible, without prejudging the outcome, that he might not have been appointed DG of the SSA, which appointment was made about three years after the criminal process was stopped; therein might lie the significance of the stopping of the investigations against him.

Defending the passing of the 11 September 2009 Proclamation

402. As indicated earlier, the effect of the Proclamation was to collapse the erstwhile National Intelligence Agency and the South African Secret Service into one intelligence structure, namely, the State Security Agency (SSA). It was the evidence of amongst others Mr Shaik that by doing so, the proclamation departed from the intention of the country's new dispensation not to concentrate power in one organization; that, in his view, took the country back to the period under the apartheid regime when there was excessive concentration of power in one organization (the National Intelligence Service that housed both the domestic and foreign operations); whereas under the new dispensation the country wanted separate by coordinated services; the proclamation was therefore contrary to the Intelligence White Paper, which had informed the intelligence laws in 1994. Importantly, it was pointed out to Ambassador Cwele that the Proclamation was not a competent legislation to bring about the above amalgamation; that it had to be through an Act of Parliament; which was why the General Intelligence Laws Amendment Act 11 of 2013 was passed in an attempt to remedy the situation. All these notwithstanding, Ambassador Cwele, in his response, contended that the passing of the Proclamation was competent. It was an unsustainable argument, begging the question why the Ambassador sought to maintain it.

403. Minister Mahlobo followed Ambassador Cwele as the Minister of State Security. There are two main issues about Ambassador Mahlobo: his involvement in operational issues, and his receipt and handling of large sums of cash. There is also the matter of his attitude towards the Intelligence White Paper.

404. Minister Mahlobo involved himself massively in the operations of the SSA, running a number of projects, such as Project Wave (to influence the media), Project Justice (alleged attempt to influence some judges), Project Tin Roof (which involved one of the wives of the former President), etc. Two documents may be referred to as examples indicative of his involvement in operations beyond doubt (there are others). Firstly, there was a letter indicating to be from him (which he said was not the case), asking for an amount of R130m for a project. A letter dated 4 November 2015 addressed to the Minister for State Security Agency, "Minister Mahlobo", which was filed of record as an exhibit, was canvassed with him. This was to contest his statement that he was never involved in operations. In that letter, he approved a request for budget reprioritisation and the utilisation of certain funds, including the amount of R20m for “Projects approved by the Minister”. The total amount approved, including the other items, was R130m. In his response, Mr Mahlobo denied that there were any Minister’s projects; he said the term “Minister’s projects” was used incorrectly; the document, he said, was therefore fundamentally wrong; the Minister did not approve projects. But the letter spoke for itself in so many words, despite his protestations. But he admitted that he signed in approval of the movements of the funds indicated in the requesting letter and said, importantly, that without his approval, nobody would touch the money. Secondly, there was a letter, which was canvassed with him, filed of record dated 31 May 2016. The letter was a “Request for authorization: Renewal of Cover Project Mayibuye and payment of expenditure related to Project Mayibuye from 01 April 2016 – 31 March 2017”. He was still the Minster at the time as he only left in October 2017. The document says that the recommendation was made by the appropriate person on 31 May 2016 “As per instructions issued by Minister on 06/05/2016”. The Ambassador’s response was that he did not give any such instructions and anybody saying he did so would have to produce written prove as such an approval would have financial implications, in terms of the PFMA. There were other documents of a like nature which spoke for themselves, referring to the “Minister’s Project”, in particular relating to Project Mayibuye. 160. Ambassador Mahlobo’s response regarding the above documentation relating to the approval of all the projects therein mentioned was, when he was asked whether he had read it, that he had. But he argued that the purpose of the approval did not amount to the approval of the projects as therein described, this despite the fact that the nature and purpose of each project was clearly stated at the top of every page and that his signature of approval was in respect of each one of the projects, as the evidence leader pointed out to him. The Ambassador was shown a letter, filed of record, dated 28 November 2016. It was written by Dorothy (pseudo name) as Acting General Manager Special Operations, requesting authorisation for funds for the Project Mayibuye in the sum of R4,510,000.00. He said he had no comment on the letter. Ambassador Mahlobo’s involvement in the operational projects of the SSA is therefore beyond doubt.

405. Still on the issue of his involvement in operational issues, the contents of the affidavit by "Darryl" (pseudonym), attested to on 23 November 2020 and filed of record, were put to Mr Mahlobo for his response. There was a section in the affidavit headed “Minister Mahlobo’s involvement in operational activities”. Darryl says that one of the challenges he had as the General Manager of the CDSO was Mr Mahlobo involving himself directly in CDSO operations and his personal interest therein. Darryl said Mr Mahlobo used to boast about having his own sources; he would also report directly to the President. Darryl says he raised his concerns on more the one occasion and warned Mr Mahlobo against taking unverified information to the President. Mr Mahlobo’s response to Darryl’s affidavit was that he denied the allegations.

406. In terms of Minister Mahlobo’s involvement in the handling of large sums of cash, evidence was led relating to instances when large sums of cash were withdrawn and delivered to Mr Mahlobo.

407. The contents of an affidavit by "Dorothy", filed off record, was placed before Mr Mahlobo, in which Dorothy said that she confirmed that she had on three occasions withdrawn R4.5m on the instructions of one "Darryl" (pseudonym) to hand the money to him (Mr Mahlobo). He could not deny that the money was withdrawn as stated but denied receiving it. The evidence leader then drew Mr Mahlobo’s attention to yet another affidavit by Dorothy in response to an allegation by one Mr Mhlanga. This affidavit was also filed of record. The following part of the affidavit was read to Mr Mahlobo: “I have never told Mr Mhlanga that I have given the alleged cash withdrawals to Mr Mahlobo” - the point apparently being that she did not share what she knew with Mhlanga and not that what she alleged about Mr Mahlobo receiving money was not true. However, she went on to say that, in the absence of schedules of the cash withdrawals, she could recall only three such occasions; she made those “temporary” withdrawals in her name; went to the cashier with Lilly; money counted by cashier in front of Lilly as well who brought the bag for the money to be packed by both of them; the money would then be taken to the official residence of Mr Mahlobo in Waterkloof; twice she did so alone and twice with Lilly; she took over the task of delivering the money from Darryl, who had instructed her to use her own name; neither Darryl nor the Minister ever told her of the purpose of the money; Mr Mahlobo would usher her in the house, count the money to make sure it was R4.5m after which she would leave the money in the bag. Mr Mahlobo’s response to all these was that, to the extent that his name was mentioned, he denied the allegations. Mr Mahlobo and his counsel objected to the use of this affidavit on the ground that it was just received that morning. I ruled in their favour and Mr Mahlobo said he was not going to deal with it.

408. Under the heading “Cash delivered to Minister Mahlobo”, witness "Darryl" says Ambassador Mahlobo would request money from the CDSO for his own project, something which did not sit well with him as he did not think that a Minister should be handling cash from CDSO. He says on one occasion he was required to deliver cash to Mr Mahlobo. He said that he noticed that SSA members, such as Frank (pseudonym), were withdrawing large amounts of money on a monthly basis. On one occasion he asked Frank what the money he had withdrawn was for and Frank counted the money into different bundles, allocating them to some projects until there was a surplus, which Darryl put in a safe in his office. Darryl assumed that Frank must have told Ambassador Mahlobo about the surplus because he later got a call from Mr Mahlobo requesting money for the ANC Women’s League. Darryl says that he handed over the money, on Mr Mahlobo’s instructions, to his Chief of Staff, one "Jay" (pseudonym), at OR Tambo Airport. Jay was in the company of someone else, one Vukhani; he did not make them sign any acknowledgement for the receipt of the funds because the delivery of the cash was on the Minister’s instructions. In his response to what Darryl said, Mr Mahlobo denied being involved in operations, or that Darryl delivered cash to him; he also denied requesting money for the ANC Women’s League.

409. Witness "Stevens’s" affidavit, attested to on 18 November 2020, was filed off record. Certain paragraphs, under the heading “Further information regarding the payment of Judges by Minister Mahlobo from SSA covert funds”, were put to Mr Mahlobo for his response. Stevens said that records showed that one Dr Langa (then Director of the Domestic Branch of the SSA) authorised the withdrawal of R12m cash from the Special Operations budget; Dr Langa himself also told him so. Dr Langa said the money, packed into paper bags, was received by SSA Special Operations Frank for delivery to Minister Mahlobo for payments to Judges to influence the Judiciary. Frank was the Project Manager of Project Justice with the CDSO under Mr Dlomo. In turn, Frank informed Stevens that he delivered the R12m to Minister Mahlobo who, in Frank’s presence, removed R4m cash saying was payment to judges who were his operatives. The rest of the money was for other Special Operations ran by Mr Mahlobo. Mr Mahlobo’s response to this evidence was that the allegations were false, and put the Judiciary into disrepute; he said the person who came up with those allegations was the same person who made false allegations against a certain politician and the head of a Chapter 9 institution and was continuing to do so before the Commission; Mr Mahlobo denied that there was any money delivered to him; he disputed all the above evidence. Stevens also said that he was aware of the pressure that Minister Mahlobo had successfully put on Ambassador Kudjoe and the Chief Financial officer, Matthew (pseudonym) for money routinely, without regard to SSA financial prescripts. Stevens said that Minister Mahlobo used to receive large sums of money for the special operations he ran.

410. It is clear from the above evidence that Minister Mahlobo received large sums of cash on some occasions. These monies cry out to be accounted for, and if they were legitimately expended, let it be so established.

411. Regarding the Intelligence White Paper, Minister Mahlobo tended not to give as much weight to the White Paper as other witnesses did, such as Mr Shaik and Ambassador Maqetuka; yet there is ample indication that it greatly informed the structure and organisation of the country’s intelligence in 1994.

412. Arising out of his heading and running of the Principal Agency Network (PAN), Mr Arther Fraser became the subject of internal investigation. A report that followed implicated him. The report was handed over to the SIU and the National Prosecuting Authority. As the Commission has as already mentioned, his prosecution was stopped by former President Zuma on the ground that it would compromise the security of the State. The extent of his alleged involvement has already been set out above when dealing with Ambassador Cwele. More evidence may be added as examples of his questionable activities.

413. Ambassador Maqetuka’s evidence was that there were several problems with the manner in which the PAN project was carried out by Mr Fraser. It was not linked to the headquarters, in that reports did not go to the headquarters; data base or engine room was housed in Mr Arthur Fraser's house yet for security and other reasons reports should go to the headquarters; violating that would be a serious violation of security protocol. These procedures were not followed; the nerve centre that received the information was located in Mr Arthur Fraser's house, to the detriment of the security of the information and of the informants who were important assets as sources; it would also amount to undermining their trust in the system and that could be treasonable in other countries. The witness summed up the problems into three main categories. Firstly, the centralisation of power in Mr Arthur Fraser regarding the project (PAN): he acted as though he was the Director-General of the SSA. Secondly, lack of accountability: there was no control by the Director-General; it became a "free-for-all" and Mr Fraser was a law unto himself. The third problem was the ability to draw large amounts of cash, while there was no accountability for it. 170. There were also serious allegations against Mr Fraser relating to PAN about the irregular acquisition of properties, vehicles and the employment of people who were either members or non-members but part of the PAN programme; these allegations could be summed up as being about the abuse of funds. Mr Njenje was firm in his evidence that the prosecution of Mr Fraser would not have compromised any national security as the President said. Mr Njenje was an expert in issues of national security; he and his team were the ones who advised the President on security and, had there been any threat to national security, they would have picked it up. The issues raised by the investigation were pure crime. It was also his evidence that about three years later, former President Zuma appointed Mr Fraser as head of State Security Agency. This was despite serious allegations against him while running the PAN as Deputy Director General Operations, for which he was suspended and later resigned. His appointment as Director-General of the SSA by former President Zuma was to be followed by allegations of abuse of power made against him, examples of which have already been set out above; one or two more may be restated to refresh the mind. There was evidence by Dr Dintwe, the IGI, of a letter by Mr Fraser telling him that his clearance certificate had been withdrawn. This was simply because Dr Dintwe had dared to launch an investigation against him. There was also his involvement in the withdrawals and handling of cash, the involvement of the SSA in political matters and the abuse of the vetting system.

414. Mr Arthur Fraser chose not to present his version to the Commission, despite the fact that the opportunity was offered to him by the Commission.

415. "Ms K" confirmed that rather than fulfilling its function to protect the Agency from internal threats, the Chief Directorate Internal Security (CDIS was weakened during "Johan's" tenure; its vetting integrity was eroded; its members became complicit in facilitating the abuse of the SSA resources, which included enabling CDSO members' illegal access to firearms, the transport of cash for CDSO operations and involvement in a parallel vetting structure. CDIS members were implicated in the robbery of R17m from a safe inside the SSA complex at Musanda in December 2015. This was confirmed by Johan and that the people were within his unit, and they were still there at the time of the evidence. Johan also facilitated the irregular removal of firearms from the SSA Armoury, such as on the occasion already mentioned at the instance of Ambassador Thulani Dlomo. This is confirmed in his own affidavit too.

416. Though civilians, members of the Gupta family featured strongly as well; it would be no exaggeration to say that they were central to state capture, if not actual perpetrators. This is particularly so if evidence in other streams of state capture is taken into consideration, such as the evidence relating to their involvement with State Owned Enterprises. They cannot escape mentioning because their relationship with former President Zuma was a catalyst in the irretrievable breakdown of the relationships between the three top intelligence officers, on the one hand, and both Ambassador Cwele as the then Minister, and former President Zuma, on the other hand. The Guptas exploited their close relationship with former President Zuma, which enabled them to wield a lot of power, as demonstrated in one instance attested to Mr Njenje. While attending a Cabinet Lekgotla in 2011, Mr Njenje was asked by one Adv Nongxina, then Director General of the Department of Mining, to accompany him and his Minister, Minister Ms Susan Shabangu, to a meeting the latter was to have with Ajay Gupta; according to the DG, Mr Njenje was to protect them as Mr Gupta was exerting pressure on the Minister.

417. Mr Njenje agreed after approval by the Minister and was told the meeting was going to be at the Sheraton Hotel; however, the Minister was later told by the former President that he knew about the meeting and that it was going to be at Mahlamba Ndlopfu (President's official residence) where, he told the Minister, Mr Ajay Gupta was waiting. When they arrived there, Mr Gupta ushered them into the President's study. The meeting was not a good one, said Mr Njenje. Mr Gupta was pressing Minister Shabangu to fast track their application for some mineral rights, in an overbearing manner. Mr Njenje intervened, reminding him that he was speaking to a Minister whereupon Mr Gupta apologized but kept on nagging. The Minister and Adv Nongxima told him that certain procedures had to be followed first and they would come back to him; he said he did not understand why things he wanted took so long; he wanted them to be done immediately. The meeting did not take long; the four of them were the only people in the meeting. The fact that the meeting was held at the President's official residence, and in his absence was, in Mr Njenje's view, for the Guptas to show how powerful they were; to show a Government Minister that she could be called to the President's study in his absence.

418. One of the witnesses, Mr Shaik, said that the country paid the price for the stopping of the investigations against the Guptas. It is probable that had investigations against them been allowed to continue, they possibly could have been deterred from engaging in some activities that amounted to state capture. They chose not to appear before the Commission to contest what was said about them.

Recommendations

419. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations to establish whether any of the persons implicated in the wrong in this report did not commit one or other crime. In particular it is recommended that law enforcement agencies conduct further investigations with a view to the NPA possibly bringing criminal charges against such people including Mr Arthur Fraser in relation to the PAN programme and any other matter revealed by the evidence before the Commission and Mr David Mahlobo and Mr Thulani Dlomo in regard to State Security Agency cash received and / or illegitimately handled by each one of them.

CRIME INTELLIGENCE

Recommendations: Quis custodiet ipsos custodes?

420. While the evidence of Col Naidoo includes claims that two Ministers of Police, one former and one present, were implicated in corrupt conduct committed by Gen Lazarus, those allegations do not appear to be corroborated by any evidence produced to the Commission. This does not mean either that there is no such evidence or that there is. Whether those allegations, and the other allegations made by Col Naidoo, justify further action against any individual depend on the evidence uncovered by those investigating the allegations in accordance with law.

421. There is evidence that Gen Mdluli appealed to President Zuma to help him in his efforts to escape from the consequences of his crimes in return for the assistance of Gen Mdluli in getting President Zuma elected. There is no evidence, however, that President Zuma responded in any way to Gen Mdluli's overture.

422. The conduct of Adv Mrwebi and Adv Jiba in relation to the withdrawal of the charges preferred against Gen Mdluli gives rise to a suspicion that there was something more sinister behind the decision to withdraw than mere professional incompetence and ineptitude. However, the evidence before the Commission does not appear to go far enough to convert the suspicion into a conclusion adverse to these two officers on a balance of probabilities.

423. There is no evidence that either Gen Lazarus or Gen Mdluli conducted their criminal depredations of the secret funds entrusted to their custody for any purpose beyond their own personal enrichment and that of their friends and family and to provide largesse to certain of those who they feared might be in a position to uncover their wrongdoing; in other words to implicate such persons in their schemes as insurance against exposure.

424. This is to place in context the crimes exposed by the evidence before the Commission; not to mitigate or minimise the extent of crimes proved to have been committed and likely to have been committed. Those identified were placed in positions of the highest trust in an institution critical to the functioning and the protection of society. They abused that trust over long periods of time for personal gain. In the process they corrupted their subordinates who should have been able to look up to them for example and guidance.

425. This topic concerns alleged and in some instances established criminal conduct by high ranking officers in SAPS. Historically and structurally, the main obstacles to the law's taking its proper course in such cases have been that the tendency of SAPS to close ranks and obstruct the investigations into the conduct of their own and, particularly, to abuse the system of classification of documents described above.

426. It is clear too that where secret state funds fall under the control of scoundrels, as the present case makes clear, only strong oversight institutions can protect the public against the harm that such scoundrels can inflict by invoking, when their conduct is called into question, the very secrecy that should exist only for the public good.

427. Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? Who will guard the guardians themselves? This question, attributed to the 1st and 2nd century AD Roman poet Juvenal, is generally considered the embodiment of the philosophical question of how those in power can be held to account. The problem is as old as the institutions themselves, created to protect against wrongdoing but by their nature as such equipped to evade detection and retribution when they go rogue.

428. Since the allegations which Col Roelofse and his team set out with such commendable determination to investigate and place before the prosecuting authorities for further action consistent with law will have seen the light of day both in evidence before the Commission and in this report, no action is needed other than to ensure that the law takes its course.

429. It is recommended that the Inspector General of Intelligence and the Auditor-General be given such access to relevant SSA records and to the secret accounts referred to in this Report as may be lawful but still that would enable them to their work efficiently including such investigation including as the Inspector-General of Intelligence and the Auditor-General may each consider necessary.

    429.1 It is recommended that all and any investigations into corrupt conduct (in the wide sense) within Crime Intelligence continue without any obstruction and receive the appropriate support from all units within SAPS; and 429.2 That those members of SAPS who have been tasked with investigating corrupt conduct within CI be given access by SAPS to all documents which may be relevant to establish whether any person may have committed any offence including corruption while at the same time ensuring that any legitimate state interest in preventing the wider dissemination of such documents is protected.

SABC

Conclusions and recommendations

430. The question to be answered is whether former President Zuma by involving himself in the formation and business activities of ANN7 acted unethically or contravened the Code of Ethics.

431. The Executive Ethics Code was published in terms of Government Gazette Notice No. 21399, Notice No. 41, Regulation 6853. The Executive Code was published in terms of section 2(1) of the Executive Members Ethics Act, 1998 (Act No. 82 of 1998). The Executive Ethics Code was published by the then Acting President JG Zuma. Members of the Cabinet, Deputy Ministers and Members of Provincial Executive Councils are obliged to comply with the Executive Members Code in performing their official responsibilities. Clause 2.3 of the Executive Ethics Code provides:

Members of the Executive may not –

(c) . . .

(d) Use their position or any information entrusted to them to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person

(f) Expose themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and their private interests.

Conflict of interest

A member should declare any personal or private financial or business interest that the member may have in a matter –

(a) That is before the cabinet or an Executive Council

(b) That is before a cabinet committee or Executive Council on which the member serves; or

(c) In relation to which the member is required to take a decision as a member of the Executive.

3.5 For the purposes of the paragraphs 3.1, 3.2, 3.3 and 3.4 the personal or private financial or business interests of a member includes any financial or business interests which to the member's knowledge, the member's spouse, permanent companion or family member has.

5. Disclosure of financial interests

5.1 Every member should disclose to the secretary particulars of all the financial interests, as set out in paragraph 6 of (a) the member; and (b) the member's spouse, permanent companion or dependent children, to the extent that the member is aware of those interests."

432. The Executive Members Ethics Act No. 82 of 1998 was intended to provide for a Code of Ethics governing the conduct of members of Cabinet, Deputy Ministers and members of Provincial Executive Councils and to provide for matters connected therewith. Its definition in section 1 provides that "Cabinet member" includes the President. The Code of Ethics that has been referred to above emanates from the provisions of section 2 of this Act as aforementioned. The Act provides –

The Code of Ethics should include provisions prohibiting cabinet members, Deputy Ministers and MECs from –

(ii) Acting in a way that is inconsistent with their office

(iii) Exposing themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and their private interests

(iv) Using their position or any information entrusted to them, to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person; and

(v) Acting in way that may compromise the credibility or integrity of their office or of the government.

433. Section 2(c)(ii) provides –

The Code of Ethics should –

(c) Require cabinet members and Deputy Ministers to disclose to an official in the office of the President designated for this purpose and MECs to disclose to an official in the office the Premier concerned designated for this purpose –

(i) All their financial interests when assuming office; and

(ii) Any financial interests acquired after their assumption of office, including any gifts, sponsored foreign travel, pensions, hospitality and other benefits of a material nature received by them or by such persons having a family or other relationship with them as may be determined in the Code of Ethics.

434. Section 3 of the Act provides that the Public Protector should investigate any alleged breach of the Code of Ethics on receipt of a complaint contemplated in section 4.

435. In this regard Term of Reference, 1.4 reads:

> Whether the President or any member of the present or previous members of his National Executive including Deputy Ministers of public official or employee of any State-owned entities (SOEs) breached or violated the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs or any organ of state to benefit the Gupta family or any other family individual or corporate entity doing business with government or any organ of state.

436. The Public Protector in her report dated 14 October 2016 and in her executive summary stated at page 4(i) of the report:

> (i) “State of Capture” is my report in terms of section 182(1)(b) of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996, and section 3(1) of the Executive Members Ethics Act and section 8(1) of the Public Protector Act, 1994.

437. In her report at page 4(vi) she stated that:

> The investigation emanates from complaints lodged against the President by Father S Mayebe on behalf of the Dominican Order, a group of Catholic Priests, on 18 March 2016, (The First Complainant); Mr Mmusi Maimane the leader of the Democratic Alliance and Leader of the Opposition in Parliament on 18 March 2016, (The Second Complainant), in terms of section 4 of the Executive Members’ Ethics Act, 82 of 1998 (“EMEA”); and a member of the public on 22 April 2016, (The Third Complainant), whose name I have withheld.

438. At page 6 she stated the following:

> 6 (vii) In his complaint Mr Maimane stated amongst other things that – "section 2.3 of the Code of Ethics states that members of the Executive may not –
> (a) Wilfully mislead the legislator to which they are accountable;
> (c) Act in a way that is inconsistent with their position
> (d) Use their position or any information entrusted to them, to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person.”
> (b) It is our contention that President Jacob Zuma may have breached the Executive Ethics Code by – (i) Exposing himself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and their “private interests (ii) Acted in a way that is inconsistent with his position; and (iii) Used their position or any information entrusted to them to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person.

439. At page 9 she stated:

439.1 The complaint relates to allegations of improper conduct in state affairs and unethical conduct by the President of the Republic and other state functionaries and accordingly falls within my ambit as the Public Protector. None of the parties challenge the jurisdiction of the Public Protector.

440. Section 96(1) of the Constitution provides:

> (a) Members of the cabinet and deputy ministers should act in accordance with a Code of Ethics prescribed by National Legislation
> (b) Members of the cabinet and deputy ministers may not act in any way that is inconsistent with their office, or expose themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibility and private interests; or
> (c) Use their position or any information entrusted to them to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person.

441. There can be no doubt that in acting as he did, in relation to the TNA and the ANN7 TV station, President Zuma acted in breach of the Executive Ethics Code. He, as President, abused his office for his own benefit, that of his son and that of his friends, the Guptas. He placed himself in a situation of a conflict of interest and abused his position as President of the country.

442. Mr Sundaram is, according to the evidence, the only witness that placed the former President in the same room with the members of the Gupta family and the managers of their entities who were attending to the formation of the ANN7.

443. The evidence of Mr Sundaram is reliable and credible. It has not been challenged by any of the implicated persons in a manner that would create doubt in its veracity. It has been confirmed by some of the implicated persons, including the former President, in many respects.

444. The members of the Gupta family had used their close relationship with President Zuma to facilitate and extend their business interests from India to South Africa. The extension of Infinity Media and the birth of the ANN7 demonstrate the broadening of such interests.

445. President Zuma had enabled the extension of such business interests for the benefit of his son, Mr Duduzane Zuma.

446. The Gupta family and in turn the President's son, Mr Duduzane Zuma, benefitted from the relationship that the Gupta family had with the President Zuma in that they entered into contracts with various State organs and, in particular the SABC, to the detriment of other potential competitors who operated within the same media space.

447. The Gupta family abused their relationship with President Zuma in that they used one of their employees, Mr Ashu Chawla, to access the Presidential residence as he pleased to liaise directly with the President and arrange and secure meetings for the members of the Gupta Family contrary to the applicable security measures within the Presidency or State protocol.

448. President Zuma enabled the members of the Gupta family as business people to occupy a place of prominence over other businessmen, to the detriment of the empowerment legislative imperatives of the Republic of South Africa.

449. President Zuma enabled, indirectly, the members of the Gupta family to abuse their relationship to the extent of flouting visa and labour laws of the country. It is not denied that through Mr Ashu Chawla visas for the Indian nationals were facilitated in a way that was contrary to law. For instance, Mr Sundaram admitted that his visa was not processed according to law.

450. The allegations made by Mr Sundaram that some of the Indian nationals were employed by the ANN7 without permits were not far-fetched because, after investigations which were conducted by the Department of Home Affairs, it was found that four employees of ANN7 who were Indian nationals had violated the conditions of their permits and were accordingly ordered to leave the country. It is not deemed necessary for the Commission to recommend any steps to be taken in this regard since such persons were ordered to leave the country way back in 2013.

451. In the light of the admitted evidence by President Zuma as stated above, President Zuma acted in breach of the provisions of section 96(1)(a); (b) and (c) of the Constitution.

452. A finding that President Zuma acted in breach of the provisions of section 2 (ii); (iii); (iv); (v); section 3.1 and 3.5 of the Executive Members Ethics Act 82 of 1998, should be made as it is consistent with President Zuma's own evidence and that of Mr Sundaram.

453. By involving himself in the conception and formation of the ANN7, President Zuma breached clauses 2.2 (d) and (f) of the Executive Ethics Code.

454. The costs incurred by the SABC for the TNA broadcasts, coupled with the provision of the relevant services to TNA by the SABC, in the amount of approximately R4 268 887.00 excluding VAT, between 01 April 2011 and 31 March 2017, should be recovered from any of the assets belonging to TNA or any assets held by the members of the Gupta Family.

455. In this regard President Zuma breached his obligations as the President of the country and those that are entrusted in him in terms of the Members Ethics Act.

456. Lastly, the evidence led and dealt with herein above justifies a finding that the investigations of the Commission have, on the established facts, proved and answered Clause 4.1 of the Terms of Reference, positively, that:

> 1.4 Whether the President or any member of the present or previous members of his National Executive (including Deputy Ministers) or public official or employee of any state owned entities (SOEs) breached or violated the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs or any organ of state to benefit the Gupta family or any other family, individual or corporate entity doing business with government or any organ of state.

457. Many of the events described in this section of the Report occurred even before 2010 and much has changed, though the SABC is still in a dire financial situation. Many of the main actors have left the stage and obviously steps against them by internal processes can no longer be taken.

458. The Guptas have left South Africa and it is not known when extradition proceedings will ensure their return to face criminal proceedings.

459. The New Age newspaper has closed down and MultiChoice did not renew its contract with the ANN7 television channel.

460. There was evidence that the remedial actions proposed by the Public Protector in her report of February 2014 had not all been followed up.

461. At the very least the appropriate investigating and prosecuting authorities should attempt to recover all monies spent through unlawful and improper actions, if that can still be done. For instance, the ± R11 million "success fee" should be recovered from Mr Motsoeneng.

462. It is clear from the evidence relating to the New Age newspaper and the creation of the ANN7 television channel that the Gupta family and their associates had a close relationship with President Zuma and that he showed a particular interest in their ventures. Mr Motsoeneng, having regard to his own utterances as described by witnesses, and in some instances recorded, saw himself (and probably was) the facilitator between President Zuma and at the very least the news section of the SABC. Whether this was for President Zuma's personal benefit is impossible to say, but there is clear evidence that it benefited the ANC, and his son Mr Duduzane Zuma.

463. It is further recommended that the SABC should consider instituting civil proceedings against TNA Media or any of its Directors and recover all the costs incurred by the SABC including disgorgement of profits made by TNA Media in relation to the breakfast shows. Former President Zuma had a 30% share in Infinity Media, a Gupta family company.

464. A number of witnesses gave credible evidence of editorial interference with reference to specific events that were not allowed either to be broadcast or to be commented upon. Former Minister

Muthambi handed the reign over SABC editorials to Mr Motsoeneng, as it was put, and allowed him to act above the law.

465. One must wholly agree with the view expressed by Mr Makhathini, the Chairperson since 2017, that "depoliticizing is of paramount importance in the renewal, rehabilitation and strengthening of governance systems. Appointing competent and credible executives with the prerequisite skills and experience is at the heart of the renewal process."

466. A statutory offence with severe penalties should be created dealing with the abuse of power by public officials in all spheres of government and organs of state. Abuse of power has become endemic in South Africa. It is a recurrent theme almost everywhere, as it was at the SABC, be it by Ministers, members of the Board or Executives.

467. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct further investigations with a view to a possible criminal prosecution of Ms Lulama Mokhobo, former Group Chief Executive Officer of SABC, and Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng for possible contravention of section 38(1)(b) and (c) of the Public Finance Management Act, in the case of Ms Mokhobo, and of section 45(b) and (c) of the PFMA, in the case of Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng, in respect of their respective roles in the conclusion of the agreement between the SABC and TNA Media (Pty) Ltd in respect of the so-called TNA Breakfast Briefings.

PRASA

468. Insofar as the awards of the Swifambo and Siyangena tenders is concerned, it bears reiterating that according to the National Head of the DPCI, Lt General Lebeya, the investigations into the criminal complaints relating to those two matters is quite advanced. In the circumstances, as regards these matters, the following recommendations are made.

469. First, as regards the Swifambo matter, it is recommended that the President takes steps to ensure, through the relevant members of the Executive that the following happens:

    469.1 All DPCI investigations relating to possible criminal conduct at PRASA are finalised as soon as possible

    469.2 The NDPP immediately appoints a team to oversee the investigations and the prosecutions of those suspected of committing criminal offences in respect of wrongdoing at PRASA; and

    469.3 In deciding whom to prosecute, the DPCI and the NDPP, in addition to the documents that they have already collated or are in the process of collating, have due regard to the evidence led at Commission, the documents that served before the Commission, the documents that formed part of the record in the review application, and the documents that Mr Ramatlakane's current Board has uncovered recently.

470. Based on the foregoing, it is further recommended that:

    470.1 Serious consideration be given to prosecuting the following senior employees who played a role in the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo: Mr Montana; Mr Mthimkulu; and Mr Chris Mbatha

    470.2 The roles of the following persons, who were members of the BEC that made the recommendation that the locomotives tender be awarded to Swifambo, be examined to determine whether they, or any of them, should be prosecuted: Ms Shezi; Mr Khumalo; Mr Mahlobogwane; Mr Nkosi; and Mr Magoro

470.3 The roles of the following persons, who were members of the CTPC, be investigated to determine whether they, or any of them, should be prosecuted: Mr Holele; Mr Mbatha; Mr Mathobela; Ms Motshologane; Mr Bopape; Ms Ngoye; Ms Shezi; and Mr Khuzwayo

470.4 The prosecutions of Mr Mashaba and Mr Mabunda be speeded up

470.5 The roles of others who may have received undue benefits from the award of the locomotives contract to Swifambo, as detailed in the Reports of Mr Sacks and the liquidators, be examined to determine whether or not they should be prosecuted; and

470.6 The NDPP consider instituting a prosecution, in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA, against the following members of the PRASA Board which approved the recommendation that the locomotives contract be awarded to Swifambo: Mr Buthelezi; Dr Gasa; Mr Khena; Ms Moore; Mr Nkoenyane; Mr Salanje; and Mr Montana.

471. Second, as regards the Siyangena matter, it is recommended that the President take steps to ensure, through the relevant members of the Executive, that the following happens:

471.1 All DPCI investigations relating to possible criminal conduct at PRASA are finalised as soon as possible

471.2 The NDPP immediately appoints a team to oversee the investigations and the prosecutions of those suspected of committing criminal offences in respect of wrongdoing at PRASA; and

471.3 In deciding whom to prosecute, the DPCI and the NDPP, in addition to the documents that they have already collated or are in the process of collating, have due regard to the evidence led at Commission, the documents that served before the Commission, the documents that formed part of the record in the review application, and any further documents that the current PRASA Board may have uncovered recently.

472. Based on the foregoing, it is further recommended that serious consideration be given to prosecuting the following PRASA employees who played a role in the conclusion of the two impugned contracts: Mr Montana; Mr Gantsho; and Ms Ngubane.

473. It is further recommended that the NDPP considers instituting a prosecution, in terms of section 86(2) of the PFMA, against the PRASA Board or any of its members who approved the award of the contracts with Siyangena.

474. Third, as regards Mr Montana's property dealings, it is recommended that it is recommended that the President takes steps to ensure, through the relevant members of the Executive that the following happens:

474.1 The DPCI finalises as soon as possible its investigations into the sale by Mr Montana of the Parkwood Property to Mr Van der Walt's Precise Trade and the assistance that Precise Trade or Mr Van der Walt gave to Mr Montana to pay the deposit for the Hurlingham Property and any of the other properties he acquired or sought to acquire and the assistance that Mr Van der Walt gave to Mr Gantsho to acquire the property in the Point area in Durban; and

474.2 The NDPP immediately appoints a team to oversee the investigation into and the prosecution of Mr Montana, Mr Van der Walt and Siyangena (and/or its associated companies) for possible contraventions of sections 12 and/or 13 of the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act.

475. In conclusion, it should be noted that many, many days of the Commission's hearings have been devoted to allegations of the capture of PRASA and strident denials thereof, especially by Mr Montana. However, this leaves one with the uneasy perception that there is much about the ills at PRASA that has not yet been uncovered. That perception is reinforced by what has been set out in the previous sections relating to the instability at PRASA, which was exacerbated by the unacceptable delays in having no permanent Board or a permanent Group CEO appointed for more than three years and five years, respectively, and also what appears of late to be a harking back to the Montana-style of leadership. If a general recommendation is not made about these matters, it is unlikely that PRASA will recover. A special commission of inquiry should therefore be appointed to examine specifically the following matters: why PRASA was allowed to slide into almost total ruin; who should be held responsible for that; and who could have benefited from that unacceptable state of affairs.

THE CLOSURE OF THE BANK ACCOUNTS OF THE GUPTAS

Conclusions

476. In December 2015 and 2016 four banks closed the bank accounts of companies owned or controlled by or linked to the Gupta family. They were First National Bank, Standard Bank, ABSA and Nedbank. Term of Reference 7.1 required the Commission to investigate, inquire and determine:

> Whether any member of the National Executive and including Deputy Ministers, unlawfully or corruptly or improperly intervened in the matter of the closing of banking facilities for Gupta owned companies.

477. Some of the banks which closed the bank accounts of the Gupta companies were prepared to have a discussion with their clients before they could terminate their relationship with them but others appeared not to have been prepared to have such a discussion and thought that all they needed to do was to give their client a reasonable notice of the termination of the relationship. In Bredenkamp and Others v Standard Bank of SA Ltd the Supreme Court of Appeal decided that a bank was not obliged to hear its client's side of the story before the bank could terminate the relationship. It seems that the Supreme Court of Appeal's basis for this decision was that the relationship between a bank and a client is a contractual one.

478. Representatives of banks who testified before this Commission revealed that the banking industry is regulated or is subject to many laws. Banks possess an enormous amount of power. This would become very clear if all the banks were to refuse that you hold an account with them. You would not be able to run any serious business without being able to open a bank account. If you already had a bank account and all the banks in which you have accounts terminated their relationship with you that would be devastating. If you were running a serious business, you would need to close down that may result in job losses. Depending on the size of the business one may be talking about hundreds or thousands of people who would lose jobs. The workers would have to suffer serious consequences even though they may not have done anything wrong themselves.

479. In this day and age in South Africa it is unacceptable that an institution as powerful as a bank should have no obligation to hear – whether in a discussion or in writing - what a client has to say before the bank may close that client's account on suspicion that the client may be involved in illegal or corrupt transactions. It does not appear to be in line with the kind of society that our Constitutional democracy envisages. A decision to close a client's bank account on those grounds is a decision that could have far reaching consequences for the client and others and it is only fair that banks be required to afford their clients the opportunity to be heard or to make representations to show if they are able to, that there are no grounds for the bank to be concerned. The bank may be persuaded or it may not be persuaded. The bank would need to afford the client a proper opportunity to be heard and should not just go through the motions or pay lip service to the principle of audi alteram partem (hear the other side).

480. The fact that the relationship between a bank and a client may be contractual is neither here nor there because there are other relationships which are or were at some stage contractual in nature and Parliament intervened in order to infuse the notion of fairness in the relationship. The first of those is the employment relationship. Under the common law an employer had all the power to terminate an employment relationship for a good reason or for a bad reason or for no reason at all and there was very little that an employee could do about such a termination. Labour legislation was enacted to infuse fairness into the employer-employee relationship and, now, an employer must have a fair reason to terminate the relationship and must follow a fair process to do so. The same applies to certain leases. Some legislation requires that certain tenants be treated fairly. Illegal occupiers of land also need to be treated fairly. In our legal system even those who are accused of rape and murder are not sent to jail without being given an opportunity to tell their side of the story. There is no reason why Banks should not be required to observe this basic principle.

Recommendations

481. It is therefore recommended that relevant existing legislation governing banks be amended to introduce this requirement of fairness or, if warranted, a new piece of legislation be enacted which will make this a requirement.

THE CONCEPT OF STATE CAPTURE

MR MALUSI GIGABA AND THE EVIDENCE OF MS NOMACHULE MNGOMA

482. It has already been recommended (in the Report on Transnet) that, based on the evidence of Witness 3, the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to the cash payments allegedly received by him during visits to the Gupta residence in Saxonwold (during the period July to December 2013).

483. Similarly, it is recommended that, based on the evidence of Ms Mngoma, the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to the cash payments received by him during visits to the Gupta residence in Saxonwold in or about 2013.

484. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on charges of corruption as contemplated in Chapter 2 of PRECCA and on racketeering charges in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA in relation to the employment of his sister, Ms Nozipho Gigaba, by Sahara Computers in or about 2013.

485. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct such further investigations as may be necessary with a view to the possible prosecution of Mr Gigaba on a charge of corruption in terms of Chapter 2 of PRECCA and / or a racketeering charge in terms of Chapter 2 of POCA, to determine whether:

    485.1 The Guptas gave Mr Gigaba about R4 to R5 million in cash that was used to pay for the Gigaba wedding in August 2014

    485.2 The Guptas paid for the trip taken by Mr Gigaba and Ms Mngoma to Dubai in or about 2014 / 2015

    485.3 The Guptas gave Mr Gigaba cash used to effect renovations to his late father's home in Mandeni, KwaZulu-Natal in or about 2013 / 2014

    485.4 The Guptas gave Mr Gigaba R425 000 (or more) to pay off the debts of his sister, Ms Nozipho Gigaba, in or about 2013

485.5 Mr Ajay Gupta gave Mr Gigaba two watches in Dubai during a trip there in or about 2013 – 2015; and

485.6 The cash (or part thereof) used by Mr Gigaba to pay his children's school fees (or part thereof) in 2015 - 2021 emanated from the Guptas.

PARLIAMENTARY OVERSIGHT

Summary of recommendations

486. In what follows the Commission summarises the recommendations it has made above.

486.1 It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether it would be desirable for it to establish a committee whose function is, or includes, oversight over acts or omissions by the President and Presidency, which are not overseen by existing portfolio committees.

486.2 It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether introducing a constituency-based (but still proportionally representative) electoral system would enhance the capacity of Members of Parliament to hold the executive accountable. If Parliament considers that introducing a constituency-based system has this advantage, it is recommended that it should consider whether, when weighed against any possible disadvantages, this advantage justifies amending the existing electoral system.

486.3 It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether it would be desirable to enact legislation which protects Members of Parliament from losing their party membership (and therefore their seats in Parliament) merely for exercising their oversight duties reasonably and in good faith.

486.4 It is recommended that Parliament should consider amending section 6(1) of the Intelligence Services Oversight Act 40 of 1994, so as to ensure that, before an election, the outgoing JSCI is required to report to Parliament on as much as possible of the period preceding the election.

486.5 It is recommended that Parliament ensures that adequate funds are allocated, particularly to portfolio committees, to enable effective parliamentary oversight.

486.6 It is recommended that, subject to budgetary restraints, the scale and skills of the research and technical assistance made available to the portfolio committees be enhanced.

486.7 It is recommended that Parliament needs to make it clear that the practice of late submissions to portfolio committees will not be tolerated.

486.8 It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether there is a need to legislate on the issue of reports by representatives of the executive to Parliament.

486.9 It is recommended that Parliament needs to make clear that non-attendance by ministers and others scheduled to attend portfolio committee meetings will not be tolerated and to ensure that consequences are visited on those who offend without adequate cause. (Parliament should consider whether there is a need to legislate on this issue.

486.10 It is recommended that Parliament implement a system to "track and monitor" implementation (or non-implementation) by the executive of corrective action proposed in reports adopted by Parliament.

486.11 It is recommended that Parliament establish an Oversight and Advisory Section to provide advice, technical support, co-ordination, and tracking and monitoring mechanisms on issues arising from oversight and accountability activities of Members of Parliament and the committees to which they belong.

486.12 It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether it supports the principle of "amendatory accountability" and, if it does, whether it would be desirable to give detailed substance to this principle in an Act of Parliament, along the lines suggested in the Corder report.

486.13 If Parliament should not be minded to enact legislation of the above type, the Commission is of the view that consideration should be given by Parliament to amendments to its own rules, with a view to addressing the problem of ministers who fail to report back to Parliament on what if anything has been done in respect of remedial measures proposed by Parliament or on alternative methods preferred by them to address defective performance highlighted by Parliament.

487. The Commission supports the recommendation that, with the support of a majority of members of a portfolio committee, a portfolio committee could put a minister to terms in respect of remedial action, and could thereafter, through the Speaker, intercede with the President, as head of the national executive, in the event of non-compliance. The Leader of Government Business could also play a role in such a process.

488. It is recommended that Parliament should consider whether more representatives of opposition parties should be appointed as chairs of portfolio committees.

489. It is recommended that Parliament consider whether it is desirable to amend its rules to give effect to the proposals by Corruption Watch on appointments by Parliament.

STATE CAPTURE-DERIVED FUNDS

The offshore laundering of state capture proceeds of crime

490. Billions of Rands were paid to the Gupta Enterprise as kickbacks related to state capture contracts. If the South African state is to recover any of these amounts from offshore, it will first have to trace the current whereabouts of these funds. To this end it is recommended that:

490.1 South African authorities should urgently engage with HSBC to require HSBC to assist in the tracing and dissipation of the funds out of Tequesta, Regiments Asia and Morningstar and into the Hong Kong/China laundry network using HSBC accounts.

490.2 The Financial Intelligence Centre (FIC) and the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) should engage with their counterparts in Hong Kong and China to seek their assistance in the tracing and dissipation of the funds out of Tequesta, Regiments Asia and Morningstar and into the Hong Kong / China laundry network using HSBC accounts.

490.3 The FIC and the NPA should engage with their counterparts in the UAE to seek their assistance in the tracing and dissipation of the funds out of the Tequesta and Regiments Asia accounts in Dubai.

490.4 If the current whereabouts of any proceeds of state capture payments made to Tequesta, Regiments Asia or Morningstar can be located, the Asset Forfeiture Unit (AFU) of the NPA should approach its counterparts in the relevant jurisdiction(s) with a view towards having those proceeds frozen and then forfeited to the South African State as proceeds of state capture crimes.

The South African laundering of state capture proceeds of crime

491. Tracing the flows of state capture proceeds of crime has revealed the existence of widespread sophisticated money laundering networks operating within South Africa. The money laundering networks used by the Gupta Enterprise were complex, well established and embedded in a pre-existing milieu of criminality and wrongdoing. The money laundering networks appear to service criminal enterprises straddling offences currently regulated and policed by multiple enforcement agencies and have links with international money laundering networks with multi billion rand turnovers.

492. It appears that thus far, enforcement action against these networks has been confined primarily to forfeiture orders issued by the South African Reserve Bank. Important though these forfeiture orders are, they are unlikely to have any significant deterrent effect on the domestic money laundering networks because the scale of their operations is such that forfeiture orders can be absorbed as a cost of doing business. If money laundering is to be brought under control in South Africa, it is essential that those controlling and participating in the domestic money laundering networks in South Africa are prosecuted and subjected to asset forfeiture proceedings so that the costs of the money laundering profession can be made to outweigh its benefits.

493. Sections 4 to 6 of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act 108 of 1998 create statutory money laundering offences in the following terms:

> 4. Money laundering
> Any person who knows or ought reasonably to have known that property is or forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities and-
> (a) Enters into any agreement or engages in any arrangement or transaction with anyone in connection with that property, whether such agreement, arrangement or transaction is legally enforceable or not; or (b) Performs any other act in connection with such property, whether it is performed independently or in concert with any other person, which has or is likely to have the effect-
> (i) Of concealing or disguising the nature, source, location, disposition or movement of the said property or the ownership thereof or any interest which anyone may have in respect thereof; or (ii) . . .
> shall be guilty of an offence.
> 5. Assisting another to benefit from proceeds of unlawful activities
> Any person who knows or ought reasonably to have known that another person has obtained the proceeds of unlawful activities, and who enters into any agreement with anyone or engages in any arrangement or transaction whereby-
> (a) The retention or the control by or on behalf of the said other person of the proceeds of unlawful activities is facilitated; or
> (b) The said proceeds of unlawful activities are used to make funds available to the said other person or to acquire property on his or her behalf or to benefit him or her in any other way, shall be guilty of an offence.
> 6. Acquisition, possession or use of proceeds of unlawful activities
> Any person who-
> (a) Acquires
> (b) Uses; or
> (c) Has possession of,
> property and who knows or ought reasonably to have known that it is or forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities of another person, shall be guilty of an offence.

494. The evidence contained in the three reports of Mr Holden to the Commission should provide ample basis for the investigation and prosecution of a wide range of individuals under sections 4 to 6 of POCA for their role in laundering proceeds of state capture crimes. It is accordingly recommended that the National Prosecuting Authority consider the three reports of Mr Holden with a view to instituting criminal prosecutions under sections 4 to 6 of POCA against persons involved in laundering the proceeds of state capture crimes.

495. However, one of the hallmarks of the money laundering networks that laundered proceeds of state capture crimes within South Africa was their flexibility. As soon as particular companies were exposed as laundry vehicles, the networks were able to bypass those companies and to reroute state capture funds through different entities built into different networks. So, prosecutions for historical contraventions alone, are unlikely to make much of an impact on the money laundering industry within South Africa unless they are part of a sustained ongoing process to target that criminal industry.

496. How best to target money laundering within South Africa is not something that this Commission can prescribe. It is possible however to make a number of general observations in this regard:

496.1 First, because the money laundering industry services a range of criminal enterprises operating across fields regulated or policed by different regulatory and law enforcement agencies, a holistic approach is required on the side of government. A coordinated and co-operative approach to targeting money laundering is required from all of the relevant enforcement agencies, and at least the:

496.1.1 Asset Forfeiture Unit of the NPA

496.1.2 Directorate of Priority Crime Investigation (Hawks)

496.1.3 Financial Intelligence Centre (FIC)

496.1.4 Investigating Directorate of the NPA (ID)

496.1.5 South African Revenue Service (SARS)

496.1.6 South African Reserve Bank (SARB); and

496.1.7 Special Investigating Unit.

496.2 Second, it is necessary to use the anti-money laundering resources of the banks in a more proactive manner than is currently the case. The South African Anti-Money Laundering Integrated Task Force ("SAMLIT") has been set up under the auspices of the FIC to enable banks to share with each other and with the authorities anonymised information and to discuss general trends. However, the absence of a statutory framework providing for the controlled sharing of detailed anti-money laundering information by banks appears remain an obstacle to fighting financial crime.

496.3 Third, there is a need to investigate the effectiveness of the current system of suspicious transaction and cash threshold reporting to the FIC under the FIC Act. If banks are failing to make the necessary reports to the FIC, the FIC needs to take action against them, but if Banks are making the necessary reports to the FIC but no action is being taken against the money laundering networks, that suggests either a flaw in the current system or its implementation by the FIC and downstream enforcement agencies. In this context, the Commission recommends that the FIC should conduct an urgent review into:

496.3.1 The compliance of the South African banks with the FIC Act in relation to proceeds of state capture laundered through accounts held by them, identifying whether, and to what extent, the FIC was alerted to these activities by reports under the FIC Act

496.3.2 What action was taken by the FIC pursuant to any relevant reports received from South African banks in this regard

496.3.3 What reports or recommendations were made by the FIC to other law enforcement agencies; and

496.3.4 What steps, if any, were taken by those enforcement agencies to act on the recommendations of the FIC.

THE ACQUISITION OF OPTIMUM COAL MINE

497. There are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Duduzane Zuma, Mr Salim Essa, Ms Ronica Ragavan, Mr Ashu Chawla and members of the Gupta family may be guilty of contravening section 2 of POCA. In the circumstances it is recommended that law enforcement agencies should conduct such further investigation as may be necessary with a view to the possible criminal prosecution of the said persons by the NPA.

THE EVIDENCE OF LORD PETER HAIN

498. Lord Hain was asked to comment on a possible recommendation that public officials above a certain level as well as executives of companies wishing to do business undergo compulsory and regular lifestyle audits. He commented favourably on the suggestion, noting that this would supplement the proposal in relation to unexplained wealth orders.

THE EVIDENCE RELATING TO MR DUDUZANE ZUMA

499. The outline of evidence above shows that Mr D Zuma was a shareholder in several Gupta-related companies and thereby stood to gain financially from contracts awarded to those companies. In some instances, Mr D Zuma appears to have taken part in the decision-making that would lead to the award of those contracts by SOEs to the Gupta-linked companies.

500. Mr D Zuma also seems to have been involved in the appointment of key individuals in SOEs, who in turn facilitated the capture of those SOEs. He also seems to have acted as a conduit between the Guptas and government, particularly his father, Mr JG Zuma. In several cases, Mr D Zuma was present when bribes were offered to individuals at the Guptas' Saxonwold residence.

501. It is recommended that the law enforcement agencies conduct investigations whether Mr D Zuma has not committed any offence by facilitating acts of corruption or by facilitating bribes or by failing to report corruption that may have been committed in his presence by Mr Tony Gupta when he offered a bribe to Mr Mcebisi Jonas, Mr Mxolisi Dukwana and Mr Vusi Kona.

GOVERNANCE OF SOEs

Evaluation of the File contents from the point of view of the Commission

502. Although the File documents envisage the formalisation of the appointment processes including a limited form of public involvement (the public may be invited to identify candidates) the Nomination and Selection of candidates remain firmly controlled by the relevant Government Minister. It is difficult to see why the proposed system will be any better placed to deal with state capture than it was before. There are no effective mechanisms which would prevent cronyism and cadre deployment from continuing to dominate appointment to the Boards and to senior executive officers.

503. The recommendations of the Commission, it is submitted, should insist on a truly independent and transparent process free from political manipulations so that the ultimate appointment made by a Minister is genuinely the result of a merit-based selection process.

AMENDED RECOMMENDATIONS: APPOINTMENTS TO BOARDS AND EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF STATE-OWNED ENTERPRISES

504. In the circumstances the Commission recommends the establishment of a Standing Appointment and Oversight Committee tasked to ensure, by way of a public hearing, that any person nominated for Board appointment or as the Chief Executive Officer, Chief Financial Officer, or Chief Procurement Officer of an SOE meets the professional, reputational and eligibility requirements for such a position. The Committee will also investigate and act upon any complaints received concerning the misconduct of any Board member or senior executive in the discharge of his or her duties.

505. The relevant recommendation reads as follows:

Recommendation for appointments to the boards and to executive office of state-owned enterprises

506. It is hereby recommended that in order to ensure a transparent process for the appointment of appropriately qualified and experienced persons of high integrity to the Boards of state-owned enterprises and to senior executive positions therein, the Government should introduce legislation:

506.1 To create a Standing Appointment and Oversight Committee having the powers and functions set out in 33.5 below:

506.1.1 To provide for the relevant shareholder Minister to make appointments to the Boards of SOEs and to senior executive office in accordance with 14 and 15.3 below

506.1.2 To appoint an Adjudicator having the powers and functions set out in 15 and 16 below.

506.2 The powers and functions of the Standing Appointment and Oversight Committee are:

506.2.1 To invite, receive and assess by way of a transparent and public process nominations for appropriately qualified and experienced persons of high integrity willing to accept appointment to fill any vacancy on the Board of a State-Owned enterprise or in a senior executive post

506.2.2 To recommend to the shareholder Minister concerned the names of at least one but not more than three of the best qualified candidates suitable for appointment for every vacancy on the Board or senior executive post

506.2.3 To follow the procedures set out in 15 below

506.2.4 To publish a Code of Conduct which will be binding on Board members and senior executives; and 506.2.5 To receive and investigate complaints relating to any misconduct alleged against a Board member or person holding a senior executive post and to pronounce on the merit of the complaint and the steps which should be taken to deal with it.

507. The relevant shareholder Minister shall, upon receipt of any nominations from the Committee, either:

507.1 Proceed to appoint the nominee, where a single nomination has been made, or one of the nominees, where more than one nomination has been made, to the Board or senior executive post in the relevant state-owned enterprise; or

507.2 Provide the Committee with a written explanation within thirty days from the receipt of the Committee's nomination/s setting out why, in the opinion of the Minister, the nominee/s is not or are not appropriately qualified or appropriately experienced or of high integrity.

507.3 If the shareholder Minister neither approves any candidate nominated by the Committee nor provides a written explanation for withholding such approval within the said thirty days the matter shall proceed in accordance with the process set out in 16 below.

508. Where the Minister:

508.1 Responds in terms of 14.2 above in the case of a single nomination made by the Committee, the Committee should proceed to identify and nominate an alternative candidate for such appointment, and if that alternative nomination is not approved by the Minister, the matter shall proceed in accordance with the process set out in 5 below

508.2 Responds in terms of 14.2 above in the case of two or three nominations having been made by the Committee, and has provided the reasons for not so approving then the Committee shall, if it regards the Minister's reasons as valid, proceed to identify and nominate alternative candidates for the Minister to consider for appointment, and again rank such further nominations in accordance with its preference, and if the shareholder Minister also rejects the alternative nominations the matter shall proceed in accordance with the process set out in 16 below; or

508.3 Where the Committee does not accept the written explanation of the Minister as constituting a valid objection to the lack of appropriate qualification or appropriate experience or to the integrity of the nomination/s, or if the Minister neither approves any candidate nominated by the Committee nor provides a written explanation for withholding such approval within the said thirty days the matter shall proceed in accordance with the process set out in 5 below.

509. Where the Minister has failed to make an appointment either from the original list of nominees or from any alternative list of nominees where such has been provided, then the person ranked first in the single list provided to the Minister, or the person ranked first in the alternative list provided to the Minister as the case may be shall be appointed by the Minister.

510. The Committee shall comprise the following persons who shall serve a term of three years:

510.1 A retired Judge, nominated by the Chief Justice, who will preside as Chairperson of the Committee

510.2 The Minister of Finance or his delegate

510.3 A senior legal practitioner appointed by the Chairperson of the Legal Practice Council

510.4 A senior representative from the business community appointed by The National Economic Development and Labour Council

510.5 A senior Trade Union representative appointed by The National Economic Development and Labour Council

510.6 A registered Auditor appointed by the Chairperson of the Independent Regulatory Board for Auditors

510.7 An industry expert appointed by the SOE concerned; and 510.8 A senior representative of an established anti-corruption non-profit organisation operating in the private sector such organisation to be identified by the Chairperson of the Committee.

ANTI-STATE CAPTURE AND CORRUPTION COMMISSION

511. It is recommended that a permanent Commission be established the main function of which will be to investigate, publicly expose acts of state capture and corruption in the way that this Commission did over the past four years, make findings and recommendations to the President. Such a Commission could be called the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission. In addition, since it has been found by this Commission that the failure of Parliament to hold the executive, particularly President Zuma, accountable contributed to the Gupta-Zuma state capture, it will be necessary for the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission to keep an eye on how Parliament performs its oversight function and whether, in respect of any particular matters, it is performing or it has performed its oversight function effectively and has held the Executive including the President, accountable. Where the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission is of the view that Parliament has failed or is failing to perform its oversight function effectively and has not effectively held the executive effectively to account, it should step in, investigate the matter itself properly and call upon anyone to appear before it, testify and answer questions that may be put to him or her by the Chairperson of the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission in public and in the full glare of cameras unless the Chairperson decides in a particular matter that that should not happen in public. It should have power to call anyone within the National Executive and officials of government departments, state owned entities and members of Boards of Directors of state owned entities or anyone in the private sector including private businesses. However, it will be important for the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission to ensure that as a norm evidence before it and any questioning of persons who appear before it is done publicly and with the media including television being allowed in the hearing and that it is only in really exceptional cases that the Chairperson of the Commission may decide that the giving of certain evidence and / or the questioning of any person be done with the public excluded. An example of such cases is where the hearing of particular evidence publicly could endanger national security or where some other strong grounds exist to justify the hearing of such evidence with the public excluded.

512. That there should be a structure that can play this role in relation to Parliament arises out of the fact that the Gupta-Zuma state capture could have been prevented or stopped in its tracks quite early around 2012 and 2013 if Parliament had not been prevented by the ANC majority from performing its oversight function and from properly and effectively holding President Zuma to account. However, whenever the opposition parties tried to do the right thing for the country and the people of South Africa and sought answers from the President about his friendship with the Guptas the ANC majority shielded President Zuma and he was able to continue with his friendship with the Guptas to the detriment of South Africa.

513. With the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission, it will be possible for the Commission to call upon the President to appear before it and answer questions relating to certain matters. Anyone involved in acts of state capture and corruption should dread the day he or she may appear before the Commission and be subjected to intense questioning in front of the nation and in the full glare of TV cameras. That is not to say that the Commission will necessarily be hostile to those who appear before it but that it will take its job very seriously, it will act without fear or favour or prejudice and will ask the difficult questions that should be asked in the interest of the public and the country. Part of its job will be to expose acts of state capture and corruption and hopefully help to contribute to the significant lowering of the level of the corruption in the country.

Composition of the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission

514. The Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission should be chaired by a Judge. Preferably, the Judge should be a retired Judge. While a Judge who is still in active service should preferably not chair the Commission or participate in it in any way, this should not be an immutable position. There is no reason why a Judge who is still in active service but is close to retirement and may be is left with one, two or three years and who is not going to be availing himself for promotion cannot be appointed to chair the Commission or to be part of the Commission for part of or the balance of the period of his or her active service. That, of course, may require that an acting Judge be appointed to perform the duties in Court that would have been performed by that Judge if he or she had not been appointed to the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission.

515. The Chairperson of the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission should have power to appoint evidence leaders and investigations and other personnel that he or she considers the Commission needs and will do a good job. The Composition of the Anti-State Capture and Corruption Commission should include a Secretary and such support staff as may be necessary in order to enable the Commission to perform its function effectively and competently. The evidence leaders and investigators should be people who will perform their respective functions without fear, favour or prejudice. It should not be people who may think that doing their job fearlessly in the Commission may mean that Government will no longer give them work when they leave the Commission.

516. When the President needs to appoint the Chairperson of the Commission, he should approach the Chief Justice and request him or her to give him the name of a Judge who should be appointed by the President. The Chief Justice may then give the President one or two or three names and leave it to the President to choose one from those. The President should not himself or herself indicate any preference to the Chief Justice.

517. The Commission should prepare reports from time to time and submit them to the President at certain intervals.

THE PRESIDENT MUST BE ELECTED DIRECTLY BY THE PEOPLE

518. In terms of South Africa's electoral system the voters do not elect the President of the country. They vote for political parties. The political parties that get a sufficient number of voters during national and provincial elections send a certain number of people to Parliament in accordance with a certain formula. A political party represented in Parliament may withdraw any of its members serving in Parliament and replace him or her. There is not much an individual can do about it. With regard to a President, he or she first gets put on the list of a political party and takes an oath as a member of Parliament and, after he or she has become a member of the National Assembly, the National Assembly elects the President. When a member of the National Assembly gets elected by the National Assembly as the President, he or she ceases to be a member of the National Assembly.

519. After this Commission heard the kind of evidence it heard over a period of about four years, including the evidence played by President Zuma in helping the Guptas loot taxpayers' money in the way they did together with their associates, we are bound to ask the question: how did this country end up having as President someone who would act the way President Zuma acted? Someone that could remove as good a public servant as Mr Themba Maseko from his position just so that he could put someone else into that position who would co-operate with the Guptas and give them business? A President who would fire Minister of Finance just because his friends wanted someone else in that position who would co-operate with his friends and help them to capture the country and National Treasury? Indeed, a President who became party to a scheme created by the Guptas to remove a number of executives from their positions at Eskom so that the Guptas could put their own associates in those positions so as to facilitate the looting of Eskom?

520. The country got Mr Zuma as President because he was able to ascend to the position of President of the African National Congress and the majority of the voters in the 2009 national and provincial elections voted for the ANC. During the elections of 2009 it would have been clear to all that, if the ANC obtained the majority of voters, Mr Zuma would be the President of the country. It may well be that, despite having more than 700 charges pending against him, he would have won the majority of voters if it was a Presidential election where the voters voted for the President directly. However, there may have been voters who voted for the ANC but who would never have voted for Mr Zuma as President if they had had an opportunity not to vote for Mr Zuma and still vote for the ANC.

521. No single measure that can be recommended and put in place will on its own be adequate to prevent state capture in the future or will be adequate on its own to rid our country of corruption; it will take a number of measures that will each contribute in their own way towards that goal. As already suggested, Mr Zuma may have been helped by the fact that there may have been voters who wanted to vote for the ANC but not necessarily for Mr Zuma but felt that they had no choice but to help him because their votes helped the ANC with the election and effectively gave the ANC the prerogative to choose the President of the country. In other words, a voter who wanted to vote for the ANC but did not want Mr Zuma to be the President of the country was forced to choose between either not voting for the party that he or she liked, namely, the ANC, and thereby enhance the prospects of Mr Zuma being President of the country, or not voting at all for the political party for which he or she wanted to vote. That was a difficult choice to make. Many voters who may have found themselves in that situation may have ended up voting for the ANC and hoped that the ANC would not make Mr Zuma the President of the country. Of course, the ANC made Mr Zuma the President of the country.

522. The proposal that consideration be given to making necessary constitutional amendments to ensure that the President of the country is elected directly by the people is aimed at ensuring that anyone who becomes President of the country does so on the basis of their own popularity with the people, not on the basis that, if voters vote for a particular party, that party will make him or her President. Of course, if this recommendation is accepted and the necessary constitutional and legislative changes are made and it is implemented, that will not necessarily give the people of this country any guarantee that somebody similar to Mr Jacob Zuma or even worse than Mr Jacob Zuma will ever be elected President of the country. That possibility will always be there. In the USA Mr Donald Trump won the Presidential election against all odds. That is a good reminder that a system where the voters vote for the President directly is no guarantee that a person of a wrong character will not win the Presidential election and become the President. However, if that were to happen in South Africa after this recommendation has been accepted and implemented, the consolation would be that the people elected their own queer character or a person who had no integrity and, if he or she ever facilitated a capture of the state by private individuals or entities as Mr Zuma did, the people could blame themselves for electing such a person to the highest office in the land. It would not be that the people voted for a party and it was that party that decided who should be the President of the country.

Electoral reform

523. It is recommended that serious consideration be given to the majority recommendation on electoral reforms as given in the Report of the Electoral Task Team of January 2003. The Task Team included Dr F Van Zyl Slabbert, who was the Chairperson.
