PREFACE

What this compilation is and what it is not

1. This compilation is a summary of the more than 5,000 pages of reports released to both President Ramaphosa and the public over the past six months. The summary serves the purpose of providing a condensed version of the outputs of the Commission which offers an easy reference for public consumption, including politicians, business persons, academia, civil society, and the media. This summary is not a legal document; nor can it be used for legal purposes. Should there be any inconsistency between this report and the official version, the official version overrides what is contained in this report.
2. Some changes have been made in the editing and formatting of this compilation by the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) research team for ease of reading, making it more accessible to non-experts who are interested in a state capture narrative that has gripped the public's attention for so long. The process of summarising, simplifying and restructuring the individual reports took place over a period of about nine months with four iterations. Each researcher who worked on these documents took an oath of secrecy in front of Chief Justice Zondo and signed a confidentiality agreement.
3. Throughout the life of the Commission numerous investigators and other legal professionals and researchers made a contribution to the success of the Commission. The HSRC is proud to have been part of this momentous journey.

Brief background and context

4. The Judicial Commission of Inquiry into Allegations of State Capture, Corruption and Fraud in the Public Sector, Including Organs of State ("the Commission") is the result of remedial action taken by the Public Protector, then Adv Thuli Madonsela, in her "State of Capture" report in terms of the Public Protector Act 23 of 1994 ("the Public Protector's report"). The power of the Public Protector to take appropriate remedial action in terms of that Act is founded upon s. 182(1)(c) of the Constitution.
5. The Public Protector's report, dated 14 October 2016, was released on 2 November 2016. Then President Mr Jacob Gedleyihlekisa Zuma ("Mr Zuma" or "former President Zuma") was directed to appoint a commission of inquiry to investigate the matters identified in the report. Failing in his attempt to have the remedial action set aside, Mr Zuma was ordered by the High Court — the Full Court of the Gauteng Division, Pretoria — on 13 December 2017 to appoint this Commission. In terms of the Court's order, the Judge who would head the Commission was to be given the power "to investigate all the issues using the record of the Public Protector's investigation and the State of Capture Report, No 6 of 2016/17 as a starting point." This order echoed the wording of paragraph 8.6 of the Public Protector's remedial action. In compliance with the Court's order, and by Proclamation No. 3 of 2018 signed on 23 January 2018 ("the Proclamation"), Mr Zuma appointed this Commission.
6. Both the Public Protector's report and the High Court judgment upholding her remedial action were foundational documents that guided the Commission in discharging its mandate. The Public Protector's report, read with the High Court judgment, thus provided the background and context within which to construe the practical meaning to be given to the concept of state capture as it appeared in the Commission's Terms of Reference (TOR).
7. The essential task of the Commission, as stated in the Proclamation, was "to investigate allegations of state capture, corruption and fraud in the Public Sector including organs of state." The TOR were likewise broad in scope, speaking of the Commission being appointed "to investigate matters of public and national interest concerning allegations of state capture, corruption and fraud." Understanding what was meant by "state capture" in the context of the Public Protector's report, the judgment and order of the High Court of 13 December 2017 and the TOR was thus central to the Commission's work.
8. As a judicial commission of inquiry, the Commission functioned on a legal and constitutional foundation. It had to make findings of fact and related issues of law. It had constantly to assess whether facts concerning people and events were relevant to its mandate. The Commission's understanding of state capture guided it in determining how to approach the facts before it; in determining what conclusions or findings it could and should make; and in determining the resulting recommendations. While the concept of state capture was the central framing issue of concern for this Commission, neither the Public Protector's report nor the TOR defined the concept. There was also no legal definition of the concept to rely on. It was therefore necessary for the Commission to develop an appropriate definition of the term.

9. To paraphrase a submission made when the hearing of evidence before the Commission commenced: it bears emphasis that state capture is not just about corruption. It is not even just about widespread corruption. Corruption may be part of state capture but state capture is more than that. State capture, at least in theory, concerns a network of relationships, both inside and outside government, whose objective is to ensure the sustained exercise of undue influence over decision-making in government and organs of the state for private and unlawful gain. The Commission's purpose was to examine whether the evidence before it, considered altogether, indicated only a series of unrelated, ad hoc instances of corruption, or whether there had been a coordinated and deliberate project of state capture.

The Commission's Terms of Reference

10. Paragraph 1 of the TOR sets out in nine sub-paragraphs particular topics of investigation, some of them narrow and specific but others very wide in scope, on which findings and recommendations were required. In undertaking its inquiry, the Commission was expressly required to be guided by the Public Protector's State of Capture report, the Constitution, relevant legislation, policies and guidelines, as well as the order of the North Gauteng High Court of December 2017. Taking paragraph 1 of the TOR in context, it is clear that, while the nine particular topics of investigation were key ingredients in establishing whether or not state capture had occurred, they did not necessarily exhaust that inquiry. State capture is a subject in its own right with which the Commission was concerned and it was not simply subsumed under the concept of corruption, or particular instances of such conduct.

11. The following sub-paragraphs of paragraph 1 of the TOR guided the deliberations of the Commission.

    11.1 TOR 1.1 (the first part) required investigation into whether, and to what extent, there had been attempts to influence officials in any state institution by anyone through any form of inducement or gain.

    11.2 TOR 1.3 was broad in addressing the premature disclosure to the Gupta family or any other unauthorised person of appointments of any member of the National Executive, any functionary and / or office bearer; and if there was such improper disclosure, whether the President or any member of the National Executive was responsible for such conduct.

    11.3 TOR 1.4 encompassed the conduct of not only the President and National Executive but also of any public official or employee of any state-owned enterprise (SOE) in relation to the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs or any organ of state to benefit the Gupta family or any other family, individual or corporate entity doing business with government or any organ of state.

    11.4 TOR 1.5 was general in considering the nature and extent of corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by Schedule 2 public entities.

    11.5 TOR 1.9 was even more extensive in considering the nature and extent of corruption in the award of contracts and tenders by government departments, agencies and entities. Despite the expression "in particular", the second part of TOR 1.9 was just as broad in scope as the first part: whether any member of the National Executive (including the President), public official, functionary or any organ of state had influenced the awarding of tenders to benefit themselves, their families or entities in which they held a personal interest.

12. It is clear that the TOR were concerned particularly, although not exclusively, with the conduct of executive members of the state and the nature of their relationships with private individuals, specifically the Gupta family. Since state capture was invoked expressly in the introduction to the TOR but not in any particular line item, it must follow that state capture was regarded as the overarching animating principle for the Commission when approaching the particular subjects of investigation. The Commission's mandate was not to undertake a free-floating investigation into "state capture" of every imaginable kind, but rather to apply the concept in a focused manner when evaluating evidence on the particular subject matter of the TOR.

Conclusion

13. Alongside the formal reports in the public domain, this compilation provides another layer that tries to make the volumes of work more accessible. The state capture narrative runs through these summaries, with some parts serving as 'text-book' examples of what the Commission chose to define as state capture – notably Eskom and Transnet, and others depicting a failed attempt at state capture, such as is illustrated in the National Treasury debacle.

SOUTH AFRICAN AIRWAYS AND ITS ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

INTRODUCTION

1. This section of the report relates to the investigation into South African Airways SOC Limited (SAA) and its subsidiary, South African Airways Technical SOC Limited (SAAT) and South African Express (Pty) Ltd (SA Express).
2. The Commission investigated former Minister Hogan's allegations about the Mumbai route. The investigation concentrated on procurement by SAA and SAAT because, as the work of the Commission progressed, it became clear that acts of corruption and fraud within SOEs usually occurred in the procurement of goods and services.
3. The investigation also considered the general state of governance at SAA over a period of almost ten years to explore whether deficiencies in the entity's governance could have contributed to the acts of corruption and fraud that took place. It also examined whether the usual watchdog institutions and functionaries, such as the independent non-executive members of the SAA Board and the entity's auditors, performed their functions adequately.
4. It was revealed that there was a steady decline in the quality and effectiveness of the governance of SAA from 2012 onwards. This poor quality and ineffectiveness developed over the period that Ms Duduzile Myeni was the SAA Chairperson and her co-Board member, Ms Yakhe Kwinana, was SAAT Chairperson. During both their tenures, acts of corruption and fraud took place at SAA and SAAT. Committed managers, who tried to stand up to the increasingly unreasonable and unlawful demands of these Board members, were gradually removed from their positions. The auditors appointed to SAA for the 2012 to 2016 financial years failed dismally to detect any of this fraud and corruption. The internal audit function within SAA was also hopelessly ineffective in identifying or limiting these criminal acts.
5. The Commission's investigations into SAA and SAAT show that fraud and corruption took hold in these entities not only because of a wholesale failure of governance, but also because the conditions for state capture take hold when companies are depleted of responsible and accountable managers. State capture thrived in these entities because they were eventually being run, not in the interests of the people of South Africa, but in the interests of a select few who wielded power inside and outside of the entities.
6. The evidence reveals that Ms Myeni was promoted to Chairperson of the SAA Board despite being an underperforming Board member. She proceeded, through a mixture of negligence, incompetence and deliberate corrupt intent, to dismantle governance procedures at SAA, create a climate of fear and intimidation, and make a series of operational choices at SAA that saw it decline into a shambolic state.
7. From the time of her appointment as Chair, many SAA employees and government officials attempted to speak out against Ms Myeni and stop her from wreaking havoc at the SOE. However, these attempts were met with resistance at the highest level. Two successive Ministers of Finance were, despite their efforts, unable to remove her from office. In 2016, Minister Pravin Gordhan was forced to replace the entire SAA Board to "mitigate the harm" that its Chair was causing to the entity; "Ms Myeni and closely aligned members of the SAA Board, including Ms Kwinana, caused sustained damage to our national airline".
8. This section of the report firstly considers the SAA Board under Ms Cheryl Carolus from 2009 until the resignation of Ms Carolus and several of her colleagues in September 2012. It then considers the period from October 2012 when Ms Myeni was installed as the Acting Chairperson of the SAA Board. She was later appointed as Chairperson, a position she held until 2017. Over those five years, the SAA Board was slowly denuded of many of its members.

9. Matters came to a head in early 2014, when a majority of the Board members complained to the Minister of Public Enterprises (MPE) about Ms Myeni's leadership of the Board. Despite the seriousness of their concerns, Ms Myeni was not called to account for her conduct by the then Minister, Lynne Brown. In October 2014, Minister Brown retained Ms Myeni and those who supported her on the Board, including Ms Kwinana. By the end of 2015 and into 2016, when many of the acts of fraud and corruption were uncovered SAA and SAAT, the Board had been whittled down to only four non-executive members.

10. The management style and approach of both Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana enabled acts of fraud and corruption to engulf the entities. Decision-making was driven by the benefits that would accrue to those in charge as opposed to what was in the companies' best interests. When this type of decision-making takes place in a few instances within an SOE, it may be possible to view them as isolated criminal acts. However, when it predominates and becomes the order of the day, something else is at play. State capture had taken hold because the entity had been transformed to benefit the few rather than serving the people.

11. This part of the report details how the project of state capture took hold in SAA and SAAT, and the considerable costs of this. These costs do not just lie in the millions of Rands that are lost to the taxpayer. They lie in the broken careers of people who tried to resist its stranglehold. The costs are the emotional trauma experienced when SAA managers were subjected to unlawful and invasive state security vetting. The costs are the precarious livelihoods of those who now face joblessness because these entities were driven into the ground. Finally, the costs lie in Cabinet decision-making that is motivated by the personal preferences of a President.

12. After dealing with SAA and SAAT, the section outlines the findings of a Commission investigation into allegations that high-ranking officials in the North West provincial government colluded with SA Express functionaries to syphon millions of Rands out of the provincial government's coffers to benefit themselves, their families and the ruling party.

GOVERNANCE

Function to dysfunction

The 2009 Board

13. Ms Cheryl Ann Carolus was Chair of the SAA Board from 28 September 2009 to September 2012. Ms Carolus explained that former Minister of Public Enterprises, then Ms Barbara Hogan, ensured that the Board was familiar with its role in overseeing the corporate governance of SAA and that the members adhered to "the letter and the spirit of all the pieces of legislation and practices that governed the state-owned companies and enterprises in general such as the PFMA ... and ... the newly adopted Companies Act".

14. Ms Carolus identified five key challenges that the SAA Board faced during her tenure:

    14.1 Governance failures – there were prevalent and frequent violations of the PFMA and the previous CEO was consequently suspended. The Board laid criminal charges and instituted civil actions to retrieve misappropriated money.

    14.2 Very poor levels of capitalisation, resulting in SAA being unable to keep up with competitors in terms of the aircrafts used and services offered. It lost market share and many opportunities as a result.

    14.3 SAA faced a number of criminal and civil claims for price fixing and anti-competitive behaviour.

    14.4 Management was fragmented and there were serious problems with how it behaved; there was very poor staff morale as a result.

    14.5 SAA had a weak balance sheet and was virtually bankrupt. This drastically increased the cost of financing, making expansion difficult.

15. To address these challenges, Ms Carolus explained that the first task was to appoint a competent CEO. The Board hired an international headhunting firm, and ultimately selected Ms Sizakele Mzimela, a trained banker who had spent most of her professional life at SAA and was serving as the CEO of SA Express.

The 2009 Executive

16. Ms Sizakele Petunia Mzimela was SAA GCEO from 1 April 2010 until 9 October 2012. There were various subsidiary and group companies of SAA for which she was also responsible. The CEOs of South African Travel Centre (SATC), Mango Airlines SOC Ltd ("Mango"), Air Chefs SOC Ltd ("Air Chefs") and SAAT reported to her.

17. The SAA Board then had various subcommittees. The sub-committees would make recommendations and the Board would make the ultimate decision. Below the level of CEO are the SAA General Managers.

18. Ms Mzimela testified that there were four key governance documents aside from the legislation that governed SAA. These were the Memorandum of Incorporation (MOI); the Significance and Materiality Framework; the shareholders compact; and the corporate plan. The MOI provides that the Board must have at least three and a maximum of sixteen directors. It also provides that there must be a minimum of two ex officio directors, the CEO and CFO, and that the majority of the Board must always be non-executive directors. Accordingly, there would always have to be a minimum of three non-executive directors.

19. Ms Mzimela testified that under Minister Hogan, governance at SAA was very well managed. The Minister communicated with the Board through its Chair and the CEO of SAA communicated with the DG of the DPE. All communication was formal and recorded in writing. There were monthly monitoring meetings. SAA governance enjoyed high levels of transparency, and information passed through the correct channels.

Change in shareholder

20. Ms Carolus testified that, during her tenure, the executive collaborated with DPE to design a turnaround strategy. The result was a "New Growth Strategy" (NGS) that was presented to the Board in October 2010. A key proposal in this SAA strategy was the exploration of a Mumbai route and expanding the "East-West Corridor", bringing passengers from important trading markets in Mumbai and Beijing. This strategy included the capitalisation of SAA and acquisition of a new fleet of aircraft. The NGS was presented to Minister Hogan in October 2010, and it was approved. Immediately after this, Minister Hogan was replaced with Minister Malusi Gigaba on 1 November 2010.

21. Soon thereafter, Ms Carolus described a tension developing between the Minister and the SAA Board. She explained that Minister Gigaba would publicly criticise and misrepresent the Board, which the Board felt undermined the market confidence that SAA was trying to build. The Minister would also publicly criticise the Board for being unpatriotic while commending their performance in person. Ms Mzimela testified that, in contrast to governance under Ms Hogan, under Minister Gigaba anyone in the Ministry would communicate directly with the CEO and there was no structure. This meant that issues "fell through the cracks". There was a breakdown in the division of roles in SAA.

Treasury guarantee

22. Ms Carolus testified that, in 2012, SAA was making some progress in its financial position. Between 2010 and 2012, SAA started to see small profits. Yet, because of its past performance and weak balance sheet, financial institutions were reluctant to give SAA funding. As a result, SAA required a guarantee from its shareholder to give the funders comfort and secure reduced bank interest rates by improving the risk profile of SAA. In 2012, SAA presented its capitalisation requirements to the Minister and the guarantee it needed in this regard to facilitate borrowing for a new fleet. SAA was able to negotiate some very good deals on new available aircraft. It was therefore urgent that SAA obtain the requisite guarantees to exploit these opportunities. The guarantee was also important for SAA to ensure it was a viable going concern and was trading responsibly.

23. Ms Carolus pointed out that SAA had received a clean audit with no allegations of wrongdoing during her tenure on the Board. However, without the guarantee, the audit for that year would be qualified, because there was no certainty SAA was a going concern. In addition, the PFMA required that the financial statements be presented to DPE, among others, within five months of the end of the financial year (August 2012). SAA, therefore, could not wait for the guarantee and still comply with the PFMA requirements.

24. In addition to the PFMA annual financial statement reporting requirements, SAA was also required, under the Companies Act, to submit the financials to the AGM within six months of the end of the financial year. Waiting for the guarantee would make the annual financial statements late. The Board proposed presenting the annual financial statements at the AGM without the guarantee and therefore with qualified audited statements. The Minister, however, advised the Board that he had postponed the AGM until 25 September 2012 to secure the guarantee letter from National Treasury. Then, on the 25 September, five days before the submission deadline, the Minister advised that the meeting was no longer taking place. Ms Carolus explained that being non-compliant with the Companies Act had serious consequences for the Board members, particularly where they were directors of other major companies. She also explained that a qualified audit would have serious consequences for SAA. The Board therefore continued following up with the Minister about the AGM and the letter of guarantee. On 25 September 2012, Ms Carolus met with Minister Gigaba to ask about the letter of guarantee. He claimed he had already sent it to Ms Carolus's staff and they had "let her down". She asked him to ensure that the letter of guarantee reached her the next day.

25. At the meeting with the Minister, Ms Carolus advised him that because of the enormous risk to directors in being part of a Board that did not comply with the deadlines in the Companies Act, and because of the directors' general frustrations with Minister Gigaba's conduct, some directors had threatened to resign and she had already received one resignation letter. Ms Carolus testified that she told these directors that they had recovered SAA to the point where it had by then become a bankable proposition and they should not do it harm by resigning just a few days before their terms were due to expire. Ms Carolus explained this to the Minister, who undertook to get the letter to her the next day.

26. However, the next morning (26 September 2012) the Business Day newspaper reported on a statement released by Minister Gigaba, without any warning to the Board, indicating that the AGM was to be postponed because SAA had not finished preparing its Annual Financial Statements, which Ms Carolus said was false.

27. Ms Carolus said that, in fact, a letter and memo had been dispatched to Treasury for Minister Gordhan's attention seeking the R5 billion guarantee for going concern purposes. Minister Gordhan testified before the Commission about the process that needs to be followed when a guarantee is requested. A request goes to the Fiscal Liability Committee (FLC), which investigates and prepares a report on the request. The report is then sent to the DG and then to the Minister, who has the authority to sign the guarantee. Although the SAA Board met with Minister Gigaba and requested the guarantee in early 2012, the supporting memo sent to the FLC was dated 21 September 2012. The FLC nevertheless made a recommendation to support the request. On 26 September 2012, the DG of Treasury, Mr Lungisa Fuzile, approved the recommendation, and Minister Gordhan signed his approval the same day. It was therefore untrue that Minister Gigaba had already sent the letter of guarantee to SAA on 25 September 2012 because it did not yet exist.

28. Although Mr Gigaba was sent a rule 3.3 notice in relation to the evidence of Ms Carolus, he did not respond to it at the time of her testimony. He explained in a later affidavit to the Commission that the notice had not been brought to his attention at the time that it was sent. His responses to Ms Carolus' evidence are dealt with below.

Resignation of the Board

29. Following the Business Day report of 26 September 2012, eight of the 12 directors resigned from the SAA Board on 27 September 2012. This occurred after Ms Carolus explained to the Board at a meeting that, given Minister Gigaba's hostile and irresponsible conduct, she was going to resign as she could not trust the Minister.

30. The eight Board members issued a carefully drafted statement. They avoided making any damning statements about the Minister as this would have had catastrophic consequences for the airline and destroyed all the progress they had achieved for SAA in the financial markets during their tenure. However, the Board's relationship with Minister Gigaba began as tense and became openly hostile. The Board was faced with costly delays caused by the inaction of DPE and Minister Gigaba in failing to secure the Treasury guarantee timeously. Minister Gigaba also publicly sabotaged and maligned the Board.

The Mumbai route and the relationship between the Board and the Minister

31. Ms Carolus and Ms Mzimela both testified before the Commission about another feature of their interactions with Minister Gigaba and his special advisor, Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu. This related to SAA's Mumbai route and the efforts by Jet Airways to get SAA to close the route. According to Ms Carolus and Ms Mzimela, they were pressurised by Minister Gigaba and Mr Mahlangu to accommodate Jet Airways' requests even though it did not make commercial sense for SAA to close the route.

32. Both Mr Gigaba and Mr Mahlangu responded to these allegations in their evidence before the Commission. In Mr Mahlangu's affidavit to the Commission, he stated that he acted honestly in all dealings with SAA personnel and was not motivated by any outside interest. Mr Gigaba similarly denied placing any pressure on SAA to close the Mumbai route. He emphasised that the decision to close the route was finally taken after he had left the DPE. However, he did not dispute that he remained silent in the meetings arranged with him during which the Jet Airways representatives reprimanded Ms Mzimela for SAA's inaction in cancelling the route.

33. These two facts alone indicate that Mr Gigaba gave a level of preference to the Jet Airways representatives. It is unusual for a Minister to be willing to be delayed for two hours for a third-party representative to arrive at a meeting and then to say nothing when that representative behaves in a wholly inappropriate manner to the CEO of one of the SOEs under the Minister's portfolio. It is therefore understandable that Ms Mzimela formed the view that, because he entertained Jet Airways' representatives in this way, Mr Gigaba was communicating his support for the closure of the route.

34. As for Ms Carolus' allegations regarding Mr Gigaba's attitude to the Board and his delays in communicating the Treasury guarantee to the Board, Mr Gigaba stated in his affidavit to the Commission that he did not remember questioning the Board's capabilities or patriotism. He also denied any antagonism between him and Board members prior to their September 2012 resignation. However, this explanation does not match up with the unprecedented resignation of most of the SAA Board members days before their terms at the airline would have ended. That type of conduct is a statement. As Ms Carolus explained in her evidence, they had professional reputations to uphold. They could not accept any irregularities, unlawful conduct or even the appearance of impropriety. Compliance with the PFMA and Companies Act was a top priority for the Board.

After the resignation of the Carolus Board

35. After the SAA Board members resigned, Mr Vuyisile Kona was appointed as Acting Board Chair on 28 September 2012 and as Acting SAA CEO on 12 October 2012. Seven new non-executive Board members were also appointed, with three members of the old Board retained: Ms Myeni, Ms Kwinana and Ms Lindi Nkosi-Thomas. Because of concerns about Mr Kona acting in both positions, the Board requested the Minister to appoint another Acting Chairperson. On 7 December 2012, Minister Gigaba appointed Ms Myeni as Acting Chair. Ms Mzimela testified that she found this appointment surprising as Ms Myeni sometimes failed to turn up for Board meetings. If she did arrive, she rarely stayed for the full duration. Her main excuse was "she now has to rush because number one has called her to a meeting".

36. Mr Kona testified that Minister Gigaba's advisor, Mr Mahlangu, played a very direct role in the affairs at SAA. He acted as the link between Mr Kona and the Minister. Mr Kona testified that he began preparing an urgent turnaround plan for SAA soon after his appointment. While busy with this, Mr Mahlangu approached him and insisted that he attend a meeting at the Gupta's house in Saxonwold. Prior to this meeting, Mr Kona had requested SAA's SCM department to issue a tender for a consultant to assist with the airline's turnaround plan and business plan. The SCM team selected Lufthansa Consulting, the cheapest of the bidders. At the Gupta meeting, Mr Kona was offered large sums of money by Mr Tony Gupta, which he refused. Mr Gupta then asked about the turnaround strategy contract and Mr Kona informed him that Lufthansa Consulting had already been awarded it. According to Mr Kona, Mr Gupta was "livid" about this.

37. Mr Kona testified that Mr Gupta even contacted the DG of Public Enterprises, Mr Tshediso Matona, to demand to know how this had happened. The DG promptly called Mr Kona to confront him about the awarding of the contract. Mr Kona testified that he received a letter a few days later from the DPE stating that it was investigating the award to Lufthansa. According to Mr Kona, the investigation revealed no irregularities and yet the DPE would not allow Mr Kona to start work with Lufthansa. Mr Kona explained that, after this, the DPE and his fellow Board members became hostile towards him, and it was clear that the DPE no longer wanted him to retain his position. Soon afterwards, Minister Gigaba told Mr Kona that, because the Board was delaying implementing the turnaround strategy, the Board must just do its own turnaround plan. Mr Kona testified that this was just a "hodge podge" set of documents for the sake of submitting something and he could not be a part of it.

38. The Board then produced legal opinions claiming that the Lufthansa contract was awarded because Mr Kona had an interest in the contract – which he denied. He contacted Minister Gigaba to try and resolve the issue. Mr Kona said that the Minister stated they could meet to discuss the matter, but this never happened. Mr Kona was ultimately suspended for reasons he says were "spurious", but which he felt was because of his refusal to cooperate with the Guptas.

39. Mr Kona testified that he approached Ms Myeni, then Acting Chair of the Board, about the meeting with the Guptas at their Saxonwold residence. He stated that Ms Myeni displayed little concern about what had transpired. He assumed Ms Myeni made some calls thereafter because he then received SMS messages from Mr Mahlangu stating that he was "compromising the mission". He was given the impression that Ms Myeni had her own agenda for how to use the Guptas to align with her own plan. By alerting her to their Saxonwold visit, Mr Kona had let her know that Mr Mahlangu and others were also trying to use these "power brokers" to advance their plans.

40. Mr Bongisizwe Mpondo, a former non-executive director of SAA appointed on 27 September 2012, provided the Commission with an affidavit. It stated that allegations of irregularities against Mr Kona came to the Board's attention around December 2012. Legal opinions were sourced which were negative towards Mr Kona, leading the Board, with the Minister's support, to suspend Mr Kona from his Acting CEO position on 11 February 2013 and remove him as a Board member on 26 February 2013. The Board and Minister appointed Mr Nico Bezuidenhout, then CEO of Mango, as the new Acting CEO.

41. Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu provided an affidavit dated 9 September 2020 to the Commission dealing with Mr Kona's allegations about his role in the meeting at the Gupta residence and thereafter. Mr Mahlangu confirmed that the meeting took place and that he was there with Mr Kona. However, he denied most other details about what transpired. He stated that he did not witness any discussion about large sums of cash or see any such wads of cash. He also said there was no discussion about the Lufthansa contract. In relation to the SMS he sent Mr Kona about "compromising the mission", Mr Mahlangu had a completely different explanation. "The mission" he was referring to related to Mr Kona's ambitions to be appointed as SAA CEO. It is not possible to determine which version of events is true.

The Board under Ms Myeni

42. This section considers the allegations made by various parties against Ms Myeni as SAA Board Chair. When Ms Myeni took office on 7 December 2012, she signed an undertaking that required that she would "observe and comply with the principles and provisions of all legislation relevant to South African Airways, the protocol on corporate governance under review and the provisions of the shareholder compact between the Board of South African Airways and the Minister of Public Enterprises," as well as "maintain and observe the highest standards of integrity and probity in the execution of my responsibilities." As illustrated below, Ms Myeni did not live up to this undertaking.

Pembroke Capital

43. Mr Mpondo's affidavit explained that, prior to the new Board appointments in 2012, SAA had concluded a deal to acquire twenty Airbus A320 narrow body aircraft. Ms Carolus explained that this was part of the strategy to capitalise SAA to allow for more regional flights and shorter distance flights to Africa and Latin America. Mr Mpondo's evidence was that the deal had been concluded but the financing had not been finalised. The Bank of China had been recommended but it pulled out of the deal. On 27 May 2013, the Board resolved to award the contract to Pembroke Capital to finance ten aircraft. The other ten would require another procurement process. At a Board meeting on 2 June 2013, the Chairperson of the Audit and Risk Committee, Ms Kwinana, raised concerns about the Pembroke transaction. However, the Board considered the matter resolved and decided not to revisit it.

44. After the 27 May 2013 resolution, an application was submitted to the Minister of Public Enterprises for approval of the Pembroke financing for the ten aircraft. However, on 20 June 2013, Ms Myeni wrote to the Minister and said that "while reference is made to ten (10) aircraft in the previous correspondence, the Board has subsequently resolved to transact on two (2) aircraft with Pembroke" (emphasis added). On 11 July 2013, Ms Myeni wrote a third letter to then Minister Gigaba claiming that the SAA Board had decided to revert to the original request for approval for the financing of ten aircraft. Mr Mpondo's affidavit explains that the Board was unaware that Ms Myeni had sent the second letter to the Minister. He said the Company Secretary circulated a memorandum to Board members to "ratify" its decision to approve the funding of two aircraft instead of ten. Mr Mpondo said this memorandum caused a "heated debate since the board had never taken such a decision." He viewed Ms Myeni's unilateral attempt to change the Board's resolution without the knowledge or approval of the Board as highly irregular.

45. Mr Mpondo's affidavit further indicated that, at a Board meeting on 22 January 2014 – which Ms Myeni did not attend – Board members raised concerns about the fact that the aircraft had not yet been delivered despite the Board voting on the decision in May 2013. This was costing SAA R2 million per month in storage fees to Airbus for not taking delivery timeously. The Board noted that a key reason for the delay was the exchange between the Chairperson and the Minister regarding Ms Myeni's attempts to change the Board's decision. At a Board meeting on 3 April 2014, which Ms Myeni again did not attend, the Board resolved that the Chair needed to account to the Board for the changes she had attempted to make to the resolution regarding the Pembroke transaction. Despite this resolution, Ms Myeni failed to account to the Board. The Board members concluded that Ms Myeni appeared to be trying to secure her own funding for the ten Airbus A320s, without involving the executive, resulting in the attempted change in the Board's funding resolution. Ms Myeni's conduct in the Pembroke transaction delayed the delivery of the aircraft, which cost SAA approximately R800m in pre-delivery payments. This led to a further cash shortfall and SAA having to increase its borrowing limits, which negatively impacted it for a long time.

46. When Ms Myeni testified before the Commission, she was asked about this transaction. It was put to her that she had lied to the Minster when she claimed that the Board had taken a decision to change the original transaction for financing of ten aircraft to only two aircraft. Ms Myeni's misrepresentation to the Minister was clear because, in a 2017 affidavit she had deposed to before the Companies and Intellectual Property Commission, she claimed that the letter she wrote to the Minister on 20 June 2013 was written on her understanding of what the Board had resolved. Ms Myeni subsequently discovered that she was mistaken and that the Board's decision had not changed. She then wrote another letter to the Minister of Public Enterprises clarifying the situation, which he accepted. But Ms Myeni had not confessed her mistake to the Minister back in 2013 when she wrote her third letter. On the contrary, her third letter claimed that the Board had taken a further decision to revert to the financing for ten aircraft. Therefore, Ms Myeni falsely represented to the Minster of Public Enterprises that the SAA Board had taken two decisions that it simply had not.

47. Fraud is the "unlawful and intentional making of a misrepresentation which causes actual prejudice or which is potentially prejudicial to another". It was put to Ms Myeni during her evidence that she had knowingly misrepresented to the Minister of Public Enterprises in 2013 that the SAA Board had resolved to change the Pembroke transaction in circumstances where she knew that they had not done so. Ms Myeni refused to answer these questions, citing her privilege against self-incrimination. She was later called back to the Commission to address some of these questions.

The privilege against self-incrimination

48. Ms Myeni's invocation of the privilege was, at times, abused during her evidence. Whenever the privilege was being abused because the question put to her was innocuous and could not reasonably result in an incriminating answer, the evidence leader recorded it as an abuse. Ms Myeni also abused the privilege in another way. In some instances, she would be asked a question, to which she would provide a lengthy answer. When the evidence leader asked a more difficult follow-up question, Ms Myeni would invoke the privilege. On each occasion the evidence leader recorded the privilege as being abused.

49. The Commission takes a dim view of a witness who conveniently invokes the privilege against self-incrimination. Ms Myeni's own testimony reflects the abuse of the privilege because she often described herself as "not comfortable" answering the questions; she said that they were showing her in a "bad light"; she said that she did not want to answer because of pending civil proceedings against her or because the NPA was investigating matters. These are not valid grounds for invoking the privilege. This was explained at the outset of Ms Myeni's evidence, yet she continued to invoke the privilege when there was no legally justifiable basis for doing so. Where she did invoke the privilege in circumstances where it could legitimately be invoked, the Commission explained that her failure to deal with these issues would mean the evidence against her was uncontested and findings could then be made based on the uncontested evidence against her. The Pembroke transaction is one such instance where the evidence against Ms Myeni is undisputed and overwhelming. Ms Myeni, as SAA Board Chairperson, lied to the Minister of Public Enterprises on two occasions when she claimed that the Board had taken two decisions that it had not taken. This caused financial loss.

50. After Ms Myeni testified, the Constitutional Court handed down judgment in the matter of Secretary, Judicial Commission of Inquiry into Allegations of State Capture v Zuma 2021 (5) SA 1 (CC) on 28 January 2021. The judgment dealt with the invocation of privilege against self-incrimination by witnesses who testified at the Commission. In light of this judgment, Ms Myeni was sent a copy of the submissions that the Legal Team intended to make that she had abused the privilege against self-incrimination. She was summonsed to appear before the Commission on 25 May 2021 to deal with this issue, but failed to appear. This breached the Commission's Act, so it was ruled that a charge should be laid with the police. Ms Myeni then made herself available for questioning. Since valuable time had been lost, the evidence leader proposed that Ms Myeni answer the questions by affidavit. She confirmed that she no longer objected to answering the questions, but the affidavit subsequently received from her was not comprehensive, consisting mainly of one-word answers and claims that she had no knowledge of certain matters. It was therefore of no use to the Commission and indicated that Ms Myeni was continuing her strategy of avoiding the Commission's questions.

51. It is important to emphasise that the questions put to Ms Myeni on affidavit were only about the questions where the Legal Team regarded her as having abused her privilege against self-incrimination – that is, where there was no discernible criminal offence associated with the possible answers to the question. Ms Myeni was not simply re-asked all the questions put to her in her three days of evidence. Those questions remain unanswered. Ms Myeni's conduct when summonsed to return on 25 May 2021 is consistent with a witness who will go to great lengths to avoid being questioned.

The disclosure of Mr X's identity

52. Ms Myeni's conduct revealed a sustained disdain for the authority and processes of the Commission. During her first evidence session in November 2020, she disclosed the identity of a witness. The Commission had previously ruled that this witness' identity should not be revealed because of concerns for his and his family's safety and security. The witness, Mr X, gave evidence of a scheme from which he received money from the bank account of Ms Myeni's son, Mr Thalente Myeni.

53. According to Mr X, he had no business dealings with Mr T or his business, "Premier Attraction". Despite this, R 3.15 million was paid into Mr X's company's bank account in three tranches in late 2015 and early 2016. After receiving the money, Ms Myeni contacted Mr X and instructed him to pay the money out. Some of it was withdrawn in cash and then given to Ms Myeni or dropped off at her home. There were also two large amounts that were paid into a bank account for which Ms Myeni provided the banking details. Mr X testified that, at the time that he made the payments in accordance with Ms Myeni's instructions, he did not know who the holder of the bank account was. However, when initially questioned by the Commission's investigators, he was told that the payments were made to the Jacob Zuma Foundation.

54. The Commission traced the money Mr X received from Mr Myeni's business to a R2 million payment from VNA Consulting. VNA Consulting had been involved in a housing project in the Free State and had used some of the monies it received on that project to pay Mr Myeni's business, Premier Attraction. So, the money appears to have originated from the Free State government's coffers, been paid to VNA Consulting, then to Mr Myeni's business, then to Mr X's company's bank account, and then, on instruction by Ms Myeni, into the bank account for the Jacob Zuma Foundation. When questioned at the Commission about his involvement in this arrangement, Mr Myeni claimed that the dealings with VNA Consulting and Mr X were legitimate, despite Mr X's denial of any business relationship with him. MrT Myeni's claims that these were all legitimate business dealings cannot be accepted as correct. He was extremely vague in his testimony about the work with VNA Consulting. He was unable to provide any details of the precise work that would earn his company R2 million. He could not recall the period over which the work was to be done. Despite being summonsed by the Commission to produce documentary evidence of this business relationship, Mr Myeni could not produce a single document.

55. The Commission saw several instances of this type of alleged "business dealings" during its hearings. The absence of supporting documentation is a compelling indicator that no genuine business relationship existed.

56. Mr Myeni's version must also be assessed against that of Mr X. Mr X was a candid and frank witness. He made it clear at the end of his testimony that he did not want to be testifying before the Commission, but he realised he had no choice but to tell the full story when all the documents and records of the bank transactions were presented to him by the Commission's investigators. He also gave evidence at the Commission despite the threat this posed to his own and his family's well-being. Mr X's story is the story of someone who got caught up in what appears to be a criminal scheme. Although he was a reluctant witness, he came before the Commission to explain his conduct in a forthright manner. This was in stark contrast to Mr Myeni's evasive approach when being questioned.

57. The evidence presented at the Commission indicates that the dealings between VNA Consulting, Premier Attraction (Mr Thalente Myeni's business), Mr X's business, Ms Duduzile Myeni, and the Jacob Zuma Foundation were not arms-length business dealings. The flow of funds from the Free State to these individuals and entities needs to be further investigated to establish whether there was a corrupt relationship between any of them. Mr X did not deserve to have his identity revealed by Ms Myeni. When Ms Myeni did so during her testimony before the Commission, a criminal charge was laid against her for obstructing the Commission in performing its functions. However, no arrest was made.

The Board evaluation by IoDSA

58. It is now necessary to return to the situation at SAA in 2014 because, as highlighted above, during early 2014 there was a material breakdown at Board level at SAA. Several directors expressed grave misgivings about Ms Myeni's leadership of the Board. Given this situation, the Institute of Directors of South Africa (IoDSA) was tasked with evaluating the SAA Board. According to Mr Mpondo, Ms Myeni insisted that Board members be interviewed for the evaluation instead of completing it electronically. The rest of the Board was unhappy with this because it would delay the preparation of the AGM pack for the 29 January 2014 meeting. The pack was delayed unduly because the evaluation report was not forthcoming. It was eventually presented in hardcopy at the AGM. The Board requested that the Chair explain why she held back the report. Mr Mpondo stated that it reflected the governance and leadership issues facing SAA at the time.

The letter of complaint and mass resignations of Board members

59. Mr Mpondo's affidavit stated that, at a SAA Board meeting on 22 January 2014, it was resolved that there were challenges with Ms Myeni's leadership of the Board. On 28 January 2014, six Board members wrote a letter to Ms Myeni regarding concerns with her leadership, copying in Minister Gigaba. The letter was signed by all Board members except Ms Kwinana, Ms Nkosi-Thomas and Dr Naithani. The letter dealt with the following issues:

    59.1 The Chair undermined the narrow body fleet financing process by Pembroke.

    59.2 The procurement process for the wide body fleet was irregular – Ms Myeni as the Board Chair appeared unaware that a RFP had been issued by SAA management, despite the requirement in SAA's MOI that Ministerial approval must be sought by the Chair before any procurement processes for a major asset.

    59.3 Losses were caused by the Chair's procrastination. First, Ms Myeni's conduct in the Pembroke transaction caused delays which cost SAA R800 million. Second, Ms Myeni refused the Board's request to convene meetings to finalise the wide-body acquisition process, resulting in SAA missing out on the delivery of fuel-efficient aircraft for the 2016/2017 year, leading to financial losses.

    59.4 The Chair initiated forensic investigations into three Board members without following the process set out in the SAA Internal Audit Charter. The Board stated: "We refuse to be managed by fear and victimization."

    59.5 The Chairperson sowed confusion in Board Committees and interfered in their operations, to the extent that the Chair claimed to be a member of all Board Committees. This compromised the Chair's impartiality.

    59.6 The Chair was responsible for various inefficiencies. These included the poor administration of the Board, causing the company financial loss; lack of planning for the 2014 AGM; the Chair's non-attendance at key meetings or failure to provide reports for the Board to consider ahead of meetings.

    59.7 The Chair disregarded Board resolutions.

60. The letter concluded: "This letter demonstrates repeat transgressions of corporate governance, undermining due process by the Board and a lack of diligence and care on the part of the Chairperson on extremely important matters. All the examples employed above are illustrative of a leadership style that potentially will expose all serving Board members to liability."

61. The signatories to the letter first attempted to meet with Ms Myeni to deal with these challenges, which the Chair rejected, so the members resorted to the letter. The Chair responded to the letter by refusing to meet to discuss the issues. Ms Nkosi-Thomas resigned from the Board in March 2014. On 3 April 2014, the Board requested that the Company Secretary prepare an assessment of the Board's effectiveness, which was presented at a meeting on 29 May 2014. The report concluded that:

61.1 The Board was not a coherent team

61.2 The Chair failed to fulfil the mandate set out in the Board Charter of maintaining a dialogue with, and guiding, the CEO – the two did not meet

61.3 The Chair twice attempted to place a moratorium on board meetings

61.4 The Board raised serious issues of leadership that remained unresolved

61.5 One of the Board members transmitted a memorandum from the Chairperson to the AG to investigate before the Board could deliberate and investigate the issues raised. This was calculated to undermine internal processes; and 61.6 The Chairperson sent a letter directly to the Minister about the financial position of SAA without first consulting the Board.

62. The Board resolved to write to DPE to request a session between the Minister and the Board. The Board took advice that it could initiate a process, in consultation with the Minister, to invoke the provisions of section 71(3)(b) of the Companies Act to remove Ms Myeni as a director. Minister Gigaba convened a meeting to mediate between all the parties but the Chair did not arrive. Mr Gigaba was subsequently replaced by Ms Lynne Brown as Minister of Public Enterprises. In June 2014, the new Minister convened a meeting with the Board. The Board members raised all the issues outlined in their letter. After the meeting, the Minister requested that DPE officials prepare a report on SAA's leadership issues. This report, dated 30 July 2014, concluded that the Board was completely dysfunctional.

63. On 14 October 2014, the Board members received a notice of a special general meeting of the company. The notice stated that the meeting was convened to consider removing the seven Board members that signed the letter to the Minister about Ms Myeni, as well as Dr Naithani. Mr Mpondo stated he was surprised at this because there was no indication that the Minister was unhappy with the Board's performance. Given the content of the notice, it appeared that there was a predetermined outcome. Mr Mpondo decided to resign from the Board. Ms Myeni was not, however, asked to account to the Minister.

64. Ms Myeni was asked during her testimony about the Board's resignation and the contents of the letter they sent to the Minister complaining about her. She was also asked why it was that the Minister would only ask the other Board members to account for why they should not be removed and never questioned Ms Myeni. Ms Myeni invoked her privilege against self-incrimination in respect of these questions. Mr Mpondo's affidavit was also put to Ms Myeni. The affidavit described the considerable steps that the Board had taken to report Ms Myeni's deficiencies to the Minister, Ms Myeni's failure to show up at the meeting scheduled with Minister Gigaba and the DG to try to resolve the issues, and the report sent to Minister Brown about Ms Myeni. Ms Myeni again invoked her privilege against self-incrimination in response. Her failure to give any contrary version on these events means that Mr Mpondo's affidavit is uncontested. There is no reason why the Commission should not accept Mr Mpondo's version, not only because it has not been denied by Ms Myeni, but also because it is supported by two independent sources of corroboration. Both the SAA Company Secretary's report and the DPE report confirmed that the SAA Board was completely dysfunctional by 2014 and recorded serious concerns about the way Ms Myeni was discharging her functions as Chair of the Board. Despite all these concerns, in October 2014, Minister Brown retained Ms Myeni on the Board, together with Ms Kwinana and Dr Naithani. They were joined by two new Board appointments – Mr Anthony Dixon and Dr John Tambi.

65. Ms Brown provided an affidavit to the Commission dealing with the issue of Ms Myeni's retention on the SAA Board despite complaints from most Board members. Although Ms Brown was concerned with issues of corporate governance when she took over the Public Enterprises portfolio in May 2014, she stated that "the issue of Ms Myeni as an individual Board Chairperson was not a priority". She further explained that she had not been informed "about each fibre of Ms Myeni's conduct or the conduct of the other Board members". She therefore stated that she "could not take action against Ms Myeni or any other Board member in the abstract". However, later in her affidavit she acknowledged that "there was a flurry of allegations and counter allegations making it difficult to make an objective grounded determination as to exactly who [had] failed to fulfil his/her duties".

66. On the critical issue of why only the complaining Board members had been called on by the Minister to explain why they should not be removed, Ms Brown said she could not remember whether Ms Kwinana or Ms Myeni had also been given letters to explain their conduct. The records the Commission obtained from the Department do not include any such letters, and they were probably not sent. Ms Brown's answer to this key issue was unsatisfactory. Her affidavit concluded by saying that Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana were the only remaining Board members when the others resigned, and they were retained to ensure continuity. However, this begs the question: continuity for what purpose? The account by most of the Board was that Ms Myeni had chaired a hopelessly dysfunctional board and acted improperly and in breach of her duties. That is not the type of continuity that a Minister should be looking for in an SOE. The Minister's explanation for failing to deal with or meaningfully investigate serious, fundamental concerns about the organisation's leadership is inexcusable.

67. In his affidavit to the Commission, Minister Gordhan stated that by January 2015, the SAA Board "had shrunk in size and been eroded in terms of its skills and expertise leaving only Ms Myeni, Ms Kwinana and Dr Tambi on the SAA Board. The Board was thus under-capacitated." Mr Dixon was also on the Board at that time but resigned in November 2015. This was as good as SAA having no board at all. That this situation was allowed to happen at an SOE was, to say the least, scandalous, particularly when Ministers Gigaba and Brown had been told about these challenges at SAA. The events that unfolded under this under-capacitated Board were devastating for SAA.

THE TRANSACTIONS

Airbus swap and Emirates deal

68. The Airbus swap transaction and the Emirates deal have been the subject matter of OUTA's High Court application to declare Ms Myeni a delinquent director under the Companies Act. OUTA was successful in the High Court (Organisation Undoing Tax Abuse and Others v Myeni [2020] ZAGPPHC 169). The High Court's judgment makes numerous findings against Ms Myeni in justifying its order to have her declared delinquent. The judgment finds that Ms Myeni failed to attend meetings, displayed negligence in her dealings as Board Chairperson, often had opaque motives for obstructing advantageous measures for SAA, was a close confidant of former President Zuma, and appeared to want to promote transformation and local development at the expense of other principles of process and good governance and SAA's welfare and continued survival.

69. With respect to the transaction with Emirates, the High Court found as follows:

    69.1 SAA had a code-sharing relationship with Emirates that generated profits of over R170 million per year. The agreement involved SAA purchasing Emirates flights at a reduced rate and selling them to customers at a profit. Conducting international flights with the heavy Airbus 340-600 aircraft was inefficient and made it hard for SAA to run these routes profitably. Securing an enhanced code-sharing arrangement with a Middle Eastern airline to increase networks was therefore a key SAA priority in 2013.

    69.2 At first, SAA had a deal with Etihad, but it was causing SAA major losses. In January 2015, Emirates approached SAA with a proposal for enhanced code-sharing. The deal was very beneficial to SAA., and SAA Management prepared a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) and shared it with the Board. Ms Myeni got involved in the operational aspect of the deal and insisted on attending Emirates meetings, which was highly unusual. This included Ms Myeni travelling to Dubai. Management hoped to conclude the MOU at the meeting, but Ms Myeni cancelled it last minute for unexplained reasons. This was treated as disrespectful by Emirates and Dubai officials.

69.3 There was a second opportunity for a meeting in Cape Town and Ms Myeni was personally invited to attend by the Emirates CEO. She failed to show up. SAA and Emirates executives met and a draft non-binding MOU was concluded. Ms Myeni delayed the MOU finalisation, including setting up a committee to assess the non-binding MOU and cancelling plans to conclude the MOU. The MOU was scheduled to be concluded at a formal ceremony with international media invited. Ms Myeni called the executive to say the President had instructed them not to sign the MOU. The ceremony was called off, causing national embarrassment, ruining the Emirates deal, and hampering relations with Etihad and other partners.

69.4 Ms Myeni continued to be an obstacle to the MOU conclusion – citing undisclosed concerns. Eventually, every member of the SAA team responsible for engaging with Emirates was removed or resigned. The High Court found that her reasons for frustrating and sabotaging the deal were unclear. It concluded that Ms Myeni's actions "led to irreparable harm for SAA and the country. What motivated these reckless and detrimental actions to SAA and country, we still do now know. Ms Myeni acted recklessly and broke her fiduciary duty in sabotaging this deal and the people of South Africa and SAA's employees are paying the price for her actions." There is no doubt that what happened during Ms Myeni's tenure as Board Chair contributed significantly to SAA being placed under business rescue in 2020.

70. The High Court also found the following with respect to the Airbus swap deal:

70.1 Ms Myeni tried to stop a transaction between Airbus and SAA, in terms of which SAA sought to cancel a legacy contract for the purchase of 10 Airbus A320-200s and replace it with a new deal for SAA to lease five airbuses directly from Airbus. This would have allowed SAA to escape onerous pre-delivery payments and inflated prices under the old contract. The matter was extremely urgent as SAA was liable to pay R1 billion to Airbus in 2015. Default would risk triggering other loan obligations, meaning billions of rand would be due immediately, with a knock-on effect on government debts.

70.2 The Airbus deal was very beneficial to SAA, allowing the replacement of the old fleet with more fuel-efficient, lighter aircraft in line with SAA's network and fleet plan. Treasury approved the deal. All that was required was the SAA Board's resolution to ratify the documents. This deal was a key condition to getting further guarantees from government. Ms Myeni failed to meet the deadline and did not ratify the deal. The Board then began questioning the deal. Rather than just ratifying the agreements, Ms Myeni, Ms Kwinana and Dr Tambi started engaging directly with Airbus to renegotiate the deal, which was highly irregular. The Board continued delaying the deal finalisation. Ms Myeni even wrote directly (without any consultation) to the President of Airbus to try and agree on new terms.

70.3 Ms Myeni offered no plausible explanation for her delay or her actions. Again, she cited unspecified concerns. She then appointed a transaction advisor, without any processes in place, which was unlawful. The advisor's proposal showed a lack of understanding of the transaction and inability to advise on the matter. Meanwhile, National Treasury corresponded with Ms Myeni, warning her of the danger she was putting SAA in. All senior executives who opposed Ms Myeni's plan to change the transaction were removed. She sent out an inaccurate section 54 application to the Minister of Finance (Mr Nene) regarding her amended version of the Airbus plan. The Minister declined Ms Myeni's request and instructed her to approve the Swap Transaction without delay.

70.4 On 9 December 2015, Minister Nene was fired by President Zuma and replaced by Mr D Van Rooyen, who, in turn, was replaced four days later by Mr Pravin Gordhan. When Minister Gordhan came into office, he allowed Ms Myeni one final opportunity to make her case. She failed to attend the meeting with Minister Gordhan, instead sending another section 54 application, which was rejected. During this period, Ms Kwinana resigned from the Board. Eventually Treasury intervened to save the swap.

70.5 The High Court found that "faced with all these risks, Ms Myeni's attitude seemed to be one of supine indifference" and her reasoning was "generally incomprehensible". As Board Chair she "did not show any concern for the catastrophic consequences of her actions for SAA and the country."

71. Former Minister Nene testified about a meeting in November 2015 to which he was summoned by former President Zuma, and which was also attended by Ms Myeni. Mr Nene was called to the meeting after he had shared concerns about Ms Myeni's leadership of SAA in an ANC meeting. Minister Nene testified that he complained about Ms Myeni during the meeting and said to former President Zuma that she was obstructive and the Board acted recklessly under her leadership. He recommended that she be removed from office. He emphasised that, because of Ms Myeni's conduct in the Airbus swap transaction, there was a serious threat that the airline would default on its obligations, which would have a ripple effect across the economy. Mr Nene testified that he believed his removal as Minister of Finance was linked to the views he expressed about Ms Myeni at the meeting with Mr Zuma and Ms Myeni.

72. During her evidence, Ms Myeni was asked how she persuaded the former President to keep her on as a SAA Board member and as its Chairperson. She was also asked whether her retention on the Board had to do with Minister Nene's removal as Finance Minister. Ms Myeni refused to answer and invoked her privilege against self-incrimination. When she responded to these questions on affidavit, she said she may have attended a meeting with former President Zuma at which Minister Nene was present. However, beyond that, she disputed all the Minister's evidence.

73. Ms Myeni was asked whether she requested President Zuma to call Minister Gordhan and ask him to reconsider his refusal to reverse Minister Nene's decision on the Airbus swap transaction. She refused to answer and invoked her privilege against self-incrimination. It was also put to Ms Myeni that two finance Ministers had testified that her approach to SAA was reckless. Again, she refused to answer and invoked her privilege against self-incrimination. The evidence of former Ministers Nene and Gordhan on their interactions with Ms Myeni and former President Zuma stands uncontested, apart from a self-serving denial in Ms Myeni's affidavit about Mr Nene's account of the meeting with Mr Zuma. There is no reason why the Ministers' evidence should not be accepted.

General interference by the Board in operational matters

74. Ms Mathulwane Emily Mpshe was appointed as Acting CEO in July 2015, replacing Mr Nico Bezuidenhout. She remained in that position until November 2015, when she was replaced by Mr Musa Zwane. Ms Mpshe testified that she was notified in July 2015 that Mr Bezuidenhout was returning to Mango Airlines and that Ms Myeni instructed that she be appointed as Acting CEO. Ms Mpshe testified that there were numerous instances of Board members interfering with operational matters that ought to have been the exclusive responsibility of SAA management. Non-executive directors, and particularly Ms Myeni as Chair, would get heavily involved in, and issue instructions on, the appointment or discipline of employees. Ms Mpshe explained that this was inappropriate because these instructions were contrary to SAA employment procedures and policies and because SAA was in the process of retrenching large numbers of employees. She raised these concerns to no avail.

75. The Board also took decisions that were contrary to the advice of management. When these decisions were probed during the Commission's hearings, it became clear that they were unjustified. In some instances, the decisions were so lacking in rationality that the only explanation for the Board's conduct appears to have been some ulterior purpose. These examples are dealt with below.

LSG Sky Chefs / Air Chefs

76. Ms Mpshe testified that, in 2015, an SAA subsidiary, Air Chefs, was servicing SAA lounges. However, customers were complaining about the service. The SAA lounges had stopped being competitive, so Investec partnered with SAA to revamp them. Part of the revamp involved a tender for a catering company. The contract went out to tender for an amount of R85 million over three years. Air Chefs was among the invited bidders. Another invited bidder was LSG Sky Chefs South Africa (Pty) Ltd. Ms Msphe testified that this company was a subsidiary of Lufthansa Airlines, a German company. It was a South African registered, locally-based company employing South Africans, and had the necessary BEE credentials.

77. Dr Masimba Dahwa, the Head of Procurement at SAA in 2015, testified that a full formal procurement and evaluations process had been done for the airport lounge catering. Given that value of the contract, it fell within Ms Mpshe's authority as Acting CEO to approve it. After the procurement process was completed and LSG Sky Chefs was selected, Ms Mpshe prepared a submission to the SAA Board to notify it that there would be a new service provider after the renovated lounges opened. The submission, dated 20 August 2015, informed the Board of the following:

    77.1 The deterioration of service and product quality provided by Air Chefs at OR Tambo International Airport, leading to complaints, reputational and commercial harm to SAA, and a loss of customers to competitor lounges

    77.2 SAA management had several interactions with Air Chefs about the deteriorating quality, but there had been no improvement. SAA had no alternative but to tender for a suitable catering service, as the level and standard of service was part of the contractual obligation SAA had to Investec as part of their lounge upgrading partnership

    77.3 SAA received three responses to the bid, from (1) LSG Sky Chefs; (2) Air Chefs; and (3) Dnata-Newrest. A full, lawful procurement process was conducted. Air Chefs did not meet the minimum criteria for the tender and was excluded. Of the other tenderers, LSG Sky Chefs had the lowest price; and

    77.4 Air Chefs would lose R18 million in revenue per annum and there would be a negligible negative impact on net profit of R1.8 million per annum. Consideration was given to the implications of taking business away from Air Chefs versus retaining customers in a highly competitive market. It was noted that lounge catering represented only a small portion of services rendered by Air Chefs in relation to the total SAA account.

78. Ms Mpshe testified that, in the negotiations between SAA and LSG Sky Chefs, the parties agreed that LSG Sky Chefs would take over the Air Chefs employees and there would be no loss of employment, even though Air Chefs was not awarded the tender.

79. On 21 August 2015, Dr Dahwa sent a letter of award to LSG Sky Chefs confirming that it had been awarded the catering contract. On 1 September 2015, Ms Mpshe, Ms Myeni and Dr Dahwa attended a Parliamentary Portfolio Committee meeting where the issue of SAA awarding the tender to a "German company" was discussed at length. According to Ms Mpshe, Ms Myeni told Parliament that she had been surprised to learn that SAA had been awarding contracts to German companies. Ms Mpshe testified that when the SAA delegation left the Portfolio Committee, Ms Myeni was irate that business was being taken from a local company and given to a "foreign" company, and began berating Ms Mpshe in front of her colleagues. Ms Mpshe responded by saying that her correspondence to Ms Myeni had already addressed her concerns.

80. On 2 September 2015, Ms Myeni sent Ms Mpshe an email instructing her not to award the tender to LSG Sky Chefs. Ms Mpshe responded that the contract had already been awarded and that her submission to the Board had simply been a notification. She also clarified that LSG Sky Chefs were the legitimate successful bidders. Ms Myeni asked her why Air Chefs were excluded. After checking with Dr Dahwa, Ms Mpshe told Ms Myeni that Air Chefs was excluded because they had not submitted the full documentation needed to be eligible for the tender. On 3 September 2015, Ms Kwinana emailed Ms Mpshe stating that the award had to be cancelled; that she was "disturbed by this decision which is killing SAA subsidiary"; and that "this looks like treason and I request this to be investigated by the SIU". Thereafter, Ms Myeni emailed Ms Mpshe stating that she had to cancel the LSG Sky Chefs award, and that she had a responsibility to support a SAA subsidiary. Ms Myeni also stated that she was Board Chair of Air Chefs at the time, which Ms Mpshe believed was a conflict of interest.

81. In response, Ms Mpshe gathered all information from Dr Dahwa about the procurement process. SAA's legal department also expressed the view that LSG Sky Chefs was appointed following a lawful procurement process, and that cancellation or suspension of the award could result in legal action against SAA. The opinion was provided to the Board. Ms Mpshe prepared a comprehensive response and circulated it to all Board members on 8 September 2015. In this response, she clarified that:

    81.1 There were not going to be any job losses, which was a tender condition

    81.2 LSG Sky Chefs was a South African entity which locally sourced and produced products procured by SAA

    81.3 The lounge services only represented 4.265% of Air Chefs' total annual revenue, so the revenue loss would be negligible

    81.4 A letter of award had already been issued to LSG Sky Chefs on 21 August 2015, and it had already begun implementing operational requirements

    81.5 The tender was awarded following a Bid Adjudication Committee (BAC) recommendation after due process had been followed

    81.6 Cancellation of the award would result in litigation and financial exposure against SAA; and 81.7 Air Chefs failed to meet the initial minimum threshold for evaluation in the tender and was lawfully excluded from proceeding to further stages of the evaluation.

82. Ms Mpshe met with the rest of the Board on 28 and 29 September 2015 about whether to cancel the LSG tender award. Despite the legal department's warning and extensive explanations by Ms Mpshe, the Board decided to pass a resolution to cancel the award on the basis that it had a duty to its subsidiary, Air Chefs. The resolution stated that the award to LSG Sky Chefs had to be "retracted" and the contract awarded to Air Chefs "without going through a bidding process". The LSG Sky Chefs contract was, thereafter, cancelled. Subsequently, LSG Sky Chefs sued SAA over this decision. Customers continued to note the substandard food in the lounges. The Board never concerned itself with even attempting to improve Air Chefs' services.

83. Dr Dahwa explained that he signed the cancellation letter to LSG Sky Chefs because the Board resolved that this should be done. He accepted that this was "not the right thing" to do, but he signed the letter because of the sensitive politics of the situation – i.e., it had been the subject of tense and embarrassing public questioning in Parliament and Ms Myeni was insistent that this embarrassment be addressed in this way. He did so on 6 October 2015.

84. At the meeting on 28 and 29 September 2015, Ms Myeni proposed that the Board pass a resolution reducing Ms Mpshe's delegation of authority by half – as well as the authority of all the executives. This meant that the Board would be more involved in day-to-day operations of the airline. Ms Mpshe testified that the executives were very concerned about the level of the Board's involvement in SAA operations, but they did not issue any resolution to this effect or refuse Ms Myeni's proposal. She testified that executive morale was very low because these instructions were contrary to lawful process and the implementation of the company's strategic objective. She also stated that the executives had to spend time fighting against unlawful instructions instead of implementing the approved airline strategy to deal with SAA's precarious position.

85. When Ms Kwinana testified before the Commission, she was asked for her account of the decision to withdraw the LSG Sky Chefs tender and give it to Air Chefs. She said this was one of the best decisions she made at SAA. In support of her view, she said:

    85.1 Leaving the tender with LSG Sky Chefs would have resulted in 1500 retrenchments and job losses at Air Chefs;

    85.2 Local suppliers would have also have lost their jobs to a foreign company;

    85.3 Air Chefs is a 100% subsidiary of SAA and it should be developed;

85.4 As a subsidiary Air Chefs did most of its work for SAA and it was going to lose most of that work and most of its revenue; and 85.5 Whoever had made the decision to award the tender to LSG Sky Chefs was clearly trying to sabotage SAA.

86. It was put to Ms Kwinana that all the reasons she provided had been dealt with comprehensively by Ms Mpshe in her submission to the Board. It was put to her that the Board had either ignored these factors because they were determined to cancel the bid, or they simply did not read Ms Mpshe's submissions. In response, Ms Kwinana took the position that since Air Chefs was an SAA subsidiary meant that it had to be chosen as a supplier, regardless of the cost to SAA or the harm to its reputation.

87. When Ms Mpshe's responses to all these issues were put to Ms Kwinana, she claimed, without basis, to "not trust" Ms Mpshe's submission, even suggesting it never reached the Board. Ms Kwinana began making wild, unsubstantiated allegations against Ms Mpshe, including that she joined forces with LSG Sky Chefs to sue SAA to set aside the tender. She was continuously evasive, particularly when it was put to her that SAA routinely used South African subsidiaries of foreign companies as service providers. This therefore could not have been a valid basis for withdrawing the tender or contract.

88. Ms Kwinana was also questioned about whether the decision to retract an existing tender and replace it with an award to another entity on instruction from the Board was a reportable irregularity under the Auditing Professions Act 26 of 2005. She testified that it was not a reportable irregularity to retract an existing tender that followed correct procedure, and simply award it to another bidder without following any process. She claimed it would have been a reportable irregularity if the award had remained with Sky Chefs because the tender was supposed to go to the shareholder in terms of s 54 of the PFMA. Ms Kwinana's insistence that the Board's decision to retract the tender award was not a reportable irregularity starkly contrasted with the evidence of Mr Mothibe, the PWC auditor responsible for auditing SAA in the 2016 financial year. When Mr Mothibe testified, he accepted that, had the true facts concerning the Board's decision on this matter been brought to his attention, he would have reported it to the Independent Regulatory Board for Auditors (IRBA) as a reportable irregularity.

89. Furthermore, Ms Kwinana's reference to s 54 of the PFMA is entirely incorrect as a matter of law. Even if this tender did require the shareholder or Treasury approval under this section, it was finally and officially awarded to a bidder. South African law says that an administrator cannot simply withdraw a final administrative decision because there was an irregularity in the process. It must apply to court through appropriate channels for the decision to be set aside. The decision is binding until a court sets it aside. In any event, s 54 did not apply in this case, as the servicing of the SAA lounge was not a "significant business activity". According to Ms Mpshe's submission to the Board, it amounted to around 4% of Air Chefs' business and R18 million in revenue per year (R1.8 million in profit). Although the PFMA does not define "significant", Treasury Regulation 28.3.1 provides that the Board may develop a framework of acceptance levels of significance with the Minister, known as the Significance and Materiality Framework. For the termination of a business activity, the significance levels requiring notification include the retrenchment of any employees or a loss of revenue exceeding R100 million. Neither of these applied to this transaction.

90. In any event, this was not the reason given at the time for why the Board set aside the award. Rather, it was Ms Kwinana's after-the-fact justification, presented under questioning before the Commission, which had no legal or factual basis. Ms Kwinana's conduct made no commercial sense and it put SAA at risk both reputationally and legally. During her evidence, Ms Kwinana repeatedly claimed that her conduct was lawful because the award letter had not yet been sent out when the Board took its decision to retract the award. When it was put to her that this was false and she would have known that because the legal opinion presented to the Board made it clear, she would still not accept it.

91. Ms Kwinana was a very poor witness. She continually refused to make the most basic of concessions, even when there was overwhelming evidence to show that she was wrong. This severely undermined her credibility as a witness. She showed herself willing to be dishonest under oath simply to avoid having to account for her unlawful and irresponsible conduct. The evidence regarding the Board's conduct in the unlawful and unjustified cancellation of the LSG Sky Chefs tender was also put to Ms Myeni when she testified. She refused to answer the questions and invoked her privilege against self-incrimination. Despite invoking the privilege, she did say that outsourcing from Air Chefs to LSG Sky Chefs would be like "killing a child that was established by SAA as a subsidiary". This explanation was remarkably like Ms Kwinana's attempted justification. For the same reasons, Ms Myeni's explanation is also rejected. Ms Myeni also testified that she was entitled to ignore the advice of SAA's legal department. This attitude is deeply concerning. It shows a level of disregard for the expertise of others that calls into question Ms Myeni's fitness to hold any position on the board of a SOE.

92. Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana displayed a wanton disregard for the best interests of SAA in their decision-making on the lounge catering contract. They acted in gross disregard of their fiduciary duties to SAA when they took this decision. Section 162 of the Companies Act empowers the shareholder of a company, amongst others, to bring an application to declare a director of a company delinquent. The SAA shareholder is the executive authority as defined under the PFMA. At the time when these decisions were taken, that was the Minister of Finance, Mr Pravin Gordhan. It was in terms of Section 162 of the Companies Act that OUTA brought its High Court application for an order declaring Ms Myeni a delinquent director. No such application was, however, instituted against Ms Kwinana. Section 162(2)(a) of the Companies Act states that these types of applications must be brought within 24 months of the person having been a director of the company. Therefore, under the current statutory regime, it is not possible for SAA's executive authority to bring such an application to court.

93. Since it often takes several years for the facts of delinquency to be uncovered, the Commission recommends amendment of the Companies Act to permit applications of this type to be brought even after two years, where good cause is shown. This would mean that in cases where the true extent of Board members' breaches of duty is only uncovered a number of years later, steps can still be taken by the executive authority of an SOE to ensure that they are declared delinquent.

False whistleblower reports

94. Ms Mpshe testified that Deloitte provided a whistleblower service to SAA. The results were reported on a platform to which Ms Kwinana, as head of the ARC, had access.

95. In 2016, Ms Mpshe received a call from a member of OUTA, Mr Wayne Duvenage, explaining that Ms Kwinana approached OUTA after she resigned from the SAA Board and told them that she would accompany Ms Myeni to internet cafes to formulate whistleblower reports and use these to victimise SAA staff members – to suspend or dismiss those that they wanted removed. Ms Mpshe said she was shocked by this because these reports were used to bring disciplinary proceedings against, among others, Mr Sylvain Bosc and Mr Bezuidenhout. According to Ms Mpshe, Mr Duvenage explained that Ms Kwinana said she decided to tell OUTA everything to avoid being targeted in their litigation to have Ms Myeni declared a delinquent director. This would have been fatal for her career as a chartered accountant with her own firm.

96. During her evidence before the Commission, Ms Kwinana was asked to confirm that Ms Myeni prepared false whistleblower reports to discipline staff she had a problem with. When Ms Kwinana disputed that she had said this to OUTA, she was shown a transcript of her meeting with OUTA on 30 August 2016. However, she still maintained that she had never said this and claimed that it was a "language issue" – which is patently absurd as the transcript is very clear. She then claimed that the transcript was wrong because it referred to being "edited" on the first page. The Commission subsequently provided the audio recording of the interview to Ms Kwinana and invited her to indicate whether she disputed the transcript which the Commission had obtained. She was warned that if no alternative transcript was provided by her, she would be taken to have accepted the correctness of the Commission's transcript. Ms Kwinana failed to provide the Commission with an alternative transcript of the interview. The Commission's transcript is therefore uncontested.

97. That Ms Kwinana said this at her interview with OUTA in August 2016 is beyond doubt. Whether she was lying when she did so is less clear. It was put to Ms Kwinana during her evidence that it was possible she was lying about Ms Myeni preparing the false whistleblower reports to deflect attention from her own conduct. Alternatively, what she said about Ms Myeni at the time was true but, for some unknown reason, Ms Kwinana was now willing to lie under oath about that fact before the Commission. It is not possible to definitively resolve this question, but the following should be noted:

97.1 Ms Nhantsi, the interim CFO after Mr Wolf Meyer resigned from SAA in November 2015, testified before the Commission that Ms Kwinana had told her that Ms Myeni would prepare false whistleblower reports; and

97.2 When the issue of false whistleblower reports was put to Ms Myeni in her evidence, she claimed that the Commission is a refuge for tainted employees and that it just listens to false gossip. She stated that Ms Kwinana and Ms Nhantsi are friends and business partners. However, she ultimately invoked the privilege against self-incrimination when asked directly whether she had falsified the reports.

98. In the light of this evidence, and Ms Myeni's failure to contradict it, it is probable that Ms Myeni did prepare false whistleblower reports while she was SAA Board Chairperson. This type of conduct is consistent with other evidence the Commission received about how Ms Myeni treated managers and employees whom she wanted to remove from SAA.

General problems with procurement

99. Dr Dahwa was the Chief Procurement Officer (CPO) at SAA from August 2014 until his suspension on 3 December 2015. Dr Dahwa testified that there were significant problems with the procurement process when he arrived at SAA. Proper records of tender documents and contracts were not kept. One of the main audit findings around that time was that documents would simply go missing and were not available for inspection. Therefore, one of Dr Dahwa's primary goals was to implement changes to these record-keeping systems. He also stated that, when tenders were awarded, SAA would simply send out a tender award by letter without any terms and conditions or securing a signed contract. This was another issue needing "urgent attention".

100. On 13 March 2015, Dr Dahwa presented changes in SAA corporate procurement governance. He noted that there should ideally be two primary committees responsible for procurement. The first was the cross-functional or sourcing team that, at that stage, was mandated with the whole procurement process. The system therefore lacked appropriate checks and balances, and the committee lacked sufficient competencies and capacities to execute their duties properly. The second was the bid adjudication committee (BAC), which would review what the first committee had done. To separate out responsibilities, Dr Dahwa proposed a three-stage bid process: a bid specification committee would put together the bid and draft terms and conditions of the tender; then the bid evaluation committee would write recommendations to the BAC in line with supply chain management policy; and thirdly, the BAC would award the tender.

101. Dr Dahwa testified that, although he found SAA's procurement processes in disarray, he took steps to improve them. Yet, as set out below, the processes he introduced were undermined by interference from the Board's non-executive members.

Thirty percent BEE set aside

102. In 2015, SAA adopted what was referred to as "a 30% set-aside policy" in terms of which SAA would set aside 30% of its procurement spend for BEE enterprises. The Board claimed that the policy was based on statements made by former President Zuma during his 2015 State of the Nation Address (SONA). However, the former President's actual statement was that: "Government will set aside 30% of appropriate categories of state procurement for purchasing from small to medium enterprises, cooperatives as well as township and rural enterprises." This is a very different proposition. It is far more conservative and reasonable.

103. Dr Dahwa testified that the SAA Board was determined to pursue an "aggressive transformation" policy. He was happy with the goal of the policy, but not the way SAA tried to implement it. He experienced tremendous pressure from the Board to implement the 30% set-aside policy. He told the Board that the policy could not be implemented without proper PFMA amendments or Treasury guidelines, but the Board instructed him to impose it without following proper procurement processes. He said the Board would insist on 30% set-aside condition being imposed after the procurement process had already been undertaken, even though the condition was nowhere in the bid document. He said that this was irregular and unlawful.

The roadshows

104. Ms Mpshe testified before the Commission that, as part of the Board's decision to implement the 30% set-aside policy, Ms Myeni would call meetings with potential service providers about the 30% set-aside opportunity. Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana would decide whom to invite to these meetings. This culminated in supplier development roadshows. SAA representatives would travel to different provinces sharing information with potential BEE suppliers about how to do business with SAA. They were called "supply engagement summits". They shared information about when key contracts were expiring so that the participants could prepare for the bidding process. Although these summits began as commitment-free information sessions, Dr Dawha testified that, over time, the spirit changed and it became clear to him that Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana wanted to begin making concrete undertakings about contracts to the attendees. In fact, Ms Kwinana supplied Dr Dawha with a list of companies she wanted invited to the summit hosted in Durban.

105. It was at one of these roadshows that Ms Nontsasa Memela, the SAAT Head of Procurement, testified that she met Mr Vuyisile Ndzeku of JM Aviation (South Africa) (Pty) Ltd. As will be detailed below, JM Aviation and Mr Ndzeku were involved in several questionable dealings with many SAA and SAAT decision-makers.

106. After one of these roadshows in Durban, Ms Kwinana instructed Dr Dahwa to simply award 15% of the Swissport Services and the Engen contracts to all the companies that attended the roadshow. Dr Dawha explained to her that this was not possible because it was illegal, and it was also unclear how a contract could possibly be awarded to sixty different entities. Ms Kwinana told Dr Dahwa to establish a holding company that constituted all sixty companies and award it to that company. Dr Dahwa explained that he could not do such a thing because it was a fundamental breach of his duties as CPO. Ms Kwinana responded that she would do it herself, and she proceeded to form the company "Quintessential" to implement the set-aside policy, which involved her own personal enrichment.

Bidvest

107. Ms Mpshe testified that, apart from attempts to implement the 30% set-aside policy in new tenders, Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana were also attempting to impose the policy on existing service providers with an SAA contract. Dr Dahwa testified that Ms Kwinana requested a list from him of all contracts that were due to expire, which she was going to use for "transformation purposes". He provided the list, which included Swissport (to the value of R1.2 billion) and Bidvest.

108. Ms Mpshe testified that Mr Meyer approached her very embarrassed because he came back from a meeting with Ms Kwinana and an aviation company, BidAir, at which Ms Kwinana told them about the set-aside policy and instructed BidAir to put aside 30% of its share of the tender for a BEE partner. BidAir was already a Level 1 BEE accredited firm, so they were confused about how this was to be practically implemented. They wrote to SAA asking about these issues and requesting advice about the firm they were supposed to partner with. Ms Mpshe testified that Mr Meyer showed her the letter but took it with him when he left. The letter dated 23 June 2015 worried Ms Mpshe because legally they were not supposed to impose this policy and this was documentary evidence that SAA representatives had attempted to do so.

109. Ms Mpshe explained that someone must have notified other parties about this because Dr Anton Alberts, a member of Parliament, sent a letter to the B-BBEE Commission about the matter. The Acting B-BBEE Commissioner of the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI), Ms Zodwa Ntuli, advised Ms Mpshe at a subsequent meeting that SAA had to immediately stop what it was doing with the 30% set-aside policy because it was illegal. Ms Mpshe communicated this to the Board. On 13 September 2015, Ms Ntuli sent a letter to Ms Myeni stating that the DTI had met with Ms Mpshe on 8 September 2015, during which Ms Mpshe had informed the DTI that SAA was demanding that Bidvest give 30% of its contract away to an SAA-nominated company. The letter stated categorically that the initiative was not in line with the B-BBEE Act and Codes of Good Practice. The letter asked SAA to send written confirmation by 18 September 2015 that it would not proceed to implement the 30% set-aside initiative until it had applied for and received authorisation to do so as an official deviation from the terms of the B-BBEE Act. According to Ms Mpshe's testimony, Ms Myeni's response to the letter was to say "I do not want to hear anything from that woman" [Ms Ntuli] because she dealt with the Deputy Minister instead. She asked Ms Kwinana to respond to the letter, which was prepared for Ms Mpshe to send. Ms Mpshe refused because she felt that the tone of the response was inappropriate, effectively saying that it was not for Ms Ntuli to tell SAA what do, and that transformation was a national agenda and there was nothing illegal about it.

110. On 28 September 2015, Mr Kenneth Brown, the CPO of National Treasury sent a letter to Ms Mpshe about the SAA Board resolution to set aside 30% of key procurement transactions for Black-owned businesses. He told SAA that, while Board decisions to encourage transformation in procurement were commendable, the Board should not operate outside the procurement legal framework. He stated that the resolution to set aside 30% of contracts was not supported by any procurement legal framework and "must be stopped with immediate effect". The letter requested Ms Mpshe to "advise the Board not to take procurement decisions that would bring the name of SAA and National Treasury into disrepute."

111. The DTI and Treasury were correct. The current Broad-Based Black Economic Empowerment Act 53 of 2003 and the Preferential Procurement Policy Framework Act 5 of 2000 provide for specific BEE measures in procurement (a 90/10 split in bid evaluation, for example). If a particular industry or body seeks to deviate from that, it must get special dispensation from the Minister. They cannot simply design their own BBBEE policy. This has now been confirmed by the courts (Airports Company South Africa SOC Ltd v Imperial Group Ltd and Others [2020] and Swissport South Africa (Pty) Ltd v Airports Company South Africa SOC Limited and Others [2020]).

112. Ms Mpshe responded to the Treasury letter. She stated that while there was a proposed 30% set-aside policy to expedite BEE growth, SAA was an SOE and would seek to ensure compliance with applicable laws and regulations. Ms Kwinana also responded to Treasury on behalf of the Board. The letter asked for full details about how the Board operated outside of procurement frameworks and how its procurement decisions brought SAA and National Treasury into disrepute. This letter was curious given the clear terms of Mr Brown's letter to which this was a response.

The Swissport and Engen letters of award

113. Swissport was a long-standing ground handling service provider for SAA, and had been formally awarded the tender to provide such services. However, due to delays at SAA, the formal contract was never signed. Engen was also a long-standing service provider to SAA. It had been awarded a jet-fuel tender by SAA and the conclusion of the contract was still outstanding in 2015. Ms Kwinana saw the outstanding contracts as an opportunity to get Swissport and Engen to agree to the 30% set-aside policy.

114. Dr Dahwa testified that on 2 October 2015 he received an SMS from Ms Kwinana summoning him to the SAA Park boardroom. He complied and said Ms Kwinana asked him about progress in implementing the 30% set-aside policy. In particular, she asked him whether the set-aside policy was included in the Swissport and Engen contracts. Dr Dahwa explained that this would be unlawful and that he could not go ahead with that decision. He testified that Ms Myeni entered the boardroom and asked Ms Kwinana how far Dr Dahwa had gone in implementing the 30% set-aside strategy.

Ms Kwinana told Ms Myeni that Dr Dahwa was making excuses for not implementing it. Ms Myeni then told Dr Dahwa that she was advertising his job and refused to let him talk unless he did what she asked. She instructed him to prepare the award letters. Ms Kwinana gave him rough drafts of what the letters should say. The award letters contemplated awarding a percentage of the Swissport contract to an entity called "Jamicron (Pty) Ltd" and a percentage of the Engen jet fuel contract to "Quintessential" – the holding company Ms Kwinana formed to represent the sixty companies that attended the Durban summit.

115. Dr Dahwa tried to draft the award letters, but found himself unable to comply with this instruction, which he regarded as unlawful. He returned to the boardroom and told Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana that his conscience would not let him sign the letters. Ms Myeni was about to sign the letter but appeared to change her mind. She instructed Dr Dahwa to go to his office and change the name of the signatory to Ms Mpshe. Dr Dahwa informed Ms Mpshe of this. She told him that, if he knew this was wrong, he should not do what they were instructing because it was unlawful. Dr Dahwa testified that he then went back to his office to pretend he was doing something, but in truth he was "being held at ransom" as Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana were waiting for him in the boardroom. Dr Dahwa appended Ms Mpshe's name to the bottom of the letter and took it to her to sign, which she refused to do. Dr Dahwa went and told Ms Myeni that Ms Mpshe refused to sign, and Ms Myeni insisted that they all go to Ms Mpshe's office. Ms Mpshe told Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni that she was not going to sign the letters. She also told Dr Dahwa, in front of Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana, not to sign the letter if his conscience would not allow him to do that and it was unlawful. Ms Myeni told Ms Mpshe and Dr Dahwa that she was surprised that, as Black executives, they were not supportive of the idea. Eventually, Ms Mpshe excused herself, but before she left, she told Dr Dahwa that he should not sign and that, if he did, he would have to answer for it one day.

116. Dr Dahwa testified that he asked Ms Kwinana how he would justify appointing a pre-selected entity without going out on open tender to procure the most effective service provider for SAA. Ms Kwinana did not respond well to this, suggesting that Dr Dahwa was anti-transformation and threatening that, if he continued disobeying them, he and Ms Mpshe would "suffer" and face disciplinary consequences. He testified that Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni continued insisting that he sign the letters. When he refused, they asked him to commit to signing by the following week. The ordeal with Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni lasted from 10h00 to around 18h00 on a Friday. Dr Dahwa testified that, after everyone had left and it was just the three of them in Ms Mpshe's office, Ms Myeni said that the EFF would be coming to SAA on the Monday because they were concerned about transformation at SAA and they wanted to get rid of people like him. She told him that the EFF wanted to get rid of all Zimbabweans from SAA.

117. Dr Dahwa testified that, after Ms Kwinana said that he and Ms Mpshe were "going to suffer" and undergo disciplinary proceedings if they did not comply, he became emotional and asked them whether he could leave because it was around 6 or 7pm. Dr Dahwa said he eventually, under duress, undertook to sign the letters by the following week but had no intention of doing so. He never wrote or signed the letters.

118. In her testimony, Ms Mpshe confirmed Dr Dahwa's version of events that took place on 2 October 2015. She stated that he was visibly shaken and emotional. Ms Mpshe confirmed the content of draft letters to Swissport and Engen about setting aside 30% of their expenditure for companies nominated by Ms Kwinana. She advised Dr Dahwa that he had her support, and she would not sign the letters. Ms Mpshe testified that Dr Dahwa was almost in tears and told her he had never been so humiliated. Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana had told him that he was a Zimbabwean citizen and was holding a position he would never hold in his own country and was standing in the way of transformation. Ms Mpshe testified that, when she and Dr Dahwa were together with Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana and they tried to put their perspectives across, they were told that there was a Board resolution supporting the awards and they had to implement them. Ms Mpshe explained that the two non-executive directors often said this, and when one asked for the resolutions, it transpired that they did not exist. Instead, the resolutions would be taken later to justify what Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana said.

119. Shortly afterwards, on 9 October 2015, Ms Kwinana wrote a letter of complaint about Dr Dahwa to Ms

Myeni. The letter made various complaints including that Dr Dahwa refused to sign the award letters because his conscience would not allow him and that he insinuated that the Board required him to do unprofessional, unethical, illegal and criminal activities. Ms Kwinana complained that she was being forced to "micromanage executives in respect of the non-implementation of our Board Resolutions." The letter concluded by accusing Dr Dahwa of attempting to derail and sabotage SAA's transformation agenda, as well as insubordination and conspiracy against the Board, leading to a recommendation "that the strongest possible action be taken against him". Dr Dahwa testified in detail as to why the allegations in the letter were unfounded and false. He also testified that he was a permanent resident and that he had implemented many pro-transformation measures, but just refused to break the law.

120. The following correspondence was subsequently exchanged:

120.1 On 29 October 2015, Ms Kwinana emailed Dr Dahwa asking him to confirm that "BEE will be able to participate" in the Swissport Ground Handling tender, "with effect from Monday, 2 November 2015". Dr Dahwa responded on 30 October 2015, saying he was preparing a detailed report about the high risk of this award being challenged because the terms and conditions SAA wished to impose on Swissport were not included in the procurement process. On 2 November 2015, Ms Kwinana wrote back to Dr Dahwa stating: "I did not ask for the risks, I asked for the implementation of board resolutions. Please let me know if you will not implement the resolutions of the Board."

120.2 On 3 November 2015, Mr Meyer wrote to Ms Kwinana. As CPO, Dr Dahwa reported to Mr Meyer as the CFO. Mr Meyer told Ms Kwinana that the CPO had a fiduciary duty to ensure that SAA procurement policies were compliant with its own SME policies as well as Public Procurement laws and regulations. He pointed out that a 15% set aside to "Quintessential Business Consulting Limited" was not included in the Board resolution. Selecting Jamicron (Pty) Ltd to work with Swissport as a BEE partner for the 30% set aside was also not in line with the Board resolution and did not follow a proper procurement process. Mr Meyer stated that the Board could not become operationally involved and give instructions that exposed the airline to non-compliance with its own policies and the law. He pointed out that SAA had received direct guidance from the Minister and DTI that the 30% set-aside policy should not be implemented. He concluded that the goal of transformation "does not justify that proper governance and SCM policies should not be followed".

120.3 On 6 November 2015, Ms Kwinana responded to Mr Meyer's letter and addressed her responses to Ms Myeni. She indicated that "the allocation of 15% to BEE was a Board decision" and that "what must happen is that the 15% must be implemented ... non-implementation of Board resolutions amounts to insubordination." The letter continued that management is responsible for implementing the Board's decision.

120.4 On 9 November 2015, Mr Meyer responded, explaining that the implementation of Board resolutions should be guided by the company's supply chain management policies. He pointed out that the summits were just information-sharing sessions and not formal procurement processes to award a contract. SAA did not have the power to form and appoint a holding company to represent 60 companies that expressed an interest in supplying jet fuel. The Board resolution also did not mention Quintessential or Jamicron.

121. As will be set out in more detail under the Swissport section below, Mr Lester Peter, who replaced Dr Dahwa as CPO after he was put through a grossly unfair disciplinary process, did take steps to comply with Ms Kwinana's demands and sent out a draft contract to Swissport imposing the 30% set-aside policy.

122. In her testimony, Ms Kwinana stated that SAA tried to implement the 30% set-aside policy but received communication from the DTI and Treasury saying that they could not do so. Ms Kwinana even conceded that the set-aside policy was not in line with SAA's SCM Policy. Ms Kwinana then claimed that after receiving the correspondence from the DTI and Treasury (28 September 2015), she no longer attempted to implement the set-aside policy. She claimed that the evidence by Dr Dahwa and Ms Mpshe about the events on 2 October 2015 was false. She claimed that she did not attend any such meeting; that she did not threaten Dr Dahwa thereafter; and that Dr Dahwa had not communicated to her that his conscience would not allow him to sign the letters. When her version was tested, she maintained that there could not have been any meeting because no minutes were taken. But that is palpably absurd because if an unlawful and unethical meeting was taking place, it is unlikely that anyone would keep a record of it in minutes.

123. It was put to Ms Kwinana that the letter she wrote later to Ms Myeni on 12 October 2015, where she viciously condemned Dr Dahwa, confirmed Dr Dahwa's version of events because she complained that he had failed to sign award letters - award letters that Ms Kwinana testified she knew nothing about. The letter also repeated what Dr Dahwa said, namely that he had refused to write award letters because "his conscience would not allow him". But Ms Kwinana had initially denied in her evidence that she had ever been told this by Dr Dahwa. When the letter was shown to her, Ms Kwinana just said she forgot that she had written it. She was also shown the contemporaneous letter that Dr Dahwa had written to Mr Meyer where he said that he was not coming to work as he feared for his life after the threats from Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana about the EFF. Ms Kwinana still denied that any of it took place.

124. During her evidence before the Commission, Ms Myeni was also asked about these events. She refused to answer and invoked the privilege against self-incrimination.

125. Ms Kwinana's evidence on the interaction with Dr Dahwa was dishonest. She was given numerous opportunities to come clean and accept what the contemporaneous documents revealed about the events of the 2 October 2015. However, rather than accepting responsibility for her role in the ordeal, she persisted in lying under oath. Her evidence is rejected as patently false, and the Commission finds that Ms Mpshe and Dr Dahwa's account of what transpired on 2 October 2015 is true.

126. Dr Dahwa was ultimately removed from his position as CPO in December 2015, after which Ms Mpshe was moved out of her role as Acting CEO. The 30% set-aside policy forged ahead and Swissport was eventually awarded the ground handling contract for five years from 1 April 2016, in circumstances that were irregular and unlawful. In addition, a strange BEE provision was included in this contract that benefitted JM Aviation to the tune of R 6 million. Shortly after this R 6 million came into JM Aviation's bank account, it was used to benefit Ms Kwinana personally to the amount of R4.3 million. This is dealt with in more detail below.

Set aside for veterans

127. Ms Mpshe testified that Ms Myeni instructed her to do a presentation for MK veterans. She consulted Dr Dahwa and the head of transformation, Mr Thapelo Lehasa, and created a presentation outline. This included SAA's procurement framework; opportunities for services at SAA; the requirements to be a service provider at SAA; and how SAA could assist them in getting on the service provider list so that they would be informed of tender opportunities. The meeting was attended by the Deputy Minister of Military Veterans and Defence, Mr Kebby Maphatsoe, together with Mr Des van Rooyen and some other representatives of the MK Veterans organisation.

128. After the presentation, Ms Myeni stood up and said that "these people" had "died for us" to get our freedom and all you want to do is tell them about policies and procedures. They want to know what the budget is for jet fuel per annum. Ms Mpshe responded that she did not believe it was appropriate to discuss budgets with potential service providers. Ms Myeni proceeded to say that perhaps they should set aside 30% of all vacancies at SAA for the children of MK veterans. Ms Mpshe said she made no further comments about Ms Myeni's pronouncements, but at the end of the meeting, she stated that she would arrange for Mr Lehasa and Dr Dahwa to meet with Mr van Rooyen to assist in helping them register on the supplier database.

129. On 2 December 2015 Dr Dahwa was told by the head of transformation, Mr Lehasa, that he wanted to see him urgently together with Mr Des van Rooyen, who Mr Lehasa told him was the DG for the Military Veterans Associations. Dr Dahwa initially refused to attend, but he eventually attended. At the meeting, Mr van Rooyen expressed unhappiness because Dr Dahwa was not responding to his emails. Dr Dahwa said that he had not received them. Mr van Rooyen explained that the MKVA wanted to do business with SAA, particularly with respect to two contracts: security provision; and the Amadeus online booking system contract extension, which required a BEE partner. Dr Dahwa testified that he was not aware of any open tenders for security and the Amadeus contract extension had not yet gone out to tender. Mr van Rooyen insisted that these tenders be awarded to two companies related to MKVA.

130. Dr Dahwa testified that he was surprised that Mr van Rooyen had this information, as well as detailed content about the amount of money SAA intended to dedicate to this development endeavour. Mr Van Rooyen refused to give up their source. This concerned Dr Dahwa, as did the fact that MKVA was not requesting but instructing that the contracts be awarded to these companies. Dr Dahwa testified that the meeting ended with his refusal to help the MKVA representatives.

131. Mr van Rooyen received a rule 3.3 notice ahead of Dr Dahwa's evidence. He did not make any application in terms of rule 3.4 of the Commission's Rules. Dr Dahwa's evidence on this issue is therefore uncontested.

Dr Dahwa's removal

132. The day after the meeting with Mr van Rooyen, on 3 December 2015, Dr Dahwa was instructed to report to the SAA boardroom. On his way there, he saw Mr Musa Zwane speaking to Ms Myeni – Mr Zwane had by now replaced Ms Mpshe as Acting SAA CEO. Before reaching the boardroom, Dr Dahwa was intercepted by Ms Phumeza Nhantsi, who introduced herself as the new Acting CFO. She moved him into another venue and stated that she was instructed to place Dr Dahwa on special leave because there were matters concerning him that were being investigated. Dr Dahwa was provided with a letter outlining the basis for his suspension. The letter stipulated that Dr Dahwa was suspended with immediate effect. After reading the letter, Dr Dahwa packed up his things and left the workplace.

133. On 9 December 2015, Dr Dahwa saw on the announcement that Mr van Rooyen had been appointed Finance Minister, which made him realise that the person he had said "no" to in the previous meeting was far more powerful than he thought. He began worrying about his safety and made plans to leave immediately for Zimbabwe.

134. After this, Dr Dahwa received disciplinary charges and a disciplinary process followed. The disciplinary proceedings began on 16 March 2016. Dr Dahwa attended the first day but handed in a sick note for the second day. BMK Attorneys insisted that the proceedings continue even in Dr Dahwa's absence. After Dr Dahwa testified at the Commission, an affidavit was requested from SAA detailing what had happened during Dr Dahwa's disciplinary process. This was provided to the Commission by the head of SAA Employee Relations, Mr Lourens Erasmus. In his affidavit, Mr Erasmus explained that he was very concerned that the proceedings were continuing without Dr Dahwa present. He immediately raised concerns because he said that, unless the authenticity of the medical certificate was challenged, it would be unfair to proceed with the inquiry in his absence.

135. Mr Erasmus remained concerned that any finding against Dr Dahwa after a hearing conducted in his absence would be liable to be challenged. This would be because he had not been given an opportunity to test the evidence against him and to put his side of the case. Mr Erasmus engaged Ms Khanyisile Khanyile, an Employee Relations Specialist, to assist and give her opinion on the disciplinary proceedings continuing in Dr Dahwa's absence. She was unequivocal, saying that the entire process would be procedurally and substantively unfair if it continued. She also said that, if it continued, SAA could face claims for unfair dismissal, unfair labour practices, and civil claims.

136. Despite this, the disciplinary hearing proceeded. The chairperson found against Dr Dahwa. The ruling explains that Dr Dahwa was "charged" with various counts of dishonesty and dereliction of duty. Dr Dahwa's testimony dealt in detail with why these allegations were baseless; his lawyers also addressed this aspect in detail. The upshot of the charges was that he was insubordinate for failing to follow Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana's irregular and unlawful instructions. As set out above, the circumstances of his removal strongly lend themselves to the conclusion that these charges were trumped up to remove him from office. This is further supported by the treatment of Ms Mpshe (discussed later) when she was also forcibly removed. Dr Dahwa had ample reason not to carry out these instructions and it was Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana who made promises at the roadshows when they were not in a position to do so.

137. In the light of Ms Khanyile's advice, Mr Erasmus implored Ms Nhantsi not to provide the ruling to Dr Dahwa because of all the irregularities in the process. She nonetheless did so and he was dismissed. Mr Erasmus also provided the ruling to Ms Khanyile, who expressed serious concerns about its correctness. Dr Dahwa tried conciliation, but SAA kept failing to arrive for the conciliation meetings, and so he then moved to arbitration. However, at a point, it became too draining to keep fighting and so he settled with SAA on the basis that he would be paid six months remuneration to walk away. Dr Dahwa explained that, after this, he did not receive any formal job offers for three-and-a-half years and his house in Pretoria, which he purchased when he took the SAA job, was repossessed by the bank.

Ms Mpshe's removal

138. On 13 October 2015, an Exco meeting with the Board was convened because, according to Ms Myeni, the Board was concerned with Ms Mpshe's performance as Acting CEO. This was because she was alleged to have refused to follow and implement Board instructions and was second-guessing the Board. Ms Mpshe testified that, at this meeting, Mr Zwane, the SAAT CEO at the time, said that he could not understand why a CEO would resist taking instructions from the Board. He emphasised that he worked very well with Ms Kwinana as SAAT Board Chairperson and always implemented her decisions. Ms Mpshe testified that other executive members at the meeting said that they did not have any problem with her leadership and were complimentary of her leadership style. They also stated that the company was beginning to stabilise under her leadership. Ms Mpshe insisted that she should have a right of reply. She stated that she would take instructions from the Board that were lawful and complied with approved SAA policies and procedures.

139. After this meeting, on 27 October 2015, the Chair summoned Ms Mpshe to a one-on-one meeting at the Beverly Hills Hotel in Durban. The Chair began by showering Ms Mpshe with praise, and asked why she had not applied for the permanent CEO position. She told Ms Mpshe to just send Ms Myeni her CV anyway even though the deadline had passed. Ms Mpshe refused. After this, Ms Myeni stated that the unions were dissatisfied with how Ms Mpshe was handling the SAA retrenchment process, which was nearing the final stage. Ms Mpshe testified that she was surprised to hear this because some of the unions had complimented her on the handling of the process.

140. On 13 November 2015, the Company Secretary contacted Ms Mpshe and told her that Ms Myeni had scheduled a meeting with trade unions in the afternoon. Ms Mpshe queried this because there was a structured forum where these discussions were meant to take place at which all relevant stakeholders would be present. Nevertheless, Ms Mpshe attended the meeting. Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana were present, along with one trade union. When the meeting opened, Ms Mpshe voiced her concern at the inappropriateness of the meeting in the light of the structures that were in place for discussions with labour. Ms Myeni told her that this was Ms Myeni's meeting, so she "must shut up and listen and toe the line". Ms Mpshe then kept quiet. Ms Mpshe testified that she believed the true purpose of the meeting was to try and create some justification for terminating her employment as Acting CEO and to carry on the termination narrative from the Durban meeting that the unions had complained about her.

141. Later that day, Ms Myeni called Ms Mpshe and told her there would be a Board meeting that evening that she must attend. At the meeting, only Ms Kwinana and Dr Tambi were in attendance. Ms Myeni was not there. Ms Kwinana opened the meeting by saying that the Chair had instructed them to relieve Ms Mpshe of her position because they wanted to give other executives a chance at the position, which Ms Mpshe responded was "fair enough". Ms Mpshe asked when the decision was effective, and Ms Kwinana told her it was effective immediately. Ms Mpshe explained that it was a legal requirement to have a CEO at all times. They responded that Mr Zwane would take over her position. Ms Mpshe then left before Ms Myeni arrived. Mr Zwane acted as the SAA CEO until there was a permanent appointment on 1 November 2017.

The appointment of Ms Nhantsi to the permanent position of CFO

142. Ms Mpshe testified that after she had been removed as Acting CEO, she went back to her position as GM: Human Resources. In this capacity, she was tasked with appointing the new SAA CFO. Ms Phumeza Nhantsi had been seconded as interim CFO in late November 2015. Ms Nhantsi testified that in 2015 she was employed as a chartered accountant at SNG – an accounting firm. She did joint audit work with Ms Kwinana's firm, Kwinana & Associates. She testified that in late 2015, Ms Kwinana approached her and asked if she wanted to be seconded to SAA. Ms Nhantsi was interested, and on 27 November 2015, she became interim CFO but was still paid by SNG because she was on secondment. There was no process followed prior to this appointment and Ms Mpshe testified that she regarded it as irregular. While Ms Nhantsi was interim CFO, a process was undertaken to find a permanent CFO. Ms Mpshe explained that, although Ms Nhantsi was among the potential candidates for the position, she did not make the shortlist. However, after the shortlisting, Mr Zwane, the then acting CEO, told the team responsible for the process that Ms Myeni had instructed that Ms Nhantsi was to be placed on the shortlist. Ms Mpshe testified that this was done, and Ms Nhantsi was appointed as permanent CFO in May 2017.

143. In mid-December 2015, Ms Mpshe was back in her position as GM: HR and she went on a month's leave. When she returned to work on 19 January 2016, she was told to attend a presentation by the SSA regarding security vetting. Thereafter, she was handed an envelope from Ms Kibuuka containing a long list of allegations of misconduct against her. This document was signed by Mr Zwane. Ms Kibuuka advised Ms Mpshe that the letter came from Mr Lester Peter who also told Ms Kibuuka to advise Ms Mpshe that she had to go on leave. Mr Peter was the SAA contract manager responsible for procurement at the time. The allegations in the letter included: failure to discipline Mr Wolf Meyer when instructed to do so (this was when Ms Mpshe had asked for a legal opinion and investigation report before taking action, which was not provided); failure to cooperate with State Security vetting operations (this was when Ms Mpshe refused to fire or move an innocent member of the treasury department who Ms Myeni had targeted and accused of failing her vetting because she had dual citizenship); allegedly adjusting Dr Dahwa's salary without following due process; and allegedly signing a contract with Airbus without the correct delegation of authority.

144. Ms Mpshe asked to meet with Mr Zwane to discuss the letter of alleged misconduct, since he had signed it. Mr Zwane was only able to meet Ms Mpshe in early February 2016. She asked Mr Zwane what the allegations were about because, as far as she was concerned, she had led an exemplary career at SAA and had never been found to have committed misconduct. Ms Mpshe testified that some of the allegations dated back to 2012. In her view, it did not make sense for these allegations to be levelled against her for the first time in 2016. According to Ms Mpshe, Mr Zwane would not look her in the eye and responded that he was just carrying out the Board's instruction.

145. Ms Mpshe's attorneys wrote a response to Mr Zwane's letter of charges. The response dealt with each individual charge and allegation and explained why Ms Mpshe's actions were justified in each case. She also explained that she believed there were ulterior motives for the suspension and the charges had no real basis. She contended that she was being punished for refusing to sign off the 30% BEE set-aside letters that Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni wished her to sign. She heard nothing further from SAA's attorneys, ENS, until mid-April 2016, when another set of attorneys, BMK Attorneys, took over the matter. Ms Mpshe's attorney advised her that the ENS attorneys were surprised to learn that the matter was proceeding because, based on the response from Ms Mpshe, they had taken the view that there was no basis for a disciplinary process.

146. On 5 May 2016, Mr Zwane summoned Ms Mpshe to a meeting with Ms Kwinana. At the meeting, he handed her a letter which suspended her with immediate effect. Ms Mpshe told Mr Zwane that she would not acknowledge receipt of the letter as the matter was being dealt with by her attorney. Ms Mpshe therefore did not take the letter and left the room. SAA made no effort to respond to Ms Mpshe's attorney's letter with her response to the charges until 6 August 2016. On this date, new charges were levelled against Ms Mpshe, with only two allegations remaining the same. The disciplinary process stalled, with SAA's attorney, BMK Attorneys, stating they lacked instructions.

147. Ms Mpshe was on paid suspension for 22 months. Finally, around August or September 2017, Ms Mpshe was asked to prepare representations to the Board on why her suspension should be lifted. At this stage, a new Board was in place, but Ms Myeni remained the Chair. After providing these representations on 15 September 2017, Ms Mpshe waited until February 2018 to hear anything further from the Board. The new CEO, Mr Jarana, proposed to Ms Mpshe a mutual separation. Ms Mpshe asked for the terms of this proposal, but they were not forthcoming. A few weeks later, a letter was sent that misrecorded what occurred at the meeting. Ms Mpshe's attorneys advised that they could continue to fight the action and would likely win, but SAA had deep pockets and she had already incurred almost R500 000 in legal fees. Ms Mpshe ultimately agreed to a mutual separation, receiving a settlement of 12 months' salary.

148. Ms Mpshe told the Commission that she and her family had endured "immeasurable hardship" because of SAA's conduct. Her reputation was permanently damaged, and the saga had had extremely serious consequences for her career. She said that her family had been humiliated by the ordeal.

Conclusion on disciplinary proceedings

149. The facts above tell a sorry tale of gross manipulation of disciplinary processes to remove a competent and committed CPO and the Head of HR at SAA. Both Dr Dahwa and Ms Mpshe were subjected to abuse from Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana when they tried to resist their unlawful attempts to redirect 30% of SAA's procurement spend to pre-selected BEE entities. They were both subjected to trumped-up charges and endured drawn-out and unfair disciplinary processes, which they eventually could no longer fund. Taxpayers' money was wasted on these expensive disciplinary processes, which used external lawyers, required SAA to pay out Dr Dahwa and Ms Mpshe, and necessitated the employment (and payment) of other people to fulfil these roles while Dr Dahwa and Ms Mpshe were on paid suspension. This again shows a complete disregard by Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana for the money of the South African public that had been entrusted to the airline.

150. It is not clear that there is any legal solution that would remedy the damage done to these two executives, and those like them who tried to stand-up to the unlawful and reckless conduct of the SAA Board in 2015 and 2016. Once Dr Dahwa and Ms Mpshe were removed, state capture truly took hold at SAA.

BNP Capital raising

151. Ms Cynthia Agnes Soraya Stimpel served for ten years as Head of Financial Risk Management at SAA and then became the Acting Group Treasurer. She testified that the SAA Board of Directors under Ms Carolus had strategic direction and worked together to achieve SAA's vision. Staff morale was quite high, and it appeared that SAA was slowly starting to improve. After Ms Carolus left the airline, Ms Stimpel noted increased Board interference in operational matters, including specific SAA contracts. Ms Stimpel testified that this deviated from the appropriate governance and oversight role that the Board was supposed to play.

152. Ms Stimpel testified that, in February 2015, SAA was in a precarious financial situation. It had a Treasury guarantee of up to R15 billion but had borrowed about R11 billion. She said that it was always short-term debt, resulting in the loans having to be rolled over when they came to maturity, which was not a simple process, as well as very high interest rates. Around this time, Ms Stimpel was appointed as Acting Group Treasurer. During this period, SAA was instructed to report to National Treasury instead of DPE. National Treasury required SAA to draw up a borrowing plan for the next three to five years indicating how it intended to manage its funds. Ms Stimpel's team, in collaboration with Mr Wolf Meyer, the CFO at this time, and National Treasury, prepared this plan and submitted it to Exco and the ARC of Board. The Board approved the plan in April 2015. It was based on the analysis that, if SAA converted all its short-term debts to long-term ones over ten years and took full advantage of the R15 billion guarantee, this could be secured at a fixed rate and would save SAA approximately R 400 million.

Procurement in financing

153. Ms Stimpel testified that, in making funding decisions at SAA, they followed a slightly different process to ordinary procurement. They used the Financial Risk Management Policy. This required an RFP, but only to the five major banks because they were reliable and had a proven historical funding relationship. The process was conducted through the Financial Risk Committee and not through those responsible for SCM Policy. It then went to Exco, the ARC, and then the Board as opposed to the SCM Policy that required the process to go through the Cross Functional Sourcing Team, the BAC, and only then to the ARC and Board. However, Ms Stimpel explained that they did try to get the most competitive rates possible from the banks and fully analysed each bank's offer before taking a decision.

The first RFP

154. Ms Stimpel testified that, after the Board approved the borrowing plan on 22 April 2015, SAA began implementing it and went out to the market with an RFP for R15 billion for debt consolidation. However, despite approving the plan, the Board queried the RFP and its content and asked for a paper to be prepared on debt consolidation. Ms Kwinana then sent an email stating that the process had to be cancelled and that a tender process should be followed. The email queried the limited pool of funders as this would not allow new entrants to the market.

155. Ms Stimpel explained that, when dealing with such an enormous sum, they did not deviate from the institutions that were able to fund such large amounts. She said that smaller institutions did not have the capacity to do so. Ms Stimpel responded to the email and pointed out that the RFP had been sent out on the instruction of the Board's Chair. She tried to dissuade the Board from cancelling the process because of the reputational risk to SAA and the harm it would cause if they later put out another RFP. She also pointed out that the large banks had proven themselves to be reliable in treating SAA's sensitive financial information confidentially. In addressing Ms Kwinana's concern about new entrants, Ms Stimpel explained that they had received many unsolicited calls from new entrants, many of whom said they could not manage R15 billion. Ms Stimpel told Ms Kwinana that the ones who could were asked to prepare a term sheet in response to the RFP, but they had asked what a term sheet was. They were clearly not capacitated to fulfil this role. Ms Stimpel also expressed concern about how unsolicited bidders knew about the funding opportunity in circumstances where no RFP had gone out. She and Mr Meyer suspected they got the information from the Board because the executive team in SAA Treasury had been involved in borrowing activities since 2007 and knew not to disclose anything about it.

156. The Board ultimately decided to cancel the RFP. The Treasury then prepared a smaller RFP just for maturing debt that was rolling over at that time, which was R7 billion. However, the Board changed it back to a full R15 billion debt consolidation RFP. The Board required Ms Stimpel to prepare a new RFP for this full amount, and wanted the RFP to be sent to all unsolicited bidders that had previously visited SAA regarding the debt. It also wanted to approve and even add to the list of funders to whom the RFP would be sent. Ms Stimpel explained that this was the first time she had heard of an RFP first being approved by the Board and not going through normal financial procurement channels. She testified that this was unusual, even in SCM processes.

The second RFP

157. On 10 September 2015, the new RFP went to the Board for approval with a list of counterparties to whom it would be sent. It was approved and sent out. The closing date for responses was 2 October 2015, allowing SAA time to compile a spreadsheet of the bidders' term sheets so that it could compare who was offering the best terms.

158. Around October 2015, (before his resignation in November 2015), Mr Meyer called Ms Stimpel and other treasury managers into his office and explained that a potential bidder had called a meeting with him. He assumed the meeting would be to discuss how to put together the term sheet or something about lending terms. However, when he met with the bidder, Mr Jayendra Naidoo from First Self Financial Services, someone at the meeting called Mr Meyer aside and told him that he must ensure SAA gave his client the deal because "number 1" (former President Jacob Zuma) wanted this to happen. Mr Meyer responded that the decision-making was done in a team and based on a full analysis, so he could not assist with this request. Mr Meyer explained to Ms Stimpel that he was suspicious when he got to the meeting and decided to record it using a recording device in a pen.

159. Ms Stimpel explained that, in November 2015, Mr Meyer was called into a Board meeting. When he arrived, he was searched and his recording pen and laptop were confiscated by security. Ms Stimpel testified that these precautions were highly unusual. She noted that Ms Myeni called a meeting with National Treasury in February 2016, and again someone was at the door asking everyone to hand over cell phones and laptops. She found it highly unusual and suspicious that Ms Myeni knew of the recording pen and thought to confiscate it from Mr Meyer. She felt something was not right at SAA when the Board started taking these extraordinary measures. The secrecy and fear of being recorded at a meeting was very suspicious.

160. Mr Meyer told his treasury personnel that, because of negative reporting about him in the press regarding the management of certain SAA funds in Africa, he had been advised by his attorney to resign and find alternative employment. He did so and was replaced by Ms Phumeza Nhantsi as interim CFO on 27 November 2015.

161. SAA received various responses to the funding RFP. The top offer came from SeaCrest Investments. They had the best interest rate and offered the full amount required. There was an alternative offer from three major banks, which were together only willing to fund R 4.3 billion. The Treasury team was preparing a recommendation for the appointment of SeaCrest, but during their analysis they became worried that there was not enough information available on SeaCrest. They asked SAA's legal department to do a full due diligence on the company. Accordingly, in the recommendation from Treasury to the Financial Risk Committee, Ms Stimpel recorded that, although SeaCrest was the preferred bidder, a full due diligence still needed to be conducted before any decision could be taken. Her recommendation also provided for an alternative position. If Seacrest was not recommended, SAA should take the combined R 4.3 billion from the three banks as a contingency plan.

162. The due diligence was conducted because little was known about SeaCrest and its term sheet revealed that it was not going to be the direct funder. It was using two other funders, Mars Capital and Grissag (the main funder). The due diligence report reflected that SeaCrest and its investors were reluctant to provide the required information and documentation until a successful bidder was announced. This information was critical to making an informed decision. SAA was concerned about the origin and availability of the funds. However, the ultimate recommendation was that the due diligence could be finalised after awarding the tender during the contracting process. The review committee drafted an agreement which proposed that a successful due diligence would be a condition for the contract coming into being.

163. These documents were sent to Exco. The recommendation recorded that the Treasury team were uncomfortable with the results of the due diligence. While the Treasury team recommended SeaCrest as first choice, this was subject to a more thorough due diligence being a contractual condition. However, Ms Stimpel still raised with Exco that SAA could consider jettisoning SeaCrest altogether because, since 2007, SAA's practice had been to go through the big banks which were reliable and had the requisite capacity. SAA also had a close working relationship with them. The due diligence for SeaCrest raised red flags and SAA still did not know who Grissag was and how it would be sourcing its funds.

164. This same recommendation was then placed before the SAA Board. Ms Stimpel did not attend the Board meeting, at Ms Nhantsi's direction, even though she normally did attend meetings about funding or hedging together with the CFO. Ms Stimpel testified that she expected the Board would either choose one of the recommended options, or they would reject both and ask that a fresh RFP be put out, but that is not what occurred.

Funding from the FDC

165. When Ms Stimpel finally received the Board resolution, she found it perplexing. The Board had rejected both recommendations and resolved to get funding from a third option that had not appeared in the recommendation – an entity known as the Free State Development Corporation (FDC). The resolution gave authority to the Acting CEO and interim CFO to sign any contracts to make sure the loan happened. The resolution was based on a letter sent to the Board by a "Shepard Moyo" from the FDC. Ms Stimpel was concerned because the letter had not gone through the formal RFP process, nor had it been analysed.

166. The very concerning aspect was that the resolution was for approval of the FDC loan, from a foreign bidder that did not go through any process and based on a brief letter that did not even set out the terms of the loan. The FDC letter stated that the transaction was subject to approvals under the PFMA and that terms would be negotiated later. It stated that the interest rate may be between 3 and 6%, but this was not a commitment. The letter did not mention the amount it was willing to advance or the loan tenure.

167. Ms Stimpel testified that when she asked for this letter the Board told her she did not need to see it. Ms Stimpel was shown the letter by the Commission's investigator. She testified that this letter was not sufficient for the Board to reject the recommendations of the entire process and simply choose another bidder based on vague terms. There was no information on the FDC's mandate; this was an exploratory letter and not a firm commitment. The Board clearly wanted to work with the FDC without going through approved governance processes. The FDC mandate is in fact governed by the Free State Development Corporate Act 6 of 1995, which defines and confines its power to developing enterprises within the Free State province.

168. Ms Stimpel was similarly concerned about some of the reasons given by the Board in the resolution. The resolution stated that borrowing from another SOE carried less risk and it would give SAA better treatment in the event of default. Ms Stimpel testified that this was incorrect, as the risk was worse because the two parties' risks are in the government/public bundle. This would concentrate all the risk within government. She said it was also incorrect that FDC would have treated SAA differently in the event of default, as the knock-on effects of default would be crippling to FDC, with terrible consequences for the funding of national and provincial government. Ms Stimpel testified that the Board's seemingly inexplicable decision based on the letter could be understood if one considered the Board composition in late 2015. It was only Ms Myeni, Ms Kwinana, Dr Tambi, Ms Nhantsi and Mr Zwane. Under this diminished Board, fraud and corruption progressed unabated at SAA and SAAT.

169. During the week of 7 December 2015, Ms Stimpel received instructions from Ms Nhantsi to "ratify" the decision to appoint the FDC. She refused as she was being asked to do so without even seeing the Board resolution. Ms Stimpel later received the resolution and recorded her reservations in an email dated 9 December 2015 that the process was irregular and that, if the FDC was to be considered, the RFP had to go out again with the FDC included as a bidder. Ms Stimpel therefore recommended to the Financial Risk Committee that they send the RFP to the FDC as they would with any bidder. Once the FDC responded to the RFP, the Committee would do a full comparison of the different options and decide. A member of Ms Stimpel's team sent an RFP to the FDC on 24 December 2015, but they were concerned that even this was outside of proper processes because the period for responses to the RFP expired on 2 October 2015.

170. Ms Stimpel also testified that the Board's conduct had prejudiced SAA because several loans were maturing in December 2015 and needed to be rolled over and there would be new debt. SAA needed urgent cash to meet these obligations. It would need bridging finance to do so, given that neither the consolidation nor the alternative partial loans from the banks had happened. SAA used the remaining R3 billion to which it had access under the National Treasury guarantee to meet those obligations and secured bridging finance for the period December to March 2016.

171. The legal department raised a concern about the FDC and whether a due diligence had been conducted in a letter to Ms Nhantsi, who then confirmed that it would be done. This was an inversion of the process, with a due diligence usually done before the Board decides to award the contract, not after. There was also no provision in the resolution for any conditions providing for the conducting of a due diligence process. Ms Nhantsi's response to the request for a due diligence was also curious because she instructed Treasury to send out the RFP to the IDC and PIC as well. The IDC and PIC had been among the entities to which SAA had sent the RFP previously, and had not responded because their mandate did not include funding SOEs. For that reason, Treasury did not act on this request, and it also did not appear in the Board resolution.

172. The FDC responded to the RFP with a term sheet. The startling thing about the term sheet was that it proposed a joint venture between the FDC and Grissag – the main funder in the SeaCrest offer. The Board rejected the SeaCrest offer because of insufficient due diligence and not enough information about the funder. When Treasury met and analysed the response to the RFP on 6 January 2016, they invited representatives from National Treasury as observers. The interest rate (of 4%) seemed very beneficial but the same issue of Grissag not being subject to due diligence was worrying. National Treasury explained that the FDC did not have the mandate to conclude the transaction, as it could only fund development projects in the Free State. On 6 January 2016, Ms Stimpel arranged a meeting with Ms Nhantsi and relayed this information to her. Ms Nhantsi advised them to leave the matter with her and she would speak to Mr Moyo at the FDC about it. Ms Nhantsi only came back to Ms Stimpel on 20 April 2016 and told her that the FDC was off the table for this reason.

Transaction advisor bid

173. At the end of the meeting between Ms Nhantsi and Ms Stimpel on 6 January 2016, Ms Nhantsi advised Ms Stimpel that she had received Board approval for a transaction advisor about the debt consolidation transaction. The transaction advisor would consider SAA's debt portfolio and how to restructure the balance sheet and related matters. Ms Stimpel responded that this was precisely what Treasury had done and made recommendations which had been approved. This was an internal function. Ms Nhantsi claimed that there was a need for this advisor because:

    173.1 Treasury had insufficient skills since Ms Stimpel had only been in her position for 8 months; Ms Stimpel said this was unfounded as she had been performing a similar role in the Treasury department for 10 years

    173.2 The large amount was only in the Board's authority and the Board needed external assurance from an independent source about the transaction; Ms Stimpel said that it was unjustified and irresponsible to spend unwarranted sums on another party reproducing work already performed internally; and 173.3 Ms Nhantsi was new and had insufficient institutional knowledge; Ms Stimpel testified that she could have relied on her team that worked with the National Treasury and the legal department for this institutional knowledge.

174. Ms Nhantsi prepared recommendations for submission to the Board about why a transaction advisor was needed. Ms Stimpel reviewed each motivation and testified that these were being, or had already been, internally considered. Nonetheless, the Board approved the recommendation for the appointment of a transaction advisor "to advise regarding the R15 billion debt consolidation restructuring exercise". An RFP was issued, and the BAC prepared a document with proposed evaluation criteria. Upon reading the document, Ms Stimpel realised that the advisor was going to be tasked with sourcing the R15 billion funding – something her team had been tasked with. Ms Stimpel testified that it made no sense to get a middle person to broker this funding process when SAA had historically managed to obtain reliable funding straight from the banks. Appointing a middle person would also significantly drive-up costs for SAA. Ms Stimpel shared these views and concerns with Ms Nhantsi at various meetings and by email. Ms Nhantsi said she already had Board approval and would send it to Ms Stimpel, but what she sent her was Ms Nhantsi's recommendation for a transaction advisor, which did not mention a broker to source funding. Ms Stimpel therefore changed the BAC evaluation document so that it excluded the sourcing of funds. The RFP that went out following Ms Stimpel's revisions only related to transaction advisory services. Seven entities responded: Deloitte & Touche, Regiments Capital, Basis Point Capital, Singer Holdings, Nasela Capital, Nedbank Limited, and BNP Capital.

175. The RFP required bidders to submit their BBBEE certificates. If they were joint ventures, a consolidated certificate was required together with the percentage income split in the JV agreement, the workload split, a financial services provider licence, and the signed agreement. The BNP Capital bid indicated a JV with "InLine Trading 10 (Pty) Ltd". Ms Stimpel testified that neither she nor Michael Kleyn, the Manager of International Cash Management in the Group Treasury at SAA, were invited to be involved in the evaluation of the bid submissions which would ordinarily have been part of their work. The BEC recommended to the BAC, who then selected BNP Capital to provide the transaction advisory services. There were, however, several shortcomings in the BNP bid. First, there was no information in the bid about its partner, InLine Trading. Second, there was no consolidated BEE certificate. Third, the price submission stated that because of the project's complexity, the fee would be 'R1 plus a fee' to SAA on the successful adoption for implementation of advice. This amount could not have been correct.

176. On 20 April 2016, the Cross Functional Sourcing Team (CFST) called a meeting with Ms Nhantsi to get an update about what was happening with the funding RFP, because the RFP was still open and they had not given any feedback to applicants. In this meeting, Ms Nhantsi told the team that FDC was "off the table" and that BNP would now be sourcing the funding. The team challenged this decision. Ms Lindsay Olitzki, the Head of Department: Financial Accounting in the treasury at SAA, stated that the scope of the procurement transaction could not be changed in that manner. Other members, including Ms Stimpel, stated that the sourcing of funds needed to go out to tender again with a new RFP for a transaction advisor who would source funding. Despite warning Ms Nhantsi at the meeting of this need, she did not appear to take any further action, and the Board passed the resolution extending the scope of the BNP transaction advisor contract to source the R15 billion, as set out below.

The increase in the BNP scope to include sourcing funds

177. The next day, on 21 April 2016, the Board decided to increase BNP's scope to include sourcing of funds. There was no process behind it. Instead of management driving the process and the initiative coming from SAA business and then motivated up to the Board for final approval, all that was served before the Board was a letter from Ms Nhantsi recommending that BNP's scope be extended. A few weeks later, on 6 May 2016, Ms Stimpel was called into Ms Nhantsi's office. Ms Nhantsi told her that, since Ms Stimpel was constantly challenging what she did, she thought that she would show Ms Stimpel the document she wanted her to sign and discuss the matter with her. Ms Nhantsi told Ms Stimpel that the Board had already approved the award to BNP of an increased scope to source funding; that she had spoken to BNP and they were prepared to source that funding; and they had given Ms Nhantsi the price. She gave Ms Stimpel a document that indicated that BNP would charge SAA 3% of R15 billion as the fee for sourcing the funds. Ms Stimpel refused to sign it. She said her job was to reduce expenses for SAA by R300 million by year-end and the only way to do that was to reduce interest rates on borrowing. This would wipe out the entire saving in one transaction. Ms Nhantsi agreed to go back to BNP and renegotiate. Ms Stimpel then went on leave, and Mr Kleyn acted in her position. She instructed him not to sign anything in her absence and asked him to get comparative pricing from the banks.

178. On 11 May 2016, the SAA Global Supply Management Unit made a request to the BAC to support confining the award of the contract for sourcing funds to just BNP Capital. It should be noted that this whole process of confinement was happening after the Board had already approved the extension of BNP's scope to source funding for SAA. This was another inversion of process. Proper procurement does not permit SOE Boards to make decisions and then try to justify them by running a process thereafter. On 13 May 2016, the BAC did make such a recommendation. It claimed the sourcing was urgent, and since the Board had been unable to source funds from its own efforts, it needed the transaction advisor to do so. Ms Stimpel testified that the matter was not that urgent. The same problems had faced SAA for a long time. Any urgency there was had been caused by the Board's inaction and delaying since the original RFP was sent out and subsequently cancelled.

179. The BAC motivation explained that a normal success fee in the industry is two to 3% and SAA had secured a fee of 1.5%. That amounted to a total of R256 million with VAT. Ms Stimpel testified that even 1.5% was higher than banking industry norms, which normally used basis points (less than 1%) for arranging funding. Although banks could increase interest on the funding, they would not charge such a large fee.

180. While Ms Stimpel was away, Mr Kleyn signed the BAC recommendation to appoint BNP Capital to source funding, despite the instruction not to. He sent her a WhatsApp message saying he had done so because he was under pressure to sign. Ms Stimpel testified that she she sent an urgent whistleblower message to National Treasury indicating that she had received notification that a BAC document was signed to pay a client without her knowing anything about the client, and that SAA would have to pay the client R225 million (excluding VAT). She said Mr Kleyn signed the document under pressure from the interim CFO. Two days later, on 13 May 2016, the BAC approved the decision to confine sourcing funds to BNP. The BAC checklist accompanying the approval contained several requirements that had to be met, but some of the key requirements simply had "not applicable" next to them.

181. On 18 May 2016, Ms Stimpel returned from leave. She asked Mr Kleyn for his version of events. Mr Kleyn told her that he was called to the head of procurement's office, Mr Lester Peter at the time. Mr Kleyn said that Mr Peter literally "jumped up and down" and told him "you don't take responsibility here, you just sign". Mr Kleyn had then just signed the recommendation. Ms Stimpel's next step in trying to manage the situation was to get comparative prices for the sourcing of funds. She did not want word getting out in the industry about what was happening at SAA, so she sent emails to some of her colleagues at the banks and posed a "hypothetical" request for pricing. She sent the request to three banks: Standard Bank, ABSA and Rand Merchant Bank (RMB). ABSA wrote back the same day to say their fees were lower than 10 basis points (0.1%) and that there could be further participation fees for the lenders and arrangers that usually ranged between 0.25 to 0.4%, but "a deal can always be made". Ms Stimpel also received a quote from RMB for a couple of different options, including one for 0.5% and another with rates varying from 0.2 to 0.3%.

182. Ms Stimpel wrote to Ms Nhantsi on 20 May 2016. Ms Stimpel testified that the email was designed to stop the approval process from progressing further up the approval chain (Exco, TIPCO, ARC and the Board) because she could show that there were much lower quotes in the market. She provided Ms Nhantsi with a table of comparative prices that allowed a savings of R85 million. The email also warned about reputational risks to SAA because they had been seeking these funds from the banks since 2015 and now SAA was going with a transactional advisor that she could find nothing about online. She suggested that they do a full comparison break down and open the bidding to these other parties. Ms Stimpel testified that Ms Nhantsi chose not to bring these concerns to the Board's attention and instead secured Board approval by round robin resolution on 24 May 2016. At the time Ms Stimpel did not know the Board had taken this decision, so she continued trying to communicate her concerns to Ms Nhantsi via WhatsApp and email. Ms Nhantsi eventually responded to say that they needed to meet to make Ms Stimpel understand that the Board and executives ultimately make the decision, not her, and SAA had a crisis and needed money.

183. On 25 May 2016, SAA issued an award letter to BNP Capital to source the funding. It was subject to various conditions that were the essential terms of the parties' agreement and would prevail should there later be any inconsistencies. It provided that any services rendered by BNP prior to signing would be governed by SAA's general conditions of contract. This award was accepted in a letter from BNP the same day.

The cancellation fee

184. In its 25 May 2016 letter, BNP stated that it had already been engaged in work to source funding. As a result, BNP told SAA that, if SAA were to cancel the award, BNP would claim a cancellation fee of 50% of the total fee to which they were entitled. This cancellation fee would be 50% of the R2,68 million fee they claimed as transaction advisor, and then 50% of the R225 million fee on the sourcing of funds. The total cancellation fee would have been approximately R114 million. Ms Stimpel testified that cancellation fees in this type of agreement are not customary. At the time, SAA was in serious financial difficulty and so every employee was tasked with cost-saving. This type of fee could not be accommodated in such a precarious financial environment. She also testified that sending a letter demanding a cancellation fee for work already done on the same day the award was granted seemed very odd.

Conclusion of the term sheet with BNP

185. On 3 June 2016, Ms Stimpel attended a meeting between National Treasury and SAA funders. Various SAA representatives were present, including Ms Olitzki and Ms Nhantsi. This was one of the regular meetings SAA had with Treasury as its guarantor, to present financial results, progress with its turnaround strategy and financial operations, and an overview of the business. These presentations were done for each individual funder bank separately to avoid disclosure of confidential information. BNP Capital did not attend this meeting despite accepting its mandate on 25 May 2016.

186. On 8 June 2016, BNP Capital sent a letter to SAA referring to a meeting of 3 June 2016 between National Treasury, SAA and SAA's funders and recording the key points of the meeting. Ms Stimpel testified that she was surprised that BNP had this information as it was confidential and should not have been conveyed to them. The BNP letter set out in detail the costs that Grissag, BNP's preferred source of funds, had already incurred in sourcing the funding to justify the cancellation fee that BNP claimed in its 25 May 2016 letter. The letter concluded with BNP requesting SAA to sign off the term sheet indicating its preferred choice. This was a reference to the term sheet that Grissag had provided. The request stated that the response from SAA must not include a caveat that the approval of the term sheet was "non-binding". This request was apparently granted by SAA because on 6 June 2020, Ms Nhantsi signed a term sheet with Grissag. The term sheet is missing a section usually included which stipulates that the term sheet is non-binding. This had evidently been removed.

187. Ms Stimpel explained that she was very concerned that Ms Nhantsi had bound SAA to this term sheet when it had not gone through proper channels. There was a departure from historical lending from the big banks, there was no proper RFP process, a transaction advisor was unnecessarily brought in, the advisor's scope was increased without process or assessment of risk and cost, and the advisor's fee was enormous and negated savings from debt consolidation. Ms Stimpel was very concerned about the terms to which SAA was now bound under the term sheet. Not only did Grissag get a 3.5% fee, but it also got 1% payable to it on each draw down that SAA made on the funding. The final cost would therefore be unclear and onerous and did not appear to have been thought through. No risk assessments or financial impact assessments were done.

Whistleblowing

188. As a result of these serious concerns, Ms Stimpel approached her fellow treasury managers about speaking out, but they were too afraid of losing their jobs. Ms Stimpel consulted her family about the risk to her job and decided to blow the whistle about the transaction. She drafted a whistleblowing letter and asked a member of the executive, Mr Joshua du Plessis, what route she should take. He advised her not to do anything internally because it would go to the Board and she would be immediately suspended. Ms Stimpel reported her whistleblowing to National Treasury and then to OUTA.

189. On 1 July 2016, she met with OUTA, who asked her whether she could retrieve some of the BNP Capital procurement documents. On 4 July 2016, Ms Stimpel attempted to get the documents from

Mr Silas Matsaudza in the procurement department. When she could not find him, she went to his office and found the BNP documents on the floor. She took the documents and scanned them to herself but found Mr Matsaudza's office locked when she tried to return them. When she handed them back to him the next day, he was very angry and said he would report her to Ms Nhantsi and Mr Peter. She told him she had to meet with National Treasury but would return to discuss the matter. While on her way to the meeting, Ms Nhantsi phoned and told Ms Stimpel not to attend it, as Mr Matsaudza had briefed her about what had happened. Ms Nhantsi did not want Ms Stimpel to give the documents to National Treasury. Ms Stimpel testified that sharing this information with National Treasury should not have been a problem, given its role as provider of SAA's loan guarantee. There was no legitimate reason to want to exclude National Treasury. Ms Nhantsi also told Ms Stimpel that, if this were leaked to the media, she would hold her responsible. Ms Stimpel was then suspended.

190. Ms Nhantsi testified that the reason she instructed Ms Stimpel not to meet with National Treasury was not about reluctance for her to share the BNP bid documents. Instead, it was about wanting Ms Stimpel to come back and explain her conduct regarding the confidential documents. However, this explanation was inconsistent with Ms Stimpel's testimony that Ms Nhantsi refused to let her tell her side of the story after the incident. When this was put to Ms Nhantsi, she did not deny it, but said she could not remember saying that. Late in the afternoon on the same day, Ms Nhantsi called Ms Stimpel to her office and gave her a letter suspending her for taking confidential tender documents without permission from the procurement section.

191. On 6 July 2016, Ms Stimpel met with OUTA's attorneys, Webber Wentzel, and relayed the story. On 7 July 2016, Webber Wentzel sent a letter of demand to SAA to stop the BNP transaction. SAA did not respond to the letter by the stipulated deadline. Ms Stimpel worked with Webber Wentzel to prepare an application for a court interdict.

192. Unbeknown to Ms Stimpel, on 4 July 2016, Ms Nhantsi prepared a submission to the Board, which Mr Zwane approved as Acting Group CEO, recommending that a cancellation fee be approved for BNP if SAA cancelled its mandate. By this stage, the cancellation fee had been reduced from 50% of the total fee to just under R50 million and was justified based on the work BNP claimed it had already done to source funding. Ms Nhantsi's recommendation was supported by Ms Myeni only. On 7 July 2016, the Deputy Company Secretary, Madu Nyoni, wrote to the Board asking for round robin approval of the cancellation fee. Ms Myeni responded the same day approving it. There was no approval from the other Board members.

193. On 8 July 2016, Mr Mahlangu from BNP sent a letter to SAA regarding the licence that had been issued to BNP by the then Financial Services Board (FSB). The letter stated that BNP had received a letter from the FSB on 12 May 2016 indicating its intention to temporarily suspend BNP's licence for three months because, under section 10 of the Financial Advisory and Intermediary Services Act 37 of 2002, the "key individual" of the organisation had failed to complete the first level regulatory examinations. An FSB licence was part of the critical criteria for being appointed as a transaction advisor. Despite having been advised of this issue as early as May 2016, before BNP was appointed to source funds, BNP had not disclosed this problem to SAA. Instead, it waited until July to do so. The FSB (now the Financial Sector Conduct Authority (FSCA)) provided the Commission with an affidavit stating that the letter of 12 May 2016 was not an intention to suspend the licence but an actual suspension letter.

194. On 21 July 2016, Webber Wentzel launched urgent interdict proceedings to stop the BNP transaction. SAA held a press conference and indicated that it had stopped the transaction and terminated the appointment of BNP. This was before the urgent application could be heard and the order granted.

195. On 27 July 2016, Ms Stimpel received a notification of disciplinary charges against her. The charges included removing company documents; "insolence"; breaching contract of employment including confidentiality undertakings; and breaching SAA's anonymous reporting policy. Ms Stimpel testified that the tender documents were not confidential in the sense that she was not authorised to see them. She was part of Treasury and responsible for sourcing funds as a key responsibility at SAA. As to the charge of "insolence", this may have related to a WhatsApp she sent a colleague stating "the Board continues with its unethical behaviour". Ms Stimpel denied ever breaching her employment contract. The last charge was an accusation that she did not go through SAA's internal whistleblowing process. Ms Stimpel testified that she was not obliged to use that route. It was available if employees wanted to use it.

196. Ms Stimpel testified that there were multiple postponements in the disciplinary hearing against her. Eventually, she was advised to take the case directly to the Labour Court, but the Court ruled that she had to take her case to the CCMA, which she did. She said SAA attempted to postpone each date arranged with the CCMA. After months of this, Ms Stimpel's lawyer advised that she should settle because this could continue for another year. So, Ms Stimpel relented and settled the case. The settlement included six months of salary with no benefits and Ms Stimpel took early retirement. She received only her pension from her Provident Fund and not any of the travelling benefits she was entitled to as Group Treasurer at retirement. This, together with outstanding salary up to normal retirement age, was valued at around R4 million.

197. Ms Stimpel testified that she believes she was suspended because she stood up to SAA against conduct she regarded as irregular and potentially corrupt. She also testified that if anyone challenged Board directives or instructions from senior executives, then you were immediately suspended. The charges were not given at the time but made up afterwards. She stated that, at the time of her suspension, at least four other people were suspended. Employees were instructed to sign documents and, if they refused, SAA would find a way to get the employee suspended.

198. Ms Stimpel testified that she was aware of a disciplinary hearing that took place against Ms Nhantsi and Mr Zwane in 2018 once SAA was under a new Board. She was called by SAA to testify against them regarding their conduct in respect of BNP. She agreed to do so. Ms Nhantsi and Mr Zwane were charged with their roles in facilitating the irregular transaction with BNP and the unlawful cancellation fee. The findings of the disciplinary process, given by Mr Nazeer Cassim SC on 19 June 2018, were that these employees were both guilty of gross misconduct in that they facilitated corrupt activities and theft that enriched those in control of SAA. Mr Cassim SC concluded that: "The employees have not shown any remorse. Acknowledgment of wrongdoing is the first step towards rehabilitation. There is, in my view, no prospect on any basis for SAA or SAAT to keep these two individuals in their employment. I recommend summary dismissal." He also recommended they be reported to the regulatory authorities responsible for chartered accountants for having breached their ethical duties.

199. During her testimony at the Commission, Ms Nhantsi made various allegations against Ms Stimpel and impugned her character: She alleged Ms Stimpel bullied her, stormed into her office without appointment, and accused her of only having her role because of affirmative action. Ms Stimpel denied all these allegations. Ms Stimpel's evidence was also put to Ms Myeni. She initially claimed she did not know who Ms Stimpel was, and then invoked her privilege against self-incrimination in respect of each allegation.

Ms Nhantsi's version

200. As set out above, in November 2015, Ms Nhantsi was seconded to the position of interim SAA CFO and was permanently appointed in May 2017. She lacked experience in this type of position and appeared to have been selected by Ms Kwinana for the role without a thorough and transparent appointment process. As a chartered accountant, Ms Nhantsi testified that she understood that, as CFO, she had a fiduciary duty to act in SAA's best interests. She also understood that competitive and transparent procurement process had to be followed unless there were exceptional circumstances.

201. Ms Nhantsi testified that, soon after joining SAA, Ms Myeni gave her Mr Masotsha Mngadi's number and told her that he was an advisor, and she should contact him if she had any questions about the submissions for the swap deal. Upon making enquiries with Ms Kwinana in December 2015, she realised Mr Mngadi was a personal advisor to Ms Myeni who was not on SAA's payroll. Ms Nhantsi testified that Mr Mngadi helped her draft a letter to National Treasury about the aircraft swap deal. It was put to Ms Nhantsi that it was strange that she consulted with a third party who was not employed by SAA about SAA operations. She responded that Ms Kwinana told her that this was Ms Myeni's "person" and Ms Myeni told her that she should ask Mr Mngadi if she had any questions about SAA, which she did. Ms Nhantsi conceded that it was strange that a third party would be helping to draft letters to National Treasury from SAA. She noted that she had only been at SAA for two weeks at that point and was not entirely sure of protocol yet.

202. Ms Nhansti testified that many years prior to her arrival at SAA, SAA ordered wide body aircraft, 10 or 20 of them, and wanted to swap them. The deal was at an advanced stage when Ms Nhantsi joined SAA. The Minister of Finance then sent an instruction to SAA to stop the transaction. Mr Mngadi knew all about the transaction because he was the one giving Mr Zwane and Ms Nhantsi the background to the deal. On 30 October 2015, Mr Mngadi wrote a letter to the SAA Board about the Airbus swap transaction. The letter detailed why leasing the aircraft would be advantageous to SAA. Ms Nhantsi testified that the letter was never shown to her. Ms Nhantsi also testified that she engaged Mr Mngadi about the BNP transaction. BNP was officially represented by Mr Pholisani Daniel Mahlangu but Ms Nhantsi said that she would often receive calls from Mr Mngadi as part of the BNP team. Ms Nhantsi provided the Commission with some of her WhatsApp messages with Mr Mngadi. They reveal that Ms Nhantsi had saved Mr Mngadi's details as "Masotsha Mngadi SAA/Nedbank". She stated she had always been aware that Mr Mngadi was associated with Nedbank. This association was important because Nedbank was also bidding to provide transaction advisory services to SAA. As a Nedbank employee, Mr Mngadi could not be associated with a competitor bidder, such as BNP Capital.

203. Ms Nhantsi testified that she had supported the Board decision to approve the funding of the R15 billion debt consolidation by the FDC because the savings on interest with that offer would have been R1.2 billion per year. However, in hindsight, she did not support her original decision. She agreed that it was not in the best interests of the company. She testified that, at the time, she was not aware that the FDC was using a foreign investor, Grissag, to fund the transaction. She said she now realised that there was a bigger scheme at play, and her present view was that there were "people who stood to benefit from the transaction using [her] to conclude the transaction". Ms Nhantsi also testified that she supported her decision to appoint BNP as transaction advisor. However, she no longer supported her initial decision to expand the scope of BNP Capital to include sourcing funds. She also testified that she never supported the decision to approve the cancellation fee to be paid to BNP.

204. Ms Nhantsi testified that on 1 December 2015, a few days after her secondment to SAA, she received a call from Mr Moyo of the FDC who asked her if SAA still needed funding. She asked him whether he had a mandate for that, and Mr Moyo told her that the FDC was in talks with a foreign investor and that the FDC Act allowed it to do the funding transaction. She asked him to put that offer in writing, which he did. Ms Nhantsi presented it to the Board on 3 December 2015. She testified that the Board considered the SeaCrest offer but was concerned about its responses to the due diligence requests, while the recommendation from the banks for R4.3 billion defeated the point of debt consolidation. She conceded that the Board never called anyone in the Legal Department to address their concerns about SeaCrest and due diligence. She did not recall anyone mentioning the draft contract before the Board, which imposed conditions on the FDC and the foreign investor, requiring all necessary documentation before a contract came into effect. This would have protected SAA.

205. Ms Nhantsi explained that during the Board meeting it appeared as though the Chair, Ms Myeni, already knew about the FDC proposal. Ms Nhantsi and Mr Zwane were mandated to urgently facilitate the transaction and do all necessary to process it because the company needed funds. Ms Nhantsi admitted that the Board did not seem concerned with following due process with FDC. She stated that the Board was doing things in reverse, by seeking to impose some kind of process after-the-fact. Ms Nhantsi testified that, because she was new she was unsure whether what they were doing was lawful. She had no reason to doubt that they knew what was supposed to be done and were acting in accordance with due process. She also admitted that the Board lacked sufficient information to make the decision because all they had was the non-committal FDC letter. Ms Nhantsi conceded that she should have raised all these issues with the Board but failed to do so.

206. Ms Nhantsi testified that, after the Board meeting, she called the treasury department to inform them of the Board's decision on FDC. She said that, during the call, Ms Stimpel "was shouting" and said this was not allowed. Ms Nhantsi ended the call with Ms Stimpel by stating that they had to comply with the Board's resolution. They decided the best way forward was to send the template term sheet and RFP to the FDC. FDC's RFP response was submitted by 24 December 2015 and evaluated in early 2016.

207. Ms Nhantsi conceded that Ms Stimpel told her on 6 January 2016 that she had had a meeting with National Treasury during which they clearly told her that FDC did not have a mandate to advance funds to SAA. However, she went to Mr Moyo and he told her that the FDC did have this mandate in terms of section 4A(h). She testified that she ran this past Ms Ursula Fikelepi, the Head of Legal at SAA, but did not formally ask for an opinion. She was not worried at the time that she was being given advice that contradicted that of National Treasury but looking back it should have concerned her.

208. It was further put to Ms Nhantsi that one of the main reasons given by the Board for rejecting SeaCrest was that it was not satisfied there was an adequate due diligence, but it had approved the FDC proposal without any due diligence whatsoever. Ms Nhantsi accepted this fact. Ms Nhantsi explained that the reason she believed, at the time of testifying, that the transaction should not have been approved, was that Mr Moyo had mentioned to her that the FDC Board Chair was Mr Ace Magashule's sister. Ms Nhantsi said that she had not been aware of all the politics at the time, but looking back and knowing what she later learned, particularly the evidence of Mr Van der Merwe, she understood how she was used as a "scapegoat" or "a vehicle for people to enrich themselves". Mr Van der Merwe was the director of Grissag who was summonsed to give evidence at the Commission. His evidence will be dealt with below.

209. BNP was ultimately appointed as transaction advisor on 20 April 2016 and Ms Nhantsi testified that she started engaging with them two or three weeks after they received the award letter. Ms Nhantsi did not have any interactions with Mr Mahlangu in this regard, but she testified that she did interact with Mr Mngadi about the transaction and understood him to be part of the BNP team. Ms Nhantsi was asked whether she was concerned that Mr Mngadi worked at Nedbank – a competitor bidder in the process – but seemed to be a representative of BNP, another bidder. Ms Nhantsi said she remembered asking him but could not recall his answer. She admitted it appeared irregular that he was part of both companies. She even found it strange at the time because, when SAA had a meeting with Nedbank, Mr Mngadi was there as its representative, but she knew he was also acting for BNP. The irregularity goes much further because Mr Mngadi was also being consulted as if he were an internal SAA advisor to Ms Myeni and then Ms Nhantsi. In fact, Ms Nhantsi testified that she was aware Mr Mngadi was also having interactions with the Chair throughout this time, and he would have conversations with the Chair and relay these discussions to Ms Nhantsi. However, in respect of this conflict of interest, she never enquired further.

210. When it was put to Ms Nhantsi that there were several occasions during her testimony when she conceded that she should have probed further and failed to do so, she responded that it was because she was new, and took comfort from the fact that this was endorsed by Ms Myeni and so did not feel the need to take her concerns too seriously. However, she also testified that this suspicious conflict and Mr Mngadi's dubious involvement did make her ultimately review the transaction with stricter eyes and, despite great pressure from the Chair, she ultimately pushed for its cancellation.

211. The Commission also questioned her about whether her failure to push back against the Board and the Chair's say-so was because she lacked relevant experience in the position. She had only been a chartered accountant for seven or eight years at SNG and perhaps someone with corporate governance experience at an SOE or in aviation might have been better placed to deal with these pressures and challenges. Ms Nhantsi testified that she felt comfortable doing the CFO job, but when she considered everything that the SAA job ultimately entailed, including the politics, unanticipated pressures, and resistance from the Chair to the cancellation of the BNP agreement, she agreed that "her plate was too full". She also testified that perhaps she was too naïve in thinking that the Board members would act in the best interest of the company.

212. Ms Nhantsi testified that on 21 April 2016, there was a teleconference with the Board to update them on the FDC. They advised the Board that the FDC could not provide funding as it lacked a legal mandate to do so. During the discussion, Ms Myeni instructed that they must approach BNP to source the funding for SAA. The Board passed a resolution extending BNP's scope to source the funds. Ms Nhantsi testified that she deeply regrets not raising Mr Mngadi's conflict of interest at the meeting.

213. As had become the pattern, after the Board resolution was passed, Ms Nhantsi prepared a recommendation for that very same decision. Also, after the final Board decision had been taken, she went back to the legal and procurement teams to ask how they could justify implementing the Board decision while still trying to follow proper process. They then decided that there were some exceptions in the procurement process policies. One was emergencies, and another was confined bidding, and they would use that to justify the processes they ultimately employed. Ms Nhantsi testified that SAA did not notify BNP of the decision immediately on 21 April 2016. Instead, a confined bidding process was first carried out and the Board approved the decision again on 24 May 2016 and only on 25 May 2016 did a letter go out advising BNP that it had been appointed to source funds. Ms Nhantsi testified that she signed the recommendation to extend the BNP scope to include sourcing funds upon Mr Peter's request. She was confused why she was being asked to sign this when the Board had already decided but Mr Peter assured her that she had to do so as part of a checklist, and so she "moved on" and signed. Thereafter, the BAC recommended that BNP be appointed – as opposed to merely noting that the Board had already done so.

214. Throughout her testimony, Ms Nhantsi appeared not to accept that this order of events was irregular and against good governance practices. She did not appear to comprehend the distinction between these two very different processes:

    214.1 In the initial RFP, the standard process was followed, with the Board initiating a fair and open-ended process for bids and tasking the correct bodies to follow the process. Only once the process was completed and an independent recommendation made to the Board, was the Board required to decide.

    214.2 In the subsequent processes, in which Ms Nhantsi was involved, the Board first reached a final decision on who should be appointed, and thereafter asked the SAA staff and management to reverse engineer the process by making an after-the-fact recommendation that supported what the Board had already decided. This recommendation would then make it seem as if the proposed appointment came from SAA staff instead of the Board.

215. This is a worrying state of affairs and underscores that Ms Nhantsi's experience as an accountant was insufficient for the governance knowledge required to be the CFO of a major SOE in a specialised industry. Her inexperience appears to have been exploited by the Board to advance their own agenda. It may well be that she went along with what the Board required to avoid opposing it. As the findings above show, it was very difficult for SAA management to openly disagree with the Board's demands.

216. Ms Nhantsi admitted that it was improper for the Board to expand BNP's scope without knowing: a) whether it was possible from a procurement process perspective; b) if BNP had the capacity to do so; and c) the terms for the additional services. She testified that when she received the letter of demand from Webber Wentzel on 7 July 2016 that SAA should cancel the BNP contract, she called the FSB to check if BNP was in good standing. A letter received on 8 July 2016 confirmed BNP had been suspended in May 2016. When Mr Mahlangu testified, he claimed he alerted Ms Nhantsi to the FSB licence issue as far back as 13 May 2016, but Ms Nhantsi testified that she never received the May correspondence. To support this, Ms Nhantsi referred to an email from Mr Moyo of BNP Capital dated 6 July 2016 in which he stated that they can "confirm that the funding entity has an FSB licence and is authorized under South African law to provide this financial product. See attached FSB licence". She also produced correspondence she sent to BNP on 13 July 2016 stating that having a licence was a critical criterion for the tender and confirmed SAA did not receive the alleged 13 May 2016 communication.

217. Ms Nhantsi stated that BNP had included a claim for a 50% cancellation fee in its acceptance letter of 25 May 2016. She said that her engagement with Mr Mngadi and Mr Mahlangu revealed that the fee had never been discussed with SAA management. She said this demand "came as a shock" to her. It is not clear why she would have been shocked by a demand she knew had not been agreed to by SAA., which meant it would not have been obliged to pay BNP anything. Ms Nhantsi's shock may reflect her inexperience and ignorance. She testified that around 2 June 2016, BNP sent a term sheet with the cancellation clause in it. Mr Mngadi called and sent WhatsApp messages pressuring her to agree to it. She said Ms Myeni also pressured her to conclude the term sheet. Ms Nhantsi eventually signed the term sheet but included a handwritten note that it was not binding until the Board agreed. Ms Nhantsi contacted Ms Kwinana and told her she was being pressured to sign things outside her authority but within the Board's authority. Ms Kwinana advised her that, if she felt her integrity was compromised, she should not sign the term sheet with the cancellation clause. She therefore told Mr Mngadi that the decision fell outside her authority. Ms Nhantsi testified that she believed Ms Myeni stood to gain something from this cancellation fee. She formed this conclusion based on the pressure Ms Myeni placed on her to sign the term sheet, Mr Mngadi's frequent references to the Chair and them being part of a "team", and the confidential SAA Board information the Chair was giving to Mr Mngadi.

218. The WhatsApp messages from Mr Mngadi are dealt with below:

    218.1 On 31 May 2016, Mr Mngadi gave various reasons why he claimed BNP was justified in receiving a cancellation fee, including that costs had been incurred.

    218.2 Mr Mngadi stated that he thought Ms Nhantsi was "part of our collective team".

    218.3 On 2 June 2016, Mr Mngadi said, "my sister this letter you have sent means nothing – it is of no use to the funders, to me, to everyone". Ms Nhantsi testified that the only other person he could be referring to was the Chair, Ms Myeni. The message also stated that "we might as well have waited for you to get Board approval for the cancellation fee clause". Ms Nhantsi said this referred to the caveat she included in the term sheet that it was subject to Board agreement. In the message, Mr Mngadi stated that he thought the Board resolution was circulated the previous day. Ms Nhantsi believed Ms Myeni must have told him this. She testified about earlier messages from 23 May 2016 where Mr Mngadi appeared to know about Board resolutions.

    218.4 Mr Mngadi ramped up the pressure in later messages. On 3 June 2016, he said Ms Nhantsi must sign the term sheet on an unconditional basis by 9am that morning, failing which he said he would "inform the stakeholders". Ms Nhantsi responded that she could not sign documents beyond her mandate without Board approval, as it would compromise her career.

219. Ms Nhantsi testified that she told Ms Myeni that she would only sign the term sheet unconditionally if the cancellation fee was left out and was resolved separately. She eventually signed it on that basis. Soon thereafter, Mr Zwane was called by Ms Myeni asking what his delegation of authority was as CEO. Mr Zwane said it was R50 million. Two days later, SAA received a revised cancellation letter from BNP Capital stating that it had reduced the fee to R49.9 million. Ms Nhantsi testified that this was very suspicious because BNP had failed to explain how the original cancellation fee of R128 million was made up, and suddenly dropped its fee to below the CEO's delegation of authority. That was more than a 60% decrease. It is difficult to regard the initial fee as legitimate if BNP, without explanation, was willing to drop it so substantially.

220. Ms Nhantsi testified that she knew Ms Myeni was behind the drop in the cancellation fee. She said this was done so that the transaction did not need Board approval. However, Ms Myeni did not anticipate that Ms Nhantsi would still put the cancellation fee to the Board for approval by round-robin resolution. Ms Nhantsi then called Dr Tambi and Ms Kwinana and said that she was not comfortable with the cancellation fee, and they should not vote to approve it. At this time, the SAA Board consisted of only three non-executive directors: Ms Myeni, Ms Kwinana, and Dr Tambi. Dr Tambi abstained while Ms Kwinana and Mr Zwane rejected the resolution. Ms Myeni was the only Board member to approve it. Before the vote, Ms Myeni had called Ms Nhantsi to establish why she was asking the Board to approve something not requiring its approval. Ms Nhantsi explained this was an additional term in the transaction and had to get Board approval.

221. It was put to Ms Nhantsi that, by signing a recommendation on 4 July 2016 to the Board to approve the cancellation fee, she was endorsing the decision. She agreed and admitted that this was due to the mounting pressure from Mr Mngadi and Ms Myeni. She hoped the other Board members would reject the recommendation. It was further put to Ms Nhantsi that abstaining was not the same as rejecting a resolution. The MOI for SAA states that the votes counted for a resolution are based on the number of votes cast, excluding abstaining votes. Ms Nhantsi was unaware of this. She thought that for the motion to pass, it needed three out of five votes and she hoped that would not be reached. Her abstention put SAA at risk that the resolution would be passed. This is further confirmation that she was given the CFO position before she was ready.

222. It is also important to note that there was an instruction issued by National Treasury aimed at combatting abuse in the SCM system. It directed all public entities to obtain prior written approval from National Treasury if any existing contract was extended above 15% of the original value. Ms Nhantsi said she was unaware of this requirement, and the Board did not seem aware of it either.

223. During her testimony, Ms Nhantsi explained that she faced three types of pressure from Ms Myeni. First, Ms Myeni told her on different occasions that no-one ever had anything on her (i.e., Ms Myeni) because she never wrote anything down. Second, Ms Ms Myeni would call her at least three times a day with the message that she was delaying things and taking unnecessary documents to the Board – she should just approve the transaction and the cancellation fee. Third, she stated that Ms Myeni required her to, for example, breach leases relating to aircraft by trying to change the insurers to Black and locally-owned or rural parties. When Ms Nhantsi raised concerns or resisted, Ms Myeni would say she could see Ms Nhantsi would not obey instructions.

224. Ms Nhantsi also testified that she was often asked to do unlawful things, and there was enormous pressure from the Board and Ms Myeni to do things without following proper process. As an example, Ms Myeni gave her a CV and said she had appointed a particular person in the procurement department, because she had a "vision from God" that the person would assist in solving SAA's problems. When the person arrived for interview, he failed dismally. When Ms Myeni was informed, Ms Nhantsi was ordered to fly to Durban, was berated, and told she did not follow Board instructions. When Ms Nhantsi then asked Ms Myeni for the Board resolution, she disapproved of the request.

225. It was put to Ms Nhantsi that she was obliged, under the Prevention and Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act, to report any knowledge or suspicion that acts of corruption, fraud or theft were taking place at SAA. Ms Nhantsi testified that she was aware of this. She accepted that she breached her obligations in this regard. She said she would perhaps have taken those steps, but it was "overtaken by events" because the Webber Wentzel letter arrived and the BNP agreement had to be cancelled. She also testified that Ms Myeni continued to pressure her with constant calls not to cancel BNP. She claimed that BNP would sue SAA despite not having a valid licence. Ms Nhantsi's priority was ensuring the cancellation took place and safeguarding SAA's assets. She testified that she did not speak out against Ms Myeni or report her because she was scared. She was scared for her life, particularly when she was in Durban. She knew that she would ultimately lose her job because of the BNP cancellation and the number of times she resisted instructions from Ms Myeni. She had also been told by Ms Kwinana that if an employee did not follow Ms Myeni's instructions, Ms Myeni would write whistleblower emails about the employee, and then approach the Chief Internal Auditor and put pressure on him to suspend or dismiss the employee.

226. Ms Nhantsi also testified that SAA employees were subjected to a vetting process. Ms Myeni informed her that a person in her department (Treasury) had "failed" the vetting, and she could not have someone in that sensitive department who had failed this process. This person was Ms Lindsey Olitzki. Ms Myeni asked Ms Nhantsi to meet with Ms Olitzki and give her two options: move to another place in the organisation or be fired. Ms Nhantsi resisted this because vetting was not part of Ms Olitzki's employment contract and there could be labour disputes. Ms Olitzki was given these options and she refused both. Ms Nhantsi and Mr Zwane decided that they should wait and take a uniform approach to all the vetting results. The next day Ms Myeni called Ms Nhantsi and asked if she had spoken to Ms Olitzki. She told Ms Myeni what she and Mr Zwane had decided. Ms Myeni was furious with her for not carrying out her instruction.

227. Ms Olitzki was said to have "failed" the vetting because she had dual citizenship. Ms Nhantsi testified that she believed this was a pretext given by Ms Myeni to get rid of Ms Olitzki. It seemed that the Chair was attempting to place people who would serve as her "eyes and ears" in the different departments. She first attempted this with the procurement department. Ms Nhantsi said Ms Myeni wanted to replace Ms Olitzki with someone who would be her "eyes and ears" in the Treasury department. Ms Nhantsi stated that she was surprised at the vetting process because the executives involved were generally not exposed to confidential information requiring security vetting.

228. Ms Nhantsi appears to have been somewhat out of her depth in the position of CFO at SAA. She admitted to having succumbed to the pressure Ms Myeni placed on her during the BNP transactions. To Ms Nhantsi's credit, she was willing to make concessions when questioned about her conduct and accepted that the way she had behaved was inconsistent with good governance or procurement requirements. In the end, however, it was Ms Nhantsi who recommended that a cancellation fee be paid to BNP Capital for just short of R50 million. As the report details below, had this gone through, it would have amounted to an extraordinary windfall because BNP had not actually incurred any costs in sourcing funding for SAA. The level of pressure exerted on Ms Nhantsi by Mr Mngadi and Ms Myeni to advance the funding arrangements reveals an inappropriate level of interest on their part in securing that windfall for BNP Capital.

BNP Capital's evidence

229. Mr Pholisani Daniel Mahlangu is the CEO of BNP Capital. In 2016, he was responsible for the day to day running of the business and was the sole director of the company. Mr Mahlangu testified that on 9 February 2016 he was approached by Mr Mngadi. He said he would like to work with BNP to submit a joint response to SAA's Request for Information (RFI) for transaction advisory services. Mr Mngadi explained to Mr Mahlangu that he was aware of SAA's financial situation and that he had developed a solution. He told Mr Mahlangu that he was a longstanding consultant for SAA and suggested that BNP should partner with his entity, InLine Trading. Mr Mahlangu agreed to this, and the two entities began working on the response to SAA. On 13 February 2016, Mr Mngadi emailed Mr Mahlangu with amendments to the response to the RFI and told Mr Mahlangu to delete any reference to his name and InLine Trading. Mr Mahlangu testified that he understood the bid was for transaction advisory services on how to consolidate SAA's debt and to analyse the financials. He accepted that this was an entirely different mandate to one for sourcing funding.

230. During his testimony, Mr Mahlangu admitted that BNP bid as part of a joint venture with InLine Trading for the transaction advisory services. He stated that he did not provide InLine Trading's financials in the bid because they had not been prepared. In his statement to the Commission, he wrote that this was because they had not been a trading entity. However, he eventually admitted that this was an assumption he made, and that this was inconsistent with what he wrote in the bid submission - that InLine Trading had ten years of experience in the aviation sector. Mr Mahlangu admitted that BNP did not do any due diligence on InLine Trading before partnering. He said this was because of the short RFI deadline, but later admitted the RFP was only due a month later on 18 March 2016. There was time to do a check on the entity, but they chose not to. Mr Mahlangu could not satisfactorily answer why InLine Trading needed BNP as a partner, as it had the necessary experience and BEE credentials itself.

231. Mr Mahlangu testified that Mr Mngadi played a dominant role in the bidding with SAA. Mr Mngadi prepared the sourcing of funds proposal and drafted the relevant correspondence, which was sent using the BNP Capital logo and letterhead. Mr Mngadi also liaised directly with SAA. None of the SAA correspondence ever came from InLine Trading. It always came from BNP and then informally through Mr Mngadi. On 18 March 2016, Nedbank submitted its bid as a transaction advisor. Mr Mngadi featured as part of the Nedbank transaction team in the bid. Mr Mahlangu testified that he was unaware at the time that Mr Mngadi was employed by Nedbank, that Nedbank was bidding for the same award, or that Mr Mngadi was on that bidding team.

232. Mr Mahlangu could not deny any of the following shortfalls in the BNP bid submission. When it was put to him that InLine Trading was a car dealership, he testified that he was unaware of that. It was also put to him that the person Mr Mngadi insisted be the Inline Trading representative in the bid documents, Mr Brendan King, had resigned as a director of InLine Trading prior to the bid submission. Mr Mahlangu did not know this and Mr Mngadi later told him that the CEO of InLine Trading had passed away. Mr King provided an affidavit stating that he knew Mr Mngadi as an InLine Trading customer who purchased cars from them and occasionally sent business their way. He stated that a Mr Eric Mbezi had taken over InLine Trading, but he passed away on 9 February 2016. Mr Mahlangu confirmed that, had he known all this, he would not have partnered with InLine Trading. In the BNP bid documentation, Mr Mahlangu certified that its contents were correct, and that no-one involved in the bid had a personal relationship with the bid evaluators. However, in his evidence he admitted never checking whether Mr Mngadi had such a relationship, despite knowing his SAA ties.

233. Mr Mahlangu sent a letter to Grissag, BNP's funder, on 22 April 2016. Attached to the letter was a "mandate from SAA to raise and arrange funding for and on behalf of SAA for purposes of consolidation of SAA's debt of R15 billion". However, the SAA award letter for the sourcing of funds was only received by BNP on 26 May 2016. He explained that Mr Mngadi drafted the letter and that he had not checked it carefully. He accepted that the letter was false because, in April 2016, BNP's mandate was only for transaction advisory services and not for sourcing of funds.

234. Regarding the correspondence sent to SAA regarding the justification for the cancellation fee, Mr Mahlangu testified that Mr Mngadi was responsible for sourcing these facts from Grissag. He indicated that Mr Mngadi's role was to communicate with the client and that he introduced Grissag as the funder. Mr Mahlangu said he had never had interactions with Grissag or heard of it before. BNP assumed that the information they received from Mr Mngadi about the funding was correct and coming from Grissag itself. According to Mr Mahlangu, all facts in the SAA letter about the cancellation fee came from Mr Mngadi, who claimed this was communicated to him by Grissag. Mr Mahlangu therefore conceded that he had no reason to dispute what Grissag's director, Mr van der Merwe, said before the Commission. According to Mr van der Merwe's testimony, the representations made in those letters to SAA concerning the basis for the cancellation fee were all false.

235. Mr Mahlangu clarified that, in his understanding, the cancellation fee would only have been payable if actual work had been done to justify the payment. His intention behind the letter was that they wanted to be covered by a cancellation fee in case they raised funds and SAA decided not to use them. He confirmed that the fee could only be payable if they met their mandate and raised the money, but not before. According to him, those were the only circumstances in which the cancellation fee would apply.

236. Mr Mahlangu acknowledged that having a valid FSB licence was a requirement for the tender for transaction advisory services. He confirmed that BNP did have this licence when the bid was submitted. However, on 23 March 2016, the FSB sent correspondence to BNP indicating that it intended to suspend the licence, and it was suspended on 12 May 2016. The notice of suspension stipulated that the BNP had to inform all affected clients and product suppliers about the suspension. Mr Mahlangu claimed he fulfilled this requirement by sending a letter to SAA on 13 May 2016. However, he could not provide documentation to prove it was sent to and/or received by SAA, or who sent it and to whom. The letter itself is undated. Mr Mahlangu could not deny Ms Nhantsi's evidence that she never received the notification. Mr Mahlangu said he was "surprised" that one of his staff, Mr Moyo, wrote to SAA to say they had a valid licence on 6 July 2016 when this was not the case. The email was copied to him, but he did not notice it. It was put to Mr Mahlangu that even in the later letter of 8 July 2016, in which he explained that he notified SAA of the 12 May 2016 suspension, he still misrepresented the notification as a letter of "intention to temporarily suspend" instead of an actual suspension notice. Mr Mahlangu admitted he had not correctly described the notice, but claimed he did not mean to mislead anyone.

237. Mr Mahlangu testified that the additional fee of 1% from any drawdowns, which the term sheet signed on 8 June 2016 provided for, would go to Grissag and would not be shared with BNP, because only the fundraising entity would be entitled to that share. That was his understanding, but he never spoke to Mr van der Merwe about it. He said that he was under the impression that BNP was entitled only to a success fee but not this additional "commitment fee". When he was told that Mr van der Merwe had testified that Grissag and Mr Mngadi agreed to share the fee between the two parties, he conceded it was possible that this could have happened, but he did not know about it. Mr Mahlangu testified that he had no agreement with SAA about the success fee. He believed they were running the process through proposals and that BNP had proposed a fee of 1.25% but that, as far as he knew, SAA never came back to him about that. He was never aware of an agreement to pay a success fee of 1.5%

238. Mr Mahlangu testified that, in 2017, Mr Mngadi called and asked him to confirm in an affidavit that Mr Mngadi was not a BNP employee and did not compile the bid himself. Mr Mahlangu agreed because both points were technically true, even though Mr Mngadi provided inputs to the bid compiled by BNP. He later realised that Mr Mngadi was trying to distance himself from the transaction and pretend not to have been involved. He also stated that he did not read the whole affidavit properly before signing. He testified that Mr Mngadi asked him to sign the affidavit because the media was reporting that he was an employee of Nedbank, which had been a competing bidder.

Grissag

239. Mr Pieter Johannes Van der Merwe testified that he started Grissag in 2014/2015 with Mr Sergey Pokusaev, with the intention of funding South African public entities. Both men had worked for the Russian Federation and, before that, the Soviet Union. At the time they formed Grissag, Mr Pokusaev was retired. They registered Grissag SA (Pty) Ltd in South Africa with both as directors. Mr Van der Merwe testified that Grissag approached various governments and the FDC. They proposed that Grissag could get involved with the FDC's funding and wrote them a proposal for funding housing projects. The proposal did not come to fruition because Grissag insisted on a guarantee for any capital advanced. The FDC said that they could not get a Treasury guarantee and they had no other assets large enough to guarantee the financing.

240. Around August 2015, a representative for SeaCrest (a Mr "Rambal", represented by an attorney, Mr Leon Etzbeth) asked Mr Van der Merwe whether Grissag would be interested in funding SAA for R14 billion. That representative made it clear to Mr Van der Merwe that since Grissag had neither an FSB licence nor BEE credentials, it could not go on tender alone. He said its bid would have to be a joint venture arrangement. On 27 August 2015, the parties signed a memorandum of agreement. The agreement provided for a fixed interest rate of 4.5% per annum. Then SeaCrest would get whatever margin above that (markup) that it could negotiate with SAA. Mr Van der Merwe testified that he never checked with SeaCrest what its ultimate markup was. When he was informed it was 1.3%, bringing the total to 5.8%, he said this was much higher than international standards. He said it would normally be around 0.5% on an amount that large. This aligns with Ms Stimpel's quotes from the banks at the time.

241. Mr Van der Merwe explained that, when SeaCrest asked Grissag for proof of funds, it was not possible to do so because the international banks it worked with would only decide based on a final signed agreement, as they had to get permission from their central banks. Mr Van der Merwe testified that it would have been in order to have conditions in the agreement that the information be provided and a due diligence performed before the agreement came into effect, but he needed a finalised signed agreement for purposes of sourcing the funding.

242. Mr Van der Merwe testified that around November or December 2015, he was concerned that the SeaCrest transaction was not going anywhere. He asked FDC whether Grissag could instead fund SAA through the FDC. He testified that the FDC told him that it had an FSP (financial services provider) licence. He was not aware that there might be any other legal limitation on FDC's ability to finance SAA. Mr Van der Merwe sent the FDC a standard term sheet for R15 billion. The terms were 4% interest fixed per annum to be calculated on each draw down and then lower rates depending on different factors, down to 3%. The lower rate was achieved through negotiations with international funders, who were keen for the transaction to go through. The actual term sheet sent to SAA by Mr Moyo of FDC did not include the interest rate changes. A few weeks later, the FDC came back to Mr Van der Merwe and advised that it was not possible for one state entity to finance another. Mr Van der Merwe accepted this. He placed the date around January 2016 and confirmed it was not as late as March or April 2016. This is significant because SAA was only advised about this problem by the FDC in April 2016. This date issue is important as the delay until April 2016 and the "sudden" FDC revelation that it could not fund SAA was used to justify the urgency of the situation and confinement to BNP on the tender for the sourcing of funding.

243. Around February or latest March 2016, Mr Van der Merwe was approached by someone who told him that BNP had been appointed to source the R15 billion for SAA. He testified that his main reason for entering a partnership with BNP was its BBBEE status and the fact that it had an FSP licence. On 22 April 2016, Mr Mahlangu from BNP sent Mr Van der Merwe an email confirming that they had been awarded the SAA contract to source the funds. Mr Mahlangu confirmed in his evidence that this had been incorrect because they were only awarded that tender in May 2016. By that stage, on 21 April 2016 (the day before), an internal decision had been taken by the SAA Board to extend BNP's mandate to include sourcing funds. But no process had yet been followed to approve that appointment. This means someone on the Board or privy to the Board's resolution must have advised BNP about the decision.

244. Mr Van der Merwe did not appreciate the difference between a transaction advisor and a funding source, and so did not realise that the letter attached to the BNP email was not a fund-sourcing award. The email from BNP asked Grissag to provide proof of funds of between R3 to R7 billion. Mr Van der Merwe responded that this was not possible up front. He required at least a signed term sheet that committed SAA to the terms and conditions and then a formal funding agreement would need to be signed. On 2 June 2016, Mr Van der Merwe noted that Ms Nhantsi provided him with a term sheet that stated it was non-binding. He testified that a non-binding term sheet was meaningless and so he could not accept it. Mr Van der Merwe also testified that on 8 June 2016 he travelled to SAA's offices and attended a meeting with Ms Nhantsi set up by BNP. She signed the term sheet before him and he then left. By that stage, Mr Van der Merwe had managed to secure an even lower rate from his funder and so the term sheet reflected 3.5% interest. However, another fee was added on top of that. This was the 1% payable to Grissag for every draw down. Mr Van der Merwe testified that this 1% was a once-off fee so it did not amount to a 1% increase in interest. It would be around 0.1% overall. So, the additional 1% figure would lead to an effective interest rate of 3.6%.

245. Mr Van der Merwe testified that he was totally unaware that BNP would be receiving an additional 1.5% on the transaction for finding the Grissag funding. He said he was shocked because BNP did not find Grissag. On the contrary, Grissag had been attempting to fund SAA and was well known as a funder in the market. It therefore could not have been a finder's fee.

246. Mr Van der Merwe testified that he had various interactions with BNP, but he did not know the names of the people he spoke to. It could have been Mr Mngadi but he could not say for certain. He also confirmed that he never saw nor was he aware of the letters exchanged between SAA and BNP about the cancellation fee. He confirmed that none of the statements made in those letters about costs already incurred or to be incurred by Grissag were true. Mr Van der Merwe stated that Grissag had not incurred any costs at that time and the funding partners listed in the letters were fabricated because Grissag did not disclose its funders to anyone. He said it was also false that Grissag was imposing a penalty or cancellation fee in dollars on BNP. He denied that Grissag had been flying around the world sourcing funding. Every fact about Grissag in those letters was inaccurate and made up. Mr Van der Merwe confirmed that, to have imposed a cancellation fee, a contract would have had to be concluded. At that point, there was no such contract - only a signed term sheet referring to a future contract.

Connection between BNP and the Myenis

247. Ms Myeni's conduct in respect of BNP becomes more explicable when the following evidence is considered. In August 2016, at an interview with OUTA, Ms Kwinana said that Ms Myeni's son, Thalente Myeni, had a close relationship with Mr Mngadi of BNP Capital. The Commission did not procure a formal transcript of this aspect of the interview, but the audio recording of the interview reveals the following.

247.1 During her interview, Ms Kwinana confirmed that Mr Thalente Myeni was "involved" in BNP because where Mr Mngadi was, "Thalente" would be. They were either close friends or more likely associates/business partners.

247.2 Ms Kwinana also testified about several occasions where Mr Myeni had been seen with Mr Mngadi. First, there was a time when Ms Nontsasa Memela, the Head of SAAT Supply Chain Management, told Ms Kwinana she met with Ms Myeni in respect of Air France and Mr Thalente Myeni was at the meeting. When they had a second meeting with Airbus, Mr Mngadi was at SAA with Mr Thalente Myeni but Mr Myeni did not form part of the meeting. However, they arrived and left together, and were sitting together when Ms Kwinana and other attendees arrived at the meeting venue. Ms Kwinana said that she did "not trust" Mr Mngadi. When asked where else she had seen the two together, she said that they were seen in Sandton. When Ms Kwinana was pushed for further locations, she just said she knew they used to hang out.

248. During her testimony, Ms Kwinana denied having said this. However, her version can be rejected. The audio recordings clearly reveal that she did say these things to OUTA.

249. The evidence therefore appears to establish a relationship between Ms Myeni and Mr Myeni on the one hand, and Mr Mngadi on the other. The relationship between Ms Myeni and Mr Mngadi was a key feature of Ms Nhantsi's evidence before the Commission. Mr Mngadi was given an opportunity to respond to the evidence of Ms Nhantsi and Mr Mahlangu. His response is dealt with in the next section. Notably, he does not deal with his relationship with Ms Myeni, which indicates that he lacked an adequate answer to the alleged close relationship with Ms Myeni.

Mr Mngadi

250. Mr Mngadi did not testify before the Commission, but he did provide an affidavit after Ms Nhantsi and Mr Mahlangu gave evidence. He explained that he had had several interactions with SAA officials over the years because of his position at Nedbank. He said he was introduced to Ms Nhantsi by Ms Kwinana and he had agreed to assist her "informally" to deal with the challenges facing SAA regarding its debt position.

251. Mr Mngadi contended that providing informal advice to SAA was not in conflict with his position at Nedbank, because Nedbank had not submitted any proposal to SAA in response to an RFI. However, this misses the point. Nedbank had certainly tendered for the transaction advisory services at SAA. Its bid submission formed part of the documents presented during Mr Mahlangu's evidence before the Commission. Despite this, Mr Mngadi claimed that Nedbank did not participate in this tender. He provided a copy of a BAC document from February 2016, which did not list Nedbank as a bidder. The origin of this document is not disclosed in his statement. It is contradicted by the evidence already before the Commission regarding the tender for transaction advisory services, which clearly shows that Nedbank submitted a bid.

252. Mr Mngadi's affidavit also fails to engage properly with the text and tenor of his WhatsApp messages to Ms Nhantsi. Ms Nhantsi provided the Commission with the WhatsApp messages she received from Mr Mngadi while the sourcing of funds was underway at SAA. These messages reveal a level of familiarity between Mr Mngadi and Ms Myeni. They are also evidence that an increasing amount of pressure was being placed on Mr Nhantsi to ensure that the funding transaction went through. Despite this, Mr Mngadi never dealt with his relationship with Ms Myeni in his affidavit. He also did not deal with the import of his WhatsApp communication with Ms Nhantsi.

253. Mr Mngadi denied the role that Mr Mahlangu said he played in the BNP bid and subsequent interactions with SAA, but the communications to Ms Nhantsi at the time, which are not addressed in his affidavit, clearly show that Mr Mngadi was involved.

Conclusion

254. There is little doubt that, if not for the actions of Ms Stimpel, the BNP transaction would have gone ahead in one form or another. It was her unwavering commitment to proper procurement processes that made her stand up to what was going on around her, at great personal cost to herself. Whistle-blowers like Ms Stimpel are the final defence against corruption and state capture taking hold in SOEs.

255. As will be seen in the next section, there was no-one like Ms Stimpel involved when the Boards of SAA and SAAT decided on the Swissport and AAR/JM Aviation transactions. By the time that key decisions on these transactions were made, Dr Dahwa had been removed and Ms Mpshe relieved of her Acting CEO duties. Without these people to stop them, the transactions were allowed to proceed, with benefits and kick-backs paid to key decision makers within SAA and SAAT.

Swissport

256. Swissport is an international, Swiss-based cargo and aircraft ground handling services provider founded in 1996. It has a South African-incorporated subsidiary, Swissport South Africa (Pty) Ltd. It is a level 6 BEE contributor with over 40% Black ownership. Prior to the impugned ground handling contract discussed below, Swissport had an ongoing business relationship with SAA as a ground handling service provider.

257. In February 2020, Mr Schalk Human was the Head of Department for Technical Materials at SAAT, and was responsible for procurement, logistics and inventory management. He gave evidence before the Commission and was able to testify to a chronology of events relating to SAAT tenders through the written documentation available to him, including forensic reports, minutes of meetings and other documents.

258. Mr Human testified that ground handling services involve positioning power units, towing services, tugs, loading aircraft, baggage transportation, steps and ramps. The ground handling contract was awarded by SAA. It was published in May 2011, and on 31 July 2012, the Board awarded the contract to Swissport for a five-year period. The Swissport contract was never signed or concluded but the company nevertheless provided the services to SAA. An amount of R1.139 billion was paid to Swissport during this period without a contract in place. In 2016, SAAT took the decision to conclude a contract with Swissport for a further five years, even though the original 2012 tender was only expiring in 2017 and no further procurement process was carried out. The contract value would end up being double the original tender value.

259. When the ground handling contract was concluded with Swissport in 2016, it included a condition that Swissport had to contract with a BEE company that had representation of Black women, youth, military veterans, and disabled persons, from which Swissport would purchase the equipment required for the SAA contract. Mr Peter Kohl, a former Swissport CEO, provided several affidavits. In his first affidavit, he stated that:

    259.1 Swissport successfully bid for SAA's 2012 ground handling services tender, but there was an inordinate delay in preparing the agreement because of frequent changes in SAA's management; by 2014 it appeared to him that SAA was not going to honour its tender award and conclude the Swissport contract.

    259.2 Swissport continued providing services to SAA on a month-to-month basis, but this became untenable, so it attempted to get SAA to sign a contract. SAA resisted signing and changed the tender requirements by introducing new BEE supplier conditions. Swissport was already 49% BEE-owned and had the required BBBEE contributor rating for the tender.

    259.3 SAA accounted for 70% of Swissport SA's business at the time. If Swissport lost SAA's business, it would have been liquidated. It came to Swissport's attention that SAA would award it a ground handling contract with a 30% share for BEE SMMEs. SAA suggested that Swissport use an entity called "Jamicron" as a BEE partner, but Swissport never did so. A 30% BEE SMME set aside meant that Swissport had to give 30% of the value of the contract to a BEE partner. The 30% set aside policy was said to be aimed at promoting transformation. In December 2015, Mr Lester Peter from SAA's Global Supply Management sent Swissport SA a draft contract including the 30% set aside. Swissport responded that this was likely an illegal agreement and would not help with transformation.

259.4 On 10 February 2016, Mr Kohl, Mr Vuyisile Ndzeku, a Swissport shareholder and a shareholder and director of JM Aviation, and several other Swissport representatives met with Ms Kwinana and other SAA officials. At the meeting, Ms Kwinana insisted that Swissport sign the agreement with the 30% set aside. Swissport refused to sign that agreement. When Swissport refused to sign the agreement, SAA sent Swissport a letter which would have put an end to all business Swissport was getting from SAA. Nevertheless, the parties did not get to that point. They ended up concluding a contract in March 2016. It was a condition of the contract (clause 8.1) that Swissport would subcontract some of its services to BEE companies. Clause 8.2 required Swissport to purchase SAAT ground power units (GPUs) at market value or book value;

259.5 In terms of the agreement, SAA would select a BEE partner that Swissport had to work with. It chose JM Aviation South Africa (Pty) Ltd (JM Aviation); JM Aviation would purchase the GPUs and sell them on to Swissport. Mr Kohl said that he was not aware that Mr Ndzeku was also involved in JM Aviation.

The ground handling agreement and Jamicron

260. In 2015 and 2016, Mr Vuyisile Ndzeku was a shareholder and director of Swissport. He testified that he ceased being a Swissport director in early 2020, around the time he was scheduled to testify at the Commission. Mr Ndzeku was also a shareholder and director of JM Aviation, and held these positions since around 2015. Prior to this, he testified that he worked with JM Aviation International. Mr Jules Aires was the JM Aviation founder and a company shareholder in 2015/2016. The other shareholders of JM Aviation are Mr Ndzeku's daughters, Ms Khosi Sokhulu and Ms Natasha van Louw. Since October 2015, these four shareholders have also been JM Aviation directors. Mr Ndzeku's wife, Ms Hendricks, was also a JM Aviation employee.

261. Mr Ndzeku conceded that he did not disclose to Swissport that he was a director and shareholder of JM Aviation. He confirmed that he did not recuse himself from meetings where transactions between the two entities were discussed or voted on. He also admitted speaking regularly with Ms Kwinana on the phone during 2016, and that they discussed how to facilitate the 30% set aside for the Swissport contract to Jamicron. Mr Daluxolo Peter was a director of Jamicron at the time. Mr Ndzeku confirmed that he and Ms Kwinana had discussed Swissport's empowerment partner "many times". He testified that during their first interactions about an empowerment partner, Ms Kwinana had Mr Daluxolo Peter with her and stated that she and Ms Myeni insisted that Swissport use him as an empowerment partner. Mr Ndzeku said he had resisted this because Swissport already had empowerment credentials.

262. Mr Ndzeku testified that on 10 February 2016 he attended the meeting referred to above at SAA with Mr Peter Kohl on behalf of Swissport. Ms Kwinana and Mr Lester Peter were present for SAA. Mr Daluxolo Peter was also there. At this meeting, SAA told Swissport it wanted Swissport to set aside 30% of its revenues to an empowerment firm, and in particular to Mr Daluxolo Peter.

263. Mr Ndzeku testified that at some point in 2016, he was told by Mr Kohl that Swissport was going to pay JM Aviation R 28.5 million. Despite being a director of JM Aviation, he professed knowing nothing about a contract in terms of which this Swissport payment was to be made to JM Aviation. The Commission's investigations revealed that this payment was made in March 2016, the month before the ground handling contract between SAA and Swissport was concluded. Mr Ndzeku also testified that Mr Kohl instructed him to pay R20 million of the R28.5 million to Jamicron. Mr Ndzeku testified that Mr Kohl said that this was because Jamicron was going to be the empowerment partner in the Swissport ground handling contract.

264. Mr Daluxolo Peter provided an affidavit about the Jamicron payment. He stated that it was not Mr Kohl who instructed JM Aviation to pay Jamicron. It was instead an arrangement devised entirely by Mr Ndzeku. Mr Peter's version was that it was Mr Ndzeku who established Jamicron, installed his daughter as a director together with Mr Peter, and then facilitated the R20 million payment to Jamicron. Mr Ndzeku then told Mr Peter what to do with that R20 million and who to pay with it. This involved withdrawing R5 million in cash over three days, and handing it to Mr Kolisi of BMK Attorneys. This was the same Mr Kolisi who was, at the time, running a disciplinary hearing against Dr Dahwa. for refusing Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni's unlawful instruction to award the ground handling contract to Swissport. Mr Kolisi also drafted the letter used to suspend Ms Mpshe. Mr Peter stated that he took R5 million of the R20 million for himself as payment for facilitating the ground handling transaction. Mr Ndzeku then instructed him to pay R10 million to BMK Attorneys directly.

265. Mr Ndzeku denied the allegation that he masterminded the creation of Jamicron. He said he could not have done this because he did not receive payments for facilitating the transaction. This was, however, false. During his evidence, Mr Ndzeku was shown bank statements proving he received R2.5 million of the R28.5 million paid by Swissport to JM Aviation. In response he said, "Okay that's good, I'm happy, it's good if I did get some money, Swissport gave me some money", but could not explain why he received that money. The bank records also showed that a further R2.5 million of the Swissport payment to JM Aviation was paid to BMK Attorneys, with the reference "Pete". This money was used by BMK Attorneys to pay for Mr Lester Peter, the Head of Procurement of SAA, to buy two luxury sports cars the following day.

266. In preparation for Mr Ndzeku's evidence before the Commission, its investigators engaged Swissport and asked it to explain the R28.5 million paid to JM Aviation. A second affidavit furnished to the Commission by Mr Kohl claimed Swissport had entered into a service level agreement with JM Aviation to upgrade its ground support equipment (GSE) workshops. Mr Ndzeku professed to know nothing about this arrangement nor about the services allegedly rendered by JM Aviation to Swissport.

267. JM Aviation's bank account had only R1000 in it when this R 28.5 million payment from Swissport was made. Despite this, Mr Ndzeku testified that JM Aviation South Africa had engaged in various business transactions before the Swissport payment. Mr Ndzeku was then forced to admit that the previous transactions had actually been conducted through JM Aviation International. He confirmed that JM Aviation South Africa had not engaged in any transactions until Swissport's payment in March 2016.

268. After Mr Ndzeku's evidence, Swissport provided an affidavit dated 19 November 2020 in which Mr Kohl disputed Mr Ndzeku's version. He denied knowledge of Mr Ndzeku's dealings with Jamicron and denied instructing him to make the payments he did from the R28.5 million received from Swissport.

269. To establish whether there was, in fact, a genuine agreement concluded between Swissport and JM Aviation for the upgrade of Swissport's GSE or whether the payment of R28.5 was nothing more than a "facilitation" fee for securing the ground handling contract, the Commission's investigators asked Swissport to produce all documents detailing the services JM Aviation provided in relation to the GSE workshop upgrade. However, Swissport advised that it did not have a single scrap of paper verifying any aspect of the alleged contract between the parties. There was not a single email, meeting notice, invoice, slideshow, log, or design document.

270. It is extremely unlikely that a genuine agreement, in terms of which Swissport was to receive services worth R28.5 million, would have generated nothing more than handwritten notes which were subsequently thrown away. The only reasonable inference to draw from the evidence is that Swissport was in dire straits when SAA terminated its month-to-month ground handling services contract in February 2016. At the time, Swissport was not willing to accede to SAA's demand that it part with 30% of the revenue under the agreement. However, it faced liquidation in South Africa if it did not retain the SAA work. It was therefore willing to procure the services of JM Aviation and Jamicron (Mr Ndzeku and Mr Peter) to facilitate the conclusion of the SAA contract.

271. It has, unfortunately, not been possible to establish Swissport's knowledge on these matters because it declined invitations to meet with the Commission's investigators and legal team. It instead preferred to answer the Commission's enquiries as the investigation developed with affidavits produced by Mr Kohl. When the Commission asked about Mr Kohl's availability to give oral evidence, it was told that he was in the United States of America and unable to testify. Despite this limitation, the evidence that corruption took place in this deal is supported by two undisputed facts:

271.1 Swissport's inability, despite two requests from the Commission, to provide any documentary confirmation that genuine services were provided by JM Aviation to Swissport in exchange for the R28.5 million it received a month before the ground-handling contract was concluded between it and SAA.

271.2 What JM Aviation actually did with the money. If services were genuinely to be rendered under the contract with Swissport, JM Aviation would likely have had to pay salaries and make at least some purchases to equip itself to provide the services. However, the bank statements of JM Aviation show that no such payments were made. Instead, the money came into the account and it was paid out to those connected with SAA. It was paid to Mr Daluxolo Peter, whose affidavit before the Commission confirms he was paid this money for facilitating SAA's ground handling agreement. It was paid to Mr Ndzeku who, in his own version, knew nothing about the GSE workshop upgrade with Swissport. It was also paid to Mr Kolisi, who, in turn, bought two luxury cars for Mr Lester Peter, SAA's head of procurement.

272. In light of this substantial evidence that corrupt payments were made to secure the ground handling contract with SAA, the Commission will recommend prosecutions of all those involved in these transactions.

273. In Ms Kwinana's' evidence before the Commission, she admitted she attended the Swissport meeting on 10 February 2016 that Mr Ndzeku also attended. She claimed it was a short engagement because she simply informed Swissport that SAA was going out on tender because the existing contract was irregular. However, this version of events of the meeting conflicts with notes prepared immediately after the meeting.

274. On 12 February 2016, Mr Kohl wrote an email to his fellow Swissport directors recording what was said at the meeting of 10 February 2016. He said Ms Kwinana chaired the meeting and declared that its purpose was to conclude the contract. Thereafter, Mr Lester Peter and Ms Kwinana insisted that Swissport sign the supplementary agreements that Mr Peter emailed to Swissport in December 2015. These draft agreements stipulated the 30% set aside for a BEE partner. Mr Kohl's email further recorded that they were told SAA would terminate business with Swissport if it did not sign the agreements. The email said that, apart from being illegal and outside of the provisions of South Africa's B-BBEE Act, these demands would bankrupt Swissport. Ms Kwinana testified that she could not recall this being discussed at the meeting and demanded to see minutes of the meeting. Mr Kohl's affidavit explained that Swissport had asked SAA for minutes but they were never forthcoming.

275. There was also another of Swissport's representatives at the meeting, who took independent notes of what transpired. They accord with Mr Kohl's emailed account of the meeting. When this corroboration of Mr Kohl's notes was shown to Ms Kwinana, she again claimed they were false. She testified that she also had no knowledge of the draft agreement sent to Swissport in December 2015 by Mr Lester Peter. Ms Kwinana admitted she knew Mr Daluxolo Peter from the supplier development roadshows, but could not recall if he was at the meeting of 10 February with Swissport.

276. It was put to Ms Kwinana that it was not appropriate for a non-executive Board member to attend these types of operational meetings. She simply answered that she went "to give support". This later version contradicted her earlier version to have only attended such meetings to offer "support". It also tends to corroborate the version of Mr Kohl that Ms Kwinana played a leading role in the meeting by putting pressure on Swissport to accept a 30% set aside BEE partner.

277. In fact, it was put to Ms Kwinana that there was evidence from her own emails that confirmed Swissport's claim. On 20 January 2016, she sent an email to Mr Lester Peter, which said: "yesterday I had a meeting with one of the shareholders of Swissport, Mr Vuyo Ndzeku, Mr Peter Kohl, Mr Daluxolo Peter, a BEE partner of Swissport. The purpose of the meeting was that the BEE partner was concerned about the status of the contract." Given that she had written the email herself, this claim is simply preposterous and should be rejected.

278. In an effort to probe Ms Kwinana's version of what transpired at the meeting on 10 February 2016, she was asked why, if she went to the meeting to advise Swissport that its contract was irregular and would be put out to tender, SAA did not ultimately go out to tender thereafter. Ms Kwinana provided no satisfactory answer to this question. She said that "maybe it was because of the processes." She then claimed that, while the Board may have thought that the contract was irregular, perhaps the processes required to "regularise it" were not implementable. None of this was convincing. Ms Kwinana's testimony about the Swissport transaction was evasive and, at times, nonsensical. The evidence is overwhelming that she insisted that Swissport sign a contract to give away 30% of its revenue to an entity that SAA would select.

GPUs

279. Mr Human testified that GPUs are ground power units, or generators, that aircraft need to maintain their power supply when grounded. In 2015, SAAT purchased eight GPUs for use during SAAT's maintenance operations. The GPUs were purchased for a total of R9 193 981.20 including VAT.

280. It was a condition of the ground handling contract concluded between Swissport and SAA in March 2016 that Swissport would be required to purchase those GPUs from SAAT at market value or book value. SAAT sold the GPUs to Mr Ndzeku's company, JM Aviation, for an amount of R248 000 per unit, totalling R3 392 640. The book value of the units at the time was R7 968 117. In terms of the ground handling agreement, Swissport was then required to purchase the units from JM Aviation. The day after SAAT had agreed to sell the GPUs to JM Aviation for just more than R3 million, JM Aviation sold the very same GPUs to Swissport for more than R9 million.

281. Since the sale of the units, SAAT has, to date, spent R8.4 million in fees for leasing the very same units back from Swissport. This means that SAAT lost, in total, around R14.5 million on the transaction.

282. Mr Arson Malola Phiri, the Acting CEO of SAAT at the time of the transaction, provided the Commission with an affidavit. He explained that SAAT acquired the 12 GPUs so that they could eventually insource SAA's ground handling services to SAAT. This required licencing from ACSA. It was awarded the licence in 2012 for two years. The plan was to take over the ground handling services from Swissport.

283. Despite SAAT's decision to purchase the GPUs and commence a process of in-sourcing, SAA's Board then authorised its management to conclude a ground handling contract with Swissport on 15 March 2016, signed by Ms Nhantsi and Mr Zwane. It was a term of this agreement, as set out above, that Swissport would buy the GPUs from SAAT at their book value or market value. According to Mr Malola Phiri, this reversal of the decision to insource these services to SAAT had significant commercial and financial implications for SAAT.

284. At the time, Ms Memela was the Head of Procurement at SAAT. The SAAT Board met on 15 June 2016 to discuss the sale of the GPUs. The minutes of the meeting recorded that the Board had been asked to consider and approve the disposal of 12 GPUs "as the services they were purchased to offer had been outsourced to an external service provider, Swissport, by SAA." The minutes record that the "GPUs would be sold to Swissport at their current asset value. The Board was informed that SAA's contract with Swissport provided for Swissport to purchase the GPUs from SAAT". The Board resolved that "the disposal of SAAT's 12 ... GPUs, as a result of SAA awarding the ground handling services to an external service provider ... is hereby approved".

285. The Board resolved to sell the GPUs at the best possible price in the light of the book value. Ms Memela testified that she was tasked by the Acting CEO of SAAT, Mr Zwane, to negotiate the sale of the GPUs. She attended a meeting on 21 June 2016 with a Mr Makaleng, whose department at SAAT owned the GPUs, and Mr Stan Vosloo, who was responsible for materials management at SAAT. They were joined in the meeting by Mr Jules Aires and Ms Sokhulu of JM Aviation. They discussed the proposal that Mr Malola Phiri had made to the SAAT Board for the sale of the GPUs. Ms Memela explained that her role began with negotiating the price that JM Aviation would pay to purchase the GPUs at this meeting and ended with her and the CEO signing an invoice for the sale.

286. Mr Makaleng and Mr Vosloo provided affidavits to the Commission in which they both denied having attended this meeting with Ms Memela. Mr Makaleng provided a copy of the meeting invite which reflected that he had not accepted the invitation. Mr Vosloo sent an email to Ms Memela after the meeting on 21 June 2016 asking her to confirm the sale price for the GPUs. In her response, Ms Memela did not question why Mr Vosloo was asking this question given that, according to her, Mr Vosloo had been at the meeting where the price was discussed. Instead, she just confirmed the sale price.

287. Ms Memela was asked what research she had done or information she had gathered before agreeing on a purchase price for the GPUs.

    287.1 She confirmed that she had not established how much they had been purchased for the year before.

    287.2 Ms Memela testified that she did consider the book value of the GPUs, which Mr Phiri had also considered relevant because he had included it in his submission to the SAAT Board on whether to sell the GPUs. The book value was contained in the asset register of SAAT, as it was in June 2016, which was provided to the Commission by Mr Human from SAAT. However, Ms Memela testified that she did not have regard to that document before negotiating with JM Aviation and spent a long time, together with her lawyer, detaining the proceedings of the Commission by challenging the authenticity and validity of the document instead of addressing the questions put to her.

    287.3 Because Ms Memela testified that she had not seen the asset register extract, she was asked about the submission that Mr Malola Phiri had made to the Board on 15 June 2016 about the book value of the GPUs to which she had previously referred in her evidence. The submission stated that each unit was purchased for R766 165.10 with a total of over R9 million; the current value of the 12 units, was R682 890.62 per unit, as per the SAAT asset register. The total in June 2016 was R4.7 million. Ms Memela then claimed that she had never seen this document either and was not aware of these amounts. This, despite the fact that Mr Makeleng, who she claimed had attended the negotiations with her, confirmed on affidavit that these values were correct, and that they came from the SAAT asset register.

    287.4 Ms Memela's attorney again detained the Commission with objections that they demanded to see the authenticated asset register before Ms Memela would answer any questions.

    287.5 Ms Memela then testified that all she had been given was the proposal from Mr Aires and the Board resolution.

    287.6 Therefore, although Ms Memela testified that she had regard to the book value of the GPUs, she could not tell the Commission what the book value actually was because she denied seeing any of the contemporaneous documents put to her.

288. Ms Memela conceded that the Board resolution required the GPUs to be sold at their asset value as at that time. It was put to her that R248 000 per unit did not accord with the current asset value. Ms Memela then pointed to a part of the minutes of the meeting of the SAAT Board of 15 June 2016, where the Board discussed the discrepancy between the purchase price of the GPUs in 2015 (R782 000) versus the depreciated asset value that Mr Phiri presented to the Board as at June 2016 (R648 000) which the Board assumed was the price at which the GPUs would be sold. The Board then debated whether to claim that shortfall from SAA because it was in terms of the SAA agreement with Swissport that SAAT was being forced to sell the GPUs.

289. Ms Memela attempted to claim that this is why she was not worried about the shortfall in the offer from JM Aviation for R248 000 because SAA would pay it. However, it is clear that Ms Memela based her claim on a portion of the minutes that had nothing to do with the price that was eventually agreed upon with JM Aviation. That portion of the minutes related to internal accounting matters between SAA and SAAT. When this was put to Ms Memela, she again went on a tangent about the fact that there was no proof that the amount given by Mr Malola Phiri was the correct asset register amount for the GPUs. Once again, Ms Memela disputed the authenticity of the asset register of SAAT. But this misses the point and is entirely evasive.

290. It was put to Ms Memela that clause 8.2 of the agreement with Swissport required that the sale would be at either book value or fair market value and yet she had done nothing to establish either one before agreeing to a price. She was evasive and gave an answer that did not make sense. Ms Memela, in any event, confirmed that the final price was not agreed at the meeting with JM Aviation on 21 June 2016, which Mr Vosloo and Mr Makaleng denied attending. She said that it was only approved thereafter. When she was asked who from SAAT determined or approved the final price, Ms Memela would not answer this straightforward question. When asked directly whether she discussed the amount with Mr Phiri before she told Mr Vosloo that this was the approved "reviewed" price and to generate an invoice, or before signing the invoice, her answer was again evasive. She said: "I do not remember. I understand [Mr Phiri] as a person who would not sign anything until he understands or until he knows that, okay here is the feedback."

291. It was further put to Ms Memela that she was the only person who was sent the revised price on 21 June 2016. She accepted this. It was further put to her that her testimony was that she did not have the authority to agree to that price. She also accepted this. But then she added: "But when it was signed by the CEO it means that I had a discussion with him". She could not recall when it was that she spoke to Mr Phiri but confirmed it would have had to have been after Ms Sokhulu had sent the revised price on 21 June 2016.

292. On 22 June 2016, Ms Memela sent a notification to Ms Sokhulu at JM Aviation that their revised offer to purchase the GPUs had been accepted. This letter stated, "your proposal for the purchase of the GPU's on behalf of Swissport was approved by the Board." It was put to Ms Memela that this was contrary to her previous testimony that she did not believe JM Aviation was acting on behalf of Swissport or would on-sell the GPUs to Swissport. After speaking in circles for a long time, Ms Memela eventually conceded that, in fact, she was aware, at the time, that JM Aviation was purchasing the GPUs on behalf of Swissport. Ms Memela conceded that she did not ask JM Aviation what price Swissport was willing to pay for the GPUs.

293. The letter of 22 June 2016 stated further, "Kindly note that the approval is based on the latest price review by yourselves." Ms Memela testified therefore that she had received Mr Phiri's approval on the price between receiving Ms Sokhulu's email on 21 June 2016 and responding with this acceptance on 22 June 2016.

294. Mr Phiri provided the Commission with an affidavit in which he denied having spoken to Ms Memela between 21 and 22 June 2016 or ever having approved the final revised price. He explained that he could not have had that discussion with her because he was in an EXCO meeting the entire day on 21 June 2016 and the email of 22 June 2016 was sent off at 5:43am and therefore the discussion could not have taken place on 22 June 2016 either. He stated that, when Ms Memela gave him the invoice to sign, he was assured that this was the best price she could negotiate and that this had been done together with Mr Vosloo and Mr Makaleng. However, as set out above, both Mr Vosloo and Mr Makaleng deny having been at that meeting. When this version was put to Ms Memela during her testimony, she persisted in her version and claimed that she had consulted Mr Phiri about the price during a break in the EXCO meeting. Mr Phiri says they had no such discussion.

295. The day after JM Aviation purchased the GPUs from SAAT, it sold them to Swissport for approximately R9.8 million. As set out below, Ms Memela's willingness to sell the GPUs to JM Aviation at an amount well below their book value and without making any effort to assess their true market value benefitted JM Aviation to the tune of R6 million.

JM Aviation and AAR

296. The Commission also heard evidence about irregularities in the tender for components services at SAAT.

297. Mr Schalk Human testified about SAAT's components tender. He explained that holding excessive stock is very expensive so companies will conclude a component contract where inventory is centralised by a service provider and the company uses the service and pays a monthly premium – usually at an hourly rate – for the use of those components. He said that this allowed the quick provision of replacement component parts. He explained there are normally three components. The first is a base kit with core components that are placed on site so that there is quick access; then advance exchange services where the company can request a specific part to be shipped; and the third is the repair services in respect of those components.

298. Mr Human explained that, as an SOE, SAAT had to follow the procurement requirements of section 217 of the Constitution, and those in the SCM Policy of the Group. The SCM Policy provides that tenders should be advertised on the website and tender bulletin. It also allows for a fair chance to respond to a published request for proposals (RFP) that sets out the criteria. The Policy also distinguishes between those who compile the bid specifications and those who are responsible for its evaluation. The evaluation is conducted by the BAC. During 2016, SAA and SAAT also had a Cross Functional Sourcing Team (CFST) that both compiled the specifications and conducted the evaluation. However, pursuant to National Treasury Instruction 3 of 2016, this had to be a strict segregation of duties so that the people that designed the bid would be different to those who evaluated it and those who made the ultimate decision. This led to a practice where the team was divided into three different committees: the Bid Specification Committee; Bid Evaluation Committee; and Bid Adjudication Committee.

299. Prior to February 2013, Air France provided component support services to SAAT. This contract was then advertised five times, each time with a separate bid number.

300. The first tender was advertised on 16 February 2013, with a deadline of 30 March 2013. The CFST recommended that the first tender be awarded to Israel Aerospace for the Boeing Fleet and Air France for the Airbus Fleet. However, the tender was then retracted. This was to allow an integrated approach where both the logistics (transport of components) and components would be combined in one award.

Second tender

301. The second tender was advertised on 29 October 2014 with 2 December 2014 as the closing date. Bids were received. On 29 April 2015, the Board asked the CFST to stop the evaluation of the bids, and to put this process on hold for three months while they engaged with an American company, AAR Inc, on the possibility of concluding a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with that company. The Board then formally withdrew the tender on 18 June 2015. The Board passed this resolution to allow the finalisation of a strategic partnership with AAR, and allow SAAT to test the market by requesting quotations from other parties for 6 months. The purpose of this was to allow a confined bid to one party but ensure that there was economic value by testing it against the market.

302. The relationship between SAAT and AAR began in February 2015, when Ms Cheryl Jackson, who was the Vice-President: Government Affairs and Corporate Development of AAR, approached Mr Nico Bezuidenhout, the then Acting CEO of SAA, and submitted a proposal for a partnership between AAR and SAAT. Despite there being an open tender process at the time, SAAT decided to put it on hold to explore this partnership. Mr Human testified that it was generally prohibited for suppliers to have any interaction with bidders when a tender was open. This is explicitly prohibited in the SCM Policy of SAA and SAAT. Nevertheless, the proposal – which offered the same services that were subject to the open tender – was sent to Mr Zwane regarding the provisioning of components. The Board resolved thereafter to approve the "strategic partnership" between SAAT and AAR. The Board also resolved to visit the headquarters of AAR in the USA in May 2015. The Board's idea was that a collaboration agreement would be signed between SAAT and AAR which would be the basis for a later MOU. It was resolved that Mr Zwane would be authorised to sign all necessary documents to affect the collaboration agreement and that, in the meantime, the tender process would be suspended for three months to allow this process to take place. Mr Human testified that this was an unsolicited bid that was accepted without a competitive procurement process.

303. SAAT's travel records reflect that Dr Tambi, Ms Kwinana, Mr Zwane and Ms Memela visited AAR in the US from 2-8 May 2015. At this time, the second tender process was still open, and AAR was one of the bidders. Mr Human testified that SCM only allowed engagement with bidders in very circumscribed circumstances where the suppliers would all be protected. There is nothing in the policy allowing the Board and head of procurement to engage with bidders. Ms Kwinana claimed that supplier visits were not unusual, and SAAT needed to know who they were dealing with before signing an MOU. Mr Human responded that, if this was for the evaluation of a service, CFST members might be justified in undertaking such a visit. The type of visit would be confined only to the evaluation part of the tender. The evaluation would not be performed by the SAA Board or executives.

304. The Commission's investigations also revealed that an AAR representative had met with Ms Memela to understand SAAT support requirements and needs apart from what was contained in the RFP. Mr Human testified that this type of interaction was totally inappropriate given that this was a bidder in an open tender process. This inappropriateness was confirmed by Mr Mike Kenny, SAAT General Manager for Marketing at the time. He emailed Ms Memela about an invitation from her saying he should attend a meeting with AAR. In the email, he expressed concern over discussing component support issues with a bidder when the tender process was still ongoing.

305. There was also correspondence between Ms Jackson and SAA representatives during the time that the second tender was still open that revealed she was already aware that the tender was going to be cancelled, before any Board decision had been taken on the matter. Mr Human testified that it was irregular for a bidder to be aware of an intended cancellation of a bid before it occurred, suggesting that information had been made available to a supplier outside of the normal procurement process.

306. After the tender was cancelled, an MOU for the same services included in the tender was concluded between SAAT and AAR at the Paris Air show in June 2015. The MOU provided for collaboration between AAR and SAAT in connection with the provisioning of components as part of a joint venture. The MOU was in breach of section 54 of the PFMA, which requires the Board to seek permission from National Treasury if it intends to conclude an unincorporated joint venture. The MOU contemplated such a joint venture. Mr Barry Parsons, a SAAT Board member at the time, raised concerns about this with the Board. When these were not addressed, he submitted his resignation on 24 July 2015. In the letter, he said there appeared to be some "hidden agenda" in the AAR strategic partnership with SAA that required urgent independent investigation.

Third tender

307. On 14 July 2015, SAAT issued a closed bid for a short-term tender to obtain services pertaining to components for five months. It was issued to Air France, Israel Aerospace, Pegasus, and Lufthansa. The reason for the short-term nature of the tender was to give SAAT time to conclude a final agreement with AAR. The MOU had to be converted to a final collaboration agreement. However, this tender had not been provided to AAR, and SAA received legal advice at the time that AAR's exclusion from the process could be challenged. The tender was then withdrawn.

Fourth tender

308. The same tender was then reissued, the only difference being that it included AAR. AAR submitted a bid for this tender, with Nziza Aviation as its BEE partner. SAAT awarded the tender for five months to Air France to ensure continuity of the service while it tried to finalise an agreement with AAR arising from the MOU in the meantime.

Fifth tender

309. The fifth tender was issued on 8 December 2015, with 19 January 2016 as the closing date. It was for a five-year period. Part of the critical criteria for its award included that the bidder must have sufficient experience and equipment; be financially sound; be certified by various aviation authorities; provide access to pool or exchange bases; and agree to a No Fault Rate of 20% and a Beyond Economic Repair Rate of 70%. The bid document also stated that a bidder had to indicate what value they would place on each area of development that they would be imparting to the local vendor. The document also provided for the National Industrial Participation (NIP) obligations, which requires foreign entities, in contracts over USD 10 million, to conclude an agreement with the DTI, where 30% of the contract value had to go back to South African development.

310. AAR submitted its bid for this tender together with its new joint-venture partner, JM Aviation. The CFST was responsible for evaluating the tender. The team recommended that Lufthansa be appointed for both the Boeing and Airbus fleets. Lufthansa had offered the lowest price. The next lowest was AAR together with JM Aviation, and then Air France. On 25 April 2016, the CFST met again and decided to ask the bidders to confirm that they understood the scope correctly and to list their current customers. The CFST was concerned about "low balling", which is when a bidder underquotes and then the service is compromised due to financial constraints.

311. Ms Memela, who at the time was the Chair of the BAC, joined the CFST meeting on 25 April 2016 and emphasised the need to urgently finalise the project. Thereafter, the team decided that even though Lufthansa was the lowest price, because of the risk of low balling from other bidders, they changed their recommendation to Air France. Mr Human testified that it is not common practice for the BAC chair to attend the evaluation committee meeting as the adjudication and evaluation are supposed to be performed as separate functions, so that they serve as checks and balances on the process. On 6 May 2016, the BAC also resolved by round robin resolution that their recommendation was for Air France to be awarded the tender.

312. On 9 May 2016, the SAAT Board held a special meeting to deal with the award of the components tender. At the meeting, the Board noted that management had recommended that the tender be awarded to Air France. The Board did not accept this recommendation. Its reason was that Air France was resistant to "align itself with SAAT's development agenda". This was said to be a reference to "supply development". It also stated that "the benefits as outlined by the submission as a result of selecting Air France were not compelling enough to position the latter as the preferred bidder". The Board concluded that the concerns regarding "low balling" could be mitigated by reducing each party's obligations to writing. The Board resolved, therefore, not to follow management's recommendation and rather to award the components support services tender for both Boeing and Airbus fleets to the JV of AAR and JM Aviation for five years "subject to the mitigation of risk".

313. In his evidence, Mr Human accepted that it was the Board's role to interrogate recommendations received from BAC or the CFST. He however stated that it was unusual for the Board simply to make a decision that was entirely different to the recommended one without reverting to these bodies.

314. On 13 May 2016, a letter of award was sent out to AAR/JM Aviation. On 7 July 2016, the contract was concluded between the parties. Mr Kenny provided the Commission with an affidavit explaining that the negotiation process had been quite contentious. Ms Memela refused to give him the whole contract, which he noted was extremely unusual, and she told him that she only gave him part of the contract "to protect [him]".

315. The contract provided that, prior to the commencement date, JM/AAR would invoice SAAT for the deposit. It also provided that SAAT would pay the deposit by way of an irrevocable letter of credit from a bank and that JM/AAR would have the right to set off any SAAT invoices not paid by the due date against the deposit. If this occurred, SAAT would have to continue to replenish the deposit.

316. The Commission's investigations revealed that the way this clause was implemented was unusual. JM/AAR invoiced SAAT for the value of the deposit, amounting to USD 4.382 million (around R 60 million), and this invoice was paid in cash and not by credit letter. Mr Human testified that he was unable to find any justification for this cash payment, which would have greatly strained SAAT's cash flow and put SAAT at risk if AAR did not deliver. He also explained that, to his knowledge, there had never been any drawdowns from that deposit for outstanding invoices.

317. In 2018, SAAT conducted a review of the contract aa it was dissatisfied with various aspects of the performance, including the long turnaround times for the repair of components. Some components were out for repairs for more than 600 days; there was incorrect invoicing; the contract provided that SAAT would only be responsible for 35% of the beyond economic repair costs but was being invoiced up to 100% with an additional mark up and handling fee; AAR was charging excessive penalties against SAAT for slow returns of components but did not itself suffer any penalty for late repair; there had been no NIP obligation benefits; the contract provided for reciprocal work to be given to SAAT to be done at its workshops but no such work had materialised. The review revealed that the total contract expenditure paid by SAAT was R1.8 billion.

318. In terms of JM Aviation's JV agreement with AAR, 5% of all revenue was to go to JM Aviation. This amounted to approximately R53 million.

319. In so far as the NIP obligations under the components' tender were concerned, a representative of the DTI furnished the Commission with an affidavit which stated that SAAT and JM Aviation both had an obligation to inform it about the conclusion of the contract within five days but had failed to do so at all.

320. Mr Human testified that Air France instituted litigation proceedings to challenge the award of the tender. However, the Court had refused to grant an urgent interim interdict and Air France did not pursue final review relief.

Ms Sambo and AAR

321. Ms Sibongile Rejoyce Sambo testified before the Commission that she was a young entrepreneur who was attempting to break into the aviation industry. In 2004, she registered a company, SRS Aviation, and tendered for various businesses in the industry. In 2009, SRS decided to diversify into providing airplane parts and jet fuel for airlines. SRS was introduced to the SAAT database and received quotations and requests to supply parts and components.

322. Ms Sambo testified that she was invited by the DTI to be part of a business delegation to Chicago, where she was introduced to AAR. In particular, she met with Ms Cheryl Jackson and suggested business opportunities with SAA's subsidiary SAAT, which provides technical services to airlines. Ms Sambo proposed that they conclude an agency agreement so that AAR would be SRS's official partner. Ms Jackson indicated that AAR did not conclude agency agreements with foreign companies unless there was a concrete deal on the table. Ms Jackson wanted more information about exactly what the opportunities were at SAAT. She did state verbally to Ms Sambo that AAR would pay SRS 8% of the value of a contract if SRS facilitated a contract between SAAT and AAR, and SRS could act as the BEE partner in the transaction.

323. Between 2013 and 2015, Ms Sambo engaged with AAR and became its bid-partner in SAAT's first and second components tenders. During this period, she introduced AAR to Mr Zwane, in his capacity as Acting CEO at SAA. It was during a meeting with Mr Zwane that Ms Sambo was introduced to Ms Memela as SAAT head of procurement. In April 2015, Ms Memela told Ms Sambo that various SAAT members would be visiting AAR in Chicago. Sometime in 2015 before the trip, Ms Memela arranged a meeting between Ms Kwinana and Ms Sambo at Ms Sambo's house. Ms Kwinana told Ms Sambo at the meeting that she intended to resign from SAAT. She wanted to know the nature of Ms Sambo's relationship with AAR. She indicated that, when she left as Chair, she "wanted to get her hands on other contracts at SAA such as ... a contract for aircraft tyres, a contract for logistics" and components. She asked Ms Sambo to introduce her to Ms Jackson, which she did. Ms Sambo testified that the meeting made her uncomfortable and she did not want to know the details of what Ms Kwinana was planning.

324. Within a few weeks of this meeting, Ms Kwinana had another meeting with Ms Sambo at the Protea Hotel. The meeting included Dr Tambi. Ms Kwinana explained to Ms Sambo that, once she left SAAT, Dr Tambi would "look after her interests at SAAT", which were the contracts she wanted to "get her hands on". Ms Kwinana then also introduced Ms Sambo to Ms Koekie Mdlulwa. She said that Ms Mdlulwa was a go-between for making deals for her. Ms Kwinana explained that as part of her interest in the components tender, she wanted Ms Mdlulwa to go and negotiate on her behalf with AAR, and that she would make sure AAR got the contract. Ms Kwinana explained that to secure the contract, AAR would have to pay her and other parties R100 million.

325. It then became clear to Ms Sambo that things had moved into "corruption mode". Ms Kwinana said to her that Ms Sambo would not be part of the group receiving the R100 million that would be negotiated for herself and "my people inside SAAT". She explained that "her people" inside SAAT were Mr Zwane, the CEO, and Ms Memela, Head of Procurement.

326. Ms Kwinana confirmed that she had this meeting at the Protea Hotel with Ms Sambo and Dr Tambi. She claimed that it was Ms Sambo who told her that she (i.e., Ms Sambo) had been the go-between for AAR since 2011 without any remuneration and that "they" owed Ms Sambo R100 million. Ms Kwinana said that she told Ms Sambo that SAAT could not intervene in such a matter.

327. Ms Sambo testified that she never said any of those things and stated that she did not mention to Ms Kwinana her problems with AAR. It must be noted that Ms Kwinana's response to the Commission did not deal at all with Ms Sambo's evidence regarding the first meeting at Ms Sambo's residence. Ms Sambo testified that after this meeting with Ms Kwinana, she told her team at SRS about the discussion.

328. After Ms Sambo's meeting with Ms Kwinana, Ms Jackson contacted her and gave her feedback on the SAAT trip to AAR's premises and told her that AAR was planning a trip to SAAT's premises. The CEO of AAR, Mr David Storch, invited Ms Sambo to a party at the Paris Air Show on 16 June 2015. Ms Sambo testified that she declined. When the SAAT delegation returned from the Paris Air Show, AAR had concluded the MOU referred to above with SAAT.

329. In August 2015, Ms Sambo had a meeting with Ms Jackson, who was very frustrated about not managing to secure a contract with SAAT. Ms Jackson insisted on getting information from Ms Sambo to help them win the bid. Ms Sambo then contacted Ms Memela explaining that AAR was frustrated and wanted information on the bid. Ms Memela asked her to meet her to get information.

330. Ms Sambo testified that she met Ms Memela in Alberton and that she was given information on a flash disk. It contained an Excel spreadsheet of previous pricing for the components bid. The data forensic team at the Commission imaged the memory stick that Ms Sambo produced and advised that the spreadsheet was indeed created and last saved on 3 August 2015 and that the user who saved it was Ms Memela. 3 August 2015 was 16 days before AAR submitted its tender on the five-month components contract.

331. Ms Memela denied having met Ms Sambo in Alberton and giving her information with bidder identities and prices. She claimed that she did not even have access to that information as she was not on the CFST. The Commission doubts the credibility of Ms Memela's version of events and believes that Ms Memela provided Ms Sambo with confidential bid pricing information. Ms Memela's lawyer, Ms Mbanjwa, indicated that they wanted to have their own expert consider the metadata on the memory stick. However, despite being given numerous opportunities by the Commission, Ms Memela never did so. The evidence remains unchallenged. It must be considered together with the affidavit from the author of the Excel pricing document, Mr Leon Robbertse, who explained exactly how and when he created the document and confirmed that it was a document with confidential bidder information on it, created in 2015.

332. Ms Sambo then met with Ms Jackson and told her that she had the pricing information, but AAR kept refusing to pay her. She wanted to use this information as leverage to secure a retainer. Ms Jackson told Ms Sambo that she could not pay her in return for the information because that would be regarded as bribery and corruption. Ms Sambo testified that she decided not to give the information to Ms Jackson or to anyone else at AAR. Ms Sambo conceded that asking SAAT for information while there was an open bid was improper. She stated that she felt under pressure to deliver something to AAR.

333. In September 2015, Ms Jackson invited Ms Sambo to a discussion about the five-year components' services bid. When Ms Sambo went to meet Ms Jackson, she found her sitting with Mr Ndzeku. Mr Ndzeku explained that he was introduced to Ms Jackson through a mutual friend. Ms Jackson and Ms Sambo then proceeded to an arranged meeting with Ms Mdlulwa. Ms Mdlulwa stated that she was representing Ms Kwinana and her people at SAAT and that they wanted R 100 million from AAR to make sure it got the contract. Ms Sambo agreed that she would continue to be the direct liaison with

AAR. Ms Jackson told Ms Mdlulwa that she did not have the authority to agree to this arrangement and payment but she would go and speak with her principals.

334. After the final five-year components tender had been issued in December 2015, Ms Memela told Ms Sambo that Ms Kwinana wanted to meet with her again. Ms Sambo also testified that, around this time, Ms Memela had told her that AAR was at that time partnering with JM Aviation, which was Mr Ndzeku's company. The purpose of the meeting was to find out what Ms Sambo knew about Mr Ndzeku, whether he had interactions with Ms Jackson before the tender was advertised. Ms Sambo explained that it seemed from the meeting that Ms Kwinana was driving the process and was in control of who would ultimately partner with AAR. She even called Ms Jackson during the meeting to ask if they could drop Mr Ndzeku and revive the partnership with SRS. There was no conclusion to that suggestion during the telephone call in the meeting. Ms Sambo said she could not remember any further details about the meeting.

335. At some stage, Ms Memela called Ms Sambo to a meeting in Alberton where she told her that the five-year tender had been awarded to AAR (with JM Aviation). Ms Memela told Ms Sambo in the meeting that Ms Kwinana had introduced Mr Ndzeku to her and asked her to assist Mr Ndzeku in preparing the bid. She even forwarded emails to Ms Sambo showing that Ms Memela had helped JM Aviation to finalise the draft joint venture agreement and had been requested to help JM Aviation/AAR to finalise their bid documentation. These emails were presented to the Commission.

336. During her testimony, Ms Memela denied that it was inappropriate for her to have had such communication with JM Aviation while the bid was still open. She said that there was no problem with such communication because she was not on the bid evaluation committee, and it was part of her job to educate BEE companies about tender requirements. She denied that she said Ms Kwinana had asked her to help JM Aviation. She said Ms Sambo was lying because Ms Memela had refused to give her pricing and other information when she had asked previously. As the report sets out below, Ms Memela's version on this issue was not credible.

337. After the meeting and having received these documents, Ms Sambo told Ms Memela that she intended to sue her and AAR over the matter under discussion. Ms Memela told her that there were others who had helped JM Aviation to compile the bid, including Ms Princess Tshabalala, senior manager of SCM at SAAT, and Mr Zwane, the CEO of SAAT. Ms Tshabalala approached Ms Sambo later and asked her not to sue because she would lose her job. She told Ms Sambo that Ms Memela had promised her that they would get paid once AAR and JM Aviation had been awarded the tender.

338. Ms Sambo provided the Commission with WhatsApp messages sent to her by Ms Memela. One of the messages from Ms Memela stated, among other things: "All I ever did was help you. Even the info that you are using now was sent to you in good faith to help you. Even before that when you wanted price info for Cheryl. I gave that to you as I never thought you would one day plan to use it against me". The WhatsApp message also said: "I had to tell the CEO, Yakhe and Princess, because as much as you would think you are destroying me they will also get affected."

339. The WhatsApp communications between Ms Sambo and Ms Memela were also put to Ms Memela. Her lawyer, Ms Mbanjwa, objected to Ms Memela being asked any questions on the WhatsApp messages because they wished to challenge their authenticity. However, Ms Mbanjwa never did so. When questions were put to Ms Memela about the content of the WhatsApp messages, Ms Memela never actually denied that she had sent them and instead argued about what their content meant. For example, it was put to Ms Memela that the WhatsApp messages confirmed that she had given pricing information to Ms Sambo, even though Ms Memela denied doing so. In response to this, Ms Memela made the remarkable claim that any pricing information that she was referring to in the messages was in the public domain. However, it was then put to her that pricing information in the public domain could never be used against her later. Ms Memela had no adequate answer to this obvious point.

Ms Memela's response

340. Ms Memela testified that in her role as head of procurement at SAAT, she would receive a recommendation from the bid evaluation committee (part of the CFST). She would make sure that she was satisfied with it from a legal perspective and would then sign off to indicate that she supported the recommendation as head of SCM. This would then go to Exco, which was made up of the general managers of SAAT. Once Exco had confirmed that it supported the recommendation, it would then go to the BAC. The BAC would then check whether the evaluation had been done regularly and transparently. After the BAC process had been completed, the CEO would place the final recommendation before the Board. Ms Memela confirmed that in May 2015 she was the Chair of the BAC, but that she recused herself from the components tender.

341. During her testimony before the Commission, Ms Memela was asked to comment on the appropriateness of her communication with Ms Sokhulu about AAR/JM Aviation's tender documents in circumstances where the tender was still open. These emails asked for approval of the JV agreement between AAR and JM and for approval of the actual bid submission. Ms Memela did not deny having communicated with Ms Sokhulu as set out in the emails. Instead, she claimed that the communication was not in breach of the tender requirements. She also said that, because there was no email in response with track changes on the document in the Commission's possession, then there was nothing wrong with her interactions with Ms Sokhulu. However, she later testified that she probably did respond to the email later by telephone to say that the supplier development aspect of the bid was in order. It is noteworthy that the emails were not sent to Ms Memela's official SAAT email address but to a personal one.

342. It was put to Ms Memela that it was prohibited under the bid for there to be any communication between a bidder and somebody other than the project manager at SAAT. Ms Memela testified that she was aware of this prohibition. However, Ms Memela claimed that the clause was meant to refer only to those who are sitting on the bid evaluation committee. When asked to identify where in the clause or in the bid document this was set out, Ms Memela conceded it was not there. Ms Memela then changed her version and claimed that she was not aware of this prohibition at the time. She said that she did not know that there was anything wrong in what she was doing. She ultimately conceded that, had she known about the bid condition, she would have raised it with the Project Manager.

343. JM Aviation/AAR also breached the tender requirements in other ways. They failed to uphold the NIP obligations in the tender. When asked about this, Ms Memela testified that NIP was not obligatory. However, she conceded that in fact, in the tender itself, NIP obligations were imposed. However, she claimed that that was an error. She later claimed that it was because one could have either direct or indirect NIP obligations and indirect obligations could encompass supplier development.

344. It was put to Ms Memela that DTI had reviewed the tender and the AAR/JM Aviation bid in March 2019 and concluded that SAAT or JM Aviation ought to have immediately alerted DTI to the fact that the agreement had been concluded. Ms Memela's answer was evasive. It is clear from the RFP that the NIP obligation applied and either JM Aviation or SAAT was required to notify DTI of the contract. Both failed to do so.

345. In addition, the RFP provided that, if any person employed by the bidder directly or indirectly offered or gave anyone in the employ of SAAT any consideration or gift, they would be disqualified and excluded from any future bid with SAA. It was put to Ms Memela that JM Aviation had in fact made a payment to Ms Memela of R2.5 million, and that this was in breach of the tender requirement which should have excluded JM Aviation/ AAR from the tender process. Ms Memela denied this on the basis that she was not on the bid evaluation committee and so there was no possible reciprocation for the payment. She claimed that, because the R2.5 million payment to her was in respect of her mother's property, it was not a gift or gratuity. However, the policy says "any consideration".

346. Ms Memela was also questioned about the trip she had made to the US to visit AAR. Her attention was drawn to the fact that the components tender that was issued on 29 October 2014 was only retracted on 22 June 2015. This meant that the tender was still open in May 2015 when Ms Memela, together with members of the Board including Ms Kwinana, Mr Zwane and Dr Tambi, had travelled to the US. AAR was one of the bidders in that very tender. Ms Memela was asked, in the light of her evidence that people who are involved in evaluating the bid and making decisions on it should not communicate with bidders when a bid was still open, whether she warned the Board members that they should not be communicating with AAR, let alone going on the trip. Ms Memela testified that she did not. It was put to Ms Memela that it is problematic that SAAT Board members went to visit one of the bidders while a bid was open and then subsequently retracted the bid, to the prejudice of other competing bidders, so that they could embark on a partnership with one of the bidders. Ms Memela's answer was that it was not problematic, but her reasons did not justify her answer. She kept insisting that there needed to be section 54 shareholder approval before any partnership was embarked upon. But at the time of the retraction there was no such approval, and, in any event, this should not have any impact on section 217 of the Constitution and a free and fair tender process.

347. It was also put to Ms Memela that the meeting she had with AAR on 27 May 2016 was also at a time when the tender was still open and that Mr Kenny had objected to attending the meeting for that very reason. Ms Memela claimed that Mr Kenny never objected to the meeting. She also claimed there was nothing wrong with the meeting because she was not the decision maker in respect of the tender. But then Ms Memela was shown the email from Mr Kenny setting out his reservations about the corporate governance problems associated with meeting with a bidder whilst the bid was open. Ms Memela's answer was again evasive, circuitous and made no sense.

348. Ms Memela also confirmed attending yet another meeting on 29 May 2016 with Ms Jackson when the tender was open. It was put to Ms Memela that Ms Jackson appeared to know in advance that the RFP was going to be cancelled, as she had referred to it in an email. Ms Memela was asked how Ms Jackson would have known that in advance. She answered that she did not remember.

349. Ms Memela confirmed that she attended the CFST meeting where the committee decided that even though Lufthansa was the cheapest bidder, it would not be selected because, among other things, it had outstanding NIP obligations from a previous tender. Ms Memela was asked whether anyone actually found out whether Lufthansa had complied with its NIP obligations. This was asked because the DTI provided the Commission with an affidavit that confirmed that Lufthansa had no instances of non-compliance with its NIP obligations in respect of the other contract it had with SAAT at the time. Ms Memela's response was an unsatisfactory answer and failed to deal with the real issue. Given Ms Memela's previous evidence that NIP obligations could simply be ignored by SAAT, the failure to comply with NIP obligations could never have been a valid basis on which to reject Lufthansa's bid.

350. The Board meeting of 9 May 2016 in which the tender was awarded to AAR/JM Aviation reflected that the Board rejected CFST's recommendation that the tender be awarded to Air France because it was resistant to align itself with SAAT's development agenda and the benefits were not compelling enough to position it as the preferred bidder. The Board further resolved that the concerns about JM/AAR "low balling" could be mitigated by reducing the terms in writing.

351. Ms Memela testified that she was "shocked" at this decision because normally, if the Board disagreed with CFST or the committees, the matter would get referred for reconsideration instead of the Board taking a different decision. Despite Ms Memela's evidence that she was "shocked" at the Board's decision, she attended a Board meeting on 15 June 2016, where the AAR tender was discussed. At the meeting, Ms Memela was recorded as having stated that management supported the decision to award the tender to AAR and that it was justifiable. Ms Memela's answers about her support for the contract and her involvement in it were generally evasive and made no sense. Her evidence needs to be viewed in the light of Mr Kenny's testimony that Ms Memela and Ms Koekie Constance Mbeki were responsible for the legal aspects of the contract negotiation and drafting.

352. Ms Mbeki from SAAT provided the Commission with an affidavit explaining that Ms Memela was the leader of the contract negotiations with AAR/JM Aviation. Ms Memela was once again evasive on whether this was true and what the extent of her role had been. In her affidavit, Ms Mbeki stated that Ms Memela called her and reprimanded her for raising concerns during the negotiation process that "had already been resolved" and for delaying the process. When Ms Memela was confronted with this during her testimony, she claimed that she did not remember. Ms Memela did not dispute Ms Mbeki's version in this regard.

353. Ms Mbeki stated that one of the things she wanted included in the contract was a clause on penalties in favour of SAAT, but this was not included in the ultimate contract. The absence of a clause on penalties was highlighted in the 2019 review of the contract by SAAT. Ms Memela was asked why this clause was not included and what steps she took to ensure SAA's interests were protected in the contract. She replied that it was not her job to check the contract, and this was purely Ms Mbeki's responsibility. She confirmed that she did not even check the final contract before it was signed.

354. Ms Mbeki's evidence is that even she was not afforded the opportunity to check the contract before signing. She had scheduled a meeting on 7 July 2016 with the SAAT team members to go through the contract clause by clause as they usually did, but she was informed that the agreement had already been signed. Ms Memela testified that she knew nothing about the signing of the contract or who arranged for that to happen. There is support for Ms Mbeki's testimony that the signing of the contract was rushed and done without a proper review because there are numerous errors in the contract. Mr Malola Phiri's affidavit to the Commission also confirms that the contract was rushed for signing because Ms Kwinana was insistent that it be concluded.

355. Mr Kenny's evidence about Ms Memela refusing to give him the full contract "to protect [him]", was put to Ms Memela. Ms Memela testified that she did not remember this. Ms Memela was also asked about the implementation of clause 4.26 of the contract which required a deposit from SAAT in the form of a credit letter, but which was instead paid in cash. She was directed to correspondence where Mr Kleyn asked about the deposit that AAR was demanding and enquired whether the agreement provided instead for a bank letter as that was a standard SAA contract clause. Ms Memela responded to his enquiry by writing an email stating that they fought hard in the negotiations for a deposit clause with respect to cash to be excluded from the contract but were not successful.

356. But Ms Memela was wrong. There was no requirement in the contract for a deposit to be paid in cash. She was therefore either deliberately misleading Mr Kleyn about the provisions of the contract or grossly negligent for not in fact checking what the contract said. Ms Memela claimed that this correspondence was only in respect of what happened at the negotiations and that she still needed to check what the contract stated. This is not a plausible explanation given what she said in the actual correspondence. Furthermore, the explanation in her email about what had transpired during the negotiation of the contract with AAR is inconsistent with her claim that she was not involved in the negotiation process and that this was done by Ms Mbeki alone.

357. Ms Memela's answer is also belied by later correspondence in which AAR again queried why it had not been paid in respect of deposit invoices it issued. In response, Ms Memela again said that SAAT was obliged in terms of the contract to make payment in respect of a security deposit upfront and that this was part of the conditions precedent. She again referred to the negotiation process that resulted in SAAT agreeing to pay this deposit. This correspondence confirms that she was heavily involved in the contractual negotiations. It would appear that Ms Memela failed dismally in protecting SAAT's interests when AAR started demanding a cash payment to which it had no contractual entitlement. Indeed, Ms Memela actively supported that the payment be made.

358. The deposit payment amounted to approximately R60 million in cash. JM Aviation stood to benefit from this because it was entitled, under the JV, to receive 5% of that revenue. This is the same JM Aviation that paid Ms Memela R 2.5 million in May 2016. The inescapable conclusion from this evidence is that Ms Memela favoured AAR/JM Aviation during the components tender in at least six ways. These are that:

    358.1 She met with AAR in South Africa while the tender, in which AAR was a bidder, was still open

    358.2 She travelled to the US to meet with AAR while the tender, in which AAR was a bidder, was still open

    358.3 She entertained communications from JM Aviation about both the JV agreement it was entering into with AAR and the draft AAR/JM Aviation bid submission before the closing date for the submissions

358.4 She shared confidential pricing information with AAR while the tender was open

358.5 She put pressure on Ms Mbeki who was negotiating the contract to expedite its progress, when Ms Mbeki was attempting to secure more beneficial terms for SAA; and 358.6 She misled her colleagues in order to motivate for a cash deposit to be paid to AAR in the amount of approximately R60 million at a time when SAAT was severely cash strapped.

359. Had there been no payment that JM Aviation made to Ms Memela it might have been possible to view her conduct as a manifestation of incompetence or gross negligence. However, JM Aviation's payment of R 2.5 million to Ms Memela seems to suggest that there is corruption at play. When Ms Memela concluded her oral evidence, she requested an opportunity to make written re-examination submissions.

360. These submissions display a complete lack of candour and a singular failure to accept any responsibility for her actions. The re-examination submissions were Ms Memela's opportunity to place any remaining clarificatory evidence before the Commission. Her failure to do so attracts the inference that these documents did not, in fact, advance her case. Ms Memela's submissions conclude with a "plea for leniency" from the Commission. Yet, Ms Memela's pleas for leniency are not justified. The Commission will recommend that the NPA consider prosecuting Ms Memela for corruption.

Ms Kwinana's version

361. Ms Kwinana testified that she did not think it was inappropriate or irregular for a Board member, who would vote on a tender, to meet with a bidder whilst the tender was still open, if that Board member was not aware that there was a bid going on and this person was a bidder; or if the member was aware, it would depend on their level of involvement in the decision-making; and even if such a board member was a key decision-maker, he or she should still be able to meet and talk about issues other than the tender.

362. Ms Kwinana went so far as to say that a decision-maker would only need to disclose a conflict of interest, or avoid talking to a bidder, if they personally felt that their judgment would be impaired because of their relationship. Ms Kwinana accepted that the SAAT Board members' trip to the AAR Headquarters in the US had occurred during an open bid. She also accepted that AAR was one of the bidders. She confirmed that the SAAT delegation was flown on private jets and driven in limousines and was taken to restaurants by AAR.

363. Ms Kwinana nevertheless testified that she did not regard this as irregular because the Board could only give its final approval if it went to Chicago to see AAR's facilities. She also claimed that she did not know that there was a tender open at that stage. But the minutes of Board meetings show that this was false. She later admitted that she knew the tender was still open. She claimed that that there were so many tenders at SAAT that she would not have remembered this particular one. However, given the size of the tender, it is highly unlikely that Ms Kwinana did not know that the tender was still open when she visited the AAR headquarters.

364. Ms Kwinana denied that the restaurants, limousine rides and private jet flights were "benefits" that the Board ought not to have accepted from a bidder. Instead, she said that it was just part of their "due diligence". This explanation can be rejected on its face. The problem with this approach was highlighted by another feature of Ms Kwinana's testimony. When asked about the information on which she based her decision when she voted as Chair of the SAAT Board to award the five-year components tender to AAR, she testified that she relied on what she learnt about AAR's operations on this very trip. This was information that no other bidder was able to provide and which no other bidder could dispute because it was not disclosed to them. The trip to the United States flew in the face of a fair, transparent and competitive procurement process.

365. Ms Kwinana again claimed that if, in her opinion, the trip and benefits did not "impair [her] independence and thinking", then there was no problem. In the opinion of the Commission, her conduct shows that she is not an appropriate judge of her own impartiality and that is why the procurement processes and SCM policies are in place at SAAT. Ms Kwinana also claimed that such a trip would not influence an outcome because procurement processes are so rigorous that it would not matter. However, in the opinion of the Commission, the decisions of the Board demonstrate that this is clearly false. There can be various safeguards in place, but if the Board makes the ultimate decision and it has allowed itself to be influenced in this way, the whole process is undermined.

366. It was put to Ms Kwinana that there are safeguards in place to ensure the independence of the non-executive Board members who ultimately vote on a tender. One of these safeguards is that it is management who should conduct any due diligence, and then make recommendations to the Board. Ms Kwinana's response was that "this has been the practice" at SAAT.

367. It was evident from Ms Kwinana's testimony that nothing about her prior interactions with AAR were of any concern to her. When Mr Parsons resigned, he raised the concern that there was something untoward going on behind the scenes in the conclusion of the MOU between SAAT and AAR. He also said:

> My other specific concern is the identification and selection of the BBBEE partners, if any, for the proposed joint venture, a process that needs to be highly transparent in a business that already has an uncompetitive cost base. The MOU received includes an implementation timetable that suggests this process may already be significantly advanced and there is no visibility of this to either the SAAT or SAA Boards or National Treasury.

Ms Kwinana's response to this was that, if Mr Parsons had concerns, he should have raised them at a Board meeting instead of just resigning and she said that she did not understand his concerns.

368. The clauses in the RFP prohibiting any communication between anyone at SAAT and bidders in the tender, save for the Project Manager, were also put to Ms Kwinana. She was then taken to Ms Memela's emails with Ms Sokhulu of JM Aviation on the eve of the awarding of the tender to AAR/JM Aviation. Despite the clear and unequivocal wording of these clauses, Ms Kwinana continued to claim that there could still be communication between SAAT officials, including head of procurement, depending on the "circumstances" and where it would be "impractical" to observe the proper procedure. This feature of Ms Kwinana's testimony reveals an approach to legal compliance directly at odds with the governing legislation. In the opinion of the Commission, many of the situations Ms Kwinana would regard as impractical are situations which most people would find practical.

369. The clauses in the RFP prohibiting any communication between anyone at SAAT and bidders in the tender, save for the Project Manager, were also put to Ms Kwinana. She was then taken to Ms Memela's emails with Ms Sokhulu of JM Aviation on the eve of the awarding of the tender to AAR/JM Aviation. Despite the clear and unequivocal wording of these clauses, Ms Kwinana continued to claim that there could still be communication between SAAT officials, including head of procurement, depending on the "circumstances" and where it would be "impractical" to observe the proper procedure. This feature of Ms Kwinana's testimony reveals an approach to legal compliance directly at odds with the governing legislation. In the opinion of the Commission, many of the situations Ms Kwinana would regard as impractical are situations which most people would find practical.

370. Finally, it was put to Ms Kwinana that clause 1.6.3 of the RFP made it clear that no exceptions or "circumstances" would justify a departure from the prohibition on communications. The clause said that: "No discussions will be entered into surrounding elimination through non-compliance in clause 1.6.1". Eventually, she admitted that "on the face of it, I would be of the view that the bidder should be eliminated". She confirmed that AAR/JM Aviation should therefore have been eliminated from the five-year bid because of this communication but was not.

371. Ms Kwinana testified that she had a professional relationship with Mr Ndzeku. She met him during the SAA roadshows for supplier development in 2015. She admitted having had many telephone calls with Mr Ndzeku where she gave him guidance about how BEE requirements at SAA were implemented. She even admitted to having various telephonic discussions with him when the AAR/JM Aviation tender was open. However, she claimed that there was nothing inappropriate about this. It was put to Ms Kwinana that she even spoke to Mr Ndzeku the day before the Board took its decision to award the components tender to AAR and JM Aviation. Ms Kwinana claimed again that this was not irregular because they did not discuss the tender. However, based on her own concessions about Ms Memela's emails disqualifying AAR and JM Aviation as a bidder, these telephone calls would also have resulted, on Ms Kwinana's version, in JM Aviation/AAR's elimination from the bid.

372. It was put to Ms Kwinana that she was present at the meeting at which the component services contract with AAR/JM Aviation was signed. Mr Malola Phiri's affidavit to the Commission sets out in detail that Ms Kwinana and Ms Memela were present at the meeting where the contract was signed. According to Mr Phiri, Ms Memela indicated at the meeting that the agreement was on its way with a courier. When the contract was delivered, it was already signed by AAR. Ms Kwinana insisted that Mr Phiri sign it on behalf of SAAT. He asked Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana to check the document, and, on their approval, he signed it. Mr Phiri added that Ms Kwinana wanted the contract signed as a matter of urgency. He said that Ms Kwinana's behaviour at the meeting was "over the top, bordering on being aggressive".

373. As Ms Memela had done in her testimony, Ms Kwinana also denied being present when the contract was signed. Ms Kwinana claimed that the contract had already been signed when she convened a meeting with SAAT's management and that she wanted to obtain the signed version urgently because National Treasury wanted it.

374. There are no independent facts in relation to the meeting at which the component services agreement was signed to indicate which of the two versions is true. Ms Kwinana played a key decision-making role in deciding to award the tender to the joint venture of AAR and JM Aviation.

375. On 9 May 2016, the SAAT Board decided to award the component services contract to AAR/JM, and not to follow management's recommendation that it should be awarded to Air France. The Board's reasons for its decision were given as: Air France's unwillingness to align itself with supplier development; the benefits given for selecting Air France were not compelling; and concerns about AAR/JM Aviation low balling could be mitigated through contract.

376. When Ms Kwinana was asked what the Board meant when it said that Air France did not align itself with "supplier development", she did not seem to understand the term. She then went on to explain that it meant that Air France did not comply with BEE. However, SAAT's CEO's recommendation included an observation that none of the tenderers was BEE compliant and that, for that reason, they had all been ranked the same regarding BEE. This recommendation had served before the Board when the Board made its decision. When this BEE recommendation was pointed out to Ms Kwinana, she then started to give other reasons. She said that she had meant something else by supplier development – namely, that Air France did not indicate it could develop other local suppliers. When it was put to Ms Kwinana that all the bidders had committed to supplier development, and none of them had submitted a full proposal yet, she said: "There were many things that we talked about that resulted in us rejecting Air France." In the opinion of the Commission, this was an evasive answer.

377. Ms Kwinana then testified about the second reason given by the Board for rejecting Air France and this related to cost savings. However, management had raised a concern that it appeared that AAR was deliberately "low balling" with its projected costs, and it would inflate those costs over time and then claim various things were not included in the tender. Management set out their concerns as follows in the recommendation to the Board: "Sudden drastic cuts to the tender prices with a reduction of more than USD40million raised the fear of low balling to get the contract and doubts on sustainability". In the end, the price difference between Air France and AAR was fairly close, but in order to get there, AAR had to drop its prices in a dramatic fashion that raised concern. Ms Kwinana testified that, despite this serious concern being raised by management, the Board did not take any steps to check whether the contract eventually concluded in fact protected SAAT against this concern.

378. As indicated above, time has shown that the low-balling concern was real because, when Mr Human testified before the Commission in February 2020, he stated that the costing of the contract at that time, was sitting at R1.8 billion. This was well over the price of R1.25 billion that AAR/JM had put up in its bid.

379. Ms Kwinana was also questioned about Ms Sambo's allegations that she has disclosed to her that she wanted to "get her hands" on some of the contracts before she left SAA and SAAT. Ms Kwinana denied Ms Sambo's testimony on these aspects and claimed she was a "pathological liar". Ms Kwinana denied that she asked to be introduced to Ms Jackson. Ms Kwinana stated that Ms Sambo approached SAAT and complained about her relationship with AAR and that is why Ms Kwinana called a meeting with Dr Tambi, to see if there was anything SAAT could do.

380. It was put to Ms Kwinana that Ms Memela's WhatsApp communications with Ms Sambo provide independent contemporaneous support for Ms Sambo's version. In 2017, Ms Memela had sent a WhatsApp message to Ms Sambo in which she had said the following:

> And in 2015 you came to me as a friend and asked for information for the short tender which you wanted to give to you partner, but looks like you ended up not giving it to them, since you wanted money upfront, they tendered anyway with your company name . . . You guys . . . were negotiating with Cheryl where there was an agreement of what amount was going to be paid out to you guys if there was success. Unfortunately, Cheryl changed her mind, claiming it was illegal in her country to pay out bribes...

381. No explanation was proffered by Ms Kwinana for why Ms Memela, her trusted head of procurement, would have made up a story in an unguarded moment in 2017 to implicate Ms Kwinana in soliciting a bribe if it were not true.

382. In the end, however, the Commission's investigations revealed that many millions of Rands were, in fact, paid to Ms Kwinana from JM Aviation's bank account. This was after Ms Kwinana:

    382.1 Had been wined and dined by AAR in Chicago

    382.2 Had been speaking to Mr Ndzeku regularly on the phone while decisions on tenders affecting AAR and JM Aviation were being made

    382.3 Made an unjustified and unfair decision to reject management's recommendation that Air France should be awarded the tender for component services and instead gave the contract to AAR/JM.

383. In the circumstances the evidence is overwhelming that Ms Kwinana engaged in corrupt activities to benefit AAR/JM.

384. Both Ms Kwinana and Ms Memela denied that their conduct constituted corruption. They offered, in support of these denials, elaborate explanations about why the money they received from JM Aviation was not intended for their own benefit. Ms Memela's version involved Mr Ndzeku buying land in the Eastern Cape from her mother which her mother then donated to Ms Memela for the purchase of her house in Bedfordview. Ms Kwinana's version involved Mr Ndzeku investing millions of Rands in forex trading that Ms Kwinana's business, Zanospark (Pty) Ltd, just happened to be engaged in while JM Aviation was a candidate supplier to SAAT.

385. Both versions were shown to be false. It is important to note, for present purposes, that Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana were not working alone when they perpetrated their deceitful scheme. They were aided by the attorney, who represented them through-out their dealings with the Commission – Ms Mbanjwa.

386. When the evidence of their fraud was first revealed during the testimony of Mr Ndzeku, the Commission wrote to Ms Mbanjwa and invited her to provide an affidavit setting out her version of the fraud in which she had been implicated during Mr Ndzeku's evidence. Ms Mbanjwa declined to provide any affidavit. She said that she was satisfied that she was not implicated in any wrongdoing in Mr Ndzeku's evidence.

387. On Mr Ndzeku's own evidence, Ms Mbanjwa had drafted a sale agreement for the land he said he had purchased from Ms Memela's mother, which he eventually conceded had been a fraud. As an officer of the court, Ms Mbanjwa would no doubt be aware of the seriousness of an allegation of fraud made against her. Despite this, she has given no version to the Commission and so Mr Ndzeku's acceptance that the sale agreement was a fraud and was only signed in 2019 is uncontested.

The scheme to cover up the payments to Ms Kwinana and Ms Memela

Ms Memela and the sale of her mother's land

388. JM Aviation paid an amount of R 2.5 million towards the purchase of a house for Ms Memela in 2016. Ms Memela testified that it was not JM Aviation that had paid the money but, rather, Mr Ndzeku himself, although the funds may have come through JM Aviation. She explained the payment from Mr Ndzeku on the basis that her mother had sold him a plot of land in the Eastern Cape at Mpindweni. She testified that the contract of sale of the property was concluded between 2015 and 2016 and the purchase price was R2.5 million.

389. Ms Memela said that in or around February 2016, she and her mother agreed that the money should be used to purchase a property in Bedfordview. Ms Memela testified that the Bedfordview property was purchased for R 3.8 million. Once she had found the Bedfordview property, she cancelled the Cove Ridge purchase.

390. The Cove Ridge purchase agreement was concluded on 21 April 2015 between an entity called Slip Knot Investments and Ms Memela. Ms Kwinana, the Chair of SAAT, represented Slip Knot in this transaction. Ms Memela testified that it was Mbanjwa Attorneys who handled the transfer of the property. Ms Memela stated that Ms Kwinana provided her with "sisterly advice" in terms of investment and that she provided her with this property as an investment opportunity. Ms Memela testified that Mr Ndzeku paid the purchase price for her mother's property directly to Ms Mbanjwa, who was going to pay it to the transferring attorneys for the Bedfordview property. Ms Memela testified that this payment from her mother was not a loan but rather a "donation".

391. Ms Memela testified that, when she decided to purchase the Bedfordview property instead, she cancelled the Cove Ridge agreement. However, there was no cancellation clause entitling the purchaser to cancel the agreement. Once this was pointed out to Ms Memela, she testified that she had secured Ms Kwinana's agreement to cancel. The cancellation letter, dated 7 May 2016, stated that Ms Memela intended to cancel the contract and "the deposit of which will be used in the sale of the aforementioned house in Bedfordview. The monies that were paid to L Mbanjwa Incorporated in respect of this transaction should now be paid over to the seller's attorneys . . . "

392. Ms Memela testified that she had already committed to the Bedfordview property and made an offer to purchase back in February 2016. It was put to her that this meant that in February 2016, she was on the line for R3.8 million on the Bedfordview property and, at the same time, was liable to pay Slip Knot, Ms Kwinana's company, R 2.8 million for the Cove Ridge Property. Ms Memela conceded that she did not, at that stage, have R 6.6 million available to her for both property acquisitions. Ms Memela was evasive on details of the cancellation. She eventually suggested that maybe she and Ms Kwinana agreed verbally to cancel the agreement and then only cancelled formally three months later. The other suspicious aspect of the cancellation date was that it was two days after the deposit was received from JM Aviation into Ms Mbanjwa's account. The payment is reflected in the bank statements as "consulting Kwinana".

393. It was put to Ms Memela that, in Ms Sambo's affidavit to the Commission, she stated that Ms Memela had told her she had put in an offer on a house in Bedfordview but it was declined as her salary was insufficient. Ms Memela informed Ms Sambo that Ms Kwinana and Mr Zwane told her that they would make a plan for her. Ms Memela denied the statement.

394. Ms Memela confirmed that when JM Aviation made this payment of R 2.5 million on 5 May 2016, she was the Head of Procurement at SAAT. Furthermore, as at this date, the components tender that AAR/JM Aviation was ultimately awarded, was still open. The Board decided to award the tender to JM/AAR on 9 May 2016. The BAC meeting took place on 6 May 2016, the day after this payment had been made. In addition, on the date on which this payment was made, JM Aviation and SAAT, represented by Ms Memela, were still negotiating the price of the purchase of the GPUs.

395. Ms Memela claimed that there was no conflict of interest in having received this payment from JM Aviation and she stated that she was not sitting on the evaluation team and so there was no conflict. When asked whether she was familiar with the conflict of interest policy of SAAT and when she would be required to declare a conflict, she admitted that she was not familiar with it. The policy provides at clause 7.1 that SAA employees shall not seek to use their positions to gain direct or indirect benefits for themselves or their family members. It was put to Ms Memela that the fact that she had used her position and her meeting with Mr Ndzeku to find a purchaser for her mother's property, that ended up benefiting her. Her answer was again evasive and unsatisfactory.

396. Ms Memela was then asked whether she had not breached clause 7.3.1 of the same policy, which stated that SAA employees shall refuse gifts, hospitality or other benefits that could influence their judgement or performance of obligations. Ms Memela testified that she was not the decision-maker in either the sale of the GPUs to JM Aviation or the award of the tender to AAR/JM Aviation. She said that these were Board decisions.

397. After Ms Memela had testified, Mr Ndzeku testified about the contract with Ms Memela's mother, Ms Hlohlela. Mr Ndzeku stated that he had met Ms Memela in around mid-2015 at one of the supplier development workshops. He testified that during that introduction, Ms Memela had told him about her mother's land in the Eastern Cape. He explained that, at that time, he was involved in commercial cannabis farming in Lesotho and Swaziland and he wanted to use Ms Hlohlela's property for that type of business. As evidence of his involvement in growing cannabis, Mr Ndzeku provided the Commission with an investment document from a company called Medigrow that is involved in commercial cannabis farming. He testified that this was the company he was dealing with at the time, and that he had shown Ms Hlohlela this document in 2015 when discussing the land sale

398. Mr Ndzeku testified that he met with Ms Hlohlela about the purchase at the land in Mpindweni in the Eastern Cape sometime between mid-2015 and the signing of the sale agreement in November 2015. He testified that he was taken to the land, and he was happy with it. Mr Ndzeku testified that Ms Hlohlela then instructed him to go and speak to Ms Mbanjwa about getting paperwork to confirm the sale of the land. Mr Ndzeku relied on an affidavit allegedly deposed to by Ms Hlohlela stating that Mr Ndzeku purchased her family land in Mpindweni. Mr Ndzeku provided the Commission with this affidavit. He testified that the affidavit was given to him in 2015/2016 by Ms Memela in front of Ms Mbanjwa, and he was told that it would be proof of ownership of land.

399. Mr Ndzeku testified that Ms Mbanjwa prepared the sale of land agreement. He said that he and Ms Hlohlela signed the sale agreement in respect of her property in November 2015. He said that, when he made the payment for the land to Ms Mbanjwa, he was asked to use Ms Kwinana's name as a reference. He claimed that he did not know that Ms Memela was going to use the money to purchase property. This claim by Mr Ndzeku's is false, because this fact is recorded in the sale agreement between him and Ms Hlohlela.

400. It was put to Mr Ndzeku that he could not have given Ms Memela or Ms Hlohlela the Medigrow document in 2015 because that document was only created in November 2018. He conceded that he had lied and had not given them the document in 2015. It was put to Mr Ndzeku that the Commission had received an affidavit from Medigrow's CEO who confirmed that the document could only have been given to Mr Ndzeku during a presentation to potential investors in November 2018. Therefore, he could not have been looking to purchase the land for this purpose in 2015.

401. It was further put to Mr Ndzeku that the affidavit he provided to the Commission, which purported to evidence Ms Hlohlela's rights over the land and her transfer of those rights to Mr Ndzeku, could not have been provided to him in 2015/2016 because it was on an affidavit template used by the Mount Frere Police Station from 2019. The Mount Frere Police Station provided the Commission with affidavits by some of its officers explaining that it would be impossible to have had that template in 2015 or 2016. They also explained that the policeman who was allegedly the Commissioner of Oaths of the affidavit, could not have deposed to it on that date because he was out on patrol, according to his incident book.

402. It was further put to Mr Ndzeku that the affidavit and the contract of sale could not have been signed by Ms Hlohlela because the Commission had received a report from a handwriting expert who had compared various documents that Ms Hlohlela had signed. The expert concluded that the signatures on the affidavit and the sale agreement had been forged. Finally, it was put to Mr Ndzeku that the sale agreement could not possibly have existed in 2015 because it made provision for certain disputes under it to be referred to the President of the Legal Practice Council, and the Council did not exist in 2015. It was only established in 2018. The sale agreement was, therefore, likely to have been based on an agreement template designed after 2018 and not 2015.

403. Faced with all this evidence, Mr Ndzeku eventually conceded that the affidavit was a forgery. He also admitted that he did not sign the purchase agreement in 2015, but rather in 2019. He confirmed that it was prepared by Ms Mbanjwa and was a fraud.

404. It was put to Mr Ndzeku that there was no agreement about land in 2015 or 2016. JM Aviation paid Ms Memela as SAAT head of procurement an amount of R 2.5 million out of the R 28.5 million that was paid by Swissport to JM Aviation, in exchange for her helping JM Aviation in the GPU sale and in the AAR/JM Aviation bid. By this time, Mr Ndzeku had no answer.

405. After Mr Ndzeku had testified, Ms Memela gave evidence again. She was questioned about what had been revealed in the evidence of Mr Ndzeku regarding the veracity and authenticity of the sale agreement which, on Ms Memela's version, had been the reason for the payment of R 2.5 million to her. Despite all the concessions made by Mr Ndzeku about the sale agreement being a fraud, Ms Memela denied this and said that the agreement was valid. Ms Memela did not offer any contrary evidence by anyone.

406. Ms Memela also maintained that the affidavit allegedly deposed to by her mother was authentic. However, despite being given an opportunity to do so, Ms Memela did not engage another handwriting expert to refute the Commission's expert.

407. Ms Memela disputed Mr Ndzeku's admission that the sale agreement was signed only in 2019. She testified that, as there would be no title deed, Mr Ndzeku had insisted upon a sale agreement and the affidavit. She testified that she had, therefore, given him the affidavit some time in 2015 or 2016 and the sale agreement followed suit.

408. When it was put to Ms Memela that the template of the affidavit was dated 2019, she said that that was "an error". Quite clearly, Ms Memela was sticking to the version that had been fabricated. When Ms Memela's attention was drawn to the fact that the sale agreement that Mr Ndzeku admitted was signed in 2019 had a dispute resolution clause that appointed the President of the Legal Practice Council to select an arbitrator and yet, in 2015, the Legal Practice Council did not exist as it was only established in 2018, she could not offer any sensible answer.

409. Ms Memela maintained that she did not help Mr Ndzeku get any tender. However, it was amply demonstrated throughout Ms Memela's evidence that she played an important role in the whole procurement process. As outlined elsewhere in this report, there were multiple ways in which Ms Memela influenced the tender decision and unduly assisted JM Aviation/AAR to secure the components tender and a low price for the sale of the GPUs. It is quite clear that she engaged in acts of corruption to assist AAR/JM Aviation.

410. Apart from the very strange features of the Cove Ridge sale agreement referred to earlier there were certain other features that make it quite plain that the agreement was just a fabrication to explain the payment of money into Ms Mbanjwa's account that was then used for Ms Memela's house. This is because:

    410.1 The agreement was purportedly concluded in April 2015, but while this agreement was still in existence and the full R2,8 million obligation owing on it, Ms Memela also concluded a binding sale agreement to pay R3.8 million for the Bedfordview house in February 2016, and allegedly kept both in operation until May 2016.

    410.2 The agreement had been signed only by Ms Memela and her husband did not sign the agreement, in circumstances where Ms Memela was married in community of property, which was in breach of section 15 of the Matrimonial Property Act 88 of 1984. In response, Ms Memela claimed that she had signed various other property purchase agreements without her husband but provided no evidence to support this claim.

410.3 Ms Memela had attempted to purchase a house two months before this for R1.4 million. Her application for a mortgage bond for the purchase was declined by the bank. Despite this, two months later, she committed herself to paying R2.8 million for a property from Slip Knot Investments. Ms Memela claimed that this was because she knew her mother was selling her property in the Eastern Cape. However, that does not make sense because the alleged sale agreement with Mr Ndzeku was only ostensibly signed in November 2015, some seven months later. Furthermore, the Slip Knot sale agreement did not contain any condition that it was subject to her first securing the "sale" of her mother's property.

410.4 Ms Memela did not sign a client form under the Financial Intelligence Centre Act 38 of 2001 (FICA) for Ms Mbanjwa when the Slip Knot sale agreement was concluded. Instead, such a form was only completed a full year later in 2016. However, in terms of section 21 of FICA, client information forms are required to be provided and signed when the transaction occurs or when the business relationship begins. The date of the client take-on sheet (6 May 2016) that was ultimately signed is suspicious because it was only signed the day after JM Aviation had paid R2.5 million to Ms Mbanjwa (5 May 2016), the money which was used by Ms Memela to purchase her property in Bedfordview. This tends to indicate that the first time Ms Memela became a client of Ms Mbanjwa's was when JM Aviation had made the payment of R2.5 million into Ms Mbanjwa's account.

411. The final suspicious feature of the Slip Knot agreement was eventually put to Ms Kwinana during her evidence. When Ms Kwinana appeared before the Commission, she was asked about the domicilium that she had provided for Slip Knot Investments under the agreement. The address given was 92 President Park, Midrand. However, in 2015, Ms Kwinana had not been working out of that address for several years already. The agreement was signed in April 2015, and the new owner of the President Park property, Mr Mark Bates, provided the Commission with an affidavit that explained that his company had been in that property since 2013. Ms Kwinana offered no suitable explanation for this discrepancy.

412. The evidence presented to the Commission shows clearly that Ms Memela received payment of R 2.5 million from JM Aviation to facilitate the JM Aviation/AAR components tender and the sale of the GPUs. It also shows that Ms Memela, Ms Kwinana and Ms Mbanjwa conspired to try to hide their corrupt activities by fabricating agreements after the commission of their corrupt activities.

413. This type of conduct calls for prosecution. In addition, both Ms Memela and Ms Mbanjwa are officers of the Court. Ms Memela is an advocate and Ms Mbanjwa, an attorney. Despite this, they have participated in a fraudulent scheme to try to hide money that was paid as a kick-back to Ms Memela. The Legal Practice Council should investigate their conduct further to determine whether they deserve to remain on the roll of advocates in the case of Ms Memela and, of attorneys, in the case of Ms Mbanjwa.

Ms Kwinana's Zanospark investment company

414. As set out above in the report, JM Aviation bought the GPUs from SAAT for approximately R 3 million and then immediately sold them to Swissport for R 9 million, thus making a profit of R 6 million in one day. This same calculation was put to Ms Kwinana, and she was invited to accept that, because of SAAT's sale of the GPUs to JM Aviation, JM Aviation made R6 million. Ms Kwinana would not accept this. She resisted the conclusion that JM Aviation made an immediate profit of R6 million. She denied this on the basis that, when you buy a motor car for R200,000 and it depreciates in value, then, when you sell it, you can only get R150,000 for it. When it was pointed out to her that that may be so for motor cars but, in this case, there was no depreciation (the sale taking place the very next day and in respect of already used equipment), she still would not concede that JM Aviation made R6 million on the sale.

415. After her evidence, Ms Kwinana's lawyer, Ms Mbanjwa, provided "submissions" to the Commission in lieu of re-examining Ms Kwinana. In those submissions, Ms Mbanjwa makes the point that, in the affidavit that Mr Aires (of JM Aviation) provided to the Commission, he claimed that seven of the GPUs were taken in for repairs. She then asserted that "the cost of repairs would clearly be an add-on on the selling price that JM Aviation would charge Swissport". Ms Mbanjwa also criticised the evidence leader for allegedly ignoring this evidence and claimed that the evidence leader had thereby "misled the public". However, a proper consideration of Mr Aires's affidavit reveals that it does not provide support for this submission. In support of the conclusion that Mr Aires' affidavit did not support Ms Mbanjwa's submission, the following can be said:

415.1 Although Mr Aires contends in paragraph 27 of his affidavit to the Commission that seven of the GPUs were sent for repairs "at JM Aviation's cost", he provides no documents that support this claim, and the claim is inconsistent with his contemporaneous emails with Swissport at the time and his emails in 2017 to Ms Memela.

415.2 Mr Kohl's affidavit makes it clear that on Thursday, 14 July 2016, Mr Aires sent an email to Swissport in which he confirmed that he had inspected the GPUs and ten of them were ready for collection. This was followed with an email on 28 July 2016 in which Mr Aires informed Swissport that the remaining three GPUs were ready for collection. By 28 July 2016, therefore, all twelve GPUs had been collected from SAAT. In an email on 2 August 2016, Mr Aires confirmed to Swissport that all the GPUs had been delivered to Swissport. In his contemporaneous correspondence, Mr Aires makes no reference to the need for these GPUs to be repaired at JM Aviation's cost after they had been collected from SAAT.

415.3 Furthermore, in 2017, Mr Aires provided an email to Ms Memela in which he set out the chronology related to the GPUs.

415.4 Annexure 65 to the Open Water report on the SAAT GPU transaction dated 19 June 2018 is an email dated 21 September 2017 that Mr Aires sent to Ms Memela. In that email, Mr Aires refers to the seven GPUs that needed to be repaired but records that they were repaired by SAAT prior to June 2016. The sale of the GPUs to JM Aviation only took place during June 2016 and so these repairs were not done by JM Aviation but by SAAT.

415.5 It appears that Mr Aires was, therefore, not being truthful in his affidavit. It is not correct that the sale price of the GPUs was to be discounted by the repair work that JM Aviation had to do on seven GPUs. That repair work was done by SAAT before they were sold to JM Aviation. In July 2016, JM Aviation inspected the GPUs and confirmed that they were ready for collection by Swissport. By 2 August 2016, all the GPUs had been delivered to Swissport.

415.6 There is no explanation but to justify a sale price of R9 million as being market-related on day 2. Without some explanation for a change in the market over a day, that type of reasoning is simply untenable. His was an attempt to defend the indefensible or to explain that which is inexplicable.

416. Of the approximately R9 million that JM Aviation received from Swissport for the GPUs, R 4.3 million was paid to Ms Kwinana. This was done through paying an entity called Zanospark (Pty) Ltd that Ms Kwinana controlled.

417. The relevant bank statements illustrate that on 24 June 2016, Swissport paid JM Aviation R9 849 600 from the proceeds of the sale of the GPUs; on 29 June 2016, R 2.5 million was paid out of the account to Ms Hendricks, who is Mr Ndzeku's wife; Ms Hendricks then paid the money to Zanospark, as well as a later payment of R600 000.

418. Zanospark was only created in February 2016 and had an opening balance of R502 at the time. Thereafter, once Ms Kwinana had left SAA, further amounts were paid to her directly from JM Aviation. Throughout this period, there was no other activity in the Zanospark bank account. This money was then paid out to Ms Kwinana's personal account. Ms Kwinana ultimately received a total of R 4.3 million from JM Aviation over the period from July 2016 to September 2016.

419. Mr Ndzeku claimed that the money that had been paid from JM Aviation to Ms Kwinana's company, Zanospark, was money that JM Aviation owed him, and he wanted to invest it with Zanospark as a forex investment company. He also stated that, although the payments were also reflected as being paid by Ms Hendricks, his wife, she was investing his money on his behalf. He claimed to have received updates on his investment, in the form of annual statements, which he would receive from Zanospark on email. However, after Mr Ndzeku was served with a summons requiring him to produce any documents he had in this regard, he stated in an affidavit that there were no such statements.

420. It should also be noted that Mr Ndzeku was asked to report to the Commission about JM Aviation's accounting to SARS for the payment it had received from Swissport. The Swissport payment of R28.5 million had included an amount of R3.5 million for VAT, for which JM Aviation was accountable to SARS. Mr Ndzeku has also failed to report to the Commission on this matter. SARS should investigate this issue further and take such steps as it may deem appropriate in terms of the law.

421. It was also put to Mr Ndzeku that if Zanospark was trading in forex, then it would have needed to be licenced either by the SARB or as a financial services provider under the Financial Advisory and Intermediary Services Act 37 of 2002 (FAIS), but that both those institutions had advised the Commission that Zanospark had no such licences.

422. Mr Ndzeku's version that the JM Aviation payments to Zanospark was his money was inconsistent with his own evidence given earlier in the day. Earlier in the day, Mr Ndzeku had testified that he did not receive large sums of money through JM Aviation and had received payments of a maximum of R100 000 for successful deals that JM Aviation had done. Later, however, he changed his story and claimed to have been paid millions of rands that JM Aviation had owed him that he then used to invest with Ms Kwinana's entity.

423. Ms Kwinana confirmed that she established Zanospark in February 2016 with her daughter, Ms Lumka Goniwe. She explained that the payments she received first from Ms Hendricks (prior to Ms Kwinana leaving SAA) and, thereafter, from JM Aviation, were investments that she was placing for Mr Ndzeku and Ms Hendricks, and that they were two of around eight investment clients that Zanospark had.

424. If Ms Kwinana was legitimately trading on behalf of third parties as her clients, then she would (and Zanospark would), according to an affidavit from the Financial Sector Conduct Authority provided to the Commission, be required to have a licence as a financial services provider. Ms Kwinana persistently denied in her evidence that she needed a licence to do forex trading and in the submissions made by her legal representative to the Commission on her behalf, this point is raised again.

425. Of course, if Ms Kwinana were conducting the forex trading for herself, then she would need no licence because FAIS only regulates financial services that are provided to clients. The absence of a licence therefore tends to indicate that Ms Kwinana was not conducting forex trading activities for others, but for herself.

426. The way Ms Kwinana dealt with the funds in her account and the Zanospark account also indicates that she treated the money as her own and not as the investment monies of clients. For example:

    426.1 The Zanospark bank account had no activity in it until the payments from JM Aviation.

    426.2 The money was always transferred into her personal account and disappeared from there. This is not the conduct of a financial advisor who should be keeping her clients' funds separate from her own.

    426.3 Zanospark was unable to provide the Commission with any records of the investments. Despite this, Ms Kwinana claimed that she had sent out annual statements in January of each year and concluded FICA documents but just could not give them to the Commission.

    426.4 Ms Kwinana's attempts to justify why she could not produce the documents was not credible. She claimed that Zanospark has a strict confidentiality policy that prevented her from ever emailing her clients. This was contradicted by Mr Ndzeku who testified that he had received the statements via email.

    426.5 Ms Kwinana also claimed that her server had been seized in February 2020 with the result that she had none of the electronic copies of the annual statements. However, if this were a legitimate business, then it strains belief that she would not have retrieved these records from the host or at least keep back-ups somewhere.

426.6 In any event, the company that confiscated the server, Onero, told the Commission that the server was, in fact, confiscated in April 2019 – which means that the last statements from December 2019/January 2020, which Ms Kwinana claimed she had prepared for her clients, would still have been in her possession. Yet, she failed to produce these in response to the summons.

427. All these factors point clearly to the conclusion that Ms Kwinana was not investing Mr Ndzeku's money for him. The money she received from JM Aviation and Ms Hendricks was meant for her. Indeed, the evidence showed that Ms Kwinana invested the R4.3 million in a property that she purchased through a family trust. On Mr Ndzeku's own version, he was investing in forex trading to hedge against the falling Rand. It was therefore put to Ms Kwinana that, if she was in fact investing Mr Ndzeku's money, she would not have been permitted to buy property located in South Africa with the money because this would provide no "hedge against the Rand". She had no adequate answer to this proposition.

428. The evidence overwhelmingly pointed to the fact that the money Ms Kwinana received from Ms Hendricks and JM Aviation was hers to do with as she pleased. She received this money after:

428.1 She, as a SAA Board member, had approved that SAA enter into a contract with Swissport for ground handling services in terms of which JM Aviation managed to buy GPUs from SAAT and made a R6 million profit in a day; and 428.2 She, as the chair of the SAAT Board, had taken part in a decision to award unjustifiably and unfairly the components tender to the joint venture of JM Aviation and AAR.

429. As the report highlighted above, Ms Kwinana presented the Commission with re-examination submissions at the conclusion of her oral evidence. She filed the submissions on 1 December 2020. Ms Kwinana emphasised repeatedly in her submissions that the pertinent decisions on which she was called to account were taken by the Boards of SAA or SAAT. This explanation appears to have been provided to shift, or at least dilute, the blame attributable to Ms Kwinana. However, the efforts do not avail her because as a member of those Boards, she was still accountable for her own conduct. Regarding SAAT, she was the Chairperson of SAAT's Board and, therefore, that Board's leader.

430. The efforts made by Ms Kwinana in the re-examination submissions to justify her receipt of payments and the various breaches of her fiduciary and other legal obligations do not assist her. Ms Kwinana has failed to give a plausible explanation for why as SAAT Chairperson and SAA Board member it was lawful and appropriate for her to have received payments from an entity, and persons affiliated with it, that was a supplier to SAAT. The payments were, therefore, probably corrupt payments because they were made in exchange for decisions, in which Ms Kwinana was involved, that benefitted the entity that made the payments. The Commission will recommend that the NPA considers prosecuting Ms Kwinana for the offence of corruption.

Use of external service providers

431. One of the themes that has emerged in the evidence presented to the Commission is the use of external service providers when there were already ably qualified and skilled staff working within the various SOEs. This use of duplicate external service providers was often a means by which corruption was allowed to flourish within the SOEs. Attention was therefore given to this issue in the investigation into SAA.

432. Ms Kwinana testified that the staff of SAA were of a very high calibre; were well-qualified and competent. With reference to their legal personnel, she said that they were very highly qualified, and the Board would rely on them regularly.

433. Ms Kwinana testified that she knew Mr Nick Linnell and that he used to attend Board meetings and committee meetings at SAA. She said that she did not know why he was at those meetings. She testified that she assumed that Ms Myeni would know as she had invited him. Ms Kwinana testified that Mr Linnell would sometimes offer a legal opinion on a matter, or he would even make presentations. If the Board needed a quick legal opinion or some legal research, they would ask Mr Linnell to provide the legal opinion or to conduct the required research. When asked why, when SAA had such well qualified lawyers, they needed an outsider to be there to give legal advice, Ms Kwinana could not give a meaningful answer. However, she confirmed that Mr Linnell did not actually attend those meetings in his capacity as a lawyer. However, the evidence shows that Mr Linnell was heavily involved in legal matters involving Ms Myeni as the Chair of the SAA Board. He briefed Werksmans on her behalf when she sought an opinion about the CEO, Mr Kalawe, and about the conduct of the Board.

434. Mr Linnell was paid by SAA for this work in circumstances where Ms Kwinana indicated she did not understand his purpose and that SAA had its own highly qualified in-house legal team. Mr Linnell was engaged in circumstances where no proper procurement processes were followed as they should have been under the PFMA. Given that SAA already had briefed attorneys, had in-house legal counsel, and that Mr Linnell was not actually a practising attorney in South Africa, Ms Myeni was asked what role Mr Linnell was playing and why he billed SAA for his services. She was also asked why his invoices (amounting to just under R2 million) were paid by SAA in circumstances where it appears no procurement processes had been followed. Ms Myeni was also asked why Mr Linnell was permitted to attend confidential board meetings when he was not fulfilling the role of an attorney (and therefore not subject to legal privilege) and whether she accepted that spending just under R2 million in these circumstances would amount to irregular and wasteful expenditure in breach of the PFMA.

435. Ms Myeni refused to answer these questions and invoked her privilege against self-incrimination. When she responded on affidavit to the question of Mr Linnell's attendance at Board meetings, Ms Myeni confirmed that he had attended the meetings on occasion when he was invited by the Board to do so. Had Ms Myeni in fact given this answer during her testimony, the answer would have been followed up with a series of further questions about why his attendance was required when there was a fully functional staff compliment at SAA; who, precisely, had called for him to attend; what value he had added to those Board meetings; and whether having an outsider at the meetings was not in conflict with the confidentiality that Ms Myeni was often keen to emphasise for the work of SAA's Board. Evidently, Ms Myeni elected only to answer the Commission's questions on affidavit, to avoid these obvious follow-up questions, and to only give answers that did not expose any wrongdoing. Despite repeatedly stating that she wished to be helpful to the Commission, her conduct revealed something else. Ms Myeni's entire approach to the Commission was consistent with a witness eager not to be exposed to probing questioning. Her answers on affidavit were brusque.

436. Ms Myeni was also afforded an opportunity after her oral evidence to respond to the evidence of Werksmans about the work they did for Ms Myeni in April 2014 and in terms of which they were briefed by Mr Linnell before he was appointed at SAA in any capacity. Ms Myeni provided an affidavit to the Commission in which she declined to deal with Werksmans' evidence on the basis that she could incriminate herself.

437. The evidence presented to the Commission shows that Ms Myeni used Mr Nick Linnell as a personal lawyer, at public expense and without regular procurement processes, to guide her in furthering her own personal interests. She also sought to use public funds to get legal advice on advancing her own personal interests with the SAA Board, instead of advancing the airline's interests.

BEYOND SAA

State security resources

438. The evidence presented at the Commission showed that the project of state capture was often facilitated using state resources to advance the personal interests of certain officials. Within SAA, there were two instances of irregular and unlawful employment of state security resources.

    438.1 The first instance involved vetting SAA management for security clearance. The manner in which the vetting was conducted and its scope indicates that the vetting was employed for the ulterior purpose of intimidating and harassing staff members.

    438.2 The second instance involved the security detail provided to Ms Myeni.

Illegal vetting of staff at SAA

439. Ms Nokunqoba Gloria Dlamini was employed by the State Security Agency (SSA) and based in the Pretoria Head Office as an analyst and evaluator. Her work included interpreting and analysing reports from information obtained through vetting. Ms Dlamini testified before the Commission that she received a call from the SSA about their need for a report about SAA's decision to close the route through Dakar, Senegal, because Mr Bosc decided it was not commercially viable. Ms Mpshe consulted one of SAA's legal advisors and the two of them decided she could not divulge all this information because it involved confidential information about particular SAA employees, in circumstances where the request did not come from the normal protocol – i.e., from one government department to another. This was communicated to the SSA official. Thereafter, they received a letter from the DG of the SSA, Mr Dlodlo, who instructed them to reply to the request. A further letter arrived from the Minister of State Security, Minister Mahlobo, and then one from National Treasury indicating that staff would be vetted by the SSA.

440. Ms Dlamini testified that the vetting of SAA's executives and support staff had its origins in a letter sent by the Minister of State Security to the Minister of Finance, Mr Nhlanhla Nene, on 13 October 2015. The letter stated, inter alia: "It has come to the attention of the State Security Agency that there is an urgent need for vetting and re-vetting of state-owned enterprises given sensitive information received on an ongoing basis." The letter further noted: "As per section 1 of the National Strategic Intelligence Act 39 of 1994 as amended by Act 67 of 2002 states that the National Intelligence Agency has the mandate to vet all other National, Provincial and Local Government Departments, Parastatals and their service providers." The letter concluded that the SAA Chairperson needed to provide a list of all executive management support staff.

441. Minister Mahlobo purported to be quoting from section 1 of the National Strategic Intelligence Act (NSIA). That section is a definitions section and contains no such provision. In fact, there is no such provision anywhere in the NSIA. It is not clear how Minister Mahlobo relied upon and quoted a non-existent section to justify the plan to vet SAA employees. Section 2A(1) gives SSA the mandate to vet employees of organs of state (which includes state-owned entities), but it provides as follows:

> The relevant members of the National Intelligence Structures may conduct a vetting investigation in the prescribed manner to determine the security competence of a person if such a person (a) is employed by or is an applicant to an organ of state; or (b) is rendering a service or has given notice of intention to render a service to an organ of state, which service may (i) give him or her access to classified information and intelligence in the possession of the organ of state; or (ii) give him or her access to areas designated national key points in terms of the National Key Points Act, 1980.

442. Ms Dlamini testified that her superior, General Dlodlo, explained to her that SSA would be vetting SAA because it was an SOE and vetting SOEs was part of SSA's mandate. Ms Dlamini confirmed that, in her view, just being an employee of an SOE meant that one had to be vetted. She confirmed that at no point in the vetting exercise did the team assess whether SAA employees had access to classified information.

443. On 26 November 2015, Minister Nene responded to Minister Mahlobo's letter. In his letter, Minister Nene repeated the purported (but wrong) quote from the National Strategic Intelligence Act. The letter also described two letters from Ms Myeni listing all executive management and support staff who were to be vetted. One of her letters was dated 2 November 2015 and the other 5 November 2015. The first letter named thirteen SAA executives for vetting, while the second letter listed another 118 executive managers and support staff. Ms Dlamini testified that, in her view, SAA Board members should also have been vetted as they were privy to classified information.

444. Clause 1.5 of Chapter 5 of the Minimum Information Security Standard (MISS) document states that political appointees, directors, generals, and ambassadors will not be vetted unless the President requests it or the relevant contract provides for it. However, all individuals with access to "classified information" must be subject to security vetting, from the lowest level up to Deputy DG.

445. In summary:

445.1 Section 2A (1) of the National Strategic Intelligence Act (NSIA) provides that SSA may vet in the prescribed manner to determine the security competence of a person or employees of organs of state, and may vet service providers to organs of state if they have access to classified information.

445.2 The MISS provides that all staff members or any other individuals who have access to classified information must be vetted.

445.3 Directors of the SAA Board will be service providers and must have access to classified information for SAA to be able to vet them. If they have access to such information, the MISS makes it mandatory to vet them.

446. Given that the vetting was not conducted among Board members, Ms Dlamini admitted that this would not have been compliant with MISS provisions if those Board members had had access to classified information. Although SSA's mandate to vet employees of organs of state is limited to employees with access to classified information, Ms Dlamini insisted that the meaning of the provision was that any employees of organs of state may be vetted, regardless of exposure to classified information.

447. Ms Olitzki provided an affidavit to the Commission in which she confirmed that, in the eight years she had served as the Head of SAA's Department for Financial Accounting, she had never once seen a document that could be deemed classified or top secret.

448. In Ms Dlamini's project plan, she stated that the vetting would ensure that "all classified and sensitive documents within SSA are assessed by personnel with valid security clearances". When it was put to Ms Dlamini that this goal could not be achieved if there was never an assessment of whether the vetted employees actually had access to classified or sensitive documents, she answered that their only role was to identify the risk posed by executives. This makes no sense in a context in which risk is a function of access to classified documents.

449. The project plan also stated one of its objectives as being "executive management support and buy-in". However, it was put to Ms Dlamini that she did not receive this support because she had to fly to Cape Town to meet with Ms Myeni about this issue and seven members of executive management resigned because of the vetting, and many others were unhappy about the level of personal information they had to provide to the SSA. Ms Dlamini said this did not signal a lack of buy-in and support because she never received any indication from the Acting CEO of SAA that there was a lack of support and the management employees who resigned could have resigned for any reason. She also stated that she had regular feedback meetings and would have known if there was a lack of support. However, she later admitted that she had only met with the members of the Board (who were not being vetted) and the Acting CEO, Mr Musa Zwane.

450. Ms Mpshe testified that many employees were suspicious and unhappy about the vetting process. Many were unwilling to cooperate as it was not a condition of employment. Ms Mpshe herself refused to comply because she was very suspicious of the reasons for the vetting and felt the questions were very personal and intrusive. She shared this position openly with the Acting CEO, Mr Zwane.

451. A curious feature of Ms Dlamini's reporting of the project plan for the vetting process is that she first met with the Chairperson, Ms Myeni, on 13 January 2016, and then with the Board the next day in Midrand to present the plan. Ms Dlamini claimed that the purpose of this first meeting was just to "observe protocol" – but she had to fly to Durban for this, and then fly back for the Board meeting in Midrand the next day. She explained that the purpose of the meeting was to get access to the resources she needed to conduct the vetting, like parking access, but she then admitted that it was, in fact, the Board and not Ms Myeni that could help her with obtaining that access. She therefore could not give a good reason why she had to meet alone with Ms Myeni.

452. Ms Dlamini testified that the vetting process had four stages. First, participants filled in administrative forms; second, there was fieldwork where vetting officers conducted interviews with references and any additional others; third, the participant would undergo a polygraph test; and, finally, analysis of the data to reach final conclusions.

453. Ms Olitzki's affidavit confirmed the extensive and invasive nature of the vetting process. The questions asked in the administrative phase included health, psychiatric treatment, education, substance abuse, romantic relationships and cohabitation arrangements; the forms required employees to identify referees who had known them for 5 to 20 years; details about any travel out of the country and those of the person's spouse; bank statements; loans; income and expenditure; and income sources.

454. During the interview phase, participants were asked wide-ranging questions, some of which were very personal and private and some of which appeared to be completely irrelevant to their work. The participants also knew that the interview would be followed with a polygraph test and so they were not able to withhold information. Ms Dlamini testified that the polygraph machine is only used when vetting is being conducted at a Top-Secret level or when there is a specific need to verify the reliability of the information gathered. Ms Dlamini stated that they were vetting SAA management on a Top-Secret level. While she admitted it was "standard practice" for senior management to be vetted, she did not know whether any of them would ever actually be in receipt of Top-Secret Information. These managers were also not advised that they were entitled to refuse the polygraph test.

455. Ms Dlamini stated that during the analysis stage, the evaluator would make recommendations on whether clearance ought to be granted or declined. She acknowledged that the vetting regulations provided that an applicant had to be notified in writing of the outcome of the vetting. She stated that she complied with this regulation by giving the outcomes to the Acting CEO, Mr Zwane, but not the individuals concerned. She testified that she told Mr Zwane verbally to give the outcomes to the individuals concerned and he undertook to do so. She was surprised to learn that at least two SAA managers were not told their outcomes.

456. Ms Dlamini prepared a report on the outcome of the vetting process. She concluded that the project was successful, with 70% of executive management and support staff vetted, 85% of cases receiving clearance, and "no strikes or serious disturbances reported since the project started." Despite this statement, Ms Dlamini persisted in claiming that she knew nothing about any unhappiness or resistance to the vetting. The report also claimed that "SAA reported an improvement on their revenue (about two billion turnover) as a result of the vetting project". She testified that she obtained this information from Mr Zwane. However, she admitted that he never told her the increase was "as a result" of the vetting process. When asked what causal relationship there could have been between vetting and revenue, she could not answer.

457. Ms Dlamini also could not explain in what way the vetting project had been "successful". She finally suggested that it may have contributed to a reduction in corruption but could not provide any concrete reason for why that would be or how that occurred and confirmed that they could not even terminate the employment of people who failed to obtain clearance.

458. The evidence presented to the Commission demonstrates that:

    458.1 One hundred and eighteen employees at SAA were subjected to an invasive, intrusive, and extremely personal vetting process

    458.2 The relevant legislation provides that these employees may only be vetted to determine the likelihood of them sharing classified information

    458.3 The objective of the vetting process was to ensure that employees did not disclose classified information

    458.4 It was never determined whether any of these employees ever received classified information during their employment, and some evidence suggests that these employees were never exposed to this type of information; and

    458.5 The vetting exercise was viewed by some of the SAA management as irregular. There was general unhappiness about it, resulting in the resignation of 7 executives. It had no measurable success or positive outcome for SAA.

459. It is therefore reasonable and fair to conclude that the vetting was pointless, harmful, and unlawful. Importantly, the two Ministers involved in the process and the SSA project manager were wrong about the SAA mandate for these types of operations. These findings are important for future SAA operations because they show a worrying and misguided internal understanding of the legal framework governing vetting.

Illegal use of SSA VIP protection detail

460. In addition to using the state security resources to vet and remove non-compliant SAA staff members, Ms Myeni used state security resources for her personal protection detail and to intimidate other Board members. The use of the detail was irregular and unlawful, a waste of state resources, and promoted state capture by creating a climate of fear and lack of transparency.

461. The Commission heard extensive evidence about the irregular redeployment of state security resources for the benefit of former President Zuma. This process of redeploying state resources from their proper and legitimate scope was at the expense of the public they were required to serve.

462. Mr Y, who was employed within the State Security Agency (SSA), submitted an affidavit to the Commission without his identity being revealed. However, he never gave oral evidence because he fell ill when it was time to testify. Ms K, who worked closely with Mr Y, gave evidence confirming most of the evidence in Mr Y's affidavit.

463. Mr Y testified about the Special Operations Unit within the SSA. This unit dealt with strategic projects that were very sensitive and involved using undercover SSA operatives. Mr Y stated that, before 2012, this unit was used where the links between the SSA or government would need to remain hidden and to allow for plausible deniability of the state's involvement. This could be counter-terrorism or transnational organised crime – matters that required the covert gathering of intelligence. Mr Y explained that after 2012, undercover operatives were redeployed to act as protection detail for former President Zuma. These members would act as a parallel protection to the Presidential Protection Unit. This meant they were exposed as SSA members and could therefore no longer perform covert undercover operations.

464. To carry out this parallel protection mandate, Mr Thulani Dlomo was appointed as GM of the new Special Operations Unit (SOI). All members of the covert structure were advised that they were no longer going to be working on identified focus areas, like transnational organised crime or counter-terrorism, but would instead be doing risk assessment and security directly related to President Zuma. This redeployment took place even though some of these operatives had been trained and resources had been invested in them being placed in long-term undercover positions. The Unit was shifted from operating under the DDG responsible for domestic operations, to the DG responsible for counter-intelligence operations. The unit had an estimated 30 permanent members and a further 70-170 members who were agents acting for the Unit but working in other law enforcement agencies.

465. Mr Y described the unit as a "parallel" structure because most of their functions were already performed by other SSA units or other stakeholder departments, but they were dedicated to performing this function specifically for the former President. For example, protection of VIPs (Ministers, members of Parliament) would normally be performed by the SAPS, but there was now a SSA unit dedicated to protecting the President. Mr Y testified that while some in the unit were existing operatives, most were new recruits, largely from KwaZulu-Natal. These new recruits were given training normally reserved for full SSA members. This included training in foreign countries in counter-intelligence and VIP protection and the gathering of intelligence.

466. Mr Y testified that the group of approximately 200 agents and members were allocated to specific people who were supporters of President Zuma and who "may have been facing certain difficulties" – and who would not be eligible for protection from SAPS. One of those people was Ms Myeni, though Mr Y confirmed that the SSA could not find any formal paperwork requesting protection. Mr Y discovered that Ms Myeni enjoyed these security benefits because of the work of the High-Level Review Panel investigation into SSA matters. The Panel Report explained that the SOI unit had a legitimate function prior to 2012, working on serious or sensitive operations of national importance, but thereafter there was "naked politicisation of intelligence".

467. The Report concluded that Mr Thulani Dlomo had been deployed by President Zuma, via the Minister of State Security, to head up the Special Operations Chief Directorate and effect the politicisation of the Unit and the SSA in general. It found that the Unit was "a law unto itself and directly served the political interest of the Executive. It also undertook intelligence operations which were clearly unconstitutional and illegal." This included deploying undercover operatives for VIP protection of various persons not entitled to this protection, including Ms Myeni. The Report found that the unit had become a parallel intelligence structure serving a faction of the ruling party, particularly the personal political interests of the sitting President. The Report concluded that this directly breached the Constitution, relevant legislation, and good government intelligence functioning. Mr Y confirmed all these findings.

468. Mr Y testified that, if an official believed their life was under threat, the normal process would be to put a request through the SSA security advisor allocated to a particular SOE or government department. This request would be channelled to the SAPS. Mr Y confirmed that no such process was followed with respect to Ms Myeni. Even though she did not lawfully qualify for protective VIP services, she nevertheless received such services from the SSA.

469. Mr Lingaraj Gary Moonsamy, the HOD: Group Security Services at SAA, provided an affidavit to the Commission that detailed the nature of the SSA security services provided to Ms Myeni. Mr Moonsamy stated that he provided Ms Myeni with the services of a close protection officer, together with three other members of the SAA security services for a period of four months. Thereafter, Ms Myeni obtained a new security detail. Mr Moonsamy did not know who appointed them or where they came from. Mr Moonsamy explained that Ms Myeni breached SAA policy by not making prior arrangements before arriving at SAA with her own security detail. Her security personnel refused to sign-in when they arrived at SAA, which also violated SAA policy. Mr Y testified that, if these security personnel had been legitimately deployed by SSA, they would have had no problem signing-in. Mr Moonsamy provided the Commission with CCTV footage of some of the personnel accompanying Ms Myeni to SAA and Mr Y positively identified one of them as Zama Ntolo, a member of the Special Operations Unit of the SSA.

470. Mr Moonsamy included in his affidavit an incident report regarding the former CFO of SAA, Mr Wolf Meyer. The report stated that Ms Myeni had instructed security personnel accompanying her to SAA to confiscate a recording device (concealed in a pen) from him. In addition, Mr Moonsamy stated that his predecessor, Mr Jona de Waal was advised by former CEO Nico Bezuidenhout and Mr Meyer, that Ms Myeni's security personnel from SSA would confiscate laptops and cell phones from people before they went into meetings, on Ms Myeni's instruction. This is confirmed in an incident report compiled by an SSA member explaining that, before the meeting started, they had to gather up all electronic equipment. Mr Y testified that it was not in the mandate of SSA members to confiscate electronic equipment.

471. Mr Eric Zamokwakhe Mtolo of the Special Operations Unit of the SSA provided the Commission with an affidavit confirming that he did accompany Ms Myeni to SAA on one occasion, as captured in the CCTV footage Mr Moonsamy gave the Commission. Mr Mtolo stated that he was summoned by Mr Dlomo, together with another member of the SSA by the name of "Gerald". Upon entering the meeting venue, he found that Ms Myeni was also there. Mr Mtolo said he had met Ms Myeni previously because he was asked to assist her in tracing the cell phone number of a person she claimed was harassing her. Mr Dlomo instructed Mr Mtolo to speed up the investigation into Ms Myeni's harassment claim and asked him to accompany Ms Myeni to SAA's offices at Airways Park and to wait outside a meeting room where Ms Myeni would be attending a meeting. Mr Mtolo and "Gerald" did as instructed. A few minutes into the meeting, Ms Myeni walked out with a recording device pen, which she placed together with several cell phones that were on the desk. Ms Myeni told Mr Mtolo that she had taken the pen from someone in the meeting and Mr Mtolo assumed the phones were similarly from members attending the meeting. Mr Mtolo was concerned that he was supposed to look after the devices, which was not his job. Mr Mtolo briefed Mr Dlomo in person about the incident. At the end of the meeting, Ms Myeni attempted to give Mr Mtolo the recording pen, but he refused to take it. After briefing Mr Dlomo, he never involved Mr Mtolo again in any of Ms Myeni's matters.

472. There is accordingly overwhelming and corroborated evidence that Ms Myeni was unlawfully benefitting from SSA resources and enjoyed the protection of undercover operatives. This reveals how powerful Ms Myeni was and how close she was to President Zuma. The extent of Ms Myeni's proximity to former President Zuma is also reflected in her dealings with Bosasa and in relation to Eskom.

473. However, as far as SAA is concerned, it appears that Ms Myeni operated with a level of suspicion about SAA management that is not normal behaviour for a Chairperson of the Board of a public entity. Ms Myeni operated SAA under a cloud of fear, intimidation, secrecy, and paranoia, when a public entity should be operated transparently and with accountability to the South African people who fund it.

474. During her evidence before the Commission, Ms Myeni was asked about the security services she used, whether it was a lawful deployment of SSA resources, and whether she ordered the confiscation of Board members' electronic devices with the assistance of SSA officers. She refused to answer these questions and invoked the privilege against self-incrimination. She was also asked about the vetting process at SAA, the lawfulness of the process, why it was necessary in circumstances where employees were not exposed to classified information, and why Board members were excluded from the process if they were more likely than anyone to be exposed to confidential or sensitive information. It was put to Ms Myeni that Board members were likely excluded because of the highly personal and invasive nature of the questions. She was also asked about Ms Nhantsi's evidence regarding Ms Olitzki and the use of vetting results to remove employees Ms Myeni wanted removed. Ms Myeni, once again, refused to answer these questions and invoked the privilege against self-incrimination.

475. Ms Myeni's refusal to be accountable for her actions is regrettable. She clearly received favours from the SSA to which she was not lawfully entitled. She employed those resources during her time as SAA Board Chairperson for ulterior purposes.

The new board – but retention of Ms Myeni

476. Ms Kwinana resigned from the Board on 23 August 2016. She said that her reason for resigning was that Minister Gordhan had an issue with funding and wanted new Board members. The reasons stated in her letter of resignation were that National Treasury was not issuing the guarantee to SAA, which resulted in a failure to finalise the audited financial statements, and the Minister wanted to appoint a new Board so that the guarantee could be issued. Ms Kwinana testified that she could sense the Minister wanted the whole Board to resign because he did not have a good relationship with the Chair, Ms Myeni, and the Board. Despite this, Ms Myeni was retained on the new Board. According to minutes of a Cabinet meeting on 24 August 2016, Mr Gordhan motivated for the appointment of Ms Myeni as a non-executive director and Chairperson of SAA for a further two years.

477. Minister Gordhan was asked to provide an affidavit to the Commission explaining why he made this recommendation. He explained that the decision was driven primarily by former President Zuma and his insistence that Ms Myeni be retained as the Chair of SAA. He said that, as a member of the executive, he was constrained by the explicit wishes of President Zuma. He sought to mitigate the harm that would be caused by her retention with the appointment of other directors to the Board whom he considered to be people who were fit, independent, qualified, and with integrity "who would be able to constrain the adverse impact of Ms Myeni's leadership going forward". He stated: "It was clear to me that the then Head of State would not permit her removal, so I worked to surround her with competent and qualified Directors".

478. Minister Gordhan also asked that the Commission call upon the President to explain > why there was unyielding insistence that Ms Myeni be retained as the SAA Chair for three terms, despite what is known about various decisions she took that harmed the airline's interests. Examples include the notorious Airbus transaction and her direct interference in the management of SAA to scuttle a very lucrative transaction with Emirates Airlines.

479. The Commission was not able to question Mr Zuma about this because he walked out of the Commission hearing on 19 November 2021 in breach of a summons and thereafter refused to appear before the Commission. Mr Zuma fled the Commission completely without any valid reason and without justification. He did so to avoid having to answer questions in the Commission about matters such as this. He did not want to account to the nation. He knew he was not going to have answers to many of the questions that were bound to be put to him.

480. Minister Gordhan explained that to further mitigate the harm Ms Myeni could do on the Board, he proposed to Cabinet that there be an annual review of her performance.

481. Minister Gordhan stated that, on 12 December 2014, the DPE relinquished the role of oversight of SAA and National Treasury took over that role. At that time National Treasury was led by then finance Minister, Mr Nhlanhla Nene.

482. Ms Myeni's initial three-year term on the Board would have expired before October 2015. However, she remained on the Board without any reappointment process, until Cabinet made the decision to retain her for a further year. Minister Gordhan was asked to explain how this could have occurred. Minister Gordhan's explanation did not make much sense. He stated that because the President wanted Ms Myeni retained, no further appointments could occur without his consent on this basis. However, this does not explain why she was not formally reappointed to this position when her term ended. This is particularly problematic because, under SAA's MOI, a director may only serve three terms on the Board.

483. If Ms Myeni had indeed been properly appointed for a year in 2015 until 2016, that would have been her third term in office and Cabinet could not have reappointed her in 2016. According to his affidavit, Minister Gordhan took the view that because the MOI allows for three terms of a maximum period of three years each, if the total period for which Mr Myeni served on the SAA Board was less than nine years, this was compliant with the MOI. This does not, however, appear to be the correct interpretation of the term limit. A term has a maximum of three years but if the term was not three years long, the MOI did not qualify the term limit. It remained three consecutive terms.

484. As outlined above, Ms Myeni remained as Chairperson of the SAA Board despite:

    484.1 The majority of the SAA Board raising serious concerns about her leadership in early 2014

    484.2 Former Finance Minister Nene's concerns about her lack of appreciation of the impact that the Airbus swap transaction would have on SAA finances; and 484.3 Former Finance Minister Gordhan's concerns that she should not be retained on the Board after 2016.

485. Both former Ministers Nene and Gordhan attribute Ms Myeni's retention on the Board to the personal preference of former President Zuma. This preference appears to have been more important to the former President than the proper governance or management of SAA. By 2016, there appears to have been a consensus at Treasury that Ms Myeni was a liability to the organisation and had already caused it severe harm and financial loss. Notwithstanding these concerns, the former President insisted that Ms Myeni be retained in her position at any cost, and with complete disregard for the welfare of SAA. His Cabinet followed suit and voted to retain her beyond 2016.

Auditors

486. The Commission heard evidence from two primary witnesses on the activities of the auditors of SAA over the period set out above in which Ms Myeni was the Chair of the Board and Ms Kwinana was the Chair of the ARC.

487. The Commission also received an affidavit from Mr Simon Mantell, a chartered accountant. He detailed the engagements he had with SAA when his company, Mantelli's, bid for a dry snack tender in 2013. Mr Mantell's affidavit raised serious concerns about the auditing work that had been done at SAA by both its internal and external auditors. This issue merited further investigation by the Commission to establish whether the role that auditors played at SAA contributed in any way to what unfolded at the airline.

488. The first witness was Mr Polani Sokombela, a business executive at the AG's office. Mr Sokombela testified that for the 2016/17 financial year, the AG took over the audit from a private audit firm, PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC), after it had held the mandate to audit SAA for five years, together with its joint-audit partner, Nkonki Inc. Mr Sokombela testified that the state in which the AG found SAA's records and accounting practices was dismal. He also testified to some of the very serious shortcomings in PWC and Nkonki's joint audits, which may have enabled state capture, corruption, and irregularities to remain undetected at SAA for many years.

489. The second witness was Mr Pule Joseph Mothibe, the audit partner at PWC responsible for the SAA audit for the 2013/2014 to 2015/2016 financial years. His evidence clearly demonstrated that PWC's primary interest was in the financial aspect of the audit. It was evident that PWC was either not equipped to assess, or was just not particularly concerned about, the peculiar requirements and obligations attendant on a public entity and ensuring that irregularities that contravened the PFMA and other procurement legislation were carefully investigated and reported on.

490. This section of the report focuses on three main problematic aspects of the PWC joint audits with Nkonki over that five-year period:

    490.1 First, the audit appointment itself was irregular from the second year onwards

    490.2 Second, Ms Kwinana's possible conflict of interest with PWC was not discovered; and 490.3 Third, PWC failed to devise audit procedures to detect corruption or irregular tenders in some major transactions.

Irregular award of audit

491. Mr Sokombela explained that, in 2011/2012, SAA consulted the AG regarding the appointment of PWC and Nkonki as joint auditors for the 2011/2012 financial year. The AG provided its concurrence. The request for concurrence was for a one-year appointment, but in fact PWC and Nkonki remained on as joint auditors for a period of five years, until the AG took over the audit in the 2016/2017 audit year. Despite the irregularity of the subsequent four years, SAA did consult the AG and sought a concurrence each year thereafter until 2015/2016. The AG nevertheless still granted its concurrence. Mr Sokombela explained that this was because, at the time, the AG's processes for granting concurrence were not particularly well-developed and the AG did not investigate the regularity of the process of appointment when it granted concurrence – as it does now.

492. Regarding the irregularity of the contract duration, Mr Mothibe insisted that it would be economically unviable for a firm to audit SAA for one year only, given the size and complexity of the audit. This may very well be correct because it will take time for a new audit firm to come to grips with the business of a new client. Indeed, that was Ms Kwinana's evidence as well and the sentiment was echoed by Mr Sokombela. Ms Kwinana was shown the report and recommendations from the ARC where the committee recommended the tender only go out for one year. Despite serving on that committee, she testified that this was a "very big mistake". She claimed that ARC never made that recommendation. However, her evidence on this cannot be correct in the face of the documents presented to her which recorded this as the decision. These included the ARC minutes and the recommendation report from ARC to the Board.

493. The fact of the matter is that PWC responded to an RFP for a one-year audit. This was put to Mr Mothibe and he responded that the firm would have understood the tender was for five years. However, Mr Mothibe could not adequately explain how PWC could have thought that from a clearly-defined scope of work in the RFP. He went so far as to say "the procurement process is run by South African Airways and not by PWC ... so I am not too sure I can speculate in that regard." This displays a concerning attitude from the very team that was supposed to detect irregularities in SAA procurement. Ultimately, Mr Mothibe's explanation was that PWC's impression was based on an industry practice where auditors are appointed for five years, subject to reappointment at the company's AGM, as per the Companies Act. Given that Mr Mothibe confirmed that it was part of the audit procedure to review BAC minutes, he was asked why PWC did not pick up the BAC minutes in 2012 that raised concerns about the PWC appointment when there had been no procurement process. Mr Mothibe said that he could not speak to that as he was not in the team in 2012/2013.

494. Mr Mothibe accepted in his evidence that the PFMA required the audit service to go through proper process; that no such proper process had occurred after year one of the PWC/Nkonki audits; and that irregular expenditure is expenditure that is incurred without proper legal processes being followed. He conceded that, if he had seen that minute, he would have been concerned. However, he refused to accept that PWC's fees over the next four years would constitute irregular expenditure under the PFMA.

495. PWC and Nkonki were paid a total of R69 760 888 for the years 2013-2016. This constituted irregular expenditure, none of which was disclosed in the financial statements of those years.

Conflict of interest

496. Mr Mothibe confirmed that Ms Kwinana, the Chair of the ARC and a non-executive member of the SAA Board, was a director of the auditing firm Kwinana & Associates. PWC had bid together with Ms Kwinana in respect of three tenders in late 2014 and early 2015. One bid was successful and resulted in PWC paying Kwinana & Associates R6 187 799.90 in 2016. Mr Mothibe testified that was the policy of PWC to guard against possible conflicts of interests in these types of joint business relationships.

497. PWC had made enquiries with Ms Kwinana about the value of their joint business contracts, and whether it met the threshold. To assess whether a joint business relationship with a client or a person from a client is material and significant for purposes of conflict of interest in the auditing work PWC does for the client, PWC considers the business relationship material if it exceeds 5% of the business partners' revenue. Mr Mothibe testified that this was in line with the International Ethics Standards Board for Accounts (IESBA) Code. However, PWC departed from the IEBSA Code in this regard. Mr Mothibe was unable to point to where in the policy PWC was permitted to depart from its own materiality standard and apply that of its partner.

498. The email communications from Kwinana & Associates, per Ms Lumka Goniwe (Ms Kwinana's daughter) in 2015 stated that they expected to earn about R 4.1 million in fees on the joint bid (it later transpired the fees were in fact R 6.1 million in 2016) and that this was not significant because the firm's turnover in 2015 exceeded R 50 million. The investigations of the Commission with SARS revealed that Kwinana & Associates' tax returns showed an annual turnover in that period of only R10 567 581. Mr Mothibe testified that, if he had known this, he would have been concerned. The fees PWC paid to Kwinana & Associates in 2016 were R 6.1 million and the turnover that year was approximately R 21 million according to the tax returns. Mr Mothibe was asked whether PWC would have partnered with Kwinana & Associates had it known this, since it would have compromised PWC's independence. He confirmed that PWC would not have partnered with them.

499. Ms Kwinana was asked whether it was problematic that she was in a business relationship with PWC and did not recuse herself from the decision-making or disclose her personal interest. Ms Kwinana refused to accept that there was any problem with this. She claimed that there was no need to disclose because, while she was in business with PWC, the benefit ultimately came from their client and so was not a personal interest under the Companies Act. It was put to Ms Kwinana that her firm derived a benefit from the proceeds that flowed from the joint business relationship. She still refused to accept that this was a form of personal interest that needed to be disclosed or that would compromise independence.

500. Ms Kwinana confirmed that Kwinana & Associates were paid R 6.1 million in fees from the joint business relationship it enjoyed with PWC in respect of a tender with PRASA. She was also aware of the 10% threshold above which PWC would not enter a transaction with Kwinana & Associates as a business partner, given that Ms Kwinana was also part of an audit client, SAA.

501. It was put to Ms Kwinana that her daughter, on behalf of Kwinana & Associates, had advised PWC that its revenue was R50 million in a year where potential fees with PWC were R4.1 million, when in fact the tax returns of Kwinana & Associates in 2015 showed revenue of approximately R10.5 million. Ms Kwinana was asked whether her daughter misstated the turnover to PWC. Ms Kwinana responded that she could not confirm this. Her unwillingness to accept that either the tax returns were incorrect or her daughter's communication to PWC was incorrect reflected her general dishonesty.

502. The Commission cannot definitively conclude from this evidence alone that there was bias or intentional wrongdoing in the initial appointment of PWC, but the Commission can conclude that the reappointments were irregular. However, this is evidence that SAA, and in particular Ms Kwinana, did not pay regard to due processes. This is consistent with her evidence regarding the AAR tender. As SAAT chair, the Chair of the SAA ARC and a non-executive member of the SAA Board, Ms Kwinana displayed a fundamental lack of appreciation of conflict-of-interest policies and processes. Avoiding conflicts of interest is one of the cornerstones of corporate governance and public accountability. It is of great concern that a professional chartered accountant would not accept this principle and would conduct herself without adherence to its requirements. Unfortunately, the Commission must conclude that either Ms Kwinana had no clue at all about contract processes or she knew but acted dishonestly. The Commission takes the view that Ms Kwinana should never again be appointed as a director of an SOE.

Inadequate audit procedures

Auditor's role and duties

503. The Auditor General is a Chapter 9 constitutional institution. It is therefore independent and accountable only to Parliament. Section 4(3) of the Public Audit Act 25 of 2004 empowers the AG to audit SAA but it is not obliged to do so. The AG will decide to do so if there is sufficient capacity. Mr Sokombela explained the legislative and policy obligations under which SAA operated with respect to internal audit controls and procedures. He testified that under the PFMA, an SOE is required to be equipped with a fully capacitated and skilled internal audit body; it is also required to ensure that it has comprehensive internal controls, or policies and procedures, to guarantee the proper functioning of the entity's financial administration. These are known as Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) and they are designed to prevent irregularity, fraud and wastage. The procedures require checks and balances such as the segregation of duties between those procuring goods and services, and those evaluating the services. As to the role of the external auditors of a public entity like an SOE, Mr Sokombela testified that their role is to provide the independent assurance to the users of the annual report or the financial statements of the SOE. They are also required to provide assurance on applicable laws and regulations to ensure that there has been compliance with those laws. Mr Sokombela also testified that external auditors are not tasked with identifying and reporting on fraud and corruption. The aim of the audit process is to express a fair presentation of the financial statements and to identify any material findings on legislative compliance and key performance indicators in the annual report. However, the audit process could identify possible fraud which should be reported to management.

504. Section 55(2)(b) of the PFMA provides that the annual report and financial statements of a public entity must include any material losses through criminal conduct and any irregular expenditure, and fruitless and wasteful expenditure, that occurred during the financial year. Mr Mothibe confirmed that the role of the auditor in a public entity to includes identifying irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure. He also confirmed that part of the audit procedures designed for the SAA audit was to review Board meeting minutes and other relevant Board committees and the BAC, for example. Mr Mothibe testified that, while it is not a requirement under the formal auditing standards to review media reports as part of this process, the PWC/Nkonki team did consider media reporting "to the extent we could find" them. Indeed, in PWC's audit report in respect of the 2015 SAA Group audit, it states that "in accordance with the risk-based audit approach, we stay up to date on media reports pertaining to SAA and to evaluate the effect thereof in the financial statements, identify risks and therefore update our audit approach on a continual basis when necessary."

Inadequate internal controls and procedures

505. The AG took over the audit of SAA for the 2016/2017 year, after the five years of PWC and Nkonki's joint audit. During the joint audit period, the audit opinion was clean and unqualified every year.

506. The AG's audit in the 2016/2017 financial year differed markedly from previous years' audit reports. The audit opinion regressed from an unqualified audit opinion with no material findings to a qualified audit opinion with findings on compliance with legislation as well as findings on performance information or predetermined objectives. In other words, it regressed from a clean to a qualified audit with significant findings.

507. This significant deviation from past opinions and findings was not simply a shift in SAA in that new financial year. As part of the audit process, the AG was responsible for confirming or reviewing the "opening balances". During that review, the AG determined that it could not rely on the previous audit of PWC and Nkonki because of a lack of supporting documentation and they could not test how the opening balances had been determined. The AG had to perform additional procedures where management was asked to prove the validity of the contents of the balance sheets. Vital documents were missing and other critical source documents were not in the audit files.

508. The AG observed very poor internal controls at SAA, including severe problems with record keeping (as Dr Dahwa also confirmed). Mr Sokombela explained that there was an incredibly weak control environment at the time. More than 40% of the positions at SAA were filled in an acting capacity. The Board was under-capacitated and it did not have any aviation experts. The key executive management positions of CEO, CFO, Chief Commercial Officer and Chief Strategy Officer were all vacant at the time, and the Chief Procurement Officer was on suspension. SAA officials also lacked appropriate competencies, particularly in preparing of financial statements and SCM.

509. Mr Sokombela testified that compliance with legislation was a critically weak area at SAA, and there were many instances of irregular, as well as fruitless and wasteful expenditure. In addition, no consequences were imposed on individuals for the multiple transgressions of proper processes.

510. Mr Sokombela also reported that the legal division and the office of the company secretary were severely under capacitated. The legal department was incapable of ensuring that tenders were awarded in accordance with process and that the contract was ultimately signed with the successful service provider. There was no way to hold suppliers accountable. Nevertheless, these suppliers were simply paid by SAA. Mr Sokombela testified that this practice must have been going on for years. SAA had a very large contract register but most of those contracts could not be located. The scale of the problem indicated that it should have been picked up by previous auditors.

511. The problems with the company secretary also presented a risk to SAA. Mr Sokombela testified that the AG noted that, despite the DTI and National Treasury notifying the Board not to take decisions in conformity with the 30% set aside policy, the Board had continued to implement that policy. The AG could not understand why the company secretary had not warned the Board against this course of action.

512. The record-keeping problem at SAA was so bad that it sometimes took three-months for SAA to comply with a request. This resulted in a significant limitation in the scope of the audit that could be performed. This was particularly so with respect to SCM and assets. A limitation of scope is a qualification the auditors make in their report.

513. The AG concluded that SAA needed intervention in various areas, including financial and performance management and governance. A lack of governance led to a lack of properly documented policies and procedures. There was no central repository of policies and the policies that were available, were outdated. These critical systemic problems should also have been apparent to any auditor in previous years.

514. Mr Sokombela explained that it was also difficult to make any findings on SAA's performance because there was no head of strategy at the business. He said that there were no reliable key performance indicators or ways of measuring whether the company had met its objectives. The Information Technology environment and infrastructure at SAA was ineffective. There was no coherent Technology Governance Framework that would allow for effective alignment of processes, projects, and structures to support its business. Importantly, the risk management processes lacked maturity and effective oversight – this included the ARC.

515. Mr Sokombela testified that it was cause for concern that a subsequent audit opinion came to such a different conclusion. This is because, while different audit firms may employ different methodologies, they should all conform to uniform audit standards. Indeed, in this case, the AG even prepared statements that corrected errors made in the previous years' financial statements. The accounting standards provide guidance about how those errors need to be corrected in the following financial statements.

516. In the 2017 annual report, SAA disclosed approximately R125 million in irregular expenditure – whereas in the 2016 financial year, only R5 million had been disclosed as irregular. Even the R125 million disclosed in 2017 was found to be an incomplete assessment which resulted in a qualified audit.

517. Mr Sokombela was asked for his opinion as to whether the condition he found SAA in for the 2016/2017 year was reconcilable with the clean audits that had been given for five successful years. Mr Sokombela said that > if the situation at SAA before we took back the audit was the same as the situation that we found SAA to be at, then [we] would have expected then that the previous auditors have identified those findings and maybe perhaps the audit opinion should not have been clean.

518. It was evident from Mr Sokombela's evidence that the problems at SAA were "systemic". He concluded that the "culture" at SAA was "the wrong way of doing things".

519. Mr Mothibe's evidence indicated that he saw PWC's "primary role" to be to assess whether the financial statements fairly represented the entity's financial position and conformed with general accepted accounting practices. Mr Mothibe testified that one of the biggest things on their mind was whether SAA was a going concern, and they were preoccupied with this issue. So, while Mr Mothibe conceded that, when PWC audits an SOE, it is obliged to consider matters of compliance, he appeared to consider this a secondary feature of the auditor's role. He also did not regard his role in auditing a public entity as materially different to auditing a private entity. He said that "there are no additional requirements in terms of state-owned enterprises because all the standards that require you to look at applicable law and regulations cover that". He accepted that, in the case of a public enterprise, the PFMA was the relevant legislation.

520. This difference in the AG's approach compared to that of PWC/Nkonki is evident from the vastly differing assessments of irregular and fruitless and wasteful expenditure in their respective audits of SAA. In the AG's final management report in the 2016/2017 year, the AG spent some time on issues surrounding procurement and SCM at SAA. He produced a table of sample transactions and identified which of these were irregular. They found that 121 of the 140 contracts were irregular. That is a total of R6.6 billion out of R7.6 billion. Mr Sokombela explained that these irregularities included non-compliance with competitive tender processes, non-compliance with the PFMA and non-compliance with the PPPFA, including awarding contracts that were inconsistent with the terms of the tender. Mr Sokombela stated that 103 contracts (86% of the tenders, amounting to R 2.4 billion) were categorised as "irregular expenditure" and not simply non-compliance. Mr Sokombela testified that he believed that this was representative of the overall population of tenders at SAA.

521. The AG report noted that Management disclosed R40.4 million of fruitless and wasteful expenditure, and irregular expenditure of R125.9 million. This must be compared to the figure of R5.4 million for irregular expenditure and R7.3 million for fruitless and wasteful expenditure that PWC and Nkonki had reached in the 2015/2016 financial year. It was put to Mr Sokombela that if the AG's audit was correct, then it is difficult to think that the 2015/2016 financial year would have had such low figures and that the previous auditors would not have picked up any significant irregular or wasteful expenditure. Mr Sokombela agreed. He also agreed that, in such a case, they could not have issued a clean audit. Mr Sokombela testified that he engaged repeatedly with PWC and Nkonki regarding the previous audits. He noted that his team realised while reviewing the audits that there was not much work done on the compliance and SCM areas.

522. When Mr Mothibe was asked about this during his evidence, he explained that, since the AG was an expert in SCM, procurement and contract management, "they would be doing a bit more work in that area". This explanation is not satisfactory. If private audit firms, like PWC, are not equipped or experienced enough to perform this task, then they should not be tendering for such work. The evidence that the AG has special expertise does not serve to limit or reduce PWC's obligations of an SOE. The fact of the matter is that PWC failed to perform its job to the standards required of it.

523. On 18 January 2018, after the AG had completed the SAA audit, it convened a meeting with SAA's previous auditors. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the audit outcomes and their regression since the previous year. At this meeting, the AG warned PWC that they would want to ask about the stark discrepancy between five years of clean audits and the limited and qualified audit for 2016/2017. When this was put to Mr Mothibe, he claimed that a lot of this could be explained by the peculiar circumstances during the 2016/2017 year. PWC was ultimately comfortable that the qualifications were peculiar to that year and that the financial statements were free of material misstatements in the preceding years.

524. Mr Mothibe was asked whether PWC and Nkonki were satisfied that the SAA internal controls were adequate from 2014-2016. In response, Mr Mothibe claimed that his team did identify "diversions" from regular practice, and they notified management of these "deviations" but they had not "elevate[d] that part to the audit report as required". Mr Mothibe accepted that they should have elevated the issue to the audit report but had failed to do so. He testified that, after reviewing the work again and considering the records, "it became clear that we had erred and we should have elevated some of those items of non-compliance ... to the ... report".

525. As set out above, Mr Mothibe agreed that it was necessary to completely reperform the processes that would have been followed in the relevant tender award to audit SCM compliance at an SOE. Mr Mothibe said that "where there were challenges and there were deviations, we found them and we raised them with management and with the audit committee". During his evidence, he accepted that PWC/Nkonki had failed to elevate this issue to the audit report. Mr Mothibe was asked how it could have been that, after his team had discovered that the tender files were missing, and notified management about the issue, the matter was then not taken any further. He was asked whether he considered this a dereliction of duty. When he was pressed, he conceded that it was an "omission" of duty. Regardless of the semantics, the fact remains that PWC was not in any position to decide about SAA's compliance with legislation if it did not even have at its disposal the records that it would have needed to make this assessment. It is not adequate for auditors of SOEs to alert management and Board committees to the problems that they themselves have created and are incentivised to conceal. Mr Mothibe agreed that the audit opinion, insofar as it talks about compliance and laws and regulations, was incorrect. He attributed this to "an error in judgment" and conceded that they "should have identified those matters as material areas of non-compliance."

526. When Mr Mothibe testified at the Commission, there was a pending case of alleged professional misconduct against him and Ms Thuto Masasa before the IRBA concerning their SAA audits. By the time Mr Mothibe testified in July 2020, he had consented to the IRBA making an order against him of non-compliance for failing to identify non-compliance with legislation and internal control deficiencies for the SAA audits from 2014-2016. He conceded there was inadequate reporting on compliance and irregular expenditure. He also acknowledged that the amount stipulated for irregular expenditure must therefore have been inaccurate in the audit report.

527. The deficiencies in PWC's audits ought to have been apparent from the meetings with the AG in late 2016 and early 2017 as well as from the review of the results of the 2016/2017 audit report. It was, therefore, put to Mr Mothibe that "the passage of events suggests ... that for two years ... PWC was content not to come clean about the errors it had made". It was also put to him that it was only when there was public disclosure through the evidence led in this Commission that "you then had another think and have made the concessions you have made."

528. During his evidence Mr Mothibe was also asked to account for some of the specific transactions that his team had failed to report as reportable irregularities during their audit of SAA. Each of these is dealt with below.

Air Chefs

529. Mr Mothibe testified that he was aware of the SAA Board decision to cancel the LSG Skychefs award and to give it to Air Chefs. He testified that after reviewing the decision, he did not think that there were any reportable irregularities. No tender process was followed in this awarding. It was a decision to insource rather than to award to an outside party. When Mr Mothibe was asked whether such a decision was lawful under the PFMA, he stated that a decision to insource does not require a tender process. It was put to Mr Mothibe that under the Promotion of Administrative Justice Act 3 of 2000 (PAJA) and administrative law, a state entity cannot run a tender process and make the administrative decision to award that contract, communicate the decision to the successful party, and then unilaterally withdraw the decision. Mr Mothibe responded that PAJA was not one of the Acts that the auditors considered.

530. It was further put to him that the legal department of SAA had warned its Board of this consequence. This warning was reflected in the Board minutes. Mr Mothibe stated that he did not recall considering those minutes, or those portions of them. If he did, it would not have been at that level of detail. Mr Mothibe conceded that reading the resolution of the Board, which stated that the tender award would be "retracted" and the "catering contract be awarded to Air Chefs without going through the bidding process", should have "sounded an alarm" to the auditors. Mr Mothibe admitted that, when reading the record of the decision in its entirety, it did raise questions of possible financial loss and exposure to SAA from retracting a tender and the other obligations the Board had.

531. In his statement to the Commission, Mr Mothibe assumed that the Board was not permitted to award the contract to Air Chefs and retract it from LSG Skychefs without any process. He said even if that assumption were correct, PWC would still not have found any reportable irregularity. This is because PWC "would have required evidence that the SAA Board took this decision with the intention of breaching a law or regulation or that it acted negligently, which evidence I did not have at the time." This is inconsistent with how Section 45 of the Auditing Professions Act 26 of 2005 defines a reportable irregularity. After some debate, Mr Mothibe eventually conceded this point, but maintained that insourcing did not require any processes and so insourcing in this manner was lawful. However, he conceded that assuming that the decision was an unlawful act, the requirements of material financial loss were met. He also conceded that the Board's decision constituted a breach of a fiduciary duty because the Board acted against SAA's internal legal advice and its decision was not based on what was in the best interests of the company. In the light of this concession, the Board's decision ought to have been reported to IRBA as a reportable irregularity. Had this taken place, management would have been required to account to its auditors for the decision.

532. The value of that type of accountability cannot be underestimated given all that we now know about what was going on at SAA towards the end of 2015. As stated above, a few days after the SAA Board had taken the decision to cancel the LSG Skychefs award, Dr Dahwa was subjected to eight hours of abuse from Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni for refusing to sign letters of award to facilitate the unlawful 30% set aside policy.

533. In addition, Ms Mpshe, who had stood up to the Board over this very decision to cancel the LSG Skychefs award, was eventually charged with insubordination for her conduct. Had SAA's auditors just done their job and the correct attention been drawn to this unlawful decision, some of the devastating events of the next many months at SAA may well have been different.

Swissport ground handling

534. Part of the AG's findings was that the Swissport ground handling contract concluded on 14 March 2016 constituted irregular expenditure. The contract was identified as part of the AG's "specific selection" of transactions during the risk assessment phase of the audit. This was because the transaction had been in the media. One of the AG's great concerns was that the tender took four years between the closing date of the award and the date the contract was actually awarded by the Board. Then, when a further contract for five years was concluded in 2016, there was no new tender process.

535. Related to the Swissport transaction was the 30% BEE set aside policy that SAA sought to impose on Swissport. The Auditor General found as follows regarding SAA's attempts to implement the 30% set-aside policy:

> Based on the information provided to the AGSA, the practice of allocating or selecting or setting aside of 30% of the contract award to BBBEE suppliers is not in accordance with SAA's SCM Policy or any specific procurement legal framework and section 217 of the Constitution.

536. Mr Sokombela noted that the correspondence from the BEE Commissioner and the National Treasury regarding the unlawfulness of the policy was dispatched in September 2015. He also noted that a set aside policy was not a requirement or condition of the tender that Swissport was awarded. Nevertheless, the AG found a memorandum prepared by the CFO of SAA in 2016 about the selection of the BBBEE firm for the Swissport contract, in circumstances where there did not appear to be any selection process. As a result of SAA and Swissport being unable to agree on this issue, SAA terminated Swissport's service on 16 February 2016. Then an agreement was reached for a five-year contract. The AG was particularly concerned about why these discussions were conducted off record.

537. The AG also raised concerns about JM Aviation, Swissport's ultimate BEE partner, having been appointed without any selection process. There was a common director between Swissport and JM Aviation, which concerned the AG. That was Mr Ndzeku. This was a conflict of interest, and was not disclosed in the SAA records.

538. Part of the recommendations flowing from this was to investigate the selection process of JM Aviation and to disclose irregular expenditure of R 362 million arising from the AG's findings. The AG also concluded:

> ... with regards to the off the record meeting held with Swissport and management, that will not be accepted as the auditors cannot validate the discussions held because they were not recorded. This is an indicator of fraud and further investigation must be done.

539. Mr Mothibe testified that the Swissport contract did not come to the audit team's attention. When asked why the contract was not part of the transactions reviewed by the team, he testified that they were not provided with minutes of the relevant Board meeting. Swissport was a longstanding ground handling service provider with the result that the contract did not stand out. He said that the amount was high (R 1.8 billion), so it probably went through Board approvals and "obviously the expectation is that it would have gone to the Board after it had gone through the necessary approval processes within South African Airways." This answer is inadequate. The fact that the contract was of such a significant monetary value was a further reason why the auditors should have included it in the sample of transactions to be considered.

540. It was necessary to probe further with Mr Mothibe why this contract was not reviewed by PWC. Mr Mothibe testified that he agreed with Mr Sokombela's evidence that, in the audit risk assessment process, the auditor identifies contracts that raise red flags. Mr Mothibe was informed that the AG had identified this contract as one such transaction because there was litigation around it and the contract had taken four years to conclude after the award of the tender. Asked why none of these factors raised a red flag for PWC, Mr Mothibe responded again that Swissport was a long-standing service provider and it was being paid amounts consistent with previous years and so there were no red flags. This type of answer seems to indicate a frame of mind or approach to auditing that may be appropriate in detecting irregular activity in a private audit client. However, it would not be appropriate in a public entity that is obliged to regularly put out to tender their contracts in a transparent competitive process.

541. Swissport had been providing a service to SAA without a contract for three of the years that PWC was auditing SAA. Mr Mothibe testified that he was not aware that Swissport had been providing a service for a long time without a contract. He conceded that it would have been of concern to him to learn that and it would have been something he would have wanted to interrogate further.

542. Ernst & Young performed a review of SAA contracts in the second half of 2015 for the purpose of evaluating procurement and contract management at SAA and had flagged the Swissport contract as a concern. His attention was then drawn to the fact that a draft version of the report, addressed to a Mr Nick Linnell, had been provided to the SAA Board on 10 December 2015. The report considered the Swissport contract and concluded that "Swissport's contract is a month to month basis. SAA is failing to realise the costs savings as a result of delays in entering into a contract with Swissport. The delays will result in SAA overpaying for the ground handling services ... SAA has failed to realise cost savings of R92 936 578."

543. It was then pointed out to Mr Mothibe's attention that the media was already reporting on Ernst & Young's review findings at that stage. The Business Day newspaper reported on 9 December 2015 that the Ernst & Young Report found that as much as 60% of procurement could be subject to weak business controls and it appeared from the article that Business Day were in possession of the report. Mr Mothibe stated that they did not consider this article as part of their media research. Unlike for the year 2015, the audit files for 2016 did not contain any media articles at all. He was asked whether he could confirm if any media review was performed in that year. At this point, Mr Mothibe said it was not a requirement that the auditors perform a media review. He said this even though he had previously admitted that it was part of the designed evidence gathering process for the audit to review media and that it was part of IRBA's guide on reportable irregularities which he professed to follow in every audit.

544. Mr Mothibe was also directed to another media article about Swissport that his team failed to collect and consider on 17 November 2015. This was a Moneyweb article that spanned four pages and was entitled "SAA Defies National Treasury and DTI Instructions". The article set out the ways in which SAA's conduct in respect of this contract was unlawful. Mr Mothibe testified that this article did not come to their attention and, for that reason, they would not have been able to consider it. If the auditing team had implemented the media review procedure that was set out in PWC's own evidence gathering processes, and which appears in the IRBA Guide, it is likely that these articles would have come to the team's attention. Mr Mothibe was evasive in his answer to this suggestion, and he reiterated that it was not part of the official standards that they review media articles.

545. It was put to Mr Mothibe that if the minutes of the Board meeting and its resolution approving the contract had been studied by the audit team, they would have revealed that no procurement process had been followed. However, the Board resolution of 14 March 2016 read quite differently and mentioned none of these processes. If PWC had looked carefully at the resolution this should have raised concerns. In addition, in one of the Internal Audit Reports, which Mr Mothibe testified he did generally consider, the internal control committee found that the Swissport contract had been concluded irregularly as no competitive process had been followed. This report was dated 15 September 2016. Mr Mothibe confirmed that the audit report was prepared before the PWC audit was finalised on 30 September 2016. His response to this obvious "red flag" was to state that he could not recall reading that particular report.

546. The failure to have considered the Swissport contract was, to say the least, a significant oversight by SAA's auditors, if it was an oversight at all. Had SAA auditors done their work properly, then this contract would not, and could not, have escaped scrutiny. In the month before the ground handling contract was concluded with SAA, Swissport paid R 28.5 million to JM Aviation. JM Aviation then paid those funds to various officials within SAA and others who "facilitated" the agreement between Swissport and SAA.

The New Age

547. Mr Sokombela also testified that he selected the spending on The New Age newspaper at SAA as a transaction to test because, despite its relatively small value (R 1.3 million), during the risk assessment process it was identified as a risky transaction given the media attention around it. When investigating it, SAA was unable to produce any documents proving that proper processes were followed in relation to this expenditure. This TNA transaction is dealt with in detail in this report. The point for now is that, if SAA auditors had flagged TNA spending in previous audit years, this may have had an important effect on SAA's (and even other SOEs) ability to justify further spending on the TNA and its associated business breakfasts.

548. PWC and Nkonki gave clean audits to SAA for five consecutive years between 2012 and 2016. During this period, the Board was in a state of governance decline. It was also engaging in acts of corruption and fraud. None of this was, however, detected by its auditors. Instead, their audit reports each year conveyed to the public that SAA was complying with the law and that irregular expenditure was under control. PWC and Nkonki failed in their duties as a watchdog institution. Had they performed their functions properly, the shambolic state of financial and risk management in SAA would have been picked up earlier and could have been addressed. It took the intervention of the Auditor General to finally expose these deep deficiencies.

549. The findings of the AG on the parlous state of both internal control and financial and risk management at SAA alone indicates that the SAA Board had failed to comply with s 51 of the PFMA. Section 51(1)(a) of the PFMA requires the accounting authority of an SOE to ensure that it has and maintains "an effective, efficient and transparent system of financial and risk management and internal controls". In terms of s 86(2) of the PFMA, an accounting authority that wilfully or grossly negligently fails to comply with this obligation is guilty of an offence. Auditors who correctly discharge their responsibilities and call management to account for breaching their obligations under the PFMA will contribute significantly to curbing the tide of corruption and irregular conduct that engulfed some of South Africa's SOEs over several years.

550. The Commission recommends that the Auditor General's office be further capacitated so that it can audit all public entities. It clearly has the skills and understanding of governance requirements to do so. It also has the ideal level of independence. To the extent that that is not practicable, private firms must only be appointed to audit SOEs if they can demonstrate that they have the requisite skills and the requisite understanding of their obligations to the public at large when they audit an SOE. There must be a sufficient appreciation that, while the financial statements are no doubt of cardinal importance, so too are the entity's PFMA obligations.

551. Finally, during her evidence, Ms Kwinana displayed a concerning lack of understanding of the independence required of an auditor, and non-executive member of Boards of SOEs. Her evidence also revealed that either her firm misrepresented their annual turnover to PWC to secure work with it, or it misrepresented its revenue to SARS.

552. These are matters that should be further investigated both by SARS and by the South African Institute of Chartered Accountants.

SA EXPRESS

Introduction

553. SA Express is a major public entity listed under Schedule 2 to the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999. In May 2018, the Financial Mail newspaper published an article entitled "A case study in looting state-owned companies". It gave rise to serious questions about a number of transactions between South African Express Airways SOC Limited and the Department of Community Safety and Transport in the North West Province (the Transport Department).

554. The article alleged that high-ranking officials in the North West government had colluded with func-tionaries at SA Express to siphon millions of Rands out of the North West government's coffers. The article also alleged that those same officials and functionaries had benefitted personally from the scheme. The allegations therefore fell squarely within the ambit of paragraphs 1.5 and 1.9 of the Commission's TORs.

555. At the time that the Commission began investigating the issue, a criminal complaint on these allegations had already been lodged with the authorities in 2016. A criminal investigation was underway and High Court litigation had been instituted. By the time that the Commission heard evidence on this issue in June 2019, the criminal process had not gained much momentum and the litigation had not advanced matters. The slow pace of the investigation is a matter of serious concern for the following reasons.

    555.1 First, the transactions involved officials from the North West Provincial Government, including the Executive Council of the Province, flouting the procurement framework in awarding SA Express a 5-year contract to provide flights to Mahikeng Airport and Pilanesberg International Airport. This contract effectively permitted the looting of funds from the North West government.

    555.2 Second, once funds from the North West Government had been secured by SA Express, it introduced certain service providers to do ground handling services at the airports without following any procurement process. Those service providers siphoned public funds to various connected individuals and organisations.

556. These allegations were serious and were substantially supported by documentary and other evidence. Despite this, the Commission investigations revealed that it had taken approximately two years for the police to obtain the relevant bank statements and there had been very little progress on the case.

557. What follows is the summary and analysis of the evidence that was given as well as the findings of the Commission regarding that evidence.

The airports and SA Express

558. In or around 2014, the North West Province was looking to develop the provincial airports of Mahikeng and Pilanesberg. The airports were identified as key strategic infrastructure assets that needed to be recapitalised and commercialised.

559. The North West Department of Tourism accordingly created an initiative to revitalise these airports and sent invitations to the North West government to attend a meeting related to the presentation of proposals by invited airlines on 26 August 2014. Ms Kuthlwano Phatudi, the CFO in the Transport Department, was invited to this meeting.

560. Six airlines were invited to submit proposals and make presentations for the provision of airline services on two routes – the Mahikeng route (Mahikeng to Johannesburg) and the Pilanesberg route (both Pilanesberg to Johannesburg and Pilanesberg to Cape Town). Only four airlines submitted proposals: SA Express; Continental Aviation Solution; Challenger Air; and SA Airlink.

561. The four airlines presented their proposals at a meeting on 26 of August 2014 at Sun City. Representatives from the Office of the Premier, the Tourism Department, the Transport Department, and Treasury attended the meeting. These departments were represented by their MECs and HODs. The Tourism Department was represented by its acting HOD, Mr Charles Ndabeni; the Transport Department was represented by its HOD, Mr Bailey Mahlakoleng; and Treasury was represented by its HOD, Mr Israel Guneni.

562. After the presentations, a memorandum was prepared and signed by the HOD of the Transport Department, Mr Mahlakoleng, and the MEC of the Transport Department, Mr Molapisi, on 11 and 15 November 2014 respectively. The memorandum was addressed to the Chairperson of the Executive Council. The EXCO comprised the Executive Council of the Province, consisting of the Premier, Mr Supra Mahumapelo, as its chairperson, and the MECs. The memorandum concerned the proposed introduction of scheduled flights for the Mahikeng and Pilanesberg Airports. It presented a business case for establishing the airline service and provided a summary of the proposals that had been made by the four airlines.

563. Ms Phathudi was asked during her evidence if it was ordinary procedure for the Transport Department to seek approval from EXCO. She testified normally the department would go out on tender, advertise and follow the procurement process. This included the relevant bid committees (bid specification; bid evaluation; and bid adjudication), until approval was granted by the HOD. The award of tenders was the responsibility of the HOD as the Accounting Officer for the Transport Department.

564. This process was not followed in the case of the airlines. There were no supply chain management processes followed and it was not advertised. Ms Phatudi testified that she had advised the then HOD that the tender should be advertised. The HOD told her that "the collective" at the meeting at Sun City had recommended that the process go through EXCO instead, and he prepared the memorandum in line with that decision for EXCO to approve. However, EXCO did not ordinarily play any role in the appointment of service providers in the Transport Department. The procurement process explained by Ms Phatudi did not include any EXCO role in deciding the award of tenders. Despite this, the memorandum was prepared for EXCO's approval.

565. The SA Express proposal was substantially more expensive than the other proposals. In fact, it was R110 million as compared to R4.5 million. In the face of this substantial price difference, the justification for selecting SA Express over the other airlines would have had to have been compelling.

566. The memorandum concluded that SA Express met the provincial airlift strategy because it was "a state owned entity and not profit driven, while SA Airlink, Continental and Challenger Airlines will be highly dependent on government for profit making". No other compelling justification was provided in the memorandum. SA Express was recommended to be contracted for a period of five years, renewable annually.

567. When Prof Mokgoro, who had been the Acting DG in the Office of the Premier at the time, was questioned about this decision during his testimony, he conceded that the selection of SA Express "did not make sense"; that it was, in fact, "absolutely nonsensical".

568. Ms Phatudi testified that, after EXCO had been presented with the memorandum, EXCO approved the appointment of SA Express. She referred to an extract of the EXCO minutes for this decision which recorded various problems with the memorandum. For example, the minutes recorded that: "The HOD should have done a thorough analysis of all presentations received to outline what it means financially for the Province to subsidise the Mahikeng-OR Tambo route 100%, consider all options and propose the best option for consideration by EXCO."

569. Despite this, on 3 December 2014, EXCO agreed that the Department should proceed with the chosen service provider and sign the contract with SA Express. In other words, the EXCO first agreed to sign the contract and then wanted to consider a proper analysis of the presentations later. This sequencing issue was taken up in Prof Mokgoro's evidence, and he eventually conceded that this amounted to a contradiction in EXCO's reasoning.

570. Ms Phatudi testified that the appointment of SA Express was not in line with the provisions of section 217 of the Constitution. It did not follow the Transport Department's recognised procurement process. She also confirmed that she was not aware of any exceptional circumstances that would have justified not following a proper procurement process.

The contract

571. In spite of the appointment process issues identified in the preceding section, the contract was concluded with SA Express on 31 March 2015. In terms of the agreement, SA Express would provide airline services for the designated routes between OR Tambo International Airport, Cape Town International Airport, Pilanesberg Airport and Mahikeng Airport (Main Agreement).

572. The Main Agreement between the Transport Department and SA Express was drafted by the legal division of the department under the instruction of the HOD. The HOD, Mr Mahlakoleng, signed the agreement for the department. Mr Inati Ntshanga, the then Chief Executive Officer of SA Express, signed on its behalf.

573. The Main Agreement contained the following pertinent clauses:

573.1 Effective Date: 27 March 2015 for OR Tambo, Cape Town and Pilanesberg routes and 1 May 2015 for OR Tambo and Mahikeng routes

573.2 Clause 4.1: SA Express and the Transport Department agreed that SA Express shall, with effect from Effective Date, commence the Airline Service on the Designated Route for a period of 5 (five) years calculated from the Effective Date

573.3 Clause 6.1: The Transport Department shall pay to SA Express annually, in advance, the amount stipulated in Annexure A, which amount is subject to review at the end of each year, by agreement between the Parties

573.4 Clause 7.1.4: SA Express shall, on quarterly basis, submit a written return to the Transport Department which includes details of marketing and promotion of the Airline Service done during that quarter and that contemplated for the next quarter, together with the costs and/or anticipated costs thereof

573.5 Clause 10.1: SA Express shall, with effect from the Effective Date, provide the Airline Service with CRJ 200 aircraft, including suitable replacement aircraft should the aircraft employed in providing the Airline Service be unserviceable; alternatively with an aircraft of similar size, specification and capabilities

573.6 Clause 15.1: SA Express shall, in consultation with the Transport Department, appoint a management company responsible for managing certain facilities at Pilanesberg and Mahikeng airports; and 573.7 Clause 15.3: SA Express shall enter into a Service Level Agreement with the management company, in terms of which performance of the management company will be monitored and evaluated.

574. The Main Agreement envisaged certain subsidies being paid to SA Express for operating the routes and then certain payments being due to a management company that would take care of the ground handling at the airports. Such a management company was not yet appointed at the time that the Main Agreement was concluded.

575. The subsidies payable in terms of the Main Agreement to SA Express for operating the routes were as follows:

575.1 Approximately R58 million payable in 2015

575.2 Approximately R51 million payable in 2016

575.3 Approximately R43 million payable in 2017

575.4 Approximately R40 million payable in 2018; and

575.5 Approximately R36 million payable in 2019

576. The amounts payable to the management company were as follows:

576.2 Approximately R31 million payable each subsequent year for the period 2016-2019.

577. These two sets of amounts aggregated to R407 221 142. This meant that SA Express was to be paid more than R200 million as a subsidy and then it would procure the services of a management company that would run the airports for an additional R200 million.

578. Ms Phatudi testified that she became aware of the agreement after it had been signed, when there was a claim for payment made under the contract to the Transport Department at some point in 2015.

The first invoice

579. On 16 March 2015, Mr Mahlakoleng prepared and issued a letter to Prof Mokgoro, the Acting Director-General in the Office of the Premier at the time. The letter requested the Office of the Premier to process payment of R53 143 564 to SA Express. The letter included the invoice for the amount as well as a handwritten note on the invoice that read: "Please process this payment for R50 million, the payment agreed to with Treasury and at Exco". During her evidence, Ms Phatudi's explanation for the approach to the Office of the Premier for payment was that during March 2015, when the invoice was received, the Transport Department did not have a budget for the project. For this reason, the HOD wrote the letter to the Office of the Premier requesting it to pay on behalf of the Department.

580. This is a particularly concerning feature of the case. Not only was SA Express appointed in circumstances that flouted procurement principles and without any credible justification, but it was also clear that the procurement had not been budgeted for. The payment was made on 26 March 2015 from the Office of the Premier's budget and approved by Prof Mokgoro.

581. Prof Mokgoro was questioned about his authorisation of this payment during his evidence. Although he initially sought to justify the payment as having come from the R132 million budget that had been set aside for the MRRRP (Mahikeng Recovery Renewal and Repositioning Programme), he eventually conceded that the MRRRP funds had been earmarked for projects other than the Mahikeng airport.

582. Prof Mokgoro was also asked about a handwritten note on the invoice that had been received from SA Express. Prof Mokgoro accepted, in his testimony, that he had no idea whose handwriting was on the invoice. He also accepted that it would be unreasonable to process a payment for less than an invoiced amount unless there was some history behind the payment, but he then confessed that he could not recall why he had approved the payment of R50 million based on the handwritten note.

583. Prof Mokgoro was also taken to task during his testimony about the fact that he authorised this payment on 26 March 2015, before the contract between the parties had even been concluded. He accepted that this was irregular but then was at pains to emphasise that this was a "government-to-government" contract. He recalled that there was pressure to make the payment because the airline had begun operating but he could not give any details about when this had occurred.

584. Prof Mokgoro testified that he accepted that he had several obligations under the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 because of his position. However, he was unable to provide any credible explanation for the fact that he authorised a payment of R50 million in respect of a contractual obligation that did not yet exist, for an airline subsidy to a state-owned enterprise for which there was no budget in the relevant department. It is the opinion of the Commission that Prof Mokgoro's conduct in this regard was completely unacceptable and he should not have authorised the payment.

585. This first payment was then followed by a series of others which, as the next section sets out, found their way into the pockets of state officials.

The money

A comparator?

586. The amounts to be paid to SA Express and the management company were substantial – more than R400 million. One of the problems with this type of liability for the North West Province was that, because no proper procurement process had been followed, it was not possible for the Province to know whether the amounts it had agreed to pay SA Express or the management company were market-related.

587. The Commission therefore investigated what the comparable terms had been on route subsidy agreements that SA Express had concluded in the past. It presented the evidence of Mr Phiri on this issue. He had been the GM for Regional Expansion at SA Express in 2010 to 2012. In Mr Phiri's expert opinion, the amounts that the Transport Department had agreed to pay to SA Express under the Main Agreement were overstated and extremely excessive. It was his conclusion that the amounts paid were far out of proportion to any of SA Express's other routes.

The management company

588. Ms Babadi Tlatsana testified before the Commission about the appointment of her company, Koreneka, to do ground handling services at the Mahikeng and Pilanesberg airports.

589. Ms Tlatsana began making enquiries at SAA in 2014 and was eventually directed to Mr Brian van Wyk, the Commercial Manager at SA Express, because SA Express, and not SAA, dealt with domestic flights within South Africa. According to Ms Tlatsana, Mr van Wyk. asked her to submit a proposal to his Gmail email address. According to Ms Tlatsana, she was told to use the Gmail address, rather than an official 'saexpress' one, because Mr van Wyk said that he was often not at the office.

590. After submitting her proposal, Ms Tlatsana received a call from Mr van Wyk, who indicated that her company had been selected as the "preferred bidder", albeit that no open tender process had been followed. However, he indicated to her that she would need to ensure that two further individuals were added to her company to secure the contract with SA Express. She agreed. The two people who joined Koreneka were Ms Joyce Phiri and Mr Victor Thabeng. Ms Tlatsana subsequently established that Ms Phiri is the mother of Mr van Wyk's life partner, Mr Sipho Levy Phiri. Mr van Wyk also wanted Ms Tlatsana to appoint Mr David Kasilira as the accountant for the business. She also agreed to this appointment.

591. At that stage, Koreneka had an account with ABSA but Mr van Wyk advised Ms Tlatsana that an account should be opened with FNB. He did not give her a reason for this. When Ms Tlatsana was asked in evidence about why she had agreed to open this new bank account, she said that Mr van Wyk was assisting Koreneka to run smoothly and had taken her through the process. She trusted Mr van Wyk and thought that he wanted to help Koreneka. Ms Tlatsana then opened an FNB account in January 2015.

592. In April 2015, Mr van Wyk arranged with Ms Tlatsana to sign a contract between SA Express and Koreneka. Ms Tlatsana testified that she did not retain a copy of the contract, but broadly understood that her company would be providing ground handling services at the airports. Work began at Pilanesberg Airport on 1 May 2015 and Mahikeng Airport on 1 September 2015.

Flow of funds and the bribe

593. The payments that were made to Koreneka were set out in the evidence of Mr Timothy Ngwenya, who was the Divisional Manager of Security Management at SA Express. Mr Ngwenya, in fact, conducted a detailed investigation of these payments and the contracting between SA Express and the Department of Transport, on the one hand, and SA Express and Koreneka, on the other.

594. During his investigation, he was offered a bribe of R3 million to drop his enquiries. The circumstances around this bribe are concerning.

    594.1 Mr Ngwenya received a call from the SAA Head of Security, Mr Jason Tshabalala, who advised him that someone wanted to speak to him. In about 20 to 30 minutes after having spoken to Mr Tshabalala, Mr Ngwenya received a call from an unknown person who asked to meet with him based on a mandate he said he had received from "Luthuli House". Mr Ngwenya told the person he was not a politician and could not talk about mandates from Luthuli House. But he eventually agreed to the meeting. They met at the Intercontinental Hotel at OR Tambo International Airport.

    594.2 During the meeting, the person who had called Mr Ngwenya introduced himself as "Sipho". This person told Mr Ngwenya that he was from Luthuli House and was mandated to speak to him about the investigation he was doing in the North West and the money involved. He told Mr Ngwenya that the money in question was meant to finance political activities of the ANC. During their discussion, the person asked Mr Ngwenya to drop his investigation for R3 million. Mr Ngwenya refused.

594.3 The person then spoke about an amount of R20 million that was in the account of Koreneka, to which Mr van Wyk had been denied access. He tried to convince Mr Ngwenya to persuade Ms Tlatsana to release those funds since he had a better relationship with her. Mr Ngwenya refused to do so.

595. Mr Ngwenya's investigation established that four invoices were submitted from Koreneka to SA Express for services that were not provided for in the agreement between Koreneka and SA Express. These invoices were for R8.5 million (4 May 2015), R8.5 million (17 August 2015), R5.84 million (28 August 2015) and R8.16 million (28 August 2015). These invoices were authorised for payment by Mr van Wyk.

596. During Mr Ngwenya's investigation of these payments, he questioned Ms Tlatsana about the origin of the invoices. Ms Tlatsana indicated to him that they had been prepared by the accountant that Mr van Wyk required her to appoint for the business, Mr Kasilira.

597. After these payments had been made by SA Express to Koreneka, the invoicing and payments changed. From December 2015, Koreneka submitted invoices directly to the Transport Department and was paid by the Transport Department. Let us consider these invoices in more detail:

597.1 On 7 December 2015, Koreneka submitted an invoice to the value of R20.6 million to the Transport Department. This invoice was approved following the authorisation processes of the Transport Department. At the time (2015/16 financial year), the Transport Department had a budget to meet these costs and the Main Agreement had, by that stage, been amended to allow payment from the Transport Department directly to the management company.

597.2 In 2016, the Transport Department received a second invoice from Koreneka to the value of R15.8 million. This invoice was not paid because the Transport Department was served with a letter from the attorneys representing Ms Phiri, a purported partner in Koreneka. The Transport Department was instructed to withhold payment until the matter had been resolved between the parties.

The allegations of corruption

598. Around June 2016, Ms Tlatsana contacted Mr Ngwenya and reported to him that there were people at SA Express interfering with her company and threatened to go to the media with her allegations. Mr Ngwenya agreed to meet with her. At their first meeting, Ms Tlatsana told him how her engagements with SA Express had unfolded along the lines set out above.

599. Ms Tlatsana also explained that conflicts had started to arise between her and the individuals whom Mr van Wyk had required her to bring into the Koreneka business. As a result, Mr van Wyk had cancelled the contract with Koreneka and replaced it with an entity called Valotech Facilities Management CC (Valotech). During his investigation, Mr Ngwenya established that Valotech had been paid an amount of R15 million by the Transport Department without rendering any services. Valotech also did not provide any services to SA Express. After Valotech received this payment from the Transport Department, it was subsequently liquidated.

600. When Ms Tlatsana met with Mr Ngwenya, she provided him with several documents evidencing the invoices and payments that had been received, as well as recordings of some of the conversations that she had had with Mr van Wyk. The Commission obtained copies of the recordings and played pertinent parts from them during the evidence of Ms Tlatsana. The recordings tell a remarkable story about the grand plan behind this scheme. It is dealt with in more detail below.

600.1 Ms Tlatsana also produced a handwritten note, which she claimed had been drawn up by Mr van Wyk during one of the meetings at which she had recorded their conversation.

600.2 After receiving this information from Ms Tlatsana, Mr Ngwenya conducted a thorough investigation. He concluded that Mr van Wyk had been at the centre of the events described above . Mr Ngweyna then took steps to report him to his superiors and to advocate for his dismissal.

However, on the day that Mr Ngwenya had planned to confront Mr van Wyk with what he had uncovered in his investigation, Mr van Wyk left the building and did not come back.

601. After Valotech's liquidation, two further entities were appointed as the management company under the Main Agreement. These entities were Pilanesberg Airport Management Company (PAMCO) and Mahikeng Airport Management Company (MAMCO). The contracts appointing these two entities were signed by the then CEO, Mr Ntshanga, a few days before he left SA Express. These two entities were subsequently paid amounts of R15.8 and R15.5 million respectively. The Commission was unable to establish what, if any, work was done to justify these payments.

602. The money laundering aspects of the Koreneka-leg of the scheme were extensively investigated by the Commission. The outcome of those investigations is set out in the next section.

The money laundering

603. Ms Tlatsana testified before the Commission about the money that Koreneka had received from SA Express and the Department of Transport. The salient features of her evidence are as follows.

603.1 Koreneka would receive payments from time to time into its bank account. Generally, Ms Tlatsana would not know when payments were made into the bank account because this was being managed by the accountant, Mr Kasilira, who had been appointed on Mr van Wyk's suggestion.

603.2 Mr Kasilira would make payments out of the bank account of Koreneka from time to time. When Ms Tlatsana received a bank SMS notifying her of these payments, she would sometimes follow-up with Mr van Wyk about them and be told that they had something to do with the airports. The amounts would sometimes be as large as R2 million or R5 million but, when she made enquiries, Ms Tltasana was always told that it related to the airports.

603.3 Between May and September 2015, three payments were made from the bank account of Koreneka to the AMFS business of Ms Kalandra Viljoen. These payments totalled R9 million.

603.4 In November 2015, two payments of R4.9 million and R5 million were made to the bank account of Neo Solutions. Mr van Wyk told Ms Tlatsana that these payments related to security cameras for the airports.

603.5 At some point in 2015, Ms Tlatsana realised that her company had been "hijacked" by Mr van Wyk. She then began a process of trying to uncover the basis for these payments and the eventual destination of the funds.

603.6 Ms Tlatsana's investigations revealed that the R9.9 million that had been paid to Neo Solutions was then paid out of that company's bank account as follows:

603.6.1 R4 million paid to Batsamai Investment Holdings on 11 December 2015

603.6.2 R3 million paid to Batsamai on 22 December 2015

603.6.3 R300 000 paid to Mr van Wyk in cash on 4 January 2016

603.6.4 R1.4 million paid to Batsamai on 10 March 2016; and

603.6.5 R1.2 million paid to Batsamai on 26 March 2016

603.7 Ms Tlatsana's investigators established that Batsamai had been registered on 11 November 2014 and Mr Sipho Levy Phiri, who was Mr van Wyk's life partner, owned the company.

603.8 By the end of 2015, Ms Tlatsana had decided that she needed to get to the bottom of what was going on. Koreneka had also received a payment directly from the Transport Department of R20 million at the end of December and Mr van Wyk had been pressuring her to gain access to those funds. So, in early 2016, she set up a meeting with Mr van Wyk at which she planned to record the conversation and get him to level with her about what was going on.

603.9 During the recorded conversation, Mr van Wyk gave various explanations for the use to which the funds from Koreneka had been put. He said, for example, that the monies that had been paid to Neo Solutions were used to "take care of people". According to Ms Tlatsana, Mr van Wyk also provided an explanation of the individuals to whom monies from Koreneka had been paid by drawing these out on a note that he had with him. Ms Tlatsana retained this note after their meeting.

603.10 The note reflected that the payments had been made to Minister Lynne Brown and Minister Dipuo Peters; to the Transport MEC, Mr Molapisi, and to the Transport HOD, Mr Mahlakoleng; and to Premier Tebogo Job Mokgoro. Mr van Wyk said that the Premier had only received R5 million so far and so needed a further R5 million.

603.11 The note also indicated that the Transport CFO had received some monies. Ms Phatudi, however, denied ever receiving any such payment. The Commission was unable to find any other independent verification of the fact that Ms Phatudi received any payments from the Koreneka funds.

603.12 Former Minister of Transport, Ms Dipuo Peters, disputed the claim that she received a payment from the Koreneka monies. Former Minister Peters provided two affidavits to the Commission in which she denied having received these payments. The Commission was unable to find any further evidence corroborating receipt of these monies.

603.13 A substantial amount of the funds from Koreneka was converted into cash by Ms Kalandra Viljoen's business, AMFS. Once converted into cash, there is no way to trace where these monies ended up without eyewitness evidence.

603.14 Ms Tlatsana confirmed that she had made a payment of R1 million to the ANC regional office in the North West in early 2016. She said that Mr van Wyk had asked her to make the donation to the ANC and she had agreed to do so. Ms Tlatsana said that she felt pressurised by Mr van Wyk to make the payment.

604. During her testimony, Ms Tlatsana was unable to provide a satisfactory accounting of all the monies that her company had received out of the arrangement with Mr van Wyk and SA Express. She was requested to provide such an account after her testimony concluded but, despite many follow-up requests by the Commission after her evidence, no such account was produced.

605. It is important to highlight at this juncture that Mr van Wyk was present at the Commission's hearings on the day that Ms Tlatsana testified. Indeed, he sought to delay her testimony. When this request was refused, Mr van Wyk was invited to bring any application for leave to cross examine Ms Tlatsana. Mr van Wyk did not take up any of these opportunities to contest the evidence against him.

606. Ms Tlatsana's testimony about the flow of funds is corroborated by the detailed analysis that the Commission's investigators did of the relevant bank statements. These documents show that Mr van Wyk, and persons close to him, received monies that were drawn out of the North West government's coffers. It is therefore imperative that SAPS proceed with their investigations of these matters as swiftly as possible.

607. Ms Tlatsana also gave evidence that she had received threats and intimidation after she had revealed the details of this scheme in the High Court litigation that had been brought against her by SA Express. She testified, however, that nothing had happened in relation to her complaint even though she had made a tape recording of the threats she had received on the phone and had handed these recordings to the police.

608. The Commission directed its Legal Team and the Investigation Team to make enquires about the complaint and the attention it had received from the North West SAPS office in Mahikeng. The following was revealed: Ms Tlatsana had lodged a case of intimidation with a Warrant Officer at the Mahikeng Detective Service on 4 January 2018. The Commission was dismayed to learn that the investigator assigned to the case had effectively done nothing to pursue the case. The Provincial Office removed the investigator, and the matter was handed over to the Provincial Office under the Provincial Organised Crime unit.

The role of Neo Solutions

609. Mr Vivien Natasen, who was the sole shareholder and director of Neo Solutions, was involved in laundering R9.9 million of the money that Koreneka received from SA Express pursuant to its unlawful dealings with the North West government.

610. Mr Natasen was also a chartered accountant. He had been a registered member of the South African Institute of Chartered Accountants (SAICA) for 22 years. Mr Natasen was aware of the Code of Professional Conduct for Chartered Accountants and confirmed that the code applied to him.

611. Mr Natasen testified as follows about the relationship between Neo Solutions, on the one hand, and Koreneka and Batsami, on the other:

    611.1 Neo Solutions did not ever render invoices to Koreneka for security cameras

    611.2 It did not ever render invoices to Koreneka for any services

    611.3 No services were ever rendered by Batsamai to Neo Solutions; and 611.4 Neo Solutions did not ever receive any invoices from Batsamai.

612. Despite these facts, Mr Natasen explained that he had come to know Mr van Wyk in 2014, and had learnt, through his relationship with him, that he was employed at SA Express and that he was planning to leave SA Express in 2016.

613. According to Mr Natasen, in October 2015 Mr van Wyk approached him and asked if he could transfer R10 million into the bank account of Neo Solutions. Mr van Wyk said that he needed to transfer this money because he was an official of the state, employed by SA Express, and was leaving. He said to Mr Natasen that the money was "clean" and had nothing to do with SA Express or the state. Mr van Wyk also told Mr Natasen that he did not want his employer to know that he had implemented a successful business on the side "as they would be jealous" given that he was in the process of leaving SA Express. He also confirmed that he "did not want the money to hit his bank account" because SA Express did lifestyle audits from time to time.

614. Mr Natasen was taken to task during his testimony about this explanation and why it did not raise any red-flags for him. He first endeavoured to justify receiving the funds on the basis that they related to a planned farming venture that they were going to be embarking upon, but then struggled to explain why it was that Mr van Wyk then required R7 million of the money to be released to him. Mr Natasen eventually conceded that there was no reason why his company needed to hold the funds at all in respect of the proposed farming venture because it was just as easy for Mr van Wyk to hold onto the funds until the venture materialised.

615. It is the opinion of the Commission that everything about how Mr van Wyk approached Mr Natasen implied that he needed to hide the money. A reasonable person in Mr Natasen's position ought to have known that he was being asked to conceal or disguise "dirty" money. It is evident that Mr Natasen was put on notice that there was suspicious activity afoot. A reasonable accountant in his position would have enquired further about the source of the funds.

616. Mr Natasen was also questioned about the fact that his company had used the proceeds that it had received from Mr van Wyk. Section 6 of Prevention of Organised Crime Act 121 of 1998 makes it a crime for a person to use money which he knows or ought reasonably to have known forms part of the proceeds of unlawful activities. Mr Natasen conceded that the discrepancies between his companies' financial statements and bank balances reflected that the money Neo Solutions received from Koreneka had been used in his company. When he returned to give evidence in August 2019, Mr Natasen was forced to concede that Mr van Wyk's money was used in the operations of Neo Solutions.

617. When Mr Natasen was probed about why he had signed off on financial statements for his company that were clearly incorrect, he deflected and sought to blame it on his accounting team. It is clear to the Commission that Mr Natasen allowed his company to be used to conceal proceeds that the Commercial Manager of SA Express had siphoned out of the North West government's coffers.

The cash in transit leg

618. Mr van Wyk appears to have been very skilled in his ability to hide portions of the monies that were extracted from the North West government. One of his concealment methods was to engage the services of a business that styled itself as a "cash in transit" operation to convert R9 million of the money from Koreneka into cash.

619. Ms Kalandra Viljoen was the owner of that business. During her evidence before the Commission, she conceded that she did not apply adequate measures within her business to establish and verify the identity of her clients as required under the Financial Intelligence Centre Act 38 of 2001. Her failure to have adequate measures in place allowed her business to be used by Koreneka, an entity with which she had no prior dealings and whose source of funds she had made no effort to establish, to convert R9 million it had received from SA Express into cash.

620. The evidence indicates that this cash was then delivered to Mr van Wyk. This was established from the cash delivery slips that Ms Viljoen retained from these deliveries. Ms Tlatsana confirmed that all three delivery slips bore the signature of Mr van Wyk.

621. A portion of Ms Viljoen's questioning before the Commission focused on whether her "cash in transit" business was operating as a genuine cash in transit business under the FICA legislation. The point that was made to Ms Viljoen was that, ordinarily, cash in transit businesses do not receive deposits of cash into their bank accounts. They collect cash from banks and deliver them. The sheer value and volume of the deposits that Ms Viljoen's business was conducting daily tended to indicate that she was not operating a cash in transit business but was rather receiving deposits from the public as an ordinary feature of its operations. As such, it was operating the business of a bank and required a licence from the Reserve Bank to do so.

622. Greater vigilance will be required from the financial sector regulatory authorities if this type of operation is to be stopped. Ms Viljoen was clearly running a business that received millions of Rands daily and converted it into cash.

CONCLUSION

623. The Commission's Terms of Reference required it to establish the extent to which state capture, corruption and fraud was prevalent in the public sector. In particular, the TORs required the Commission to investigate, make findings and report on whether public officials or functionaries had unlawfully awarded tenders to benefit any family, individual or corporate entity (paragraph 1.4). The TORs also required the Commission to determine whether any officials or functionaries within the various SOEs had benefitted personally from acts of corruption (paragraph 1.9).

624. These key aspects of the mandate of the Commission guided the investigation undertaken into the affairs of SAA and its subsidiary SAAT, as well as SA Express.

625. The investigation endeavoured to uncover not only what had happened within SAA, but also why and how it happened. The investigation therefore had a broad scope because it was motivated by a desire to understand the weakness within the public sector that make it vulnerable to state capture, corruption, and fraud.

626. As the findings set out above show, during the tenure of Ms Myeni SAA became an entity racked by corruption and fraud. Despite this, she was retained as Chairperson well beyond the point at which she should have been removed. Two successive Finance Ministers explained to the Commission that this was because of the personal preferences of former President Zuma. This is the antithesis of accountability.

627. The public sector must be accountable to the people of South Africa and the appointment of individuals to the Boards of SOEs must be justifiable based on their skills expertise, experience and knowledge.

628. Functionaries within SOEs must be held to the highest standards of accountability because they use public funds to manage the businesses they oversee.

629. Those responsible for governance at SAA, SAAT and SA Express displayed a wanton disregard for these standards. Rather than acting in the entities' best interests, they were motivated by their own personal gratification. This should never be allowed to occur again. In particular, the Commission makes the following recommendations for action following this report:

    629.1 The Commission has already laid a criminal complaint against Ms Myeni for her disclosure of Mr X's identity during her testimony. This matter needs to be brought to finality by the prosecution service. The evidence of Mr X also merits further detailed investigation, and possible corruption charges should be laid against all the individuals involved in the scheme to secure millions of Rands for the personal benefit of Ms Myeni and the Jacob Zuma Foundation.

    629.2 In relation to Pembroke, Ms Myeni knowingly misrepresented to the Minister of Public Enterprises that the SAA Board had taken two decisions when it had not. These misrepresentations caused financial losses to SAA. It is likely that her conduct constitutes the crime of fraud. The Commission recommends that the NPA considers, subject to further investigation as required, whether Ms Myeni should be prosecuted for fraud.

    629.3 Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana displayed a wanton disregard for the best interests of SAA in their decision-making on the lounge catering contract (LSG Sky Chefs). They acted in gross disregard for their fiduciary duties to SAA when they took this decision. However, they both ceased being directors of SAA more than 24 months ago. Accordingly, the shareholder is not now able to bring proceedings to have them declared delinquent directors under section 162 of the Companies Act. This time bar may be amended by Parliament in order to permit applications to be brought even after a two-year period, on good cause shown. This will mean that, in cases such as this one, where the true extent of Board members' breaches of duty is only uncovered a number of years later, steps can still be taken by the executive to ensure that such directors are declared delinquent and thereby prevented from serving on the boards of companies in the future.

    629.4 SAA's conclusion of a five-year ground handling contract took place a month after Swissport had concluded a service level agreement with JM Aviation, in terms of which JM Aviation was paid R28.5 million. That money, according to Mr Dulaxolo Peter, was then used to pay millions to those who had assisted in "facilitating" the finalisation of the SAA / Swissport contract. The people who received payments from that amount of R28.5 million were: Mr Daluxolo Peter; Mr Vuyisile Ndzeku; Mr Lester Peter; and Ms Nontsasa Memela. These payments were likely to have been kick-back payments to those who had secured the conclusion of the Swissport ground handling contract with SAA or who were to be involved in its implementation. The Commission recommends that, subject to further investigation as required, the NPA should consider the prosecution of these persons.

    629.5 JM Aviation does not appear to have paid VAT to SARS on the R28.5 million received from Swissport prior to the ground handling contract being concluded with SAA. It is recommended that SARS should consider this matter further and take such steps as it may be advised to take.

    629.6 The awarding of the components tender for five years to the joint venture of AAR and JM Aviation was unlawful, irregular and unfair. AAR and JM Aviation were favoured during the process by the SAAT Head of Procurement, Ms Memela, and the Chairperson of the SAAT Board, Ms Kwinana. Both received payments from JM Aviation around the time that these decisions were taken. The payments were likely kick-back payments to these officials. It is recommended that the NPA should seriously consider prosecuting Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana for corruption or related crimes.

629.7 The Commission's investigations revealed that Mr Ndzeku, Ms Memela, and Ms Mbanjwa conspired to try to hide the true nature of the payments made by JM Aviation to Ms Memela through Ms Mbanjwa, and that Mr Ndzeku and Ms Kwinana tried to hide the payments made by or on behalf of JM Aviation or Mr Ndzeku to Ms Kwinana's company. They did so by fabricating agreements to ensure that they appeared as though they were arms-length transactions unrelated to the decision-making that took place in SAAT at the time. This conduct probably constitutes fraud. The Commission recommends that all the participants in the fraud be prosecuted, following any investigation the NPA Authority may decide to conduct.

629.8 In addition, both Ms Memela and Ms Mbanjwa are officers of the court. Ms Memela is an advocate and Ms Mbanjwa an attorney. Despite this, they participated in a fraudulent scheme to try to hide money that was paid as a kick-back to Ms Memela. It is recommended that the Legal Practice Council should investigate whether the two should be removed from the roll of attorneys in the case Ms Mbanjwa and from the roll of advocates in the case of Ms Memela.

629.9 Furthermore, Ms Mbanjwa continued to act on behalf of Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana in circumstances where she was personally implicated in their impugned conduct. At times, Ms Memela and Ms Kwinana implicated each other. There is a clear conflict of interest in Ms Mbanjwa's representation of either of them in these proceedings, and a conflict in representing both of them. Ms Mbanjwa's independence and objectivity would have been compromised by her personal involvement. The personal involvement of a lawyer in a case in which she acts as a legal representative has been found by the courts to be an undesirable practice. Her conduct in this regard should also receive the attention of the Legal Practice Council.

629.10 It is recommended that the President must take note of the role of the State Security Agency in security vetting and take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that services of the State Security Agency are not abused in the future to serve the interests or agenda of certain individuals.

629.11 Where the Commission has uncovered criminal acts of corruption and fraud and has recommended that prosecutions take place, steps should be taken urgently by the relevant authorities to seek to recover the proceeds of these unlawful activities.

629.12 In order for the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 (PRECCA) to have any prospect of assisting in the fight against corruption, those who were duty-bound to report corruption but failed to do so, must also be held accountable. Section 34(2) of PRECCA makes it an offence for anyone who holds a position of authority within an entity and who knows or ought reasonably to have known that an act of corruption has been perpetrated, to fail to report the conduct. In her position as interim CFO, Ms Nhantsi held a position of authority within SAA. She therefore ought to have reported the BNP transaction and her suspicions concerning the true motives of Ms Duduzile Cynthia Myeni and Mr Masotsha Mngadi in pushing the transaction forward. Her failure to do so may constitute a crime. The Commission therefore recommends that the law enforcement agencies, including the NPA, should give the matter further consideration with a view to her possible prosecution.

629.13 The AG's office should be further capacitated so that it can audit all public entities. If this is not practicable, serious consideration should be given to appointing private firms to audit SOEs only if they can demonstrate that they have the requisite skills and the requisite understanding of their obligations to the public at large when they audit an SOE. There must be a sufficient appreciation that, not only are the financial statements of cardinal importance, the entity's PFMA obligations are also of great significance.

629.14 The South African Institute of Charted Accountants (SAICA) should investigate whether Ms Kwinana has the requisite knowledge and appreciation of her obligations as a charted accountant and whether she is suitable to continue to practice the profession of a Chartered Accountant.

The Commission believes that the answers she gave to certain questions during her evidence revealed either that she has no clue about some of the basic obligations that she should know as a charted accountant, or she knew those obligations but dishonestly pretended that she did not because it was convenient for her to do so. SAICA should be interested in investigating the matter because either explanation may mean she is not fit and proper to practise the profession of a chartered accountant. Her auditing firm's tax returns may also have significantly understated revenue (to the value of approximately R40 million) in the 2016 financial year. It is recommended that SARS should investigate this.

SA Express

629.15 The Commission's investigations into SA Express's dealings with the North West Department of Transport has revealed an elaborate scheme of corruption, designed to take money out of the State's coffers for the benefit of those with power and influence who orchestrated the scheme.

629.16 The Commission recommends that all the government and state officials, as well as private individuals, involved in this looting scheme should be brought to justice. The investigations into this issue have been ongoing since 2016, and should be brought to a swift conclusion.

629.17 The Commission recommends that charges of money laundering and the use of the proceeds of crime be brought against Mr Natasen. That SARS investigates the numerous respects in which Neo Solutions appears not to have accurately and fairly reported its income to the authorities.

629.18 The SARB should investigate whether Ms Viljoen's AMFS operation was, in fact, a cash in transit business that merely failed to comply with its FICA obligations, or unlawful operated as a bank. The current SAPS investigation should also be extended to interrogate the role of AMFS in more detail. The question that needs to be answered is whether AFMS was engaged in criminal money laundering activity.

THE NEW AGE

INTRODUCTION

1. The extent to which state funds were spent on TNA Media (Pty) Ltd (TNA) formed an important part of the Public Protector's Report, which have informed the Terms of Reference for this Commission. In particular, the Public Protector referred to both Eskom and SAA's contracts with TNA and required, in particular, that the TNA contracts with SAA be investigated in the second phase of the investigation. There was, however, no second phase as the Public Protector's Office had run out of funding and Adv Thuli Madonsela's term was coming to an end.
2. Therefore, this section of the report focusses on the unjustified spending at Eskom, Transnet and SAA, and the Gupta-owned media enterprise, TNA, during the period 2011 to 2017.
3. The Public Protector's State of Capture Report also focused on the relationship between the South African Broadcasting Commission (SABC) and TNA, as well as the allegations made by Mr Maseko regarding TNA and the Government Communication and Information System (GCIS). These aspects of the TNA story are dealt with in other sections of this report.
4. The Commission's TOR required it to investigate, make findings and report on whether there were any irregularities, undue enrichment, corruption and undue influence in the awarding of government advertising in the New Age newspaper and other dealings with the Gupta family.
5. During the period 2011 to 2017, TNA produced The New Age newspaper, and a television show in partnership with the SABC known as The New Age Business Briefings or Breakfasts. Government departments and SOEs used scarce public resources to secure advertising in or sponsorships with TNA that defied logic and fell short of legal requirements.

6. The evidence pertaining to TNA serves as an example of the way in which state capture took hold in South Africa. It shows the extent of the Guptas' influence in the public sector in South Africa as well as the Guptas' strategy to replace officials that were not compliant with their looting scheme.

7. It is undeniable that numerous SOEs were used to siphon public funds to TNA and its owners. What is less clear is how this was achieved and, more importantly, how it can be avoided in the future.

8. The Commission's investigations revealed how key role players enabled the project of state capture to take hold in these entities and thrive for several years, despite enquiries by the institutions designed to protect our democracy – notably Parliament, the Public Protector and some mainstream media outlets.

9. In particular, the evidence shows that there emerged at least two categories of people within these organisations who allowed the Guptas to secure millions of Rands of public funds through:

    9.1 Firstly, a category identified as the "facilitators". These were compliant officials who followed the orders from the Guptas seemingly without question. They were not concerned about what the Guptas' influence would do to the welfare of their institutions. They ordered their subordinates to be complicit in the facilitation, using them to create some pretence of processes being followed. The "facilitators" used threats and intimidation to achieve this and they relied on a culture of silence and compliance from employees within the organisations.

    9.2 Secondly, a category identified as the "followers". These were the subordinates to the "facilitators" who did not stand up to their superiors or speak out when there was evidence of corruption or irregularities in their organisations. These followers varied in the degree to which they resisted or complained about the orders they were given. It is evident that the project of state capture would not have thrived as it did, if these key employees had not participated in the scheme by taking irrational decisions that were not in the best interests of their organisations.

10. The evidence before the Commission shows that in order to divert public funds for private benefit, it was necessary to populate key institutions with people who were going to comply with orders. This might be because they were happy to receive some benefit – like being promoted to a high-status position. In some instances, key public figures were unwilling to comply. These were the "resistors". In those instances, the "resistors" were removed from their positions and replaced, or were sought to be replaced, with more "facilitators". The primary example of a resistor is Mr Themba Maseko who was unwilling to accede to the Guptas' pressure to divert spending at GCIS to TNA. After he resisted, he was replaced by Mr Mzwanele Manyi.

11. This part of the report identifies the "facilitators" and "followers" within each entity and also considers whether there were any structural differences in each of the entities that equipped them better to resist attempts at state capture and private interest influence.

12. The "facilitators" were:

    12.1 At Eskom, Mr Colin Matjila, the CEO, the Board of Eskom that took over in December 2014, and Mr Chose Choeu, the Divisional Executive for Corporate Affairs; and 12.2 At Transnet, Mr Brian Molefe, the CEO, and Mr Mboniso Sigonyela, the General Manager of Transnet Group Corporate and Public Affairs responsible for advertising and sponsorships.

13. The "followers" were:

    13.1 At Eskom, Mr Pieter Pretorius, Head of Strategic Marketing; and 13.2 At Transnet, Mr Joseph Jackson, the Brand and Publicity Co-ordinator Group Corporate and Public Affairs from 2006 to December 2014, and Mr Daniel Phatlane, Senior Coordinator Stakeholder Relations from 2011 to 2017.

TNA MEDIA

14. TNA was established by the Gupta family in June 2010. It launched The New Age newspaper in December 2010.

15. Former President Zuma testified before the Commission that the newspaper was his idea. He said there was a need for a different perspective in the news that would not be so "negative" and critical of the government and one that would not only cover big national news, but also province-specific coverage. He said that he suggested this to the Guptas who said they were interested in going into this business. Mr Zuma said he even came up with the name The New Age. Mr Zuma testified that he told Mr Gwede Mantashe about his discussion with the Guptas concerning this newspaper because he wanted to make sure that there was at least one official among the ANC officials who knew of his role in the establishment of the newspaper.

16. TNA conducted its business as a subsidiary of Oakbay Investments (Pty) Ltd (Oakbay), a company owned by the Gupta family and represented by Mr Atul Gupta. TNA was responsible for the print media (The New Age newspaper), while Infinity Media (Pty) Ltd focused on the 24-hour television news channel, ANN7.

17. In an affidavit filed on behalf of TNA in its liquidation proceedings, it explained that since its launch:

    revenue streams were primarily derived from a combination of commercial and public sector advertising, bulk subscriptions from national and provincial government departments and its unique property brand known as the 'TNA business briefings'. The aforementioned briefings were embarked upon in partnership with the SABC and sponsored, inter alia, by various state-owned enterprises including but not limited to Eskom and Transnet.

18. In fact, TNA's primary client base consisted of government departments and SOEs.

ESKOM

19. TNA concluded three contracts with Eskom:

    19.1 On 13 April 2012, TNA concluded its first contract with Eskom for advertising in the newspaper (for R4 million) and sponsorship of six business breakfasts (for R7 185 628.74). The contract was concluded by Mr Jacques Roux on behalf of TNA and The Media Shop as Eskom's agent.

    19.2 On 5 November 2012, TNA concluded its second contract with Eskom. This time the contract was between TNA, represented by Mr Nazeem Howa, the Media Shop and Mr Choeu, the Divisional Executive of Corporate Affairs from June 2010 until December 2018, representing Eskom. The contract was for an additional four business breakfasts/briefings in the same 2012 financial year as the previous contract, for an additional amount of R4 million.

    19.3 On 30 April 2014, TNA concluded its third and final contract with Eskom. This contract was between Eskom, represented by Mr Colin Matjila, the acting CEO and TNA, represented by Mr Howa. This contract was for 36 business breakfasts/briefings, for an amount of R43.2 million.

Beginning of the relationship between TNA and Eskom

20. On 22 March 2011, Mr Jacques Roux, from TNA, sent an email to Mr Choeu proposing a meeting to discuss Eskom advertising with TNA newspaper and setting out an "overview of the product". The email referred to a prior telephonic conversation between Mr Roux and Mr Choeu. In his response, Mr Choeu asked that a meeting be set up. He copied Mr Pretorius, Head of Strategic Marketing at Eskom. Mr Pretorius says that this was the first time he had heard of TNA.

21. Mr Pretorius explained that the staff member responsible for communications at Eskom met with Mr Roux. Mr Pretorius explained that his role in "strategic marketing" involved marketing aimed at a specific problem or issue, such as energy saving at Eskom. This seems to have caused a delay in anything further taking place with TNA for a few months.

22. In addition, in a briefing note prepared by the Media Desk for Mr Dames, the CEO, on 10 June 2011, it was stated that the newspaper was marred in controversy. It had a mass resignation of staff because of its editorial policy and had close links to the Zuma family and the ANC. Mr Choeu admitted to knowing this information at the time. It also appears that Mr Dames would have been aware of this.

23. Mr Choeu testified that on 1 August 2011, he had a meeting with Mr Atul Gupta, Mr Dames and Mr Roux. This was a pitch about the TNA to Eskom. Mr Choeu stated that Mr Dames agreed at the meeting that he would support TNA and made a commitment to do so. Without following the usual process, Mr Dames simply committed himself to contracting with TNA on behalf of Eskom.

24. Then, in September 2011, a TNA representative, whose name Mr Pretorius could not recall, contacted the corporate marketing manager of Eskom, Mr John McArdle, who reported to Mr Pretorius. He asked Eskom to support the TNA and the Business Breakfasts/ Briefings on the SABC 2 Morning Live Show.

25. Mr McArdle arranged a meeting with the representative, together with Mr Pretorius and the General Manager for Strategic Marketing, Mr Moreme, in order to discuss the TNA proposal for advertising and Eskom's participation in the Business Breakfasts. At the meeting, the TNA representative presented a proposal about Eskom sponsoring the Business Breakfasts at a cost of R1 million per show. This was described as a breakfast to be held at a hotel in the city from which SABC 2's Morning Live Show would be broadcast. TNA sold tickets to the event and it would promote the business breakfasts through their newspaper, The New Age. The SABC also promised to promote the breakfasts.

26. Mr Pretorius testified that he declined the proposal immediately because one of the requirements for a sponsorship was that the event had to have a proven track record of success. This event had no history, no indication of circulation and no recognised brand association. He testified that he reported his views to Mr Choeu and thought the matter had been settled on that basis.

27. After this meeting, Mr Nazeem Howa, the CEO of TNA, met with Mr Choeu in his office. Mr Pretorius was invited to the meeting where the breakfast briefings were being discussed again. Mr Pretorius testified that he shared his concerns. Mr Howa then asked Mr Pretorius to leave the meeting, because they had other business to discuss, which he did.

28. During his testimony, Mr Pretorius said that when he discussed his reservations with Mr Choeu, he responded with the following: "Pieter it is an instruction. It comes from the Minister. Brian Dames had told us that you will do this." Mr Pretorius testified that he asked Mr Choeu to put this instruction in writing, but this was never done.

29. Mr Choeu denied that Mr Pretorius raised his concerns about the sponsorship deal with him. He testified that, while he did communicate to Mr Moreme and Mr Pretorius that Eskom must contract with TNA based on the outcome of the meeting with Mr Dames, Mr Pretorius never communicated any concerns about this. Mr Choeu also testified that he never told Mr Pretorius that Mr Dames instructed him to conclude the contract with TNA because this had been an instruction from the then Minister Malusi Gigaba.

30. Mr Choeu's evidence appears inconsistent. Firstly, because he conceded that he had a meeting with Mr Dames on 1 August 2011 where Mr Dames made a commitment to contract with TNA. Secondly, he had then communicated to Mr Pretorius that there would be a contract with TNA. He conceded that he told Mr Pretorius that Mr Dames had told him Eskom must contract with TNA but he denied that he had said that this was in response to concerns from Mr Pretorius about the TNA contract.

    30.1 Mr Pretorius was a frank and candid witness. He accepted responsibility for his role in the process and his role in misleading Parliament and the Public Protector about the justification for using TNA. He seemed genuinely anxious about TNA. He also did a presentation for, among others, Mr Choeu about why the TNA proposal should go through proper channels, including the Sponsorship Committee. His version is given further credence by the fact that he was excluded from the negotiations of the third contract after he gave this presentation.

30.2 On the other hand, Mr Choeu, had, on at least two occasions, denied involvement in certain decisions (such as subscriptions to TNA and witnessing Mr Pretorius's presentation) and was then forced to admit that he was involved based on documentary evidence to the contrary. He was evasive at times and did not accept responsibility for his role in the continuing contracts with TNA. This included his role in removing the early termination clause from the TNA contract for R43.2 million. The forensic auditors and the lawyers who had evaluated the facts had found that he was the one who had removed the termination clause.

30.3 Mr Pretorius's version in this regard is more plausible and credible than Mr Choeu's version.

31. Former Minister Gigaba filed an affidavit with the Commission stating that he never gave such an instruction as it would have amounted to interference with the operations of Eskom and that was not something that he did.

32. Mr Pretorius testified that this response from Mr Gigaba was false. He explained that Mr Gigaba had interfered in Eskom's operations on many occasions. He stated that there would be no reason why Mr Dames or Mr Choeu would instruct him to enter into these contracts without an instruction from "somebody higher up".

33. On 20 March 2012, Mr Choeu emailed Mr Pretorius asking him to meet with Mr Roux "so you can close the deal on the TNA 49M Breakfasts as part of the Minister's National Campaign". Mr Pretorius explained that the 49M (the population of South Africa being around 49 million at the time) campaign was a campaign about energy saving which was aimed at higher income groups (LSM 8-10), encouraging them not to waste energy.

34. Mr Pretorius asked for a proposal to consider in advance of the meeting, which would deal with both the sponsorship of business breakfasts and advertising in the newspaper. Mr Pretorius explained that, while he still retained concerns about doing business with TNA, he was just carrying out the instruction that he had been given by Mr Choeu.

35. On 21 March 2012, Mr Mzwandile Radebe's gmail account began being copied in on emails between TNA and Eskom. Mr Radebe was the liaison between the Minister, the Department of Public Enterprises and Eskom. Mr Pretorius testified that he found this very unusual and that it was an indication to him that the instruction to work with TNA came from the top. Mr Radebe at that time was giving verbal orders to many of the SOEs and they were, according to Mr Pretorius, expected to do as he said, or he would report them to the Minister.

36. Mr Roux and Mr Pretorius then met, and Mr Roux presented a proposal for both advertising and sponsorship. Mr Pretorius asked Eskom's appointed media buying agency, The Media Shop, to come up with a more palatable proposal as Mr Roux's proposal required far too large a spend.

37. On 27 March 2012, Mr Donald Liphoko of The Media Shop sent an email to Mr Pretorius stating that Mr Moreme (referred to as "Kheepe") had impressed upon him the importance of the proposal with TNA and that Eskom had committed R10 million to the TNA, including business breakfasts and newspaper advertising. This would involve R7 million for 6 business breakfasts over the period of a year as well as advertising spend. Not long thereafter, on 13 April 2012, Eskom signed its first contract with TNA for over R10 million.

Irregular contracts

Proper procedure

38. In order to understand whether the contracts outlined above were unlawful and/or irregular, it is necessary to understand the legislative framework governing public spending and the policy processes in place at Eskom (and indeed Transnet and SAA).

39. As to the legislative scheme, the following provisions are relevant:

39.1 Section 217(1) of the Constitution provides that when an organ of state in the national, provincial or local sphere of government, or any other institution identified in national legislation, contracts for goods or services, it must do so in accordance with a system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective.

39.2 Eskom, Transnet and SAA are classified as schedule 2 "Major Public Entities" under the PFMA.

39.3 The PFMA defines "fruitless and wasteful expenditure" as expenditure made in vain and which would have been avoided had reasonable care been exercised. It defines "irregular expenditure" as expenditure incurred in contravention of applicable legislation or as expenditure that is not in accordance with a requirement of any applicable legislation.

39.4 Section 57 of the PFMA sets out the legal obligations of an official of a public entity. It provides that an official must:

39.4.1 Ensure that the system of financial management and internal control established for that entity is carried out within the area of responsibility of that official;

39.4.2 Be responsible for the effective, efficient, economical and transparent use of financial and other resources within that official's area of responsibility;

39.4.3 Take effective and appropriate steps to prevent, within that official's area of responsibility, any irregular expenditure and fruitless and wasteful expenditure; and

39.4.4 Comply with the provisions of the PFMA including any delegations and instructions under section 56.

40. These provisions of the PFMA will become vital in understanding and evaluating the actions of the Board, particularly in respect of the third TNA contract. The Board must ensure there are internal financial controls in Eskom, that Eskom and its officials follow any policies set out to enhance transparency, accountability and competitive processes, and importantly, to ensure that it does not permit officials to make irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure. Further, in instances where any official does so, the Board is required to ensure that disciplinary action is taken against such officials.

41. In addition to these responsibilities, the following provisions of the PFMA are also relevant:

41.1 Section 83(1) provides that an accounting authority for a public entity commits an act of financial misconduct if that authority wilfully or negligently fails to comply with sections 50, 51, 52, 53, 54 or 55 or makes or permits an irregular expenditure or a fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

41.2 Section 83(2) provides that, if the authority is a board, then the members of the Board are individually and severally liable for any financial misconduct of the authority.

41.3 Section 83(3) provides that an official of a public entity to whom a power or duty is assigned in terms of section 56, commits an act of financial misconduct if that official wilfully or negligently fails to exercise that power or perform that duty.

41.4 Section 83(4) provides that financial misconduct is a ground for dismissal or suspension of, or other sanction against, a member or person mentioned in (2) or (3).

41.5 Section 86(2) provides that an accounting authority is guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years, if that accounting authority wilfully or in a grossly negligent way fails to comply with sections 50, 51 or 55.

41.6 Regulation 33.1.1 of the Treasury Regulations provides that if an employee is alleged to have committed financial misconduct, the accounting authority of the public entity must ensure that an investigation is conducted into the matter and, if confirmed, must ensure that a disciplinary hearing is held in accordance with the relevant prescripts.

42. As to the relevant processes and policies applicable at Eskom regarding these matters, Mr Pretorius testified that, in so far as advertising was concerned, the process was as follows:

42.1 Eskom would prepare a briefing document with the particular issue that it was seeking to advertise. Eskom would then appoint a media buying agency through a transparent commercial process. The agency was responsible for designing a media buying strategy to meet Eskom's specific advertising needs as set out in the briefing document. The agency would conduct research and indicate which media tools were best designed to meet the target audience. They would prepare a media plan on which Eskom would sign off.

42.2 Mr Pretorius explained that the most important thing for Eskom to consider was "frequency" and "reach". The frequency is the number of times an advertisement would appear in a particular medium. The reach was the number and type of people that would be exposed to the advert in a particular medium. The media buying agency was tasked with researching the reach of the medium. This would involve assessing the circulation of the newspaper.

42.3 Eskom had a policy that it would only deal with accredited publications whose viewership had been audited. This meant publications whose circulation figures the Audited Bureau of Circulation (ABC) had verified. The agency would assess the circulation and the price to assess the most cost-effective options and present a strategy document for Eskom to consider and approve. Mr Pretorius explained that it would be highly unusual for Eskom to spend on a medium where no market research had been conducted or verified. While Eskom would try to support new entrants into the media market, it would do so with a small amount of support and then, once there had been some audit of the publication's circulation figures, Eskom would begin to give the publication more support.

43. Mr Pretorius testified that for sponsorship approval, the process was different. He explained it as follows:

43.1 Sponsorship is a commercial transaction between the sponsor and the sponsorship property owner to secure some benefit for the sponsor. The sponsor would determine whether to enter the agreement based on an understanding that they would get more business through the sponsorship exposure. The sponsorship deal would also need to include advertising – to "leverage" the sponsorship. Every R1 used for sponsorship, ordinarily requires R3 for the publicity surrounding it.

43.2 Policy documents created by Eskom set out the criteria for sponsorship approval and the sponsorship desk would apply this policy to any proposal. If, based on the criteria, the applicant scored more than 75%, then the request for sponsorship would go to the Sponsorship Committee for approval – provided there was a budget for it. Once the Sponsorship Committee had approved the sponsorship, Eskom's marketing team would negotiate the responsibilities and the terms of the contract with the sponsorship property owner.

43.3 According to Eskom's sponsorship policy document applicable at the time, if any proposed sponsorship was over R50 000, it had to go to the Sponsorship Committee for approval. Anything less than this amount could be approved by the relevant executive responsible for the sponsorship. The Sponsorship Committee had the power to approve sponsorship of up to R10 million but anything higher had to be approved by the Electricity Council. That is equivalent to the Board under the new dispensation.

43.4 The policy also required a return on investment. This meant that the contract of sponsorship needed various safeguards to ensure impact and results.

43.5 Mr Pretorius confirmed that it would be "very wrong" for a sponsorship to be approved without going through this process and meeting the criteria set out in the policy document. He could not recall any instances of any deviation from these processes prior to the TNA's proposals to Eskom.

Deviation from procedure

44. The first TNA contract, which was from 1 April 2012 to 31 March 2013 and covered six business breakfasts as well as advertising in TNA, was irregular:

    44.1 Mr Pretorius confirmed that while the proposal for the first contract from TNA claimed it had circulation of 100 000 people, this figure could not be verified because TNA was not registered with the ABC.

    44.2 In deciding the cost of advertising, it was important to assess both circulation and the actual readership. The ABC provided circulation figures, other measures, such as All Media and Products Study (AMPS), provided the results of behavioural studies that determine readership. TNA had neither.

    44.3 Mr Pretorius testified that there was no available budget for this expenditure at the time the contract was concluded. Mr Choeu conceded there was no budget for the TNA contract when it was concluded. The additional budget had to be sourced from the Investment and Capital Assurance Committee (ICAC) in June 2012. R6 million was approved for this purpose.

    44.4 The sponsorship never went to the Sponsorship Committee and it was not assessed according to the sponsorship criteria in Eskom's policy thereby breaching the policy requirements for sponsorship. Mr Choeu conceded that the contracts were, therefore, irregular and in breach of the sponsorship policy. He also conceded that it was not customary to go to Media Shop and stipulate that they must spend R6 million.

    44.5 He also agreed that it was very unusual for Eskom to sponsor an enterprise, in order for that enterprise to make profits. Mr Choeu testified that he began to form this negative view of TNA around the time of the Parliamentary questions about TNA and the negative media reporting. These two events meant that contracting with TNA could have reputational risks for Eskom. According to Mr Choeu, that was why Eskom did not contract with TNA for a year after the second contract (from April 2013 to May 2014).

    44.6 Mr Choeu corroborated Mr Pretorius's evidence that there was a link in the timing between Minister Gigaba appearing on the Business Breakfasts on 12 April 2012 and the conclusion of the first contract. Mr Gigaba's response to this was that it was an internal matter for Eskom if it decided to sponsor a business breakfast because he was speaking at the event. In addition, Mr Gigaba testified that there was value in the business breakfasts because they had "a large viewership" and were attended by "business people from different angles". However, as is set out below, the viewership of the SABC's Morning Live Show presented limited value to the SOEs because the briefings themselves were not focused on the SOEs. Also, there were many opportunities for the SOEs to engage with "business people" without having to pay R1 million a time to do so.

    44.7 Mr Pretorius testified that he raised his concerns about the first contract with Mr Choeu on several occasions. He said that he was concerned not only about the fact that Eskom was receiving no value from the contract but also because internal governance procedures had been flouted. Mr Pretorius testified that Mr Choeu would tell him not to make himself sick with worry about this issue because they were being forced or instructed to do this. As set out above, Mr Choeu denied this happened, but Mr Pretorius's version is more likely to be true.

45. The second contract, which was for four business breakfasts and no advertising, was for the same financial year as the first one and added four breakfasts to the existing six in 2012:

    45.1 Mr Pretorius testified that he had even greater concerns regarding the conclusion of the second contract because Parliament had started to raise queries about TNA. He explained that under the sponsorship policy, there had to be monitoring and evaluation of the success and effectiveness of a sponsorship before it could be entered into again. No such evaluation was conducted before this contract was concluded.

    45.2 The second contract was not concluded just between the Media Shop as Eskom's agent, and TNA. This time, Eskom itself became a party. This was to ensure that TNA was paid on preferential and faster terms than usually paid by Media Shop to vendors.

45.3 Unlike the first agreement, this second agreement was tabled before the Sponsorship Committee. On 20 July 2012, only Mr Choeu and one other member approved the proposal, while eight other members rejected it. Mr Pretorius testified that he assumed the contract should nevertheless go ahead, despite the resolution, because of Mr Choeu's instructions in respect of TNA. This assumption was confirmed for Mr Pretorius, by the fact that it was Mr Choeu who signed the second contract. Mr Pretorius testified that he was asked to sign the second contract but refused to do so because there had been Parliamentary questions about TNA and its links to the Guptas, and Mr Pretorius did not want to be associated with it.

45.4 Mr Choeu accepted that the second contract was rejected by the Sponsorship Committee which gave him pause for thought. However, Mr Choeu testified and admitted that even after the Sponsorship Committee had rejected the proposal for a second contract, he signed it anyway, despite knowing that it was irregular, because of pressure from the CEO (Mr Dames) and the Minister (Mr Gigaba) to continue with the business breakfasts for the 49M campaign. Mr Choeu accepted that the second contract was irregular.

46. In between the second and third contracts, there was also an ad hoc TNA sponsorship that Eskom approved.

46.1 Mr Choeu testified that, even though after the conclusion of the period of the second contract (April 2013), he had resolved not to do more business or enter into another contract with TNA because of the reputational problems it caused Eskom. He nevertheless approved an ad hoc business breakfast at which Minister Gigaba would be speaking. He says he did this, despite disagreeing with the decision, because it came from the CEO's office.

46.2 Mr Choeu testified that he met regularly with Mr Dames, the CEO, who instructed him to agree to this additional ad hoc arrangement. He said he thought it would be insubordination not to do what the CEO told him to do.

47. The third contract, to sponsor 36 TNA business breakfasts/briefings for R43.2 million, was also irregular:

47.1 In April 2014, Mr Matjila was appointed as the acting CEO. There was a restructuring in the governance of Eskom and Mr Choeu was no longer a member of Exco. Instead, he was a divisional head reporting to Ms Erica Johnson, who in turn, reported to Mr Matjila.

47.2 Mr Choeu testified that Mr Matjila told Ms Johnson that he wanted Eskom to sponsor the business breakfasts for three years. Ms Johnson told Mr Choeu that she had warned Mr Matjila that the business breakfasts were not a good idea and were not good for Eskom's reputation. Mr Matjila responded that he would deal with all of those problems – he had the authority to conclude the contract and Mr Choeu and Ms Johnson should just worry about creating the correct source document for auditing purposes.

47.3 Despite Mr Choeu testifying that he was uncomfortable with the sponsorship agreement, he nevertheless proceeded to prepare a proposal endorsing it.

47.4 In this third contract, the cost per breakfast event was going to be R1.2 million. This increase had already been approved by the CEO when Mr Choeu put the proposal together. This was ultimately negotiated down to R1 million per event, provided that Eskom agreed to more events – up to 36 business breakfasts.

47.5 Mr Choeu explained that it was as though Eskom was required to comply with whatever TNA wanted it to do and that it was the CEO that created this situation. He also confirmed that a lot of the pressure that the Eskom staff felt to endorse the contract was because they could see that the Gupta family were very powerful and had connections to the then President.

47.6 Mr Choeu's proposal for the third TNA contract for R43 million contained certain "key assumptions", including that the sponsorship of the business briefings contributed to an 87% awareness of the 49M campaign. However, Mr Choeu admitted that the "study" that was conducted about consumer awareness pertained to the entire 49M campaign and not the business breakfasts. He conceded that the business breakfasts could have contributed anything between 1% and 20% - he did not know. He ultimately agreed that he should have removed this section from the proposal because it was not, in fact, possible to establish a causal link between the business briefings and awareness of the 49M campaign.

47.7 Mr Cheou acknowledged that at the time of writing this proposal he was against the TNA and the sponsorship. He also accepted that he should not have signed a document that did not reflect his views. He justified his conduct on the basis that "in Corporate that's how we do it".

47.8 But Mr Choeu did not present this to the Sponsorship Committee. Instead, the matter was dealt with directly by Mr Choeu and the acting CEO, Mr Matjila. It was never submitted to, nor approved by, the Sponsorship Committee. Therefore, this contract also failed to comply with the Eskom policy requirements for sponsorships.

47.9 The negotiations for the contract were concluded between Mr Howa and Mr Choeu. Mr Pretorius was no longer involved in the discussions around TNA.

47.10 The third contract was between Eskom and TNA directly – Media Shop was no longer involved. Mr Pretorius explained that the contract was for R43 million, which was more than the entire marketing budget of Eskom.

Mr Matjila was not authorised to sign the third contract

48. The contract was ultimately signed by Mr Matjila. Mr Choeu testified that he was aware that a sponsorship over R3 million had to be approved by Eskom's Board. There was a report compiled by Sizwe Ntsaluba Gobodo (SNG), an auditing and forensics firm, which concluded that Mr Matjila, as acting CEO, exceeded his authority in concluding the contract.

49. Law firm Ledwaba Mazwai confirmed these findings and concluded that the contract was unlawful and irregular insofar as there was no budget approved for it and Mr Matjila's delegation of authority did not cover contracts of R43 million. The Report also concluded that Mr Matjila had breached various legal obligations in signing the contract, including his fiduciary duties to Eskom, delegated duties of the accounting authority, and the duties of an official of a public entity under the PFMA.

No termination clause

50. The report also found that the agreement had been concluded without a termination clause, which was very unusual. Mr Pretorius explained that because of the volatility of the Eskom business and budget, they had to have an "enabling" contract, which allowed Eskom to exit the contract and not be bound to use advertising if it did not wish to. The report found that it was Mr Choeu who was responsible for removing that clause, to the detriment of Eskom, and that disciplinary action should be taken against him.

51. The Commission's investigations established the following:

51.1 On 24 April 2014, Mr Choeu sent a copy of the third sponsorship contract to Mr Matjila. Prior to this, the contract had been reviewed by the Eskom lawyers and certain changes had been made, one of which was in Clause 2.2 where an exit clause had been inserted. It stated, "Eskom reserves the right to withdraw its sponsorship at any time in the event of a breach by TNA Media of any of the terms of this agreement or for any other reason on 30 days written notice to TNA."

51.2 Mr Choeu testified that he advised Mr Matjila that, because the contract was in excess of R3 million, it had to be approved by the Chief Executive in consultation with Exco. Also, it had to be subject to the approved budget.

51.3 On 29 April 2014, Mr Howa wrote to Mr Choeu, and said that the draft contract was different to "the one agreed between us previously". He had a problem with the exit clause that allowed Eskom to exit the contract on notice (i.e. without breach) and stated "I am sure this is an oversight in drafting and is easily correctible. After which I would be happy to receive a corrected version."

51.4 Mr Choeu acknowledged in evidence that this was a key protection for Eskom and certainly not an "oversight" in drafting. Mr Choeu forwarded the email to the legal team, including Mr Mohamed Adam, the Senior General Manager for Legal and Compliance in Eskom, and asked them to respond. Mr Adam responded, "Choeu, you need to make a call based on commercial need. It was not an oversight. It was deliberately drafted to allow for cancellation on 30 days' notice. I would recommend retaining our wording."

51.5 Mr Choeu claimed during his testimony that after this he would have informed the CEO about this and would have responded to Mr Howa to inform him that this clause was what Eskom wanted. However, this is not supported by the correspondence. Instead, Mr Choeu responded a couple of days later, on 2 May 2014. In this email to Mr Matjila, he said that the parties had reached agreement on most clauses but TNA did not want Eskom to include the exit clauses on 30 days' notice. He then said, "[y]ou will notice that they have removed the clause from both signed versions of the contracts."

51.6 The contract itself was signed by Mr Matjila for Eskom on 30 April 2014. It was witnessed by Mr Choeu on that same date. It is clear that Mr Choeu knew about the removal of the termination clause because of Mr Adam's email to him indicating that it should be retained to protect Eskom. If Mr Matjila did know that the provision had been removed, then he knowingly acted against Eskom's best interests. In any event, both he and Mr Choeu concluded this contract with TNA for R43.2 million at a time when TNA was mired in controversy, questioned by Parliament and the Public Protector, and the contract offered Eskom no verifiable value.

52. Mr Choeu testified that he had no idea the Sizwe Ntsaluba Gobodo report made findings against him in this regard or that they made recommendations about the taking of disciplinary action against him. He confirmed that no such disciplinary action was ever taken against him.

Fruitless and wasteful expenditure

53. The business breakfasts would involve a Minister or official appearing at the breakfast. The most exposure that Eskom gained from these breakfasts was some opportunity to display its branding at the breakfast, which included hanging some banners. While Eskom would be given an opportunity to speak, this would not be on the air. Mr Pretorius testified that there would not be value to Eskom in spending money on such an event and it "did not make sense" to him.

54. Mr Pretorius explained that it was not even the Eskom logo or colours that were displayed, but, rather, the 49M logo, with different colours. Because the banners and the show provided no context for the logo, market research showed that many people thought 49M was a radio station and had no association with Eskom or energy saving.

55. In addition, the Morning Live Show was not even aimed at or watched by the target audience for the 49M campaign because those people would have already been at work at that time. Mr Pretorius therefore testified that he would not have paid R1 million for a breakfast and would have negotiated a totally different package but was "forced" to agree to this one.

56. Mr Pretorius explained that all Eskom would get for this R1 million was two tables of 10 people at the event. He said the reputation of the breakfasts and TNA was so bad that they eventually struggled to fill those seats. Eskom would pay for the costs of the event – the venue hire, décor and food. Mr Pretorius explained that the rest of the tables were sold by TNA to make money. Accordingly, the costing charged to Eskom made no sense. If the money was not going to paying the costs of the event and TNA was selling seats to make profits, where was Eskom's sponsorship money going? Eskom was, after all, spending public money. In fact, TNA was not even required to pay SABC 2 for using its time on Morning Live.

57. Mr Pretorius also explained that, if they wanted to get a message out to the public on load shedding, it would have been a matter of public interest and they could have just called a press conference for free.

58. In so far as the reach of the TNA's newspaper circulation was concerned, when TNA claimed to have a distribution of 100 000, this was simply how many copies of the newspaper it printed. TNA claimed to sell 39 000 of these and the rest were dropped off for free at various SOEs. The Media Shop determined that TNA was only reaching 0.5% of the target LSMs of the 49M campaign. They also researched, using estimates of readership (circulation figures not being available), that the cost to reach one person under TNA was R317 whereas the cost per person with Business Day, for example, is R276.47. Accordingly, the publication also did not provide value for money as compared to its competitors.

59. Mr Pretorius said that, as a marketer, he did not believe that Eskom derived any benefit from these events or the advertising and there were no verified circulation figures from which to assess such value.

60. Mr Choeu did not consider it his responsibility to worry about wasteful expenditure of public funds. He conceded that this was his concern under the first two contracts, but not the third as the CEO took over this responsibility.

61. This evidence clearly shows that there was no or negligible value for Eskom in sponsoring the TNA business breakfasts. It also shows that the advertising spend for The New Age newspaper was unjustified and its effectiveness could simply not be measured.

62. The Board of Eskom, when called to ratify the third (R43.2 million) TNA contract, at no point evaluated the commercial value of the contract. The only thing that the Board did do was to stipulate that Eskom must "extract maximum value" from the contract. However, Mr Pretorius explained that the Strategic Marketing Department, which would have been charged with this responsibility, did nothing to extract value from the contract. Mr Pamensky, member of the 2014 incoming Eskom Board that passed this resolution also admitted that the Board never followed up to make sure this happened.

Eskom Board's ratification of the third contract

"Compliant" facilitator CEOs

63. Shortly after Mr Matjila had joined Eskom as the acting CEO, he approved the third TNA contract from which the early termination protection had been deleted. A complaint about the third contract was lodged with the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) of Eskom. As a result, an investigation was launched.

64. During the investigation, it appeared that Mr Matjila had been improperly attempting to influence and communicate with the investigation team at Sizwe Ntsaluba Gobodo (SNG). For example, he sent an email to one of the investigators asking for details about the investigation. Mr Tsotsi, Chairperson of the Eskom Board from 2011 until the end of March 2015, testified that he had no knowledge of this but it was surprising, given that Mr Matjila was the subject of the investigation. According to Mr Tsotsi, it would not have been appropriate for Mr Matjila to involve himself in an investigation in this way when he was the subject of the investigation. The reasonable inference from this conduct is that Mr Matjila felt he had something to hide.

Timeline of the ratification of the third contract – the outgoing Board

65. Mr Tsotsi explained that the third contract came to the Board's attention through a whistle-blower who approached the ARC and claimed Mr Matjila had not followed proper procedure in concluding the R43.2 million contract. Before approaching the Board, the ARC reached the conclusion that the contract was irregular and that they required a forensic audit to establish whether this was the case. SNG was appointed as the audit firm.

66. Mr Tsotsi testified that while the investigation was going on, Mr Tony Gupta called him and asked to see him at the Sahara offices in Midrand. Mr Tsotsi went to the meeting at which Mr Gupta expressed a concern about the investigation into Mr Matjila's signing of the TNA contract and wanted Mr Tsotsi to "make it go away". Mr Tsotsi testified that Mr Tony Gupta said that the investigation was impeding the conclusion of the contract. He then told Mr Gupta that he did not have the authority to stop the investigation. He testified that Mr Gupta was visibly upset and remarked that Mr Tsotsi was not interested in helping him.

67. Despite Mr Tsotsi's claim that he refused to help Mr Gupta, on 16 October 2014, Mr Tsotsi instructed the company secretary of Eskom to write to SNG instructing it not to release its report on the TNA contract until he had first spoken to SNG's chairman and CEO. Mr Tsotsi claimed that this was because Mr Matjila felt he was not getting fair treatment in this investigation. However, in the light of the request from Mr Gupta, this conduct on Mr Tsotsi's part seems suspicious, particularly because later in the year, Mr Tsotsi was one of only two members of the Board who were allowed to be part of the next Board of Eskom. If the Guptas were too unhappy with him, they would not have allowed him to go to the next Board.

68. On 29 October 2014, the Public Protector wrote to Mr Tsotsi. The letter stated that the Public Protector had read in the media that Mr Matjila had signed a R43.2 million contract with TNA. The letter stated that the Public Protector was dismayed to see the contract was concluded despite the fact that she was investigating the legality of the other two TNA contracts. This was particularly so in circumstances where the contract was concluded against internal legal advice and was in excess of the sponsorship budget. She implored Mr Tsotsi, in the interests of corporate governance, transparency and accountability, to hold the new contract in abeyance pending the release of her provisional report in respect of the first two TNA contracts at Eskom.

69. On 31 October 2014, a new Eskom CEO, Mr Tshediso Matona, was appointed. Mr Matjila reverted to serving Eskom only in the capacity of a member of the Board and resigned from the Board in December 2014.

70. In his evidence, Mr Tsotsi denied that Mr Matjila's removal had anything to do with the TNA contract or the letter from the Public Protector, but the timing indicates there may well have been some connection.

71. On 7 November 2014, the ARC sent the SNG report to the Board. The key conclusions of the SNG investigation report were that the contract was irregular because it did not fall under Mr Matjila's delegation of authority and that it was a sponsorship and not an investment. The guidelines set out for sponsorship agreements had not been followed. In addition, the report found that the early termination clause had been removed against the advice of the legal department at Eskom. The report found that Mr Choeu and Mr Matjila had been responsible for the removal of the clause.

72. On 24 November 2014, there was a Board meeting. At the meeting, the Board discussed the findings of the investigation. The auditors addressed the Board on what steps had to be taken to address the irregularity in the interim financial statements.

73. Mr Tsotsi testified that one of the recommendations from the SNG report was that Eskom should obtain a legal opinion on the disciplinary action it should take against Mr Matjila and Mr Choeu, as well as the company's position in respect of the contract. The Board therefore instructed a law firm, Ledwaba Mazwai, to provide an opinion on the legal effects of Mr Matjila's conduct in regard to the third TNA contract.

74. The next Board meeting occurred on 3 December 2014. At this meeting, the Board considered Ledwaba Mazwai's advice. The minutes of the meeting record that Mr Mazwai's report back was that if the contract was ratified there would be no irregularity; that Mr Matjila had exceeded his authority in concluding the contract; and that Mr Choeu had removed the termination clause against legal advice, but that Mr Matjila appeared not to have known about this. It is not clear whether Mr Mazwai was aware of the email from Mr Choeu to Mr Matjila of 2 May 2014 in which he alerted Mr Matjila to the termination clause's removal.

75. Mr Mazwai also indicated in his advice to the Board that disciplinary action should be taken against Mr Choeu. The minutes of the 3 December 2014 meeting reflect that the Board took the view that it was not their responsibility to take disciplinary action against Mr Choeu because he did not report to the Board and was an employee of Eskom. However, the PFMA provides that the Board was the accounting authority of Eskom and was responsible for ensuring that appropriate disciplinary action be taken where someone was engaging in irregular expenditure.

76. Mr Tsotsi confirmed that he understood that it was the Board's responsibility to take effective disciplinary action against Eskom employees who committed irregular or wasteful expenditure and that the Board was expected to do so when it discussed and deliberated upon the R43.2 million contract. Mr Tsotsi testified that the minutes do not reflect this understanding but that it was indeed what was discussed and agreed at the meeting. He said that the Board had intended for management to execute the required disciplinary process.

77. This position was confirmed by Mr Mkwanazi's testimony. Mr Mkwanazi, another outgoing member of the Eskom Board, also testified about the SNG forensic report and the conclusions it reached about Mr Matjila and Mr Choeu and their misconduct under the PFMA. He agreed that the Board had an obligation under the PFMA to take action in this regard.

78. The minutes of the meeting of 3 December 2014 reflected that "from the standpoint of the financial status of Eskom, the contract could not be regarded as a good contract". It was resolved that a special Board meeting should be convened on 8 December 2014 to "finalise this issue". On 4 December 2014, the Board received Ledwaba Mazwai's final report. The report was to the effect that the Board could ratify the contract if it represented good value for money when compared to the costs of sponsorship. Ledwaba Mazwai confirmed that they could not offer any input into whether the contract was good value for money. They said that the Board would have to make this judgement call itself.

79. On 8 December 2014, the Board had another meeting. Mr Tsotsi testified that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss the legal opinion. The Board made a note that under the National Treasury regulations, it was required to notify the Minister, National Treasury and the Auditor General of Mr Matjila's conduct. It was found that he was in wilful breach of the PFMA requirements and this conduct had to be reported. However, Mr Tsotsi testified that he did not recall this ever having happened and there were no records that this was done. He conceded that it ought to have been done.

80. The minutes also stated that the Board had to determine whether the contract was wasteful and fruitless expenditure based on whether it had commercial value. The minutes recorded that Mr Tsotsi noted that the discussions up to that point had been about irregularity and that this should be separated from the issue of fruitless and wasteful expenditure – i.e. the commercial value of the contract. He stated that "the Board had to be convinced that the contract was not a bad one." Thereafter, Ms Luthuli, who was the Chair of ARC at the time, recorded that "the handover report had to reflect that the Board had considered whether or not the contract was a bad one and had concluded that the contract was not good at this time."

81. Mr Mkwanazi, non-executive director of the Eskom Board from June 2011 to December 2014, stated that the reference to the contract being a "bad contract" in the minutes of the meeting 8 December 2014 of the Board was both that it did not have an exit clause and that Eskom was experiencing financial difficulties at the time and did not have a budget for this expense. He said that to spend R43 million on this contract would make it a "bad contract". Mr Mkwanazi also confirmed that this conclusion about it being a bad contract had to be conveyed to the new Board through the handover report. The Board also resolved at this meeting that Ledwaba Mazwai and the company secretary should prepare a summary and final resolution on the discussions and decisions around the TNA Sponsorship contract for signing by the chairperson of the Board and the ARC for inclusion in the handover report to the new Board.

82. The outgoing Board did not vote on the ratification of the contract, even though it had received the reports of SNG and Ledwaba Mazwai and had already received Mr Matjila's representations on the value of the contract and its regularity (dated 27 November 2014), prior to their final meeting on 8 December 2014. This suggests that it was not yet in a position to vote on the ratification and wanted further information in order to do so. However, when the new Board came in, they were given no additional information and yet saw it fit to ratify the contract.

The timeline of the ratification – the incoming Board

83. There had been advertisements for new Eskom Board members in September 2014. Mr Gigaba had been Minister of Public Enterprises from 1 November 2010 to May 2014. He was succeeded by Ms Lynne Brown.

84. There was evidence presented to the Commission that Mr Tony Gupta and his associate Mr Salim Essa were close to Minister Brown and that they were involved with Minister Brown's selections of the new Board and the allocation of Board members to different Board committees. Mr Tsotsi testified that Mr Essa sent him a document stating which Board committees he had been allocated to; and then Minister Brown sent him a document setting out an identical allocation. In addition, Mr Tsotsi testified that he was summoned to Minister Brown's house briefly and instructed to make allocations as set out in the document from Mr Essa.

85. Mr Pamensky, a member of this new Board, testified that he discovered the Board position being advertised around 28 September 2014 and felt he had the appropriate skills to apply for the position. However, it transpired that he was also, at the time of applying for the position, a director of Oakbay Resources and Energy Limited – a Gupta-affiliated company. He became a director on 25 September 2014, a matter of days before the advert came out for the Eskom board position and his application for that role. Mr Pamensky testified that he became a director of Oakbay after being approached by Mr Atul Gupta. He also explained that he met Mr Tony Gupta in June 2014 at the Gupta home in Saxonwold. Then he had a follow up meeting with Mr Atul Gupta in August 2014.

86. This information, together with Minister Brown's close association with the Guptas during the selection of the new Board, raises serious questions about the Board's independence. This was the very Board that went on to approve and ratify the R43.2 million contract with TNA.

87. The new Board had its first meeting on 16 January 2015. At no point during this meeting was the ratification of the R43.2 million contract discussed, despite the fact that it had been held over from the previous year and required attention. The next Board meeting was scheduled for 16 February 2016. However, between these two dates, a round robin resolution was circulated for the Board to ratify the R43 million TNA contract.

88. Furthermore, contrary to the intentions of the previous Board, the handover report to the new Board made no mention of the findings of the previous Board regarding the financial value of the contract and it being a bad one for Eskom at the time. Mr Pamensky testified that the "outstanding issues" portion of the ARC report in the Board's handover reports, indicated to him that the irregular expenditure issue of the TNA contract had been dealt with by the previous Board and was therefore not an issue coming across for the new Board to deal with.

89. Mr Tsotsi confirmed that the minutes from the Board meetings of 24 November, 3 December and 8 December 2014 should also have formed part of the handover report but were inadvertently excluded. He conceded that, when the new Board voted on the round robin resolution regarding the TNA contract, there was important communication that the new Board should have seen about the old Board's view on the TNA contract. Mr Pamensky testified that, now having read the minutes of 3 December 2014, it was relevant that the old Board had determined it was necessary to assess whether there was value in the TNA contract. He also confirmed that, as a new member of the Board, he believed it was necessary for him to know about the minutes of the 3 and 8 December 2014 meetings and the conclusion that the contract with TNA was a "bad contract". In fact, he said the remaining directors were "duty bound" to inform the new Board of this.

90. Mr Tsotsi testified that it would have been the job of the secretariat to convey the correct handover information to the new Board. But he accepted that he and Ms Mabude were the only two non-executive directors who were retained from the old Board and therefore the only ones who would have known about the need to ensure that the correct information was given to the new Board. Mr

Tsotsi accepted that as Chair of the Board and an old Board member, he was responsible for ensuring the handover information was correct and that the Board's views at the 8 December 2014 meeting were accurately reflected.

91. The round robin resolution was circulated on 3 February 2015. The document contained a "summary of facts". Despite Mr Tsotsi having signed the document to confirm that its contents were correct, he admitted during his testimony that he did not in fact read the document and he now accepted that there were errors in it. He explained that he realised later that the document erroneously stated that Mr Choeu was no longer an employee of Eskom. Mr Tsotsi admitted that even though he realised there were errors in the document, he did not go back to the Board members after they had cast their votes to alert them to these errors. He said he was going to explain the errors at the next Board meeting of 19 March 2015 but the minutes of that meeting do not reflect that this was discussed.

92. The round robin statement was also incorrect in a number of ways as outlined below:

    92.1 It stated that the SNG report was only presented to the Board on 8 December 2014, when it was already with them on 24 November 2014.

    92.2 It stated that the parties involved in the TNA contract were "no longer within the sphere of Eskom's operations". This was not true as Mr Choeu was still an employee.

    92.3 There was also a statement that Mr Tsotsi admitted did not make any sense. This is that statement read: "The parties involved [it is not clear which parties] had divergent views on the specific aspects of the matter as such scarce resources would have to be deployed to bring these contentious matters to finality."

    92.4 It also stated: "Considering the representations made by the then Interim CEO, there exists a difference of interpretation regarding the provisions of the Company's Delegations of Authority ("DoA") that needs to be reviewed and clarified further in order to close any gaps which may be present." However, Ledwaba Mazwai had rejected Mr Matjila's interpretation of his delegation of authority. Mr Matjila's version was that the TNA contract was an investment and the delegation allowed him to conclude investment agreements to the value of the TNA contract. Ledwaba Mazwai, however, considered there to be no merit in this interpretation. Mr Matjila's interpretation was simply untenable. Therefore, for the round robin statement to have framed this as a legitimate "difference of interpretation" was misleading. Mr Tsotsi testified that he did not write this statement and he did not vet the document well enough. Had he done so, he would have phrased this point differently.

    92.5 The most egregious misrepresentation in the document is the statement that "The Board recognizes that there is value in platforms that enable Eskom to interact with the public to communicate and garner support for the work that it is doing to ensure that South Africa has sufficient energy". This directly contradicts the finding of the previous Board that this was not a good contract for Eskom and that no investigation at all had been done into the commercial value of the contract.

93. Mr Tsotsi testified that the Board had to determine whether to cancel or ratify the contract and they ultimately decided it was better to ratify it because there would be considerable financial implications for Eskom.

94. Mr Tsotsi admitted that Mr Choeu was supposed to be disciplined and this was part of the fiduciary duties of the Board. Mr Tsotsi accepted that the new Board was misled about Mr Choeu's continued employment at Eskom. However, he testified that he left the Board of Eskom at the end of March 2015 and so did not know what the Board did in this regard. His failure to ensure that this took place was a dereliction of duty. Leaving the organisation is no excuse. It ought to have been part of the round robin resolution or resolved shortly thereafter.

95. Mr Tsotsi also confirmed that Eskom never even attempted to renegotiate the contract with TNA.

The breached obligations of the Board

96. The number of inaccuracies in the round robin resolution; the fact that the round robin resolution was used instead of a proper Board meeting, when there was a new Board and the outgoing Board had seen it fit to meet several times regarding the TNA issue; the fact that Mr Tsotsi – upon realising how many mistakes and omissions were in the round robin resolution – does not appear to have ever corrected them with the incoming Board; together with his interactions with the Guptas and his actions in respect of the Public Protector, seems to indicate that there is a very real possibility that Mr Tsotsi actively sought to "sweep the contract under the rug" and try to have it ratified.

97. This could have been, as Mr Mkwanazi's evidence seemed to indicate, from the desire to just fix an "irregularity" that would have been a headache for the Board from an auditing perspective. But this could have also been more sinister stemming from direct or indirect pressure from the Guptas or their sympathisers. Regardless, even if Mr Tsotsi did not wilfully attempt to influence the ratification of the contract, at best for him he acted negligently and in contravention of his fiduciary duties and his legal duties as a member of an accounting authority of a public entity. This negligence facilitated irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

98. As for the other members of the Board, Mr Pamensky testified that had he known information that was not apparent from the round robin draft resolution, he would have been more sceptical about ratifying the contract. This included the following information:

    98.1 There was no Eskom branding at the breakfast briefings, and the address by the sponsor was not even aired

    98.2 The round robin resolution about Mr Choeu no longer being in the employ/operations of Eskom was incorrect; and

    98.3 Eskom had been asked to answer Parliamentary questions about TNA, and the Public Protector had expressed concern about the contract and the business briefings.

99. Mr Pamensky stated that he reached the conclusion that the TNA contract had some value because of what Mr Matjila said in his representations. In his representations, Mr Matjila had said:

    99.1 There had been two prior contracts with similar subject matter but what he neglected to mention was that those two contracts were also irregular.

    99.2 The platform had been a success in promoting awareness of the 49M campaign.

    99.3 The contract was a renewal and it allowed savings of 17%. Mr Matjila's representations did not reveal that there had been a gap of a year between the second and third contracts, which meant that it could not have been an extension of an existing service or contract. Mr Pamensky accepted that, if he had known this and that the gap was caused by the reputational problems with TNA, he would have approached what Mr Matjila said differently.

100. Mr Pamensky testified that he also took comfort in the fact that the Chair had submitted this round robin resolution – he believed the Board viewed the contract to have value.

101. Mr Pamensky accepted that under the PFMA, it is an act of financial misconduct to knowingly or negligently permit fruitless and wasteful expenditure; and that the Board was therefore required, in ratifying the contract, to ensure that there was value in the contract so that it was not fruitless and wasteful. He agreed he would have called for further investigation and would not have ratified the contract.

102. Mr Pamensky testified that he was not aware that the Public Protector had written to Mr Tsotsi on 29 October 2014, and again thereafter, requesting that the contract be put on hold pending her report. He stated that if he had known this, he would have taken the request very seriously.

103. It was put to Mr Pamensky that one of his fellow board members, Ms Klein, had stated before the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee that she had raised the issue that Mr Choeu had not been disciplined.

Mr Pamensky testified that he was not in that meeting but if he had been, he would have asked for an investigation.

104. Mr Pamensky made a number of fair concessions about the inadequacy of the information that was placed before the Board. He was also clear that, had this information been known to him at the time, he would have demanded that the necessary investigations take place. Mr Pamensky certainly cannot be accountable for what he did not know. However, he and his fellow Board members were accountable for what they did know and the decisions they took based on what was placed before them.

105. From a proper consideration of the round robin pack alone, it should have been apparent to any reasonable person that the summary of facts made very little sense and was ambiguous. It would also have been glaringly clear that the draft resolution pack did not even contain the very contract that the Board was being asked to ratify. It would also have been obvious that there was no proper assessment of the value of the contract. Despite this, the Board was being asked to ratify a R43.2 million contract at a time when the government had given Eskom a R23 billion support subsidy a few months earlier.

106. The Board members ought to have been aware of the provisions of the PFMA, particularly section 51 which requires the Board to prevent irregular and wasteful expenditure. The Board was also obliged to identify wasteful expenditure under the PFMA, and take action against those who caused it, but could not do so if it never evaluated the commercial value of the contract.

107. Mr Pamensky testified that at the stage when he was asked to ratify the TNA contract, he did not familiarise himself with the PFMA. He testified that he only became familiar with the PFMA about six months after he had been appointed as a member of the Eskom Board. In this regard he particularly referred to the obligation under section 51(1)(e) that the Board was responsible for taking disciplinary action against employees that were guilty of causing irregular or wasteful expenditure. He later claimed that a Board member could only be expected to understand their full obligations under the PFMA after about three to four years of serving on the Board. Quite clearly, this is a self-serving and preposterous claim. Board members are individually liable under the PFMA for performing their functions and keeping officials and their delegates accountable for the performance of their duties. They are given no grace period for doing so. Failure to do so would necessarily amount to negligence or even gross negligence.

108. There was one justification for ratifying the contract that was given by members of both the old and the new Board. It was that it was in the best interests of Eskom for the Board to ratify the contract because otherwise Eskom would have been bound by the contract in any event; failure to ratify the contract would amount to a repudiation; and TNA could have claimed damages for the full value of the contract while Eskom would get no value out of it.

109. However, there was another option open to the Board which does not appear to have been considered.

    109.1 Mr Tsotsi testified that he had no idea that he could have gone to court to have the contract set aside as invalid and was therefore not obliged to ratify it.

    109.2 Mr Pamensky claimed he was under the impression that if the Board did not ratify the contract, this was tantamount to repudiation and they would have had to pay damages to TNA. He said that this belief came from the Ledwaba Mazwai opinion furnished to the new Board.

110. This perception unfortunately stems from some hasty legal advice sought by the outgoing Board from Ledwaba Mazwai. It must be borne in mind that the instructions to Ledwaba Mazwai were given on a very urgent basis and also asked only about two options in respect of the contract – the prospects of ratification or cancellation.

111. It is patently incorrect that TNA would be entitled to the full R43.2 million in damages and Eskom would be left with nothing if it cancelled the contract. This does not take into consideration that TNA would have had an obligation to mitigate its damages and that it would have had to tender its performance under the contract (or at least the value thereof) to Eskom in order to be eligible for the compensation under the contract.

112. This legal misunderstanding appears to have cost Eskom an enormous sum of money. Greater care by the Board in providing instructions and affording appropriate time to answer legal questions, and a more diligent approach to understanding their legal obligations, could have avoided this.

113. It must be considered why the Board did not ask for further legal clarity. If Mr Pamensky and Mr Tsotsi's belief about the consequences of failing to ratify the contract were correct – there would be very little purpose in ever having a system of ratification. The Board would always be bound to automatically ratify any contract concluded illegally by an unauthorised employee, because failure to do so would allow the other party to recover the entire contract price with no value for Eskom. This simply does not make any sense.

Subscriptions

114. In addition to sponsoring the business breakfasts, Eskom also subscribed to The New Age newspaper for thirty copies per day for an amount of R25 148 for the year. This figure then suddenly jumped up to two thousand copies of the newspaper per day at a cost of R1.3 million to Eskom. It is noteworthy that around the same time, Eskom procured 140 copies per day of the Business Day for R319 000 per year.

115. The Head of Communications at Eskom, Ms Wadja, provided an affidavit to the Commission in which she stated that she was instructed by Mr Choeu to increase the subscriptions in this manner. Mr Choeu denied this in his evidence and claimed that he had nothing to do with newspapers. However, when confronted with a letter from him instructing this increase, he was forced to concede that he did indeed do so and in fact asked for an increase to four thousand copies a day which would have cost Eskom R7 million.

116. Mr Choeu could not provide any explanation for his attempted increase and then claimed it must have been a "mistake". But this is not a credible response. Mr Choeu was content to deny any knowledge of his role in the subscriptions until he was confronted with clear evidence. When this conduct is viewed alongside the role he played in committing Eskom to the business breakfasts, it is clear that Mr Choeu saw fit to put the interests of TNA ahead of those of Eskom.

Constitutional institutions did not prevent the spending

117. The negative reputation that TNA had garnered in the independent media did not help to prevent the conclusion of the third contract. This contract was concluded because Mr Choeu and Mr Matjila were determined that they would do so, regardless of the law and the legal obligations they had to Eskom. The Board failed dismally in the exercise of its duties and ratified the contract to make the administrative inconvenience of an "irregularity" go away and they never bothered to take any further action against those who had originally committed Eskom to this wasteful expenditure.

118. However, other democratic safeguard institutions also failed to provide an effective mechanism to prevent this unlawful spending.

Parliamentary questions

119. On 14 November 2012, about a week after the second contract had been signed, Parliament directed various questions to Eskom about the TNA contracts. Some of the questions Parliament asked were:

    119.1 Whether an independent analysis to determine whether TNA was being read by the intended market had been conducted prior to Eskom placing advertisements in the TNA

    119.2 Who conducted that analysis and what were their recommendations; and 119.3 Whether there were any independent studies conducted about the effectiveness of the advertisements on the target market.

120. Mr Pretorius testified that the responsibility to answer the questions fell upon him as Head of Strategic Marketing at Eskom. He said that he asked Mr Laiza Zikalala from The Media Shop to assist him to answer the questions. Mr Pretorius said that Mr Zikalala explained that there had been no analysis of the newspaper because it had not been certified by ABC for circulation figures, nor through organisations to measure readership. He explained that this was why The Media Shop had recommended that Eskom not use TNA but they were instructed by Eskom to do so and to spend a particular amount of money. Mr Zikalala explained that, since then, AMPS had conducted behavioural research on readership and concluded that TNA had 39 000 readers (compared to The Citizen's 508 000 and The Star's 643 000). He stated that they could not perform an advertising effectiveness measure to ascertain whether the advertising had resulted in a reduction of electricity use.

121. The Parliamentary questions therefore failed as a safeguard for four reasons:

121.1 Eskom employees were willing to lie to Parliament and no further investigations were conducted

121.2 The Parliamentary questions were concealed from the new Board voting on the ratification of the contract

121.3 The new Board members appeared not to be concerned to keep abreast of what the media was reporting about Eskom; and 121.4 Individuals within Eskom were determined to ensure that the contract was concluded irrespective of the fact that there was no discernible value to Eskom.

Public Protector questions

122. On 3 June 2013, the then Public Protector wrote to Mr Matona, DG of Public Enterprises, to advise him that her office was investigating allegations of fruitless and wasteful expenditure in connection with the sponsorship of the business breakfasts.

123. The letter stated that the allegation was that the Department of Public Enterprises exerted undue influence on SOEs to enter into these sponsorship agreements. This, despite the fact that TNA was not a member of the ABC and its circulation figures could not be verified. The Public Protector then asked various questions about the policy on sponsorships, the amounts spent on the TNA sponsorships, the proposals and other relevant information.

124. Mr Pretorius was asked to address the questions from the Public Protector about advertising with TNA. He gave what he considered to be honest answers and sent them to the Head of the Legal Department at Eskom, Mr Willie Du Plessis, who reported to Mr Adam. The response he received was that the answers he prepared were not "sufficient". Mr Pretorius told Mr Du Plessis that he could not in good conscience write something untrue.

125. Mr Pretorius testified that he then received a phone call from Mr Adam who said that they needed to write that Eskom had benefitted from this advertising and that it was a good thing to do. As a result, the Eskom responses to the Public Protector's questions did not reflect reality. Mr Pretorius recalled rewriting the document on Mr Adam's instruction so that it "look[ed] a little bit better" than his original draft. Mr Pretorius said that he did not want to lie to the Public Protector; that he had gotten legal advice that he would be in a lot of trouble if he did so; and that it was unethical and against his professional ethical obligations. However, in the end, he confessed that he was ultimately "forced to do it".

126. Mr Pretorius admitted that several the statements made to the Public Protector were false. They included that:

126.1 The primary benefits were brand awareness for 49M and the opportunity to highlight the need to save electricity; and

126.2 Recent research undertaken with regard to 49M indicated that opportunities such as the sponsorship of the business briefings contributed to a 73% awareness by the public of the 49M Campaign.

127. The Public Protector's investigation continued and on 29 October 2014, she wrote to Mr Tsotsi asking him to hold the new (third) TNA contract in abeyance pending the release of her provisional report. The Public Protector also met with representatives of Eskom on 27 November 2014 in this regard.

128. Only after the outgoing Board had its final meeting, did Mr Tsotsi respond to the Public Protector's letter on 9 December 2014. The letter stated that the third contract was very different to the first two contracts – though there is no basis for this statement. It also explained that minutes of discussions about the contact were not available. This was also peculiar.

129. The Public Protector responded on 15 December 2014 to again implore the Eskom Board not to proceed with the contract until her report had been issued.

130. Mr Tsotsi conceded that none of this correspondence was ever brought to the attention of the incoming Board when they were voting to ratify the third TNA contract. He admitted this would have been "useful information" for the new Board.

131. The Public Protector's intervention was ineffective in curbing the TNA spend because employees in Eskom – even ones with a conscience – felt compelled to lie because their seniors instructed them to do so. As with Parliament's questions, the fact of the Public Protector's enquiries was kept from the new Board when they were asked to ratify the third TNA sponsorship contract for R43.2 million.

TRANSNET

TNA contracts with Transnet

132. Transnet concluded separate contracts with TNA for advertising in The New Age newspaper and for the different sponsorship arrangements.

132.1 In respect of advertising, Transnet employees were instructed to use The New Age newspaper exclusively for all the recruitment and tender advertisements.

132.2 In respect of sponsorship, Transnet concluded:

132.2.1 Contracts with TNA for "The Big Interview", to the value of R24.8 million from 2011 to 2016 – these contracts were renewed every six months; and 132.2.2 Five long-term contracts and one ad hoc contract for TNA Business Breakfasts, to the value of R122 809 526.70, from 2011 to 2017.

Gupta meeting with Acting Group CEO

133. Prior to the advertising spend set out above, Mr Tony Gupta approached Mr Mkwanazi who was the Chair of the Board of Transnet from December 2011 to December 2014 as well as the acting Group CEO from 16 December 2010 to 11 February 2011 and requested that a significant proportion of the Transnet advertising budget be allocated to TNA.

134. Mr Mkwanazi testified before the Commission that he received a phone call from Mr Gupta in January 2011, which was shortly after he had been made acting GCEO of Transnet. Mr Gupta told him that he obtained his number from Minister Gigaba.

135. In a response to a Rule 3.3 notice sent to Mr Gigaba arising from Mr Mkwanazi's evidence, Mr Gigaba denied that he had provided Mr Mkwanazi's number to Mr Gupta. Nevertheless, it needs to be stated that Mr Gigaba probably had Mr Mkwanazi's number because he and Mr Mkwanazi had had a meeting either at the end of October 2010 on Mr Mkwanazi's version or before the 14th November 2010 on Mr Gigaba's version where Mr Gigaba offered Mr Mkwanazi the position of Chair of the Transnet Board.

In fact, Mr Gigaba's denial of this is rejected. On his own version, he was friends with Mr Ajay Gupta and his legal advisor, Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu, met frequently with Mr Tony Gupta. Therefore, if Mr Tony Gupta wanted the number of the Chairperson of the Board of Transnet, Mr Gigaba would have been the most obvious person he would have approached and Mr Gigaba would probably have given him the member.

136. After receiving this call from Mr Gupta, Mr Mkwanazi met him at the Gupta residence in Saxonwold. Mr Duduzane Zuma was also present at the meeting. Mr Gupta indicated to Mr Mkwanazi that he was friends with President Zuma. He also stated that he was aware that Transnet had a marketing budget of R1 billion, and that he wanted 30 to 50% of that budget to be allocated to TNA. In fact, the marketing budget for Transnet was R27 005 399 for 2010 and R95 530 394 for 2011.

137. Mr Mkwanazi testified that he told Mr Gupta and Mr D. Zuma that he was not the correct person to approach in this regard and that they would have to go through the ordinary channels of procurement to provide the State with services. He testified that in response to this rebuff, Mr Gupta said how close he was to the then President, that they met once a week and that President Zuma came to their social events. Mr Mkwanazi testified that it was evident that Mr Gupta was "deep friends" with the President. Mr Mkwanazi explained that he felt that the Guptas were abusing their friendship with President Zuma.

138. Mr Mkwanazi testified that Mr Gupta was trying to convey how influential and powerful he was at this meeting by referring to being friends with cabinet ministers and members of Parliament.

139. Mr Mkwanazi testified that he then asked for a second meeting with Mr Gupta because he said he wanted somebody within the Department of Public Enterprises to also witness what was being asked of him. Mr Mkwanazi explained that he requested that Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu, the advisor to Minister Gigaba, accompany him to the second meeting. He wanted Mr Mahlangu to act as a witness, particularly because Mr Gupta had indicated that he had received Mr Mkwanazi's number from Minister Gigaba.

140. The second meeting took place around two weeks after the first meeting (around January 2011) and was attended again by Mr D. Zuma and Mr T. Gupta. This time, Mr Mahlangu was also in attendance. Mr Mkwanazi testified that at this second meeting, he again made it clear that he was not the appropriate person to speak to about the allocation of the marketing budget to TNA and that there was a procurement process that had to be followed. Mr Mkwanazi testified that Mr Gupta appeared to accept this answer. Mr Mahlangu merely observed and did not talk. Thereafter, the meeting ended.

141. Shortly after this meeting, a permanent appointment was made for GCEO to replace Mr Mkwanazi. Mr Brian Molefe was appointed as the new GCEO on 16 February 2011 and went on to play a significant role in facilitating TNA contracts at Transnet.

142. A few months after these meetings, on 9 June 2011, there was an article in the Business Day stating that Mr Mkwanazi was going to be removed from his position at Transnet by then Minister Gigaba. Mr Mkwanazi said he was shocked to read this as there had been no discussion with him regarding his removal.

143. In the Cabinet Memorandum of 25 May 2011, which recorded the proposal that Mr Gigaba made to Cabinet, it is indeed correct that he proposed that Mr Mkwanazi be removed as chairman of the board of Transnet and that he be replaced with Mr Iqbal Sharma. However, the outcome of the Cabinet meeting was that Mr Gigaba was unsuccessful and Mr Mkwanazi was not replaced.

144. Mr Mkwanazi testified that there may have been a connection between his reaction at the meetings with Mr T. Gupta and Mr D. Zuma and the efforts to remove him but he did not know this as a fact.

145. Even though Mr Mkwanazi did not accede to the Guptas' demands in early 2011, as will be shown below they were successful in acquiring a significant proportion of the Transnet marketing budget and did so without going through the procurement processes that Mr Mkwanazi told them they had to.

Advertising at The New Age newspaper

146. Mr Jackson was the Brand and Publicity Co-ordinator for Transnet's Group Corporate and Public Affairs from 2006 to December 2014. In that role, Mr Jackson was responsible for the management of Transnet's advertising.

147. Mr Jackson explained that, absent some specific strategic objective that it had to promote, Transnet's only advertising was for tender and recruitment purposes. Transnet would generally use an advertising agency to organise its advertising. This was done by a company called "The Agency". The Agency would advise Transnet about where to place adverts depending on the needs of a particular campaign. They would advise on demographics and circulation, and they would negotiate on Transnet's behalf.

148. Unlike Eskom, which had an advertising or sponsorship policy, Transnet had no official advertising or sponsorship policy. Instead, there was an unofficial advertising guideline. However, this draft policy or guideline did, according to Mr Jackson, contain some of the guidelines that Transnet would use for advertising decisions such as using resources cost-effectively.

149. Mr Jackson explained that, when he took over the advertising portfolio, he was responsible for the placement of adverts and how they appeared. He said that at some point in time, he was instructed by his superior, Mr Mboniso Sigonyela, to advise his colleagues that from then on, they were required to advertise for tenders and recruitment in the TNA. Mr Sigonyela simply told Mr Jackson that it "must be done". His instruction pertained to all advertising of tenders and recruitment. Mr Jackson explained that Mr Sigonyela had previously never prescribed to him the specific media that had to be used for any advertising purposes. Mr Jackson testified that he carried out Mr Sigonyela's instructions, even though he knew nothing about the circulation, demographics or readership figures of TNA.

150. Mr Jackson testified that his view was that the different divisions within Transnet were autonomous and could make their own decisions, depending on their budget and discretion. He said that, for that reason, his position was that he would only "recommend" that various divisions use TNA. However, Mr. Jackson was verbally reprimanded for not having followed this instruction and for using the word "recommend". Mr Sigonyela told Mr Jackson that he was incompetent and, if he did not comply, he would find someone else to do his job.

151. Ultimately, as will be evident from what follows, Mr Jackson did eventually assist TNA in securing significant Transnet spending on TNA advertising.

The Big Interview

152. Mr Jackson explained that "The Big Interview" was an insert in the TNA newspaper, where it profiled a media personality. The interview had nothing to do with Transnet.

153. On 1 December 2011, Mr Jacques Roux of TNA emailed a representative of The Agency, with a proposal for Transnet to sponsor The Big Interview in the TNA. The proposal would allow Transnet to advertise in the "ear space" on either side of the newspaper where Transnet would place their logo as well as naming rights – so the piece would be headed, the Transnet Big Interview. This was being offered for an amount of R327 576 per month. The amount for the six-month contract period was R1 965 456.

154. Ms Hanlie van Eck worked for Planet Media which was an advisory expert on media placement for Transnet. She would advise on the return on investment for a particular advertisement in a newspaper. Ms van Eck advised The Agency and Transnet via email on 14 December 2011 that the Big Interview sponsorship was extremely expensive and was not worth the return on investment. She recommended that Transnet not proceed with the opportunity. When approached again on this matter, Ms van Eck again said that, based on the given costs, they could not justify the feature. She made the additional point that there was no ABC certification on circulation. She therefore concluded that she did not support the offer. Mr Jackson also confirmed that there was no information available about the reach of the TNA newspaper or who was reading it. He also conceded that with a public entity like Transnet, it was not clear what value they would get from sponsoring this interview as there was already brand awareness.

155. Mr Jackson testified that he found the decision by Mr Brian Molefe, pursuant to the recommendation of Mr Sigonyela, to participate in the sponsorship of The Big Interview by Transnet to be suspicious and not justifiable. The advice received from Transnet's consultant was that it was not worth the money, but then, a day later, the decision was taken to go ahead.

156. Mr Sigonyela produced an internal memorandum on the sponsorship of TNA, on 14 February 2012, addressed to Mr Brian Molefe, the GCEO at the time. The proposal stated that TNA "is one of the key publications that Transnet targets for positioning its brand and its image as part of its reputation management strategy." This was false.

157. The memorandum also stated that "this platform will afford Transnet the opportunity to send key messages to our stakeholders". Mr Jackson testified that this was also not a justifiable statement as there was no way to measure the reach of the newspaper to Transnet's stakeholders. In fact, the Big Interview was not even called the Transnet Big Interview, as the proposal suggested.

158. Mr Molefe signed the proposal on 23 February 2011, but there is an email from Ms van Eck confirming that she had authorisation from Transnet for the sponsorship to go ahead, which was dated 15 February 2011. Mr Jackson testified that the only person who had the delegated authority to give this authorisation at the time was Mr Sigonyela. He clearly gave this instruction before he received proper internal approval from Mr Molefe.

159. Mr Jackson, having seen this premature instruction, had then intervened by email to say that the internal processes had not yet been complied with as Mr Molefe had not signed off on the proposal. Mr Jackson testified that Mr Sigonyela told him he was hindering the process and making it go too slowly. Mr Jackson testified that he was put under extreme pressure by Mr Sigonyela who was very eager to get the arrangement in place as quickly as possible. Mr Sigonyela told Mr Jackson that, because progress was too slow, he had to provide him with a formal progress report to ensure that he was doing his job.

160. Mr Jackson testified that he had also prepared certain internal memoranda on TNA. One such memorandum was in support of the "renewal" of the New Age Big Interview sponsorship. However, this time, the memorandum referred to it not as a sponsorship but as a "partnership". Despite this name change, Mr Jackson confirmed that the deal was no different to the first one and that, in reality, it was a sponsorship. Mr Jackson explained that while he did not support the TNA arrangement, it was already a done deal and he was just concerned with getting the formal processes done.

161. Ms Palesa Ngoma, who was a communications specialist at Transnet during the relevant period covered by Mr Jackson's testimony, provided the Commission with an affidavit. Her affidavit deals with Transnet's support of the Big Interview and TNA business breakfasts. Ms Ngoma confirmed she was also instructed by Mr Sigonyela to produce memoranda in support of Transnet partnering with SABC in TNA business breakfasts. She indicated that she wrote six proposals on this matter; and Transnet ultimately spent a total of R24.8 million on the Big Interview from 2011 to 2016.

162. The Big Interview sponsorship contracts were irregular in that they did not follow the ordinary processes set out in Transnet. It is also clear that the spending was wasteful and fruitless expenditure as Transnet derived no value from it.

TNA breakfast briefings

163. Mr Phatlane was the Senior Coordinator for Stakeholder Relations at Transnet from 2011 to 2017. He also reported to Mr Siyongela. In this role, sponsorships and donations fell under his area of responsibility. This mandate fell under the office of the GCEO, Mr Molefe.

164. Mr Phatlane testified before the Commission and explained that the ordinary process for approving a sponsorship was for a party to send a proposal to Transnet. Then a process of assessment followed along the following lines:

164.1 A team would assess whether the proposal was in line with the draft sponsorship and donation policy

164.2 Transnet would perform a due diligence to check if the request was legitimate and whether it would be helpful to Transnet

164.3 A memorandum would then be generated and directed to the General Manager, who had authority to approve the sponsorship if it fell under the amount set out in his delegation of authority

164.4 If the General Manager approved it, the sponsorship would be executed and Transnet would ensure it received what was agreed

164.5 If the monetary amount exceeded the General Manager's authorised amount, the proposal would go to a person with higher authority; and 164.6 When a sponsorship was approved, a sponsorship contract would be drafted and, if signed, payment would follow.

165. Mr Phatlane explained that he first encountered Mr Jacques Roux of TNA in 2011. He noted that Mr Roux had been visiting and meeting with the General Manager, Mr Siyongela for several days – but Mr Phatlane said he did not know exactly what the meetings were about at that stage.

166. In September 2011, Mr Roux sent the first request to Mr Phatlane. The one page letter was addressed to Mr Sigonyela. It set out a proposal for Transnet to sponsor the Business Breakfasts with TNA. The proposal was for two such breakfasts with a total cost of R1 471 000. The offer contained no detail about value or the nature of the sponsorship "opportunity". It simply provided a table of the prices. Nonetheless, the proposal was still recommended by Mr Sigonyela and approved by Mr Molefe.

167. Mr Phatlane explained that Transnet never interrogated why they were being asked to pay for the catering and costs of the breakfast or what value Transnet would be getting out of the sponsorship.

168. Mr Phatlane stated that, after receiving the proposal, Mr Sigonyela instructed him to prepare a memorandum in support it. When asked whether he performed the due diligence requirement that is part of the process for sponsorship approval, his answer was evasive and he ultimately explained that he was not aware of what process to follow for such a large amount and was waiting to hear from the GM about what to do.

169. Mr Phatlane's memorandum stated that TNA was one of the key publications that Transnet targeted for the positioning of its brand and to improve its image. Mr Phatlane testified that Mr Sigonyela instructed him to write this. The memorandum was directed to the Acting Group Executive: Corporate Services at the time, Mr Siyabulela Mapoma. Mr Mapoma did not approve the proposal. Accordingly, Mr Sigonyela prepared another memorandum in support of the proposal, this time by-passing Mr Mapoma and going straight to Mr Molefe.

The first contract

170. On 20 March 2012, Mr Sigonyela directed the second memorandum to the CEO, Mr Molefe. Mr Phatlane testified that he drafted the memorandum. The memorandum sought to encourage Mr Molefe to approve a sponsorship contract with TNA whereby Transnet would purchase, through a contract with TNA, 16 business breakfasts worth R16 million. This was a departure from the earlier proposal which was for ad hoc business breakfasts. The motivation in the memorandum was brief. It claimed that the business breakfasts were popular and would provide a public platform for "robust discussions" to take place. This would give Transnet space for "maximum media exposure to highlight its achievements and its role in broader society". It claimed, without supporting evidence, that the "branding and speaking opportunities provided by this platform will be exploited to reiterate key messages through statements and questions intended to emphasise [Transnet's] profile and role in the development of the economy". The proposal was approved by Mr Molefe on 23 March 2012.

171. The contract giving effect to this proposal was concluded on 14 May 2012. It was signed by the Acting GCEO as Mr Molefe was away at the time. The contract was labelled as a "sponsorship agreement".

In this agreement, the early termination clause allowing Transnet to exit the agreement on notice, was struck out of the agreement, just as it had been in the Eskom agreements.

172. Mr Phatlane testified that he did not know why this had been done and did not ask about it at the time. He simply saw the agreement on his desk and archived it. He did, however, confirm that in the standard Transnet contracts, there was an exit clause to protect Transnet and that he had ensured that such a clause was in this contract – but, when he received the signed version, he noted that the parties had struck out that clause. The deletion of this clause was against legal advice and was contrary to the interests of Transnet. The removal of this clause shows that TNA was being preferred over ordinary media vendors, for reasons that were not explained.

The second contract

173. On 7 March 2013, TNA provided another proposal for the business briefings. This one was for 20 briefings for a total of R20 million.

174. The GroupCEO's limit under the delegation of authority at that time was a cumulative annual total of R10 million. He would therefore not have the authority to conclude this agreement – it would have had to be done by the Board of Transnet.

175. After this proposal was submitted, Mr Phatlane assisted in creating another memorandum supporting this proposal on 11 March 2013. The memorandum was from Mr Sigonyela to Mr Molefe. In this memorandum, the contract was described as a "partnership" instead of a "sponsorship". It seems that this was done to bring the contract within the GCEO's authority threshold, so that the agreement could be approved by him and did not require Board approval. This recasting of the nature of the contract in order to seek to have it fall within the delegation of authority of the CEO is a pattern that appears to have emerged in the TNA contracting.

176. At both Eskom and Transnet, TNA contracts got approval without scrutiny by the appropriate oversight bodies. This was achieved by disguising what was evidently a sponsorship agreement, as some other kind of agreement, and particularly, a type of agreement that the CEO did have authority to conclude. At Eskom, Mr Matjila tried to claim he had authority to conclude the agreement as it was an investment. At Transnet, Mr Molefe tried to claim it was a partnership. These were blatant attempts to avoid the corporate governance processes.

177. Mr Phatlane testified that he did not know why it would be called a partnership as there was no documentation about a partnership. He was, nonetheless, instructed by Mr Sigonyela to call it a partnership. He was also instructed to reduce the spending to R15 million which was then approved by Mr Molefe.

178. The agreement that was ultimately concluded on 19 April 2013 was entitled "Branding and Advertising Partnership Agreement". The agreement committed Transnet to provide an amount of R15 million (excluding VAT) for 15 sessions. Payment had to be made by Transnet within seven days after the signing of the agreement. This was a change from the previous agreements that allowed payments to be made in 30 days after TNA had presented an invoice. When Mr Phatlane was questioned about this change, he testified that Mr Sigonyela had told him that he had a meeting with someone from TNA who had insisted on this more onerous payment arrangement.

179. Mr Makode, the Executive Manager of Communications at Transnet, provided the Commission with an affidavit, setting out the budgets for Transnet during that time. The 2013 marketing budget for Transnet was a total of R138 648 799.20; of which R72 857 070 belonged to the Corporate Affairs Department budget. The agreement concluded on 19 April 2013 by Mr Molefe and Mr Howe was for R15 million which is approximately 20% of the budget. Mr Phatlane confirmed that this was a significant proportion of the Transnet Corporate Affairs budget.

180. This 2013 agreement was clearly irregular. Although it was no different from the 2012 sponsorship agreement, it was recast as a partnership agreement. However, that recasting did not change its nature. It was a sponsorship agreement. Mr Molefe did not have the authority to conclude it as it fell within the authority of the Board. Despite this, Mr Molefe went ahead and concluded the agreement, committing Transnet to pay R15 million within seven days for a service that did not produce any discernible value for Transnet. The expenditure was therefore also fruitless and wasteful.

Ad hoc contract

181. Mr Phatlane testified that on 24 January 2014, he was involved in the drafting of another memorandum. This memorandum proposed two business breakfasts that would cost R3 million – a substantial increase in price from R1 million per breakfast in the previous contract. Mr Phatlane testified that he queried this higher amount with Mr Vida Talliep in TNA and objected that it was unfair. Mr Talliep told Mr Phatlane he was being rude and the matter was ultimately escalated to Mr Howe, the TNA CEO, and to the Transnet GM, Mr Sigonyela who ordered Mr Phatlane to include the higher price in the memorandum.

The third contract

182. On 31 March 2014 TNA made a further proposal for "sponsorship" of the TNA business breakfasts. The proposal claimed that the sponsorship would allow exposure for Transnet to three million people at a peak time. Mr Phatlane's memorandum in respect of this proposal was prepared on 14 April 2014 and was styled as a request to "renew the New Age/SABC Business Briefing Sessions Partnership". The memorandum repeated the claim that the business briefings reached an audience of two to three million people. Mr Phatlane testified that he had verified these figures by contacting the SABC marketing department. However, the evidence from the SABC was that only 600 000 adults actually watched the show in 2012. When Mr Phatlane was asked about this, he testified that he had no evidence or records of his interaction with the marketing department at SABC to obtain these figures.

183. This memorandum led to the conclusion of another "partnership" agreement in 2014. It was for 20 sessions valued at R20 million. It was signed on 6 June 2014 by Mr Molefe. This was once again far in excess of Mr Molefe's delegated authority of R10 million for sponsorships.

    183.1 The contract that was concluded also did not contain the usual early termination clause that would allow Transnet to cancel on 30 days' notice. Mr Phatlane testified that he approached the legal department which told him that the clause should remain in the contract for Transnet's protection.

    183.2 Mr Phatlane said that, later, the representative from the legal department met with Mr Sigonyela and the two of them went up to Mr Molefe's office for several hours. He testified that when he returned to work, the signed contract was on his desk and the termination clause had been amended to allow termination only by mutual agreement between the parties. This meant that Transnet could not unilaterally exit the agreement on notice even if it realised that the agreement was bad for it. Once again, TNA was entitled to an upfront payment of that R20 million.

184. Mr Phatlane testified that by 2014 there was a lot of negativity around any association with the Guptas. As a result, many people, who worked in communication at Transnet, wanted the TNA contract to scale down or even cease altogether. However, none of them were able to do anything about it.

The fourth contract

185. In 2015 Transnet concluded another agreement for business briefings with TNA. This was also styled as a "partnership" agreement and was signed on 14 April 2015 by Mr Molefe. This contract was for a further 20 sessions at a cost of R21 200 000. Once again there was no early termination clause, just a clause providing for a termination by mutual agreement between the parties.

The fifth contract

186. On 9 March 2016, Mr Phatlane was involved in yet another memorandum of support for a further "partnership" with TNA. This was approved by Mr Sigonyela and Acting Group CEO, Siyabonga Gama.

By this stage, Mr Molefe was no longer at Transnet as he had moved across to Eskom. The 2016 "partnership" was for 20 sessions at a cost of R21 200 000 (excluding VAT). The contract was signed on 9 May 2016 by Mr Gama. As with its predecessors, it had no early termination clause and the money was required to be paid upfront to TNA. An amount of R24 168 000 was paid in two tranches during 2016 (that is R21 200 000 plus VAT). In fact, it appears that an additional amount of R24 168 000 was again paid in 2017. However, the Commission does not have insight into the contracts or circumstances underpinning the 2017 payment.

The value to Transnet

187. The Manager of Group Governance Risk at Transnet, Ms Helen Walsh, provided the Commission with an affidavit setting out Transnet's total spend on the TNA business briefings from 2012 to 2017. The amount was R122 809 526.70. For the Big Interview, the spending was R24 872 200.16.

188. Mr Phatlane confirmed that, apart from Transnet's logo being broadcast in the background at the breakfast briefings and having someone connected with Transnet being present at the breakfast, Transnet was not featured in these business briefings and yet paid all the expenses associated with them. He explained that eventually he struggled to find sufficient people from Transnet to fill the seats at the business breakfasts as the support from Transnet declined significantly.

189. Then, in 2016, there was a change in leadership and the new General Manager for Communications, Mr Molatwana Likhethe, cancelled the Big Interview. At that stage, there were around six business briefings that still had to take place. But Mr Likhethe, changed the way they were done. He got Mr Phatlane to craft the content of the briefing so that it focused on what Transnet was doing. Transnet began scripting the interviews and interviewing people from within Transnet and its stakeholders. They were now directly supporting and promoting Transnet's business. Mr Phatlane testified that they were never afforded this opportunity in the previous five years and had merely had the terms dictated to them by TNA.

SOUTH AFRICAN AIRWAYS

Approach to Ms Carolus

190. Ms Carolus was the Chair of the SAA Board between 2009 and 2012. She testified that in 2011, TNA had approached SAA seeking advertising spend for the newspaper. This went through the Bid Adjudication Committee (BAC), which decided that the newspaper did not meet the business criteria for SAA and, therefore, declined the bid.

191. Thereafter, Ms Carolus received a phone call from the DG of the Department for Public Enterprises, Mr Matona. He summoned her, together with Ms Mzimela, the SAA CEO, to an urgent meeting about this decision. Mr Mahlangu, Minister Gigaba's special advisor, attended this meeting. Ms Carolus testified that the meeting had not followed due process within the organisation because ordinarily an appeal against a fair competitive procurement process would have at least first gone to the CEO before it reached Board members. She regarded it as inappropriate for the DG to choose this forum to plead his case to her as Chair of the Board.

192. At the meeting, Mr Matona told Ms Mzimela and Ms Carolus that TNA was a new entrant in the market and so in order to promote media diversity, SAA should support TNA. Ms Carolus testified that while she had sympathy with the mandate of developing new entrants to the media, this was not the mandate of SAA. This fell to entities like the Industrial Development Corporation (IDC) and the Public Investment Corporation (PIC). SAA had to spend money only on advertising that would reach a very particular segment of the population and was targeted so that it would increase profitability. TNA was not such a newspaper. It would have therefore been a violation of SAA's mandate and role to invest in TNA the way Mr Matona was requesting. Ms Carolus regarded Mr Matona's appeal to them as inappropriate. Ms Carolus said during the meeting that the correct processes must be followed, that she had no legal standing to speak to them on SAA's behalf, and that it was inappropriate to be entering into discussions with them.

193. Ms Carolus testified that she could not remember all of the details of the meeting because she ended it quickly. However, she could recall that Mr Mahlangu played an important role at the meeting. Mr Mahlangu had attempted to exert pressure on the Board of SAA to influence their decisions about, among other things, TNA and that the mass resignation of the Board in 2012 was more of a constructive dismissal to pave the way for a more compliant Board.

194. Mr Mahlangu responded to these allegations in an affidavit presented to the Commission. He denied that he placed any pressure on Ms Carolus at this meeting. Instead, he described the meeting as "cordial" and nothing more than a discussion about the public policy position to promote media diversity. It is clear from Mr Mahlangu's response that he saw nothing wrong with supporting and promoting the TNA. The problem with this response is that it overlooks the vital point that public entities like SAA are spending public funds. Therefore, they must make procurement decisions based on the proper processes and only if it is in the interests of the SOE's mandate.

The subscription agreement

195. Mr Vuyisile Kona was the Chair of the SAA Board from 28 September 2012 to 26 February 2013. He was appointed acting CEO from 12 October 2012. He was suspended from his position as Acting Chair on 13 February 2013, and was replaced by Ms Duduzile Myeni.

196. Mr Kona explained that, when he first got to the airline, SAA was already doing business with TNA, but TNA was not happy with the quantity of advertising that SAA was giving them. After Mr Kona's appointment on 12 October 2012, TNA approached Mr Kona and asked that the TNA newspapers' volumes be increased. This approach was made by Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu on behalf of the TNA. Mr Mahlangu was the special advisor to Minister Gigaba at the time. Mr Kona told Mr Mahlangu that the TNA would need to approach the SCM Committee in this regard.

197. On 6 November 2012 the BAC submitted a proposal for Mr Kona's approval for a dramatic increase in volumes of TNA newspapers from three thousand to seven thousand per day. No reasons or justification for this significant increase in volume was provided. The submission proposed an extra R2.4 million to be spent on TNA subscriptions over the next year. The BAC submission did not deal with whether SAA could afford such an increase although there was a statement on the submission from the Operations Manager, Ms Ramasia that "there is currently no budget on operations for this".

198. Despite these glaring deficiencies in the BAC submission, Mr Kona approved the requested increase. When he testified at the Commission, he was asked to explain his decision. Mr Kona said that the absence of any budget did not concern him because he thought that the operational changes and expansion of the SAA network that he was planning to implement would free up some cash and so it would be affordable.

199. Mr Kona's approval of the increased subscription with no evidence of effectiveness, circulation, affordability or commercial value, was a breach of his fiduciary duties to SAA and of his obligations under the PFMA to avoid irregular expenditure as there was no budget to support the increase. It also amounted to fruitless and wasteful expenditure as there was no information about the commercial value of the subscription to SAA.

200. There were also a series of text messages between Mr Kona and Mr Mahlangu regarding the TNA subscription that are curious. Mr Kona testified that because Mr Mahlangu had approached him initially about the increase in subscription volumes for TNA, he had to keep him updated about the SCM process. It is strange for a CEO of an SOE to be keeping an advisor to the Minister updated on SCM matters.

201. It is not entirely clear in what capacity Mr Kona engaged with the Guptas and TNA. While his agreement to the subscription increase tends to indicate that he was a facilitator of TNA business at SAA, there was a further interaction that he had with the Guptas towards the end of 2012 which tends to indicate that he put up some resistance to their advances. However, in the end, he did facilitate their transaction of increased volumes of TNA newspaper and he did so without any credible justification.

Approach to Mr Kona

202. On 29 October 2012 Mr Kona was asked by Minister Malusi Gigaba's special advisor, Mr Mahlangu, to go to Saxonwold to meet with members of the Gupta family. Mr Mahlangu acted as the intermediary for Minister Gigaba and Mr Kona. This was confirmed by Mr Mahlangu himself in his affidavit presented to the Commission. Mr Kona met Mr Mahlangu at the Gupta family home in Saxonwold. He was met first by members of a security team that took his cellphone. He was instructed this was standard procedure for people entering the property. Mr Kona and Mr Mahlangu met with Mr. Tony Gupta, Mr. D Zuma, and Mr. Tshepiso Magashule, the son of the former Free State Premier, Mr Ace Magashule.

203. Mr Kona's account of the meeting has a number of similarities with that of Mr Mkwanazi. Mr Kona testified that only Mr Gupta spoke during the meeting. Mr D. Zuma and Mr T. Magashule were totally silent. According to Mr Kona, Mr Gupta first flattered him which put him at ease. Then he "welcomed" Mr Kona "into the family" and offered him R100 000 as an introduction to the family. Mr Gupta also said he was aware that Mr Kona had not been paid the previous month. Mr Kona was surprised that Mr Gupta knew this because this was private company information that only Mr Mahlangu or someone inside SAA would have known. When Mr Kona questioned the money, and indicated that he would not accept it, Mr Gupta then offered him R500 000. Mr Kona informed Mr Gupta that he did not need this money and he refused to take it. After this point, Mr Gupta began to ask Mr Kona about the consultant that SAA was seeking to appoint.

204. Mr Kona had the discretion to award contracts up to R100 million without Board approval but had, nevertheless, asked the SCM officials to determine which consultant company offered the best price to create a turnaround plan for SAA on an urgent basis. SAA had sought quotes from three companies for the production of the plan. Kona could not recall what the third company's quote had been. However, he testified that Lufthansa and McKinsey both bid for the contract. Lufthansa's quote was for R6 million while McKinsey's was R40 million. The price difference had been great and the best and most-cost effective competitor was Lufthansa Consulting.

205. By the time of the meeting, Mr Kona had already informed Lufthansa that it had been awarded the contract. When he told Mr Gupta this news, Mr Gupta was "livid". The meeting then abruptly ended and Mr Kona was told that he could leave. Before he left, Mr Gupta called the DG of Public Enterprises, Mr Matona, in front of Mr Kona, and told him to come and explain immediately what was going on.

206. When Mr Kona was driving out of the building, Mr Matona called him and questioned why he had given the contract to Lufthansa. Mr Kona explained that it was the SCM committee that decided to award the contract to Lufthansa. Mr Matona left it at that. However, the following week, Mr Kona received a letter from the Department of Public Enterprises saying that they wanted to investigate his decision to award the contract to Lufthansa. What followed thereafter were a series of allegations and counter-allegations about Mr Kona's conduct at SAA. Mr Kona was suspended on 11 February 2013. This resulted in litigation, which was still pending at the time Mr Kona testified before the Commission. Despite the Commission having asked Mr Kona for copies of the papers in these proceedings, they have not been provided to the Commission.

207. Mr Kona was ultimately removed from his position as a Board member on 26 February 2013. Mr Kona's actions in respect of the TNA subscriptions took place before the meeting at the Gupta residence. He testified that the issue of TNA was not raised at the meeting. However, Mr Kona's willingness to approve an increase in subscriptions of an untested newspaper for many millions of Rands still remains inadequately explained.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

208. The evidence before the Commission paints a picture of a calculated strategy by the Guptas and their associates to appropriate public funds from SOEs.

209. It was key to their efforts to have "facilitators" within the SOEs who would ensure that they committed millions of Rands to TNA despite there being no discernible value to the SOEs in doing so.

210. Those "facilitators" required subordinates who would follow their instructions and do what was necessary to ensure that the processes for contracting were adjusted so that the TNA could benefit from these contracts. The adjustments included removing standard termination clauses, providing for upfront payments, misrepresenting the value of the contracts to watchdog bodies like Parliament and the Public Protector, and recasting the agreements as something different to what they really were so that they fell within the delegated authority of the "facilitators".

Conclusion: ESKOM

211. From the evidence set out above, a pattern emerges about the role players in Eskom.

212. Mr Matjila was the key facilitator at Eskom. Shortly after he took up the position of acting CEO, he approved the largest sponsorship contract with TNA that Eskom had ever entered into. He did so despite not having the delegated authority to enter into a contract of this size and at a time when there was no evidence of any value to be derived by Eskom from the services offered by TNA.

213. Mr Matjila received Rule 3.3 notices about the evidence presented at the Commission's hearings. He did not respond to any of them. The Commission's investigators also made several attempts to contact Mr Matjila directly but none of them was successful. There is, accordingly, no contrary version from Mr Matjila before the Commission.

214. The incoming Board of Eskom was also a facilitator. It was content to ratify a very controversial contract, where it had not assessed its commercial value, and in circumstances where the media, Parliament and the Public Protector had expressed grave concerns about the legality and value of the contract.

    214.1 Mr Tsotsi appeared to have either willingly or, at best, grossly negligently, concealed important information from the new Board before it ratified the contract.

    214.2 The new Eskom Board members were happy to ratify a contract they had not even seen, based on a round robin resolution that did not make sense and without any proper appreciation for their legal obligations under the PFMA.

215. It is unlikely that any of this would have been possible without those who:

    215.1 Ensured that these contracts were concluded and implemented despite not going through the correct procedures; and

    215.2 Were willing to give false justifications to the Public Protector and Parliament for expenditure that was nothing short of fruitless and wasteful.

216. Mr Choeu demonstrated very little, if any, sense of duty to Eskom. He stated on many occasions that he believed that any questioning of authority would have been viewed as insubordination and that it was just "not done" in a "corporate culture". The problem with this is that Eskom is not a private company. It is a public enterprise performing a vital function for the public, using scarce public money to do so. If "subordinates" (in this case as high up as division executives) do not feel any duty to act with integrity or speak out when processes are blatantly ignored because of "pressure from the CEO", then public institutions will be very vulnerable to corruption and irregularities of this nature. To the extent that Mr Choeu was advancing this as an excuse for his conduct, his "excuse" must be rejected as totally unacceptable. He was simply a "facilitator" of the capture of Eskom by the Guptas.

217. Mr Choeu also actively supported the unjustified increase of subscriptions of TNA newspaper to an absurdly high amount with no commensurate justification.

218. Mr Pretorius was far more pained and anxious at having to thwart well-established policies and processes in order to facilitate the TNA contracts. He took some steps to try and address the unlawful conduct but, ultimately, he capitulated under orders from his superiors and even allowed false information to be provided to the Public Protector because of the pressure under which he was placed. In the case of Mr Pretorius, it can be accepted that he took part in this wrongdoing because of orders or pressure from some of those above him. That cannot be said of Mr Choeu.

219. Eskom had policies and protocols in place to ensure that sponsorships went through appropriate approval mechanisms. However, this did not appear to help in preventing significant irregular and wasteful expenditure on the TNA newspaper and business briefings. The delegation of authority was only R3 million in respect of sponsorships and yet the acting CEO approved a sponsorship for R43.2 million and had this ratified by the Board, with apparently no consequences for the people involved.

220. This demonstrates that, while accountability structures are indeed useful, if the Board of a public entity fails in its duties to ensure that they are observed, they will prove useless in the fight against irregular and wasteful expenditure. If officials can be compromised and they exercise delegations of authority for nefarious purposes or ignore them altogether and suffer no consequences, then, again, the policies and processes serve no purpose.

221. If employees responsible for carrying out those processes can be intimidated into proceeding with contracts without following due process, then these policies and processes will be of little value. All that will happen is that those employees will assist in creating a paper trail of proposals and justifications that purport to legitimise the expenditure and prevent exposure of unlawful and wasteful transactions.

222. There was a significant lack of effective checks and balances operating at the SOEs that allowed this conduct to continue for as long as it did. This is evidenced by fact that these indiscretions were never picked up and addressed, bar a whistleblower report – which was effectively swept under the carpet by the new Eskom Board.

223. The boards and executives of those SOEs who supported and facilitated the conclusion of these contracts were likely guilty of financial misconduct. In some instances, that misconduct probably also amounted to a breach of their fiduciary duties to the SOEs. In particular, the Eskom Board members who failed in 2015 to discipline Mr Choeu and to report Mr Matjila to the shareholder breached their obligations under section 51(1)(e) of the PFMA. This failure occurred despite the previous Board having been explicit about the need for these further steps to be undertaken by the new Board. The new Board's conduct was therefore, at a minimum, grossly negligent. Section 86(3) of the PFMA makes such conduct an offence and carries a sentence, on conviction, of either a fine or a period of imprisonment not exceeding five years.

224. These matters should therefore be handed over to the National Prosecuting Authority for further investigation and, where warranted, prosecution.

225. In so far as Eskom is concerned, the Commission's limited time and resources did not make it possible to consider the position of every one of the 2015 Eskom Board members. All of the 2015 Eskom Board members received Rule 3.3 notices related to the Eskom TNA evidence presented at the Commission.

226. Only three Board members responded, namely:

    226.1 Ms Klein, who provided the statement that she had previously submitted to Parliament's Public Enterprises Portfolio Committee. She indicated that she had not supported the round robin resolution to ratify the third TNA contract.

    226.2 Both Dr Pathmanathan Naidoo and Ms Devapushpum Naidoo also responded to the Commission. Ms Naidoo explained that she was influenced by the Ledwaba Mazwai report in deciding to ratify the contract. In his affidavit, Dr Naidoo indicated that he was influenced by the impact the TNA contract had for the company's interim results.

227. The remaining board members did not respond to their Rule 3.3 notices.

228. The position of each of the new 2015 Board members of Eskom will therefore need to be investigated further before any charges could be brought against any of them individually.

Conclusion: TRANSNET

229. Mr Molefe and Mr Sigonyela were directly facilitating the use of public funds for TNA spending. They did not appear to resist and indeed appeared determined to ensure that these contracts were concluded on terms that were extremely disadvantageous for Transnet. Mr Sigonyela used threats and intimidation to ensure that his subordinates complied with instructions to advance the interests of TNA. The spending on these contracts was irregular, fruitless and wasteful.

230. Both Mr Molefe and Mr Sigonyela received Rule 3.3 notices related to the evidence presented at the Commission.

    230.1 Mr Sigonyela's lawyers informed the Commission in correspondence that they would consider Mr Sigonyela's position after the evidence had been presented and, if necessary, make application to cross examine the witnesses. No such applications were received.

    230.2 Mr Molefe did not respond to the Rule 3.3 notices. However, he did give evidence at the Commission and was questioned about these contracts with TNA. The gist of his evidence was that the millions of Rands that were spent on the Big Interview were justified because Transnet needed to "move away from paying for adverts and move our brand to the mainstream news ... and the Big Interview was an opportunity to do that".

    230.3 This justification does not hold water. The Big Interview did not move Transnet away from paying for advertisements. On the contrary, it cost Transnet handsomely – a total of more than R24 million.

    230.4 On the business breakfasts, Mr Molefe was questioned on two aspects: how Transnet derived value for money from the breakfasts and why they had changed from being described as "sponsorships" to "partnerships". Mr Molefe testified that the business breakfasts had value because they allowed for good news about Transnet to be covered in the media and gave the Transnet CEO an opportunity to speak about Transnet. However, this "value" could not have been worth the amount paid for it. It is doubtful that it could ever be justified for a SOE to pay R 1 million for its CEO to make a ten minute presentation to a room full of people whose identity would not be known beforehand.

    230.5 On the question of the change from "sponsorship" to "partnership", the issue was whether this change had been a deliberate one to keep the approval power with Mr Molefe because the change in description coincided with a change to his own delegation of authority from the Board of Transnet. If the contracts had not been changed from being described as "sponsorships", they would have required Board approval.

    230.6 When Mr Molefe was first questioned about this during his testimony, he did not have an answer and asked for an opportunity to submit an affidavit. The affidavit did not provide a credible response. Mr Molefe stated in his affidavit that the description was changed because, "we found that Partnership was a more accurate reflection of the nature of our relationship with the SABC and the TNA ... classifying the briefings as sponsorships did not reflect the fact that Transnet was benefitting commercially from the briefings in the form of exposure for the brand as well as advertising."

    230.7 However, the explanation that Mr Molefe provided does not explain why the way the parties described the contract mattered. This was a contract between the TNA and Transnet. They were the only parties affected by it and they could have called it whatever they wanted, unless what they called it had some bearing on whether it would be approved or not, and by whom. That is the issue around the name change that Mr Molefe never squarely addresses. The only relevance that the name change could have had is if the description mattered for some purpose.

The only purpose that has been proffered is the one that Mr Molefe does not directly address, namely, that the description mattered because if it remained a "sponsorship", then Mr Molefe could not approve it on his own and it would have to go to the Board. Finally, it is not clear that calling the arrangement a "partnership" is any more accurate a way to convey the fact that it presented a branding opportunity. The commercial benefit of sponsorships also lies in the branding opportunities that they present.

231. Mr Molefe's efforts at justifying the TNA contracts do not, therefore, bear scrutiny.

232. Neither Mr Jackson nor Mr Phatlane were direct facilitators for the Guptas. They did register their disapproval of the TNA spending. However, they failed to bring their concerns to the attention of anyone beyond their immediate superiors. They also failed to resist the instructions that they received. Therefore, they were complicit in allowing the spending on the TNA contracts for which there was no legitimate justification. And they allowed the contracts to continue for many years.

233. The only time some value was extracted from the contracts was when personnel were replaced in 2016 and Mr Likhethe saw to it that Transnet at least took steps to ensure that the last six business breakfasts provided exposure for Transnet.

234. The business breakfast contracts were clearly not partnerships. They were sponsorships that exceeded the Group CE's delegation of authority.

Conclusion: SAA

235. The patterns followed at Eskom and Transnet have also been uncovered in the aviation evidence heard by the Commission. The SAA Board would reach a decision and then, in a reversal of proper process, seek a recommendation from management to justify the decision. This type of ex post facto generating of a paper trail and this veneer of proper process and justification covered up the true situation at these entities and allowed state capture and corruption to flourish unabated for a number of years.

236. The Commission's investigation into the TNA contracts between TNA and Transnet, Eskom and SAA respectively can only lead to one conclusion: irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

SOUTH AFRICAN REVENUE SERVICE

INTRODUCTION

1. This report outlines the Commission's findings, conclusions and recommendations in relation to several witnesses that had given evidence before the Commission on the particular topic involving the state of affairs at the South African Revenue Service (SARS) during the period in which Mr Tom Moyane was its Commissioner.

THE PUBLIC PROTECTOR'S REPORT

2. The establishment of this Commission derives from a report by the Public Protector, No. 6 of 2016/2017 dated 14th October 2016. By way of Proclamation 3 of 2018, the President of the Republic appointed a Commission of Inquiry to investigate allegations of State Capture, Corruption and Fraud in the Public Sector including Organs of State with the TOR contained in the Schedule. The Commission was directed to, amongst other things, inquire into, make findings, report on and make recommendations guided by the said Public Protector's Report, the Constitution, relevant legislation, policies and guidelines, as well as the order of the Gauteng High Court of 14th December 2017 under case number 91139/2016.

3. The Public Protector's Report does not refer to any activities regarding the South African Revenue Service (SARS), but it is abundantly clear from the said Proclamation read in particular with Clauses 1.1 and 1.4 of the Schedule containing the TORS, that the Commission had the power to investigate allegations of state capture and any violations or breaches of the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation, that may have occurred within SARS. The said Proclamation and the Schedule is couched in very wide terms and any recommendation or the absence thereof by the Public Protector was not a sine qua non for investigating and considering allegations relating to state capture within the confines of SARS whilst Mr Moyane was the Commissioner.

4. SARS is an Organ of State as per section 239 (a) of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa. 1996. The Tax Administration Act 28 of 2011 governs its activities, and it is subject to the provisions of s 195 of the Constitution which deals with the basic values and principles governing public administration. It is expected that a high standard of professional ethics must be promoted and maintained at the organisation, and it must remain accountable and transparent in all its activities and operations.

5. The State cannot fulfil its socio-economic, constitutional and other commitments if SARS does not function honestly, effectively, professionally and with openness and transparency. A compelling and national interest is therefore at stake because SARS constitutes a fundamental and indispensable pillar of our country's fiscal framework.

THE SCOPE OF THE EVIDENCE RELATING TO SARS

6. What is the focus of the evidence presented to the Commission in relation to SARS? In the following paragraphs, the main points of contention will be summarised as follows:

    6.1 The SARS evidence was central to the Commission's mandate to enquire into allegations of state capture.

    6.2 SARS has featured prominently in allegations of state capture and it would be contended that the actors in question weakened and misdirected the operations of SARS, particularly its governance and compliance functions, rendering it less effective; for unlawful purposes. Accordingly, the SARS evidence falls squarely within the Commission's TORs.

    6.3 The Nugent Commission, Chaired by Judge J.A. Nugent, conducted an enquiry into tax administration and governance failures at SARS under the TORs published on 18th June 2018 and that Commission was required to make findings on and report on eighteen specific issues.

    6.4 The Nugent Commission focussed on irregularities at SARS including what it found "was the seizure of SARS" by Mr Moyane and others, whilst on the other hand this Commission was investigating capture of SOEs including SARS.

    6.5 This Commission has no desire to repeat the work of the Nugent Commission, nor does it seek to re-enter the fray. In the absence of any judicial review of the Nugent Commission's Report, its factual findings will stand, and no evidence in contradiction of any such findings can be accepted.

7. To determine the correct dividing line between what is a permissible topic of enquiry for this Commission and what is not, because it has already been dealt with, one must consider briefly what was investigated and found in the Nugent Commission Report:

    7.1 The first finding was that there had been a massive failure of integrity and governance at SARS brought about by the "reckless mismanagement of SARS on the part of the former Commissioner Mr Moyane".

    7.2 Mr Moyane had dismantled the elements of governance and seized control of SARS as if it was his own domain.

    7.3 Senior management was driven out or marginalised.

    7.4 The development of SARS's sophisticated information technology systems was summarily halted.

7.5 The organisational structure of SARS that provided oversight was pulled apart.

7.6 Accountability to other State Authorities was defied and capacity for investigating corruption and fraud was disabled.

7.7 Mr Moyane engendered a culture of fear, bullying and intimidation and there was a purging of competent top officials.

8. President Ramaphosa terminated the services of Mr Moyane on 1 November 2018. He had been appointed for a 5-year term from 29th September 2014 to 29th September 2019. Having regard to his qualifications, or rather the lack thereof pertaining to the duties and functions of such a crucial Organ of State, one must justifiably ask: why was this appointment made?

9. Mr Moyane refused to engage with the Nugent Commission, and after an interim report, the President suspended him on 19 March 2018. The actions of the President were challenged in the Gauteng High Court but the application was dismissed with costs.

10. Matters concerning SARS which were not within the remit of the Nugent Commission, were dealt with by this Commission. The focus was on the consulting company Bain & Company in connection with SARS as the Nugent Commission had concluded that Bain "had not told the full story". The Commission's mandate required that the strategic significance of the capture of SARS be contextualised within the big picture of the state capture inquiry. The Nugent Commission's findings and the evidence led showed that the "repurposing" of SARS followed similar patterns and processes of state capture that have been observed in other state institutions.

EVIDENCE

11. Mr Athol Williams, a former employee of Bain, was referred to his affidavit dated 20 August 2020. He confirmed that the affidavit was truthful and correct. He has impressive academic qualifications including five Masters Degrees. He was thus highly qualified in the fields of business and ethics. He joined Bain in 1995 and was stationed in various cities and in September 2009 he was offered a partnership in Johannesburg. From 2010 he acted in the role of an ad hoc adviser to Bain.

12. At the end of August 2019, Mr Williams resigned, because he was of the view that Bain had not been transparent with him and the South African authorities regarding their investigation into what happened at SARS under their tenure. He made various statements to the media to this effect in 2019 before the Nugent Commission.

13. He indicated that he had heard the testimony given by Mr Massone before the Nugent Commission and was shocked by it. He contacted a senior partner in London, as well as an investigative journalist by the name of Mr T. Moolman. His intention was "to do the right thing for South Africa". He offered himself as a consultant to Bain to assist it with the matter of internal investigations. The sentiment expressed between himself and Bain was that he would be allowed to have access to any required information in order to bring concerns to an appropriate outside party.

14. The agreement was concluded between Mr Williams and Bain on 7 September 2018. He was given authority to provide independent oversight of the external and internal investigations that Bain was conducting. The internal investigation was aimed at discerning what had occurred at SARS. The external investigation was to be conducted by a law firm, Baker McKenzie, on this matter. The intention behind this was to provide the Nugent Commission with an interim report. However, he was not given access to any report drafted by Baker McKenzie, though he did communicate with Judge Nugent on this matter directly.

15. During the so-called first period Mr Williams did receive selected non-privileged documents from Bain. There were emails during the so-called second period following which a remedy plan was developed but he received no new documents. All the documents referred to in his affidavit were documents presented to him by Bain or Baker McKenzie.

16. In his view neither Bain nor Baker McKenzie “had come clean” with the Nugent Commission. As mentioned, Bain had refused Mr Williams access to the findings report and he could make no assessment as to the truthfulness thereof. Judge Nugent had in addition written to him that Bain were being evasive and were not addressing real concerns.

17. Accordingly, he resigned from his engagement with Bain in August 2019 because they continued to withhold information which he thought was relevant. Thereafter he collated all the evidence in his possession (about 500 plus documents and emails), and this allowed him to develop the sequence of events described in his affidavit.

Bain and Ambrobrite contract

18. Mr Williams was referred to a “Business Development and Stakeholder Contract” concluded between Bain & Company SA and Ambrobrite (Pty) Ltd dated 1 November 2013. Ambrobrite was certainly not a business consulting or management consulting company as described in para.1 of the agreement. The company was set up by Mr Duma Ndlovu, a TV producer, and Mr Mandla KaNozulu. Both men are artists who work in the creative arts. They describe Ambrobrite as an events management company. The company had no internet presence, no website, and no financial records. It also had a tax certificate which SARS had indicated might be fraudulent. The description of the company is intentionally misleading.

19. Paragraph 2 of the abovementioned agreement is highly significant, and it is necessary to quote it in full.

> Bain & Company SA, in collaboration of Ambrorite, has identified the Government and State Owned Enterprise Sector as a strategic priority. This sector represents an important share of the GDP and is an important buyer of consulting services. It is commonly accepted that to build a sustainable consulting business in South Africa a substantial participation to this sector is required.
> In addition, Ambrobrite intelligence has allowed Bain in the last few months to acknowledge that in the next few years a number of State-Owned Enterprises and Agencies will be subject to leadership and strategic changes and will require significant transformation and turn-around processes. This is at “the core” of Bain activity and skills. Supporting competent, empowered and change orientated leaders in solving important strategic challenges is Bain & Company SA’s most important ambition.
> However, current Bain positioning in this sector is extremely weak: in terms of brand positioning, relationships, understanding of the internal situations and competitive dynamics, purchasing policies and procedures.
> Bain & Company South Africa is of the opinion that a collaboration with Ambrobrite would substantially benefit its business and the probability of success in this sector.

20. This reflects a clear intention to invade SOEs and Agencies when they were subject to leadership and strategic changes. The said relationships would be governed by Mr Massone, acting on behalf of Bain, Mr Ndlovu and Mr KaNozulu, at an eye-watering monthly “retainer fee” of R100,000 which would increase to R200,000 per month in case of an “exceed expectations” performance.

21. Mr Williams believed the contents of this agreement and the clauses referred to were shocking. Mr Williams understandably thought that it was bizarre that one of the pre-eminent consulting firms in the world would turn to two artists to give them strategic advice.

22. Paragraph 3 of the said agreement and bullet point 3 under the heading “Bain Brand Positioning”, are equally astounding and disturbing. The first mentioned refers to “Identify key priority targets in the Government/SOE sector, including SARS”, whilst the latter seeks to identify key opinion leaders who would in future have key roles in deciding or influencing future policies. In addition, the contract states that, according to Ambrobrite intelligence, in the next few years several SOEs would be subject to leadership and strategic changes and would require “significant transformation and turnaround processes". The contract states that Bain believed a collaboration with Ambrobrite would substantially benefit its business and the probability of success in this sector. One could justifiably ask why such a clause was inserted in that it is, for example, almost common knowledge, or easily ascertainable, who a particular DG of a department is or the Chairperson of a particular SOE will be.

23. The fees which Bain paid for these services was R3.6 million per year, which made Ambrobrite the second highest paid of the 53 advisors that Bain worked with worldwide. It was paid 50% higher than the next highest paid advisor.

24. Mr Williams was referred to an email dated 10 November 2013 from Mr KaNozulu to Mr Massone. Invoices for September and October were annexed. Mr Williams then mentioned that prior to such, Ambrobrite had arranged a party that included President Zuma. In that context he was referred to an email dated 22 November 2013 from Mr Massone to his colleagues at Bain. In the fifth paragraph the following appears: "They have started working with me in September e.g., on SARS, the event with the President. . . ." The next logical questions would be: Why would the President attend a function arranged by these persons? Why is reference made to SARS?

25. On 18 December 2013, Geoff Smout, Head of Bain's finance office in London wrote to N. Venter saying: "Well I have just been to SARS who could not verify the TCC (Tax Compliance Certificate) and suspect it's fraudulent!" Mr Smout in this string of emails also mentions that he would like to see Ambrobrite's certificate of incorporation and VAT certificate. Mr Williams testified that their issues were never satisfactorily resolved. He added that Bain was a highly professional organisation, and the said contract was not typical of the type of agreements it entered into.

26. On 15 January 2014 Ms Wendy Muller, Global Head of Marketing for Bain sent an email to Mr Massone. She referred to a discussion with Mr Stuart Min, the Global Head of Legal at Bain. She had also penned the contract and asked for confirmation that neither of the two people mentioned by name in the contract, nor any of the other employees of Ambrobrite were South African government employees, as well as that there was no plan for money or favours changing hands between these two people or other Ambrobrite employees and any of the target executives or companies. Mr Massone responded that it was simply a business development arrangement where "these people" would inform them if they were aware of changes in the key positions in a few selected companies, provide them with intelligence on the current situation of a company's strategic and operational issues and possible leadership evolutions, and try to position Bain and introduce it to the relevant decision makers.

27. On 15 January 2014 Stuart Min sent an email to Wendy Muller asking the following:

> So, here's my main question – how are two "artistic producers" qualified to provide us with intelligence on company's strategic and operational issues, pending leadership changes, etc., which Vittorio claims is the purpose of the arrangement? .... it just seems disingenuous for Vittorio not to acknowledge in any way that we hope these guys will use their connections with President Zuma to influence executive selection decisions. . . .

28. On 2 June 2016 Mr Massone wrote to Ambrobrite on behalf of Bain extending their contract for a further six months. This was despite various concerns raised by very senior people at Bain, as Mr Williams acknowledged. The contract was in fact extended every six months until June 2016.

29. Mr Williams also confirmed that Mr KaNozulu had been paid for a party, which to him was an unusual activity. The new ANC Youth League head had apparently been invited and Mr Massone wanted to meet him. Mr Williams explained that this unusual activity disturbed him as Bain would normally pay for staff and running expenses but could not accept why it would pay for what was ostensibly an ANC Youth League party. This also fell outside the contractual arrangement with Ambrobrite. It was in fact a payment to a political party.

Involvement of President Zuma

30. Mr Williams was referred to an email from Mr Massone to Mr Paul Meehan, who was Mr Massone's superior at the time, dated 18 January 2014. Paragraph 2 mentions that a discussion had been had with President Zuma "on the country's vision and strategy". Some SOEs would be the key to change and economic development. It was said that Mr Zuma's idea is to create a concrete legacy during his second mandate which would start in June 2014. Fundamental pieces of that legacy would involve SARS, Eskom and others. It was made clear that the first "target" of such an institution would be the current or potential CEO.

31. Mr Williams described this as "a very concerning paragraph". He put his concern as follows: "It seems to me Bain had become President Zuma's consultants of choice because Bain seems to have this assurance that they are key to whatever the President's vision for the country is and his legacy". Telkom had been the first target under the name Project Phoenix. Mr Massone regarded this project as a "test case". He also explained what was contained in paragraph 3 of this email which referred to the estimated fees Bain would earn. For instance, in respect of SARS, it would earn $3 million per year.

32. Mr Williams explained that it was highly unusual for a management consultant to be meeting with the President of any country. They would usually meet with a DG of a Department or with a CEO of an SOE. Yet, Bain met the President seventeen times in the period 2012 to 2014, and such meetings continued up to 2016. This was all behind closed doors, after hours and at the President's official residence.

33. This evidence as substantiated by objective evidence in the form of emails confirms that Bain, through Mr Massone, conspired with the President and others to "invade" SARS and other SOEs for an ulterior, and most likely unlawful purpose.

34. It appeared that Bain understood that Ambrobrite's "intelligence" information regarding imminent "leadership and strategic changes" at SOEs and government agencies would be shared with them. An example of this was their introduction of Mr Moyane to Bain in October 2013, a relationship that led to the supposed "CEO coaching" engagements that Bain had with Mr Moyane for the year leading up to his appointment as Commissioner of SARS.

35. Mr Williams was of the opinion that the real intent of the contract between Bain and Ambrobrite was to take advantage of Mr Ndluvo's and Mr KaNozulu's proximity to President Zuma and other senior politicians, and to use that to their advantage to gain non-public information to use for their commercial gain.

36. Bain itself, through its due diligence process, had established some concerning features of this relationship. These concerns were raised, for example in an email exchange between the Director of Finance in Bain's London Office, Mr Geoff Smout and Ms Nicole Olmesdahl, who worked in finance in the South African office. In email correspondence, Mr Smout said, "this whole situation seems very dodgy" and that "for some reason, I do not trust the situation".

Bain's public statement

37. Mr Williams was referred to a public statement by Bain dated 20/3/20 which dealt with the Nugent Commission of Enquiry. It stated that the firm's involvement with SARS was a serious failure, for South Africa and SARS, and clearly Bain too. It said that the final report had laid bare the disarray in which SARS found itself, with both morale and performance severely damaged. Bain accepted that significant errors of judgment had been made in taking on this work. It said it had become an unwilling participant in a process that inflicted serious damage to SARS. Bain did not accept that its representatives knowingly participated in an effort to damage SARS, although it did make many mistakes.

38. However, it had no motive, monetary or otherwise, to damage SARS. The company confirmed that Mr Massone, Bain's former managing partner, was introduced to President Zuma in August 2012 and met with him seventeen times over the following two years. They were aware that they had met to build Bain South Africa's Public Sector Practice but were surprised to discover the frequency of their meetings. In October 2013, Mr Massone was introduced to Mr Moyane by Mr Ndlovu. It would appear, so it was put, that Mr Moyane was the President's intended appointee to be Commissioner of SARS well before it happened.

39. During the course of the following year, Mr Massone had numerous meetings that focussed on "coaching" Mr Moyane for this role, including preparation of a "First 100 Days" document. Following Mr Moyane's appointment in September 2014, SARS issued a formal procurement process in December. Bain won this process but this "may have been irregular" as the firm had prior knowledge of the Request for Proposals (RFP). It needs to be emphasised that this was Bain's own view, expressed publicly. However, there is no doubt that the process was irregular in that no procurement process as required by law, had been followed at all.

40. Bain acknowledged three significant mistakes: Firstly, it overstated the case for change at SARS, which was not justified. Secondly, when Mr Moyane disregarded their proposed organisational structure changes, and developed his own structure, they should have taken remedial steps, but they did not. Thirdly, by late 2016 they either knew or should have known, that Mr Moyane had a different agenda. It was a mistake not to question Mr Massone's decisions or actions closely enough. The statement continues to say that "clearly some responsibility should lie with Mr Massone who displayed poor judgment in dragging Bain into the SARS assignment. He did not adhere to some core Bain leadership values, especially around transparency, and their ways parted in November".

41. In South Africa Bain also allowed dissenting voices to be ignored or side-lined. They added that in hindsight, there was evidence to suggest that Mr Moyane was pursuing a personal political agenda at SARS. This evidence was presented to the Nugent Commission although Judge Nugent did not specifically deal with state capture but dealt in detail with the "seizing of SARS" with reference to a number of specific topics.

42. In the said Bain Press Statement and under the heading "Seeking the truth" the following appears:

> Since the fuller picture came to light through testimony to the Nugent Commission of Enquiry, Bain's mission has been to seek the truth of what happened, to make amends for behaviours which fell short of what was expected, and to make the necessary changes so that they can never happen again.
> After Mr Massone's initial testimony, it became clear that he was not being fully transparent with the Commission or with Bain, and we so hired global law firm Baker McKenzie to conduct a thorough, independent, forensic investigation. The work of Baker McKenzie identified almost 1,000 potentially relevant documents which were immediately submitted, unfiltered, to the Commission.
> We also mandated Athol Williams, a respected academic, social advocate and Bain Alumnus, to provide his own opinion to the independence and adequacy of the investigation by Baker McKenzie.
> Bain regrets the Commission's assessment that we failed adequately to co-operate with its work. We committed to be transparent with the Commission and believe we have made every reasonable effort to live up to that commitment.

43. Mr Williams was asked to comment on this press release. He agreed that Mr Massone showed poor judgment as did others at Bain. He disagreed that Mr Massone was solely to blame. On their own version Bain knew about the meetings with then President Zuma. They must have known about the contract and the exorbitant fees paid to fictitious management consultants. Mr Williams added that Bain knew, perhaps not all the details, but certainly what the relationship was meant to achieve.

Mr Moyane's role prior to his appointment

44. Mr Williams was referred to a document titled "Tracker Table". This document was compiled by Bain's legal team using Mr Massone's diary as well as his recall of meetings with then President Zuma. This reflects a schedule of such meetings between 11 August 2012 and 6 July 2014, as well as a column indicating the topic discussed. There were seventeen meetings. Mr Massone made several comments indicating that at no point was the appointment of Mr Moyane as Commissioner of SARS discussed at these meetings. However, he could not rule out that SARS was mentioned in passing. The "100 Days Plan" topic was discussed on six separate occasions. Bain had explained that these were basically marketing meetings, to display their capabilities to the President.

45. However, the question is why would a busy President attend seventeen of such meetings for such purpose? Mr Williams had previously testified that meetings occurred until 2016. When one reads the document as a whole and the footnote inserted by the legal team, which also refers to a meeting with Dr Zweli Mkhize on 14 August 2014 "to discuss ways to "reshape the South African economy", as well as a meeting with Mr Jeff Radebe on 18 August 2014, for the same reason, it becomes clear what the true purpose was. In the overall scheme of things, that these meetings were for marketing purposes as contended for by Bain, is absurd and cannot be accepted as true.

46. A document which totally contradicts Mr Massone's explanation referred to in the previous paragraph in the context of the schedule of meetings, dated 20 February 2014, from Mr Massone to Mr Franzen, who was a partner at Bain, and who led the day-to-day operations of the Bain project at SARS, was put to Mr Williams for comment. This is highly significant and wholly destructive of the exculpatory version tendered to the public by the Bain Press Release. It was also addressed to two other partners of Bain. Accordingly, it cannot seriously be suggested, as Bain attempted to do, that Mr Massone was largely acting on a frolic of his own over such a lengthy period. It is worth quoting:

> Subject: Quick note – please keep confidential guys, Met President yesterday in C.T. All good. There was also Tom (they (sic) guy we met re SARS) and it really seems he's getting that job, after elections. He was very friendly with me and seems a smart guy to work with.

47. This was on 20 February 2014 – many months before Mr Moyane would be appointed as Commissioner of SARS. This email reflects that Mr Massone was given some assurance that Mr Moyane would be appointed as Commissioner of SARS, some seven months before it occurred.

48. The evidence of the Minister of Finance for the period 2009 to 2014, Mr Pravin Gordhan, had been that the National Treasury had invited applications for the position of Commissioner of SARS. A total of 120 applications had been received and he had suggested to the President that a shortlist be prepared, and a transparent process be followed, but that this had not been done. It is plainly obvious why this route was not followed.

49. Mr Williams was then referred to his affidavit which dealt with the creation of a series of documents containing far-reaching plans to not only restructure certain government agencies and SOEs but also to restructure entire sectors of the South African economy. In his view, the restructuring was aimed at bringing as many organisations and as much financial resources under more concentrated control, which would greatly facilitate state capture. He himself had access to eight of such plans which he described.

50. He was referred to Bain's habit of assessing its personnel annually. The first step in that process was a self-assessment, which is intended to measure performance versus specific targets. Parts of this self-assessment are significant. It is worthwhile to quote para. 3:

> As a "halo-effect" of the relationship with Sipho and the role we played in Project Phoenix, we have been involved in preparing a high-level, outside-in strategic turn-around document on the SA Revenue Service (SARS). The person we prepared the document with and who pitched it to the SA President is most likely going to be appointed as Commissioner in the next few weeks/months and Bain will be assisting him, should he get the job. SARS is one of the largest and highly estimated Government Agency (sic) and a large Bain client in the previous dispensation (90's).

51. This self-assessment is dated 6 December 2013. Mr Williams regarded this comment as proof of the fact that Bain had developed a strategic turnaround document for SARS before either Mr Moyane or Bain were active at SARS. In other words, some ten months before he was appointed, Mr Moyane had "pitched" the turnaround document to President Zuma.

52. After studying the relevant eleven strategic planning documents that were referred to earlier Mr Williams believed they reflected a strategy to enable a grand scale capture, a pattern now well known to South Africa. In his affidavit he had also expressed the view (and confirmed in his oral evidence) that, if Bain was genuinely developing ideas to improve certain SOEs or sectors of our economy, he would have expected that they would present such plans to the DG of the appropriate Ministry or the Minister but not to the President. A project thereafter emanating from the President would in his view then remove proper governance and oversight. He was referred to an email sent by Mr Massone on 18 May 2014 to several persons concerning SAA but the significant comment which also applies to SARS, is the following: "I was told there's going to be change and they'll try to make this a "President's Project", like Telkom, to eliminate the Minister's discretionary power". Contrary to the view of Mr Min, who saw nothing sinister behind these projects and the methods adopted, Mr Williams's opinion was that one needed to consider the number of meetings with the President, after hours in his residence, the nature of the topics and the level of familiarity.

53. These were not benign projects. History has proven him correct. One merely needs to read and consider the Nugent Commission report. Amongst others, it describes the course of conduct of Mr Massone vis-à-vis SARS and Mr Moyane in some detail and, although its mandate was different, there is certainly a significant degree of overlap regarding what transpired at SARS after Mr Moyane's undoubtedly pre-planned appointment.

54. Mr Williams was referred to an email from Mr Ndlovu to Mr Mathepelo and copied to Mr KaNozulu and Mr Massone, dated 22 May 2014. The subject matter was "meeting with the principal". It referred to a "100 days document". This would seem to be the document titled "TM first 100 days" dated 26 May 2014. This document also featured in the Nugent Commission. Mr Williams said that this type of document would present in broad terms what a new appointee might encounter but it would only be presented when they knew who had in fact been appointed. The date is therefore significant. The justifiable question therefore was: how did Mr Massone know (as early as May 2014) that Mr Moyane would be appointed in October? This answer presents itself as obvious. Much of the document was "fairly standard stuff" but surprised him that in some places specific guidance is suggested which normally could only have emanated from someone with years of experience as a consultant to a specific organisation. The specific type of recommendations in his view raised red flags. Three items could be described as "red flags":

    54.1 "Build a healthy sponsorship spine to accelerate change and identify individuals to neutralize"

    54.2 "Leverage external influencers"; and

    54.3 "Identify individuals that could hamper change: 'watch outs' to 'neutralise'".

55. Paragraph 3 of that same section refers to "Take Control". It is ironic that Mr Moyane, speaking in broad terms, did exactly that, as the Nugent Commission report described in greater detail. Months before he was appointed it was also suggested to him that he should set up a transformation programme office and hire a new assistant. According to Mr Williams there must have been someone inside SARS feeding Bain with information.

56. His attention was drawn to a further plan titled "SARS 2.0 – what has to be done" dated August 2014. Under the heading "Executive Summary" the following appears: "In order to transform SARS into an innovative revenue and custom agency, SA government will have to run a profound strategy refresh. . . ." A "profound strategy refresh" suggests that the company or organisation is so dysfunctional, that one needs to "redo" everything from top to bottom. At that time no one would describe SARS as being that dysfunctional.

57. In his affidavit Mr Williams expressed the following view: "The intent was clear even before Mr Moyane and Bain arrived at SARS that they would not be merely updating the world-class organisation that existed but creating something different."

58. A further plan dated August 2014 titled "Review of SARS Operating Model and Structure" was referred to in an email dated 30 October 2018 from Baker McKenzie to Bain, including Mr Williams. Bain's view had been that Mr Massone had merely been "coaching" Mr Moyane before his appointment. Mr Williams found this position unacceptable on the facts, namely that all these advance plans had been presented to then President Zuma.

59. In an email dated 18 January 2014 from Mr Massone to his superior Mr Paul Meehan, he said the following in this context: "We work with the person to create a high-level strategic plan for the company. If the plan is approved most likely we are going to work with the CEO in its detailing and implementation".

60. The question was raised whether Bain was aware that Mr Moyane would be appointed Commissioner of SARS. In Mr Massone's self-assessment which is referred to above it was also said that the person "we prepared the document with, and we pitched to the SA President is most likely to be appointed as Commissioner in the next few weeks/months and they will be assisting him should he get the job..." So, it does appear that Bain had information already in December 2013 that Mr Moyane was likely to be appointed as the new Commissioner of SARS.

61. Another string of emails was dealt with. On 28 August 2014 at 8:04 am Mr Massone emailed Mr John Beaumont and others and said, "Just had a call and heard that SARS announcement should happen tomorrow or Monday". The reply to Mr Massone and Mr Beaumont from Mr Stephane Timpano at 8:41 am is as follows:

> That's great news. The last thinking was to start with 1 team (M +4 to +6) for 3 months to do fundamentally 2 things: 1. Run a full operational/strategic assessment of SARS 2. Assist Tom in starting properly his new role (direct "CEO" support work). We will then be able, based on the operational/strategic assessment, to build up the platform for a broader SARS transformational program (6-12 months plan).

62. However, in August 2014 this appointment was not yet in the public domain as the announcement was only made in September 2014. It was highly unusual that Bain would have been privy to that type of information, Bain must have had access "to a channel of information into our public institutions". The insider at SARS must have been Mr Jonas Makwakwa, who resigned on 13 March 2018.

63. Bain had multiple meetings with Mr Makwakwa, Head of Internal Audit at SARS, and had been the so-called "deep throat" relaying information about SARS to Bain and Mr Moyane. This information had been discovered by Baker McKenzie on behalf of Bain. It was also stated that Mr Massone had multiple meetings with Mr Makwakwa. Mr Williams emphasised that, contrary to Bain's assertion that all information had been in the public domain, it appeared that there was factual information that no one outside SARS could possibly know.

64. This important paragraph reads as follows: "The level of specificity with which Bain was able to offer action guidance to Moyane would only be possible with access to inside information at SARS", and as it turns out, this is exactly what happened. An email on 30 October 2018, from US-based Baker McKenzie partner, Regan Demas confirms this as he wrote that they have found evidence in Mr Massone's diary that Mr Makwakwa delivered a flash drive to Mr Massone in August 2014. The flash drive contained a document written by Mr Makwakwa titled "Review of SARS' Operating Model & Structure, August 2014". This further confirms that the restructure of SARS was discussed even before Moyane was appointed at SARS. In his affidavit, Mr Massone suggests that he only met Makwakwa once and downplays this meeting. In his testimony to the Nugent Commission, Mr Massone claimed that the materials they prepared for Moyane as "outside-in," used "public data" implying that they relied only on information from outside SARS. However, this seems unlikely considering the discussions and document that they received from Mr Makwakwa.

Mr Moyane's appointment

65. As indicated above, Mr Moyane was appointed on 23 September 2014. SARS issued a request for proposals and Bain was awarded its first contract assignment in January 2015. Against that background, reference was made to an annexure which contained an email from Marilyn Batonga dated 22 November 2018 to Mr Williams and others. This dealt with law firm Baker McKenzie's investigation into the SARS saga. It called this "Project Arrow". The fourth sub-paragraph of paragraph 1 refers to the need to identify the critical components of the next wave of SARS transformation. It also contemplates the appointment of an external consultant. The process would be a closed tender. Bain was one of the potential consulting firms, but it had drafted the RFP specifications. Mr Williams found this improper and rightly so, but in fact it is unlawful in the context of s.217 of the Constitution.

66. Having regard to the Nugent Commission's finding about the conduct of Mr Moyane at SARS, it is important to note, as Mr van Loggerenberg said, that by 2013 SARS scored among the top five revenue and custom authorities in the world in the context of the internationally recognised tax administration diagnostic assessments tool. This makes it even more inexplicable why a total re-structuring and transformation was sought by Bain and Mr Moyane with the concurrence of then President Zuma.

67. On 18 November 2014 Mr Massone sent an email to Mr Meeham. Mr Williams saw the context as being the hope that Bain would be doing work for Telkom, though they admit that they did not have the required expertise.

68. On 4 December 2014 Mr Massone sent an email to Mr Sipho Maseko, the CEO of Telkom. He said:

> I received a call from SARS (the Acting COO) who told me that they would like to use Telkom's contract to give a mandate to SARS. Apparently, law or practice says that they can piggyback another SOE. This will enable an immediate start avoiding long and complicated tender processes.

69. Mr Williams was of the view that neither Mr Massone nor Mr Franzen from Bain had expertise of working with tax authorities anywhere. Mr Williams was then referred to an affidavit by Ms. Diyoka dated 16 February 2021. She was the executive in the SARS procurement department who had previously asked Bain for references. She states that her request to Mr Williams had nothing to do with any RFP process. The email was intended to establish whether Bain had a contract suitable for SARS's needs with any Organ of State, in which SARS could then participate. She referred to section 16A6.6 of the PFMA in this context, which in turn refers to a "competitive bidding process by any other Organ of State and subject to the written approval of such Organ of State and the relevant contractors". Her action was therefore legitimate, and she was not involved in any illegal or improper conduct. Mr Williams was of the view that the problem was that Ms Diyoka had sought references from Bain even before the RFP process had begun. She also did not deny that these references were sought for procurement purposes.

70. Why would these references be sought in December 2014? His view was that it had already been decided that Bain would be their consultant. This conclusion is supported by the other objective evidence dealt with above.

71. In his affidavit, Mr Williams described the procurement process in chronological order. On 12 March 2015 Mr Massone sent an internal email to colleagues informing them that Mr Makwakwa had related to him that Mr Moyane had met with the procurement department and that "he doesn't see a problem". Mr Williams explained that SARS had issued an RFP in December 2014 that Bain and others had responded to. That was for certain work to be completed over six weeks. The BAC expressed some discomfort with Bain's proposal but nevertheless appointed it.

72. The ultimate result was that Bain did work at SARS for 27 months after having been awarded an initial contract for six weeks, to the value of some R2 million. In the end they were paid R164 million.

73. With reference to various emails Mr Williams stated the procurement process was ultimately extended, after a to-and-fro debate, on the basis that a contract could be extended because of an emergency, or if it is a single source provider. At the end of the second phase, even a year later, the problem again arose as to whether to extend the contract without an open tender process. The "solution" was found by arguing that, if Bain did not do phase 3, the first two phases would have become meaningless and wasteful expenditure. The result was that there was no open tender process for phases 2 and 3.

74. The resignation of certain people or the termination of their contracts was then dealt with. This topic was dealt with in detail in the Nugent Commission Report and one should defer to it. I will give one example of Mr Moyane's actions during his reign: On 3 December 2014 Mr Massone wrote to Mr Franzen in relation to the resignation of Barry Hore: "Now I am scared by Tom. This guy was supposed to be untouchable, and it took Tom just a few weeks to make him resign .... Scary...." Mr Hore was the COO of SARS. He was a key figure in the SARS structure as 70% of the operations people reported to him. Mr Hore was also the individual specified in the section of Mr Moyane's "First 100 Days" document that he was advised to "neutralise."

75. Another significant comment appears in the transcript of evidence with reference to an email written by Marlon Bouman to Mr Williams and the Baker McKenzie team. He said the following after briefly describing his tenure at SARS: "However, with hindsight, what does stand out to me was the arrogance with which the Moyane-Zuma-Bain links were dismissed .... I also felt leadership were dismissive of the reports when they first surfaced at the end 2015".

76. Considering the multiple emails referred to above it was clear enough that Bain knew of Mr Moyane's appointment in advance. The nature and content of the materials that Bain had prepared for Mr Moyane and the procurement process (or rather the lack thereof) all indicated that it could not genuinely be said that Bain had been an unwilling participant. Mr Williams also mentioned that Bain had declined an invitation to testify at the Nugent Commission. Neither Bain nor McKenzie ever presented a written report to the Nugent Commission, acting in contradiction to their earlier assurance that their investigation would be wholly transparent. It was clear to Mr Williams that Bain had deviated from any transparent process of investigation, had lied to the public and their staff and had lied to the authorities.

77. Mr Williams confirmed that he had prepared an interim report and submitted it to the Nugent Commission. Mr Williams was asked what further knowledge he had obtained after his reports. He replied that two things led him to change his views. After December 2018 Mr Williams spent another eight months at Bain and after the Nugent Commission he reviewed all materials at his disposal. He was referred to an affidavit by Mr Moyane dated 3 March 2021. Various comments of Mr Moyane were discussed with him, and his material replies thereto are the following:

    77.1 He agreed that he was disgruntled. He was angry and dissatisfied with the corruption in this country.

    77.2 He could not assess whether Mr Moyane acted unlawfully or not but from what he had read, he thought his conduct was unethical and improper.

    77.3 Mr Williams said he did not regard himself as an accuser. He had simply analysed the documents in his possession.

78. Mr Moyane himself stated that in the early part of 2014 the then President Zuma informed him in strict confidence that he intended to appoint him as Commissioner of SARS. Mr Moyane said that President Zuma told him that his intention to appoint him should be kept under wraps as he only intended to formalise it if the ANC won the 2014 general election and he continued to be President.

79. In the context of Mr Williams second affidavit, he was referred to an application made by Bain to cross-examine him, and the supporting affidavit of Mr Min, who admitted that there were ethical flaws in its conduct. Mr Massone had not acted appropriately in how he sought to interact with public entities and public figures. Mr Williams replied that his view was that an admission of unethical flaws was completely meaningless unless they identified what those ethical flaws were.

80. Mr Williams gave evidence that Mr Massone was certainly not the "lone rogue" who was acting wrongfully as Bain had tried to portray him. He said organisations do not work that way, but they do regularly try to re-assure the public by stating that a particular wrongdoer has been dealt with and the problems were thus solved. The email exchanges and the self-assessment report supported this view.

81. Mr Min himself stated that Bain SA had given some input into the draft RFP (as Mr Williams had confirmed) and that Bain SA was well positioned, given its strong relationship with Mr Moyane.

82. Lastly, Mr Williams described the consequences of his involvement with the Commission for himself, his family, and his career. He wrote the 700 pages of his affidavits himself. No law firm in South Africa would offer him support. Even the Commission could offer him no legal support. UCT, at which he lectured ethics told him that he was neglecting his duties and asked him to leave. In his view whistle blowers do not have sufficient protection. All he wanted from Bain was to make a full disclosure and then make amends for it. He had launched a public campaign recently to urge this.

83. The conclusions that Mr Williams arrived at were fully supported by the emails and documents referred to by the Commission. He was held to be a strong credible witness speaking with courage and conviction. The Commission agrees that the whistle blower legislation should be revisited and strengthened for the benefit of persons such as Mr Williams.

ASPECTS OF THE NUGENT REPORT

Mr Vlok Symington

84. Mr Symington had been employed at SARS since April 1990 and was a senior executive in March 2021 when he gave evidence at the Commission. He was called principally to describe the events of 18 October 2016.

85. On 18 October 2016 Mr Symington was busy in the office drafting an affidavit when Mr Titi, the bodyguard of Mr Moyane, asked him to hand over a letter that had emanated from the Hawks. They then went to the boardroom where several Hawks officers were present. He was again asked to hand over that particular letter. It appears certain emails were attached to this letter erroneously, and these were from the National Prosecutions Authority (NPA) and were apparently confidential. Mr Titi did not allow him to leave the boardroom, a scuffle ensued, and Mr Titi grabbed the letter. Mr Symington then called the emergency number of the SA Police Service as he was being held against his will.

86. The detailed evidence regarding the background to the Hawks or Advocate Pretorius's letter is in my view not relevant to the TORs of this Commission. Be that as it may, serious allegations were made against Mr Moyane, including that he perjured himself when he denied in an answering affidavit that he had laid criminal charges against Minister Gordhan. This contradicted the police docket which indicated that he was indeed the complainant.

87. During September 2017, Mr Symington launched an urgent application in the Gauteng High Court seeking an interdictpreventing any disciplinary action against him resulting from the events on 18 October 2016 and the disclosures he had made to IPID, which are dealt with in his affidavit. The interdict was sought pending the relief referred to in Part B which sought a declaratory order that certain disclosures made by him to Independent Police Investigative Directorate (IPID) were protected in terms of the Protected Disclosures Act 26 of 2000. The application was dismissed with costs on 22 September 2017.

88. In his said affidavit Mr Symington states that the disciplinary enquiry would be attended to by the Chairman pending the resolution of Part B. Subsequently the interdict application issue was settled shortly before the main application was heard. In his affidavit he criticised the presiding Judge for holding that the incident on 18 October 2016 was trivial and exaggerated.

89. Mr Symington was referred to his further affidavit dated 24 February 2021. Again, this concerns facts pertaining to what led to the disciplinary enquiry against him, and the conduct of Attorney Mothle who was instructed by SARS to do the necessary investigation and to submit a report. Having regard to Mr Symington's urgent application, the subsequent events pertaining to his disciplinary enquiry and the TORs, as well of the judgment of the Full Court in the Gordhan/Pillay matter, it is my view that this further evidence is no longer of any relevance.

Mr Johann van Loggerenberg

90. From the end of September 2014, when the appointment of Mr Moyane as Commissioner was announced "out of the blue", Mr van Loggerenberg said that two things happened. First, the public attacks on SARS and its officials ran unabated. By the end of 2014, these dossier type attacks were coming "thick and fast". Persons from within the state intelligence environment allegedly began to feed these dossiers into the media. Second, Mr Moyane did "absolutely nothing" to defend SARS or allow people in SARS who were able to defend SARS and its work to do so. The dossiers began to gain incredible traction in the media. There was no opportunity for implicated individuals to deal with or respond to these dossiers as they came in, let alone to be given a chance to see them. Mr van Loggerenberg said that on one occasion he was told that, if he released a statement to the media in response to one of these dossiers which implicated him personally, it would be regarded as gross misconduct on his part, and he would render himself liable to summary dismissal.

91. Mr van Loggerenberg attempted to engage with Mr Moyane with a view to explaining to him clearly that there was something bigger at play and that he could help to protect the revenue services. When his attempts were ignored, he engaged legal representatives to defend himself against what he said were consistent scurrilous and defamatory attacks that were aimed at discrediting him.

92. In what he described as the final attack, Mr van Loggerenberg told the Commission that a dossier appeared on 12 October 2014, alleging that senior investigators at SARS, located in the SPU, were part of what was styled a "Rogue Unit", a label to which Mr van Loggerenberg took grave exception. Among other things, it was said that the members of the Rogue Unit were illegally spying on President Zuma, and that they had bugged his home. Poor journalism at the Sunday Times allowed these allegations to appear in more than thirty articles published between August 2014 and April 2016. However, they have since been retracted.

93. Mr Moyane never questioned the veracity of these claims. In fact, Mr van Loggerenberg said that the attacks on SARS and the specific individuals implicated suited him perfectly. He immediately began to target SARS management by suspending the Executive Committee in November 2014, following the "fake news" headline about brothels being run by SARS.

94. On 13 October 2014 Mr Moyane sent a "Message from the Commissioner" to all employees in the Revenue Service in response to the previous day's article. He stated that SARS had lost the moral high ground with these serious allegations, which he had accepted as facts. He would not tolerate any rogue elements at SARS and had thus requested Advocate Sikhakhane to provide him an urgent provisional report.

95. In his affidavit Mr van Loggerenberg dealt with the reasons for the attacks and capture of SARS. He proceeded to give examples one of which is the following: various investigations by SARS into politically connected persons and entities have been ceased and no further action taken since 2014. He also gave details of the cigarette industry and the illicit part thereof and how the collection part of this project came to a halt since about 2015. He could however not refer to the evidence that he had seen in that context. The common denominator between all the cases or projects was that virtually every single one of them had connections to politicians and all of them had state intelligence operations footprints all over them.

96. It was his opinion that Mr Moyane had a clear brief to restructure SARS and dismantle its enforcement capabilities. The Nugent Commission had a similar view.

Mr Tom Moyane

97. Mr Moyane's evidence and his reply can be stated as follows:

    97.1 He was never involved in fraud, corruption, money laundering or similar crimes

97.2 He was not guilty of state capture as the term was generally understood

97.3 On the contrary he was privy to information which was likely to implicate some of his accusers in activities which might or might not fall under the general rubric of state capture; and

97.4 He requested that all the allegations against him be rejected.

98. Mr Moyane regarded the press statement made by Bain as "unfortunate". He said that he was aware of the findings of the Nugent Commission. He said that his view was that this was a well-orchestrated process, but he was not a party to it. He had also not read its interim report. When the final report was issued, he met with his Counsel and they gave him a breakdown of what it was all about.

99. He admitted that Bain had performed services for SARS from late 2015 to 2017 when he was Commissioner. His attention was drawn to the Bain Press Statement of 17 December 2018. It said amongst others that the firm's involvement with SARS was a serious failure for SARS, for South Africa and for Bain. His view was that this is not so and was misinformed. He was also referred to a passage that said the following: "In hindsight, there is evidence to suggest that Mr Moyane was pursuing a political agenda at SARS. Proper due diligence may have identified this risk". Mr Moyane's reply was simply: "preposterous". He added that they had failed to provide clear examples as to what this political agenda was about. In addition, SARS was not a political institution, it had clearly defined tasks and responsibilities. They were dealing with taxpayers and there was no time for politics.

100. In his affidavit he stated that there was nothing untoward or irregular about Bain's appointment. In fact, he could state without fear of contradiction that the Bain/SARS relationship yielded the best results ever recorded in the entire history of SARS. Notably, his view stands in stark contradiction of the views of Mr Williams, Bain itself, Mr van Loggerenberg and most importantly the Nugent Commission.

101. Mr Moyane was referred to a bundle of documents and correspondence between the Commission and Mabuza Attorneys on his behalf. This made it apparent that through his attorneys he was personally invited to attend and testify at the Commission. He was also given a transcript of the hearing from time to time and was asked whether he intended to respond to allegations concerning him. He took "cognisance" of that. He admitted ultimately that he did not take up the invitation to comment on the interim report prior to its release. The same applied to the final report. He was asked to state plainly and simply why he had not given evidence. His reply was that he did not want to answer the question. He agreed that he had not sought a review of the report.

102. He agreed that in the "early part of 2013" President Zuma informed him that he intended to appoint him as Commissioner, after he had applied for such position. This would be dependent on whether the ANC would win an outright majority in the 2014 elections.

103. Mr Moyane explained that his affidavit was incorrect where it referred to the early part of 2013. It should be after September. He stated in his affidavit that he felt well-qualified for the position though he did not have any experience in taxation but had been a generalist or senior executive in the public sector. He was then asked whether he knew why the President had appointed him. He replied that he was an economist, as he had completed a bachelor's degree in economics in Mozambique, whilst apparently working at various firms (having been seconded by the ANC). He had also already been the CEO of the Government Printing Works. Thereafter, he "transformed" Correctional Services. He did not know whether the President had considered a competitive process or whether he had discussed this with Mr Gordhan.

104. There was a follow-up meeting with the President, but he could not recall the date and month. It was after he had submitted his application. The President was in a meeting with the Chairman and CEO of Telkom and the Managing Director of Bain, Mr Massone. He did have extensive dealings with him as he was the lead person for Bain in South Africa. He did also tell him at a time that he had been earmarked by the President for the post of Commissioner of SARS. As stated above In April 2014 Mr Massone knew of Mr Moyane's impending appointment. In the context of the mentioned self-assessment by Mr Massone dated 6 December 2013, he accepted that there was reference to him. However, Mr Moyane he did not know what "Project Phoenix" was. He also was not familiar with the company Ambrobrite. He knew Mr Ndlovu as a musician and a playwright. They had been at school together. He admitted that he had a number of meetings with Mr Massone and others at Bain.

105. Mr Moyane met with Mr Franzen from Bain perhaps once or twice a month. He was familiar with the "TM First 100 Days" document mentioned above. It contained discussion points between himself and Mr Massone. He agreed that the various plans were the product of his and Mr Bain's input if he would take over as Commissioner.

106. He stated that the word "neutralise" individuals should not have been mentioned in the context of the "TM First 100 Days" document. It merely referred to accelerated change to consolidate structures of the organisation. It was unfortunate that this word was used. His idea was to "build not to come into strife". He suggested that Mr Massone might be to blame for the word "neutralise" as he was of Italian origin. He certainly refused to accept that there had been any intention to "neutralise" anyone.

107. With further reference to the same document and the name of Mr Barry Hore, the former COO of SARS, there was also no intention to test him, despite what appeared in writing. Mr Moyane states that he could not tinker with something that brings revenue to the country. He also added that after three months in the post, Mr Hore resigned without any acrimony.

108. It was put to him that this was not an isolated departure. Six people from the top echelon of SARS left within a year of his tenure. He was referred to the email of 3 December 2014 from Mr Massone to Mr Franzen that stated: "Goodbye, Barry Hore. Now I am scared by Tom".

109. Mr Moyane could not explain why Mr Massone had written this and why he added "it took Tom just a few weeks to make him resign". He denied that this reflected negative or sinister conduct on his part and added that if there had been an agenda on his side, he would not have taken the matter to the Minister of Finance.

110. He agreed that within two weeks of his appointment he had disbanded SARS's Exco and that this was quite a dramatic move. The Sunday Times newspaper had published an expose of a rogue unit. He disarmed this with Mr Pillay. He also discussed this with the Exco members. He also raised this with the Minister of Finance.

111. When he was referred to the Nugent Commission's finding on these topics Mr Moyane disagreed with its conclusions and stated that all the six senior persons left for personal reasons. In his opinion the members of Exco knew of the existence of the "Rogue Unit".

112. Despite the evidence of Mr Williams that Bain staff had no experience working with tax authorities anywhere in the world, Mr Moyane was of the view that Mr Massone and Mr Franzen interacted meaningfully on issues that pertained to the sector. Before his appointment he never enquired whether the Bain staff had any relevant experience. He depended entirely on the knowledge of Mr Massone and accepted the good faith of Bain in general.

113. In the context of his affidavit and the heading "The Rogue Unit" and "State Capture", it was put to him that the Full Bench in the Gauteng High Court held that the finding of the Public Protector that this unit was unlawful, was simply wrong. The report was not only wrong in law but was irrational and subject to be reviewed and set aside. The Sunday Times report, as well as the Sikhakhane and the Kroon reports were all discredited.

114. Mr Moyane stated that he was not aware of the abovementioned decision of the court. He further disagreed that the six senior people left because of any connection to this unit. To him this unit was merely a "side-show". However, if this was so, why call Exco together urgently, release a Press Statement and disband Exco?

Minister Pravin Gordhan

115. Minister Pravin Gordhan gave evidence during 2018 and 2020 and he was also cross-examined by Mr Moyane's Counsel. The evidence of Minister Gordhan commenced on 19 November 2018.

116. In 1998 Mr Gordhan became the Deputy Commissioner of SARS and between 1999 and 2009 he was the Commissioner. From 2009 to 2014 he was the Minister of Finance and then until 2015 he was the Minister of Co-operative Governance and Traditional Affairs (COGTA). From 13 December 2015, he was again in the portfolio of Minister of Finance, (after the dismissal of Minister Nene and the subsequent very brief tenure of Mr Des van Rooyen) until 30 March 2016 when he saw on television that he and several other Ministers had been dismissed. He was not informed of that beforehand. However, he remained as Member of Parliament serving on the Public Enterprises Committee. Later during 2018 he was appointed by President Ramaphosa as Minister of Public Enterprises.

117. In his statement, Minister Gordhan referred to the role of the National Treasury as follows:

> National Treasury is placed at the centre of the State by our Constitution and by the applicable legal framework that regulates the management of public finances, State procurement, revenue collection, tax administration, protection of the financial and banking system, and forensic analysis and input into decision-making with significant financial and fiscal consequences. For this reason, I believe that the capture of the National Treasury was an eminent objective of State Capture, along with the weakening of law enforcement and the capture of the SOEs.

118. Mr Oupa Magashula was appointed as SARS Commissioner on 30 July 2009. He resigned on 12 July 2013 and the post was advertised in the latter half of 2013 with the closing date for applications being 13 September 2013. The Ministry received more than 120 applications. In terms of the South African Revenue Service Act 34 of 1997 as amended by the South African Revenue Service Amendment Act 46 of 2002, Section 6, the President of the Republic appoints the Commissioner of SARS.

119. Once the applications for the posts have been received there is normally a short-listing process. This may have involved one or more Ministers or Deputy Ministers and an External Director-General. A Cabinet memorandum is then prepared, and the Department of Public Service and Administration (DPSA) presents the candidate to Cabinet for approval. That was the procedure that led to Mr Magashula's appointment. After his resignation, Mr Pillay was appointed as Acting Commissioner. The intention was that after the 2014 elections on 7 May, the incoming Minister of Finance would become involved in selecting, or even head-hunting the most suitable candidate. Mr Moyane was appointed whilst Minister Nene was Minister of Finance. They did not get to the interview stage. There was no short list. In his evidence Minister Gordhan said that Mr Nene was best suited to explain what happened after the elections. However, in his written statement, he stated that he became aware that President Zuma wished to exercise his powers to appoint the new Commissioner. He advised him that he may want to put his preferred candidate through the usual process that he had referred to. It appeared that he had ignored this suggestion.

120. For present purposes the following is relevant:

    120.1 Mr Nene was removed as Minister of Finance in early December 2015 and on 9 December the appointment of Mr Des van Rooyen was announced.

    120.2 This caused economic and financial turmoil in the markets and a sharp depreciation in the Rand.

    120.3 A wide-spread public outcry ensued.

    120.4 On Sunday 13 December 2015 the President asked to see Minister Gordhan and subsequently asked him to accept re-appointment as Minister of Finance, which he did.

121. In agreeing to do so again he indicated to President Zuma that there were three issues that required discussion:

    121.1 The ongoing financial predicament of SAA

    121.2 The proposed nuclear procurement deal; and

    121.3 Mr Moyane's role at SARS as Commissioner.

122. At that time no understandings were reached as to how these problems would be addressed. The Nugent Commission had been investigating issues at SARS in a broad context.

123. On 19 February 2016, in the week before the budget speeches, an envelope was handed to Minister Gordhan at the insistence of General Berning Ntlemeza. The envelope contained 27 questions addressed to him from the Hawks. The questions related to the High-Risk Investigation Unit. Charges against him relating to that unit had been filed by Mr Moyane on 15 May 2016 (Brooklyn SAPS Case No. 427/05/15/). Mr Moyane denied having done so. The fact is that he did not lay a charge concerning the activities of the so-called "Rogue Unit" but did lay a charge concerning the alleged early retirement with benefits saga that concerned Mr Pillay, the Public Protector and later a Full Bench of the High Court.

124. Minister Gordhan arranged to visit President Zuma later that day to present that correspondence and to ask him whether he was aware of and agreed with this law enforcement against him. The President merely "flipped the pages of the letter" and said he would discuss this matter with the then Minister of Police, Mr Nhleko. Mr Gordhan subsequently received no information from the President in this regard.

125. On 22 February 2016, just before the budget speech and the preparation thereof, he was asked to meet senior ANC members in Cape Town. The 27 questions and the charges against him were discussed with the Secretary-General Mr Gwede Mantashe, the Deputy Secretary-General Ms Jesse Duarte and the Treasurer General Mr Zweli Mkhize. He was assured that a political solution would be found. However, these questions were leaked to the media which indicated that there was an agenda. Subsequent correspondence was also leaked and Mr Gordhan wondered who those forces were.

126. The NPA laid charges against him which were later withdrawn by the National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) on 31 October 2016, stating neither he, Mr Magashula nor Mr Pillay had any intention to act unlawfully.

127. Minister Gordhan continued to deal with the relationships with and his interactions with Mr Moyane:

    127.1 Mr Moyane blatantly refused to account to him as Minister of Finance on material issues, such as the operating model of SARS.

    127.2 President Zuma did nothing to intervene in the deteriorating relationship nor to facilitate adjudication of the dispute.

    127.3 He faced ongoing personal and institutional attacks from Mr Moyane.

128. On 30 March 2017 President Zuma announced that Mr Gordhan and three other Ministers had been removed from their posts. Mr Gordhan was informed of this through a television channel and he had no contact with the President regarding his decision. He was replaced by Minister Malusi Gigaba. In his opinion the relationship between himself and the President had not broken down.

129. In the context of the term "State Capture" he believed that President Ramaphosa was attempting to steer South Africa in a way in which we could begin to find the moral centre again.

Mr Moyane's application to cross-examine Minister Gordhan

130. It is abundantly clear that there is great animosity between these two role-players and Mr Moyane alleges that Minister Gordhan "made it his life-long mission to have him removed from office, by hook or crook". It will not serve this Commission's purpose or mandate to deal with these personal issues or the "evidence" relating thereto. Mr Moyane's own conduct at SARS is particularly relevant and has been fully dealt with by the Nugent Commission. Whether or not such conduct amounted to "state capture, corruption and fraud" as in terms of the said Proclamation will be dealt with hereunder.

131. Regarding his proposed cross-examination theme of an alleged breach of procurement procedures in the so-called "Monyeki" case, that he improperly participated in the award of a tender to his friend, Mr Patrick Monyeki, and that he lied to Parliament by denying it, Mr Moyane made it clear that any details of such were not included in the sworn statement to the Commission by Minister Gordhan nor was there any evidence before the Commission in the transcripts. The Nugent Commission's Final Report did however deal with this topic in some detail (Chapter 16, par. [22], p. 158-161).

132. On the next proposed topic of racial and hurtful utterances, impairment of dignity and vendetta, these matters fall outside of the Commission's mandate.

133. Regarding the existence and role of the so-called "Rogue Unit", the Gauteng Full Court has ruled on this topic, which puts an end to this topic assuming even for the moment that it ever had anything to do with "state capture". Mr Moyane mentions that the Nugent Commission "inexplicitly and improperly" pronounces that the rogue unit was lawful. Neither did he accept the judgment of the Full Bench on this topic. Mr Moyane also referred to the fact that the envisaged prosecution of Minister Gordhan will provide all evidence, but as said, all charges against Minister Gordhan were withdrawn by the NDPP.

134. On 27 September 2018 a 90-page founding affidavit was filed in an application to the Constitutional Court. The respondents were President Ramaphosa, Minister Gordhan, Judge R. Nugent N.O, Advocate A. Bham S.C, Professor M. Katz, Advocate M. Masilo N.O. and Mr V. Kahla N.O. The last three respondents were assistants to the Nugent Commission whilst the fourth respondent was the chairman of a disciplinary enquiry instituted against Mr Moyane by the first respondent.

135. The main purpose of this application was to declare the conduct of the President in appointing the Nugent Commission and the disciplinary enquiry unlawful and invalid. It is clear that the integrity of every respondent was impugned with rigour. This application was dismissed by the Constitutional Court.

136. Minister Gordhan filed an opposing affidavit in the Moyane application for leave to cross-examine him. He pointed out amongst others, that personal issues were irrelevant and fell outside the Commission's Terms of Reference. The Nugent Commission had already made certain findings. Mr Moyane's services as Commissioner had been terminated by the President on 1 November 2018, following the Nugent Commission's interim report dated 27 September 2018. The "New Integrated Credit Solutions Contract" had been dealt with by the Nugent Commission, though not by this Commission.

137. On 30 November 2020 Minister Gordhan was led on the contents of a "clarificatory affidavit" that he had furnished to the Commission. In paragraph 22.5 Mr Gordhan said the following: "I believe [that] Mr Moyane's "personal goals" while he was SARS Commissioner included the advancement of a State Capture Project". In that context he referred to Chapter 2, par. [19] of the final Nugent Commission Report where it was said that "the failure of integrity and governance at SARS, soundly evidenced alone by the change over four years has certainly compromised the performance of its core function of collecting tax, to the detriment of this country at large".

138. During that clarification of evidence Mr Gordhan also rectified his earlier evidence that Mr Moyane had laid charges against him at the Brooklyn Police Station. That written complaint had surfaced later when it was disclosed to the Commission, and it does not contain his name. The charges preferred by the NPA later had to do with the pension fund debate involving the early retirement of Mr Pillay.

139. He described the lower tax compliance and the dismantling of various capabilities and institutions at SARS (all detailed by the Nugent Commission Reports). He concluded that Mr Moyane's conduct served the cause of "what today we know as state capture. . . "

140. This Commission is not concerned with whether Mr Moyane's actions were good or bad for SARS. It is first concerned with the question of whether Mr Moyane's actions at SARS were motivated by a desire to pursue state capture. And it is very important to keep these issues separate.

141. The crux of Minister Gordhan's cross-examination appears from his evidence:

    141.1 He agreed that his entire outlook was that Mr Moyane was motivated by state capture in performing his duties

    141.2 Amongst other things, "State Capture" was a term for crimes like corruption, fraud, and money laundering

    141.3 An allegation of being involved in State Capture was very serious.

    141.4 There should be facts supporting such allegations

141.5 As events unfolded during his tenure as Minister of Finance and Mr Moyane's tenure, hostilities developed

141.6 The activities that he began to see from 2016 at SARS when he was Minister of Finance led him to believe that Mr Moyane was engaging in activities that could be described as contributing to state capture

141.7 His knowledge and understanding of state capture evolved over time

141.8 Repeated changes to the Cabinet and the boards of SOEs were made to control such institutions by the "peddlers of state capture"

141.9 He accepted that state capture was essentially about capturing the Treasury, capturing the money; it could however also be by facilitating tenders, procurement and contracts

141.10 The four-day appointment of Mr van Rooyen was an attempt to capture the Treasury

141.11 The appointment of Mr Moyane followed a pattern of employing pliable persons within the government system and the private sector; and

141.12 The High-Risk Investigation Unit was the same entity as the so-called rogue unit. This topic dealt with its existence and its lawfulness. He confirmed that it did exist and that he had participated in the decision to establish it. This was around February 2007.

FINDINGS

142. How can "State of Capture" be defined? The Public Protector did not specifically define this concept nor explain explicitly why she used it. Reasonable deductions can however be made from her repeated references to Chapter 10 of the Constitution which deals with "Public Administration" and in particular s 195 which deals with "Basic values and principles governing public administration", which include in them the principles promoting a high standard of ethics, accountability, and transparency. The principles referred to in that section apply to administration in every sphere of government, Organs of State and Public Enterprises.

143. In addition, s1 of the Constitution describes other values such as the supremacy of the Constitution and the rule of law. Reference was also repeatedly made to the Executive Member's Ethics Act 82 of 1998 and the Executive Ethics Code promulgated thereunder. This Code required Cabinet members, Deputy Ministers and MEC's to act in good faith and in the best interest of good governance at all times. They may also not act in a way inconsistent with their office. Furthermore, they may not act in a way that may compromise the credibility or integrity of their office or of the government. In the recommendations the Public Protector's report referred specifically to SOEs like Eskom, Transnet, Denel and SAA but not SARS.

144. In terms of s 83 of the Constitution the President must uphold, defend and respect the Constitution. In paragraph (ii) of the Public Protector's report the following appears:

> This report relates to an investigation into complaints of improper and unethical conduct by the President and other state functionaries relating to alleged improper relationships and involvement of the Gupta family in the removal and appointment of Ministers and State Owned Enterprises (SOEs) resulting in improper and corrupt award of state contracts and benefits to the Gupta family's businesses.

145. This statement indicates what the Public Protector had in mind when using the term "State of Capture".

146. In his evidence Minister Gordhan agreed that the term "State Capture" related normally to crimes like corruption, fraud, money laundering and related activities. However, he added that, especially in the light of the conduct of Mr Moyane towards himself and the situation at SARS, state capture is to take control of an institution either at Board or CEO level, which was the case in the present instance. In addition, this "capture" protects those in power from an interrogation or transparency in relation to the kind of damage that is caused within the institutions. Furthermore, Mr Gordhan said it was about "repurposing" an institution or part thereof. For example, in SOEs, the repurposing took place in procurement on the one hand and the Treasury function on the other hand.

The Role of Mr T Moyane

147. Mr Moyane was appointed for a five year term by President Zuma from 29 September 2014 to 29 September 2019 but was dismissed by President Ramaphosa on 1 November 2018 after the issue of the Interim Report of the Nugent Commission of Inquiry dated 27 September 2018. His application to the Gauteng High Court to interdict the implementation of the interim report and to have it set aside, and that President Ramaphosa be interdicted from implementing the remaining recommendations, as well as interdicting him from appointing any person as Commissioner of SARS, was dismissed with costs on 11 December 2018 under Case No. 82287/2018.

148. His application to the Constitutional Court directly on 1 October 2018 was refused on 21 November 2018 because no basis had been laid for direct access. His application to the Constitutional Court for leave to appeal the Gauteng High Court decision was also dismissed.

149. The conduct of Mr Moyane whilst at SARS, having regard to the evidence of witnesses before the Nugent Commission and the evidence of Mr A. Williams, Mr J. van Loggerenberg, Mr V. Symington and Minister Gordhan, can best be described as appears from the interim report of the Nugent Commission. Appropriately quoted in full it reads:

> What is clear to the Commission is that SARS reeks of intrigue, fear, distrust and suspicion. We have heard of it repeatedly in evidence, and we have encountered it ourselves. The trajectory of modernisation that had been in the making for a decade was summarily stopped when the current Commissioner, Mr Tom Moyane took office on 27 September 2014, and the systems are degenerating as technology advances. The operating model has been restructured such that fragmentation of functions inhibits co-ordinated action to the benefit of delinquent taxpayers. The Large Business Centre as it had existed has been eviscerated to the detriment of revenue collection. The restructuring of the organisation displaced some 200 managerial employees from their jobs, many of whom ended up in positions that had no content or even job description, and in exasperation many skilled professionals have left. Others remain in supernumerary posts with their skills going to waste. Measures to counter criminality have been compromised and those who trade illicitly in commodities like tobacco operate with little constraint. Relations between the Commissioner of SARS and other state institutions – the Treasury, the Auditor-General, the Davis Tax Committee, the Financial Intelligence Centre – are icy, if there is any relationship at all, and SARS is isolated from its former high status amongst international bodies. Meanwhile, the reputation of SARS continues to be tarnished by reports in the media, many of which are true, to which the only response by Mr Moyane has been to attempt to intimidate the media by spurious litigation. In the unanimous view of the Commissioner and those appointed to assist him, that has been brought about by at least reckless mismanagement of SARS under the tenure of Mr Moyane and it ought not to be permitted to continue. We consider it imperative that a new Commissioner be appointed without delay to remove the uncertainty at SARS and enable it to be set on a firm course of recovery to arrest ongoing loss of revenue.

150. As a result of this finding the President was advised to remove Mr Moyane from office and to appoint a new Commissioner.

151. The interim report also mentioned that it would deal with the role of Bain, the dissolution of EXCO, the lawfulness or otherwise of the so-called Rogue Unit and the replacement of the Operating Model at SARS, and the relationship with other institutions, in its final report. At that stage of the proceedings the Commission said:

> No responsible leader of a major and complex organisation would have acted as Mr Moyane did, with lasting impact on the current state of SARS. With no experience of SARS or of revenue collection, his first decisive step was to denounce and humiliate its senior management and deprive it of its role. Having done so he turned a world-class organisation upside down, leaving SARS as it is today: wracked with intrigue, suspicion, and distrust, and fear of senior management; information technology that is in decay; a fragmented structure that inhibits collaboration amongst functions to the detriment of revenue collection; space for the illicit trade to flourish; loss of long-serving skills; skilled and experienced personnel in supernumerary positions doing little if anything at all; and revenue collection compromised.

152. This is fully supported by the extensive evidence of Mr Williams together with the objective evidence contained in the annexures to his affidavit submitted to this Commission. In addition, the final report contains the following incriminatory comment:

> [5] I reported in my interim report that the (failure of governance at SARS) was brought about by at least reckless management on the part of Mr Moyane. We have heard much evidence since then. What has become clear is that what occurred at SARS was inevitable the moment Mr Moyane set foot in SARS. He arrived without integrity and then dismantled the elements of governance one by one. This was more than mismanagement. It was seizing control of SARS as if it was his to have.

153. It must be remembered that Minister Gordhan had testified that, although the position of Commissioner had been advertised and 120 applications had been received, the normal process of drawing a short-list of candidates and interviewing them had not been followed. Furthermore, despite suggestions to President Zuma that this process be followed, it was not. Instead, President Zuma told Mr Moyane in confidence some months before his actual appointment that he would be appointed.

154. Mr Massone of Bain & Company must have known this as he had, together with Mr Moyane prepared certain documents and plans that described in some detail what role Mr Moyane would play at SARS, once his appointment was in place. Included in this preparation was the document dealt with in some detail by Mr Williams, titled “TM First 100 Days”. This document referred to a major restructuring process including the removal of certain persons who would most likely oppose this. Mr Moyane attempted to down-play this by stating that the use of the term “neutralise” in this context was “unfortunate”.

155. Mr Moyane deposed four affidavits and gave oral evidence on certain topics. He also testified before Parliament on 13 March 2018 about the “New Integrated Credit Solutions Contract”. In its final report the Nugent Commission found that Mr Moyane had approved this appointment on 15 February 2018, and that his evidence to the contrary was not true. He was the final approver for the award of the contract.

Projects that involved or did not involve Mr Moyane

Bain & Company

156. Mr Williams gave extensive evidence of Bain & Company’s role on 23 and 24 March 2021. His evidence was supported by objective evidence in the form of identified emails and plans. The final report of the Nugent Commission also dealt with the role of Bain.

157. Mr Massone was the local representative of Bain. The partly exculpatory media statement released by Bain on 20 March 2020 sought to put the blame for the events squarely on Mr Massone’s shoulders. It omitted to give the full and true facts, namely that Mr Massone had either copied or sent a number of emails to Bain directors.

158. Bain concluded a so-called “Business and Stakeholder Management Contract” on 1 November 2013 with Ambrobrite. The latter company was however an events management company for artists and the like with no management consultancy experience. It was managed by two artists, one of whom was Mr KaNozulu, and the other Mr Ndlovu, who appear to have had a close relationship with President Zuma. The real intent of the mentioned contract was to take advantage of Mr Ndlovu’s and Mr KaNozulu’s proximity to President Zuma and other politicians.

159. Ambrobrite introduced Mr Moyane to Bain in October 2013. This relationship led to the so-called "CEO coaching" engagements that Bain had with him in the year leading-up to his appointment as Commissioner of SARS. Bain met President Zuma seventeen times between 2012 and 2014 and Mr Williams testified that such meetings continued up to 2016. Mr Massone represented Bain in these meetings.

160. Mr Moyane in turn knew Mr Massone, and also knew months in advance of his intended appointment having been told of it by President Zuma himself.

161. According to Mr Williams, Bain had become President Zuma's consultants of choice, without any honest procurement process as required by the provisions of s 217 of the Constitution.

162. Mr Moyane's appointment was similarly made without the usual process of compiling a short-list, interviewing candidates, and preparing a Cabinet memorandum for consideration, as Minister Gordhan had testified. An exchange of emails between Mr Massone to his superior Mr Franzen on 4 April 2014 indicates that President Zuma had assured Mr Massone that Mr Moyane would be appointed Commissioner of SARS.

163. The Bain document referred to above as "TM First 100 Days" is dated 26 May 2014 and confirms prior knowledge of the appointment of Mr Moyane as Commissioner of SARS.

164. In the context of Bain and Mr Moyane being in deep collusion to restructure SARS, the Nugent Commission dealt with the procurement of a contract to enlist proposals for a turnaround plan for SARS. On 11 November 2014 Mr Moyane addressed a memorandum to the Finance Minister, Mr Nene seeking approval to approach independent consulting companies. The Nugent Commission found that what Mr Moyane had represented to the Minister was untrue, both in what was said and in what was not disclosed. In truth the only approach was to be made to consulting companies to entice them to participate in a procurement sham.

165. Approval having been given by the Minister, SARS at first approached Telkom with a request to "piggy-back" (as Mr Williams described it) on a contract that Telkom had with Bain. Mr Massone said that he knew nothing of the approach to Telkom, which was untrue. He in fact wrote to Mr Maseko of Telkom on 4 December 2014, making that proposal and in fact used the word "piggy-back". This came to naught. A closed tender process was then followed which the Nugent Commission described as a sham. Some of the proposals, which included the pricing, were completed within a single day of the Request for Proposals. Though Mr Massone denied that Bain had prior knowledge of the proposal, an email of 28 August 2014 records that Bain would have a few weeks to "ramp up" the procurement process. The RFP was issued on 11 December 2014 and some of the documents indicated that Bain replied by 12 December 2014.

166. There was no intention by Mr Moyane (and Mr Makwakwa) that there would be a return to the market for phase 2, which had already been planned, and Bain was to get the contract. The Nugent Commission found that the procurement process was manipulated to secure the restructuring of SARS by Bain, which would serve Mr Moyane's interests in taking control of SARS, and Bain's interest in making money.

167. It also recommended that the apparent practice at SARS to accept "loss leader" bids where multiple contracts were envisaged for a project, be reviewed by the National Treasury.

168. In the context of the "restructuring" process, there is no evidence that SARS was in a poor state as at 1 April 2014. The most significant change insisted upon by Mr Moyane was to combine the roles of overseeing individual tax and of corporate tax into one division called "Business and Individual Tax" (BAIT), reporting directly to the Commissioner. Contrary to the suggestion that this had been approved, their approval presentation took less than an hour and no-one had knowledge of the structure it was supposed to replace, and with no guidance other than that of Bain and Mr Moyane.

169. The resultant fragmentation was to the detriment of SARS and the effect on enforcement was particularly severe.

The Gartner contract

170. The Nugent Commission's Report dealt with a further instance regarding Mr Moyane's role in "restructuring" Information Technology and the "Gartner Contracts. SARS is an information technology-driven business. IT enables it to deliver on its core business. SARS needs to be linked to the digital economy and ideally be ahead of relevant developments. During early 2014 it had an effective and world class IT division. The division had dedicated people and was led by a "core team" headed by Mr Hore.

171. Mr Hore left SARS in January 2015. Before that he had prepared extensive handover notes that gave some insight into the direction and future of the "Modernisation Programme" which was to run in three phases. This programme was aimed at delivering performance in three areas: service, enforcement and compliance and cost efficiency.

172. After Mr Moyane had arrived in September 2014, he without consulting Mr Hore, informed all employees that he required external service providers to conduct an independent review of the "Modernisation Programme" and the "SARS Operation Model".

173. Bain had recommended a year before that there be an IT review. An Irish enterprise called Gartner was brought in for that purpose. Gartner specialises in conducting information technology research, which it makes available to clients on subscription. A smaller part of its business is to provide consultancy services. SARS had subscribed to its research service for some years and it still did so in December 2018.

174. Until 2016, Gartner did not have a presence in South Africa and was represented by a sales agent. If it secured consultancy business it would contract the work to independent consultants. While the contract to provide its consultancy services was between Gartner and SARS, delivery of the services was to be made by its sales agent Mr Willemse. He also represented Gartner in the early discussions that led to its appointment, and in the execution of the various contracts. Mr Willemse knew Mr Patrick Monyeki, professionally, who is well-grounded in information technology. He was also an acquaintance of Mr Moyane. On 24 September 2014, a meeting took place at Bain that was attended by Mr Monyeki and Mr Moyane amongst others.

175. Mr Willemse testified before the Nugent Commission that Mr Monyeki had told them of a new Commissioner at SARS who had "identified various issues" relating to the modernisation programme that needed attention. He said that he did not know what Mr Monyeki's relationship was with SARS, nor in what capacity he was acting, nor did he ever ask. The Nugent Commission said the following on that topic: "We regret that we are sceptical of that evidence".

176. Mr Willemse had been told by Mr Monyeki that SARS had identified Gartner as the organisation to undertake the project, and he was asked to provide input for the development of TORs for this purpose. These TORs were written by Mr Monyeki and Mr Willemse. In this context the Nugent Commission's Final Report: "There are obvious risks in a potential supplier writing its own Terms of Reference. The first is that it might write the terms in such a way that they favour its eventual appointment. Another risk is that the supplier might tailor the Terms of Reference in a manner that increases the likelihood that it would be appointed or retained for further work". The Nugent Commission found that the ordinarily required competitive procurement was not followed. This was unlawful and it was recommended that, if this was found by SARS to be so, that the contract be declared void and that expenditure incurred which offered no value to SARS, be recovered.

177. All the evidence before the Nugent Commission and this Commission point to one unescapable fact: Mr Moyane, at the behest of President Zuma, and in collusion with Bain – who acted primarily but not solely through Mr Massone – took control of SARS and restructured it to their benefit and to the detriment of the organisation.

178. In addition to the comments regarding Mr Moyane's role in the "New Integrated Credit Solutions" contract, on 13 March 2018 Mr Moyane appeared before the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Finance. He was asked the following question:

> I just would like SARS or the Commissioner to confirm whether or not New Integrated Credit Solutions (NICS) have been appointed to conduct debt collection and whether in fact there is the purported link to Mr Makwakwa through Patrick Monyeki and, if so, you know surely that would have disqualified under the present circumstances that we are talking about, that firm from being appointed and is it true they were appointed and is there, can he confirm the purported link to Mr Makwakwa? And if it is true, why did Makwakwa then sit on the National Adjudication Committee apparently, confirm whether or not he did, where the appointment of New Integrated Credit Solutions was made?

179. In response Mr Moyane said:

> On the issue of NICS and the linkage with Mr Monyeki, I do not know whether Mr Monyeki is a board member or is a director of NICS, I do not know. All I can say is that I do know Mr Monyeki like any other person that I know. I think it is prudent and therefore important that the Committee can do its homework to prove that he is a Director there. Certainly, NICS has been doing work with SARS since 2004. They have been doing work with SARS on debt collection. That we have on record. Now the point that says we may have – the procurement processes at SARS are very clear. There is all the tender processes that are followed and then you have bid evaluation, the Bid Evaluation Committee. The Commissioner does not sit in any of those committees, none at all. The Bid Adjudication Committee which is the NBAC, which is the highest, comprises of all chief officers except the Commissioner and then they take a decision based on the presentation of the Bid Evaluation Committee and they make an announcement and the award the tender to the preferring tender, tender presenter.
> I do not get involved and I do not get informed as to who the companies are, except when they indicate in a meeting that six, eight companies have been submitted and they have been awarded and this is what happens. I do not get involved.

180. The Nugent Commission Final Report stated:

> So far as Mr Moyane conveyed that he had no hand in the appointment of New Integrated Credit Solutions, which is not true. It is also not true that "the Bid Adjudication Committee which is the NBAC ... make an announcement and the award of the tender to the preferring tender, tender presenter". It is apparent from the documents that, on each of these occasions that New Integrated Credit Solutions was appointed to the panel, and again appointed to Phase 2, the NBAC made a recommendation to Mr Moyane, who then approved it by appending his signature to the report. He cannot but have known that New Integrated Credit Solutions was appointed, bearing in mind that he approved it.

181. It is also not true that he does "not get involved" in such appointments. Mr Moyane was the final approver for the award of the contract. In his replying affidavit he acknowledged expressly that he had been "involved" in the award of the contract.

CONCLUSION

182. From a "State Capture" point of view as defined appropriately by Minister Gordhan above, a critical result was that the constitutional imperatives required by s195 and 217 of the Constitution were breached. This in turn resulted in lack of oversight, accountability and transparency and the avoidance of compliance with the provisions relating to fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective processes. These transgressions seem to have been the primary motives of President Zuma, Bain & Company and Mr Moyane. This conduct falls squarely within paragraphs 1.1 and 1.4 of the Schedule to the President's Proclamation 3 of 2018.

183. The SARS evidence is a clear example of how the private sector colluded with the Executive, including President Zuma, to repurpose and hollow out an institution that was previously praised for its efficacy. SARS was systemically and deliberately weakened, chiefly through the restructuring of its institutional capacity, strategic appointments and dismissal of key individuals, and the instilling of a pervasive culture of fear and bullying. This is a clear example of state capture. SARS' investigatory and enforcement capacity presented a hurdle to those involved in organised crime, and was, therefore, a target for those engaged in state capture. The involvement of the media in perpetuating false narratives which discredited targeted people as well as providing grounds for their removal, is a notable feature of this evidence.

184. There was evidence to the effect that President Zuma had wanted a "legacy" to be left behind, which included the almost total restructuring of SARS and other SOEs, with his preferred consulting company Bain, and his preferred SARS Commissioner Mr Moyane, both appointed without lawful and procedurally correct processes. Reference was made to "collusion" in this context, and rightly so. The National Prosecuting Authority should consider whether this uncontested conduct of the then President can be brought within the confines of Prevention of Combatting of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004. Whether this is a practical suggestion because President Zuma is already on trial remains to be seen.

RECOMMENDATIONS

185. Considering the said Public Protector's Report, the Nugent Commission Reports and the evidence before this Commission as a whole, and against the background of the President's said Proclamation, it is recommended that:

185.1 In the light of the facts pertaining to Bain's unlawful role and its failure to explain its conduct fully and truthfully, all of Bain's contracts with Government Departments and Organs of State be re-examined for compliance with the relevant statutory and constitutional imperatives.

185.2 The NDPP should consider prosecutions in connection with the award of the Bain & Company contract at SARS.

185.3 The SARS Act of 1997 be further amended to provide for the appointment of a Commissioner of SARS by the President after consulting with the Minister of Finance and according to open and transparent prescribed processes.

185.4 Mr Moyane be charged with perjury in relation to his false evidence to Parliament.

185.5 The abuse of a position of authority be made a criminal offence, where such power is intentionally used other than for purposes relating to the position that any person may hold in the services of the central, provincial or municipal spheres of government, and all organs of state. Such a statutory offence should also require considerable sentencing powers. However, a reservation is that the Prevention of Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004, by way of Chapter 2, Part 1 of s.3 (b) (ii) already seems to cater for the abuse of a position of authority.

185.6 The Protected Disclosures Act 26 of 2000 be amended to protect disclosures and persons making disclosures outside of an employer and employee relationship.

185.7 The Conditions of Service of all employees in the public sector and Organs of State contain a clear provision that prohibits all such employees from entering into any contract for the supply of any goods or services to any such employer. Such similar conditions should apply to the Executive as well.

CORRUPTION IN PUBLIC PROCUREMENT

PUBLIC PROCUREMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA: THE MANDATE OF THE COMMISSION

1. The government is the single biggest procurer of goods and services in the country. In 2017, for example, South African Reserve Bank statistics show that the government channeled R967 billion towards public procurement for goods and services, which equates to 19.5% of the country's GDP.
2. The public procurement system must operate in a way which advances the national interest. It must do so in accordance with a system which, in the words of section 217(1) of our Constitution, is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost effective. It must simultaneously address the exclusions and the discrimination of the past.
3. International experience suggests that, of all government activities, public procurement is one of the most vulnerable to fraud and corruption. It is widely acknowledged that a public procurement system will be fit for purpose only if it is founded on good governance and good management and enforced through effective monitoring and oversight measures which ensure accountability. Anything less renders the system open to abuse.
4. One of the reasons this Commission was established was to enquire into the functioning of public procurement in South Africa following widespread concerns that the system was rife with corruption. These concerns are reflected in certain of the Commission's TORs.
5. In summary, one of the tasks of the Commission is to assess the impact of corruption (including fraud) and undue influence on public procurement, and to make recommendations to curb irregularities and the corrupt manipulation of the procurement system.
6. It is one thing to identify through the evidence the nature and the extent to which corruption may have penetrated the system; it is quite another to say how that could have happened. This second enquiry involves a review of the procurement cycle as a whole in order to identify the points of systemic weakness which, however unintentionally, contributed to the growth and spread of corruption. So, for example, the decentralisation of our procurement system might seem to be unrelated to the present enquiry until one considers how that decentralisation may have hampered effective monitoring and oversight while simultaneously requiring a substantial increase in the number of trained procurement officials to operate the system. Hence, the wide-ranging considerations that are addressed here.

The procurement cycle

7. For present purposes the procurement cycle may be said to cover three main stages: pre-tendering; tendering and post-award. Each of those stages covers a range of activities:

    7.1 Pre-tendering

        7.1.1 Needs assessment

        7.1.2 Planning and budgeting

        7.1.3 Definition of requirements

        7.1.4 Choice of procedures

    7.2 Tendering

        7.2.1 Invitation to tender

        7.2.2 Evaluation

        7.2.3 Award

PATTERNS OF ABUSE AT EACH STAGE OF THE PROCUREMENT CYCLE

Pre-tendering phase

Unnecessary procurement

8. The evidence shows that goods and services were often procured when they were not needed, and often in duplication of work which had already been done.

Transnet

9. The evidence from Transnet shows that large amounts of money were extracted through payments for advisory services from consultancies like McKinsey, Regiments and Trillian. Certain advisory services were procured by Transnet even though Transnet had the necessary internal capacity and expertise and did not require such services.

10. In some cases, advisory services were procured for certain projects without the participation, knowledge or approval of the business owners of those projects. In other cases, transaction advisory services were procured for activities which had already been competently executed by Transnet's Group Treasury. The procurement of advisory services was not needs-based. Instead, it was driven by certain high-level executives deciding to give business to these companies.

11. Not only were these services not needed, in some cases Transnet's own Treasury warned that the transaction advice provided by Regiments and Trillian was dangerous and should not be followed.

12. Despite McKinsey having been appointed for certain transaction advisory service at Transnet, there was a parallel appointment of Regiments for the same services. No procurement preceded this agreement, and Regiments had no contractual relationship with Transnet. This meant that there were two contracts for the same work.

Eskom

13. In relation to Eskom, Ms Mosilo Mothepu, former senior manager at Regiments (and later CEO at Trillian Financial Advisory), states in her affidavit to the Commission that:

> Eskom internal teams had the expertise and skills to perform the duties that Trillian Financial Advisory/Trillian Management Consulting/Trillian Capital Partners ("TFA/TMC/TCP") was mandated to perform. The [exorbitant] fees that TFA/TMC/TCP charged were unjustifiable and Eskom did not get any value for money.

Free State Provincial Government

14. The Commission heard evidence related to the Free State/Estina Vrede Dairy project to the effect that Mr Mosebenzi Zwane, MEC for Human Settlements, declared in a provincial cabinet meeting in December 2010 that he would ensure that the unspent money in his budget would be committed before the end of the financial year, which was less than two months away. This was because, if unspent, those funds could not be rolled over to the next financial year. In January, Mr Zwane told his colleagues that 66% of the budget had been spent over the holidays, in building houses.

15. In fact, this money was paid to supposed service providers before any work had been done, without any proper procurement process. Some of these providers had no expertise in building houses, nor were they registered with the National Home Builders Registration Council, nor did they comply with other public procurement requirements. R631 million was disbursed rapidly in early 2011 on these contracts. The Department later struggled to find any housing that had been delivered in return.

SARS

16. Mr Vlok Symington told the Commission that by 2008/2009 the South African Revenue Service (SARS) was recognised internationally as one of the best and most efficient tax administration services. As a result of how effective SARS became at enforcement and oversight, it was "praised and studied worldwide". Mr Athol Williams said that no one, at this stage, could legitimately have described SARS as dysfunctional. Against this background, the need for the services of a management consultancy was doubtful at best.

17. Despite this, Mr Williams told the Commission how Bain was contracted to perform consultancy services at SARS, including recommending and implementing a "profound strategy refresh" and complete organisational restructure, to the tune of R167 million, over 27 months. For Bain to recommend restructuring, which is usually a last resort, suggests that SARS was completely dysfunctional and needed a complete overhaul of vision, mission, strategic plans and operations, which was not the case.

City of Johannesburg

18. Procurement abuse is not limited to the provincial and national levels of government. There has also been malfeasance related to procurement at a local government level. It was alleged in hearings before the Commission that suspicious payments flowed to a company owned by Johannesburg Mayor Mr Geoff Makhubo and to the ANC in the months directly before and after the technology company EOH was awarded major contracts with the City of Johannesburg.

19. EOH chief executive Stephen van Coller tasked ENS law firm to investigate irregularities at EOH. Mr van Coller and Mr Steven Powell (who had led the ENS investigation) told the Commission how an apparent front company was used as a vehicle allegedly to channel money for the ANC's benefit and to Mr Makhubo.

20. The alleged front company, Mfundi Mobile, was paid by EOH purportedly for work done on City of Johannesburg projects, but ENS's forensic investigations did not find evidence of work done by Mfundi Mobile in exchange for these payments.

21. In total, ENS identified tens of millions of Rands in "suspected payments" related to City of Johannesburg contracts "where the evidence suggests no work was done". Mr Powell told the Commission that this applied to several alleged service providers. And when they looked at the deliverables clauses in the agreements, these were either blank or had vague content in which consulting services were described in terms which are "as broad as they can be".

Frivolous use of deviation policy

22. The procurement mechanism that applies by default is the open and competitive tender process. However, Regulation 16A6.4 of the Treasury Regulations provides for deviation from the normal procurement processes, in cases of emergency or where the goods or services are from a sole supplier. In other words, there are very limited circumstances when deviation from normal procurement processes would be permitted.

23. The Accounting Authority/Officer (AAs/AOs, who are usually a Director-General, Head of Department, Municipal Manager or Board of Directors)[1] is required to report within ten working days to the relevant Treasury and the Auditor-General (AG) in the cases of deviation. The report must include the description of the goods or services, the name/s of the supplier/s, the amount/s involved and the reasons for dispensing with the prescribed open and competitive bidding process.

24. Due to the abuse of Treasury Regulation 16A6.4, in 2008, National Treasury issued Practice Note No. 8 of 2007/8 with threshold limits for the procurement of goods, works and services by means of petty cash, verbal/written price quotations or competitive bids. The Note informed AOs/AAs that should it be impractical to invite competitive bids for specific procurement (e.g., in urgent or emergency cases, or where there is a sole supplier) the required goods or services may be procured by other means, such as price quotations or negotiations in accordance with Treasury Regulation 16A6.4. The objective of this practice note was to prevent the misuse of Treasury Regulation 16A6.4 to circumvent competitive bidding processes.

25. Following the issuance of Practice Note No. 8, a trend developed regarding expansion and variation of existing contracts, which required another intervention. Consequently, National Treasury issued Instruction Note No. 32 on Enhancing Compliance Monitoring and Improving Transparency and Accountability in Supply Chain Management on 31 May 2011. It directed AOs/AAs how to manage expansion or variations of orders against the original contract in exceptional cases, as well as prescribing a maximum threshold for contract variations. The limit for normal goods and services was set at 15% or R15 million, whichever is the lowest, and for construction-related contracts at 20% or R20 million of the original contract value, whichever is the lowest (including all applicable taxes). Any deviation in excess of these thresholds would be allowed only subject to prior written approval of the relevant treasury.

26. However, the implementation of this provision was postponed through a Supply Chain Management (SCM) Circular dated 24 April 2012 until a revised instruction was issued. As a result, during the period April 2012 to 2016, AO/AAs had to report deviations above R1 million approved by that officer or authority to the AG.

27. In 2016, National Treasury issued Instruction Note No. 3 2016/17 as the revised instruction to manage deviations and variations, directing AOs/AAs to deviate from inviting competitive bids only in cases of emergency or sole supplier status, as well as re-emphasising the limits set in Instruction Note No. 32 of May 2011 in terms of contract expansion or variations.

28. Deviations from normal competitive bidding processes are therefore supposed to be the exception. However, the number of applications for deviations submitted to National Treasury for consideration in the recent past demonstrates the level of poor planning by departments and public entities. Deviations appear to be the norm rather than the exception, and this resulted in the unintended institutionalisation of deviations which is contrary to section 217 of the Constitution, and sections 38 and 51 of the PFMA.

29. The potential risk in this practice is that certain service providers and suppliers get preferential treatment in the allocation of government contracts; it opens up room for potential abuse of the SCM system; it may promote corruption; it leads to the exclusion of broader participation of suppliers; creates the opportunity for anti-competitive practices to take root; supports the promotion of monopolies; constrains the assessment of opportunity cost for value for money, and leads to the creation of barriers to entry of new players, SMMEs and enterprises owned by designated persons.

30. Despite numerous instructions issued by National Treasury to regulate the management of procurement through deviations, there has been an increase in such requests. Weak contract management and poor planning contributed to the so-called emergencies that underpinned the deviations requested.

Free State Provincial Government

31. The Former CFO of the Free State Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Ms Seipati Dlamini, was requested to explain why she had approved a particular deviation involving Paras, a dairy company. She explained that:

> if it is not practical to invite bids, the reasons should be recorded why you are deviating. So, ... with regard to the reasons that were recorded, I looked at the ... job opportunities that the Vrede Dairy Project is going to bring in that area, ... [at] the investment that Paras was going to bring and because Paras was coming with an investment, for me it is not practical to subject [an investor to] a bidding process.

32. In fact, there was nothing impractical in this case to invite competitive bids. This was clearly a misuse of the deviation process, and Ms Dlamini eventually agreed that there was nothing that prevented the Department from inviting competitive bids. In effect, Ms Dlamini allowed deviations from inviting competitive bids where there was an entity that had already shown interest. This is directly contrary to what Treasury Regulation 16A requires.

33. The Commission heard further evidence relating to the Estina Dairy Project concerning unlawful deviations. Mr Mbana Thabethe, HOD for Agriculture in the Free State, signed an agreement on 5 June 2012 with Estina, but irregularities were later found by the Free State provincial Treasury, and a new version was drafted and signed on 5 July 2012. The agreement stipulated that Estina was to be both government's partner in the project and the implementing agent. This was done on the understanding that Estina was working with a dairy company called Paras to set up this project. There has been no sign that Paras was ever involved with Estina on the project. Despite the fact that the second contract was drawn up by the Department of Agriculture with the help of legal advisors from the Office of the Premier and so should have been in good order, it was full of irregularities. No due diligence was done on either Estina or Paras by the government; no proper procurement process was followed; a deviation was signed off by the CFO, Ms Dlamini, and by Mr Thabete, as the AO, despite stating no grounds for this; and the contract was signed after the project was already underway and without any existing budget – a serious violation of financial regulations.

Confinements

34. Confinements are a type of deviation from the default open procurement process and as such are to be approached with great caution. A misuse of the confinement process would have the effect of undermining competition and entrenching monopolies. Confinements were thus limited strictly to the following instances: (a) genuine urgency; (b) limited supplier source; (c) standardisation and (d) goods or services that are highly specialised and largely identical to those previously procured from the supplier. It is not the principle of restricted bidding, but rather it's potential for abuse, that creates a problem.

Free State Provincial Government

35. Evidence given to the Commission indicated that a 'sole provider' is the only entity at that point in time who could provide the service. Bearing in mind the nature of the Estina project, it is unclear why Paras Dairy, a dairy farm, could legitimately be considered a sole provider of that kind of service.

Transnet

36. During the period 2012-2015, Transnet awarded at least seven contracts to McKinsey for a range of consultancy work by way of a confined tender process. The combined value of the contracts, including the advisory contract, as at the date of award was about R1.6 billion. However, some of contracts were subsequently amended to increase the scope of work and its value to about R2.1 billion. These contracts proved to be problematic because none of these cases met the required grounds for confinement and should have gone out to open tender. The confinements were not in Transnet's best interests. The sheer volume of business confined to McKinsey created a monopolistic situation, contrary to Transnet's procurement guidelines. McKinsey was routinely engaged to commence work even before the tender process had been concluded, immediately after the confinement memo had been approved. It seems as if the confinements amounted to little more than an after-the-fact exercise to justify the award of business that had already occurred. This was part of a larger trend at Transnet.

37. For reasons of "confidentiality", some of the McKinsey confinements (such as the manganese, New Multi-Product Pipeline (NMPP) and iron ore transactions) did not follow the normal review and sign-off process. This meant that the confinements were taken to the GCEO for sign off with little or no input from internal reviewing bodies. None of the memos, however, explained why they should be confidential; "confidentiality" seems to have been a ruse used to bypass procurement procedures. Confidentiality is not recognised as among the four grounds for confinement in the Preferential Procurement Manual (PPM).

Eskom

38. At Eskom, in May 2015, Mr Molefe approved a proposal for the appointment of McKinsey for the development of Eskom's internal consulting capacity, primarily by training Eskom's own engineers through McKinsey's "Top Engineers programme". The proposal document states that McKinsey would be hired without any competitive bidding process and that McKinsey would work on an 'at risk' basis. The work was to be self-funded through "savings" achieved for Eskom. Mr Molefe approved the proposal on the same day that it was submitted by the Acting Group Executive: Technology and Commercial. The proposal was also approved by the relevant Executive Committee (Exco), including for a sole-source procurement.

39. Later that month, Ms Suzanne Daniels issued a memorandum setting out that she deemed the necessary procurement process requirements to have been met when the Exco gave their approval for the sole-source strategy for the 'Top Engineers Programme'. In her memorandum, Ms Daniels points to Eskom policy allowing sole sourcing where "as a result of in-depth market analysis, only one supplier in the market has been identified as being capable or available to supply the assets, goods or services in the existing circumstances" and that the necessary form motivating for this had been provided.

40. Ms Goodson, who joined Trillian in January 2016 and questioned why Eskom was willing to award McKinsey a contract without going out to tender, believed that it was clear that the consulting services were being used to satisfy the objectives of this programme and not on the basis of any specialised services. Thus, if the alleged justification for the sole source tender had to do with specialisation, then it is fair to ask what type of skills and experience McKinsey and Trillian brought to the programme.

Transnet

41. At Transnet, China South Rail ("CSR") unduly benefited from irregular procurement when Transnet sought the urgent acquisition of 100 "19E type" locomotives for its coal export line. The urgency of the procurement of these locomotives was predicated on the delay experienced in the acquisition to release locomotives to General Freight. The Transnet Freight Rail (TFR) division had prepared a business case for the confined procurement of these locomotives from Mitsui & Co African Railway Solutions (Pty) Ltd (MARS). MARS was able to quickly deliver 19E type locomotives identical to those already used by Transnet, thus meeting the need for urgency while also standardising the coal line fleet. This business case was approved for presentation to the Board Acquisition and Disposals Committee (BADC) meeting in October 2012 but was withdrawn by Mr Molefe.

42. Three months later - a delay which calls into question the urgency used to justify confinement - Mr Molefe submitted a request for confinement to the BADC in similar terms to the MARS memorandum. However, the original business case had been changed in one significant respect: it now recommended confinement to CSR rather than MARS. Despite this fundamental change, several grounds for confinement in the MARS memorandum were reproduced in the CSR memorandum. These grounds, while accurate in motivating for confinement to MARS, do not appear to be applicable to CSR. At the same time, the very qualities that had earlier motivated for confinement to MARS were refuted and claims to the contrary were advanced as reason why continuing with MARS would pose an unnecessary risk to Transnet.

43. As the "prime author" of the business case motivating for MARS, Mr Callard recounted to the Commission how he was "taken aback" upon discovering these "unilateral changes" to the memorandum. He contended that these changes were made without consulting him or his technical and operational colleagues.

44. Mr Callard had serious concerns that technical requirements would not be met, delivery would be negatively impacted, the locomotives would be inoperable, additional costs would be suffered and that the procurement process was compromised. His evidence was that the 20E type locomotives are not inter-operable with the 19E type locomotives. Despite this, the Board was presented with the revised memorandum and was not informed about Mr Callard's concerns. By adopting this approach, senior management actively created a false impression as to the validity of the confinement process involving CSR. As a result, the 100 locomotives were confined to CSR.

45. On 26 February 2014, Mr Molefe issued an RFP to CSR. Since CSR did not in fact manufacture the required 19E type locomotives, TFR personnel were then requested to develop a specification for tendering purposes. This process was irregular as representatives from CSR were involved in discussions about how to adapt their 20E type locomotives for use on Transnet's heavy haul coal line operations. As a result of the design changes, a new class ("21E") was created for the 100 locomotives from CSR. Despite these changes, CSR's accepted proposal did not comply with some of the bid conditions in the RFP, such as the minimum threshold for local content production. Transnet nevertheless made the award to CSR in March 2014.

46. The acquisition of the wrong kind of locomotives caused delays in the delivery of the 100 locomotives. This harmed Transnet's operations and set back plans to optimise operations on the coal line by standardising the fleet. The decision by management to arbitrarily and unilaterally change from MARS to CSR, without obtaining technical or operational advice, was characterised by Mr Callard as being "irresponsible in the extreme". The irregular confinement resulted in significant financial and operational harm to Transnet while unduly favouring CSR over a stronger competitor, MARS.

The tendering phase

Parcelling

Transnet

47. Parcelling occurs when high-value contracts are split into multiple smaller contracts, so that each contract is under the upper limit of the Delegation of Authority ("DOA") for confinement. In the case of Transnet, its GCEO was authorised to approve contracts below an upper limit of R250 million without seeking board approval or following any of the procurement processes.

48. It is clear that parcelling took place when several contracts for similar services were awarded to the same firm within a few days of one another, as occurred with McKinsey. Mr Volmink explained how this happened at Transnet. Over a period of 4 days in 2014, the GCE approved four confinement contracts to McKinsey: coal, iron ore, manganese and the NMPP contract. Given the fact that the transactions related to the same or similar services and were awarded to the same firm within a few days of each other, Transnet effectively awarded one package of projects to McKinsey valued at R619m. This package should have been taken to the BADC for approval. Instead, they were split into four contracts so that they fell under the DOA for confinement given to the GCEO, and so avoided the confinement approval process.

SAPS

49. Officials in the South African Police Service (SAPS) SCM division also abused parcelling. They split orders larger than R200 000.00 into separate procurements so that they did not have to go out on tender. None of the prices for goods/services ever exceeded R200 000.00.

Abuse of preferential procurement and "Supplier Development Partners" policies

50. Procurement has a legitimate transformation role to play in South Africa. State institutions are permitted to use procurement as a policy tool to advance the interests of various designated groups. However, evidence shows that the ideals of empowerment were grossly manipulated and abused to advance the interests of a few individuals.

51. Supplier development partnering is the process of working with certain suppliers on a one-to-one basis to improve their performance for the benefit of the buying organisation, leading to improvements in the total added value from that supplier in terms of its Broad-Based Black Economic Empowerment (BBBEE) rating. Supplier development helps to achieve high preferential procurement targets by ensuring the development of capable suppliers in key areas.

Transnet

52. This system was abused at Transnet by companies partnering with larger suppliers in order to "get a foot in the door" without having to go through as rigorous an evaluation process. The result was that, for example, Regiments was awarded millions of Rands worth of work, despite never having bid for any Transnet contracts or going through the robust procurement processes that were set up at Transnet. This abuse is evidenced by the fact that the supplier partner was included only after the main tender process was complete.

SAA

53. Another example of an abuse of preferential procurement occurred at SAA, according to the evidence of Dr Dahwa, the former Chief Procurement Officer (CPO). From early 2015 the Board, particularly the Chairperson Ms Myeni and a fellow Board member Ms Kwinana, indicated that they were trying to align SAA to President Zuma's February 2015 State of the Nation Address (SONA).

54. In the SONA, President Zuma said that "Government will set aside 30% of appropriate categories of State procurement for purchasing from SMMEs, cooperatives, as well as township and rural enterprises". There was no mention in the SONA of how this would be implemented.

55. At that time, there were certain contracts in place at SAA that were nearing expiry. During July 2015, Ms Kwinana requested a list from Dr Dahwa of expiring contracts in various areas of the business. Dr Dahwa tried to adhere to SAA-aligned procurement policies and legislation, but experienced interference and intimidation from Ms Myeni and Ms Kwinana to subdue him into agreeing to the appointment of certain service providers.

56. In October 2015, Ms Kwinana and Ms Myeni instructed Dr Dahwa to sign letters of award to Swissport and Engen, two of the companies that the SAA Board had identified as having contracts ready for renewal. They were then approached to set aside 30% of their contract value for BBBEE entities. Dr Dahwa was not willing to do so as he was concerned that the 30% "set-aside" process was not lawful. He was also concerned that the process which had been used to identify the beneficiaries of the 30% was not regular or in accordance with proper procurement practices and sought advice from the Head of Legal at SAA. After Dr Dahwa refused to comply with this 'request', Ms Kwinana sent an email with a letter of complaint to Ms Myeni alleging Dr Dahwa's insubordination.

57. On another occasion, Mr Wolf Meyer, the SAA CFO at the time, attended a meeting with BidAir along with Ms Kwinana. She informed the BidAir executives that 30% of their contract had to be given to an unspecified SAA-nominated black-owned small business. There was also no formal communication in writing to BidAir.

58. As a result of the demands from Ms Kwinana, Mr Anton Alberts MP, wrote a letter to the BBBEE Commission to register his concerns. The BBBEE Commissioner advised SAA to stop demanding this 30% set-aside from service providers.

Communication with bidders

Transnet

59. Evidence to the Commission was that, in late 2011, Transnet issued a tender worth R2.7 billion for the supply of 95 electric locomotives for its general freight business. In December 2012, the tender was awarded to China South Rail Zhuzhou Electric Locomotive (CSR), which owned 70% of a consortium, with its local partner Matsetse Basadi owning the remaining 30%. The forensic investigations into the procurement of these 95 locomotives found that CSR unduly benefited from a special relationship with Transnet. There were improper communications between senior Transnet executives and CSR before and during the procurement process. In particular, Mr Molefe met and discussed the tender with CSR before the issuance of the Request for Proposals (RFP) and Mr Pita (Group Chief Supply Chain Officer) played an active role in ensuring CSR was aware of the RFP documents.

SAA

60. Mr Schalk Human, the acting HOD for SCM at SAA Technical (SAAT) told the Commission that during a tender process to procure aviation components, an official from AAR Aviation had been in touch with SAA's CEO at the time. He said it is unusual for a supplier to be in touch with the company while a tender process was underway. In the public sector, interaction with suppliers is prohibited when a tender process is under way and it is explicitly prohibited in SAA's Supply Chain Policy.

SARS

61. At SARS, not only was there communication with Bain before a formal RFP was issued, but Bain itself drafted the relevant RFP. Mr Athol Williams told the Commission that Bain was able to draft the rules of the game. Not only is it hugely problematic that the RFP was designed for Bain, it is also a further example of consultancy services being procured when they were not needed. Moreover, Bain itself knew it did not have the expertise to complete the work. In truth, SARS had decided the outcome of the tender process before that process started.

City of Johannesburg

62. Mr Steven Powell (of ENS Attorneys) told the Commission that a small group of people at EOH would get an inside track on tenders with the City of Johannesburg before they were even advertised. They would get advance notice and more information than their competitors, or they would get sensitive information on tenders before their competitors did. There were some instances where confidential information relating to the tenders was leaked to EOH, and in other situations the EOH employers actually wrote the content of the tender themselves.

63. Not only was there communication with bidders, the evidence of money flows related to the City of Johannesburg shows that millions of Rands worth of donations to the ANC were made via Mr Makhubo (the Mayor of Johannesburg), before and after certain contracts were awarded. Of note was R50m donated to the ANC for the 2016 local government elections.

64. Mr Powell pointed to the elementary rule that tenderers should not be making any donation during any tender adjudication. The evidence shows that there was a pattern of regular solicitation of donations, coupled with the award of tenders. The extent of this practice showed that "it was almost as if the tenders were being granted in exchange for financial benefit to the party."

Free State Provincial Government

65. In relation to the Free State asbestos scheme, evidence shows Blackhead Consulting, owned by Mr Edwin Sodi, had received several lucrative contracts from government departments, most notably the 2014 asbestos audit valued at R255 million from the Free State government. Bank accounts show millions of Rands in payments to the ANC by Blackhead between 2013-2018.

Retroactive changes to bid criteria

Transnet

66. On more than one occasion, Transnet changed the criteria used to evaluate bids during the adjudication process. This appears to have been done to favour specific bidders. For example, the requirement for a BBBEE certificate was removed to benefit CSR, which would otherwise have been disqualified in the evaluation process. CSR scored zero for BBBEE by virtue of being a foreign company. The retroactive change of the evaluation criteria was irregular as it compromised the fairness, transparency and competitiveness of the procurement process.

Post award

Contract variations and expansions

67. Mr Mathebula (of National Treasury) said that the existing prescripts provide AOs/AAs with authority to vary or extend contracts within the set limit of 15% or R15 million and 20% or R20 million without the approval of the relevant Treasury.

68. The risks in approving contract expansions or variations above these thresholds is that relevant Treasuries may not have the full background, terms and conditions, including risks, involved in the conclusion of the original contract. It is very difficult to respond to requests for variations without full details and background, which delays responses and, therefore, service delivery.

Transnet

69. With reference to Transnet procuring consulting and advisory services from McKinsey, Regiments and Trillian, Mr Mohamed Mohomedy noted that each increase in the contract value was justified by a supposed variation in the scope of the advisory work. Each variation would have required a new procurement process to be followed, as required by Transnet's procurement policies, which did not happen.

SARS

70. The SARS evidence shows that procurement legislation was flouted in order to extend what was originally supposed to be a six week contract for around R2.6 million, into one that lasted 27 months and cost SARS around R164 million. Email communications between Bain and SARS show that there was collusion between the consultants and SARS to get around the procurement process required for a valid extension of the original contract.

71. The 'solution' was for SARS to declare the Bain project an emergency or claim that Bain was the sole source provider. This is an example of an unlawful use of the deviation provisions as provided for in the Treasury Regulations. This was clearly not an emergency. Mr Williams had testified that no-one could say that SARS "drastically and urgently needed to be restructured" or that Bain was the only organisation in the country which could do that.

72. In this instance, the competitive tender process was avoided by Bain arguing that if phase three of the work was not done by Bain, then phases one and two would be meaningless. National Treasury was thereby misled into authorising phase three. Mr Williams explained, however, that phase three was actually focused on something quite different from the two earlier phases, so the argument held no water.

THE COLLAPSE OF GOVERNANCE IN STATE-OWNED ENTERPRISES

Centralisation of procurement

73. The patterns of abuse which appear in every stage of the procurement cycle are evidence of multiple areas of near collapse in the procurement system. Those patterns, by themselves, do not tell the whole story by any means. What has happened in the governance of state-owned enterprises (SOEs) needs to be detailed separately in order to understand to what extent the procurement system has been rendered unfit for purpose.

74. As the representative of government as the shareholder in SOEs, the Minister is responsible for the appointment of directors to the boards of SOEs. Obviously, the Board and senior management are both critical in ensuring good governance in SOEs. Directors on the Board have onerous fiduciary duties and must at all times act in the interests of the SOE. They remain accountable for leading the organisation ethically and effectively, and report to the Minister as the shareholder's representative. The CEO and senior management run the SOE, but report to the Board with which they have an employment contract.

75. The evidence received by the Commission demonstrates that in many cases, and in fundamental respects, the Boards of many SOEs have shirked their responsibilities, or worse, used their powers to corrupt the SOEs that they have been appointed to protect.

76. This collective misconduct was often evidenced by the abuse of centralised procurement processes so that the approval authority for high value tenders became concentrated in the hands of a small group of top executives and Board members.

Transnet

77. At Transnet, by centralising procurement decision-making, it was possible for parties inside and outside Transnet to collude in the award of contracts to redirect substantial public resources into private hands. Power was centralised in Group leadership to enable individuals to make certain procurement decisions, as opposed to committees and acquisition councils.

78. Historically, the Board of Transnet did not have direct authority over procurement-related activities under the Delegation of Authority (DOA) framework. Under this framework, only the duly delegated person or body may (a) approve the issue of a Request for Proposals (RFP), i.e., an invitation to tender; (b) adjudicate and approve the award of the tender; and (c) conclude the contract or issue a letter of intent to do so.

79. During 2011, a sub-committee of the Board (the Board Acquisition and Disposals Committee or "BADC") was created, which gave the Board powers to approve the approach to market and to conclude contracts for certain high-value transactions (exceeding R500 million). The BADC and the Board also had powers to appoint consultants and to approve confinements. During 2012, the BADC and the Board were given tender approval authority of up to R2 billion and above. By 2016 these approval authorities had increased to R3 billion and above.

80. The creation of the BADC and its creeping authority resulted in the simultaneous disempowerment of Transnet's operating divisions in relation to procurement decisions that would directly impact their work. A previously decentralised, democratic procurement system was restructured to concentrate decision-making for high-value contracts at the level of the Board and senior management.

81. The centralisation of approval authority at the level of the Board and senior management had the effect of shielding procurement processes from the scrutiny of a wider group of Transnet officials who could have detected and reported irregularities. There was a tendency to avoid the governance function, which required key procurement documents, such as RFPs, confinements, condonations and variations, to be properly assessed to ensure compliance with the regulatory framework. Increasingly, internal structures were marginalised from procurement processes and their functions were outsourced to private firms.

82. This is corroborated by Mr Volmink, who said that the primary challenge to good governance within SCM emanates from people at the top end of the organisation, i.e., the Exco and Board. The bulk of the R8.2 billion in irregular expenditure recently incurred by Transnet is directly attributable to decisions made by executives and board members. Also, all the transactions that lie at the heart of the state capture allegations at Transnet were decided by Exco and/or board members. A 'parallel universe' existed within Transnet.

Eskom

83. During his tenure as Minister in the Department of Mineral Resources (DMR), Mr Mosebenzi Zwane centralised much of the work and reporting lines directly to the Ministry and, in particular, to his own office. Former DG Dr Ramontja said that during Minister Ramathlodi's time at DMR, his Department's engagement over the Optimum mine issue was conducted by the Minister's officials and Dr Ramontja was kept updated. After Minister Zwane took over, such engagements were centralised in Minister Zwane's office and Dr Ramontja was no longer kept informed about what was happening related to the mine.

Free State Provincial Government

84. The Commission heard evidence that Mr Ace Magashule, as Premier of the Free State from 2009, immediately moved to centralise Government functions under his office, particularly procurement, in "Operation Hlasela". Mr Mxolisi Dukwana suggested that the purpose of this was to enable Mr Magashule to bypass MECs and work directly with officials and, in particular, to secure control of procurement.

Strategic appointments and dismissals

85. The different configurations of Board directors and senior managers across SOEs reveal how particular individuals were strategically positioned to repurpose those SOEs. These implicated individuals oversaw the corrupt award of high-value contracts that allegedly enriched entities connected to them at great financial loss to SOEs.

86. There is a pattern of executive interference and political overreach at SOEs. Evidence shows that Ministers, and even former President Zuma, were regularly involved with operational matters. However, it was never a precedent nor a policy prescription that Cabinet and/or the President must approve these appointments.

Transnet

87. In many ways, Transnet can be considered the pilot project for the repurposing of SOEs and, as such, a primary victim of state capture. This is in keeping with the evidence given by Ms Barbara Hogan, who said in her witness statement that:

> the nature of the interventions described by me in Transnet and Eskom manifested the beginnings of the President, and certain members of his Cabinet, unduly influencing the appointments of key executives and board members in SOEs.

88. Ms Hogan was then Minister of Public Enterprises, and therefore responsible for Transnet, from May 2009 to October 2010. She claims to have been removed as Minister for resisting repeated interference by former President Zuma that was intended to ensure that his preferred SOE board and executive appointments were put in place, and also for resisting requests from the Guptas. After the removal of Ms Hogan as Minister, her successor, Mr Malusi Gigaba, made a range of board and executive appointments that set in motion the "repurposing" of Transnet. These appointments were followed by the award of key contracts that benefitted the network of people who had influenced the appointments. Through the strategic position of these individuals and the weakening of governance structures in Transnet, the SOE was repurposed so that wealth could be extracted through corrupt and unaccountable procurement practices.

89. According to Ms Hogan, Mr Zuma "thwarted all the legal and legitimate procedures [she] took to obtain Cabinet approval for any appointments whatsoever [at] Transnet, including the appointment of a CEO." Mr Zuma insisted that Ms Hogan appoint Siyabonga Gama to the position of Group CEO, despite the fact that (1) the Board had already chosen their preferred candidate through an extensive and professional selection process, and (2) Mr Gama was facing serious allegations of corruption at the time. Mr Zuma insisted that no appointment be made until after the disciplinary case against Gama had been concluded.

90. Ms Hogan described Mr Zuma's conduct as unprofessional in that there was never an aide present at his meetings with her; he frequently held meetings in his house. There were no records made or kept of these meetings. His approach was to issue instructions to his Cabinet without bothering to justify them – he was "in charge of the show", according to Hogan, and did not appreciate that she had certain duties and responsibilities as an executive authority that she had to fulfil.

91. Ms Hogan describes "behind-the-scenes" processes running parallel to the official appointments processes. The ANC had expectations that they would influence board appointments via the ANC Deployment Committee. The practice of consultation with the ruling party was further tainted by a lack of transparency and the presence of conflicts of interest. She argued that factional battles within the ANC encouraged and entrenched nepotism and patronage, which compromised the integrity of the deployment process and damaged SOEs.

92. According to Ms Hogan, the ANC wanted Mr Gama and no-one else in that position. Hogan was also put under pressure to appoint Mr Gama by other cabinet ministers and senior ANC leaders (such as Jeff Radebe and Simphiwe Nyanda). A number of media statements by various ANC-linked organisations accused Transnet of persecuting Mr Gama and cast Hogan and the board as "anti-transformation" and "racist". According to Ms Hogan, Mr Zuma did not protect her from these attacks. She experienced this media exposure as "an enormous amount of pressure being put on [her] publicly to accede to their demands".

93. Mr Zuma did not allow the appointment of a CEO until Mr Gama's disciplinary process was finalised. After Mr Gama had been found guilty and dismissed, the President did not respond to Ms Hogan's correspondence or requests for a meeting concerning the appointment. She was dismissed three days after requesting that Mr Zuma expedite the placing of a memo concerning Transnet appointments onto the Cabinet agenda.

94. Ms Hogan was replaced as Minister by Mr Gigaba who was able to make the necessary appointments at Transnet without similar delays. Within a month, Cabinet approved Mr Gigaba's recommendations for the Transnet Board, including Iqbal Sharma, an associate of Salim Essa and the Gupta Family.

95. Mr Gigaba appointed Mr Brian Molefe as GCEO of Transnet in February 2011, an appointment which had already been reported in the Gupta newspaper The New Age before it was announced. Shortly after Mr Molefe's appointment, Mr Gama was reappointed as CEO of TFR on the grounds that his misconduct had not been serious enough to warrant his dismissal. His reappointment was quickly approved by the new Board.

PRASA

96. Dr Popo Molefe explained that there is a discernible pattern with Board appointments. Key positions are first filled by individuals who have the veneer of professionalism and possess the appropriate experience. They lodge themselves in the vital positions such as CEO, CFO, procurement and the treasury. From these vantage points, they are then able to manipulate people, processes and systems to their ends and for the advancement of the agenda of looting. They create parallel processes that do not come under scrutiny, they weaken governance systems and they focus on high-value tenders.

Eskom

97. According to Mr Zola Tsotsi, former Chair of the Board of Eskom, when Mr Brian Dames resigned as GCEO, the Board wished to appoint Mr Steve Lennon, a divisional executive at Eskom, as Acting CEO. This was discussed with Minister Malusi Gigaba, who originally agreed but later changed his mind. Mr Gigaba allegedly phoned Mr Tsotsi and was irate, claiming that Mr Lennon could not be made Acting CEO because he was white, and there was an election coming up and that would not bode well for the ANC in attracting support.

98. Mr Tsotsi felt that this was not like Mr Gigaba, whom he knew very well, and that "somebody put him up to what he said". In a subsequent conversation, Mr Gigaba 'instructed' Mr Tsotsi to inform the Board that he would like Mr Colin Matjila, who was a Board member at the time, to have the Acting position. While the rest of the Board members were unhappy on hearing this, they nevertheless complied.

SAA

99. At SAA, it appears that Ms Dudu Myeni, as Chairperson, would remove any executives who refused to carry out her instructions. She was intimately involved with the appointment and dismissal of executives, often against the advice of the rest of the Board.

100. Ms Mzimela described SAA under Minister Hogan and Chairperson Cheryl Carolus as strong on corporate governance. According to Ms Mzimela, governance was well managed and transparent, and there were clear distinctions between the spheres of competency between the Ministry, the Board, and the executive management of SAA. The Board deliberately focused on ensuring good governance given "historical breakdowns" in the governance of the institution.

101. Ms Carolus characterised Minister Hogan's approach in much the same way. Communication under Minister Hogan was clear and transparent, and always took the form of formal written communication. Under Minister Gigaba, the management of information and communication became chaotic, as multiple Ministry officials with no connection to SAA would initiate communication without following the correct protocols.

Demarcation between the Board and executive decision-makers

102. Not only was there political involvement in the operations of the SOEs, but there was also no clear demarcation between the role of the Board as an oversight body and the role of the executive as the operational controllers of the SOEs.

Transnet

103. The evidence relating to the award of high-value contracts bears out Mr Volmink's allegations that recommendations were routinely presented directly to the Board for approval, rather than benefitting from the process put in place to ensure the involvement of Transnet's management committee, operating divisions or governance structures. For example, the decision to change from MARS to CSR as the supplier of 100 "type 21E" locomotives was made without consulting TFR for operational advice.

104. The result was that high-value procurement decisions by the Board were often uninformed or made on the basis of questionable advice received by external advisors and consultants. One example was the resolution of the Locomotive Steering Committee to approve an Estimated Total Cost for the 1064 locomotives acquisition of R38.6 billion excluding rather than including the potential effects of forex deading and escalation.

105. There are examples at Transnet where the Board directly overruled recommendations made by the Executive. Notwithstanding the fact that Ms Pillay, as the acting GCEO, had signed off on the award to Neotel, the Commission heard evidence that Mr Molefe instructed Mr Singh not to issue the letter of intent to Neotel as he wanted to review the award, intending to award the contract to T-Systems. An objection by a senior executive, Mr van der Westhuizen, was not well-received.

106. Mr Molefe lacked the authority to take the decision, as the powers vested in the GCEO to award the tender had already been exercised by Ms Pillay as the acting GCEO. His decision to rescind the award was also taken in a procedurally unfair manner and in contravention of Transnet's Procurement Practice Manual.

SAA

107. At SAA, an open tender process was followed for catering services and the winning bidder was LSG Skychef. Air Chefs, SAA's catering subsidiary, participated in the tender but their bid was not successful following the adjudication process. A letter of award was issued to LSG on 21 August 2015 in line with the standard practice. Following this meeting, the Board then passed a resolution to cancel the tender to LSG, and award it to Air Chefs.

Transnet

108. A slightly different issue, but also related to the demarcation between the Board and the executive, concerns evidence that executives presented propositions to the Board for approval that were misleading. The BADC was misled by senior management. First, Mr Callard's concerns about procuring "20E type" locomotives from CSR were not disclosed to the BADC. Secondly, it appears that senior management actively created the false impression that the confinement process involving CSR had been valid. Mr Brian Molefe used his position as GCEO to override his own procurement and contract management teams.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS

109. The evidence given to the Commission covers multiple cases of procurement corruption. The few examples discussed above are typical of the abuse patterns encountered in high value contracts.

110. The examples illustrate the involvement of senior Government officials (including the former President and members of the Cabinet) in corrupt relationships. Misconduct permeated the boards of the SOEs and also implicated senior administrative officials. The private sector entities identified in the examples were active in forming and perpetuating corrupt arrangements involving:

    110.1 McKinsey and Company in its relationship with Transnet and Eskom

    110.2 Trillian (a Gupta family-related entity) in its relationship with Transnet

    110.3 Regiments (a Gupta family-related entity) in its relationship with Transnet

    110.4 Bain in its relationship with SARS

    110.5 China South Rail (CSR) in its relationship with Transnet; and 110.6 EOH in its relationship with the City of Johannesburg.

111. In most, if not all of these cases, the pattern of abuse extended through various stages of the procurement cycle evidencing an embedded corrupt relationship.

112. These examples illustrate:

    112.1 The use of political influence for malign purposes

    112.2 The appointment of pliable officials to oversee the improper grant of tenders or contracts

    112.3 The bullying or replacement of officials who objected to irregular practices

    112.4 The diversion of money, being the proceeds of corruption, to the benefit of the ANC

    112.5 The collapse of governance in the SOEs

    112.6 A lack of transparency

    112.7 The growth of a culture of impunity

    112.8 The ineffectual nature of oversight

    112.9 The absence of proper monitoring

    112.10 The absence of consequences; and

    112.11 The readiness with which the implicated private sector entities initiated or participated in corrupt arrangements and the absence of any internal safeguards in their corporate structures.

113. All these matters need to be addressed if the procurement system is to be properly reformed.

CORRUPTION IN THE PROCUREMENT SYSTEM BEFORE STATE CAPTURE?

114. It is important to know whether the procurement system had been functioning properly prior to the onset of state capture. If so, the state capture period was an aberration which temporarily damaged a viable procurement system. If, however, the record shows that corruption and criminality had manifested itself well before state capture, then one must face the sober reality that the procurement system as presently configured is not fit for purpose.

115. As early as 2002, and well before the grotesque events which we now call state capture, the Public Affairs Research Institute (PARI) had published a paper which identified South Africa's public procurement system as a system in crisis. In its paper "Reforming the Public Procurement System in South Africa" PARI found that there were five major causes of the crisis:

115.1 Public procurement is subject to extensive political interference

115.2 There are major deficits in the capacity of public procurement functions at regulatory and operational levels

115.3 Public procurement is subject to a complicated, fragmented and often inconsistent regulatory regime

115.4 Public procurement involves stark trade-offs between the procedural integrity necessary for fairness and to protect public funds, and the flexibility associated with the operational substance of purchasing; and

115.5 There is a mismatch between the formalistic approach to regulation and government's commitment to using public procurement to achieve social and developmental objectives.

116. In 2002 the procurement system operated through a State Tender Board and was therefore essentially a centralised procurement system and remained so until about 2008. Since 2002 the procurement system has been changed and modified in significant respects. More particularly, the legislative framework which has been enacted to regulate procurement has been extensively expanded. Did these changes put an end to well-informed criticisms of the system, or did these nonetheless persist?

117. In 2012 Ambe and Badenhorst-Weiss published their observations regarding public procurement challenges in which they noted a lack of proper knowledge, skills and capacity; non-compliance with policies and regulations; inadequate planning; a lack of accountability and increased fraud and corruption; inadequate measures for the monitoring and evaluation of public procurement and pervasive unethical behaviour. They also identified undue decentralisation of the procurement system and the ineffectiveness in achieving the objectives of BBBEE.

118. In 2013 Tarisma Maharaj and Professor Anis Karodia examined the impact which SCM had on fraudulent activities in the public sector and concluded:

> ... the reality [is] that there is massive fraud, misallocation of funds, and the breach of law. It also points to the fact that the flouting of SCM processes have become the order of the day in South Africa and that fraud, corruption and the violation of the law in the SCM chain has now become endemic. All of this compromises the Government of the day and further compromises South Africa on the international stage and makes the country a poor destination for investment. In addition it compromises growth, development and hampers service delivery which leads to massive strikes and protests by the population at large.

119. In 2017 Mazibuko and Fourie published their conclusions in an article titled 'Manifestation of Unethical Procurement Practices in the South African Public Sector'. They listed unethical procurement practices including uncompetitive bids; employees bids awards; non-compliance with supply chain management legislation, inadequate contract management, ineffective control systems, uncompetitive bidding, acceptance of less than three quotations, using an incorrect preferential point system and thresholds and irregular expenditure. They noted that unethical procurement practices were dangerous and ubiquitous, and that they could produce economic and social ills to society.

120. The substance of these criticisms has remained the same over the years and that has been the case before, at the outset of, and during the state capture period. It must also be noted that, in essential respects, the evidence given at this Commission confirms these criticisms. What was noted as far back as 2002 has not changed in its essential character, it has simply gotten much worse.

121. State capture, then, was not the beginning of the subversion of the procurement system - it was merely the most concentrated and aggressive attack upon it. To use the analogy of the current coronavirus pandemic, state capture thrived on a system which had already displayed long-standing co-morbidities.

122. In the circumstances, any serious attempt to address the problems which beset public procurement must go well beyond an understanding of "State Capture". It must assess the adequacy of the procurement framework, which is set out in the national legislation, to see whether that framework is compatible with the realities on the ground or whether there are fundamental design deficiencies. It must also answer the troubling question: why has the system been so susceptible to misuse?

A REVIEW OF THE FRAMEWORK DESIGN FOR PROCUREMENT

123. The selected examples, and the evidence overall, show how poorly the procurement system has been working in practice. The picture is one of a procurement system which is vulnerable to extensive patterns of abuse. The design of this procurement system is set out in national legislation. Manifestly, the framework design was intended to be strong enough to withstand the very abuses to which it has fallen prey. A closer look at the legislative design is therefore unavoidable to see why and how the theory of procurement has so diverged from the practice of procurement.

124. To give effect to the constitutional requirements in section 217, framework legislation was enacted to regulate public procurement. The three critical statutes are the Public Finance Management Act 1 of 1999 (PFMA), the Local Government: Municipal Finance Management Act 56 of 2003 (MFMA) and the Preferential Procurement Policy Framework Act 5 of 2000 (PPPFA).

The PFMA

125. The PFMA grants National Treasury a host of general functions and powers of oversight, which also apply to public procurement and which can be viewed as fulfilling the mandate given in section 216(1) of the Constitution. Together with the MFMA and the PPPFA, these principal statutes enable the National Treasury to play its crucial role in guiding and overseeing public procurement.

126. The legal mandate of the National Treasury under the PFMA is threefold: (a) to create norms and standards; (b) to enforce a regulatory regime; and (c) to assist organs of state in implementing that regime.

127. The resulting institutional scheme that emerges from the PFMA in respect of public procurement is that organs of state have the power to formulate their own rules governing procurement by that entity and to procure in terms of those rules, but that these functions must be fulfilled in terms of the framework created by the National Treasury and under its supervision.

128. The PFMA provides that National Treasury may issue Regulations for the determination of a framework of appropriate procurement and provisioning systems. Acting in terms of section 76 of the PFMA, the National Treasury has made the Treasury Regulations, which include regulations on public procurement, the most important of which is Regulation 16A.

129. Regulation 16A binds entities to additional instructions from the National Treasury in implementing their SCM systems. These include the threshold values in terms of which particular methods of procurement must be adopted, the minimum training required of officials staffing SCM units, the procedure for appointment of consultants, and ethical standards to be adhered to.

130. The ethical standards to be adhered to are found in the Code of Conduct for SCM Practitioners. This includes requirements that officials must disclose any conflict of interest that may arise, treat all suppliers and potential suppliers equitably, may not use his or her position for private gain or improperly to benefit another person, ensure that he or she does not compromise the credibility or integrity of the SCM system through acceptance of gifts or hospitability or any other act, be scrupulous in his or her use of public property, and assist the AO/AA in combating corruption and fraud in the SCM system.

131. There are provisions specifically aimed at preventing abuse of the system, including that the AO/AA must take all reasonable steps to prevent abuse of the SCM system. Any allegation of corruption, improper conduct or failure to comply with the SCM system made against an official or another role player must be investigated by the AO/AA.

132. Treasury Regulations grant the National Treasury and provincial treasuries a reporting mandate in terms of which entities must report on their procurement functions to the National Treasury and provincial treasuries, and the latter must report to the National Treasury. Entities are obliged to comply with the reporting requirements and the National Treasury is given a wide mandate to formulate the information to be included in such reports.

133. The reporting function and its adequacy is an essential element in any effective procurement system. The acid test is whether the mandated reporting system is properly implemented.

Supply chain management

134. It is only in section 112 of the MFMA and in Regulation 16A that one encounters a comprehensive framework intended to govern supply chain management. Although section 112 applies in the sphere of local government, the scheme's detail is a representative statement of the national framework.

135. Section 112 does not provide local authorities with any mandatory template, complete with the nuts-and-bolts content of the desired procurement system. Instead, it delegates that task to each municipality and municipal entity, limiting itself to a headline description of the topics to be covered, many of which are aspirational in nature.

136. Presumably this reluctance to set out how the design aspirations are to be achieved in practice derives from a feeling that each entity knows its own situation best, and hence flexibility must be built into the system. It may also be thought to be an appropriate approach given the constitutional recognition of the separate status accorded to municipalities,

137. The consequence of devolving the design function in this manner is assessed later in this Chapter bearing in mind that a similar dispensation also applies to other public procuring entities.

OBSERVATIONS ABOUT ASPECTS OF THE LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK

138. The purpose in reviewing the procurement legislation is to identify those aspects of the design which have proved problematic in the fight against corruption.

Fragmented design

Failure to address procurement separately

139. Procurement has not generally been recognised in the legislation as a specialised activity requiring separate treatment. On most occasions it is treated in the legislation as one item in a broader topic or else receives only passing mention in Acts focusing on broader activities (e.g., transport, health and the like). Indeed, apart from the PPPFA, none of the principal legislation directs its attention solely to procurement.

140. The result is that some twenty Acts deal with issues of public procurement and each of those Acts brings with it separate powers to issue regulations or directives of one sort or another. While, no doubt, there are nuances in the procurement process depending on its particular purpose, and that these must be recognised and addressed, the need for the centralisation of legislation and regulation has not been recognised. Fragmentation has had several negative consequences, each of which has contributed to the problems which need to be addressed.

Difficulties in interpreting the legislative mosaic

141. The sheer number of Acts and Regulations that deal with procurement issues makes it very difficult for conscientious officials to get a clear understanding of what is required from them. There is a need for procurement officers to interpret, and to try to harmonise their interpretation of the various laws, which would not be the case if the legislation was codified and unified. The gaps and the disharmonies caused by fragmentation present a considerable challenge to the honest procurement official while enabling the dishonest official to exploit obscurities and contradictions in the law.

Fragmentation of oversight responsibilities

142. The legislative fragmentation causes an equivalent fragmentation of the oversight function, which is of course a vital component in protecting the procurement system from abuse. There is a crowded field of oversight entities. These include Parliament; National Departments; Ministers; Provincial Government; the Auditor-General; National and Provincial Treasury; and the Department of Public Service and Administration.

143. Many of these authorities oversee procurement during their more general mandate dealing with all aspects of financial management (e.g., the AG and Treasury) while others are supposed to supervise the working of procurement in a particular sphere of activities (AAs and AOs in provincial, national and municipal departments).

144. Despite the crowded field, there is no single specialised oversight body that is given the specific mandate to fight corruption in all spheres of procurement, which underlines the need to establish the Agency against Corruption in Public Procurement (AACIPP) included in the Recommendations.

The lack of adequate monitoring

145. Whereas oversight operates at the macro level and tends to be reactive, monitoring operates at the micro level and its purpose is to track in detail the way in which procurement is being implemented by each individual procuring entity. Monitoring requires the detailed observation of procurement processes on the ground; it extends to all stages of the procurement cycle and its purpose is to track decisions that are being made at each stage to enable irregularities and corruption to be detected and addressed in a timely manner.

146. Monitoring must rank as the critical mechanism in safeguarding procurement from corruption. It is therefore a matter of concern that the legislative design makes no proper provision for an effective monitoring function.

147. The Auditor-General is not required to monitor the general working of the procurement system or to track the decisions made at the various stages of the cycle; his or her mandate is a more general one relating to financial management. Of course, an audit may reveal a material procurement irregularity, but that is not its primary focus.

148. Another entity charged with a monitoring function is the AO/AA who is, in addition to designing and implementing the procurement system, also tasked with its monitoring. While it may be natural to vest some form of monitoring power in the top echelon of an entity, such a measure, by itself, can never be sufficient or appropriate. The essence of monitoring is that it is undertaken by an outside and independent party with specialised skills. Leaving aside the possibility that the AO/AA is itself corrupt, there is no guarantee that it has the specialised skills required to detect irregularities, nor can there be any confidence in its ability to 'self-medicate' or self-correct.

149. Again, it is clear from the evidence that monitoring at the level of the AO/AA has contributed little to curbing corruption. Indeed, the patterns of irregularity that have been noted above are of a kind that should immediately have been identified by responsible AOs/AAs. Even more troubling, the patterns of corruption are of a kind which could not have taken place in most instances without the active, or at least passive, co-operation of those in charge.

150. In the South African situation there is an urgent need to strengthen the monitoring capability of the procurement system by introducing an external inspectorate committed exclusively to the detailed monitoring of the activities of the multiple procuring entities, a need that is intended to be addressed by the Inspectorate of the proposed AACIPP.

The extent of procurement decentralisation: Multiple procurement entities

151. Excessive decentralisation creates serious problems. The power to procure goods and services in the public sector has been given to the following entities:

151.1 National government departments

151.2 Provincial government departments

151.3 All municipalities

151.4 Major public entities

151.5 Other public entities; and

151.6 All constitutional entities.

152. The extent of the decentralisation places a massive strain on available capacity. A procurement system depends for efficient and ethical performance on the skill, knowledge and standards of conduct of the officials who identify the goods and services needed, accurately specify those requirements in the tender requests and who then administer the system as well as the procurement contracts that result. These activities require proper training as well as significant skills. The evidence given to the Commission indicates that all too often the officials involved have not been adequately trained and so lack the skills and a thorough understanding of the standards necessary to detect and confront corruption. Training, experience and competence are essential tools in the fight against corruption. Training includes instruction in ethical standards.

153. It is misguided to suppose that the requirements and the skills needed for procurement are available throughout the country and are at the disposal of each entity. It is fundamental to this discussion to acknowledge that procurement officials are members of a strategic profession, and they are not discharging a simple administrative function by rote. In formulating international principles for public procurement, the OECD identified, by way of fundamental principle, the need to ensure that procurement officials meet high professional standards of knowledge, skills and integrity.

The absence of any constructive involvement with the private sector

154. South Africa is a signatory to the United Nations Convention Against Corruption (UNCAC). Article 13(1) of that Convention reads in part:

> Each State Party shall take appropriate measures, within its means and in accordance with fundamental principles of its domestic law, to promote the active participation of individuals and groups outside the public sector, such as civil society, non-governmental organisations and community-based organisations, in the prevention of and the fight against corruption and to raise public awareness regarding the existence, causes and gravity of and the threat posed by corruption.

155. The legislation under review makes no attempt to engage with civil society organisations (CSOs) in order to present a united front against corruption. An imaginative and open-hearted effort to recruit the stakeholders of civil society into the fight against corruption is entirely lacking. As a result, we have no shared Code of Conduct setting out the ethical standards to which both the public and private sectors commit themselves, and there is no attempt to give the private sector a voice in the design of procurement systems or to suggest how procurement could be improved and made more transparent. The relevant skills available in the private sector are ignored.

156. During its hearings the Commission had an opportunity to receive the evidence and the views of a range of private sector representatives and to consider a contribution made over the years by academic commentators and anti-corruption organisations. The Commission is satisfied that the involvement of CSOs and commentators is a significant but under-utilised control mechanism in dealing with corruption.

157. The constructive involvement of civil society is both a necessary and a legal requirement in the fight against corruption, and that is a function that the AACIPP must address.

Insufficient attention given to transparency

158. The need for transparency throughout the procurement cycle is essential for its integrity. Section 217(1) insists on transparency. The more transparent the process the less easily it is abused. While the legislation contains references to the need for transparency, it does not provide clear and realistic rules for its incorporation in any system design, and this needs to be addressed.

SEEMINGLY INTRACTABLE PROBLEMS

159. There is a range of problems that were frequently mentioned in the evidence before the Commission that appear to be intractable and which obstruct attempts to reform the procurement system. They are not related to each other, but each one points to a weakness in the overall system.

The need to encourage whistleblowers

160. The whistleblower is one of the most effective weapons against corruption. In most cases the whistleblower has information that provides a detailed insight into previously unsuspected criminality or wrongdoing that is not readily detectable by routine inspection. The present system offers no encouragement to the whistleblower to break cover. The good faith whistleblower is motivated by a sense of duty of the highest order.

161. A person contemplating making such disclosures must herself seek out an appropriate recipient and must trust that the disclosure will be treated in strict confidence and that the recipient can offer adequate protection against harm. Recent events in South Africa, which will be well known to every reader, make it the highest priority that a good faith whistleblower who reports wrongdoing should receive effective protection from retaliation.

162. The primary laws in South Africa that are intended to provide over-arching protection for whistleblowers, are the Protected Disclosures Act, 26 of 2000 (PDA) and the Protection from Harassment Act, 17 of 2011 (PHA).

163. The PDA is intended to protect employees in the private and public sector who disclose information regarding unlawful or irregular conduct by their employers or other employees or workers. These protections apply in respect of a disclosure which is classified as a protected disclosure. A whistleblower who acts in good faith is not liable to any civil, criminal or disciplinary proceedings because of the disclosure and if they suffer any 'occupational detriment' they may seek relief from the Labour Court or the CCMA or similar institution. The PHA allows for the issuing of a protection order against harassment.

164. These laws, although well-intended, are deficient in important respects. They do not provide a clear-cut procedure for the whistleblower to follow; they do not sufficiently guarantee that the disclosures will be protected; they are not proactive in providing physical protection; they offer no incentives to the whistleblower, and they do not ensure that all such information finds its way to a destination with specialised skills in receiving, investigating and utilising such information effectively.

165. In the view of the Commission, the whistle-blowing disclosure regarding corruption fraud and undue influence in public procurement should be received by the AACIPP by way of an electronic reporting system that permits and protects the anonymity of the reporting individual, provides for clarificatory questions, and guarantees confidential disclosures.

166. The importance of limiting disclosure to a single Authority, in this case the AACIPP, arises from the following:

    166.1 The AACIPP will be responsible to devise the optimal system by which disclosure can be made

    166.2 The format and procedures for disclosure to the AACIPP can be widely published so that the mechanism for making disclosure is simplified; and 166.3 The AACIPP can encourage the making of disclosures by publishing the range of concrete undertakings that it is obliged to offer in terms of article 32(2) of the UNCAC.

167. The Commission recommends that the mandate and the responsibility to litigate on behalf of the State for the recovery of damages or the return of the proceeds of corruption in public procurement should be the responsibility of the AACIPP. However, a fixed percentage of money recovered should be awarded to the whistleblower, provided that the information disclosed by the whistleblower has been material in the obtaining of the award.

Corruption in political party financing

168. The examples of corruption manifesting in high value contracts that have been described earlier in this Chapter indicate the likelihood that in at least two instances the proceeds of corruption were diverted to a political party, in both instances the ANC.

169. The one example involves the then-Johannesburg Mayor Mr Geoff Makhubo in dealings with EOH. In that case, it appears that a front company was used as a vehicle to channel money to the benefit of the ANC.

170. According to the evidence, Mr Makhubo had solicited a donation to the ANC from EOH and had repeated that request a week after the contract had been awarded to EOH. According to the evidence, about R50 million was donated to the ANC by EOH for the 2016 local government elections.

171. Another example involves the Free State Provincial Government in its dealing with Blackhead Consulting. Blackhead Consulting received several lucrative contracts including a 2014 asbestos audit tender valued at R255 million from the Free State Government, and between 2013-2018 Blackhead Consulting made payments amounting to millions of Rands to the ANC.

172. The evidence before the Commission did not seek to establish the full extent of corruption associated with political party financing or the extent to which other political parties may also have been implicated. However, the two examples mentioned are quite enough to indicate a serious problem that requires urgent attention and the active intervention of the NPA.

173. The recent promulgation of the Political Party Funding Act No. 6 of 2018 is at least a first step, but most likely an ineffectual step in addressing this abuse. Section 9 of the Act requires a political party to disclose to the Electoral Commission all donations received which exceed a prescribed threshold and imposes a similar obligation on any person or entity delivering a donation to a member of a political party other than for political party purposes. Section 19 constitutes any infringement a criminal offence punishable by a fine or imprisonment. However, the Act does not include any compulsory form of outside audit and its provisions are unlikely to address the critical problem effectively. More intrusive measures will need to be taken to prevent the proceeds of crime becoming a means by which political parties fund themselves.

The collapse of governance in SOEs

174. The evidence regarding events at Transnet, Eskom and SAA presented a scarcely believable picture of rampant corruption. The analysis given by Dr Popo Molefe regarding a discernible pattern in which key positions were deliberately given to corrupt actors is borne out by the facts and is corroborated by the further details in Ms Hogan's testimony.

175. People appointed to SOE Boards must have the necessary competence, capacity, experience, integrity, reputation and intellectual honesty to fulfil the demanding responsibilities of such an appointment.

176. The government is the sole shareholder of every SOE, but it holds those shares in trust for the nation. It follows that the people responsible for appointing members of these Boards owe a duty of care to the citizens of South Africa in making those appointments and must ensure that fit and proper persons are appointed to carry out the mandate of the SOE.

177. The question as to who appoints Board Members of SOEs is regulated by way of a complex web of overlapping and, at times contradictory, laws. With respect to most SOEs, there are three different legal frameworks that must be considered, namely, the PFMA, the Companies Act 71 of 1998 and the specific law establishing the SOE (founding legislation).

178. In addition to these laws, there are various "soft law" instruments like protocols and guidelines that are (usually) not binding but are (supposed to be) influential. Examples are the King III and King IV principles, the Protocol on Corporate Governance in the Public Sector, and the Handbook for the Appointment of Persons to Boards of State and State-Controlled Institutions.

179. While the law is unclear, in practice, Board Members are appointed by the relevant shareholder Minister, ostensibly in consultation with Cabinet. This, the evidence has shown, has proven to be problematic and does not represent the "robust and transparent" process recommended by King IV. Procedures for the appointment of SOE Board Members lack integrity and are not transparent. In addition, there is often a disconnect between the fiduciary duties of SOE Board Members and the profile, skills and expertise of incumbents. There are several alarming examples that show that Ministers have appointed persons to the Boards who meet none of the required criteria. The system of unstructured appointments does not serve the national interest. As President Ramaphosa remarked in his testimony, there has been a "massive system failure [in how Boards of SOEs have been appointed] and we need to correct what has happened in the past."

180. Furthermore, a fundamental divide between the concepts of authority and responsibility has been largely ignored. A Minister should never appoint either the chairperson or the CEO of an SOE. That must be the function of the directors who appoint their leader, the chairperson, and it is the Board that should appoint the CEO who, in turn, leads the management team in implementing the decisions of the Board.

181. It is the view of the Commission that the function of appointing directors of SOEs should no longer be left solely to Ministers. This system failure needs to be remedied urgently.

182. Following the exposure of state capture, it may well be that Ministers have been more careful in making appointments, and that the SOEs are beginning to show the benefit of better governance. Nonetheless, it is inconceivable that the system of appointments can be left unreformed. The national interest demands that SOEs operate under efficient and professional leadership.

183. The effective solution to address this systemic weakness, and one which the Commission strongly recommends, is the creation of a Standing Appointment and Oversight Committee to process appointments to the Boards of the SOEs and thereafter to deal with complaints which may be made concerning misconduct by Board Members.

Dishonest tenderers and their accomplices outside the public service

184. On the one hand, there are the corrupt officials in an organ of state. On the other hand, there are corrupt bidders or contractors who distort procurement processes by paying bribes or kickbacks. Any reform of the present system must therefore also deal aggressively with criminal acts committed by private sector actors.

185. It is recommended that there be four levels of response. These measures, each of which is discussed in further detail in the main Report, are (1) disqualification from participation in tenders, (2) deferred prosecution agreements, (3) criminal prosecution and (4) restitution for damages suffered and monies misappropriated.

THE WAY FORWARD: REMEDIES FOR INTRACTABLE PROBLEMS

186. There were occasions during the Commission hearings when a particular witness stepped back from the detail of the evidence and offered a generalised insight regarding the extent of system malfunction and the feeling of helplessness to which it gave rise. So, for example, Mr Peter Volmink was driven to describe the well-intentioned and detailed legislative framework as belonging to one universe in sharp contrast to the reality on the ground.

187. So, too, the observations of Mr Themba Godi, the former chairperson of the Parliament Standing Committee on Public Accounts (SCOPA), are typical and provided a bleak insight into a system which has lost its moral compass. Mr Godi said that if one looks at SCOPA's resolutions, there are many where there is a call for action to be taken against officials who had not complied with legislation. But, he asked, "how do you get things right if there are no consequences?" Mr Godi said that it is "shameful" that Ministers and their AOs/AAs cannot deal with corruption.

188. Mr Godi also mentioned that leadership instability compounds the problem. Throughout the various entities and departments, an AO or an AA would promise to "sort things out", but a short while later that person is no longer there. In their place is a new person who is starting from scratch. This repeated scenario makes it extremely difficult to build a culture of compliance.

189. The efforts, albeit failed efforts, to address corruption show that there is no easy solution to the problem. Corruption has strengthened and extended its hold on public procurement over a very long period. Clearly a new approach is required.

The suggested approach to meeting the challenges

190. The challenges which beset procurement are of two types. There are the challenges that were identified as far back as 2002 and which demonstrate by their longevity that they constitute embedded weaknesses in a system which has been impervious to change. Then there are the challenges posed by state capture, which brought the procurement system to its knees, disabling the system for criminal purposes.

191. What is now required by way of a conceptual approach is to identify the critical starting points from which, and around which, a comprehensive and coherent scheme of reform can emerge.

A National Charter against Corruption

192. State Capture, and its exposure, has dominated the national conversation in recent years. The effect has been predictable and negative: a loss of confidence both in Government and political parties, as well as in the business sector, compounded by frustration at the pervasive lack of accountability for wrongdoing.

193. In the Commission's view, it is long overdue to take steps to restore broken trust, and the first step is for all sections of society to jointly endorse a national commitment to eliminate corruption in public life, and in the procurement of goods and services.

194. With that in mind, and by way of a symbolic gesture to mark the turning of the page, the Commission recommends adoption of a "National Charter against Corruption", incorporating a standardised Code of Conduct by Government, the business sector and relevant stakeholders.

Creation of an Anti-Corruption Authority

195. In the view of the Commission, the appropriate starting point for any scheme of reform must be the establishment of a single, multi-functional, properly resourced and independent anti-corruption authority, subject only to the Constitution and the law.

196. None of the oversight bodies as presently constituted have been able to withstand political interference in the procurement space or to take effective steps to prevent such interference. The fight against corruption must be led by an authority which is independent of government control, impervious to political (and private) influence and which, by reason of the powers to be conferred upon it, cannot be ignored.

197. Not only do the existing oversight bodies lack the necessary independence, but they exercise a fragmented jurisdiction. Each oversight body operates in terms of its own mandate, in respect of its own area of jurisdiction and in accordance with its own priorities. We know, only too well, that fragmented oversight is not effective to eliminate corruption. Overall responsibility to root out corruption must lie unchallenged in the hands of one designated entity, the AACIPP.

198. The present design for public procurement lacks an effective monitoring authority. This has given rise to a significant gap in the system. It is no longer possible to argue that the auditing function of the AG or the supervisory functions of the AO or AA are sufficient to deal with corruption.

199. A fundamental weapon in the fight against corruption is missing or is not being properly used. The creation of an anti-corruption authority with broad jurisdiction over the entire procurement system is a necessity.

200. Above all, the present system lacks the essential element of accountability. The prosecution service simply ceased to operate in the field of public procurement, leaving the country defenceless against a criminal enterprise that has challenged the ability of the State to provide essential services to the nation.

201. The absence of criminal prosecution has gone hand in hand with the absence of civil litigation aimed at recouping the financial loss and damage suffered by the State. Time and time again, as the evidence given to the Commission demonstrates, corrupt actors stole public money on an unprecedented scale and, for years made, kept and enjoyed the fruits of criminality without being called to account.

202. The Commission has considered several objections which might be made to its primary recommendation concerning the establishment of the AACIPP. These objections would include the criticism that the establishment of AACIPP creates yet a further oversight body in an already fragmented system; that its creation will involve additional cost; that its functions could be discharged in part by National Treasury and in part by the NPA. However, The Commission remains satisfied that, despite these and other objections, there is no plausible alternative to the creation of the AACIPP.

Interaction between the AACIPP, National Treasury, NPA and SIU

203. The Commission appreciates that the establishment of the AACIPP to lead the fight against corruption in public procurement requires an adjustment and re-alignment in the functions of National Treasury, which exercises the overall supervisory jurisdiction in public procurement matters. The Commission is also aware that National Treasury has published a draft Public Procurement Bill, 2020, which has far-reaching proposals to reform public procurement. The suggested reforms include the establishment of a Public Procurement Regulator within National Treasury who will exercise considerable statutory powers. The draft Bill proposes vesting the power of debarment in the Regulator and contains other important provisions - all based on the assumption that the Regulator is also the appropriate official to lead the fight against corruption.

204. The Commission must make it clear that it does not seek to question the vital leadership role of National Treasury in the design and oversight of the public procurement system in general. The Commission endorses many of the proposals contained in the Bill, which will serve to centralise and strengthen public procurement standards. Nonetheless, and for reasons already made clear, it is not appropriate that any Government department be tasked to lead the fight against corruption in public procurement. The vulnerability of any Government department to undue political interference remains and will always remain.

205. What will be required going forward is a close and constructive consultative relationship between the AACIPP and National Treasury. The same need for close co-operation will apply to the NPA and the SIU. There will be a need to share information and a commitment to close co-operation in coordinating action against corruption.

RECOMMENDATIONS

206. The Commission makes the following recommendations for consideration by the President.

Recommendation 1: A National Charter against Corruption

207. The Government, in consultation with the business sector, should prepare and publish a National Charter against corruption in public procurement. The Charter should include a Code of Conduct setting out the ethical standards which apply in the procurement of goods and services for the public benefit. Furthermore:

    207.1 The National Charter should be signed by or on behalf of all key stakeholders, including the country's executive leadership in all spheres of government, SOEs, political parties represented in Parliament, constitutional bodies, organised business, organised labour and anti-corruption civil society organisations.

    207.2 Every procurement officer in the public service shall, on assuming duty, be required to sign a commitment to observe and uphold the terms of the National Charter.

    207.3 Every person, company or other organisation tendering or contracting to supply goods or services by way of public procurement must sign a similar commitment to uphold and to adhere to the terms of the Charter and its Code of Conduct.

    207.4 The content of the National Charter and the Code of Conduct should be widely publicised.

Recommendation 2: Establishment of an independent Agency Against Corruption in Public Procurement

208. The Government should introduce legislation for the establishment of an independent Agency Against Corruption in Public Procurement (AACIPP) mandated to monitor procurement, investigate, expose and prosecute corruption, fraud and undue influence in the procurement of goods and services for public benefit, and recover the proceeds of these offences.

Recommendation 3: Appointments to the Boards of State-Owned Enterprises

209. The Government should introduce legislation to create a Standing Appointment and Oversight Committee mandated:

    209.1 To invite nominations from the public of suitably qualified individuals to fill any vacancy on the Board of a state-owned enterprise (SOE) or in a senior post in an SOE

    209.2 To hold public hearings to assess and recommend to the relevant shareholder Minister appropriate candidates for the appointment of directors and senior officials of SOEs; and 209.3 To receive and investigate complaints relating to the conduct of such persons following their appointment and to make recommendations to the Minister concerned as to the merit of the complaint and the steps that should be taken to deal with it.

210. Members of the Commission should be comprised of the following permanent appointees, with a retired judge as chairperson:

    210.1 The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development or their delegates

    210.2 A senior representative from the accounting profession selected by the governing authority of that profession

    210.3 A senior representative from the business community selected by organised business

    210.4 A representative of a civil society organisation dedicated to fighting corruption

210.5 A member of the academic staff of a university with specialised knowledge of public procurement practices

210.6 The outgoing Chairperson of the SOE concerned; and 210.7 Two industry experts appointed by the SOE concerned.

Recommendation 4: Protection for whistleblowers

211. The Government should introduce legislation or amend existing legislation:

211.1 To ensure that any person disclosing information to reveal corruption, fraud or undue influence in public procurement activity be given the protections set out in article 32(2) of the United Nations Convention Against Corruption

211.2 To identify the Inspectorate of the AACIPP as the correct channel for making any such protected disclosure

211.3 To authorise the Litigation Unit of the AACIPP to incentivise such disclosures by entering into agreements to reward the giving of such information by way of a percentage of the proceeds recovered on the strength of such information; and 211.4 By authorising the offer of immunity from criminal or civil proceedings if there has been an honest disclosure of the information which might otherwise render the informant liable to prosecution or litigation.

Recommendation 5: Deferred prosecution agreements

212. The government should introduce legislation for the introduction of deferred prosecution agreements (DPA) by which the prosecution of an accused corporation can be deferred on certain terms and conditions, such as:

212.1 That a company has self-reported facts from which criminal liability could be inferred and has co-operated fully in making such report

212.2 That the company has agreed to engage in specific conduct intended to ensure that such conduct is not repeated

212.3 That the company has paid a fine or been subject to other remedial action; and

212.4 That the terms and conditions of the agreement has been confirmed by the Tribunal of the AACIPP.

Recommendation 6: Creation of a Procurement Officers' professional body

213. The Commission recommends the establishment of a professional body to which all officials who work in the area of public procurement should belong.

214. This professional body should determine the qualifications, and the necessary training and experience necessary for membership of the profession.

215. This training and qualification should include high standards of integrity and a commitment to resist mismanagement, waste and corruption.

216. The procurement system in every procuring entity should be managed by a duly qualified public procurement official being a member in good standing of the profession.

217. The Tribunal of the AACIPP should act as the disciplinary committee of the profession with power to strike a member from the Roll or to impose such other disciplinary sanction as the case may require.

Recommendation 7: Enhancing transparency

218. The Commission recommends that clear standards of transparency consistent with the OECD Principles for integrity in public procurement should be formulated by National Treasury for compulsory inclusion in every procurement system adopted by a public procurement entity.

Recommendation 8: Protection for accounting officers / authorities acting in good faith

219. It is recommended that the legislation dealing with the duties and responsibilities of accounting officers / authorities be amended to insert a provision which reads:"No person is criminally or civilly liable for anything done in good faith in the exercise or performance or purported exercise or performance of any power or duty in terms of this Act."

Recommendation 9: Amendment to the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004

220. In order to strengthen the duty of private sector entities to put in place measures against bribery it is recommended that the Prevention and Combating of Corrupt Activities Act 12 of 2004 be amended by the introduction of a section 34A to create a new offence. The new offence would arise where any member of the private sector or any incorporated SOE gives or agrees or offers to give any bribe ('gratification') to a third party intending (a) to obtain or retain business; or (b) to obtain or retain an advantage in conducting business with a public body or entity. An exception would exist where the private sector or any incorporated SOE had in place adequate procedures designed to prevent any such agreement or offer.

TRANSNET

STATE CAPTURE AT TRANSNET

221. The Commission is required among other things to investigate allegations of state capture, corruption, and fraud in various state-owned enterprises ("SOEs"), including Transnet.

222. In the period between 2010 and 2018 Transnet was involved in major procurements of locomotives to update its ageing fleet, network services and infrastructure expansion. The abuse of the procurement process in relation to several transactions associated with these procurements, valued at about R70 billion, has led to the improper enrichment of individuals aligned with the Gupta racketeering enterprise at the expense of Transnet. Several witnesses testified before the Commission about the adverse financial consequences suffered by Transnet because of the malfeasance and repeated manipulation of the procurement process. The evidence reveals extensive wrongdoing by some members of the Board of Directors and senior executives at Transnet.

223. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr Popo Molefe, Chairperson of the Board of Transnet, outlined the complex role Transnet fulfils within the national logistics system and gave a high-level overview of state capture at Transnet. He was appointed as Chairperson of the Board on 23 May 2018. He was not a member of the Board during the periods investigated by the Commission.

224. Transnet is the proprietor of all rails, ports, and pipelines in South Africa, and a key implementing agent of the developmental state for job creation, skills development, industrial capability building, regional integration, energy efficiency and economic transformation. It is one of the largest SOEs financially (assets comparable to top ten listed JSE companies), in capital terms (R380 billion), and institutionally (five subsidiary companies with over 50 000 employees).

225. The Board of Transnet reports to the Shareholder Representative, the Minister of Public Enterprises (MPE). Transnet is subject to oversight by Parliament's Portfolio Committee on Public Enterprises to which it submits its annual report on its programme of work and strategy. It also engages with the Portfolio Committee on Trade and Industry and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts (SCOPA).

226. In 2011 Transnet embarked on the so-called Market Demand Strategy (MDS). Mr Anoj Singh, the then Acting Chief Financial Officer (CFO), and Mr Brian Molefe the Group CEO, played important roles in the development of the MDS. The commencement of the MDS coincided with Mr Brian Molefe's selection as GCEO and the appointment of a new Board by the then Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Malusi Gigaba.

227. The MDS envisioned the investment of R300 billion in TFR, TNPA, TPT, TPL and TE. The biggest portion of the proposed investment spend was allocated to rail and the procurement of locomotives. The investment in TNPA was mainly for the widening and deepening of the harbours, development and maintenance of container stacking areas, improving efficiencies in the ports and crane acquisitions. Additional investment was envisaged for the Johannesburg to Durban petroleum pipeline.

228. Transnet's substantial capital expenditure means that there are many high value contracts at stake in its procurement processes.

229. A small group of senior executives and directors were strategically positioned to collude in the award of key contracts. The centralising of high-value procurement decisions facilitated the misleading of the Board in obtaining approval for irregular transactions. This was most evident in the various unprofessional, ill-prepared or last-minute proposals sent to the Board to push through transactions that upon proper scrutiny should have been rejected.

230. The evidence further shows that key employees at an operational level in Transnet were disempowered or marginalised from participation in important procurement decisions which affected their work. Internal controls were deliberately side-lined with the result that irregularities went unchecked. Executives at Transnet manipulated procurement processes to ensure preferential treatment to certain suppliers and that Gupta-linked entities benefitted from these transactions. Increased reliance on consulting and advisory services was achieved by weakening internal controls, either by diluting the role of governance staff in key transactions and operational matters or by entirely outsourcing their functions to third parties.

231. During his evidence before the Commission, Mr Popo Molefe described a pattern where vital positions such as CEOs, CFOs, and procurement, among others, were filled with "... individuals who have a veneer of professionalism and possess the appropriate experience". This allowed the manipulation of people, processes and systems "... for the advancement of looting".

232. In June 2018, the new Board of Transnet was presented with forensic reports that revealed widespread corruption and wilful disregard of the rules for the benefit of a racketeering and money laundering scheme aimed primarily at benefiting the Gupta family, its enterprise, and associated companies. Law enforcement agencies, despite being given detailed information, have failed in their duties to investigate. To date, no prosecutions have occurred in relation to corrupt activities and practices at Transnet.

233. Key individuals at Transnet oversaw the corrupt award of high-value contracts that enriched entities connected to the Gupta entities and their associates at great loss to Transnet. The three persons identified as the primary architects and implementers of state capture at Transnet are Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Anoj Singh and Mr Siyabonga Gama. The former Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Malusi Gigaba, was involved in the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Singh as directors of Transnet, and in the reinstatement of Mr Gama as the CEO of TFR. They, in turn, gave free reign to Mr Iqbal Sharma, who in 2012 became the Chairman of the influential Board Acquisition and Disposals Committee (BADC) of the Transnet Board.

234. Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Singh's appointments and the reinstatement of Mr Gama in 2011 after his dismissal in June 2010, were followed by the award of significant contracts that benefitted the Gupta enterprise. Through the strategic positioning of these and other individuals, and the weakening of governance structures in Transnet, wealth was extracted through corrupt and unaccountable procurement practices. Steps were taken to centralise procurement decisions, making it possible for parties inside and outside Transnet to collude in the award of contracts and to redirect substantial public resources to the Gupta enterprise.

An overview of the specific transactions and corrupt payments

235. During the relevant period Transnet procured 1,259 locomotives in three separate procurement exercises (the 95, 100 and 1,064 locomotives contracts). Various procurement irregularities were identified in respect of each of these procurement transactions. The irregularities usually favoured bidders associated with the Gupta enterprise. Investigations revealed: (i) improper engagements with the successful bidders; (ii) irregular changes to the evaluation criteria benefiting the preferred bidder; (iii) a failure to levy delay penalties; (iv) the improper use of the mechanism of confinement, which is a process that does not involve opening the tender to the market in cases justified by urgency, standardisation or highly specialised goods; (v) the questionable escalation of acquisition costs; (v) the request for proposals ("RFPs") not complying with legal requirements; (vi) improper deviations when evaluating technical compliance; vii) non-compliance with the local production and content threshold and the award of tenders to bidders that did not meet the threshold; (viii) impermissible batch pricing causing Transnet to incur an additional cost of R2.7 billion; and (ix) a corrupt relationship between the bidders and the Guptas.

236. In terms of these agreements, Mr Essa secured a 21% commission paid to the shell companies. A BDSA was also concluded with CSR in respect of a proposed locomotive maintenance contract and in respect of the acquisition of both the 95 and 100 locomotives providing for 20 – 21% commission. There is no evidence showing that Mr Essa's companies rendered much in the way of services to CSR and CNR or to CRRC Hong Kong which would justify the excessive payments that were made in terms of the BDSAs.

237. An email dated 22 August 2015, discovered in the Gupta-leaks, attached a payment schedule including a calculation of the moneys CSR had agreed to pay two companies, JJ Trading FZE (JJT) and Century General Trading FZE (CGT) related to the three locomotive contracts entered into between CSR and Transnet. These companies were later substituted by Regiments Asia and Tequesta.

238. The payment schedule reflects the following intended payments: (i) CGT would receive from CSR 20% of the total value of the 95 locomotive contract, equal to R523.32m; (ii) JJT would receive from CSR R925 million on the 100 locomotive contract, being 21% of the total contract value; (iii) JJT and Tequesta would receive from CSR approximately R3.806 billion, being 21% of the value of the 359 electric locomotives (part of the 1,064); and (iv) CGT/Tequesta would receive from CNR R2.088 billion, being 21% of the total value of the 232 diesel contract (part of the 1,064). Thus, Mr Essa's companies were to receive at least R7.342 billion from CSR and CNR for the provision of advisory services for Transnet's locomotive procurement, without evidence of any valuable services for these fees. Further, it discloses that JJT and CGT would not retain the full amount paid to them by CSR. They would retain 15% of the total amount paid by CSR. While the document is silent on who was to receive the remaining 85%, banking records from the Gupta-leaks confirm that at least a portion of this was paid to companies controlled by the Gupta racketeering enterprise.

239. In August 2016 CRRC (an amalgamation of CSR and CNR) signed an addendum to existing agreements with Tequesta varying the terms of the BDSA of 18 May 2015. The purpose was to modify the terms under which Tequesta was to be paid, and specifically to waive CRRC's right to withhold portions of the payments due to Tequesta. It appears that CRRC had retained 15% of all payments due to Tequesta as surety. The addendum stipulated that this would no longer be the case, and that the amounts withheld up to that date (equal to $15,144,610 million) would be paid to Tequesta. This was contingent on Transnet awarding CRRC contracts to provide maintenance services. If this was not met, CRRC would be entitled to recoup the 15% outlay against future payments that were due to be made to Tequesta. The withheld amounts would be released within ninety days of the final payment being made by Transnet to CRRC. The effect of the addendum was to expedite a large payment to the Gupta enterprise through Tequesta.

240. March 2014 saw the conclusion of the Locomotive Supply Agreements (LSAs) in respect of the 1,064 locomotives with the four original equipment manufacturers (the OEMs) that had bid successfully. During July 2015 Transnet approved the relocation costs of two of the OEMs, Bombardier Transportation South Africa (Pty) Ltd (BT) and CNR, amounting to R618.4 million and R647.2 million, respectively, for conducting their operations in Durban and not in Gauteng as originally envisaged in the requests for Proposals (RFPs). There was no actual relocation of either BT or CNR. Neither company had commenced operations in Gauteng. The variation orders to the LSAs were inflated and inadequately evaluated by Transnet. There was also a BDSA between CNR and a Gupta-linked company named BEX associated with this transaction involving a payment more than R67 million, with some of that being laundered to the Gupta enterprise. The language and format of the BDSA resembled the BDSAs concluded by Mr Essa for the locomotive contracts.

241. Throughout that time, Mr Iqbal Sharma, the Chairperson of the BADC of Transnet, had a matrix of business relationships with Mr Essa. The appointment of financial advisers in relation to the 1,064 locomotives procurement was a significant part of the Gupta-linked corruption and racketeering enterprise that took place at Transnet between 2011 and 2016 under the leadership of Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Gama and Mr Sharma. This involved the siphoning of funds from Transnet using contracts for advisory services related to the locomotive procurements, sometimes providing little or no value for inflated fee payments.

242. The role of Regiments and its associated companies in corruption, money laundering and racketeering came to light in the testimony of Mr Ian Sinton, the former General Counsel of Standard Bank. In response to media reports about the Gupta enterprise, Standard Bank reviewed a transactional account held by Regiments and ascertained that over a period of approximately three years, regular large transfers were made into the account and shortly thereafter transfers were made out of it to Gupta related entities. Consequently, on 18 August 2017, Mr Sinton wrote to Mr Niven Pillay, a Director of Regiments, advising him that Standard Bank was required by law to ascertain the source of funds and the application of those funds. Relevant bank statements were attached to the letter and Mr Pillay was requested to explain the transactions in question. A meeting was convened on 6 October 2017 and attended by two Directors of Regiments, Mr Pillay and Mr Litha Nyhonhya, and by Regiments' COO, Mr John Rossouw.

243. Mr Pillay informed Mr Sinton that in October 2012, Mr Pillay and Mr Eric Wood, both Directors of Regiments, were invited by a friend of Mr Pillay, Mr Kuben Moodley, to a meeting in Sandton where they met for the first time Mr Vikas Sagar, a partner at McKinsey, and Mr Essa. According to Mr Pillay, Regiments was informed that McKinsey had concluded a consultancy contract with Transnet, but that Transnet required McKinsey to appoint a black-owned supplier development partner (SDP) for at least 30% of the consultancy fees to be earned. McKinsey offered to appoint Regiments as its SDP subject to Regiments agreeing to share with Mr Essa 30% of all income received. This would be in addition to the 5% of all income received from Transnet that Regiments agreed would be payable to Mr Moodley. Neither Mr Essa nor Mr Moodley would render any service beyond introducing Regiments to McKinsey and Transnet.

244. Regiments informed Mr Sinton that it accepted McKinsey's offer and was consequently appointed as an SDP for the consultancy work for Transnet. Regiments stated that the amounts transferred to the Gupta entities, exceeding R210 million, were the agreed 5% for Mr Moodley, plus 30% for Mr Essa. Mr Pillay and Mr Nyhonhya explained that, without their knowledge and from a later uncertain date, Mr Wood increased Mr Essa's share of the proceeds from Transnet consultancy work to 50%.

245. When Mr Sinton enquired how a consultancy firm such as Regiments could give away 35%, and later 55% of its income to Mr Moodley and Mr Essa, who provided no services to Regiments beyond the introduction to McKinsey and Transnet, and remain profitable, he was told that the consultancy rates that McKinsey had agreed with Transnet were 400% more than Regiments would have been willing to agree to, had it negotiated directly with Transnet.

246. Regiments went on to explain to Mr Sinton that it had worked alongside McKinsey on various assignments for which it was paid its share directly by Transnet. McKinsey was appointed as a member of a consortium of consultants to advise Transnet on its acquisition of 1,064 new locomotives, and Regiments was substituted for Nedbank in that consortium. However, after having done work on the initial business case, McKinsey withdrew and Regiments, with Transnet's consent, assumed the role as lead advisor. In response to a question from Mr Sinton as to what role, if any, Regiments had played in the reported post tender increases in the locomotive prices, Regiments stated that it had advised Transnet to agree to the increases to compensate the successful tenderers for assuming foreign currency risks. When asked by Mr Sinton to comment on a media report, dated 1 June 2017, that Mr Essa, representing Tequesta, had been promised 21% of all amounts paid by Transnet to CSR, Regiments claimed to have no knowledge of the media report or Mr Essa's involvement.

247. In a letter to Standard Bank dated 10 November 2017, Regiments confirmed that it had agreed to pay Mr Essa 30% of revenue flowing from its relationship with McKinsey, that McKinsey was aware of this arrangement and that in November 2013 Mr Wood, on behalf of Regiments, increased Mr Essa's revenue share to 50%. Standard Bank then terminated its relationship with Regiments and its Directors.

248. The Money Flow Team of the Commission prepared a report dated 13 November 2020 outlining the relationship between Regiments and various Gupta associates, and identifying several payments made by Regiments to those entities. The cash flows analysed by the MFT confirm that the arrangement implemented by Regiments for most of the lifespan of the relationship with McKinsey was that Mr Essa's entities were ordinarily paid 50% of Regiments' revenue from Transnet with Albatime being paid 5%, leaving Regiments with only 45%.

249. Hundreds of millions of Rands were laundered through shell companies nominated by Mr Essa out of fees paid by Transnet to Regiments on the McKinsey/Regiments appointments at Transnet. These payments were supposedly "business development fees" due to Mr Essa who introduced them to McKinsey and to Mr Moodley who introduced them to Mr Essa. The shell companies changed over time. Within days, revenue received from Regiments by the shell companies was laundered to lower-level laundering entities. Apart from outflows to lower level laundry entities, the shell companies had no expenses of consequence and did not pay SARS.

250. The laundering arrangements with Mr Essa and Albatime on joint McKinsey/Regiments' contracts with Transnet were fraudulently presented by Regiments in joint McKinsey/Regiments bid submissions as Regiments supply development arrangements. In other cases, the laundering payments were made without any pretext of such payments in the proposals submitted by McKinsey/Regiments.

251. McKinsey denied any wrongful conduct on its part and committed to returning all fees received for work involving Regiment. As a result of an initiative of the Commission to confront McKinsey with certain evidence, McKinsey agreed to repay R650 million to Transnet (later increased to R850 million). In correspondence addressed to the Commission on 12 August 2021, McKinsey's legal representative confirmed that McKinsey commenced working with Regiments as an SDP in 2013 after conducting limited due diligence. It said that it terminated the relationship in 2016 when reports of Regiments' links with the Gupta network emerged in the media.

252. Mr Singh, who played the most important role in the appointment of McKinsey and Regiments, persisted with the proposition that there was a business need for the financial advisers and that Transnet received value for money. He said that McKinsey, because of its international expertise and significant history with Transnet, was best placed to execute the projects in the required time.

253. In relation to a loan of USD1.5 billion advanced by the China Development Bank, Regiments was paid a success fee of R189 million, of which R147 million was paid to Albatime (Gupta-linked laundering company). A R122 million portion thereof was then laundered to Sahara Computers (Pty) Ltd (another Gupta company). In relation to another funding arrangement, "the ZAR Club Loan" for R12 billion, Trillian Capital Partners (Pty) Ltd, in which Mr Essa had an indirect 60% controlling interest, through Trillian Holdings (Pty) Ltd), was paid R93 million for arranging the loan, without any services being rendered. Four days later, R74 million thereof was paid to Mr Moodley's company, Albatime.

254. There was also corruption in relation to key contracts for IT network and data services outsourced by Transnet. During 2013, Transnet issued a substantial tender for network services. After Neotel

(Pty) Ltd was identified as the preferred bidder, Mr Brian Molefe reversed the award and awarded it to T-Systems (a Gupta-linked company), the bidder that was ranked third in the scoring. Mr Molefe later revoked his decision, and the tender was finally awarded to Neotel. Various irregularities occurred in the awarding of this tender, most significantly, substantial improper payments Neotel made to (Gupta-linked) Homix (Pty) Ltd.

255. On 22 February 2017, Transnet awarded an IT data services tender to T-Systems as the second highest scoring bidder, rather than to the highest scoring bidder Gijima. Transnet held a view that there were objective criteria justifying such an award, while there was no reasonable basis for Transnet not to have awarded the tender to Gijima. The matter was litigated, and the decision was ultimately reversed and the award made to Gijima.

GOVERNANCE RESTRUCTURING AND WEAKENING OF INSTITUTIONAL CONTROLS

256. Capturing Transnet involved restructuring of governance and weakening of internal controls. Changing the established structures shifted decision-making power to individuals who were strategically positioned within Transnet to collude with persons outside the company. Centralisation of approval authority at the level of the Board and senior management had the effect of shielding procurement processes from the scrutiny of a wider group of Transnet officials who could have detected and reported irregularities. Heads of operating divisions did not have easy access to senior management and were afforded little input on decisions which directly affected their divisions.

257. Mr Peter Volmink provided testimony to the Commission regarding the internal controls applicable to procurement processes at Transnet. He joined Transnet in 2007 as GM: Legal, at the Corporate Centre, and was later transferred to the SCM unit, first as a Legal Specialist and later as the Executive Manager: Governance.

The role of governance

258. Historically, as a safeguard and check, Governance compiled monthly reports based on information received from the operating divisions to track compliance with Transnet's procurement requirements.

259. A rule of practice existed that key procurement documents requiring Group sign off by the Group Supply Chain Officer or higher had to be reviewed by Governance to assess compliance with the regulatory framework. This caused some frustration and resentment among officials, resulting in Governance being seen as a cause of SCM delays.

260. Mr Volmink pointed to two weaknesses that probably contributed to the corruption in Transnet's procurement processes. Firstly, most staff employed in the Governance function at operating division level are relatively junior and consequently lack the experience, training, and confidence to resist pressure from senior managers and executives. Secondly, the reporting lines of the Governance function at operating division level are problematic in that Governance reports to the CPOs. Yet, Governance is supposed to provide an independent, assurance function.

The changes to the delegation of authority framework

261. The Delegation of Authority (the DOA) Framework sets out the powers delegated to various bodies or officials to perform specified tasks in relation to various areas of operation such as treasury, human resources, and procurement, among others. The DOA Framework also covers other procurement processes, such as the use of emergency processes, confinements, blacklisting etc.

262. Transnet's procurement DOAs are structured around three key stages in the procurement process: (i) approval to approach the market; (ii) bid adjudication; and (iii) contract award.

263. In his evidence to the Commission, Mr Volmink explained that, historically, the Board of Transnet was not directly involved in procurement. Prior to 2011, the Board and its sub-committees did not have any DOA for procurement-related activities. These responsibilities were introduced during 2011 with the creation of the BADC as a sub-committee of the Board. Under the 2011 DOA, the BADC was established and empowered to approve the approach to market and to conclude contracts for certain high value tenders exceeding R500 million, to appoint consultants and to approve confinements. The timing of the BADC's establishment in February 2011 and the changes to the DOA framework coincided with Cabinet's approval of Mr Brian Molefe's appointment as GCEO on 16 February 2011.

264. The subsequent expansion of the BADC's authority and procurement powers over time closely tracked the injection of funds for capital expenditure and the consolidation of power in Transnet by Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Sharma.

265. In 2013, certain individuals were empowered to give process approval for high value tenders. This effectively established one-person Acquisition Councils with more extensive approval authority, including the GCFO Mr Singh (up to R750 million) and the GCEO Mr Brian Molefe (up to R1 billion). By 2016, the BADC's approval authority had further increased to R3 billion, with the Board retaining approval authority for tenders above this threshold.

266. Accordingly, after 2011 and prior to 2019, the DOA framework and prevailing practice at Transnet provided for an abnormality, in that it granted certain individuals greater powers to award tenders and conclude contracts than Acquisition Councils. In the relevant time of state capture Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh and others awarded tenders up to R1 billion without the tender serving before an Acquisition Council. Individuals thus were permitted to perform the function of a multi-disciplinary adjudication body. The increase in authority worked to the benefit of the Gupta enterprise.

The procurement process

267. There are three stages (comprising a cycle of nine steps) in the procurement process. The first stage is a planning stage; the second is the actual procurement stage; and the third is the implementation stage where the contract is in place and must be implemented.

268. Evaluation of tenders at Transnet normally followed the classic two-phase methodology of the public sector. The first phase requires certain thresholds to be met and the second involves the evaluation of price and preference.

269. Bids are regarded as administratively responsive if all mandatory documents were provided by the closing date and time of the bid. Bids are regarded as substantively responsive if all pre-qualification criteria were met.

270. The BADC was concerned that this approach opened the door to "low-balling" i.e., the practice of bidders offering unrealistically low prices in order to win the bid, and then motivate for price increases after the award of contract. The BADC accordingly adopted a different formula, using the average price as the benchmark. Where a bidder's price was equal to or lower than the average price, it would be allocated the full number of points for price. Bidders who were more expensive than the average price were allocated fewer available points. Points were also allocated to SD and B-BBEE during stage 2. Here SD and B-BBEE served as differentiators i.e., to differentiate between bidders who met the minimum threshold, based on their SD and B-BBEE performance. Transnet enjoyed an exemption from the requirements of the PPPFA which expired on 7 December 2012. This meant that Transnet's procurement procedures had to align to the PPPFA thereafter.

The weakening of internal controls at Transnet

271. Mr Volmink identified several problems in procurement practices at Transnet during the period investigated by this Commission. In general these included: (i) inadequate needs assessment; (ii) poor or biased development and drafting of specifications; (iii) under budgeting; (iv) inappropriate deviations from the open bidding processes; (v) short time for bidders to respond to tenders possibly intended to favour preferred bidders; (vi) changing evaluation criteria during bid evaluation and adjudication; (vii) inconsistent application of disqualification criteria; (viii) improper overruling of the evaluation team; (ix) manipulation of bid committee scores; (ix) the opportunistic use of risk factors as a reason to disqualify top-ranked bidders; (x) multiple repetitive awards to the same supplier; (xi) awards not made by the official with the requisite delegated authority; (xii) poor contract management; (xiii) abuse of variation procedures; (xiv) failure to pursue contractual remedies for delay and breach; and (xv) inadequate validation of services rendered prior to payment.

272. The formal restructuring of procurement processes at Transnet was accompanied by informal, but significant, shifts in governance culture and procurement practices that added to the centralisation of power in a small group of top executives and Board members. As Mr. Volmink noted in his evidence "the primary challenges to good governance within SCM emanates from people at the top... i.e., EXCO and Board. The bulk of the R8.2 billion on irregular expenditure that Transnet recently incurred is directly attributable to decisions made by Executives and Board Members". Mr Volmink observed that there were two systems for procurement at Transnet, one for lower-value transactions with rules, procedures, and systems; and an "alternative system" that applied to high-value contracts.

273. The concentration of power in a small group of senior executives and Board Members appears to have fostered an authoritarian culture of decision-making rather than inclusive and transparent deliberation. Mr Volmink testified that SCM staff members were often bullied by senior executives into complying with their wishes. Staff members often complied with improper instructions for fear of facing disciplinary measures, intimidation or even losing their employment. Several witnesses recounted to the Commission how Transnet employees who resisted irregular decisions were bullied into submission or dismissed, transferred, or rendered redundant.

274. The inappropriate use of confinements, emergency procurement and contract variations also aided corruption at Transnet. State capture happens through processes designed to override controls. Deviations from the open bid process helped to facilitate capture and enabled persons with nefarious motives to do what they wished.

275. During 2012, the Board expressed its unhappiness with the widespread use of confinements within Transnet and at first sought to remove confinement from the PPM altogether. However, the Board later agreed to retain confinements in the PPM as "special cases". The Board then removed the power to confine from the operating divisions and vested the power in Mr Brian Molefe, the GCEO, or higher, depending on value. However, the use of urgency as a ground for confinement was curtailed. If the urgency arose because of bad planning, a confinement would not be justified.

276. Mr Volmink was also critical of the previous practice of permitting the GCEO to award tenders by confidential confinement. A confinement is a deviation from an open bidding process. A normal confinement required multiple levels of review within Transnet and was subject to transparency, while a confidential confinement was not. Therefore, it was possible under the earlier versions of the DOA framework during Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Gama's tenure, for a confidential confinement of a tender worth R1 billion to go straight to the GCEO without any other person or body reviewing the confinement. This happened with the high value tenders awarded to McKinsey and Regiments for financial advisory services.

277. Emergency procedures were inappropriately resorted to during the period under investigation, as permitted in Paragraph 15.2 of the PPM (2015). However, the PPM stipulates that the concept of an "emergency" must be applied restrictively and should not be used as an excuse for bad planning. Emergency procedures apply only in cases where there is an imminent risk of human injury or death; suffering or death of livestock; serious business disruption that could not reasonably have been foreseen; interruption of essential services; serious damage to property or financial loss or serious environmental degradation.

278. Governance was also concerned about the occasional opportunistic use of risk factors during the process of bid evaluation or adjudication to disqualify deserving or successful but unwanted bidders on the basis of supposed material risks in making the award to such persons. Once a bidder has passed a functionality threshold, technical shortcomings in the bidder's offer cannot be used to disqualify the bidder based on a "risk assessment". This would be seen as "double-dipping". All technical risks should be considered when functionality criteria are designed and evaluated.

279. Finally, the effectiveness of internal controls was also undermined by limiting access to information that would expose corruption. The upward flow of information was deliberately filtered so that limited information reached the Board. The internal audit unit, which should ideally report directly to the audit committee of the Board, had to “dilute” and “be selective” about what report reached the Board and the Audit Committee. This practice of withholding the disclosure of audit information appears to have continued, as the investigators tasked by the new Transnet Board were unable to obtain many reports from the Internal Audit unit.

The relegation of Transnet’s Treasury

280. During the period under investigation, internal structures at Transnet were increasingly marginalised from procurement processes and their functions were outsourced to private firms. The Transnet Treasury was marginalised in key financial transactions and ultimately made redundant as its work was taken over and outsourced to Regiments.

281. The role of the Transnet’s Treasury is to ensure that the Transnet Group has enough cash to meet all its operational and capital requirements. It does this by ensuring that funding is sourced cost effectively within approved risk parameters and without breaching key financial ratios. It is critical that Transnet remains a solid investment-grade rated entity to ensure that it can secure funds cost effectively and be able to access short term general banking facilities, capital markets and derivative credit lines.

282. Despite this extensive functional expertise and experience within its Treasury, Transnet engaged financial advisers, with links to the Gupta racketeering enterprise, at enormous cost, to manage the financing of the approximately R70 billion procurement of locomotives between 2012 and 2017. According to Dr Bloom, the use of external financial advisers was for the most part unwarranted.

KEY APPOINTMENTS AND RELATIONSHIPS WITH GUPTA ENTERPRISE

283. Mr Popo Molefe testified that the problems with governance and procurement at Transnet escalated with the appointment by Cabinet of Mr Brian Molefe as GCEO in 2011, on the recommendation of the then Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Malusi Gigaba. Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Gama denied involvement in state capture, corruption, and any association with or participation in the Gupta racketeering enterprise. However, the evidence clearly shows that all three had significant contact with the Gupta family, who benefitted considerably from the corruption at Transnet.

284. Mssrs Molefe, Singh and Gama facilitated the conclusion of irregular contracts at inflated prices, using deviations or improper confinements, and in some instances the changing of tender evaluation criteria, in order to facilitate entry for companies involved in the extensive money laundering scheme directed by Mr Essa on behalf of the Gupta network. Mr Sharma, as a member of the Board and later the chairman of the influential BADC, was a business associate of Mr Essa. They were co-directors and shareholders in several companies. They were regular visitors to the Gupta compound in Saxonwold.

285. Other role players implicated in the scheme of wrongdoing include Mr Garry Pita, who held various positions including the Group Chief Supply Chain Officer and GCFO, Mr T Jiyane who at relevant times was the CPO at TFR and Mr Phetolo Ramosebudi who was appointed as the Group Treasurer in 2015.

The refusal to appoint a GCEO

286. State capture at Transnet began with the resignation of Ms Maria Ramos as GCEO in 2009 and the election of Mr Jacob Zuma as President of the Republic.

287. In May 2009, following the national elections, President Zuma appointed Ms Barbara Hogan as Minister of Public Enterprises (MPE). From Hogan's earliest days in office former President Zuma interfered and sought to thwart her appointment of a new GCEO of Transnet. Approximately a month after her appointment, Ms Hogan briefed President Zuma on developments at Transnet, including the urgent need to appoint a GCEO, the position having been vacant since the resignation of Ms Ramos.

288. Following Ms Ramos' resignation, the then Minister of Public Enterprises, Ms Mabandla, appointed the GCFO of Transnet, Mr Chris Wells, as the acting GCEO. In early 2009, the Transnet Board, following a thorough selection process, recommended Mr Pravin Gordhan as its only candidate for the GCEO position. A week later, Mr Gordhan withdrew his candidature and ultimately was appointed the Minister of Finance after the General Elections of May 2009. Mr Gama was a candidate for the position at the same time.

289. Mr Gama had served as the CEO of TFR since 2005. In early 2008 there was an investigation into his conduct following allegations of corruption at Transnet made in two anonymous letters. The investigation looked at two separate procurements. The first was the acquisition of fifty "like new" locomotives at a cost of more than R800 million and the second was the procurement of security services from General Nyanda Security Advisory Services (Pty) Ltd (GNS), a company controlled by General Siphiwe Nyanda, then a Minister and member of President Zuma's Cabinet.

290. Ms Ramos handed Mr Gama's alleged misconduct to the Board for further action when she resigned. The investigation established that there was a prima facie case of misconduct against Mr Gama. The Board also considered Mr Gama unsuitable for appointment as GCEO. In a letter, dated 13 February 2009, to Ms Mabandla, the then Minister of Public Enterprises, the Chairperson of the Board, Mr Phaswana, explained that Mr Gama was not fit for appointment as GCEO because "... Gama was thoroughly considered, but there are important gaps, relative to the requirements for this position. He currently requires greater cognitive development to handle the complexity of the position". In further correspondence, Mr Phaswana stated that Mr Gama "... did not demonstrate the required level of skill for the Group Chief Executive..." and that his competency-based assessment showed "... worrying concerns in relation to the exercise of personal judgement...". He also highlighted the serious allegations of misconduct against Mr Gama.

291. After a further process, the Board recommended the appointment of Mr Sipho Maseko (the CEO of BP Africa at the time), a highly capable and experienced black candidate with the requisite experience and admirable managerial capabilities.

292. Reports then appeared in the media that Mr Gama was being victimised by an anti-transformation white cabal that had instituted an inquiry, and later disciplinary proceedings to prevent him from being appointed as the GCEO. It was claimed that Mr Wells wanted to be GCEO and had started the inquiry to eliminate his rival.

293. Ms Hogan testified that former President Zuma then thwarted her appointment of a new GCEO of Transnet. At a meeting in June 2009, President Zuma indicated that he was not prepared to accept the appointment of the Board's candidate, Mr Maseko, and insisted that Mr Gama be appointed. When Ms Hogan resisted this on the basis that he was not the Board's preferred candidate and was facing disciplinary proceedings, President Zuma adopted the position that no new appointments would be made at Transnet until the proceedings were completed. The effect was that Transnet had an acting Chairperson, an acting GCEO, and acting GCFO for one and a half years.

294. On 28 July 2009, Ms Hogan sent former President Zuma a comprehensive report detailing the selection process, the strong motivation for the appointment of Mr Maseko, the procurement irregularities under investigation, and the corporate governance aspects of GCEO appointments. The report recommended that in the interest of leadership stability at Transnet, the CEO be appointed without delay with due consideration for the Board's confidence in the competency of Mr Maseko as their preferred candidate. President Zuma did not respond to this report and recommendation. In August 2009, Ms Hogan sought to place a Memorandum before Cabinet recommending the appointment of Mr Maseko. Cabinet was due to meet on 26 August 2009. Recognising the urgency of the situation in Transnet, and still not having received a reply from President Zuma, Ms Hogan sent an urgent letter on 25 August 2009 requesting his assistance to expedite the placement of Cabinet Memo 7/2009 on the agenda.

295. Ms Hogan stated that President Zuma gave her instructions to withdraw the memorandum and requested her to provide him with the names of three potential Chairpersons for Transnet. She testified that, following her letter, she thought that she had spoken to President Zuma telephonically, but could not remember. She surmised that President Zuma had said that "[t]his is not going through, I want . . . you to add three more names for a Chairperson". In effect, President Zuma's reaction to her letter was that "the memo was withdrawn from Cabinet, it did not serve at Cabinet". As she explained, "[t]he Cabinet Secretariat were instructed to withdraw the memorandum and they said that the President had given that instruction".

296. The choice of Mr Gama received support from two Cabinet ministers, Mr Jeff Radebe, and General Siphiwe Nyanda, the owner of the company implicated in the procurement irregularities that led ultimately to Mr Gama's dismissal, the ANC Secretary-General, Mr Gwede Mantashe and certain factions within the ANC.

297. Ms Hogan considered the support given to Mr Gama to have been part of "concerted attempts" to improperly influence the appointment process of the Transnet GCEO, with blatant disregard for the Board and herself as the then Minister. President Zuma's "absolute dogged insistence" that all appointments be deferred pending the outcome of Gama's disciplinary inquiry, in her view constituted a material breach of corporate governance.

298. When former President Zuma gave evidence on 17 July 2019, he objected to how he was being questioned in relation to the report of 28 July 2009 put before him by Ms Hogan regarding Mr Gama. After a discussion in chambers, the proceedings adjourned, and Mr Jacob Zuma did not testify again before the Commission. Thus, while former President Zuma did testify in relation to this issue, he did not fully address the allegations by Ms Hogan that he was party to a breach of corporate governance at Transnet.

299. In relation to Mr Gama's candidacy, former President Zuma said that following a process of discussion within Cabinet, there was a view that "this man [Gama] we know him, he has been working here, he is capable, and then at the end I think there was kind of a stronger view that now let us take the decision that we should take him".

300. Former President Zuma could neither admit nor deny that there was widespread vocal support for Mr Gama's appointment as the next GCEO of Transnet. He maintained that from his perspective he had no preference for Mr Gama and was willing to abide by the outcome of the decision. He recalled that there were allegations relating to Mr Gama and General Nyanda but did not remember the detail. There were murmurs about Mr Gama being victimised, but he could not recall the detail. He could not remember the final conclusion of Mr Gama's disciplinary inquiry.

301. Mr Jacob Zuma admitted that he had received and read the comprehensive report dated 28 July 2009 Ms Hogan sent him. He did not take issue with the report, which, inter alia, stressed the urgent need for the appointment of a GCEO. He was not able to remember whether he responded to Ms Hogan or the recommendation in the report. The process was that unless he raised an important issue with a Minister, a Cabinet memorandum would be placed before Cabinet for discussion. It was the Cabinet Secretariat's responsibility to ensure that the memorandum went to Cabinet.

302. Having denied that he insisted that Mr Gama be appointed and delayed the appointment of a GCEO, Mr Zuma intimated that he had no difficulty with the memorandum proposing the appointment of Mr Maseko being placed before Cabinet.

303. However, because he walked out of the Commission and refused to return, Mr Zuma did not directly answer the allegation that after receiving Ms Hogan's letter of 25 August 2009 he instructed her to withdraw the matter of Mr Maseko's appointment from the Cabinet agenda. The evidence of Mr Zuma that he did not insist at his meeting with Ms Hogan in June 2009 that Mr Gama be appointed and that he did not seek to prevent Mr Maseko's appointment, stands to be rejected. Mr Zuma's position was "Mr Gama or nothing". Despite having received Ms Hogan's report on or about 28 July 2009 and acknowledging the urgent need for the appointment of a GCEO, he allowed the position to go unfilled right up until his removal of Ms Hogan as Minister with effect from 31 October 2010.

304. His failure to respond to the contemporaneous correspondence, the practices of the ANC deployment committee, the vocal public support for Mr Gama by senior members of the ANC, the attacks on the members of the Board and the subsequent removal of Ms Hogan as Minister of Public Enterprises support Ms Hogan's version that former President Zuma insisted on the appointment of Mr Gama.

305. Therefore, Mr Zuma's version is wholly improbable as most evident from the fact that Mr Maseko was not appointed despite the desires and best efforts of the Board and Ms Hogan. There is no other plausible explanation for the non-appointment of Mr Maseko.

Mr Gama's dismissal

306. Various witnesses gave evidence regarding the dismissal, reinstatement, and subsequent promotion of Mr Gama, which forms important background to the role he played at Transnet and the political pressure and influence brought to bear in his favour during the period of state capture.

307. When independent investigations confirmed that the allegations against Mr Gama were serious, disciplinary proceedings were instituted against him on three charges in late August 2009 and he was suspended with full pay from 1 September 2009. On 10 September 2009, Mr Gama brought an urgent application in the High Court challenging the legality of his suspension and the decision to institute disciplinary proceedings against him.

308. Mr Gama's disciplinary inquiry took place over 14 days between 13 January and 25 February 2010. The inquiry was chaired by Advocate Mark Antrobus SC, who found him guilty on three charges.

The Role of Minister Gigaba and the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe as GCEO

309. Following Mr Gama's dismissal on 29 June 2010, and Mr Maseko having withdrawn his application, Ms Hogan sought to secure the appointment of a new Board that would commence a fresh search for a new GCEO. She did so by attempting to place a memorandum dated 27 October 2010 before Cabinet. She was called to a meeting with President Zuma and the former Secretary-General of the ANC, Mr Mantashe, on 31 October 2010, and advised of her removal as the Minister of Public Enterprises and re-deployment as the Ambassador to Finland. She declined the re deployment and indicated her intention to resign as an MP. Ms Hogan contends that she was removed because she resisted the repeated attempts to improperly influence executive and Board appointments at Transnet and other SOEs.

310. The following day, 1 November 2010, President Zuma appointed Mr Gigaba as Minister of Public Enterprises. Mr Gigaba remained the MPE until 25 May 2014, which period spanned the procurement and acquisition of the 100 and 1,064 locomotives.

311. Mr Gigaba had a close relationship with the Gupta family, as did Mr Jacob Zuma and members of his family, which commenced in the early 2000s when he was the president of the ANC Youth League. In affidavits filed with the Commission and in response to questions from the Fundudzi Investigation, Mr Gigaba initially sought to downplay the relationship, but his testimony reveals that he had extensive, recurring contact with the Gupta family over several years.

312. Mr Gigaba in fact knew all the Gupta brothers and their mother, was especially a friend of Mr Ajay Gupta and made regular visits to the Gupta Saxonwold compound while he was Minister of Public Enterprises (possibly twenty or more visits in total). His Special Adviser, Mr Siyabonga Mahlangu, was tasked with managing the Gupta family and was a buffer between Mr Gigaba and Mr Ajay Gupta so as not to confuse the roles of friendship and business. He permitted Mr Mahlangu to travel with President Zuma's son, Mr Duduzane Zuma, to a Gupta wedding in India. The trip was paid for by Sahara Computers. Mr Gigaba attended the notorious Gupta wedding at Sun City and the Gupta family were invited to his wedding.

313. Mr Gigaba approved an internal memorandum which proposed a list of candidates for appointment as non executive directors to the Transnet Board on 24 November 2010. This memorandum indicated that only three non-executive Directors would be retained, in disregard of a decision taken at the Transnet AGM in July 2010 to reappoint all non-executive Directors. This meant that a total of 12 new Board positions were filled at this stage. In an addendum to the memorandum, it was proposed that Mr Vijay Raman be replaced by Mr Sharma (who in 2013/2014 was the business partner of Gupta associate, Mr Essa, and later assumed control of the BADC). The substitution of Mr Raman with Mr Sharma was questionable in light of the Minister's responsibility to ensure that the Board had an appropriate mix of skills and experience.

314. On 8 December 2010, Cabinet approved Mr Gigaba's recommendations for the Board at Transnet, including the appointment of a new Chairperson, Mr Mafika Mkwanazi, on 8 December 2010. The new Board included Mr Sharma. A few days after his appointment as Chairperson of the Board, Mr Gigaba appointed Mr Mkwanazi as acting GCEO to replace Mr Chris Wells, who had resigned on the day that President Zuma appointed Mr Gigaba as Minister.

315. Mr Gigaba was later party to an attempt to appoint Mr Sharma as Chairperson of the Board. Cabinet rejected that recommendation.

316. In December 2010, prior to the publication of the advertisement for applications to fill the GCEO vacancy, the Gupta owned newspaper The New Age predicted the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe as GCEO of Transnet. Mr Brian Molefe was contacted by the media about the possibility of being appointed but claimed no-one had spoken to him about the job at that stage.

317. On 7 January 2011 a special Nominations and Governance Committee was convened to discuss the strategy to appoint a GCEO for Transnet. A recruitment agency, Leaders Unlimited, was appointed to lead the process. On 13 January 2011, Board Members nominated 13 candidates and LU identified an additional 20 candidates for the vacancy. Mr Sharma nominated Mr Brian Molefe, who was contacted by LU a few days later.

318. In early February 2011, nine candidates were interviewed, including Mr Molefe and Mr Gama, who by then had been dismissed. Mr Sharma sat on the selection panel that interviewed Mr Brian Molefe. However, he belatedly recused himself and his scores were not considered, though his preference by then was clearly known. On 11 February 2011, the Board resolved to submit a list of three preferred candidates for GCEO as recommended by the NGC to the Minister, which included Mr Brian Molefe.

319. The Ministerial guidelines for appointment of a CEO for a SOE required the Board to submit a minimum of three shortlisted candidates and to indicate its preferred candidate. The Board in this instance failed to identify its preferred candidate but indicated that Dr Gantsho had scored the highest, followed by Mr Brian Molefe. According to Mr Mkwanazi, the Board accepted that the Minister had the right to appoint the GCEO and on that basis abdicated its responsibility to identify the person it preferred.

320. In a memorandum dated 14 February 2011, Mr Gigaba requested Cabinet to "note" the appointment of Mr Brain Molefe as "the most suitable candidate" for the position of GCEO. Mr Gigaba admitted that he failed to inform Cabinet that Dr Gantsho was the highest scoring candidate. Mr Gigaba sought to justify his omission on the basis that the annexures to his memorandum disclosed the scores. He conceded that it would have been more proper to have disclosed in the memorandum that he was recommending a candidate who had not scored the highest and that the Board had failed to identify its preferred candidate.

321. On 16 February 2011, Cabinet approved the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe as the GCEO. In effect, Mr Gigaba, a friend of the Gupta family was instrumental in the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe, another friend of the Gupta family, with his appointment having been predicted in the newspaper owned by the Gupta family.

322. Mr Brian Molefe went on to oversee the substantial procurements at Transnet from which the Gupta network illegally benefitted. Most of the transactions were approved by the BADC chaired by Mr Sharma, who was in a close business relationship with Mr Essa, who had a 20 – 21% interest via the dubious BDSAs in the transactions. Ultimately, the Gupta enterprise received more than R3.5 billion in proven kickbacks in respect of the locomotives procured under Mr Brian Molefe's watch.

323. Despite the perpetrators of this massive racketeering, corruption and money laundering being his friends and associates operating in the Transnet space, Mr Brian Molefe maintains he was wholly unaware of any wrongdoing. It is noteworthy that Mr Brian Molefe was reluctant to acknowledge that he felt betrayed by the plundering of Transnet, during his time as GCEO, by his good friends, the Guptas. He stated that he preferred rather to reserve judgment until their crimes were established beyond all reasonable doubt.

The events leading to Mr Gama's reinstatement

324. On 22 July 2010, Mr Gama referred an unfair dismissal dispute to the Transnet Bargaining Council. On 14 October 2010, during pre-arbitration exchanges, Langa Attorneys recorded that Mr Gama would not contest that he was guilty of the disciplinary charges but contended that dismissal was an inappropriate sanction.

325. The process to reinstate Mr Gama appears to have begun in a meeting between Mr Gigaba and Mr Mkwanazi either before 1 November 2010 or in early November 2010. During the meeting, Mr Gigaba requested that the incoming Board should review the fairness of Mr Gama's dismissal. He thought the sanction of dismissal was unfair and too harsh for two reasons: firstly, because white employees had committed more serious acts of misconduct and had not been dismissed; and secondly, because Transnet had not followed the applicable condonation process in place in terms of which procurement irregularities are condonable. In his testimony, Mr Gigaba admitted that he had sought a review of the fairness of the dismissal, but denied giving a shareholder instruction, indicating that he considered the dismissal too harsh or raising the procurement condonation process. He wanted a review to be undertaken to make sure that the company was rid of the controversies surrounding a matter of high public profile.

326. On 22 December 2010, the Public Protector notified Transnet that she was investigating certain allegations that the Transnet Board had unfairly conspired to prevent Mr Gama from successfully applying for the vacant post of GCEO. Mr Mkwanazi enlisted the assistance of Mr Mapoma, GM: Group Legal Services, to deal with the Public Protector's investigation. According to Mr Mapoma, Mr Mkwanazi made it clear to him that he had been instructed to reinstate Mr Gama, and that he wanted to find a way to do so "cleanly". Mr Mapoma assumed the instruction came from former President Zuma. When Mr Mapoma later asked why Transnet was reinstating Mr Gama, Mr Mkwanazi "indicated initially that this was coming from the Ministry... later on, he indicated that it was coming from higher up".

327. Mr Mkwanazi denied Mr Mapoma's version, stating that the shareholder instruction was to review the fairness of the dismissal, and that Mr Mapoma had made his own assumption about President Zuma's involvement. He admitted that he had used the word "cleanly", and that this was meant to convey "legally". Mr Gigaba testified that he had not given Mr Mkwanazi an instruction to reinstate Mr Gama, did not discuss the issue with President Zuma and had received no instruction from him.

328. Transnet appointed KPMG/Nkonki, a joint venture, to undertake a forensic investigation into the issues raised by the then Public Protector. The letter of engagement dated 12 January 2011 records that the primary objective of the assignment was to assess whether Mr Gama was treated fairly in various respects. KPMG/Nkonki, in turn, contracted with the law firm Webber Wentzel to advise it on the procedural fairness of Mr Gama's dismissal.

329. Sometime before 13 January 2011, Transnet, on the advice of Mr Mahlangu, Mr Gigaba's special advisor, engaged Mr Gule of the law firm Deneys Reitz to assist it. Mr Mahlangu also testified that Mr Mkwanazi had informed him at this early stage that Transnet intended to reinstate Mr Gama. Mr Mkwanazi denied this, stating that he had told Mr Mahlangu of the decision to review the fairness of the dismissal and had sought the assistance of Mr Gule because he wanted a "new pair of eyes to look into this matter". Asked why he had not contacted Mr Todd, the attorney that had represented

Transnet in the matter, Mr Mkwanazi accepted that he did not really want to hear that Transnet was going to win the arbitration of the dismissal dispute.

The settlement negotiations for Mr Gama's reinstatement

330. On 18 January 2011, after a discussion with Mr Mkwanazi, Mr Mahlangu sent Mr Gigaba an email detailing that Transnet may be near a settlement with Mr Gama and that he would get the details of the settlement to brief Mr Gigaba. He further writes, "I suggest you socialise the President and his key aids (formal & informal) on the proposed settlement. It is intended that the forthcoming Board should consider and authorise it".

331. Mr Mkwanazi could not explain how Mr Mahlangu could have reported to Mr Gigaba that settlement was imminent as early as 18 January 2011, unless the decision was pre-determined. Mr Mahlangu testified that he intended President Zuma, his advisors, and senior political leaders to be made aware of the settlement. Considering the politicisation and importance of the issue, and the fact that it would be in the public domain, Mr Gigaba needed the President's support. Mr Gigaba testified that any settlement with Mr Gama fell outside his domain. He did not respond to the email as he saw it as a "run of the mill heads up" and had thus not "socialised" President Zuma.

332. On Friday, 21 January 2011, Mr Silinga, a Transnet legal advisor advised Mr Todd that Mr Mkwanazi had instructed that the steps taken to recover from Mr Gama the costs awarded to Transnet in the High Court application should be halted and that the arbitration set down for hearing during the week commencing Monday, 24 January 2011 should be postponed indefinitely, so as to allow the parties to engage in settlement negotiations. By this time, a warrant of execution had been issued by Bowman Gilfillan for the costs due by Mr Gama.

333. On 22 January 2011 settlement negotiations were held between Transnet, represented by Deneys Reitz and Mr Gama represented by Langa Attorneys. Deneys Reitz's consultation note reflects Mr Mkwanazi as having stated during a caucus held before negotiations commenced, that he would like to "...assist Mr Gama where reasonably possible..." but he needed good motivation to do so. Mr Mkwanazi in effect wanted some "friendly" legal advice from Deneys Reitz.

334. According to Mr Mapoma, after a meeting between Mr Mkwanazi and Mr Gama at Inanda Estate, Mr Mkwanazi mentioned that Mr Gama wanted to be "reinstated" as the GCEO of Transnet – a position he had never held and for which the previous Board considered him unsuitable. Mr Mkwanazi conceded that Mr Gama may have asked for that, but Mr Gama denied that he did.

335. On 24 January 2011, Mr Todd wrote to Mr Silinga confirming that his instructions had been carried out and noted that the legal team representing Transnet at the arbitration was satisfied that it was likely that the fairness of the sanction of dismissal would be upheld.

336. According to Mr Mkwanazi, the list of thirty cases that he spoke of arose from two Group Internal Audit reports in 2008, of which he did not have copies. There was a spreadsheet reflecting: (i) all the cases involved procurement irregularities; (ii) whether condonation was granted; and (iii) an indication of whether disciplinary action was taken (with some employees having been dismissed). Mr Mkwanazi accepted during his testimony before the Commission that the cases were not identical to Mr Gama's case but only broadly comparable.

337. On 2 February 2011, Mr Todd prepared a report ("the Todd Report") for Transnet on the disciplinary proceedings involving Mr Gama, giving a full account of the matter, Mr Gama's weak prospects of success and senior counsel's opinion that the sanction of dismissal was likely to be upheld. On 3 February 2011, a meeting of the Corporate Governance and Nominations Committee, comprising Mr Mkwanazi, Mr Mnyaka, Mr Tshepe and Mr Sharma, was convened. The meeting first considered whether there should be a deviation from Clause 4.8.4 of Transnet's recruitment and selection policy providing that the candidate must not have been previously dismissed from Transnet for reasons related to incapacity or misconduct so as to permit Gama to apply for the still vacant GCEO position. Clause 2 of the policy permitted deviation where necessary in respect of executive appointments. The GCNC resolved in favour of Mr Gama by deciding to allow him to apply for the position.

338. Following a meeting with Mr Mkwanazi on 4 February 2011, Mr Mahlangu sent Mr Gigaba an email advising him of Mr Gama's application for the vacant GCEO position and the settlement negotiations with him. Mr Mkwanazi shared this information with Mr Mahlangu on account of the instruction that he had received from Mr Gigaba to review Mr Gama's dismissal. Mr Gigaba claimed that he saw Mr Mahlangu's email as intruding too much into the internal processes of Transnet. He testified that he had subsequently told Mr Mahlangu to step back and allow the Board to deal with the issues.

339. On 10 February 2011, Mr Gama signed a draft of the settlement agreement, which provided for his reinstatement. This was before Deneys Reitz had provided any advice and appears to indicate that friendly advice was sought subsequently which accorded with a decision that had already been taken. On 14 February 2011, Mr Mapoma sent Mr Gule of Denys Reitz an email stating that the Chair requested a two page report for the Board meeting on 16 February 2011. This was the "Group Legal opinion", that proposed a settlement of the dismissal dispute on generic grounds.

340. The Board met on 16 February 2011 and discussed the possible settlement with Mr Gama. The Board Members had before them the Todd Report, the Group Legal opinion (with the input of Deneys Reitz) and a draft settlement agreement negotiated by Mr Mkwanazi, which provided for reinstatement. There was nothing before the Board from KPMG / Nkonki. The Board then decided that the sanction of dismissal was too harsh on the grounds of inconsistency.

341. The Board erred in this respect because the condonation of non-compliance with procurement rules and procedures in the assessment of bids does not absolve employees from disciplinary action and none of the incidents of misconduct for which Mr Gama was dismissed were mere non-compliances with bid requirements.

342. The Board thus decided to reinstate Mr Gama on the basis that he could still add value to the company. It acted on the strength of the "weak" Group Legal opinion and despite Mr Mapoma's advice that Transnet had a good case. The decision of the Board that Mr Gama could still add value and possessed critical expertise failed entirely to consider the implications of the findings of misconduct made against him.

The indefensible settlement agreement between Transnet and Mr Gama

343. On 23 February 2011, Transnet and Mr Gama concluded an agreement of settlement in terms of which Mr Gama would return to Transnet with effect from 23 February 2011 and resume duties as CEO of TFR on 1 April 2011. Any employment benefits that were due to him for the intervening period of 30 June 2010 to 23 February 2011 in terms of his employment contract were to be fully restored. Mr Gama was paid some R13 million under this clause. He was given a final written warning effective from 29 June 2010 to 29 December 2010 which he was deemed to have already served. Transnet agreed to "make a contribution equivalent to 75% of Mr Gama's taxed legal costs incurred during Gama's High Court application and in respect of his unfair dismissal dispute referred to the Transnet Bargaining Council." Mr Gama's attorneys were paid more than R4 million in costs. This payment is indefensible.

344. On 1 April 2011, Mr Gama resumed his duties as the CEO of TFR. The contents of the KPMG/Nkonki forensic investigation report is important here, specifically the findings that "...there was evidence of a number of projects where non-compliance with procurement procedures were condoned and persons responsible for non-compliance not held accountable".

345. The evidence justifies a finding that the decision to reinstate Mr Gama was pre-determined and there was no sustainable legal advice in support of the decision to reinstate or any objective review of the fairness of Mr Gama's dismissal.

Political interference and impropriety in the reinstatement of Mr Gama

346. The process followed in reaching the settlement agreement, the decision to reinstate, the terms of the settlement agreement and the payment of costs falling outside the terms of the settlement agreement were all indefensible. There are two possible explanations for this: (i) Mr Mkwanazi and the Board were not legitimately wrong; or (ii) there was an instruction to reinstate Mr Gama which accounts for the complete capitulation in negotiations.

347. Both Mr Mkwanazi and Mr Gigaba denied that an instruction had been given by government. However, a conspectus of the evidence overall, especially the indefensible terms of the settlement agreement and the fact that the Board permitted Mr Gama to apply for the position of GCEO when he had recently been dismissed as CEO of TFR for serious acts of misconduct, strongly indicate that political interference was at play. Mr Mapoma's conclusion at the time was that the complete capitulation in the settlement negotiations arose from an instruction to reinstate Mr Gama, which he understood to have come from the former President Zuma, is the most plausible account. There is simply no other credible explanation for this level of indefensible decision-making.

348. Furthermore, there is a strong prima facie case that the Board, and its members who voted in favour of settlement, the GCFO and the GCEO contravened various provisions of the PFMA by agreeing to a wholly indefensible settlement.

349. On 17 April 2015, Mr Brian Molefe was seconded to Eskom as Acting CEO. At a meeting of the Transnet Board on 20 April 2015, Mr Gama was appointed as Acting GCEO "due to his vast knowledge of the Company". He was appointed as Acting GCEO initially from 20 April 2015 to 20 July 2015 on the assumption that Mr Brian Molefe's secondment to Eskom was temporary. On 30 September 2015, Mr Brian Molefe resigned from the Transnet Board and was appointed permanent Eskom CEO with effect from 1 October 2015.

350. At a meeting of the Transnet Board on 18 February 2016, the Chairperson of the Board, Ms Linda Mabaso, informed the Board that she had received a letter on 7 January 2016 from Ms Lynne Brown, the Minister of Public Enterprises, requesting that the GCEO appointment be finalised within thirty days. She then indicated that in the circumstances, an internal appointee would be ideal and proposed Mr Gama as the most qualified individual. The Board approved the appointment.

351. In a letter dated 24 February 2016, Ms Mabaso recommended to Minister Brown that Mr Gama be appointed on a permanent basis without any formal recruitment processes as the matter was "urgent". Mr Gama's delegation of authority would expire on 31 March 2016 and the Board did not feel it necessary to advertise the post internally or externally based on the urgency and Mr Gama's performance. On 7 March 2016, the DD: LGR of the DPE compiled a memorandum to Minister Brown requesting her to approve the appointment of Mr Gama as the new GCEO from 1 May 2016 to 30 April 2021. The memorandum was recommended by the DG Mr Seleke and approved by Minister Brown on 12 March 2016.

352. Mr Gama did not see out his full term of office. In September 2018, after the appointment of a new Transnet Board, Mr Gama was dismissed as GCEO and removed from the Board of Transnet because of serious violations of his financial procurement and fiduciary responsibilities and the Board having lost trust and confidence in his ability to lead Transnet.

353. Ms Mabaso confirmed the reasons for appointing Mr Gama as set out in her correspondence but could not remember why the issue of Mr Gama's delegated authority posed a ground for urgency. She averred that the Board was not aware of the indefensible settlement agreement, the admissions by Mr Gama that he was guilty of the misconduct, the nature of the serious misconduct of which Mr Gama had been found guilty, and his prior unsuccessful attempts to be appointed as GCEO. She stated that because Mr Gama "was within the structures of Transnet" there was no need for the Board to interrogate his history.

Mr Gama's links to the Gupta enterprise

354. Mr Gama's links to the Gupta enterprise are most evident from his association with Mr Essa. It suffices now, by way of overview, to note that Mr Gama claimed he met Mr Essa only on four occasions.

355. At the second meeting in July 2015, Mr Essa requested a meeting with Mr Gama who told him to get his contact details from Mr Singh. Mr Essa followed up and phoned him in October / November 2015 and invited him to a meeting at what turned out to be the Gupta compound in Saxonwold, where Mr Essa introduced him to Mr Rajesh (Tony) Gupta. During a 10-15 minute meeting, Mr Tony Gupta indicated that there was scope for the development of a working relationship between Transnet and his businesses in the future. Mr Gama considered the discussion meaningless and indicated to Mr Essa that he was disappointed about having been duped into a meeting at the Gupta compound. Mr Gama said he did not visit the Gupta compound again and had no further interactions with the Gupta family.

356. On 3 December 2015, Mr Gama authorised the payment of R93 million to Trillian Capital Partners (Pty) Ltd for supposedly arranging a R12 billion ZAR Club Loan facility in relation to the 1,064 locomotives transaction. There was no evidence of Trillian having worked on the "ZAR Club Loan". R74 million of the amount paid to Trillian was laundered to Albatime, a company forming part of the Gupta racketeering enterprise.

357. Shortly after the payment to Trillian, and shortly before his promotion to GCEO, Mr Gama met Mr Essa again at the Oberoi Hotel in Dubai on 23 January 2016 on his return from the World Economic Forum. Mr Gama claims he had intended to stop over briefly in Dubai on his return to buy his daughter a dress. Mr Essa contacted him while in Davos, with a request to meet in Dubai. Mr Gama agreed and Mr Essa arranged the hotel accommodation. There is compelling (but disputed) evidence, pointing to the fact that Mr Gama's hotel bill was paid by Sahara Computers, a Gupta owned company.

358. By this time, Mr Essa had already been involved in a series of corrupt activities in relation to Transnet. Most notably, he had received half of the fees charged by Regiments and had concluded the corrupt BDSAs with CSR and CNR. Mr Gama initially denied that the meeting in Dubai was about Trillian but was compelled to change his version when confronted with earlier statements he made in an interview with a journalist. Mr Gama also had links with Mr Sagar of McKinsey who was implicated in the corrupt activities of Mr Essa, Regiments and Trillian at Transnet and Eskom.

359. The evidence of Ms Hogan confirms that President Zuma knew Mr Gama and supported his appointment as GCEO in 2009. Mr Gama denied any knowledge of this and denied having had any personal interactions with the former President Zuma, stating that he had only ever met him at various official functions. However, in 2015, shortly before being promoted to GCEO of Transnet, Mr Gama (while acting GCEO) decided on behalf of Transnet to donate R500 000 towards the Jacob G Zuma Foundation's Youth Day event held on 20 June 2015 in Durban.

Mr Singh's links to the Gupta enterprise

360. On 1 July 2012, Mr Singh was appointed as Transnet GCFO, having acted in the position since 2009. Mr Sharma was appointed as Chair of the BADC one month later. These appointments in 2012 coincided with the launch of the MDS, the R300 billion capital expenditure programme, which was the centrepiece of procurement corruption and malfeasance at Transnet in subsequent years and over which Singh exercised financial control.

361. Mr Singh also knew the Guptas fairly well. He was at pains to minimise the extent of the relationship. His denials must be assessed considering his poor credibility as evidenced by his many falsehoods exposed throughout his testimony before the Commission. He lied in his affidavit about the frequency and reasons for his visits to Saxonwold. By his own admission, Mr Singh visited the Saxonwold compound at least twelve times in four years "for religious or cultural functions only". He was invited to the notorious Gupta wedding at Sun City. Mr Singh also visited the offices of Sahara Computers. Mr Singh's girlfriend, Ms Naik, was originally employed at Transnet but later secured employment with Sahara Computers. She resigned from Transnet in December 2014, commenced employment at Sahara Computers in January 2015 and worked there until 2017. Her boss was Mr Ashu Chawla (the CEO) and to the extent necessary she worked directly with the Gupta brothers.

362. Mr Singh used the same travel agent as Mr Essa, stayed in the same hotel in Dubai as Mr Essa, and was, on occasion, present in Dubai (sometimes at the Oberoi Hotel) at the same time as Mr Essa.

Certain of Mr Singh's hotel reservations and invoices were forwarded by Chawla of Sahara Computers to Mr Essa. Ms Sameera Sooliman of Travel Excellence testified that Mr Essa and Sahara used Travel Excellence and that Mr Singh's flights were allocated to Mr Essa's account. She considered Mr Essa to be the guarantor of Mr Singh's tickets. Documents uncovered in the so-called Gupta-leaks further exposed Mr Singh's association with the Gupta enterprise through his travel arrangements.

363. The High Court has found Mr Singh to have been in a corrupt relationship with Mr Essa based, inter alia, on the fact that he had enjoyed all expenses paid trips to Dubai arranged by Mr Essa and Sahara Computers while he was at Eskom. In just over three years, Mr Singh accumulated R19 million in a current bank account because of spending virtually none of his remuneration, indicating that he had other sources of money besides his salary. The fact that this account was not an interest-bearing account obviated his declaring additional income from it in his tax returns. Mr Singh said he funded his living expenses from savings. He did not offer sworn testimony confirming this.

364. Mr Singh was struck from the role of Chartered Accountants by the South African Institute of Chartered Accountants (SAICA) on the grounds of improprieties committed by him in relation to procurements at Transnet.

Other key appointments

365. On 23 May 2011, Mr Gigaba was requested to approve a reshuffle of the Transnet Board proposed in a DPE memorandum, prepared following consultation with his special adviser, Mr Mahlangu. The memorandum proposed the replacement of Mr Mkwanazi with Mr Sharma as the Chairperson of the Board, on the ground that Mr Mkwanazi had become "intimately involved in the management of the company" and the DPE was of the view that "there should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company, ensuring a balance of power and authority". The memorandum also recommended the removal of Mr Don Mkhwanazi (who had expressed reservations about the process for the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe) and Ms Mnyaka (whose name was subsequently struck out) as non executive Directors only six months after their appointment in December 2010.

366. On 7 July 2011, Ms Yasmin Forbes and Mr Nishi Choubey (a former employee of Sahara Computers) were appointed as non executive Directors.

367. On 26 May 2014, after the General Elections, Ms Lynne Brown was appointed Minister of Public Enterprises. A Board reshuffle took place in December 2014. Several non executive Directors resigned and were replaced with Mr Stanley Shane, Mr Brett Stagman and Mr Richard Seleke. Mr Shane served as a Board Member of Transnet from December 2014 to June 2017 and as the Chairperson of the Transnet Second Defined Benefit Fund (TSDBF) over the same period. He succeeded Mr Sharma as Chairperson of the Transnet BADC. Like Mr Sharma, Mr Shane had close links with Mr Essa. He was a Director of Integrated Capital Management, which was involved in the creation of the Trillian Group under Mr Essa and Mr Wood from late 2015 to early 2016. A CIPC company search undertaken in May 2021 reflects that Mr Shane and Mr Essa are both active Directors of Antares Capital, with their dates of appointment being 28 October 2014 and 5 June 2016, respectively.

368. Mr Shane presided over or was linked in three transactions (or sets of transactions) pointing to the possibility of his association or participation in the Gupta enterprise. First, he was a director of Transnet when CNR entered into the BDSA with BEX (linked to the Gupta enterprise) in relation to the relocation to Durban, which resulted in BEX being paid a kick-back of R76 million on 25 September 2015. Mr Holden's evidence establishes that R9 million of this was ultimately paid to Integrated Capital Management in November 2015, of which Mr Shane was a Director. Secondly, in his capacity as the Chairperson of the BADC, Mr Shane played a leading role in the award of the IT data services tender to T-Systems over Gijima in February 2017, despite Gijima having been the highest scoring bidder – an award that was set aside on review on the grounds of irrationality and bias on the part of Mr Shane.

369. The personnel changes and Board appointments during Ms Brown's tenure as Minister of Public Enterprises saw the departure of individuals in senior management who resisted the alleged corruption and weakening of governance structures at Transnet. This included the resignation of Ms Mathane Makgatho as Head of Group Treasury in November 2014, who objected to several transactions that were not in the best interest of Transnet, especially the use of Regiments as advisors. She found herself increasingly side-lined from processes that were in her direct remit as Group Treasurer. After prolonged conflict with senior management, particularly Mr Singh, Ms Makgatho began to feel unsafe, suspecting that she was under surveillance and that her car had been tampered with. The impact of this working environment on her health prompted her to resign. Several Transnet Treasury members who worked under Ms Makgatho resigned at a similar time for allegedly the same reasons.

370. Mr Phetolo Ramosebudi replaced Ms Makgatho as Group Treasurer. Ms Makgatho said she resisted bypassing internal controls over procurement and financial processes, while Mr Ramosebudi was described as “compliant” and “perfect for the mandate” being executed by senior management.

The role of Mr Salim Essa

371. Mr Essa’s role and influence appears from the evidence in relation to all the significant transactions analysed later in this report, from October 2011 when Mr Gigaba appointed him as a Director of Broadband Infraco (an SOE in the IT sector). This SOE had some part in the questionable decision of Mr Brian Molefe on 20 November 2013 to reverse the award of the IT network services contract to Neotel and the appointment of T-Systems together with Broadband Infraco in its place.

372. Mr Essa probably played some part in facilitating the illicit Regiments fee arrangements and in concluding the array of BDSAs in relation to the acquisition of locomotives. He interacted extensively with Mr Singh and was apparently instrumental in setting up a meeting for Mr Niven Pillay (of Regiments) with Mr Singh on 3 December 2012, just before Regiments emerged as McKinsey’s new SDP.

373. Mr Essa had significant contact with Mr Singh and Mr Gama in the period under investigation. Mr Essa’s relationship with Mr Brian Molefe was more limited, but possibly more consequential. More likely, the role played by Mr Essa and Mr Sharma in advancing Mr Brian Molefe was part of a bigger strategy by the Gupta enterprise to capture Transnet. At a meeting in Melrose Arch in 2014, at which Mr Essa attempted to persuade Mr Henk Bester of Hatch Goba to appoint his preferred company as an SDP and illegitimately increase the contract value of the contract awarded to Hatch Goba by R80 million for that purpose, Mr Essa claimed that he and his associates had influence over executive appointments in SOEs and boasted that "they" had already decided that the new boss of Eskom would be Mr Brian Molefe and that an announcement would be made in the newspapers soon. Mr Bester later understood Mr Essa to be referring to the Gupta family.

374. Mr Essa also cultivated a relationship with Mr Pita who as the acting GCFO authorised the R93 million payment to Trillian on 2 December 2015, the day on which Mr Pita also secured two additional large safety deposit boxes at the facility known as Knox Vaults. Mr Pita was permanently appointed as GCFO on 1 February 2016. He met with Mr Essa at the Gupta compound around this time to discuss the cession of a substantial Regiments contract to Trillian. In or about April 2016, Mr Pita made a presentation on investment projects at the Gupta compound, with Mr Essa and Mr Rajesh Gupta in attendance. In October 2016, Mr Pita was summonsed to a meeting by Mr Essa at the Gupta compound to discuss the failure to pay Trillian. At the meeting Mr Essa and Mr Rajesh Gupta were threatening towards him. Mr Pita confirmed that he met Mr Essa on unspecified dates at the Gupta compound, at Mr Essa’s offices in Melrose Arch, at the Parreirinha Restaurant in Turffontein.

The cash bribes

375. Three witnesses testified before the Commission that Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Gama, Mr Singh, Mr Pita and Mr Gigaba were the recipients of cash bribes from the Gupta enterprise. Insofar as these allegations are sustainable, they will justify findings of misconduct in terms of the relevant TORs and possible referrals for prosecution and further investigation in terms of TOR 7.

376. All three witnesses were drivers and close protection officers who provided driving and protection services to these officials. They testified before the Commission without their faces being shown.

Their identities have been protected for security reasons.

377. Mr Brian Molefe was incriminated by Witness 1 who has worked in close protection since 1989. Prior to giving testimony to the Commission, he was subjected to sinister threats of death and extreme violence in messages sent to his phone. He also has been followed by vehicles acting suspiciously. Witness 1 performed close protection and driving services for Mr Brian Molefe from February 2011 until August 2014. He testified that he transported Mr Molefe to various meetings with Mr Ajay Gupta and others at different places. He provided entries from logbooks that confirmed fifteen meetings between July 2011 and September 2012. These meetings were not recorded in Mr Brian Molefe's diary.

378. According to Witness 1, Mr Molefe would take a light brown backpack with him to the meetings at the Gupta compound. Mr Brian Molefe confirmed that he owned such a backpack and pointed it out to the Commission during his testimony. Witness 1 indicated that he had observed Mr Molefe on some occasions come out of meetings with the Guptas carrying a sports bag containing something. Witness 1 was instructed on one occasion to take the brown backpack to Mr Ajay Gupta at Sahara Computers in Midrand.

379. One day while attending a meeting in the main Boardroom of Transnet, Mr Molefe instructed Witness 1 to fetch his cell phone from his brown backpack in his office. When he did so, Witness 1 discovered that the backpack was half full of bundles of R200 notes. He called Mr Brian Molefe's personal assistant, Ms Mbele, into the office and showed her the cash. He took the phone to Mr Molefe and informed him about the cash and advised him that having such amounts was a safety risk. Mr Molefe became annoyed and dismissed his concerns. Mr Molefe denied that he ever received cash from the Guptas.

380. Witness 1 testified further that he frequently deposited cash amounts on behalf of Mr Molefe at ABSA, Standard Bank and Nedbank. Mr Brian Molefe would fill out the deposit slips but Witness 1 would count out the cash which usually was several thousand Rand at a time. Mr Brian Molefe admitted that Witness 1 did indeed deposit large amounts of cash at ABSA bank on his behalf. However, he maintained that this money was cash receipts payable to a burial society of which he was the treasurer. He did not furnish any evidence to support his version.

381. Witness 3 incriminated Mr Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Pita and Mr Gigaba. Witness 3 worked first for Mr Gigaba in 2005 and 2006 when Mr Gigaba was Deputy Minister of Home Affairs. He then worked in the private sector. Mr Gigaba's office then head hunted him in 2013 and he was employed by Transnet and seconded to Mr Gigaba for the period of July to December 2013 while Mr Gigaba was Minister of Public Enterprises. He was assigned to Mr Singh in July 2014 until Mr Singh was seconded to Eskom in 2015. Thereafter he worked for Mr Pita.

382. Witness 3 accompanied Mr Gigaba on six or seven visits to the Gupta compound in Saxonwold. These visits were not recorded in Mr Gigaba's diary or the vehicle logbook. The cross examination of Witness 3 by counsel for Mr Gigaba revealed a contradiction in Witness 3's version about whether the logbooks recorded some or none of the visits to the Gupta compound. Witness 3 held firm that some of the visits were not recorded on the instruction of Mr Gigaba. The contradiction between his written statement and his testimony is inconsequential because Mr Gigaba admitted to having regularly visited the Saxonwold compound.

383. During the visits to the Gupta compound, Witness 3 saw Mr Molefe, Mr Koko (the CEO of Eskom), Dr Ben Ngubane (the Chair of Eskom), Ms Mabaso (the Chair of Transnet) and former President Jacob Zuma. He did not know Mr Koko and Ms Mabaso when he saw them in 2013 but realised who they were later.

384. Witness 3 also testified to the fact that Mr Gigaba carried large amounts of cash and paid for expensive clothing and restaurant bills in cash. One day he opened the boot of the vehicle and witnessed Mr Gigaba take money from a bag full of R200 notes bundles. He suspected this money came from the Guptas. Mr Gigaba denied this.

385. After Witness 3 was assigned to Mr Singh, he transported Mr Singh to the Gupta compound in Saxonwold more than ten times. Mr Singh would appear from the residence carrying a full sports bag. He suspected the bag was full of cash because Mr Singh gave him cash from it. On six or seven different occasions, Witness 3 drove Mr Singh from meeting the Guptas at Saxonwold to Knox Vaults, a facility in Johannesburg providing safety deposit boxes, where Mr Singh would alight with the full sports bag and return to the car with it empty.

386. It is common cause that Mr Singh leased safety deposit boxes at Knox Vaults. Mr Kuben Moodley, the Director of Albatime, the company that received 5% of the Regiments payments made to the Gupta racketeering enterprise, and Mr Garry Pita, Mr Singh's successor as GCFO at Transnet, also kept safety deposit boxes there.

387. Mr Singh denied that Witness 3 had ever driven him to Knox Vaults. He also initially maintained that he had only four boxes, one for himself and one each for his wife and two small children. His evidence was shown to be demonstrably false on several counts, which impacts on his overall credibility. Mr Singh lied about the number and purpose of the boxes. Secondly, in elaboration of his denial that Witness 3 ever took him to Knox Vaults, Mr Singh testified that he used to drive there himself during working hours in the week in his own car rather than his official car. This version is inconsistent with the undisputed evidence that Mr Singh left his own vehicle at Transnet during the week when he used his official car and driver.

388. After Mr Singh's secondment to Eskom in 2015, Witness 3 was assigned to Mr Garry Pita (previously the GCSCO), who became the acting GCFO when Mr Singh left and was later promoted to GCFO in February 2016. He drove Mr Pita to the Gupta compound twice; once in the week immediately preceding Mr Pita's appointment as GCFO (possibly in late January 2016). Mr Pita denied the intimation that the visit had anything to do with his subsequent appointment and maintained that it took place after his appointment on 1 February 2016. This visit, according to Mr Pita, concerned the cession of a contract from Regiments to Trillian. Mr Pita testified that he did not know at the time that the residence he visited was the Gupta compound.

389. According to Witness 3, Mr Pita was upset when he left the Gupta compound on the second time he drove him there. Witness 3 said that Mr Pita cursed and made a comment about a R600 million payment. Mr Pita confirmed that he was upset after the meeting at which he had been abused by Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Essa concerning payments that Mr Essa claimed were due to Trillian.

390. Witness 3 did not see Mr Pita emerge from the Gupta residence with any bags on either visit. However, he did transport Mr Pita to Knox Vaults six times and witnessed him remove a sports bag from the boot and go into the building. He also drove Mr Pita fifteen times to the Parreirinha Restaurant in Turffontein for meetings with Mr Essa, usually on Friday afternoons where lunch was had and much alcohol consumed.

391. During his testimony, Mr Pita was at pains to put distance between himself, Mr Essa and the Gupta family. He sought to portray that he was a victim of abuse whenever he attempted to question their claims for payment. The evidence nonetheless confirms that Mr Pita had ongoing engagements with them at several meetings at the Gupta compound, at Mr Essa's offices and at restaurants in Johannesburg.

392. Mr Pita admitted that he and his mother had safety deposit boxes at Knox Vaults, a fact unearthed not by his admission but by the investigators of the Commission in June 2019 when they seized a box leased by him. He acquired seven boxes over six months between June 2015 and December 2015, precisely at the time he took over Mr Singh's functions at Transnet as acting GCFO incrementally increasing the sizes as he required more space.

393. Mr Pita played a role in the illegitimate payment of R189 million as a "success fee" to Regiments in respect of a loan of USD1.5 billion from the China Development Bank, the payment of R647 million to CNR in relation to the relocation to Durban, with BEX having received an illegitimate kickback of R67 million, and the payment of R93 million to Mr Essa's company, Trillian, in respect of services already paid for and rendered by Regiments in relation to a syndicated "ZAR Club Loan" of R12 billion. These transactions all took place around the time Mr Pita was incrementally acquiring larger safety deposit boxes at Knox Vaults.

394. Mr Pita's denials must be assessed in the light of his other conduct related to the pattern of racketeering activity at Transnet during his tenure in different roles. His visits to Knox Vaults alone are not sufficient to establish reasonable grounds to believe that he was a corrupt recipient of cash; but taken with the timing and manner of his acquisition of the boxes at Knox Vaults, his extensive dealings with Mr Essa and the Gupta family, and his role in various tainted transactions at the relevant time, they have weight and cogency in establishing reasonable grounds to believe that he received property from and participated in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity and, like Mr Singh and Mr Brian Molefe, received cash payments as a quid pro quo and thus may be guilty of corruption.

395. Witness 2 incriminated Mr Gama. He was his driver and close protection officer from May 2012 to December 2017 while he was CEO of TFR and GCEO of Transnet. Witness 2 testified that he took Mr Gama to the Gupta compound four times. These visits were not recorded in Mr Gama's diary.

396. Witness 2 testified that in November 2016, during one of the visits to the Gupta compound, Mr Gama came out of the residence and told him that he should expect someone to bring him a suitcase and instructed him to place it in the boot. A short while later, a person Witness 2 assumed was a member of the Gupta family came out of the residence with a suitcase which was put in the boot. Later Witness 2 drove Mr Gama to the Maslow Hotel in Sandton where they met Mr Jiyane. Mr Gama instructed Witness 2 to transfer the suitcase from his car to Mr Jiyane's car. Mr Jiyane gave Witness 2 his car keys. Witness 2 said that when transferring the suitcase, he opened it and saw that the suitcase was stacked with cash. While conceding that he did at times go to the Maslow Hotel, Mr Gama denied that he visited the Gupta compound in November 2016, received cash and arranged for Witness 2 to transfer the suitcase of cash to Mr Jiyane's car.

397. Witness 2 further testified that he transported Mr Gama three times to Melrose Arch, where he collected cash from Mr Essa and provided specific details of two of the collections.

398. Mr Gama denied these events and initially put up a case that Witness 2 had not transported him that day. He denied that he was at Melrose Arch or in Bryanston. The difficulty with accepting that version is that the Google maps history shows that Witness 2 was at Melrose Arch on 13 June 2017 from 20h27 to 21h36 and was parked at the home of Mr Gama's girlfriend between 22h37 and 01h57, confirming the version of Witness 2. Mr Gama could offer no convincing account for Witness 2 being parked at the home of his girlfriend at such a late hour. Mr Gama sought to argue that the Google Maps information was unreliable because it seemed to reflect that Witness 2 took more than three hours to drive to Pretoria on the morning in question. However, Mr Gama did not apply for leave to cross-examine Witness 2 on this issue.

399. In short, Witness 2's Google Maps travel history serves to corroborate his version that Mr Gama collected cash from Mr Essa at Melrose Arch. The lie is given to Mr Gama's denial by the improbability of Witness 2 driving to Melrose Arch (where Mr Essa lived) and Sandhurst (to an address that Mr Gama did not deny was that of his acquaintance) and then to the home of Mr Gama's girlfriend without Mr Gama.

400. Witness 2's evidence against Mr. Gama must be approached with some caution given the personal friction between them. Mr Gama alleged that Witness 2 had been set up to incriminate him and had been induced with an offer of reinstatement by Transnet, having been dismissed at Mr Gama's instigation for allegedly sprinkling "muti" at the home of Mr Gama's girlfriend. Witness 2's evidence is supported by the Google map history and the implausibility of some of Mr Gama's denials. Moreover, Mr Gama did not apply for leave to cross examine Witness 2.

401. The allegations of Witness 2 should also be assessed in the light of Mr Gama's alleged participation in the Gupta racketeering enterprise. Mr Gama was centrally involved in the award of contracts to Regiments and Trillian and the making of unjustifiable payments to them. He dubiously sought to deny his association with Mr Essa, whose company, Trillian, benefited handsomely from corrupt and fraudulent payments during Mr Gama's term as GCEO. It is accordingly probable that Mr Gama received a quid pro quo in relation to these transactions. The evidence about his receipt of cash is also consistent with the accounts of the other drivers about similar payments made to Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Pita, signifying the existence of a pattern of conduct on the part of the Gupta family and their Transnet associates.

THE PROCUREMENT OF THE 95 LOCOMOTIVES

402. The first locomotive transaction of significance is the procurement of 95 locomotives by Transnet from CSR Zhuzhou Electric Locomotive Company Ltd (CSR) which commenced in 2011.

403. Shortly after the appointment of Mr Brian Molefe as GCEO and the reinstatement of Mr Gama as CEO of TFR, on 20 April 2011, the Board of Transnet approved the Locomotive Fleet Modernisation Plan, subject to the BADC confirming affordability. Mr Gama submitted a memorandum dealing with affordability to the meeting of the BADC held on 3 August 2011.

404. The minutes of the BADC meeting of 3 August 2011 show that due to "action plans to create the much-needed liquidity", TFR could fund the acquisition of 138 locomotives (43 diesel and 95 electric). The locomotive fleet plan had identified that there was insufficient traction power to meet the corporate plan volume demand. The BADC accordingly recommended the acquisition of the 138 locomotives.

405. Mr Molefe, and Mr Singh recommended the procurement in a submission to the Board at its meeting of 31 August 2011. The Board approved what it termed "the interim locomotive fleet plan" at a value of approximately R3.6 billion and authorised Transnet to proceed with the acquisition of the 43 diesel locomotives by confinement. It resolved that a transparent (open bid) procurement process be used to acquire 45 electric locomotives in 2012/13 and 50 in 2013/14; and resolved to submit a PFMA application to the Minister in respect of the 95 electric locomotives.

406. On 5 October 2011, the then Chairperson of the Board, Mr Mkwanazi, notified the Minister of Finance of "the significant capital expenditure" involved in the acquisition of the 95 locomotives. It was not necessary to notify the Minister of the acquisition of the 43 diesel locomotives by confinement as the transaction was below the prescribed value. On 24 October 2011, Mr Mkwanazi wrote to the Minister of Public Enterprises requesting approval for the procurement of the 95 locomotives in terms of section 54(2)(d) of the PFMA.

407. On 21 December 2011, Mr Gigaba, the Minister of Public Enterprises approved the procurement of the 95 electric locomotives at an ETC of R2.7 billion, subject to the proviso that Transnet provide him with a comprehensive briefing on its engagement with the competitive supplier development plan, particularly the supplier development and localisation components for the procurement.

The pre-bid process

408. Prior to obtaining the Minister's approval, Transnet issued the RFP for the acquisition of the 95 electric locomotives on 6 December 2011 and advertised it in the Business Day newspaper. The closing date for collection of the tender documents was 30 January 2012.

409. The RFP required all bidders to submit a SD bid document demonstrating their commitment and support for the new growth plan (NGP), being the relevant government policy initiative, and how an appointment in terms of the RFP would assist in achieving the NGP objectives.

410. Foreign bidders would assume obligations under the competitive supplier development programme (CSDP) to develop local downstream suppliers, leverage local maintenance and manufacturing initiatives, and develop skills and technology transfers.

411. Section 6 of the RFP addressed the B-BBEE requirements under the Broad-Based Black Economic Empowerment Amendment Act 46 0f 2013 which aims to promote the inclusion of previously disadvantaged South Africans in the economy. Any verification certificate had to reflect the weighted points attained by the entity for each element of the B-BBEE scorecard as well as the overall B-BBEE rating.

Large enterprises (with an annual turnover greater than R35 million) were required to be rated by verification agencies or auditors on a rating level based on all seven elements of the scorecard.

412. On 20 December 2011, Mr She Yongjun wrote to Ms Lindiwe Mdletshe advising that CSR had made payment for the RFP documents by requesting its bank, the Bank of China, to debit its account with the ZAR equivalent USD and to pay Transnet. He attached proof of payment. Ms Mdletshe then sent the RFP to CSR by email and signed the RFP collection list on behalf of CSR.

413. On 19 January 2012, Mr Pan addressed a letter to Mr Molefe, prior to the compulsory clarification meeting scheduled for 31 January 2012. Mr Pan thanked Mr Molefe for allowing them the opportunity to participate in the tender for 95 new electric locomotives. Mr Pan informed Mr Molefe that Mr Fu Chenjun will lead their delegation to visit South Africa from 30 January to 3 February 2012. He requested a meeting with Mr Molefe and Transnet's technical group to discuss and optimise technical specification, to facilitate a site visit to a locomotive depot or engineering facility. Mr Molefe replied the same day without objecting to CSR's attempt to gain preferential access prior to the closing of the bids, stating that Mr Gama would process and respond to Mr Pan's request.

414. The investigation into allegations of state capture at Transnet and Eskom commissioned by the National Treasury and conducted by Fundudzi Forensic Services (Pty) Ltd unearthed a letter dated 8 February 2012 from Mr Molefe to CSR where he noted the meeting request but declined on the basis that the tender documents were out for bidding. This letter was sent after the dates proposed by CSR for the meetings and Fundudzi was not able to find the letter in a search of Mr Molefe's emails. No witness has presented any testimony regarding this letter to the Commission. Whatever the position, there can be no doubt that CSR improperly sought to influence Transnet officials prior to the adjudication of the tender.

415. The communication between CSR and the officials of Transnet was inappropriate. The tender notice required bidders to communicate exclusively with Ms Mdletshe. Mr Molefe should have directed Mr Pan to refer his queries to Ms Mdletshe, as the tender process was still underway. The communication affirms that CSR may have been favoured as a potential bidder giving rise to a reasonable apprehension that Transnet might have been biased in favour of CSR, inconsistent with the spirit and purposes of a fair and competitive tender process.

416. Most significant though, is that these events indicate that the Gupta enterprise was involved in some way with the procurement of the 95 electric locomotives at this early stage.

The bids and the changing of the B-BBEE evaluation criteria

417. Nine bidders submitted their tenders timeously on 17 April 2012 and complied with the submission requirements. However, on the closing date CSR was not registered as a company in South Africa and thus could not and did not submit: (i) valid South African VAT and company registration certificates; (ii) a B-BBEE accreditation certificate; and (iii) a valid South African tax clearance certificate. The MNS investigators disagreed with Fundudzi that this was a disqualifying factor.

418. According to the RFP, all respondents, including foreign companies, were required to comply with the B-BBEE requirement and failure to do so would result in a score of zero being allocated for B-BBEE in the evaluation of the bid. CSR failed to submit a B-BBEE certificate with its returnable documents.

419. The CFET's B-BBEE evaluation report reflected that B-BBEE evaluations were conducted on nine bidders as part of the stage 1 evaluations. Only three of the nine bidders scored above the required minimum threshold, namely: Bombardier (70%), Siemens (63%) and SSMM Consortium (62%). CSR was awarded zero for the B-BBEE scorecard resulting in an overall score of 56% (below the overall minimum threshold of 60%) meaning that it should have been disqualified at stage 1.

420. Instead of proceeding with the evaluation of the three bidders that achieved the minimum threshold in stage 1, Transnet, seemingly with the intention of avoiding the disqualification of CSR, introduced what it referred to as "option 2" which simply removed the B-BBEE requirement as a scoring criterion in stage 1.

421. In a memorandum addressed to Mr Brian Molefe, dated 6 June 2012, Mr Gama clarified the rationale for the change. He described the purpose of the memorandum as being to: (i) provide an update to the GCEO on the progress of the tender evaluation process; (ii) request the GCEO to approve the shortlisting of the tenderers that had met the SD threshold of 60%; and (iii) approve the issuing of letters to unsuccessful tenderers that did not meet the SD threshold for stage 1 of the evaluation process.

422. However, the main purpose of the memorandum was to obtain a change to the evaluation criteria in stage 1. Mr Gama explained that during the stage 1 evaluation it emerged that there was a local bidder (Nelesco) with an invalid B-BBEE certificate and a foreign bidder (CSR) that did not have a local office. This, Mr Gama maintained, meant that the methodology (if it included the B-BBEE certificate and the FRC) "would have been unfair to both the local supplier (Nelesco) and foreign supplier (CSR)". Mr Brian Molefe accepted and approved the recommendation of the CFET to change the criteria on 8 June 2012.

423. Only Siemens, Bombardier and CSR met the technical requirements in stage 2 and proceeded to stage 3. Mr Jiyane sent a memorandum to Mr Gama requesting him to approve the shortlisting of the three bidders. Mr Gama approved the short list on 13 July 2012.

424. A memorandum dated 8 August 2012 records that CSR scored the highest (76.4%) in the stage 3 evaluation process and became the preferred bidder.

Other irregularities

425. The RFP required bidders to submit a price including hedging and a price excluding hedging. Only Bombardier did this. Siemens and CSR failed to submit their pricing schedule as required by the RFP. CSR's recommended price for the tender was R2.7 billion (excluding VAT) including hedging and escalation costs. Ms Helen Walsh, the Acting GM: Governance, Risk and Compliance at Transnet, and a qualified chartered accountant, testified that between December 2012 and May 2017, R2 686 790 000 was paid to CSR under the LSA for the 95 locomotives. An additional amount of R376 150 600 was paid for VAT, giving a total of R3 062 940 600. Additional payments of R369 928 965 (R328 582 544 plus R45 449 856 VAT) were paid between December 2013 and December 2018. The total cost of R3 062 940 600 plus R369 928 965, being R3 432 869 565 was approximately R700 million more than the amount authorised by the Minister, being R2.7 billion.

426. There is no evidence confirming that this cost overrun was authorised by the Board or the Minister. This may point to a failure by the Board to take effective and appropriate steps to prevent expenditure not complying with the operational policies of Transnet, contrary to the provisions of section 51(1)(b)(ii) of the PFMA. Mr Molefe exceeding his delegated authority in contravention of section 57 of the PFMA.

427. In accordance with the delivery schedule of the LSA, delivery was to commence in April 2014 and continue over a period of 11 months with the last delivery due in February 2015. The first locomotive was delivered on 16 April 2014 and the last on 19 June 2015. Thus, the first locomotive was late and the last locomotive five months late. Clause 9.1.1 of the LSA states that if the acceptance of a locomotive occurs after its scheduled acceptance date, CSR shall pay a delay penalty at the applicable rate. Fundudzi determined that CSR delivered 85 of the 95 locomotives late. The MNS Report maintains that Transnet was entitled to impose delay penalties amounting to approximately R1.7 billion (being 63% of the contract price). The non-recovery of the delay penalties was a contravention of Section 51(1)(b)(i) of the PFMA, and possibly a criminal offence under Section 86(2) which requires the Board to take effective and appropriate steps to collect all revenue due to Transnet. It is a matter that may require further investigation by the current Board of Transnet.

Money laundering and racketeering

428. The evidence in relation to the procurement of the 95 locomotives discloses the beginning of a relationship between CSR and officials of Transnet that led to CSR's irregular appointment and further wrongdoing in other bids and contracts for the acquisition of more locomotives. It is thus important background and may add to the evidentiary basis for any prosecution for participation in the conduct of the affairs of an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering. However, the offences under the PFMA are not offences included in Schedule 1 of POCA. Nonetheless, the relationship of the events in the acquisition of the 95 locomotives to the acquisition of other locomotives from CSR may assist to prove the existence of an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering activities.

429. The report submitted to the Commission by Mr Paul Holden of Shadow World Investigations shows that CNR (Hong Kong) and Century General Trading FZE (CGT) concluded an exclusive agency or consultancy agreement pertaining to "the 95 Project" on 14 April 2012. A 2015 accounting spread sheet of payments due from CSR to various parties confirms that CGT was due to receive 20% of the total value of the 95 Project, equal to R523.32m, as a kickback. An email dated 22 August 2015, discovered in the Gupta-leaks, also attached a payment schedule including a calculation of the moneys CSR had agreed to pay to CGT, amongst others. On 10 February 2015, CSR and Regiments Asia (Pty) Limited, a company controlled by Mr Essa, concluded a BDSA in relation to "the 95 Locomotive Project" indicating that Regiments Asia effectively displaced CGT under the consultancy agreement of 2012. Thus, Regiments Asia was due to receive what CGT had originally been paid on Project 95, namely, 20% of the total value.

430. In April 2012 the Board approved the procurement of the acquisition of 1,064 locomotives to give proper effect to the MDS. However, because a delay in the procurement of the 1064 impacted on the MDS targets, it was decided to procure 100 additional locomotives to be deployed to the coal export line. It would then be possible for the coal export line to release 125 ageing locomotives for deployment to General Freight Business ("GFB") to mitigate against the delays in the acquisition of the 1,064 locomotives.

The proposed confinement to Mitsui

431. Mr Francis Callard, a senior engineer at TFR, prepared a memorandum dated 15 October 2013 on the business case for the procurement of 100 class 19E electric locomotives for the coal export line at a cost of R3.871 billion, and the procurement of 60 class 43 diesel locomotives for GFB at a cost of R1.826 billion, (both excluding borrowing costs). The memorandum proposed an accelerated procurement to mitigate general freight MDS volumes at risk, by means of confinement to Mitsui African Rail Solutions of the 100 locomotives, justified on grounds of urgency, standardisation, and highly specialised and largely identical goods.

432. Mitsui had contracted with Transnet in 2009 and had already supplied 110 class 19E electric locomotives for use on the coal export line. A key justification for the proposed confinement was that TFR had taken delivery of the last class 19E locomotive from Mitsui in August 2012. The Mitsui class 19E locomotives, according to Mr Callard, were operating optimally and had exceeded their design parameters.

433. The proposal for the confinement to Mitsui was scheduled for discussion at a meeting of the BADC on 21 October 2013. However, the matter was removed from the agenda and not proceeded with at that stage allegedly on grounds of sensitivity arising from a media controversy caused by the previous acquisition of locomotives undertaken through confinement to MARS.

434. Mr Callard submitted a final version of his memorandum dated 20 January 2014. He received an email on 22 January 2014 from Ms Mdletshe attaching a revised memorandum dated 21 January 2014 requesting him to reformat it, to incorporate a slide on evaluation methodology and to make certain changes. When Mr Callard perused the memorandum, he noticed significant changes about which he and his team had not been informed or consulted. These were (i) it was proposed to confine the award to CSR instead of Mitsui; (ii) references to "class 19E locomotives or equivalent" had been removed; (iii) the discussion of the fact that the class 20E locomotives procured from CSR were not suited for heavy haul on the coal export line was deleted – CSR did not manufacture class 19E locomotives; (iv) it falsely stated that the locomotives would be "largely identical with those already supplied" when CSR had not supplied any locomotives; (v) it deleted all reference to the fact that Mitsui had already produced 110 locomotives for the coal export line which allowed for the easy restarting up of the production lines, moving quickly through the design phase and obviated the need for training crew; and (vi) the discussion of the benefits of operational and maintenance standardisation set was also deleted.

435. None of this rationale addressed the key point of standardisation of the coal line fleet (dual voltage locomotives) and interoperability. The benefits of standardisation offered by a confinement to Mitsui were thus negated. Mr Callard was concerned, justifiably, that the business case had been altered in a way resulting in unsuitable locomotives being specified and procured. The locomotive in the 95 procurement from CSR was a class 20 locomotive, which is a different weight, less powerful, has different components and its operation is different.

436. On 23 January 2014, prior to the Board meeting of the next day, Mr Callard addressed an email to Mr Gama and Mr Jiyane highlighting his concerns and significant risk to Transnet due to the variance in technical specifications and capacity of the locomotives. Mr. Callard was of the view that the amendments to his memorandum were intended to mislead the Board that the confinement to CSR was in order when in fact the requirements for confinement were not met and the locomotives procured from CSR were not suited for use on the coal export line. He received no written response to his email of 23 January 2013 but he spoke to Mr Jiyane on the phone and told him that the alteration of the business case would result in unsuitable locomotives being procured.

437. On the afternoon of 23 January 2014, Mr Singh sent an email to Mr Gama seeking his signature on the submission to the Board. At 21h22 Mr Gama addressed an email to Mr Singh informing him of the concerns around the 20E locomotives.

438. The import of Mr Gama's email is that he had grasped the implications of the concerns raised by Mr Callard and was conveying them to Mr Singh in anticipation of the upcoming BADC and Board meetings scheduled for the next day. Mr Gama agreed with Mr Callard concerning the matters raised by him as he did not support the confinement to CSR. That, he said, was why he ultimately did not sign the memorandum presented to the BADC and the Board.

439. At 7h02 on 24 January 2014, Mr Singh replied to Mr Gama in an email suggesting that they discuss it later that day. Prior to that, at 7h00 on 24 January 2014, Mr Singh had forwarded Mr Gama's email to Mr Molefe in an email stating: "FYI". This correspondence confirms that Mr Gama and Mr Singh had internalised Mr Callard's concerns.

440. The BADC meeting was held on 24 January 2014 a few hours before the Board meeting. It was chaired by Mr Sharma and attended inter alia by Mr Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Pita. Mr Gama and Mr Jiyane were recorded as having been in partial attendance. The minuted discussion of the procurement of the 100 electric locomotives makes no reference to any of the concerns raised by Mr Callard in his email of 23 January 2014 and Mr Molefe confirmed in his evidence before the Commission that Mr Callard's concerns, despite being known by himself, Mr Singh, Mr Gama and Mr Jiyane, were not raised or discussed.

441. The BADC resolved to recommend to the Board the procurement by means of confinement to CSR of the 100 electric locomotives at an estimated cost of R3.8 billion, excluding borrowing costs. Mr Gama testified that Mr Molefe later informed him that Mr Sharma in particular was strongly opposed to a confinement to Mitsui, and the BADC supported him.

442. Thus, management misled the BADC by creating the impression that: (i) a 26 ton heavy haul CSR locomotive existed when in fact that was not the case; (ii) using CSR would be faster, but in fact would have negated local content requirements; and (iii) the confinement was in compliance with the PPM when in fact no previous CSR product had been delivered to Transnet. And lastly, there was no audit report auditing the confinement process.

443. The Special Board Meeting of 24 January 2014 (attended by Mr Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Gama) accepted the recommendation and rationale of the BADC.

The flawed rationale for confinement to CSR

444. The rationale for the use of a confinement to CSR remained one of urgency. The justification of urgency was further undermined by the fact that CSR intended to supply class 20E locomotives, which required additional modifications to enable them to interoperate with the existing class 19E locomotives that had been supplied by MARS earlier. Furthermore, CSR had no established history with the provision of similar locomotives in South Africa. Subsequent to the approval of the confinement, Transnet's technical design team had to engage with CSR to create prototypes which were named the "21E series". The suggestion by Mr Singh that CSR locomotives were acceptable, implying that they did not need adaptation is contradicted by the fact that the price of the CSR locomotives was increased by R347 million to alter the specifications of the locomotives to ensure they were fit for purpose.

445. The CSR memorandum suggested that Mitsui had not performed well during the tenders for the 95 and the 1,064 locomotive procurement and that awarding the 100 to MARS would create a risk to Transnet. However, three months earlier the original memorandum recorded that the Mitsui locomotives were operating optimally and had proven to be both efficient and reliable. The supposed concern about reputational risks on account of stories in the media is also not credible. If there were genuine concerns about reputational risks in using a confinement to Mitsui, it was inconsistent with that concern to resolve it by confining to CSR. If the process of confinement was the problem Transnet should have used an open tender process.

446. Management misled the BADC and the Board on 24 January 2014 with spurious motivations and false or misleading statements. The conduct of all involved is at least a breach of fiduciary duties - Mr Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Gama and Mr Jiyane. Their conduct was part of an evident pattern to favour CSR.

Irregularities and the detrimental provisions of the LSA

447. The LSA for the 100 locomotives was concluded with CSR on 17 March 2014, the same day as the contracts for the 1,064 locomotives. After negotiations, CSR submitted an "updated price proposal for supply of additional 100 sets of 20E dual voltage electric locomotives for Transnet Freight Rail" dated 14 March 2014. The proposal put forward three options at different prices per locomotive, depending on the place and conditions of manufacture. Transnet eventually accepted option 3. The price per locomotive was R43.8 million.

448. The CSR proposal and the contract did not comply with the urgent delivery schedule required by the RFP. CSR also did not comply with the 70% mandatory and non-negotiable supplier development requirement. The upfront payment of 60% of the purchase price in respect of the 100 locomotives was unusual and not in line with past practice. This resulted in R1.32 billion being paid to CSR by Transnet before a single locomotive was delivered, suggesting again that CSR was unduly favoured by the officials involved. The norm in paying deposits was in the region of 10% with the balance being paid on delivery of the locomotives. By comparison, the upfront payment to Mitsui for the earlier procurement of 110 19E locomotives was 7.8% and the advance payment to CSR for the 95 locomotives was 10%.

The lack of security for the advance payments

449. CSR did not furnish requisite security in respect of the advance payments. However, seven months after signature of the LSA, on 10 October 2014, Mr Jiyane, addressed an email to Mr Singh confirming that there had been payment to CSR without an advanced payment guarantee (APG) and that this exposed Transnet. Mr Jiyane issued the instruction for payment to be made without an APG as payment was overdue. He noted that there was another payment due in five days.

450. There is some uncertainty as to which milestone payments Mr Jiyane was referring in his email. Prior to Mr Jiyane's email of 10 October 2014, Transnet had made three payments in respect of the 100 locomotives. On 28 March 2014, it made payment of the first 30% in the amount of R1 504 800 000

(R1 320 000 000 plus R184 800 000 VAT). On 12 September 2014, it made a payment of R184 800 000 as an advance payment of VAT for the second advance payment of 30%. On 1 October 2014, it paid the second advance payment of R1 320 000 000. Thus, it is safe to assume that Mr Jiyane was principally justifying the payment of the two advance payments and warning that he needed to make unknown future payments. The issue seemingly arose when Mr Jiyane instructed the finance team to make the second advance payments in September and October 2014. While there was no APG for that payment, it is not clear whether there was an APG in respect of the first advance payment. On the assumption that there was not, it means that Mr Jiyane knowingly exposed Transnet to a potential loss of R3 billion.

451. Most certainly the payment of the second milestone to CSR on 1 October 2014, prior to the issuance of the APG, was a breach of the LSA. It exposed Transnet to unwarranted risk, without any security for the advanced payment. Mr Jiyane acknowledged that he had wrongfully exposed Transnet to risk. Mr Singh and others in the finance department who may have authorised the payments also acted in breach of their fiduciary duties and the PFMA.

The price increase

452. Two months after the signature of the LSA, Mr. Molefe in a memorandum dated 23 May 2014 requested the Board to approve a significant increase in the price of the procurement. On 24 January 2014 the Board had approved the procurement of the 100 locomotives from CSR at an ETC of R3.871 billion. On 17 March 2014, Transnet signed the LSA with CSR for the supply of the 100 locomotives at a price of R4.840 billion (R48.4 million per locomotive). When asked during his testimony whether it would not have been more appropriate to have sought the approval of the Board for the approximately R1 billion (R969 million) increase before signing the LSA, Mr Singh argued that the Board on 24 January 2014 had delegated the power to Mr Molefe as GCEO to negotiate and conclude the procurement.

453. On 15 April 2014, Mr Callard was asked by Mr Laher to assist in updating a memorandum written by Mr Molefe, justifying the increase and to update the NPV. In Mr Callard's view, the increase of R969 million was excessive and difficult to justify.

454. CSR pushed for a price of R48 million per locomotive. Mr Laher was not party to the ultimate acceptance of the price but was told by Mr Singh that Mr Molefe had agreed to pay R44 million per locomotive. Mr Laher claims that he told Mr Singh that the Mitsui quote was cheaper. The Fundudzi Report maintains that Transnet would have saved R1.2 billion if it had procured the 100 locomotives from MARS.

455. In the memorandum of 23 May 2014, Mr Molefe addressed each item of price increase and provided elucidation of the reasons for the adjustment. Mr Allistair Chabi, the actuary employed by MNS, analysed those reasons, interrogated the figures, and concluded that an increase in the amount of R969.28 million was unjustifiable as some of the cost items were either incorrect or inflated. Mr Molefe during his evidence dismissed Mr Chabi's conclusions as "rubbish". He essentially maintained that risk specialists would differ in making valuations as estimation was an art not a science.

The transgressions

456. In June 2014, it became apparent that the procurement of the 95 locomotives from CSR had been delayed and this had a knock-on negative effect on the delivery of the 100 class 21E's by CSR. The rationale of the confinement of the 100 locomotives to CSR to protect the MDS volumes by the accelerated acquisition of the 100 locomotives was thus thwarted. Mr Gama accordingly addressed a memorandum to Mr Molefe recommending that approval be granted to negotiate delivery with CSR on the premise of 100% imported content for the 100 class 21E locomotives, in other words that the locomotives be fully assembled in China. This proposal does not appear to have been approved. It is not clear when exactly the class 21E locomotives were in fact delivered, but it can be accepted that the delays negated the entire raison d'etre of the project.

Table 1: as per Mr. Brian Molefe's memorandum of 23 May 2014

Base price per locomotive (excluding hedging and escalations)	R34.34 million
Item A: Impact of exchange rate to contract date (backward looking)	R3.69 million
Item B: Impact of inflation to contract date (backward looking)	R1.26 million
Item C: Additional cost for modification of the locomotives	R3.47 million
Item D: Cost for fix escalations (forward looking)	R2.63 million
Item E: Foreign exchange hedging (forward looking)	R1.08 million
Item F: Discount negotiated	- R2.47 million
Final contracted price per locomotive	R44 million
Item G: 10% contingencies (capital spares, variations and options)	R4.4 million
Proposed ETC per locomotive	R48,4 million
Proposed ETC for 100 locomotives	R4,840 billion
Business case	R3,870 billion
Increase:	R969.28 million

457. CSR paid a kickback of R925 million on this contract. The payment schedule attached to an email dated 22 August 2015 discovered in the Gupta-leaks show that JJT was to be paid 21% of the total contract value for the 100 locomotives, being R925 million, almost equivalent to the increase in the ETC. In August 2016, CRRC (CSR merged with CNR to become CRRC) signed an addendum varying the terms of the BDSA of 2 January 2015 between CSR and Regiments Asia (who had replaced JJT) in relation to the 100 electric locomotives. The payment schedule confirmed that in August 2015 an amount of $107 203 912 had been paid to JJT, part of which related to the 100 locomotives kickback. JJT was not to retain the full amount of the R925 million but only 15%, while at least part of the remaining 85% was to be paid to companies controlled by the Gupta enterprise.

THE PROCUREMENT OF THE 1,064 LOCOMOTIVES

458. During April 2011, the Board approved TFR's Locomotive and Modernisation Fleet Plan (the fleet plan) for the acquisition of 1,202 locomotives for GFB. This led to the acquisition of the 138 locomotives (95 electric and 43 diesel). The balance of the GFB fleet plan was the 1,064 locomotives, made up of 599 electric locomotives and 465 diesel locomotives.

459. The acquisition cost of the 1,064 locomotives was stated in the business case to be R38.6 billion. Two thirds of the cost would be financed using cash generated by operations and about R13 billion needed to be raised externally. Delivery of the locomotives was scheduled to take place over seven years.

460. On 9 March 2012, the Transnet Freight Rail Investment Committee (TFRIC) supported the acquisition subject to: (i) rephrasing the key assumptions; (ii) the business case being re-worded; (iii) the financial model to be included in the business case; and (iv) the retention percentage to be reviewed.

461. As the Board's delegated authority was limited to R4 billion, it was necessary to obtain approval from the Minister of Public Enterprises in terms of Section 54 of the PFMA. The Chairman of the Board addressed a letter to the Minister on 2 May 2013 and the Minister granted the approval by letter dated 3 August 2013 subject to certain conditions related to the role of TE, the road to rail migration strategy and the localisation strategy for certain strategic components.

462. Between May 2012 and April 2013, the business case was dealt with by Mr Singh (GCFO) and Mr Mahomedy (GM: Capital Assurance and Integration). Mr Callard and Mr Pillay together with others from TFR continued to support and assist McKinsey and Transnet Group with technical input. Mr Singh performed the key oversight role and Mr Gama as CEO of TFR provided human resources from TFR.

463. The procurement process was initiated by the issuing of RFPs, which in this case, unusually, took place (partly) prior to the Board's approval of the business case. It was followed by the receipt of bids, the tender evaluation stage, the BAFO (best and final offer) stage, the post tender negotiations (PTN) and ultimately the conclusion of Locomotive Supply Agreements (LSAs). The evaluation process and BAFO stage endured from May 2013 to January 2014. On 24 January 2014, the BADC and the Board split the procurement into four contracts and appointed four OEMs as preferred bidders. The PTN took place in February 2014 and the LSAs were concluded on 17 March 2014.

The Request for Proposals

464. Prior to obtaining approval Transnet issued two RFPs for the locomotives: one for 599 electric locomotives and one for 465 diesel locomotives. The first part of the RFP for the electric locomotives was issued on 23 July 2012 with a closing date of 16 October 2012; the RFP for the diesel locomotives was issued on the same day with a closing date of 26 February 2013. The closing dates were later extended to 30 April 2013. The RFPs were issued in two separate parts to enable Transnet to seek an exemption from certain requirements of National Treasury. From 7 December 2011 to 7 December 2012, NT exempted PFMA Schedule 2 entities (including Transnet) from complying with PPFA Regulations 5 and 6 that made it mandatory for Organs of State to evaluate bids in accordance with the preferential point system.

465. Transnet wanted to use a different preferential point system in the 1,064 locomotive procurement, which it believed would better advance its transformation objectives. In July 2012, a meeting was held at which National Treasury confirmed that Transnet was obliged to apply the 90/10 evaluation criterion. Transnet accordingly decided to split the RFPs into separate documents (Part 1 and Part 2) to afford Transnet an opportunity to obtain an exemption from the Minister of Finance. Only Part 1 of the RFPs was issued on 23 July 2012. Part 1 dealt with general, technical, and administrative information. Part 2 was issued in December 2012 without an exemption having been obtained from the Minister of Finance. Part 2 dealt with the evaluation criteria, evaluation methodology, weightings, etc. It provided for a six-stage evaluation process and a points preference system (in stage 6) with criteria of price/supplier development/B-BBEE on a 60/20/20 basis. Given the Instruction Note, and the lack of any exemption by the Minister of Finance, Transnet did not have the authority to adopt these evaluation criteria in stage 6. The evaluation criteria and the application of them therefore were not in accordance with the requirements of legality.

466. Transnet's motive in not complying with the National Treasury Instruction Note is not clear from the evidence but it acted on a directive given to it by the Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Gigaba, in a letter dated 7 December 2012 addressed to the Chairperson of Transnet in response to the concerns Transnet had raised. In the letter he said that "Transnet should not feel constrained by Section 5.1.2 of the Instruction Note and should rather establish an evaluation framework that provides reasonable incentives to suppliers to support our industrialisation and transformation objectives".

467. Part 2 of the RFP was issued four days later on 7 December 2012. Transnet's preferred criteria in stage 6 of the evaluation process would have advanced affirmative action, perhaps at the expense of cost efficiency/price. However, whatever the motivation, neither the Minister nor Transnet had the legal authority to deviate from the provisions of the Instruction Note and Regulation 5 and 6 of the PPFA Regulations. Their conduct gave rise to a possible ground of review by an unsuccessful bidder and possibly amounted to a breach of fiduciary duty and contravention of Section 57 of the PFMA.

The misrepresentation of the ETC to the Board

468. The business case for the procurement was approved by the Board on 25 April 2013, some months after the original closing dates for the receipt of the tenders. The Board approved the procurement at an ETC of R38.6 billion "excluding the potential effects from forex hedging, forex escalation and other price escalations". The exclusion of the potential effects of forex hedging and escalations from the ETC was a matter of controversy. The issue is whether there was a misrepresentation to the Board with the aim of inflating the cost of the acquisition at a later stage after the Board approved an ETC of R38.6 billion. The ultimate cost of the procurement was R54.5 billion.

469. The original version of the business case (dated 7 March 2012) presented to the TFRIC on 9 March 2012 proposed in paragraph 10 that the TFRIC should resolve to approve the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives at an ETC of R38.146 billion. Not much else happened in relation to the development of the business case until March 2013 when McKinsey was appointed the transaction advisor for the procurement. The role of McKinsey was to develop the business case. The relationship between the TFR team and McKinsey was at times strained and there was concern about McKinsey's grasp of the issues.

470. A version of the business case for submission to the Board was agreed on 18 April 2013. That version is dated 25 April 2013. It was submitted to the Board as an annexure to a memorandum authored by Mr Singh and Mr Molefe dated 18 April 2013.

471. At its meeting of 25 April 2013, the Board approved the business case at an estimated cost of R38.6 billion "excluding the potential effects from forex hedging, forex escalation and other price escalations". Mr Callard and others testified that the ETC figure of R38.6 billion presented to the Board had included provision for escalations, forex and hedging. He maintained that the ETC as originally calculated was intended only to exclude "borrowing costs" and this was inappropriately changed at a meeting of the LSC on 18 April 2013 before the business case served before the Board. Correspondence between Mr Saloojee of McKinsey and other role players during April 2013, as well as other documentation prepared while McKinsey was finalising its input on the financial model for the business case, indicates that the ETC originally made provision for and included escalations and forex. Tables and slide presentations setting out calculations show that the locomotive prices were based on projected US inflation and converted back to ZAR based on the forward rate obtained from the Transnet Treasury.

472. On 29 April 2013 (after both the BADC and the Board had approved the acquisition) Mr Naresh Budai of Transnet circulated a revised copy of the business case dated 29 April 2013, which had been updated as per input from the BADC. The final paragraph of Paragraph A of this document differs from that in the version of the business case dated 25 April 2013. The ETC in that version was stated to exclude only borrowing costs and not "the potential effects from forex hedging, forex escalations and other price escalations". It differed from the version dated 25 April 2013 in that it only excluded borrowing costs (interest on borrowed capital) from the ETC of R38.6 billion. However, on 30 April 2013, Mr Budhai circulated the final version of the business case dated 25 April 2013 (and not 29 April 2013), which was materially different in that it excluded not only borrowing costs but "the potential effects from forex hedging, forex escalations and other price escalations".

473. The meta-data for the file containing the final version reflects that it was modified on the computer of Mr. Yusuf Mahomed, who reported to Mr Singh. Mr Mahomed admitted that he amended the business case on 30 April 2013 by deleting the words "borrowing costs" and inserting the words "the potential effects from forex hedging, forex escalation and other price escalations". He explained that the change was on the instruction of Mr Singh to bring the document into line with Board and other committee resolutions during April 2013.

474. If it is accepted that the original business case ETC of R38.6 billion included some escalations, forex, and hedging costs – in the amount of R4.481 billion or R5.892 billion, the presentation to the Board that the ETC excluded such costs entirely was a misrepresentation and inappropriate because it caused the Board to take a decision without the benefit of a proper estimate before it.

475. At its meeting on 28 May 2014, the Board accepted the recommendation to increase the ETC from R38.6 billion to R54.5 billion and took note that the main reasons for the increase in ETC was "due to the exclusion" of the identified costs from it. That statement is false. The resolution did not mention or take account of the fact that the ETC had made provision for forex and escalations in the amount of R5.892 billion. Nor did it state that the provision for these costs in the ETC had proved insufficient and was understated.

476. On 31 March 2014, two weeks after the signature of the LSAs, Ms N Huma from the DPE addressed an email to Mr Singh noting that the DPE had approved an ETC of R 38.6 billion as per the section 54 PFMA application, querying why there was such a huge difference between the approved ETC and the actual transaction value and asking if Transnet would make a submission to explain the difference to the Minster. Mr Singh responded to the email on the same day and indicated that "the approval was for R38.6 billion but excluded the impacts of foreign exchange and escalations", which "... had a significant impact on the total ETC..." This email again misrepresented the true situation. Mr Singh did not submit a report seeking the approval from the Minister for the increase in price.

477. The evidence as a whole therefore establishes that there was a misrepresentation to the Board and the Minister of Public Enterprises concerning the elements making up the ETC. Consequently, the Board was not apprised of the true ETC before going to market. The false assumption that the ETC excluded all escalation, forex, and hedging costs, when it in fact made provision to the tune of R5.892 billion, probably influenced the negotiation of the final price. This must be so because instead of working from a base line ETC of R38.6 billion including some of these costs (or more accurately an ETC of R32.708 excluding them), Transnet proceeded on the assumption that all such costs (established later to be R14.9 billion) could legitimately be added to the final price. The approval by the Board on 28 May 2014 for an increase of the price (including the provision of R14.9 billion for forex and escalations) was granted on the mistaken premise that no provision for those costs had been included in the ETC. This false accounting may have facilitated the ability of CSR and CNR to pay the 21% kickbacks to the Gupta enterprise on the 1,064 locomotive contracts.

The bids

478. At the closing of the bids, on 30 April 2013, seven bidders submitted bids for the procurement of the 599 electric locomotives and four bidders submitted bids for the 465 diesel locomotives. The evaluation process endured until 15 January 2014. Two bidders for the electric locomotives went through to the best and final offer stage of the procurement process, namely Bombardier Transportation SA (Pty) Ltd and CSR E-Loco Rail Consortium Supply (CSR). All four bidders for the diesel locomotives went through to the BAFO stage, namely: CNR Consortium (CNR); CSR Loliwe Consortium (CSR Loliwe); EMD Africa (Pty) Ltd (EMD) and GE South Africa Technologies (Pty) Ltd (GE). After the BAFO stage, CNR and GE were recommended to proceed to the post tender negotiations in respect of the diesel locomotives, and both Bombardier and CSR went through in respect of the electric locomotives.

479. Much of the evidence before the Commission suggests that CSR and CNR were unduly favoured at various stages of the procurement process. In March-May 2013, prior to the submission and evaluation of the bids, Transnet engaged in direct negotiations with CSR and the China Development Bank (CDB) with a view to concluding a tripartite cooperation agreement. The original draft of the agreement explicitly provided for cooperation on the procurement and refurbishment of electrical and diesel locomotives. The cooperation agreement ultimately signed was between the CDB and Transnet. Now more conscious of the difficulty posed by a prior agreement favouring a bidder, the agreement provided merely for Transnet and the CDB to identify opportunities for CDB to participate in funding the development and upgrade of infrastructure in line with Transnet's MDS.

480. After the evaluation process, the BADC, Chaired by Mr Sharma, on 24 January 2014, recommended to the Board that Bombardier, CSR, CNR and GE be appointed as the OEMs to manufacture the 1,064 locomotives and that the award of the locomotives be split as follows: Bombardier 240 electric locomotives; CSR 359 electric locomotives; CNR 232 diesel locomotives; and GE 233 diesels locomotives. The Board accepted the recommendation of the BADC at its meeting of 24 January 2014 at an ETC of R33.4 billion (excluding hedging, escalations, and TE scope). The matter of TE scope is discussed below.

481. Mr Laher identified four risks that ultimately impacted on the price evaluation: (i) batch pricing; (ii) the decision to normalise the price by excluding the cost of using TE as the main subcontractor; (iii) the delivery schedules; and (iv) inconsistencies in the application of the TCO model.

482. In early January 2014, Transnet addressed letters to bidders 1 and 2 (Bombardier and CSR) for the electric locomotives and all four bidders (CNR, CSR Loliwe, EMD and GE) for the diesel locomotives requesting them to provide a best and final offer. All the bidders submitted BAFO's on 10 January 2014.

483. Mr Callard dealt at some length with the accounting treatment and implications of the bidders using TE as a subcontractor. The accounting for TE as a subcontractor led to a flawed evaluation process on the issue of price.

484. In his letter dated 3 August 2013, approving the acquisition of the 1,064 locomotives, Minister Gigaba emphasised that he saw TE as playing a critical role in developing strategic and industrial capabilities relevant to the rail supply chain and suggested that the current locomotive procurement programme should be used to ensure that a world class enterprise and rail cluster is built. However, neither the PFMA approval nor the RFP's required the evaluation process to incorporate the use of TE as a sub-contractor.

485. On 10 December 2013, the CFET-Finance issued two reports detailing its findings from the stage 6 evaluation for the 599 electric locomotive and the 465 diesel locomotive tenders respectively. Both reports deal with the use of TE and proceed on the assumption that the RFP dictated that the participation of TE in the procurement process would be prescribed. The CFET-Finance determined in relation to the electric locomotives that: (i) Bombardier's price per locomotive would decrease by a price of R1 905 514; (ii) CSR's price per locomotive would decrease by R3 480 000; and (iii) bidder 5 indicated that there would be no impact on its bid price per locomotive. The ultimate implication of this adjustment was the reduction of Bombardier's total price per locomotive from R34 738 937 to R32 833 423 and the reduction of CSR's price from R38 196 188 to R34 716 188.

486. In effect this resulted in Bombardier moving from second best price per locomotive to best price. CSR moved from fourth best price to third within a close margin to the first and second, whereas before the adjustment, its price was much less competitive than the other three bidders. When it initially made allowance for the TE adjustment, CSR maintained that there would be a reduction of R3 480 000 per locomotive, but a subsequent submission indicated it to be R5 490 000, the difference of R2 010 000 per locomotive was later explained to be a discount. The CFET-Finance proceeded on the basis of excluding this potential discount and reduced the price by R3 480 000 per locomotive. This discount was inappropriately factored back in at the BAFO stage. The contract was ultimately awarded to Bombardier and CSR.

487. The outcomes in relation to the diesel locomotives were: (i) CSR's price was reduced by R1 530 190 per locomotive; (ii) EMD's price was reduced by R1 649 000 per locomotive; and (iii) GE's price was reduced by R1 046 060 per locomotive. This resulted in: (i) CSR's overall price per locomotive reducing from R34 785 009 to R33 254 878; (ii) EMD's price reducing from R44 401 272 to R42 761 272; and (iii) GE's price reducing from R28 539 541 to R27 493 481. The ranking of the bids for the diesel locomotives in respect of price did not change as a result of the TE adjustment.

488. More importantly, the TE adjustment changed the rankings of the bidders in the procurement of the electric locomotives. In the case of the diesel locomotives, the application of the two methodologies inclusive of TE and exclusive of TE was inconsequential as it had the same outcome in respect of the ranking of the bidders on the basis of price. However, as mentioned, in the bid for the electric locomotives, it changed the ranking of Bombardier from second to first, and CSR from fourth to third. In the end, given that the award was split between Bombardier and CSR, it probably made no difference to the appointment of Bombardier. The change of CSR's price significantly altered its competitive position. Without the TE adjustment it would have been difficult to justify CSR proceeding to the BAFO stage. In the BAFO stage CSR increased its price to add back the TE deduction.

489. Although Bombardier and CSR were evaluated on the price per locomotive without using TE as the sub-contractor, Transnet in the end paid the amount using TE. The quoted price per locomotive for Bombardier including TE was R34 738 937. The difference between its quoted price and BAFO price per locomotive was R1 905 514 (R34 738 937 minus R32 833 423). Bombardier was awarded 240 locomotives. Hence its total price was understated by R457 323 360. Likewise, the difference between CSR's quoted price and the TE adjusted price was R3 480 000 per locomotive (R38 196,188 minus R34 716 188). It was awarded 359 locomotives. Its total price was thus understated by R1 249 320 000. In the result, the total BAFO price for the electric locomotives to be supplied by Bombardier and CSR was understated by approximately R1.707 billion. This amount later was added back to the final price which entailed the increase of the ETC from R38.6 billion to R54.5 billion. The true prices were accordingly significantly understated by the bidders.

490. CSR clearly benefited from the TE adjustment changing its ranking on price in relation to the procurement of the electric locomotives, and CNR was favoured not by the TE adjustment, but rather by the inappropriate reduction of its BAFO price by R12 million per locomotive. CNR's unrealistic BAFO price likely led to its bid being inappropriately favoured.

The splitting of the awards

491. On 17 January 2014, the GCEO, Mr Molefe, addressed two memoranda to the Board of Transnet setting out results of the evaluation of the two tenders and proposing the splitting of the two procurements between the two OEMs in each tender.

492. In relation to the 599 electric locomotives, Bombardier received a total score of 65.96 and CSR 61.33. The memoranda explained that besides these two bidders scoring the highest points, their proposals offered local content and supplier development commitments of a high order and a delivery schedule close to Transnet requirements. They also scored highest on technical evaluations. The memorandum explained that in order to mitigate the commercial exposure for Transnet, Bombardier and CSR were invited to submit BAFOs. The outcome was that Bombardier offered to increase procurement to small businesses by R50 million and technology transfer through skills development training and support by R10 million. In addition, Bombardier offered a R450 000 reduction in price per locomotive based on a revised foreign currency content percentage. CSR offered a discount of R2.25 million per locomotive, including revised foreign content, thus offering the best price.

493. The memorandum then presented a motivation for the split of the award. This is relevant to the issue of batch pricing. Mr Molefe explained to the Board that the original MDS volumes as promised in the corporate plan were significantly at risk, due to the lack of tractive effort at TFR caused by the delay in the award of the tender. The use of more than one supplier would reduce delivery risk and enhance ability to meet MDS volume targets. Mr Brian Molefe thus recommended that two suppliers be used to manufacture the required locomotives with an allocation of 60% of the procurement to CSR and 40% to Bombardier. He justified the split favouring CSR on the basis of its track record in relation to the 95 locomotives. The memorandum concerning the 465 diesel locomotives made a similar recommendation: a split of the award between CNR and GE on a 50/50 basis.

494. On 24 January 2014, the Board approved the recommendation and split the awards along the lines suggested. The Board passed two resolutions. The resolution in relation to the 599 approved the tender evaluation process, the acquisition of 599 electric locomotives at an ETC of R19.8 billion (excluding hedging costs, escalations and scope of TE's work) and the allocation on a 60/40 basis. The resolution in relation to the diesel locomotives approved the evaluation process, the acquisition of 465 diesel locomotives at an ETC of R13.6 billion (excluding hedging costs, escalations and scope of TE's work), and the allocation on a 50/50 split to CNR and GE. The ETC at that stage was thus R33.4 billion (excluding hedging, escalations and TE scope).

495. Both resolutions approved the recommendation of the bidders "as result of the evaluation process for the negotiations and award of business, subject (to) a further endorsement by the BADC post the negotiation process" and delegated authority to the GCEO to sign, approve and conclude all necessary documents to give effect to the resolutions.

The post tender negotiations (PTN)

496. After the Board's approval on 24 January 2014, Transnet and the successful bidders commenced the PTN process for the conclusion of the contracts. The PTN took place during February-March 2014 and endured for about six weeks. The PTN process was led by Mr Singh and Mr Eric Wood of Regiments, both associates of the Gupta racketeering enterprise and thus unlikely to act in the best interests of Transnet. Regiments essentially assumed the role that normally was reserved to Transnet's Treasury.

497. Ms Makgatho from Treasury assumed Mr Singh excluded her as part of his strategy to surround himself with people who would not be comfortable with disagreeing or have power to disagree with him. Ms Makgatho challenged Mr Singh for using external resources when it was not necessary because the Transnet Treasury team had all the necessary experience and understood Transnet processes and procedures. After the conclusion of the PTN, Ms Makgatho did not sign off on the proposed contracts with the OEMs and did not attend the signing ceremony.

The irregular adjustment for batch-pricing during the PTN

498. The issue of batch-pricing arose during the PTN in March 2014 as a consequence of the Board's decision to split the awards between two bidders in both tenders. The provision made for batch-pricing by the Transnet negotiation team during the PTN led to an increase of R2.7 billion in the ultimate price. Committing Transnet to batch-pricing was contrary to the provisions of the RFP, compromised the fairness of the procurement process and constituted an irregularity. Mr Singh, Mr Gama and Mr Laher justified the additional cost of R2.7 billion on the grounds that the reduction in the quantities of the locomotives awarded to each bidder necessitated the bidders to increase their prices.

499. The Board's approval of the splitting of the award did not amount to authorisation to commit Transnet to batch-pricing, especially when it was specifically brought to its attention that the RFP in effect prohibited Transnet from paying a price premium for changing the locomotive quantities procured from any one bidder. Despite that, the negotiations team ultimately agreed to batch-pricing.

500. Mr Laher notably misstated what the Board had decided. The Board did not decide to provide for batch-pricing. It merely split the awards between different suppliers. Mr Laher clearly appreciated the risks of batch-pricing and the fact that it was unacceptable for Transnet. He nonetheless believed it was correct to have agreed to unnecessary batch pricing of R2.7 billion.

501. Mr Molefe although not a member of the negotiation team, was a member of the LSC to which the negotiation team and Mr Singh reported. During his evidence before the Commission, he accepted that batch pricing ought not to have been included in the price. He conceded that he bore some responsibility but denied he acted deliberately to prejudice Transnet.

The revision of the delivery schedule

502. Another issue that arose during the PTN was a change to the rate of delivery of the locomotives. The accelerated delivery was used to justify the cost of R2.7 billion for batch-pricing. In his memorandum of 23 May 2014 to the Board, Mr Molefe argued that the R2.7 billion was offset by a shorter delivery period resulting in lower escalation.

503. In February 2014, Mr Singh requested TFR to respond to a proposal to reduce the delivery schedule from seven years to three or four years in the hope that accelerating the locomotives would save forex costs in the future. Mr Callard, Mr Pillay and Mr Roper produced a report dated 11 February 2014. The report noted inter alia that: (i) the fast parking of the old locomotives posed technical challenges; (ii) the market supported the additional tonnage; (iii) the wagon plan could be adjusted; (iv) certain projects had to be fast tracked to achieve the required tonnages; (v) the start-up of TE to a feasible standard of manufacture presented challenges; and (vi) there were insufficient staff to speed up commissioning. The report was sent to Mr Gama on 12 February 2014. Mr Gama suggested certain amendments. Mr Callard amended the report and sent it to Mr Singh and Mr Mahomedy cautioned that TFR could not realistically absorb more than 300 locomotives per year.

504. The key risk in accelerating the rate of delivery over a shorter period was that it required additional cash flow to effect payment for the locomotives at a time when there were constraints on the budget. Moving money to procuring the locomotives would take capital away from the projects which were required to support acquisition of the locomotives. There was also considerable doubt about the preparedness of TE to handle the accelerated delivery.

505. The LSAs concluded on 17 March 2014 included the accelerated delivery schedule. A workshop was held on 27 May 2014 at which various tasks were allocated to key staff members to facilitate the accelerated delivery schedule. As it turned out, the delivery of the locomotives was delayed. By December 2018, only 497 of the 1,064 locomotives had been delivered.

506. The GCIA team opposed the Regiments proposal as Transnet did not need to incur further costs because at that stage all the OEMs were experiencing production challenges or had not commenced production at the time, meaning they could not meet the accelerated delivery schedule in any event. There was absolutely no need to incur this additional cost. Moreover, the deferral of locomotives delivery would have triggered deferral penalties. The proposal, which would have advanced the interests of Regiments and the Gupta enterprise, was not implemented.

The excessive advance payments

507. Mr Mahomedy testified that it came to his attention during the PTN that the negotiation team was negotiating a higher-than-normal advance payment to the bidders. Transnet had a historical practice of paying a deposit of 10%. Advance payments are made to cover costs that the OEM will incur before the first locomotive is delivered. The norm is to pay 10 to 15%. An amount more than this would invariably impact the cash interest cover - the financial ratio that is of particular interest to financial institutions and credit rating agencies. Payment of too large an advance payment could affect Transnet's credit rating and its ability to borrow at favourable rates. The advance payments paid in relation to the 599 electric locomotives (especially to CSR) were beyond the norm.

508. Mr Mahomedy met with Mr Singh to register his discomfort about upfront payments beyond the historical norm. Mr Singh said he would investigate it. Despite these concerns, the PTN negotiation team agreed to pay CSR a deposit of 10% on the date of signing and a further 20% within six months – on design review in September 2014. This meant that Transnet was obliged to pay CSR R5.4 billion upfront before any locomotive was manufactured or delivered. Bombardier similarly received 9% upfront, 9% on design review, and a further 9% after six months. CSR had in fact initially proposed under 2% upfront payment in its bid. Thus, CSR's advance payment increased dramatically during the PTN. Bombardier had originally put forward an advanced payment of 25%. Its advance payment increased by 2% to 27%, Likewise, CNR in the procurement of the 465 diesel locomotives increased its deposit from 1.08% to 15% (10% upfront and 5% on design review). No adequate explanation was ever tendered for these excessive payments.

509. The consequence of the negotiations team (led by the Gupta associates Mr Singh and Mr Wood) agreeing to excessive advance payments on all the locomotive procurements was that on contract initiation on 17 March 2014, Transnet had to pay upfront advance payments of R7.37 billion before 1 April 2014 and had to increase its borrowings in the order of R6 billion in 2014–2015. The agreement to pay these excessive amounts raises questions about whether the final negotiations were conducted in Transnet's interests and whether those responsible acted corruptly.

Non-compliance with local content requirements

510. The business case set out a strong motivation for the development of local manufacturing skills and job creation. It is questionable whether Bombardier and CSR should have been awarded the electric locomotive tender, and CNR the diesel locomotive tender, on account of their non-compliance with local production and content requirements.

511. The matter of the local/foreign content is of relevance also to the increase of the price of the procurements in that the computation for forward cost escalation failed properly to take account of the reduced local content and lower foreign inflation assumptions. That failure led Mr Molefe to overstate forward escalation costs significantly, which unjustifiably added R3.2 billion to the cost of the transaction.

512. During the PTN, the negotiation team used a favourable exchange rate that reflected changes resulting from the deterioration in the ZAR during the period between the advertisement of the bid and the conclusion of the PTN. This revision did not alter the overall result. The local content of the three bidders in fact decreased further as follows: Bombardier (45.6%); CSR (49.6%); and CNR (37.6%).

513. Hence, at the close of the PTNs, the bidders ought to have been disqualified or at least advised that they no longer met the prescribed minimum threshold. Notwithstanding this non-compliance, CNR, Bombardier and CSR were awarded the contracts.

The lack of Ministerial approval for the increase of the ETC

514. Before approving the increase of R15.9 billion, neither the Board nor the GCEO sought approval from the Minister of Public Enterprises. Paragraph 17 of the memorandum of 23 May 2014 noted that the acquisition had been approved by the Minister of Public Enterprises on 3 August 2013 and added that "although the approval from the Minister was not subject to a final cost of R38.6 billion, for good governance and for information purposes a letter will be sent to the DPE advising of the final ETC".

515. It is common cause that the Minister approved the acquisition at an ETC of R38.6 billion on 3 August 2013 but was never requested to approve the increase of R15.9 billion, nor was the increase reported to the Minister. Mr Molefe in effect advised the Board that there was no need for Ministerial approval.

516. Mr Gama claimed to be unaware of the increase until after the LSAs were signed because he was not part of the negotiations. Mr Singh, the author of paragraph 17 of the memorandum of 23 May 2014, dealt with this question in an affidavit filed with the Commission on 10 March 2021. He said that he stood by the contents of paragraph 17 of the memorandum as it was based on the DOA framework and the significance and materiality framework applicable at the time. Paragraph 5.1.3 of the DOA framework merely provided that an increase in the ETC of a project already approved by the Shareholder Minister had to be reported to the Shareholder Minister if the increase is in excess of 15%. Since the procurement of the 1,064 locomotives was approved by the then Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Gigaba, on 3 August 2013, Mr Singh argued, Transnet only needed to report the increase in the ETC to the Minister and did not need approval for contracting at a higher price.

517. If Mr Singh's argument were accepted it would lead to the absurdity or anomaly that Transnet, for example, could obtain approval for a R10 billion transaction, then unilaterally enter into a contract for R20 billion for which it had no Ministerial approval and could regularise the ultimate transaction by the simple expedient of reporting it to the Minister who would be without power to veto the transaction. Despite Mr Singh undertaking on 31 March 2014 to provide a full report to the Minister, the ETC increase of R15.9 billion was neither reported to nor approved by the Minister, leaving the legality of the LSAs open to question.

The justification for the increase in the ETC

518. Regiments took over the role of financial adviser on the 1,064 procurements in February 2014, shortly before the LSAs were signed at the increased price. They also played a role in advising on and vetting the cost of hedging the exposure to currency volatility. The memorandum indicated that escalations of input cost had been verified by Transnet using publicly available data and by Regiments "using their intellectual property methodology techniques."

519. Table 2 of the memorandum of 23 May 2014 sets out the line items making up the ultimate price of R54.5 billion. It commences with an aggregate amount of the BAFO price in respect of the entire 1,064 acquisition and adds amounts for backward looking escalations and forex adjustments, batch-pricing adjustments, accounting for TE, forward looking escalations, hedging costs, and contingencies.

520. Table 2 was subjected to careful and thorough scrutiny before the Commission by Mr Chabi. He concluded that the increase from R38.6 billion to R54.5 billion was not totally justifiable. Mr Callard presented additional evidence about the alleged manipulation of the ETC which was aimed at uncovering anomalies indicating the possibility that the final BAFO prices were contrived to result in inflation or deflation of the price per locomotive to favour preferred bidders.

521. Mr Callard's evidence needs to be approached with circumspection. The disciplinary committee of SAICA made adverse findings about his reliability as an expert witness in financial and accounting matters and held that much of his evidence was conjecture, speculation and opinions on matters in which he lacked expertise. It is not possible to pronounce on the correctness or fairness of that finding. It nonetheless injects a note of caution. In the face of the confusing array of calculations, one relies on the BAFO figure of R29 355 532 740 in Table 2 as used by Mr Chabi.

The Tequesta BDSA kickbacks

522. The Shadow World Investigation report reveals that CSR agreed to pay kickbacks of 21% of the value of the 359 electric locomotives (awarded to it as part of the 1,064 locomotive procurement) to two Gupta linked companies, JJT and Tequesta Group Ltd, equalling approximately R3.806 billion. As with the kickbacks on the other contracts with CSR, approximately 85% of that was probably paid to the Gupta enterprise.

523. On 18 May 2015, Mr Essa acting on behalf of one of his companies, Tequesta company incorporated under the laws of Hong Kong, concluded a contract in Shenzen, China, with CSR Hong Kong Co Ltd. The contract is described on its cover page as a BDSA.

524. There are three important observations that can be made about the BDSA: (i) it confirms the exact number of locomotives that were awarded to CSR, 14 months prior to its signature; (ii) the services rendered pre-date the award of the tender; and (iii) Tequesta was responsible for CSR being awarded the contract. CSR actually bid for the full 599 electric locomotives; yet the project was defined as the 359 locomotives which were awarded to it. If there were genuine pre-award services, these would have related to the bid for 599.

525. There is no evidence of any services provided by either Tequesta or JJT. Mr Sedumedi of MNS reviewed videos of the PTN to see if Tequesta had assisted "the company in negotiating with the client on pricing levels in relation to the project". He observed that it was CSR personnel and not representatives of Tequesta who concluded these negotiations. There was no evidence that Mr Essa was involved in the negotiations either. It is also not apparent what, if anything, Tequesta had done to assist CSR to secure the bid. These facts alone lead to a reasonable inference of corruption.

526. In August 2016 CRRC signed an addendum to existing agreements with Tequesta varying the terms of the BDSA of 18 May 2015. The primary aim of the addendum was to modify the terms under which Tequesta was to be paid, and specifically waived CRRC's right to withhold portions of the payments due to Tequesta. It appears that CRRC had retained 15% of all payments due to Tequesta as surety. The addendum stipulated that this would no longer be the case and that the withheld amounts to date (equal to $15,144,610m) would be paid to Tequesta. This was contingent on Transnet awarding CRRC contracts to provide maintenance services. If this was not met, CRRC would be entitled to recoup the 15% outlay against future payments that were due to be made to Tequesta. The withheld amounts would be released within 90 days of the final payment being made by Transnet to CRRC. The effect of the addendum was to expedite a large payment to the Gupta enterprise through Tequesta.

527. CNR also paid kickbacks to the Gupta enterprise for the award of the 232 diesel locomotive contract. On the 20 May 2014 CNR and Tequesta entered into an exclusive agency agreement. This agreement replaced and superseded an earlier agreement of 8 July 2013 between CNR and CGT related to the same matters. The later agreement is a simple cut-and-paste operation in which CGT was replaced by Tequesta. The total kickback paid in this instance was R2.088 billion.

The maintenance services agreement with CSR

528. The LSA concluded between CSR and Transnet envisaged the parties concluding a maintenance agreement for the locomotives supplied. On 28 July 2016 the Board approved the conclusion of a 12-year maintenance services agreement with CSR for an amount of R6.18 billion. The memorandum supporting the award was not presented to the relevant governance structures for review prior to it serving before the Board. It was presented directly to the Board and subsequently sent to the Minister of Public Enterprises for approval. The minutes of the Board meeting record the attendance inter alia of Ms Mabaso, Mr Gama, Mr Nagdee and Mr Shane. The Board recommended that the Minister of Public Enterprises should approve the business case and award the maintenance services to CSR in terms of the LSA for the 1,064 locomotives. The Board further approved the delegation of authority to the GCEO (Mr Gama) to conclude the contract.

529. On 12 August 2016 Transnet issued CSR with a Letter of Award for the maintenance services of the locomotives. Clause 2.4 of the Letter of Award indicated that Transnet would pay CSR "Start Up Costs" totalling R 618 160 764 (excl. Vat) within 14 days of receipt of a valid and effective "On Demand Guarantee" issued by a financial institution. Pursuant to this clause Transnet paid CSR an advance payment of R704 703 250 (incl. VAT) in October 2016.

530. According to Mr Mahomedy, Transnet terminated the LOA in October 2017, amidst allegations of corruption on the grounds of non-performance. Despite the fact that Transnet had not received any goods or services in terms of this contract, no steps were taken to claim back the advance payment until September 2018 when Transnet notified the Bank of China of its claim under the bond on the grounds that CSR had failed to execute its obligations. Mr Gama maintained that the LOA was only terminated in September 2018 and intimated that Mr Mahomedy was responsible for the delay.

531. In December 2018, more than two years after payment had been made, CSR refunded Transnet R618 160 746. CSR failed to repay the VAT amounting to R86 542 504 as well as the interest due to Transnet in the amount of R136 473 803. On 11 February 2019, Transnet demanded payment of the VAT and interest in the total amount of R223 016 308. It is not clear whether this amount has been paid.

The offences

532. The procurement of the 1,064 locomotives was attended by a wide range of wrongdoing that reflected a pattern aimed at favouring CSR and CNR with the objective of facilitating the kickbacks to the Gupta racketeering enterprise. The wrongdoing comprised, inter alia: (i) the misrepresentation to the Board of the components of the ETC; (ii) the non-compliance with the preferential points system; (iii) the unfair favouring of CSR through the TE adjustment; (iv) the factoring of the R2 010 000 discount back into the price of CSR's locomotives; (v) the understating of CSR's BAFO price; (vi) the marginalising of Transnet's treasury; (vii) the inflation of the price through the inappropriate use of batch pricing; (viii) the manipulation of the delivery schedule; (ix) the payment of excessive advance payments; (x) non-compliance with the local content requirements; (xi) the failure to obtain the approval of the Minister for the increase; (xii) the misrepresentation to the Board of the NPV by using the wrong hurdle rate; (xiii) the inflation of the provision for escalations, forex, batch pricing and contingencies in the price; (xiv) the dubious maintenance services agreement; (xv) the failure to recoup the excessive advance payment timeously and the VAT on it; and (xvi) the BDSA kickbacks.

THE RELOCATION OF CNT AND BT TO DURBAN

533. While negotiations were being conducted for the supply of the 1,064 locomotives, in February 2014, Transnet instructed Price Waterhouse Coopers (PWC) to conduct a review of TE's operational readiness to deliver in respect of the assembly of the locomotives. In terms of the LSAs TE and the OEMs were jointly responsible for setting up the assembly lines for the locomotives.

534. PWC submitted a report on 21 February 2014 reviewing and identifying risks associated with: (i) the locomotive designs; (ii) the production rates; and (iii) where the assembly lines should be located. PWC assessed different TE sites to identify which ones could be used for the assembly of the 1,064 locomotive order.

535. The original intention had been to use the Koedoespoort facility in Gauteng, but the PWC assessment indicated that the site in Bayhead, Durban could also be used.

536. In order to protect the intellectual property and other trade secrets of the OEMs, it would be best to mix the OEMs in each facility. Given that GE and CSR already had production lines at Koedoespoort, it made sense that they remain there to keep the benefit of shorter start-up periods. PWC accordingly recommended that the locomotives awarded to CNR and BT should be assembled in Durban.

537. PWC acknowledged that its recommendation risked an adverse impact on price in that the cost of the locomotives might increase due to the OEMs being required to operate from the Durban site. Locating the two OEMs with the least established local operations in Durban would minimise the cost by not requiring any relocation of existing infrastructure. PWC also recommended that TE develop a negotiation strategy comprising of a cost comparison between Gauteng and Durban to use as a leverage to minimise cost.

538. Discussions took place with CNR and BT about the location of the contractor facility in Durban during the PTN. In a memorandum dated 15 May 2014, Mr Richard Vallihu, the CEO of TE, requested the GCEO to communicate the decision formally to BT and CNR. The rationale for the decision arose essentially from the splitting of the award among the four OEMs and Koedoespoort not having the capacity to accommodate more than two production lines. Although setting up an assembly line in Durban was not envisaged in the business case for the 1,064 locomotives, the decision to do so was defensible. The decision resulted in the definition of "contractor facility" in the relevant LSAs being re-stated to mean "the facility at Koedoespoort, Gauteng or Bay-Head, Durban as notified in writing by the Contractor to the Company". Any costs associated with this decision were provided for in the 10% provision for contingencies in the ETC.

539. The series of transactions and events relating to the Durban assembly line have been referred to in the evidence before the Commission as the "relocation" of the two OEMs to Durban. CNR and BT strictly speaking did not "relocate" from Koedoespoort to Durban as they had never set up an assembly line at Koedoespoort. It was merely agreed during the PTN that the contractor facility for CNR and BT would be Durban. However, the term "relocation" will be used for convenience.

540. There is little evidence regarding BT's negotiation of an increase in price for the relocation to Durban. The negotiations with CNR and the evidence of Mr Gonsalves in particular, however, offer clear insight into what transpired.

541. When Transnet issued tenders for the acquisition of the 1,064 locomotives, Mr Gonsalves formed part of a consortium led by CNR, more precisely its South African counterpart, CRRC SA Rolling Stock (Pty) Limited (CRRC), formerly known as CNR Rolling Stock South Africa (Pty) Limited (CNRRSSA). Mr Gonsalves is a non-executive Director of this company. For the sake of convenience, the company will be referred to throughout as CNRRSSA.

542. The day-to-day operations and business of CNRRSSA are run by Gang Wang (CEO) and Tao Yu (CFO). The directors representing the minority shareholders, being those other than CNR, were all minority non-executive directors of CNRRSSA, and as such not involved in the operations and day do day business, except for attending Board meetings.

543. CNRRSSA submitted its tender to Transnet for the 465 diesel locomotives (part of the 1064) in April 2013. After Transnet decided to split the award of the 465 diesel locomotives on a 50/50 basis and to award the supply of 233 locomotives to BT and 232 locomotives to the CNRRSSA consortium, CNRRSSA entered into a LSA with Transnet for the manufacturing of 232 diesel locomotives on 17 March 2014. As discussed, the LSA stipulated that the "Contractor Facility" for CNRRSSA to manufacture/assemble the locomotives was at any one of two TE locomotive manufacturing facilities, namely in Koedoespoort or Durban. Mr Gonsalves testified that at the time of signing the LSA, CNRRSSA was aware that it would work in Durban, but had based its costing on the assembly of the locomotives at Koedoespoort.

544. During March 2014, Transnet requested CNRRSSA to provide a proposed costing of the impact of manufacturing/assembling the locomotives at the Bayhead facility in Durban. On 11 March 2014, CNRRSSA addressed a letter to Mr Pita and Ms Mdletshe of Transnet indicating that the total additional cost would be R9 755 600.

545. There is no response to the letter from CNRRSSA dated 11 March 2014 on record. There is however an unsigned proposal under a CNRRSSA letter dated 1 February 2015 dealing with the “Durban Locomotive Factory Relocation Proposal” which estimated the increased cost to be more than R100 million. Annexed to this document is a schedule that includes figures against certain items and a total estimate of R318.7 million.

546. A few months later, on 25 April 2015, CNRRSSA appointed Business Expansion Structured Products (Pty) Limited (BEX) to act as an intermediary for the purpose of negotiating a contract with Transnet for the claim of the costs of "relocating" CNRRSSA’s locomotive manufacturing /assembly to the Durban facility. BEX had not been involved in CNRRSSA’s initial costing exercise that arrived at a total figure of R9.7 million for relocation costs. According to Mr Gonsalves, BEX was appointed despite the serious reservations and opposition of the minority non-executive directors. They were concerned about inadequate consultation, the payment of an excessive fee to BEX, the failure of TFR to follow a tender process and there being no clear rationale for CNRRSSA being entitled to a relocation claim.

547. The appointment of BEX commenced in March 2015 when a draft unsigned BDSA dated 8 March 2015 was distributed by email. This BDSA referred to BEX Structured Products Limited (a different company to BEX) which was a company with some background and presumed credibility in the rail sector. However, BEX, with whom the agreement was ultimately signed, turned out to be a shell or dormant company with one director, Mr Mark Shaw, which had not traded and had no experience in the railway engineering business.

548. The BDSA dated 8 March 2015 bears significant resemblance to the BDSAs signed by CSR with Tequesta and Regiments Asia in Hong Kong (used to set up kickbacks from the CSR deals for the 95, 100 and 359 electric locomotive procurements) and was probably drafted by the same person. It uses the same cover page, fonts, layout and format throughout the document. Like the Tequesta agreement, and in almost identical language, the preamble to the BDSA stated that BEX was a “professional services advisory business” with long subsisting relationships in South Africa with “a familiarity with regulatory, social, cultural and political framework whereby it is capable to closely co-ordinate with the designated authorities” and to “lend consultancy on participating in various tenders and bidding processes”. It recorded further that CNRRSSA had approached BEX to provide advisory services in respect of the Project, for expanding their business and to help it achieve their BE objectives “in the Territory on a long-term basis." The "Project" is defined in Clause 1 of the BDSA as "the change in scope whereby Transnet Engineering (TE) requires the Company to change the location of the local manufacture programme from TE Spartan Pretoria facility to their Durban facility".

549. On 8 April 2015, a written round robin resolution (signed by the CNRRSSA directors other than the minority non-executive directors) was circulated. The minority non-executive directors were requested to sign the resolution to authorise the conclusion of an agreement in relation to the relocation of the manufacturing facility. At a Board meeting of 10 April 2015, the minority non-executive directors objected strongly to the company entering into an agreement with BEX and requested that their dissent be expressly noted and minuted. Notwithstanding the objections of the non-executive directors, CNRRSSA proceeded to sign the agreement with BEX.

550. The minority non-executive directors later learnt that BEX is an Exempted Micro Enterprise (EME) based on the B-BBEE verification certificate issued to it on 30 April 2015 and (despite statements to the contrary in the BDSA) the company had never traded before that. The sole director of BEX, Mr Shaw, was only appointed on 15 April 2015.

551. It is not clear from the BDSA how BEX benchmarked the cost of CNRRSSA locating its business activities in Durban at R280 million. On 21 April 2015, Mr Gonsalves received a document, partly written in Chinese, reflecting the estimated cost increase amounting to approximately R287 million.

552. On 25 April 2015, BEX and CNRRSSA concluded a BDSA which to all intents and purposes was the same as the draft BDSA of 8 March 2015 but with one notable difference: the benchmark price was increased from R280 million to R580 million. Consequently, BEX had to ensure that Transnet agreed to pay an amount over R580 million to earn its expected agency fee.

553. The BEX proposal and costs were subsequently presented by CNRRSSA to Transnet which culminated in CNRRSSA concluding an agreement with Transnet in terms of which Transnet agreed to bear the cost of relocation in an amount of R719 090 548, less a 10% discount, amounting to R647 181 494.

Transnet's approval of the cost of relocation

554. On 19 May 2015, Ms Mdletshe (then Senior Manager: Strategic Sourcing Locomotives TFR) compiled a memorandum motivating for a variation order to finalise the relocation of the programme for the construction by CNR of 233 Class 45D locomotives to a maximum value of R669 784 286. This amount approximated the figure proposed by CNRRSSA and later included in the BEX agreement.

555. The proposal was recommended for approval in a memorandum dated 19 May 2015 to Mr Gama (then the acting GCEO of Transnet) by Mr Ravir Nair (the acting CEO of TFR), Mr Singh (GCFO) and Mr Silinga (GE: Legal and Compliance). The memorandum indicated that a negotiation team composed of Mr Singh (GCFO), Mr Jiyane (then CEO: TE), Mr Pita (Group Head SCM), Mr Silinga (GE: Legal and Compliance) and Ms Mdletshe would negotiate an agreement dealing with the costs of relocation. The memorandum recorded that on 24 January 2014 the Board had resolved that the GCEO be given authority to sign, approve and conclude all necessary documents to give effect to the resolution approving the acquisition of the 1,064 locomotives and thus the GCEO had the authority to approve variation orders in relation to the costs of the move to Durban.

556. In an earlier draft of the memorandum, Mr Gama approved the proposal but added that he needed clarity on three matters: (i) did the proposal apply to both BT and CNR; (ii) whether the amount of R635 million was still under negotiation; and (iii) how the proposal related to the delegation by the Board. Mr Gama added his signature to the document on the basis that the limit of his delegated authority was not exceeded and he was informed of the final negotiation outcomes. He did not date his signature on this document. The signatures of Ms Mdletshe, Mr Silinga and Mr Singh were added on 19 May 2015. Mr Gama signed the final version of the memorandum on 9 June 2015, so it may be assumed that he made his handwritten annotations sometime after 19 May 2015 but before 9 June 2015.

557. The memorandum sought approval for a variation order to a maximum value of R669 784 286. It explained that because of the relocation, there would be a number of cost drivers, namely: labour costs; material costs; operational and logistical costs; technical support; physical transportation of materials and resources; incremental warehousing costs; and financing and risk costs due to time constraints and delays. When Mr Gama ultimately approved, the capped figure for the variation order was changed to R635 851 786, which was possibly derived from another proposal by CNRRSSA.

558. The relocation negotiations began on 19 June 2015. The negotiation team held two separate meetings with CNRRSSA and BT at ORT International Airport. The attendance register of the meeting with CNRRSSA reflects that it was also attended by Mr Shaw of BEX. Mr Singh, despite leading the negotiation team at the OR Tambo meeting with Mr Shaw in attendance, presumably representing BEX, stated during his testimony that he had no sense of BEX ever having played any role in the negotiations and the finalisation of the relocation deal. He said he did not know who BEX was and did not know anybody from BEX. His testimony is not credible considering Mr Shaw's attendance of the negotiations.

559. There are no minutes of the meetings of 19 June 2015, but subsequent correspondence suggests that CNRRSSA put forward a proposal at the meeting while BT did not. There are transcripts of the meetings which unfortunately are difficult to follow because they do not indicate the identity of the speakers and have many gaps due to inaudibility. It appears from the transcripts that the OEMs were requested to clarify assumptions made and contingencies built into the proposals. They were further requested to make a price reduction and a revised offer in the range of 10 to 20% and to deal with the specifics such as milestone payments, and scheduling delays. Transnet indicated that it would seek approval on 30 June 2015. It appears from the imperfect transcript that there was some superficial interrogation of the figures but that the Transnet negotiation team was comfortable with a ballpark figure of R600 million and was to some extent just going through the motions.

560. The proposal made by CNRRSSA on 19 June 2015 is not clearly identified in the record. However, a document prepared by CNRRSSA, dated July 2015, titled "Analysis of Cost Increases for Locomotive Delivery and Locomotive Factory Relocation" gives insight into CNRRSSA's final position. Mr Gonsalves testified that this document was in fact the agreement that was ultimately signed between Transnet and CNRRSSA. The last page of the Analysis on record was signed by Mr Wang as CEO of CNRRSSA and provides a space for Mr Singh's signature but was not signed by him. Mr Singh could not recall if he ever signed the Analysis and claimed he did not have the delegated authority to do so.

561. The Analysis usefully provides a breakdown of the cost increases as follows: labour costs, R54,3 million; material costs R223,9 million; logistical costs R6,4 million; technical support R70 million; transportation R94,2 million; delta to warehouse costs R75,6 million; and other costs R194,5 million. The total cost is stated to be R719 090 548, less a 10% discount, giving an amount of R647 181 494. The document goes on to offer some justification for each line item.

The unanswered queries of Transnet officials

562. On 20 June 2015, the day after the meeting at ORT International Airport, Mr Pita (who attended the meeting) wrote an email in which he set out "comments and questions for CNR" and addressed it to the other members of the negotiating team and copied Mr Laher. It is clear that Mr Pita had reservations about the cost increase.

563. There is no evidence that any member of the negotiation team was ever informed of or queried the rise in cost from the R9.8 million initially quoted by CNRRSSA in its letter of 11 March 2014 addressed to Ms Lindiwe Mdletshe and Mr Pita to the R670 million proposal just over one year later.

564. On 23 June 2015, Ms Mdletshe circulated a revised proposal from CNRRSSA to the members of the negotiating team and Mr Laher. She noted that the meetings scheduled for that day were postponed and that BT's proposal was still outstanding and that it would revert later that day with a revised proposal. The costs in the revised CNRRSSA proposal remained essentially the same with some adjustment to the material and financing costs. The total claimed was R669 784 286. CNR however proposed a discount of 10% and thus the total revised cost was stated at R602 805 858. CNRRSSA proposed an upfront payment of half amounting to R301 402 929 and 24 monthly payments of approximately R12.6 million per month.

565. The MNS investigation team were not able to find any emails or correspondence at Transnet dealing with the issues raised by Mr Pita and Mr Laher between 25 June 2015 and 10 July 2015. There is no evidence of any communication among the negotiation team members or any correspondence with other officials or entities within Transnet in which the relevant figures were discussed, analysed, or interrogated. When Ms Mdletshe was asked by the MNS investigation team why Mr Laher's concerns had not been addressed she allegedly replied that he was not a member of the negotiation team.

566. Mr Singh confirmed that he was a member of the team set up at Transnet to deal with the matter and that he had asked Mr Laher to look at the issues. When asked how the committee had resolved Laher's concerns, Mr Singh replied that they would have been dealt with by Ms Mdletshe who was the project manager for the relocation. When asked whether he as a member of the team was satisfied that Mr Laher's concerns had been resolved, Mr Singh stated that he was comfortable that Ms Mdletshe would have attended to them prior to sending him the memorandum. He was also reasonably comfortable with the R1.2 billion ultimately agreed as the cost of relocation as he believed the amounts "were relatively in the ballpark and therefore. . . the values – the memorandum could be supported".

567. On 22 June 2015, Mr Laher addressed an email to the negotiation team concerning BT's vague and unsubstantiated proposal, suggesting that clarity and a detailed costing of each element making up the additional cost. At a minimum, information was required in relation to additional costs of hedging, escalation, bonding costs, transport (number of trips, size of containers per trip and distances), warehousing (per square metre), insurance and new production layout. It was also necessary to ascertain any savings on transport costs for materials imported.

568. On 10 July 2015, Mr Pita addressed an email to Ms Mdletshe and copied the other members of the negotiation team, in which he mentioned that he had received feedback from BT that it would send a letter on the following Monday providing clarity on their offer. He requested Ms Mdletshe to update all the documentation and to compile a memorandum to be addressed to the Mr Gama for approval of the CNRRSSA and BT proposals.

569. There is no evidence that BT ever supplied this information or of any detailed analysis of BT's costing performed by the negotiation team or any official at Transnet. Mr Pita concluded that if the team was happy with the proposals the sign off could be affected quickly. He also asked Ms Mdletshe to ensure that sign off by TIA (internal audit) was included in the memo. Mr Laher was not copied in this email. Nor did Mr Pita explain whether his and Mr Laher's concerns had been adequately addressed.

570. On 14 July 2015, Mr Pita wrote an email to Mr Silinga asking him to "review the legal clauses and caveats raised in both proposals, especially the BT offer" as these might have a "significant impact". Mr Silinga responded to this email on 17 July 2015 stating that the agreed price of R618 457 125 and various other clauses were acceptable but noting that timelines needed to be agreed.

The agreement and payments

571. Ms Mdletshe prepared two memoranda requesting the acting GCEO to note the final outcome of the negotiation for relocation to Durban and to approve the variation orders for the agreed total amounts. The memoranda were recommended by Mr Nair (Acting CEO: TFR), Mr Singh (GCFO), Mr Pita (GCPO), Mr Silinga (GEL&C), and Mr Jiyane (CEO: TE) on 22 July 2015, and approved and signed by Mr Gama (acting GCEO) on 23 July 2015. Transnet agreed to pay BT R618 457 125 and CNR R647 181 494 for the relocation costs; being a total of R1.261 billion. The variation orders resulted in the total contract price of the 232 diesel locomotives awarded to CNR increasing from R9 947 116 464 to R10 594 297 958; and the price of the 240 electric locomotives awarded to BT increasing from R13 049 206 320 to R13 667 663 320.

572. It appears that Mr Gama approved the memoranda on 23 July 2015 despite the queries he had raised with Ms Mdletshe in May 2015 not having been answered. Mr Nair confirmed in an interview with the MNS investigation team that the memoranda had been recommended and signed on 22 July 2015 by himself, Mr Singh, Mr Silinga, Mr Jiyane and Mr Pita in the presence of each other at a breakaway meeting held at Kloofzicht in Muldersdrift. He admitted to recommending the variation order without properly satisfying himself to the justifiability of the R1.2 billion cost increase.

573. Unusually, in a letter dated 23 July 2015 addressed to CNRRSSA, Mr Gama agreed that 50% of the variation order amount (R323.59 million) would be paid to CNRRSSA in advance and thereafter in 24 monthly instalments of R13.48 million without requiring it to submit invoices for specific expenditures incurred.

574. However, it seems that the full budgeted amount of R1.2 billion for relocation costs was not paid to the OEMs.

575. In October 2018, MNS attorneys appointed Loliwe Rail Solutions to assess the approved relocation costs to determine whether there was a rational basis for the increased costs. In its report, Loliwe noted that the negotiation team was not provided with any back up information pertaining to the alleged costs and thus could not have undertaken a proper due diligence. The lack of due diligence preceding these variations resulting in an increase of R1.2 billion to the price payable to BT and CNR is confirmed by the limited role played by TIA. In his email of 10 July 2015, Mr Pita instructed Ms Mdletshe to obtain TIA approval. He failed to do so in contravention of the PPM.

576. In a report dated 7 June 2017, the auditors reported that TIA had attended the meeting with the negotiation team, CNR and BT on 19 June 2015 at ORT International Airport, at which the GCFO Mr Singh requested both OEMs to submit their proposals for the cost implications of manufacturing out of Durban. A follow up meeting was scheduled, but despite being copied in various emails, TIA was not invited to any subsequent meetings where negotiations on relocation costs took place with the bidders in attendance, as required by the high value tender methodology in the PPM. TIA was not provided with the memoranda of 23 July 2015 or informed of the outcome of the negotiations. TIA was therefore not able to produce a formal report to indicate the adequacy and effectiveness of the processes undertaken in the relocation negotiations.

The challenge by the minority directors of CNRRSSA

577. The minority shareholders wrote to the Board of Directors of CNRRSSA on 8 June 2016 expressing their concerns and requesting explanations. They stated that although the agreement concluded with Transnet may have been financially beneficial for CNRRSSA it was unclear why it was concluded given that the LSA envisaged and provided for CNRRSSA to establish its operations in Durban and for the supply of locomotives to take place from Durban on a fixed price basis. They informed the Board that they would be scheduling a meeting with Transnet to discuss the matter. There was no response to the letter.

578. On 12 June 2017 Mr Fred von Eckardstein, an auditor at KPMG, reported an irregularity to the Independent Regulatory Board of Auditors (IRBA). In his report, Mr Von Eckardstein stated that according to information received by KPMG the relocation proposal of CNRRSSA significantly misrepresented the cost of relocation and Transnet had issued a variation order accepting the proposal. CNRRSSA had entered into the BDSA with BEX on 25 April 2015 relating to the proposal and had made payments to BEX which appeared to lack sound commercial substance and purpose.

579. Mr Gonsalves only became aware of the report to the IRBA on 22 September 2017 after he received a call from Ms Daisy Zhang of CNRRSSA telling him that KPMG was considering issuing a reportable irregularity letter in respect of a different irregularity. He called Mr Von Eckardstein who told him that he was considering a reportable irregularity in respect of certain project management fees. During the conversation Mr Von Eckardstein mentioned the first reportable irregularity of 12 June 2017 dealing inter alia with the BEX issue.

580. On 28 September 2017, Mr Gonsalves spoke with Mr Charles Yu of Hogan Lovells who informed him that Hogan Lovells no longer wished to act for CNRRSSA on the first reportable irregularity as one of the BEX directors (presumably Mr Shaw) apparently had a relationship with the Gupta enterprise. On 10 October 2017, the minority non-executive directors met with KPMG. They made it clear to KPMG that they shared similar concerns with KPMG about the first reported irregularity. On 27 October 2017, KPMG resigned as CNRRSSA's auditor.

581. Following a meeting with Werksmans, the minority non-executive directors decided to report the BEX issue to the Hawks. Nothing has come of that report.

582. On 27 September 2018, Mr Stephen Nthite, a director of Endinamix, wrote to the Board of CNRRSSA on behalf of the Endinamix Board informing it that Endinamix regarded the payment of R67.18 million to BEX as a bribe to induce the award of this tender and demanded that CNRRSSA act and report this matter in terms of the PRECCA.

583. On 8 October 2018, after meeting with the minority directors, the new auditors, J Theron & Pietersen Inc, retracted the 2015, 2016 and 2018 annual financial statements of CNRRSSA. The draft audited annual financial statements distributed in March 2019 in respect of the year ended 31 December 2018 drew attention to the reportable irregularity of 12 June 2017 and recorded that the matter remained unresolved.

The PFMA transgressions, money laundering and racketeering

584. The "Enablers Report" submitted to the Commission in February 2020 by Open Secrets and Shadow World Investigations maintains that Mr Taufique Hasware, a general trader with no relevant experience, was a director of BEX and of three other companies – Homix, Forsure Consultants and Hastauf – all of which were front companies for Mr Essa and the Gupta enterprise. These companies were primarily purposed with facilitating kickbacks from Transnet contracts.

585. Mr Gama, Mr Nair and the members of the negotiation team in all likelihood breached their fiduciary duties and/or the PPM when negotiating and approving the variation orders. There is a strong prima facie case that these persons obviously did not act in the best interests of Transnet in managing its financial affairs, or with the requisite degree of care, skill and diligence that may reasonably have been expected of them.

586. To the extent that Mr Gama and Mr Nair may seek to rely on the skill of the members of the negotiation team whom they reasonably believed were reliable and competent, it cannot be said that they took reasonably diligent steps to become fully informed about the matter as required by Section 76(4)(a)(i) of the Companies Act. Moreover, the members of the negotiation team were all remiss and in contravention of the PPM in not resolving the issues raised by Mr Pita and Mr Laher in late June 2015.

THE FINANCIAL ADVISORS

587. In the period between 2012 and 2016 Transnet contracted with four companies to provide various financial and advisory services, namely: McKinsey, Regiments Capital, Trillian Capital and JP Morgan. The conclusion and execution of the various contracts were characterised by several irregularities.

588. The lead provider for the various financial services was initially McKinsey which over time ceded and delegated many of its rights and obligations to the other companies, most notably Regiments.

589. Mr Volmink, the Executive Manager: Governance, in his testimony to the Commission reviewed eight significant contracts involving McKinsey, Regiments and Trillian in the period 2012 to 2015. His overview of all the contractual arrangements establishes that McKinsey and Regiments were inappropriately favoured in the interest of advancing the Gupta enterprise. All the contracts were procured by the method of confinement on grounds of either urgency or standardisation/compatibility with existing specialised/identical services.

An overview of the McKinsey contracts

590. The most important contract, and perhaps most controversial, was for advisory services related to the acquisition of the 1,064 locomotives. The confinement memorandum explained that further work was required to strengthen the business case.

591. The confinement to McKinsey was justified on the grounds of urgency and the fact that the services were highly specialised and largely identical to work previously done for Transnet by McKinsey. Although the confinement was agreed to in May 2012, McKinsey only signed the contract on 21 February 2014 and Transnet signed it on 11 August 2014. This contract was ceded from McKinsey to Regiments on 4 February 2014 after Phase 1, the completion of the business case for the procurement. The cession to Regiments was in respect of the balance of the work. The original contract value was R35.2 million. Subsequent amendments resulted in a fee increase firstly to R78.4 million and a second amendment to include an "at risk" success fee of R166 million.

592. The second contract awarded to McKinsey was the so-called SWAT1 contract, a contract of services, capabilities, and resources to support procurement and capital excellence and productivity. The date of the confinement was 22 November 2012, but the contract was only signed during the course of 2014. The contract value was R174.6 million.

593. The third contract, the so-called the SWAT2, was an award to a consortium of McKinsey and Regiments for capital optimisation and implementation support. This contract was confined on 18 October 2013 and aimed firstly to "optimise the capital investment portfolio" by a minimum of R100 billion for a maximum fee of R173 million (excluding expenses and VAT) and secondly to implement and embed "the platinum standard" developed by capital integration for a fixed fee of R72 million. The contract price was reduced later from R245 million to R225 million.

594. The fourth contract was for professional services to increase the coal line with a breakthrough of 2 million tonnes per week ("the coal line contract"). This contract was confined in early 2014 and signed during 2015. The original contract value was R216.7 million (a fixed fee of R73.5 million plus a contingent fee of R143.2 million).

595. The fifth contract awarded to McKinsey was for the renegotiation of the Kumba Iron Ore contract. The existing Kumba Iron Ore contract was signed in 2007 for a 20-year period ending in 2027. That contract did not appropriately cater for allocating capacity to junior miners and could potentially cause economic hardship for Transnet. The contract was confined in April 2014 and signed during the course of 2015. The original contract price was R239 million (R34 million fixed fee plus R205 million contingent fee). The value was later amended to provide for a total contract price of R248 million.

596. The sixth contract was for the manganese project execution support ("the manganese contract"). This confinement was also made on the 3 April 2014, but the contract was only concluded in March 2015. The contract value was R179.9 million.

597. The seventh contract related to the New Multi Product Pipeline (NMPP), a pipeline project aimed at increasing volumes from 4.4 billion litres to 8.7 billion litres through the construction of a 555 kilometre, 24 inch diameter trunk line. The confinement was approved on 3 April 2014 and was valued at R446.2 million.

598. The eighth contract was a contract for professional services to support Transnet in increasing general freight business (GFB), with a breakthrough to reach the planned volume targets for the financial years 2015/16 and 2016/17. This contract was confined in March 2015 and signed during 2015. The original fee of R375 million increased to R463.3 million. The scope of the work under the contract was increased and there was a split of work and fees between Regiments and McKinsey and a cession from Regiments to Trillian Capital Partners (owned by Trillian Holdings (Pty) Ltd in which Essa had a 60% holding).

599. The total value of the eight contracts awarded by Transnet to McKinsey during 2014-2015 amounted to R2.2 billion. Half of the revenue earned by Regiments on six of the eight contracts (the coal line contract; the Kumba Iron Ore contract; the manganese contract; the NMPP contract, the SWAT 2 contract; and the GFB contract) was diverted to a Gupta associated company, Homix (Pty) Ltd as part of the money laundering scheme described earlier.

600. All eight contracts awarded by way of confinement were approved mainly by Mr Molefe, as the GCEO, on the basis of memoranda submitted to him by Mr Singh and Mr Pita. The evidence establishes that McKinsey and Regiments were in possession of Mr Singh's confinement memoranda to Mr Molefe prior to their making these bids.

601. Four of the confinements were approved by Mr Molefe over a period of four days - between 31 March 2014 and 3 April 2014. The four contracts appointed Homix and Albatime, Gupta-linked laundering vehicles, as SDPs. These contracts were: (i) the coal contract, R130 million; (ii) the Kumba Iron Ore contract, R239 million; (iii) the manganese contract, R150 million; and (iv) the NMPP contract, R100 million. They had a combined value of R619 million. It is even more concerning that the four confinements were done unusually on a confidential basis.

602. The four confinements awarded to McKinsey and Regiments in the four day period between 31 March 2014 and 3 April 2014 did not follow the normal review and signoff process, supposedly, for reasons of confidentiality. As discussed, these four contracts specifically concluded with McKinsey and Regiments exclusively by Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Singh, contributed substantial revenue to the money laundering scheme involving Regiments, Homix and Albatime. Mr Molefe accepted that the advantage of a confidential confinement was that it was done without scrutiny.

603. The memorandum for the approval of the appointment by confinement of service providers for the provision of transaction advisory services related to the 1,064 locomotives acquisition (the first McKinsey contract) was submitted by Mr Pita to Mr Molefe on 7 May 2012. In summary, the advisory services required by Transnet were: (i) business case validation; (ii) technical evaluation and optimisation; (iii) deal structuring and finance for large capital investment projects; and (iv) procurement and legal.

604. A confinement RFP was issued to nine entities by Transnet on 30 May 2012 for the appointment of the transaction advisors. Section 2.8 of the RFP set out the evaluation methodology and criteria. The methodology involved four steps: step 1 – administrative responsiveness; step 2 – substantive responsiveness; step 3 – minimum threshold; and step 4 – weighted scoring.

605. Four responses from three different consortia were received on the tender closing date, 7 June 2012. These were: KPMG Consortium; PWC Consortium; McKinsey Consortium; and Webber Wentzel Attorneys (in respect of legal services only). On 26 July 2012, it was resolved to award the contract to the McKinsey Consortium, which comprised: (i) McKinsey Incorporated (main bidder); (ii) Letsema Consulting (co-bidder); (iii) Advanced Rail Technologies; iv) Nedbank Capital; (v) Edward Nathan Sonnenbergs (ENS); (vi) Koikanwang Incorporated; and (vii) Utho Capital. The fee payable was R35 million as R15 million of the budgeted amount of R50 million was spun out for legal services, awarded to Webber Wentzel Attorneys.

606. The tender ought not to have been awarded to the McKinsey Consortium because it failed to meet the test for administrative responsiveness.

607. McKinsey's letter referred to a report by PWC, purportedly indicating its financial position. The MNS investigation produced no record of this report, and it was not enclosed in the bid documents. The way McKinsey sought to mitigate its non-compliance hence did not render the bid responsive. Accordingly, the decision to appoint the McKinsey Consortium as the successful bidder was irregular due to its failure to submit the mandatory returnable documents. McKinsey should therefore have been excluded and disqualified at step 1.

Appointment of Regiments Capital

608. On 20 August 2012, Mr Singh addressed a memorandum to Mr Molefe requesting approval for the appointment of the McKinsey Consortium for the advisory services and Webber Wentzel Attorneys for the legal advisory work as transaction advisors on the 1,064 locomotive tender. He also asked it to be noted that McKinsey would be advised to partner with another firm, with equal or better credentials than Letsema, for the procurement elements, due to a potential conflict with Barloworld and Letsema. Surprisingly, the memorandum did not explain or discuss the nature of the alleged conflict of interest. Nevertheless, it was recommended that McKinsey be advised to partner with another firm, namely Regiments.

609. Mr Sedumedi of MNS testified that he had been unable to establish during the MNS investigation what precisely the conflict between Letsema and Barloworld had been. It was just accepted as a fait accompli that there was a conflict which necessitated the replacement of Letsema. Mr Molefe approved the recommendation on 22 August 2012. Mr Singh too, despite being the instigator of the recommendation to Mr Molefe that Letsema be replaced, was vague about the precise nature of the conflict, why it had not been picked up earlier in the process or explained in his memorandum.

610. Mr Singh's attempts to distance himself from Regiments are not credible. Correspondence between Mr Essa and Regiments' Mr Pillay and Mr Wood on 28 November 2012 confirms that Mr Essa set up a meeting between Mr Singh and Mr Pillay of Regiments at Mr Singh's office on 3 December 2012. Around this time, on 30 November 2012, Mr Singh addressed a LOI for the provision of the advisory services to McKinsey informing it that its offer had been accepted and that its consortium had been awarded the contract. It recorded that the parties to the agreement were: Transnet, McKinsey Incorporated and the other members of the consortium, namely Regiments Capital, Advanced Rail Technologies, Nedbank Capital and Utho Capital.

611. Regiments was included as a member of the McKinsey Consortium in place of Letsema despite it not having tendered as part of the consortium. The tender was awarded to the McKinsey Consortium based on its composition at the time of the submission of its bid. The capabilities of the consortium members to perform the various aspects of the 1,064 transaction advisory tender and the consortium's eligibility for the award was assessed based on the verification and evaluation of the claims made by its constituent members. The capabilities and other credentials of Regiments were not subject to the rigour of the verification, evaluation and adjudication process followed in relation to the tender and its appointment was therefore inconsistent with the constitutional requirements of transparency, fairness and competitiveness.

612. Regiments, and ultimately the Gupta enterprise benefited substantially from the replacement of Letsema. Paragraph 17.2 of the memorandum of 22 August 2012 from Mr Singh to Mr Molefe recorded that the percentage split of work to Letsema as McKinsey's procurement partner amounted to 20% of the total. An analysis of the evaluation criteria in the bid indicated that Letsema would have been involved in almost all the aspects of the bid. Mr Molefe testified that he did not consider the change from Letsema to Regiments (a transfer of 20 to 30% of the business under the tender) as a "big change".

613. Although he approved the decision to substitute Letsema with Regiments, Mr Molefe "categorically" denied any knowledge of the money laundering scheme and his participation in it. He refused to comment on the significance of McKinsey agreeing to repay Transnet R650 million in respect of fees paid to it in terms of various contracts with Transnet tainted by corruption.

614. Mr Molefe's testimony about his knowledge of the scheme involving Regiments and the Gupta associated companies must be assessed in the light of the evidence analysed earlier: that he enjoyed a long standing relationship with the Gupta family and had been a frequent visitor to their Saxonwold compound between 2009 and 2016; that he may have received cash payments from the Gupta enterprise; and that Gupta associates played some role in his appointment to the posts of GCEO of Transnet and CEO of Eskom.

Regiments' capital raising and risk management proposal

615. In early January 2014, Regiments presented a proposal ("the Regiments capital raising and risk management proposal") to Ms Makgatho (the Transnet Group Treasurer) in respect of their role as advisors on the 1,064 locomotives. The proposal is titled: "Transnet-Terms of Reference for Capital Raising and Risk Management Transaction Advisory for 1,064 locomotives procurement".

616. The proposal outlined Regiments' offering (mandate) as being: (i) deliver the optimal funding structure and financial risk solution for the 1,064 locomotives acquisition; (ii) a detailed evaluation of the economic, social and sustainability impact of the acquisition; (iii) collateral assessment down to the component level to enable sourcing of concessionary funding and optimisation of the financing structure; (iv) the application of a best practice risk management framework to the transaction will ensure all relevant risks are identified, quantified and tracked; (v) the optimal risk management solution embedded in the acquisition agreement, funding structures and/or in separate risk overlays to deliver the right balance between funding cost and risk; (vi) a comprehensive evaluation of all potential funding sources and mechanisms to enable the selection of the most appropriate avenues to pursue and execute; (vii) structured programme management will ensure seamless integration with the procurement process, opportune capital raising and dynamic risk management; (viii) appropriate resourcing of five joint Regiments-Transnet work streams focussing on programme management, impact studies, collateral assessment, capital raising and risk management; (ix) a 12 month project timetable dovetailing with the procurement process; and (x) a fee structure based on "a modest fixed monthly retainer" and a performance fee for "best alignment of interests".

617. Ms Makgatho had reservations about dealing with Regiments arising from concerns pre-dating the receipt of the proposal. In late 2013, she received a call from Mr Masotsha Mngadi, a Relationship Manager at Nedbank, enquiring whether Transnet was looking for money as Regiments was in the market looking for money on behalf of Transnet. She was surprised as borrowings were normally initiated by Transnet Treasury. The mandate to negotiate with banks rested with the Treasury and no one outside Transnet had authority to engage banks on Transnet's behalf.

618. A few days later, Mr Singh gave Ms Makgatho a funding proposal ("the R5 billion proposal") from Regiments, in hard copy, and informed her that it was a very important matter that Mr Molefe needed executed speedily. The proposal was that Regiments would facilitate a 5-year, R5 billion loan facility to be funded by Nedbank through an "in-between structure", similar to a Special Vehicle Structure, that would serve as a conduit between the lender Nedbank and Transnet. The details of the structure were not clear, but Transnet would pay interest to the "in-between structure" which would in turn remit the funds to Nedbank. This was unusual as Transnet normally deals directly with lenders. As Transnet had a direct relationship with Nedbank, there was no need to use a conduit like Regiments to engage with Nedbank. Ms Makgatho calculated that Transnet would have to pay an additional R150 million per annum in interest payments over and above what Transnet normally paid for similar facilities. This translated into potential losses of R750 million over a five-year period.

619. Ms Makgatho shared her analysis of the R5 billion proposal with Mr Singh and indicated that she would not recommend the proposal given potential excessive costs in interest payments. Mr Singh responded saying that it was an instruction from Mr Molefe and she should quickly complete the memorandum for approval the same day.

620. Ms Makgatho was reluctant to comply with that request and decided to discuss the matter directly with Mr Molefe. Ms Makgatho was irate at that time and explicitly told Mr Molefe that should they approve the structure, they would go to jail for stealing money as they were the custodians of Transnet's funds. Mr Molefe agreed and the structure was never implemented.

621. Mr Molefe confirmed the events as outlined by Ms Makgatho in relation to the R5 billion proposal but denied that he had directed Mr Singh to instruct Ms Makgatho to execute this proposal. He in effect denied that the R5 billion proposal emanated from him and shifted responsibility for it to Mr Singh. Mr Singh could not recall these events, saying that it was unlikely that he would have instructed Ms Makgatho as she described. Mr Molefe's concession provides sufficient basis to conclude that such a proposal was made which was not in the interest of Transnet and from which only Regiments, and the Gupta enterprise would have benefited had it been implemented.

622. Ms Makgatho met with Mr Pillay of Regiments to discuss the capital raising and risk management proposal. The proposed fee was a R1 million monthly retainer and a performance fee equal to 20% of the savings over the interest rate of Transnet's most recent funding secured prior to 1 January 2014. Ms Makgatho reported back to Mr Singh and informed him that she had requested Regiments to revise the proposal and link the deliverables to proposed timelines and a proposed budget. Mr Singh responded with annoyance and informed her that she should not concern herself about timelines and budgets and that Regiments were not meant to be her advisors but his. She was surprised as in her opinion, the proposal was very vague, and she saw very little in the way of "value-add".

623. After that, Ms Makgatho was not involved in the appointment of Regiments or the decisions about the scope of its work under different contracts. She later learnt with disbelief that within six months of having made the capital raising and risk management proposal, Regiments was paid about R320 million (R107 766 135 between May 2013 and 31 March 2014 and a further R211 690 670 between 1 April 2014 and 16 July 2014) and that the invoices were paid within a day of submission, rather than after the usual 30 days.

624. Despite Ms Makgatho's concerns and the fact that the agreement with the McKinsey Consortium had lapsed, Mr Singh signed a contract ("the agreement of 23 January 2014") with Regiments on 23 January 2014.

625. The agreement of 23 January 2014 recorded that after the issuance of the original LOI a conflict of interest required the reallocation of the tasks originally intended to be handled by Nedbank to other members of the Consortium and thus Transnet wished to contract with Regiments for that purpose. The specified deliverables were: (i) determining the development and sustainability impact of the acquisition; (ii) conducting a collateral assessment to the component level to determine the potential for securing concessionary funding; (iii) developing and implementing a best practice risk management framework for the transaction; (iv) developing an optimal risk management solution by examining solutions that are embedded in the acquisition agreement, funding agreement and separate risk overlays; (v) evaluating all potential funding sources and mechanisms to select the most appropriate avenues to pursue and execute; and (vi) providing execution programme management and support in respect to funding.

626. Clause 2 of the agreement of 23 January 2014 provided that the proposed fee structure for the services to be rendered was understood by both parties to involve a retainer applicable every month and a performance fee on the funding raised at interest rates below the benchmark. The fees and related costs were quoted in South African currency and were exclusive of VAT. Expenses were capped at 10% of the value of the total retainer. Deliverables, except the actual fundraising, were to be executed for a fee of R15 million over a period of twelve months and provision was made for a performance fee equal to 20% of the savings achieved against the benchmark interest rate, being the interest rate at which Transnet was able to raise its most recent funding prior to 1 January 2014.

627. Mr Singh had no authority to appoint transaction advisors on behalf of Transnet without following a proper procurement process as such did not fall within his delegated authority. Moreover, the agreement of 23 January 2014 was irregular in that no procurement event preceded it. There is no evidence indicating that McKinsey was aware of this agreement. Thus, there was no valid amendment or variation of the LOI.

628. On 4 February 2014, two months after the LOI had lapsed on 30 November 2013, Transnet and Regiments concluded an agreement, titled: "Third addendum for GSM/12/05/0447-for advisory services related to the acquisition of the 1,064 locomotives tender" ("the third addendum to the LOI"), purporting to extend the scope of the lapsed LOI between Transnet and McKinsey. Mr Singh placed responsibility for this irregularity at the door of the procurement department, even though he signed the third addendum on behalf of Transnet.

629. The third addendum of the LOI is recorded as being between McKinsey and Transnet. However, on the last page of the agreement it is signed by Mr Wood, the Executive Director of Regiments, and Mr Singh. The agreement was not signed by any witness although provision was made for witnesses. A typed reference to McKinsey as a party to the agreement on the last page is scratched out and replaced in handwriting by "Regiments Capital" and initialled by both Mr Singh and Mr Wood.

630. Clause 4 of the third addendum varied the contract price. It stated that as a result of the additional scope of work required on the financial phase of the contract, the initial price of R35.2 million would increase by R6 million, bringing the total contract value to the fixed amount of R41.2 million.

631. On 16 April 2014, Mr Sagar of McKinsey addressed a letter to Mr Singh in which he confirmed that McKinsey had purported to cede its rights and obligations under the 1,064 locomotives transaction advisory services contract to Regiments on 5 February 2014, the day after the third addendum of the LOI was concluded between Transnet and Regiments. It is significant that in this letter McKinsey recorded that all the work related to the mandate was in fact performed by Regiments. Transnet confirmed the purported cession in a memorandum dated 19 May 2015, a year after the purported cession compiled by Mr Singh and approved by Mr Gama. There is no written cession agreement on record. The cession was invalid on the grounds that at the time when McKinsey purported to cede the contract to Regiments, McKinsey's rights in respect of the advisory services had lapsed because of the LOI having expired on 30 November 2013. In the light of that, McKinsey had no rights and obligations to cede to Regiments and consequently the cession was null and void.

632. On 24 April 2014, just over a week after McKinsey had informed Transnet that it had ceded and delegated its rights and obligations to Regiments on 5 February 2014, and four months prior to Transnet signing the MSA with McKinsey in August 2014, Transnet and Regiments concluded a first addendum to the MSA with a view to varying the MSA by adding additional scope and amending the price.

633. Both the LOI and the MSA allocated R13.5 million for technical evaluation and execution services. These services included amongst other things the calculation of the escalation and hedging costs pursuant to the finalisation of the LSAs with the OEMs. This was the price for the technical evaluation and execution services that was agreed to through a competitive bidding process by the McKinsey consortium and Transnet.

634. On 16 April 2014, the same day that McKinsey informed Transnet of the cession, Mr Gebreselasie, a Senior Economic Advisor at Regiments, sent an email to Mr Laher of Transnet enclosing a draft close-out letter and requesting that Mr Laher provide his inputs and comments thereon before the closeout letter was made final. The closeout letter confirmed that the assignment had been successfully completed by Regiments within the specified timeframe. It then set out the nature of the mandate related to cost escalation, the cost of foreign exchange hedging and the cost of performance guarantees.

635. On the same day, Mr Singh addressed a memorandum to Mr Molefe requesting him to: (i) note the deliverables executed by the transaction advisor compared to the original scope per the letter of intent; (ii) ratify the amendment in the allocation of scope of work from McKinsey to Regiments; (iii) ratify the amendment in the makeup in the transaction advisor consortium from Nedbank Capital to Regiments; (iv) approve a change in the remuneration model of the transaction advisor compared to the original remuneration model; and (v) delegate power to Mr Singh to give effect to the noted approvals. Most importantly, Mr Singh sought payment to Regiments of an additional fee of R78.4 million (excluding VAT) which was an increase of approximately 200

636. Mr Singh did not seek input from procurement staff regarding the content and proposals of the memorandum. The recommendations were made by Mr Singh and approved by Mr Molefe without any supporting recommendation from the procurement department, governance or other interested persons or bodies.

637. The memorandum of 16 April 2014 set out the basis for the claim that value had allegedly been created by Regiments through savings from accelerating the delivery schedule. The acceleration supposedly resulted in savings in future inflation related escalation costs and foreign exchange hedging costs of approximately R20 billion. Thus, according to Mr Singh, the overall cost of the 1,064 locomotives transaction reduced from R68 billion to R50 billion. In addition, he maintained that Regiments achieved a saving of approximately R2.8 billion for the performance based foreign exchange and guarantee bonds. He added without explanation that Regiments also achieved direct benefit to Transnet of R219 million and indirect savings of over R500 million. If the savings had not been achieved, Mr Singh said, the 1,064 locomotives acquisition transaction would have been unaffordable at an amount in excess of R50 billion. All of this, in Mr Singh's view, justified a substantial increase in the fee payable to Regiments. The Regiments operating model for such engagements is usually based on a risk sharing model or success fee (25% of value created/saved). But in this instance an additional fee of R78.4 million excluding VAT (representing 0,042% of the total savings) was recommended.

638. Mr Brian Molefe approved the request in the memorandum of 16 April 2014 on 17 April 2014. The MNS Report concluded that the claim of additional savings was misleading. The original estimated total cost for the 1,064 locomotives was R38.6 billion while Transnet ended up paying an amount of R54.5 billion. The reasonable costs for the locomotives should have been at most R45.7 billion. There were accordingly no savings that Regiments secured for Transnet.

639. In summary, McKinsey's contractual rights with Transnet originally arose under the LOI which lapsed on 30 November 2013. Regiments was not a party to the lapsed LOI. Considering that McKinsey's rights and obligations were derived from the LOI that expired on 30 November 2013, it was legally and practically impossible to cede any of those rights and obligations to Regiments on 5 February 2014. Consequently, the MSA between Transnet and McKinsey of 21 February 2014 was also invalid because its rights were derived from the LOI that had lapsed and, in any event, had been purportedly ceded in terms of the cession of 5 February 2014. The first addendum to the MSA derived its existence from an invalid MSA and Regiments was not a party to the MSA between Transnet and McKinsey.

640. An amount of R36.765 million was paid to Regiments between 18 February 2014 and 7 April 2014. These payments were made in terms of the purported third amendment to the LOI between Transnet and Regiments of 4 February 2014 and in terms of the MSA between Transnet and McKinsey (not Regiments) on 21 February 2014. An amount of R79.23 million was paid to Regiments on 30 April 2014 flowing from the first addendum to the MSA between Transnet and Regiments (not McKinsey) dated 24 April 2014. The invoice was issued in respect of this last payment on the 27 March 2014, before the first addendum to the MSA was concluded. Regiments was thus unjustifiably enriched with the additional payment of R79.23 million, as there was evidently no legal basis for the payment of this amount, because the alleged cost saving was part of the LOI/MSA deliverable that had been budgeted for at a cost of R13.5 million.

The Nkonki contracts

641. Nkonki was a service provider to Transnet for certain internal audit functions. In 2013, Transnet went through an open tender process to appoint firms to assist with the internal audit function. Three bidders were appointed: KPMG, Nkonki and Sekela Xabiso. The Nkonki contract was awarded for a five-year period commencing on the 1 August 2013 to end on the 31 July 2018 for a value of R500 million for the five year period. Trillian acquired Nkonki in 2016.

642. In March 2018 there were several announcements made by various authorities in the accounting, auditing profession, including the AG, asking state organs to consider termination of contracts with Nkonki because of its association with the Gupta family. Transnet heeded the call of the AG and terminated the internal audit contract sometime before 31 July 2018.

643. Mr Mahomedy, the then Acting GCFO, in response to the call of the AG reviewed the other contracts Nkonki had with Transnet. His investigation revealed that in January 2017 Transnet had received unsolicited bids from Nkonki and Mr Oliver Wyman for a variety of services related to supply chain efficiencies, the coal and iron ore line volume and tariff optimisation. In a memorandum approved on 7 February 2017 and submitted to the BADC, Mr Gama (the GCEO) proposed that Transnet utilise the existing internal audit contracts for these unsolicited proposals and requested the Board to appoint Nkonki for these services as permitted non-audit services and to delegate authority to him to sign all documentation.

644. The memorandum argued that the current SCM practices at Transnet were bureaucratic, complex, onerous, and impeded by restrictive red tape. The practices needed to be "reshaped and enhanced" in order to ensure they were "more responsive, agile, and automated to increase efficiencies, create improved economic value with the aim of reducing the cost of doing business with Transnet".

The Nkonki proposal included: (i) an initial analysis to establish potential cost-savings initiatives and levers; (ii) a suggested enhancement of the management information reporting system; (iii) the required roadmaps and action steps to realise the identified initiatives; (iv) the monitoring of progress on improvement campaigns; and (v) the requisite resource capability to deliver the identified action plans.

645. Mr Gama stated in the memorandum that initiatives were needed particularly to enhance the revenues earned from the iron ore and coal businesses and that Transnet Group Commercial did not have the necessary capability and resources internally to complete the initiatives, but Nkonki, an accounting and auditing firm controlled by Mr Essa, apparently did. The precise nature of those skills and capabilities were not clearly set out in the memorandum. Nkonki was a preferred supplier supposedly because it had institutional knowledge of the Transnet environment through their internal audit engagement.

646. The proposal envisaged the work being done on "a gain share methodology" which was optimistic about the possible savings. The initial estimation was that savings that could range between R1.1 billion and R2.6 billion with a possible gain share fee at about R260 million. In his testimony, Mr Gama said he had anticipated a saving of R5 billion and thus he expected to pay Nkonki a fee of R500 million.

647. On 17 February 2017, the BADC (Chaired by Mr Shane, with Mr Gama, Ms Mabaso and Mr Nagdee, among others, in attendance) approved the use of Nkonki as consultants and delegated Mr Gama as the GCEO to sign a letter of intent for consultancy services "up to a maximum cost of R500 million". The initial five-year audit contract had commenced on 1 August 2013, valued at R500 million. The suggested extension meant an increase in value of 100% and a further 20-month extension to 2 March 2020. By 2019 Transnet had paid R 26.1 million for these related services, with a further R16 million outstanding which has been disputed by Transnet.

648. The procurement was open to question because the award of the contract did not go out to open tender, it was an inappropriate "piggybacking" on an existing contract and seemed a duplication of some of the services that were supposed to be rendered by McKinsey/Regiments. Moreover, Transnet's acceptance of Nkonki's unsolicited bid did not comply with National Treasury Practice Note 11 of 2008/2009 which governs unsolicited proposals.

649. In strict terms, National Treasury Practice Note 11 does not apply to Transnet. It is addressed to accounting officers of national departments and constitutional institutions, head officials of provincial treasuries and the accounting authorities of public entities listed in Schedule 3A, 3B, 3B and 3D to the PFMA or any subsidiary of any such entity. Transnet is a public entity listed in Schedule 2 of the PFMA. The policy in the practice note is nonetheless a salutary one and Mr Gama and the BADC considering and approving the unsolicited proposal for a R500 million contract from Nkonki shortly after it became part of Trillian may be assessed in the light of it.

THE FINANCING OF THE 1,064 LOCOMOTIVES PROCUREMENT

650. Owing to rating agency requirements of matching commitment capital to committed funding sources to reduce liquidity risk, Transnet needed to identify appropriate and cost effective funding sources to fund the 1,064 locomotives procurement. Transnet thus concluded funding facilities with USEXIM and EDC to fund the GE and BT portions of the 1,064 locomotive contracts. These facilities provided approximately R13 billion of the required funding. In August 2012 the Transnet Board approved the use of a China Development Bank loan facility to fund the acquisition from China South Rail (CSR) and China North Rail (CNR) of the locomotives that were part of the 1,064 locomotives transaction. The intention had been to borrow USD2.5 billion from the CDB to finance the procurement. There was later a change of mind, and such that only USD1.5 billion would be borrowed from the CDB and that the balance would be raised locally through a "ZAR Club Loan".

651. On 1 July 2014, Mr Singh and Ms Makgatho attended a meeting with the CDB in Beijing. There was some movement on the pricing, but the CDB made it clear that it preferred to do the deal in USD and not ZAR, thus exposing Transnet to a hedging risk and the cost of a cross currency swap. Upon her return from China, Ms Makgatho briefed her team about the trip and the next steps that were necessary to progress negotiations on the CDB funding proposal. At the end of July 2014, she learnt that the CDB was communicating directly with Regiments and that Mr Wood was leading the negotiations in parallel to Transnet. Mr Singh claimed that he got Regiments involved at this stage because he was concerned about the rating agencies. Transnet was under pressure to demonstrate to the rating agencies that it had an AB ratio that was acceptable. Mr Singh claimed Ms Makgatho and the Transnet Treasury team "had been reaching a point where there was no significant traction" in the discussion with the CDB. He then decided to get Mr Wood and Regiments involved "to understand to what extent they can actually accelerate the process and the discussions" with the CDB with a view to concluding the transaction.

652. On 25 July 2014, Mr Singh signed and despatched a letter drafted by Ms Makgatho to the CDB. The letter explained that the CDB financing was too expensive and not commercially viable for Transnet. The CDB's pricing was at between 12.9% and 13.3% whereas Transnet's weighted average cost of debt was about 9.4%. Furthermore, other fees proposed by the CDB were not in line with similar facilities and the covenants were not "investment grade" in that the CDB sought to rate and compare Transnet with Angola. This letter pointed out that Transnet had diverse sources of funding that were more attractive than the USD loan being proposed by the CDB. At the meeting in Beijing, Transnet's contracts with CNR and CSR were in ZAR and therefore a ZAR facility was a natural option for Transnet. It later became clear that the CDB would only agree to a USD loan.

653. Ms Makgatho repeatedly expressed her concerns about the financing of the procurement to Mr Singh and Mr Molefe and continued to argue against the CDB pricing proposal. She also strongly believed there was no need to use Regiments because of Transnet's internal treasury capacity. She received information that Nedbank was able to price the swap cheaper at even less than Transnet's internal pricing which was aligned to Standard Bank. Transnet's pricing model was tried and tested. However, Mr Wood later came up with a pricing proposal from Nedbank that was more expensive.

654. On 4 August 2014, Ms Makgatho was copied in an email from the CDB to Mr Wood at Regiments which indicated that the CDB was in discussions with Regiments about the pricing of the loan. She then sent an email to Mr Molefe and Mr Singh pointing out that Transnet Treasury had been negotiating with CDB since April 2014 regarding the terms and conditions of the facility and was busy comparing the current terms and conditions with similar facilities. She requested clarity about the role of Regiments in this matter at this point of the negotiations.

655. Mr Molefe called Ms Makgatho and Mr Singh to his office to discuss the matter. By then Ms Makgatho had lost confidence in Mr Molefe as she believed he was aligned with Mr Singh and intent on concluding the excessively expensive loan. Mr Molefe then convened a meeting at the Melrose Arch Hotel between Transnet and Regiments to resolve the CDB pricing proposal "impasse". The meeting was attended by Mr Singh, Mr Molefe, Ms Makgatho, Mr Wood and Mr Pillay. Mr Molefe suggested that as everyone seemed to think that Ms Makgatho's pricing indication was off the mark and the pricing Mr Wood had received from Nedbank seemed reasonable, she should agree to accept the CDB proposal. Mr Molefe testified that he saw the difference between Ms Makgatho and Mr Singh as a reasonable difference of opinion about the way forward and although he was sympathetic to Ms Makgatho's position he took a neutral position and accepted the majority view put forward by Mr Singh and Mr Wood.

656. No gap analysis was conducted to determine the needs of Transnet for the financial advisory services in relation to the specific funding needs. A gap analysis would have shown that Transnet had the requisite skills in-house to manage the CDB loan and Regiments' services were not needed. Despite Ms Makgatho's reservations about the excessively priced CDB loan, Regiments recommended that Transnet should proceed with the transactions and engaged in direct discussions with the CDB.

657. On 20 August 2014, Ms Makgatho drafted an internal memorandum for Mr Molefe to present to the Board for approval of the funding initiatives related to the procurement of the locomotives. The memorandum dealt with all the arrangements with the various funders (US-Exim; EDC; AIDB; and CDB). The memorandum recommended that the Board approve the initiative to secure the CDB facility, "subject to further terms and conditions negotiations as their proposed terms and conditions are currently not in line with similar asset backed and development finance institutions".

658. On the same day, Ms Makgatho sent an email to Mr Singh in which she discussed issues arising in her memorandum for the Board. She was concerned that the Board should not be misled about the cost of the CDB loan. On 27 August 2014, Mr Singh addressed a memorandum to Mr Molefe in response to the concerns raised by Ms Makgatho. He recommended that Mr Molefe approve his response refuting Ms Makgatho's concerns that the CDB transaction was expensive and not worth it.

659. Instead of approving Mr Singh's recommendation, on 28 August 2014 Mr Molefe merely "noted" the recommendation which Ms Makgatho understood to mean that he appreciated that Ms Makgatho's concerns had merit. He seemed to suggest that he would be willing to accept the wrong view of Mr Singh above the correct view of Ms Makgatho simply on the basis that Ms Makgatho reported to Mr Singh as the GCFO. Mr Brian Molefe declined to take any responsibility for Transnet agreeing to the CDB facility because by June 2015 when the agreement was signed, he had been seconded to Eskom.

660. In the final analysis, Mr Brian Molefe's stance was prima facie inconsistent with his duty as the GCEO and a Board Member to act with fidelity and integrity in the best interests of Transnet and to prevent any prejudice to its financial interests. As such, there are reasonable grounds to believe that he contravened Section 50 of the PFMA.

661. Ms Makgatho later discovered that Mr Singh appeared not to have relied on her memorandum of 20 August 2014 but instead made a PowerPoint presentation to the Board that was based on an analysis provided by Regiments which she regarded as flawed.

662. Mr Singh and Mr Molefe's refusal to take responsibility for the imprudence of the CDB facility appeared most starkly when they were asked during their testimony before the Commission to comment on the suggestion made by Mr Mahomedy that the terms of loan were not in the interest of Transnet and advanced the money laundering agenda.

663. Instead of dealing with the merits of the loan and addressing whether the interest rate and arrangement fees were justifiable, Mr Singh and Mr Molefe without any foundation accused Mr Mahomedy, who has served as acting GCEO and GCFO of Transnet, of not being competent to comment on the arrangement and of dishonesty.

664. Ms Makgatho decided to resign with effect from 30 November 2014, as she felt that the environment in Transnet was not conducive for her to continue with her employment. She feared for her personal safety and well-being.

The success fee of R166 million paid to Regiments for the CDB loan

665. On 28 April 2015, Mr Phetole Ramosebudi, who replaced Ms Makgatho as Group Treasurer, compiled a memorandum seeking approval from the BADC for the confined appointment of JP Morgan to hedge the financial risks emanating from the loan of USD1.5 billion from the CDB and also to approve a contract extension from R99.5 million to R265.5 million for the appointment of Regiments for transaction advisory services to support Transnet on the 1,064 locomotives transaction at an additional success fee of R166 million.

666. The memorandum described the role of Regiments as advising on deal structuring, financing and funding options to minimise risk for Transnet. The memorandum explained that the financial advice and negotiation support provided by Regiments through the process was done at risk with an expectation of compensation only on successful completion of the transaction. The range of NPV fee outcomes for such work, it was said, can vary between 15 basis points and 25 bps on a transaction of a similar nature – i.e., R166 million – R277 million based on yield. Mr Ramosebudi's proposal was supported by Mr Pita, Mr Singh and Mr Gama.

667. The following day, 29 April 2015, the BADC approved the contract extension from R99.5 million to R265.5 million (an increase of R166 million) for the appointment of Regiment for transaction advisory services and support to Transnet on the 1,064 locomotives transaction. It is not clear how the figure of R99.5 million was made up. The BADC also granted the acting GCEO Mr Gama the authority to approve all documentation.

668. On 16 July 2015 Mr Gama approved the increase in the value of the contract to R265.5 million and "the allowance for the contract period to accommodate the successful conclusion of the funding and hedging agreements with CDB and JP Morgan in order to effect the remuneration (success or risk based fee) to Regiments Capital".

669. Before the conclusion of the CDB loan and a second addendum to the MSA in July 2015, Regiments submitted an invoice to Transnet on 3 June 2015. The invoice was for "debt origination USD 1.5 billion – China Development Bank" and "arrangement of cross-currency swap and credit default swap with JP Morgan". The amount owing was stated to be in respect of a "success contingency fee". The amount of the invoice was R189 240 000, made up of the success contingency fee of R166 million and VAT of R23 240 000.

670. When the second addendum to the MSA was eventually concluded on 16 July 2015, it varied the MSA by changing the scope of services, the remuneration model, and the duration of the agreement. The second addendum to the MSA dramatically increased the fee payable to Regiments for those services.

671. There was no legal cause for the success fee due to the fact that on 4 February 2014, Transnet and Regiments had concluded the third addendum to the LOI, which specifically allocated a fixed fee of R15 million for all the funding and financing services. The raising of the USD 1.5 billion funding fell within the scope of the third addendum to the LOI, and therefore, Regiments should have been remunerated in accordance with the fees as set out in the third addendum.

672. Mr Singh disputed the claim by MNS that the work fell within the scope of the agreed fee of R15 million. The scope of the deliverables in the third addendum of the LOI contemplates deliverables of that order and the fixed fee was all-inclusive for "the required work on the financial phase of the contract" which included selecting the most appropriate funding sources and mechanisms to pursue and execute. It is thus more than doubtful that Regiments was entitled to an additional success fee for its work on the CDB loan. The work on the CDB loan fell with the scope of deliverables Regiments agreed to in both the agreement of 23 January 2014 and the third addendum to the LOI

673. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr Bloom, a financial expert, agreed that most of the services performed under the second addendum to the MSA were envisaged and covered by the third addendum to the LOI.

674. Regiments charged a fee to its obvious advantage that was not in line with market conventions and Transnet practice. Moreover, and as Mr Bloom emphasised, Regiments in any event should not have been paid such a fee firstly because it had agreed to a transaction advisory fee of substantially less (R15 million) and since Transnet had sufficient capacity in internal skills to perform the required functions.

675. A payment advice from Transnet reflects that the invoice amount of R189.24 million (R166 million plus VAT) was paid to Regiments on 11 June 2015, before the second addendum to the MSA was concluded. Monies flowed from this payment to the Gupta racketeering enterprise via the money laundering scheme. The Advisory Invoice Tracking of 7 December 2015 produced by Regiments reflects that R147 607 200 was paid to Albatime of which R122 million was laundered to Sahara Computers.

676. Mr Singh justified paying Regiments the R189.24 million prior to the conclusion of the second addendum to the MSA on the unsustainable basis that the BADC had approved the memorandum earlier. The approval of the BADC on 29 April 2015 granted Mr Gama the authority to conclude the second addendum to the MSA; it did not conclude the contract with Regiments. Mr Singh indisputably authorised payment of R189.24 million before the contract was concluded.

677. It was accordingly at the very least a breach of fiduciary duty, and most likely corruption on the part of the Transnet officials, Mr Singh and Mr Gama, involved in increasing this fee as Transnet was entitled to this contractual performance against a fixed fee of R15 million. If the BADC on 29 April 2015 had properly scrutinised the request for confinement, it would have established that there was no basis for paying R189.24 million since the Third Addendum to the LOI had provided for the fixed fee of R15 million. The members of the BADC failed to take reasonable steps to be informed of the matter under consideration and thus failed to exercise the reasonable degree of care, skill and diligence expected of them. They were in breach of their fiduciary duties and committed an act of financial misconduct by negligently permitting irregular, fruitless or wasteful expenditure.

678. Transnet has issued summons against Regiments to recover the R166 million (excluding VAT) success fee on the basis that no work was rendered which justified such a payment.

The appointment of JP Morgan, Regiments and Trillian

679. There were also irregularities regarding the fees paid in respect of the syndicated ZAR Club Loan. USD 1 billion of the CDB loan facility was shelved in favour of a ZAR 12 billion syndicated Club Loan for 15 years with a floating interest rate. The Club Loan for ZAR 12 billion that was agreed later in 2015 was made up as follows: Nedbank (R3 billion); Bank of China (R3 billion); Absa (R3 billion); Omsfin (R1 billion); and Future Growth (R1.5 billion).

680. Mr Gama signed a revised term sheet and mandate letter in April 2015 with CDB for a USD 1.5 billion loan only. In the memorandum of 28 April 2015 prepared by Mr Ramosebudi and submitted by Mr Gama to the BADC, he recommended a dual-tranche denominated loan to fund the Chinese locomotive purchases by utilising only USD 1.5 billion of the funding from CDB and the use of the balance sheet of JP Morgan to underwrite a ZAR funding facility of USD 1 billion equivalent.

681. In the memorandum of 28 April 2015, Mr Gama requested the BADC to approve the appointment of JP Morgan by confidential confinement to: (i) hedge the financial risks (interest rate, credit and currency risk) emanating from the USD1.5 billion CDB loan; and (ii) to lead and underwrite the equivalent syndicated ZAR loan of USD1 billion. At its meeting of 29 April 2015, the BADC approved the appointment of JP Morgan to hedge the financial risks but for reasons that are not evident, it appears not to have considered the appointment of JP Morgan as the lead arranger or underwriter of the ZAR Club Loan.

682. No proper case for confinement was made out in that the memorandum did not address what aspects of the economic crisis affected the transaction as to justify urgency. JP Morgan did not have unique skills in hedging the currency exposure or lead arranging the ZAR Club Loan. Moreover, once again, no gap analysis was conducted. Before procuring external consultants, Transnet was obliged to determine whether internally it had skills and resources to perform such tasks. As explained, Transnet Treasury had the ability to raise the funds itself from diverse funding sources.

683. On 6 May 2015, Transnet issued the RFP for the provision of hedging financial risks (interest rate, credit and currency) and to lead and underwrite the syndicate ZAR loan. JP Morgan's bid tendered for the hedging of the USD 1.5 billion loan facility at R40 million and for its services as lead arranger and underwriting of the ZAR Club Loan at R24 million; and based on the above estimates, it tendered 35% of contract value for supplier development, being R22,4 million.

684. Less than two months after the decision to confine the contract, on 8 June 2015, Mr Singh terminated JP Morgan's role as lead arranger on the ZAR Club Loan on the basis that Transnet had incorrectly assumed JP Morgan would provide the underwriting facility on the balance of the USD 1 billion. In the letter terminating the agreement Mr Singh stated that Transnet had decided to pursue an offer received from the Bank of China and any other availability facility and balance will be drawn from the USD 1 billion standby facility and thus the coordination of ZAR loan was not required. According to Mr Ramosebudi, the real intention at the time was to award the lead arranger role to Regiments because JP Morgan did not have the "capacity".

685. Five months after the request to appoint JP Morgan on confinement, Mr Gama approved and submitted a memorandum to the BADC on 22 September 2015 recommending that the BADC approve the appointment of Trillian to replace JP Morgan as the lead arranger of the USD 1 billion ZAR equivalent Club Loan. Mr Wood was involved in the establishment of Trillian.

686. On 14 September 2015, a few days before Mr Gama submitted to the BADC the proposal for the appointment of Trillian, Mr Ramosebudi forwarded an email without any comment to Mr Wood attaching an order made to Land Rover Waterford for a Range Rover Sport valued at about R1.3 million. The balance on the invoice was R800 000 after a trade in. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr Ramosebudi explained that he knew Mr Wood's partner, Mr Litha Nyhonyha, was a part-owner of Land Rover and he was hoping he could "do something for me". Mr Ramosebudi saw no impropriety in his attempt to secure a discount or a good deal at the time he was involved in closing a deal on behalf of Transnet with Trillian, as the vehicle was ultimately not purchased, and the deal with Trillian was "above Board". Mr Ramosebudi's conduct is prima facie evidence that he agreed or offered to accept a gratification from Mr Wood (or Trillian) for his own benefit in order to improperly influence the procurement of the contract for Trillian and thus there are reasonable grounds to believe that he may be guilty of the offence of corrupt activities relating to contracts as contemplated in Section 12 of PRECCA.

687. On 16 September 2015, Mr Thomas addressed an email to Mr Ramosebudi and Mr Pita raising certain queries about the Trillian proposal. Firstly, he pointed out that JP Morgan was still contracted to perform the currency swaps. Secondly, the confinement was silent on the fees for leading and underwriting the loan which JP Morgan had failed to deliver. If the fee for leading and underwriting the loan was not included in the costs of the funding, then there should have been or needed to be disclosure of that specific fee payable to Trillian. Mr Thomas expressed doubt that Trillian had the capacity to underwrite the loan. It was not a bank with significant assets; it was a company recently conceptualised by Mr Wood. He was also uncertain about how the role of and services to be provided by Trillian would differ to what had been offered by JP Morgan. He suggested that the prior payment of fees to Regiments had covered the services proposed to be done by Trillian and payment to Trillian would duplicate what was paid to Regiments.

688. During his testimony to the Commission, Mr Ramosebudi conceded that Trillian had no capacity to underwrite the loan and thus that the services to be offered by Trillian were not the same as those offered by JP Morgan. Moreover, at the time of proposing the substitution of JP Morgan by Trillian, the persons having the capacity to arrange the loan were still at Regiments. No-one at Trillian had the capacity to arrange the loan. Mr Ramosebudi was thus compelled to admit that his answers to Mr Thomas in his email of 16 September 2015 were false and gave the incorrect impression. He could offer no plausible or credible reason for these misrepresentations. These concessions add to the case that Mr Ramosebudi was acting corruptly, in breach of PRECCA and the PFMA, and, given Mr Essa's controlling interest in Trillian and the link to the Gupta enterprise, was associated with the enterprise.

689. On 18 November 2015, Mr Gama and Mr Pita, on behalf of Transnet, and Mr Daniel Roy, on behalf of Trillian, concluded an agreement in respect of the ZAR Club Loan facility. The engagement letter set out the terms and conditions on which Trillian was engaged by Transnet "to act as Originating, Co-ordinating Mandated Lead Arranger" in relation to the proposed R12 billion facility.

690. Transnet agreed to pay Trillian a fee of R82 million, payable upon execution of a Club Loan facility agreement relating to the transaction. Trillian issued an invoice for R93.48 million (R82 million plus VAT) on the day the mandate was concluded.

691. A payment advice signed by Mr Gama and Mr Pita was issued the next day, 19 November 2015. Mr Gama justified this on the basis that Trillian had carried out the work in the six months prior to the BADC granting approval for their appointment. He referred to paragraph 24 of the memorandum of 22 September 2015 which specifically stated that the financial advice and negotiations support that Trillian provided through the entire process took in excess of five months which was done at risk with the expectation of compensation only on successful completion of the transaction. At the time

Mr Gama signed the payment advice authorising the payment of R93.48 million he had not met any person associated with the Trillian group of companies, other than Mr Wood.

692. The ZAR Club Loan of R12 billion loan was concluded four days later on 23 November 2015. The next day, on 24 November 2015, Mr Ramosebudi compiled and signed a memorandum addressed to Mr Pita and Mr Gama requesting them to sign off on Trillian's invoice "for services rendered" and recording that Trillian had "engaged Transnet with a financing solution". Mr Pita signed the memorandum and the Trillian invoice on 2 December 2015. Mr Gama signed them on 3 December 2015. The invoice value of R93.48 million (including VAT) was paid into Trillian's bank account on 4 December 2015 – 16 days after the mandate was concluded. Four days later, on 8 December 2015, R74.784 million of that, being 80%, was transferred by Trillian to the Gupta money laundering vehicle Albatime.

693. During its investigation, MNS interviewed Ms Mothepu of Regiments and Mr Ramosebudi. Ms Mothepu confirmed that all the work done in relation to the ZAR Club Loan was executed by Regiments. Mr Ramosebudi confirmed that he had only dealt with Ms Mothepu and Mr Wood from Regiments. Even though he had drafted the memoranda recommending the appointment of and payment to Trillian and drove the process, he never dealt with any personnel from Trillian. During his testimony to the Commission, Mr Ramosebudi conceded that the work had been done not by Trillian but by Regiments. His concession amounts to an admission that he misled the BADC, unless, of course, the members of the BADC were themselves aware of the true situation.

694. In addition to the indications that the transaction advisory work charged for by Trillian had already been performed by Regiments, Trillian could not practically have done the work it was supposedly mandated to do. The engagement letter was signed on 18 November 2015. Considering that there were five members of the syndicate what would normally be involved in finalising the loan, it is inherently improbable that it was negotiated within a few days. It is hard to see how Trillian could have performed any work as the lead arranger of the loan in the time available. The task would have taken months.

695. On 12 September 2016, Regiments wrote a letter to Transnet in which it confirmed that it (not Trillian) had completed the work on the ZAR Club Loan by December 2015 and stated that the fee paid to Trillian was "excessive when compared with the amount Regiments has invoiced for the same work". The payment of R93.48 million to Trillian for work allegedly performed as part of the transaction advisory services was fraudulent, irregular and unjustified. The fee was paid to a company that did not do the work.

696. JP Morgan had also performed some of the services in respect of negotiating the ZAR Club Loan. If anything, JP Morgan's replacement by Trillian should have been only for the services that JP Morgan had not performed and by implication should have been for less than the agreed fee of R24 million payable to JP Morgan. The payment of R93.48 million to Trillian was R69 million more than the agreed amount that Transnet would have been liable to pay to JP Morgan in respect of the lead arranger and underwriting services. This deviation alone supports a finding that Mr Gama and Mr Ramosebudi probably acted fraudulently and corruptly.

697. Had the members of the BADC applied their minds they would have realised that JP Morgan had partnered with Regiments on this transaction and performed the services. Mr Gama, Mr Ramosebudi and the members of the BADC did not act in the best interests of Transnet, breached their fiduciary duties and contravened the PFMA by causing Transnet to incur irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure. Most significantly, the payment of 80% of Trillian's fee to Albatime confirms that the entire arrangement was part of the money laundering scheme associated with the Gupta racketeering enterprise. Mr Ramosebudi denied knowing Albatime or Mr Moodley at the time he arranged for the appointment and payment to Trillian.

Mr Gama's links with Trillian

698. Mr Gama's involvement in the fraudulent and corrupt payment of R93.48 million to Trillian stands to be assessed in the light of his relationship with Mr Essa and the Guptas. The evidence in relation to his earlier dismissal and reinstatement, his receiving cash payments from Mr Essa, as well as former Minister Hogan's evidence about President Zuma's efforts to have him appointed as GCEO, intimate strongly that he was favoured by those supporting State Capture. His appointment as GCEO of Transnet, in April 2016, took place shortly after he expedited the payment of R93.48 million to Trillian.

699. Mr Gama's desire to put distance between Mr Essa and Trillian is telling. His evidence that he first came to learn that Mr Essa may have been associated with Trillian was when Transnet gave consideration to cancelling its contracts with Trillian and Regiments towards the end of 2016, in the light of the ongoing dispute between them, is equally not credible. That evidence cannot be reconciled with the memorandum of 9 May 2016 from Mr Gama to the BADC, which sought approval for the cession of the GFB contract from Regiments to Trillian, wherein (following a formal vendor approval process initiated by Transnet) the shareholding of Trillian was reflected as "Trillian Holdings (Pty) Ltd 60% ... [w]holly owned by Mr Salim Essa". Mr Gama's suggestion that he just glossed over the memorandum before signing and recommending it is inherently implausible.

700. Mr Gama's dubious testimony about the extent of his relationship with Mr Essa must also be assessed in the light of other undisputed facts. By the time Mr Gama met Mr Essa in 2015, shortly after his appointment as acting GCEO, Mr Essa had in place the money laundering arrangement whereby 55% of the fees paid by Transnet to Regiments would be distributed through various vehicles to the Gupta enterprise. Mr Essa had also concluded several BDSAs with CSR and CNR on behalf of Tequesta and Regiments Asia in respect of the various locomotive procurements, and in terms of which his companies would be paid 20-21% kickbacks, most of which would be laundered to the Gupta enterprise. Mr Gama had accompanied Mr Essa to a meeting with Mr Rajesh Gupta at the Gupta compound in Saxonwold in November 2015, shortly after which he authorised a corrupt and fraudulent payment of R93.48 million to Trillian in early December 2015, 55% of which was channelled to the Gupta enterprise. A few weeks later, Mr Gama met Mr Essa in Dubai where his luxury hotel accommodation was possibly paid for (or was intended to be paid for) by the Gupta enterprise. Two months later Mr Gama was promoted to GCEO. Additionally, Mr Gama received substantial amounts of cash from Mr Essa during 2017.

The interest rate swaps on the ZAR Club Loan

701. Mr Bloom, the financial expert, analysed the risks associated with the CDB loan for USD 2.5 billion and the ZAR 12 billion Club Loan and the mechanisms used to mitigate those risks insofar as they related to interest rate and exchange rate fluctuations, credit risks and how these risks were addressed. Hedging instruments (swaps) were used to hedge both the exchange rate and interest rate risks on the ZAR Club Loan. The instruments used in relation to the ZAR Club Loan were applied corruptly to advance the interests of the Gupta racketeering enterprise.

702. On 3 December 2015, days after the conclusion of the ZAR Club Loan on 23 November 2015 at a floating rate, Mr Ramosebudi submitted a memorandum to Mr Pita, then still the acting GCFO, seeking approval for hedging the interest rate exposures from a floating to a fixed basis and permission to instruct Regiments to execute the hedges with Transnet approved counterparts. Mr Gama approved the request. The execution costs of the hedges by Regiments would be all inclusive in the rate of the interest rate swap.

703. Two tranches of interest rate swaps were executed by Regiments on the ZAR Club Loan with Nedbank as the counterparty, to the significant prejudice of Transnet. R4.5 billion of the ZAR Club Loan was swapped to a fixed rate of 11.83% for 15 years on 4 December 2015 and three months later R7.5 billion was swapped to a fixed rate of 12.27% for 15 years on 7 March 2016. The CDB debt was also swapped in cross currency swaps from USD to ZAR at each draw down. There was no significant adverse effect for Transnet in the cross-currency swaps other than the fact that these transactions could have been executed by the Transnet treasury, most likely at a lower cost. Mr Bloom and Mr Mahomedy testified at length about the prejudicial nature of the interest rate swaps. Their evidence accords in all material respects.

704. The interest rate swap on the ZAR Club Loan by Transnet was highly irresponsible for two reasons. Firstly, the ZAR Club Loan was negotiated at floating interest rates and literally within days of the agreement having been concluded the interest rate swaps were entered into changing the rates to expensive fixed rates. If there was concern about risk arising from interest rates a fixed rate should have been agreed to start with. Secondly, the fixed interest rate was set at a high level over a long period of time in an environment where it was likely that interest rates would decline and thus a floating interest rate was more beneficial to Transnet. The floating rates never exceeded the fixed rates and Nedbank's assumption that the floating rate would remain low and go lower, which seemed to be fairly predictable at the time, held true. Thus, instead of Transnet paying the floating rate which ranged between 8 to 10%, Transnet ended up paying a much higher rate of interest throughout that period.

705. Regiments played the role of executing agent, being the party that executes the transaction or the swap every quarter. Either of the parties (Transnet or Nedbank) could have been the executing agent. There were no special features to the transaction that justified the use of a service provider to execute the swaps. The swaps were so-called "vanilla swaps". Hence, the appointment of Regiments as an executing agent was not necessary. Regiments nevertheless received a commission, or an additional percentage, for every trade or every swap that it did.

706. The decisions regarding the interest rate swaps were not consistent with the FRMF which dictates that the decision to secure funding on a fixed or floating interest rate should be taken at the time of concluding the funding transaction (at the source) to avoid unnecessary costs of revising the position later. Had this been done in this instance, Transnet would have saved a substantial sum of money. They were also inconsistent with its fixed to floating debt policy. Transnet had previously adopted a "fixed rate" strategy as a matter of practice. Had Transnet stuck to this policy, the ZAR Club Loan would have been entered into on a fixed interest rate basis.

707. The justification for making the swap was baseless for a few reasons. Firstly, the decision of Transnet to lock itself into the interest rate swap agreement for fifteen years assumed an environment of higher interest rates over this period. Transnet assumed a steep increase in the trajectory of long-term interest rates. There was no indication at that point in time and to date that such dramatic upward movement in interest rates would apply. It is not possible to predict interest rates so far into the future. Secondly, to minimise the fees payable to the execution agent and counterparty, a phased approach of swapping in small increments (based on evolving market conditions or when circumstances dictated) would have been more prudent.

708. Looking at both interest rate swaps, it appears that the difference between the fixed to the floating rate on both swaps was exactly the same, approximately 2.65%. This was not in accordance with ordinary practice. Regiments and Nedbank profited from this excessive spread. Regiments would have known that the unnecessary interest rate swaps would result in it receiving significant fees.

709. Mr Bloom presented a table outlining the losses incurred by Transnet entering into these questionable transactions. The realised total negative cash flow for Transnet resulting from the first interest rate swap on the tranche of R4.5 billion was R299.3 million as at 14 May 2019, while the total negative cash flow for Transnet on the interest rate swap of R7.5 billion was R551.2 million. This translates into a total negative interest rate payment of R850 538 508. This amount of almost R1 billion would not have been payable had Transnet not effected the interest rate swaps. The table also reflects that the amount of the cost of exit (an unrealised negative cash flow) as at 14 May 2019 would be R980 478 025 in respect of both interest rate swaps. In the result, the realised negative cash flow together with the unrealised cost of exit totalled an amount of R1 831 016 534.

710. Thus, Transnet incurred a realised loss of R850 million from December 2015 until 19 May 2019. Given the trajectory of interest rates since that time and going forward, it is likely that the full loss of R1.8 billion will be realised by Transnet. In other words, Transnet incurred a potential liability of R1.8 billion by reason of having entered injudiciously or imprudently into the interest rate swap arrangements negotiated and executed by Regiments.

711. In conclusion, all the interest rate swaps were probably planned principally to benefit Regiments and were achieved through the side-lining of Transnet's treasury. Transnet treasury had and still has the expertise to handle transactions of this kind without the support of external transaction advisors or execution agents such as Regiments. The relevant transactions were typically vanilla (stock-standard) swaps that the Transnet Treasury Dealing Room has previously done and does periodically without the need for external assistance.

712. The TSDBF went on to sue Regiments Fund Managers for amounts paid to it. In November 2019, Regiments settled the TSDBF action by paying it an amount of R500 million.

THE MANGANESE EXPANSION PROJECT

713. Two witnesses before the Commission made serious allegations of malfeasance in Transnet's Manganese Expansion Project (MEP), namely: Ms Deidre Strydom, a senior employee with long service at Transnet, and Mr Henk Bester an employee of the Hatch group of companies (Hatch) a service provider to the MEP. A third witness, Mr Gerhard Bierman, the former CFO of Transnet Capital Projects (TCP), filed an affidavit relating to the MEP, but did not testify before the Commission as he has emigrated to Australia.

714. The allegations of wrongdoing made to the Commission in relation to the MEP have a narrow scope. Essentially, it is contended that persons associated with the Gupta enterprise sought improperly to benefit from the project by seeking appointment as SDPs. The rationale, financing and other commercial aspects of the project have not been directly challenged as corrupt or improper, though there is some suggestion that the budget may have been inflated to accommodate payments for unqualified SDPs. Nonetheless, it will be helpful to examine the relevant details of the MEP to gain a better contextual understanding of the alleged wrongdoing.

The scope and purpose of the MEP

715. In 2009 Transnet decided to increase export capacity via the manganese ore terminal in Port Elizabeth (PE) to 5.5 million tonnes per annum (Mtpa). It was evident that demand for capacity would continuously exceed supply as a result of the unprecedented growth in manganese exports due to South Africa being viewed as a lucrative supply market to China. Transnet conducted feasibility studies into the investment case for expanding capacity to 16 Mtpa by 2018/19 through the Port of Ngqura in the Eastern Cape. The MEP came to be seen as an anchor programme of the MDS, aimed at expanding and modernising the country's ports, rail and pipelines infrastructure to promote economic growth in South Africa.

716. The MEP proceeded in two phases. On 17 October 2012, the GCEO recommended that the Board approve the execution of the first two phases to expand the rail network capacity from the Northern Cape to the Port of Ngqura to support the MEP from 5.5mtpa to 16mtpa at a cost of R2.4 billion. An MEP Steering Committee was constituted of which Mr Gama, CEO of TFR, and Mr Singh, the GCFO, were members. Following the completion of the Phase 2 feasibility studies, the MEP Steering Committee endorsed the creation of a centralised Programme Director role for the MEP to which Ms Strydom was appointed and tasked with setting up and managing the MEP structure. She was also required to deliver and maintain the integrity of the approved business case. When she became the MEP Programme Director, Ms Strydom reported to Mr Krish Reddy, the GM: Group Planning.

717. McKinsey developed a standard for capital execution for Transnet called the Platinum 20 Standard, which recommended that the capital expenditure for rail and port should be centralised so there should be from a Group perspective a central authority responsible for the management of the oversight of the capital expenditure reporting etc. This was a departure from previous practice whereby the operating divisions were accountable for the management of the capital expenditure associated with projects.

718. Although the platinum standard recommended that the programme director should have control over capital expenditure that did not happen in the MEP. Ms Strydom had no financial delegation to manage the scope, cost and schedule of the MEP. TCP was appointed by the operating divisions to execute the respective capital projects on their behalf. This included the management of the transformation and economic development targets approved in the procurement strategy that accompanied the business case.

719. Phase 1 of the MEP was managed by TCP. During 2011, Hatch Goba was appointed by TCP via a task order under an existing "Hatch Mott McDonald Goba" contract to conduct the Front-End Loading (FEL) 2 and 3 phases of Phase 1, i.e., rail and port pre-feasibility and feasibility studies supporting the MEP. Most of the outputs for the studies were concluded towards the end of 2012.

720. Given the materiality of the estimated cost of the expansion and the requirements to spend further time on scrubbing the overall cost and schedule, a decision was taken by CAPIC towards the end of 2012 to support the ring-fencing and acceleration of critical rail operational and safety related work packages where environmental authorisations had been received. The project was named "Rail Phase 1" or "MEP 1 (Phase 1)".

721. A memorandum dated 11 January 2013 was submitted by Mr Molefe to the BADC meeting of 29 January 2013, chaired by Mr Sharma, recommending an initial R2.38 billion "no regrets" rail infrastructure investment "in support of the overall manganese ore expansion programme from 5.5 to 16mtpa". The BADC approved the "no-regrets" investment in the amount of R2.4 billion.

722. In terms of a memorandum submitted to Mr Molefe by Mr Charl Moller, GE:TCP, dated 6 August 2013, Phase 1 comprised the partial doubling of the line section between Kimberly and De Aar, and the extension of the Rosmead passing loop at an estimated cost of R2.38 billion (equating to the "no-regrets" amount approved by the BADC in January 2013). The Engineering Procurement and Construction Management (EPCM) cost was stated to range between 15-18% of project cost and calculated to be R220 million. Following an internal risk review, TCP recommended that the EPCM scope of the FEL 4 phase of Phase 1 (in which the project is executed to deliver the defined outcomes) be confined to Hatch.

723. Since the value of the transaction was below R250 million, final approval of the confinement resided with Mr Molefe, the then GCEO, and thus he had the delegated authority to authorise the expenditure. Mr Molefe approved the confinement on 19 August 2013. Ms Strydom was informed by Mr Rudie Basson, then the GM of TCP, that the ETC was deliberately reduced to fit in with Mr Molefe's delegated authority so that he could authorise the expenditure without the approval of the BADC. Mr Molefe denied this. Be that as it may, Ms Strydom accepted that the confinement to Hatch was justified. Hatch had completed all the pre-feasibility studies, so it was familiar with the detailed designs required for the rail scope of work at that stage. It was an extension of rail passing loops mainly and it would not have made sense to bring another company on board at that stage to start from scratch.

724. SDPs generally are Qualifying Small Enterprises (QSEs), Exempted Medium Enterprises (EMEs) or emerging black owned companies. Leniency applies where an SDP entity does not have extensive experience. A designated sub-contractor (that is not an SDP) is required to have the necessary extensive experience. This meant that, in terms of the RFQ, 50% of the value of the work had to be sub-contracted by Hatch to QSEs or EMEs. Ms Strydom and Mr Bester independently testified that a SD requirement of 50% was inconsistent with the norm that public sector tenders should have a 30% SD component and was probably a disincentive in that it required bidders to take on 100% of the risk but only do half of the work. Mr Molefe did not consider the 50% threshold as high.

DEC Engineering and PM Africa

725. On or about 15 July 2013, in an internal review session attended by Mr Bierman and others, Mr Singh requested that a company known as DEC Engineering (DEC) be profiled for capacity and requested it be a designated a sub-contractor on Phase 1. Mr Bierman considered the request to be inappropriate because DEC did not have a proven track record within the rail industry in respect of railway tracks. Notwithstanding his concerns, Mr Bierman conducted the profiling and concluded that the company did not possess the core skills for railway track work. He communicated his assessment to Mr Singh who appeared to accept his opinion.

726. However, on 6 August 2013, Mr Singh revised the SD pre-qualifying criteria from 30 to 50%. Mr Singh's possible motive for doing that, as appears from Mr Bester's testimony about the various meetings and engagements leading up to the confinement to Hatch, was seemingly to favour DEC as an SDP (rather than as a sub-contractor that required a proven track record).

727. Before the confinement to Hatch was approved, Mr Bester received a call from Mr. Nalen Padayachee from PM Africa (PMA) to discuss Phase 1. Mr Bester agreed to meet with Mr Padayachee on 22 July 2013 at the Hatch offices. Mr Padayachee was accompanied to the meeting by Mr Dave Reddy from DEC. Mr Padayachee explained that they knew about the potential confinement of Phase 1 to Hatch and wanted to be included as a primary SDP on the project. Mr Reddy informed Mr Bester that "Number 1" had sent him to form part of the Hatch team in executing Phase 1 of the project. Mr Padayachee and Mr Reddy suggested that their respective companies would form a joint venture to work with Hatch on Phase 1. Mr Bester expressed surprise that they knew about the confinement as this was not public knowledge, nor had it been finally confirmed. Mr Reddy and Mr Padayachee explained that they knew everything about the project and the people "high up" in Transnet. Mr Bester asked Mr Reddy who "Number 1" was. Mr Reddy responded that he could not divulge but that Mr Bester could figure it out. Mr Bester initially thought "Number 1" was a reference to President Zuma but he later realised in subsequent discussions with Mr Reddy and others that it was probably a reference to Mr Brian Molefe as in "Number 1 at Transnet".

728. Mr Bester asked Mr Reddy and Mr Padayachee to send him a MOU which Hatch would consider before giving an indication of its willingness to use PMA and DEC as potential SDPs in the future. On 25 July 2013, Mr Bester received a draft MOU from Mr Padayachee by email. The contents of the MOU made it clear that PMA and DEC wanted to be the sole SDPs.

729. Mr Bester discussed the matter with Mr Alan Grey, the MD (Industrial Infrastructure) at Hatch. Mr Grey and Mr Bester felt that the MOU was too "loose" and vague and that it needed greater precision, clearer definition of the scope of the work and roles. Hatch decided that any MOU concluded with DEC and/or PMA would be on a non-specific and non-exclusive basis as would be applicable for any potential SDP. In other words, Hatch would not agree to include these companies specifically on the MEP.

730. On 26 July 2013, Mr Bester met with Mr Basson (the GM of TCP) and Ms Strydom to inform them about what had transpired and to seek their advice. Mr Basson was surprised that Mr Padayachee and Mr Reddy had met with Mr Bester. Mr Basson told Mr Bester that Mr Singh wanted a confinement approval condition included which stipulated that PMA and DEC should form part of the SD component for Phase 1 but that he and Mr Bierman had told Mr Singh that it would not be advisable to stipulate specific companies to be used in SD initiatives. Mr Singh's proposal was subsequently dropped and thus Mr Basson was surprised that Mr Padayachee and Reddy had approached Hatch.

731. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr Singh equivocated and was evasive about whether he had indeed requested Mr Basson and Mr Bierman to include a confinement condition stipulating that PMA and DEC be part of the SD component as SDPs or sub-contractors. At first, he objected to the hearsay nature of the evidence but simultaneously stated that the requirement had been dropped, thus implying that he in fact had raised it. When that became apparent, he sought to explain his intention in making such a request with reference to the context. He intimated that he made the proposal in the context of advancing the empowerment and SD agenda, as TCP was lagging behind, and the MEP was an opportunity to drive the agenda. However, he denied that he gave a "direct instruction" to include the participation of PMA and DEC as a confinement condition. After some equivocation, Mr Singh eventually settled on the following explanation for what had transpired between him, Mr Basson and Mr Bierman, indicating that he wanted them "... to explore opportunities, alternatives of methods..." to allow Transnet "... to meet its mandates as it relates to transformation and supply development".

732. This clearly indicates that there was a discussion (probably initiated by Mr Singh) about designating specific companies as SDPs. In a WhatsApp message Mr Bierman evidently wrote to Mr Singh in response to a request to designate a specific company. In a WhatsApp reply to Mr Bierman, Mr Singh conceded that specific designation was inappropriate. Confronted with the inconsistency of this WhatsApp communication with his denial, Singh conceded that there was "a request from me to co-hire two companies". His concession reveals a willingness and inclination on his part to equivocate and dissemble until confronted with the indisputable, thus introducing significant doubt about his overall credibility.

733. Taking account of Mr Singh's concession, his equivocation and lack of credibility, Mr Bester's hearsay evidence about what Mr Basson told him is a more probable and credible version of what transpired. On Mr Singh's own version, he at the very least suggested that PM Africa and DEC be included in the confinement. Ms Strydom testified that she was disconcerted on hearing at the meeting of 26 July 2013 that Mr Padayachee and Mr Reddy had approached Mr Bester to include their companies as sub-contractors or SDPs. Firstly, the information about the pending confinement was not public knowledge and was an internal matter; and secondly Mr Reddy seemed to claim that he was acting with the authority of Mr Singh.

734. Later that day, 26 July 2013, Mr Basson phoned Mr Bester and suggested (without giving a clear reason) that Hatch sign the MOU with PMA and DEC. Mr Basson said: "just sign the damn thing". Mr Bester speculated that Mr Singh must have insisted that the MOU be signed. Mr Singh in his testimony denied that he had done so and declined to comment about the discussions concerning the MOU.

735. On 19 August 2013, the confinement was approved by Transnet. On 27 August 2013, a full tender document was issued to Hatch. A supplier code of conduct declaration was included in the tender document that Hatch had to complete and sign as part of the tender submission. The document required Hatch to declare that it was satisfied that the process and procedures adopted by Transnet in issuing the tender and the requirements requested from tenderers in responding to the tender were conducted in a fair and transparent manner. Hatch believed that it had acted correctly during the process and there was no proof of any fraudulent or collusive activity on the part of Transnet officials. It had elevated the approach by PMA and DEC to the relevant Transnet officials through the correct channels.

736. Hatch did not intend to engage with Mr Padayachee and Mr Reddy on Phase 1 nor their respective companies going forward. Any influence Mr Padayachee and Mr Reddy claimed to have had with Transnet regarding the award of the contract appears to have had no basis, especially because the confinement had been approved without Hatch having to conclude the MOU on Mr Padayachee and Mr Reddy's terms. Hatch thus concluded that the declaration could be signed and would remain the basis of all of Hatch's dealings in the future as it has been in the past.

737. There were ongoing engagements between Hatch, Transnet and Mr Reddy which culminated in a meeting at Transnet chaired by Mr Pita on 22 October 2013. This meeting was attended by Mr Grey and Mr Bester on behalf of Hatch and started late after Mr Singh failed to arrive, though Mr Bester saw him in the immediate vicinity of the office in which the meeting was held. Singh had no clear recollection of the meeting.

738. At the meeting, Mr Pita said that Mr Singh had requested that he speak to Hatch about the SD component. Hatch proposed that Transnet could itself nominate DEC as an SDP in writing. Hatch's background checks on DEC and PMA had not revealed any information about it on the internet. From Hatch's perspective, if DEC was to be appointed as an SDP, it had to come directly from Transnet and not be perceived as a decision that Hatch made of its own accord. Mr Pita responded that Transnet could not instruct Hatch in writing to appoint a particular partner as an SDP, but Hatch insisted that Transnet would have to do so if it wanted it to partner with an SDP not of its own choosing. The meeting became heated with Mr Pita at one point aggressively telling Mr Bester that he must do as he was told.

739. On 21 November 2013, Mr Molefe signed off on the memorandum, noting the award of the confinement of Phase 1 to Hatch. Paragraph 7 of the memorandum records that further negotiations led by Mr Pita had been conducted and that the requirement of 30% sub-contracting to emerging black owned companies was met by Hatch.

740. The conduct of Mr Reddy and Mr Padayachee in strong arming Hatch to appoint DEC and PM Africa as SDPs prima facie amounted to an offer by them to accept a gratification (appointment as an SDP) from Hatch as an inducement to Hatch for influencing another person to award the tender to Hatch. Alternatively, the conduct amounted to an offer to give a gratification to Hatch in order to improperly influence the procurement of a contract with Transnet. Although Hatch was awarded the Phase 1 contract without it agreeing to the appointment of DEC and PM Africa as SDPs or sub-contractors, the mere offer to accept the gratification as an inducement is sufficient. Consequently, there are reasonable grounds to believe that the specific offences of corrupt activities relating to contracts or the procuring of a tender as contemplated in section 12(1) and section 13(1) of PRECCA may have been committed in this instance.

The Phase 2 tender and the preferred bidders

741. In May 2014, the then Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Gigaba, approved the business case for the MEP, which included Phase 1 and 2. Ms Strydom saw the speed with which this business case was approved - within two months – as suspicious because elections were coming up and there were concerns that there would be a change in the cabinet and in particular within the DPE. Concurrent with the accelerated PFMA approval of the MEP business case, TCP approached the market in April 2014 for the execution of the Phase 2 rail and port EPCM (FEL3b and 4) contracts. The contracts had an estimated value of R700 million to R1 billion respectively. The tender process was managed as an audited HVT.

742. The SD criterion and small business development criterion were set at high thresholds. Bidders were required firstly to commit to 45% of the contract value being assigned towards SD. Secondly, and distinctly 30% of the contract value had to be sub-contracted to small businesses (EME and QSE start-ups and/or large significant black owned enterprises). Due to the onerous SD and performance bond requirements put forward in the business case, as advised by McKinsey, it was expected that no company on its own would have the financial backing to meet the tender requirements. Larger EPCMs had to form joint ventures and include smaller EPCM companies in their structures.

743. Two joint ventures, one comprised of Hatch, Aurecon, Mott McDonald and Siyathuta (H2N) and the other of Fluor, Aecom and Gibb (FLAG), were identified as the preferred bidders for both the Rail Phase 2 and Port Phase 2 scope EPCM contracts. Both joint ventures were advised that they would be in contention for both contracts depending on the outcome of the contract negotiation process.

744. Prior to Transnet advertising the tenders for Phase 2 in early 2014, Hatch sought the assistance of Mr Reddy to arrange a meeting with Mr Singh to discuss outstanding invoices due to Hatch for work on the New Multi Product Pipeline (the NMPP) that were causing Hatch serious cash-flow problems. Mr Reddy agreed to arrange the meeting, mentioning that he had a close relationship with Mr Singh. A meeting was then arranged at a restaurant in Melrose Arch in early 2014.

745. Mr Bester, Mr Craig Sumption and Mr Craig Simmer represented Hatch at the meeting. On arrival at Melrose Arch, as Mr Bester approached the restaurant, he was met by a man who introduced himself as Mr Salim Essa and said he was there to meet them with Mr Singh. Bester asked where Mr Singh was. Mr Essa replied that he would call him when he was ready. When Mr Bester asked Mr Essa if he worked for Transnet, he responded that he was “doing a lot of things" or had a lot of businesses. Before entering the restaurant, Mr Essa told Mr Bester that he first needed to check if the restaurant was “clean”. Mr Essa called Mr Singh, who arrived at the meeting a few minutes later.

746. The meeting focused on both the outstanding payments from Transnet to Hatch for work performed on the NMPP and the appointment of SDPs. Mr Singh did not offer any insight into the reasons for the late payments and Mr Essa was more concerned to convey that Hatch should appoint DEC as an SDP or sub-contractor on Phase 2. The meeting was brief and ended without any clear resolution of the problem of the invoices. Mr Bester had the impression that “Essa was the boss and Singh was the subordinate”.

747. Mr Singh in his testimony before the Commission on 23 April 2021 denied that he attended this meeting at Melrose Arch with Mr Essa and the representatives of Hatch. He maintained that Mr Bester's evidence was fabricated but could offer no explanation for why Mr Bester would do so. He conceded that there were no issues between them. Mr Singh made no application to cross-examine Mr Bester.

748. Mr Singh admitted that there had been problems with the invoices payable to Hatch under the NMPP. However, he sought unconvincingly to cast doubt on the credibility of Mr Bester on the basis that Mr Bester, as Director of Rail at Hatch, would not have been involved with the NMPP and had failed to attach the electronic invites to the meeting for Mr Sumption and Mr Simmer.

749. In an affidavit filed after Mr Singh gave evidence to the Commission on 23 April 2021, Mr Sumption contradicted Mr Singh's denial and confirmed that Hatch met with Mr Singh to discuss the reasons for delayed payment of invoices and the SD requirement. Mr Sumption confirmed that on arrival at the restaurant he and his colleagues were introduced to Mr Essa and Mr Singh arrived a few minutes after Mr Essa phoned him. During the meeting Mr Sumption sat next to Mr Singh. He had assumed that Mr Singh would take the lead since he was the GCFO, but in fact Mr Essa dominated the meeting. Although the intention was to discuss non-payment of invoices and issues with SD on the existing programmes, Mr Essa wanted to discuss the SDPs for the next phase of the MEP.

750. In light particularly of the evidence of the trips to Dubai and the statements of Mr Sumption, Mr Takane and Mr Gama, Mr Singh's denials about his relationship with Mr Essa are not credible and again confirm his proclivity for falsehood. The version of Mr Bester and Mr Sumption of the meeting with Mr Singh and Mr Essa at Melrose Arch is accordingly more probable.

751. Not long after the first meeting with Mr Singh and Mr Essa, Mr Bester received a call from Mr Reddy informing him that Mr Essa had requested a follow up meeting at Melrose Arch. That meeting was attended by Mr Essa, Mr Reddy and Mr Bester.

752. By then, H2N had already prepared its submission for Phase 2. At the meeting Mr Essa told Mr Bester that Hatch should include his company, which he did not name, in H2N's Phase 2 tender submission. Mr Bester told Mr Essa that H2N had already finalised its SD component and could not include his company in the submission at that stage. Mr Essa, seemingly undeterred, insisted and insinuated that he, Mr Singh and others had a lot of power. Mr Essa explained that they (Mr Essa and Mr Singh) would increase the contract value after the award and that H2N should provide initially for an additional R80 million for SD, that in time would increase to something in the order of R350 million with the contract value for Phase 2 increasing to R2 billion or more. Mr Bester was dismissive but Mr Essa assured him that he would decide what the budget of the project would be and where it would end up. Mr Essa further offered to provide Mr Bester with the tender documentation submitted by all the other bidders.

753. The second meeting with Mr Essa concluded with Mr Bester again telling Mr Essa that Hatch could not include Mr Essa's company in the H2N submission. Mr Essa nevertheless stated that he would be in contact. Mr Bester returned to Hatch's office and reported the discussion to his colleagues. He drafted an affidavit setting out what had transpired at the meeting for filing with Hatch's auditors. Mr Reddy subsequently phoned Mr Bester and asked for an answer to Mr Essa's proposal. Mr Bester replied that Hatch would not include Mr Essa's company in the H2N bid.

754. The events at the second meeting are prima facie proof of corruption. Mr Essa demanded or solicited a gratification (in the form of an SDP appointment for his company) from Hatch for the benefit of himself and his unnamed company as an inducement (by influencing Mr Molefe and Mr Singh) to award the tender in relation to a contract for performing work and providing services on Phase 2 to Hatch. Mr Essa's stated intention to inflate the contract price to facilitate the bribe is also evidence of his association with and participation in the Gupta racketeering enterprise.

755. H2N's bid for the Rail project was approximately R800 million and was ultimately successful. However, while H2N's bid for the Port project, for approximately R500 million, was the cheapest, it failed. On 30 November 2014, Mr Molefe signed a letter that awarded the Rail tender to the H2N and the Port tender to FLAG. Mr Bester suspected that the appointment of FLAG was possibly due to Mr Essa finding other ways of benefiting from the project. Mr Molefe denied being influenced by Mr Essa.

756. The PTNs were led by Ms Corli van Rensburg and Mr Velile Sikhosana of TCP supported by Mr Edward Thomas the GSCM. During the PTN, Mr Bester told Ms Strydom about the meetings with Mr Essa. She saw the proposed increase of the contract value by R80 million as a bribe. She testified that experience has shown that it is possible to create a surplus of R80 million on a project of this nature either by increasing the contract value during negotiations (after award) or by increasing the delegated contract value internally. She believed that there was a network inside and outside of Transnet acting “to improperly secure tenders to the benefit of the few”.

757. Mr Pita and Mr Singh were in control of the approval of the contract value. During the PTN, the H2N bid for the rail project decreased by R287 million (from R1063 million to R776 million); while the FLAG bid for the port project increased by R64 million (from R687 million to R751 million).

758. The PTN in respect of both Phase 2 Rail and Phase 2 Port contracts concluded in early December 2014. Ms Strydom considered the award of the Phase 2 Port scope to FLAG at an amount of approximately R200m more than the H2N bid for Port as suspicious, and in direct conflict with the project scrubbing process where the focus was to reduce capital estimates across all work packages. She rejected the rationale of awarding the Phase 2 Port scope to FLAG at the higher price as business risk mitigation. Price should have been the overriding qualifier or criterion at that stage and the award to FLAG was not consistent with the procurement policies.

759. Both Mr Bester and Ms Strydom were critical of the role played by McKinsey. During the execution of the Phase 2 project, McKinsey was always present on what H2N were told was a "review" basis. McKinsey apparently enjoyed unrestrained access to Mr Singh. On Phase 2, McKinsey’s contract value to "oversee" the project was in the region of R340 million, yet, according to Mr Bester, nobody on the Transnet management team had a clear sense of what McKinsey’s brief or deliverables were.

760. According to Ms Strydom, prevailing market conditions, in addition to Transnet’s increasing capital affordability constraints, resulted in Transnet deciding to suspend the MEP and terminate the EPCM contracts in March 2017. Transnet was in a dire financial situation at that time and the manganese ore price bottomed out to the extent that customers questioned the viability of the expansion. Notwithstanding an intensive capital optimisation exercise jointly executed with the respective joint ventures, a decision was taken to put the expansion on hold and to terminate the rail and port EPCM contracts.

Corruption and racketeering

761. Towards the end of 2014, Ms Strydom reported her suspicions of fraud and procurement irregularities in relation to the MEP to Mr Bramley May, TFR head of forensic investigations, who appears not to have pursued the matter and destroyed the tape recording of the interview as he felt it was irrelevant as it was not a TFR matter. This has been referred to the SIU for investigation.

NEOTEL AND HOMIX

762. Three witnesses testified in relation to the procurement process and transactions associated with contracts concluded between Transnet and Neotel (Pty) Ltd (Neotel): Mr Volmink, Ms Chetty and Mr van der Westhuizen. Two others, Mr Vaghela and Mr Mazibuko, gave additional evidence regarding improper payments made by Neotel to Homix (Pty) Ltd (Homix), part of the Gupta enterprise.

763. The evidence in relation to the Transnet-Neotel transactions reveals irregular conduct and a motive other than a business rationale for the decisions made in relation to the tender, which sought to extract money from Transnet for the benefit of the Gupta enterprise, specifically by Homix, an entity related to Mr Essa.

764. During the period January 2007 to December 2014, Transnet concluded three key contracts with Neotel: the 2007 Master Network Services Agreement (the "2007 MSA”); the procurement of Cisco Equipment (“the Cisco Transaction"); and the 2014 Master Network Services and Asset Buyback Agreement (“the 2014 MSA”).

765. Prior to 2009 two entities existed within Transnet which supplied IT services to Transnet. The first was Arivia which was the owner of Transnet’s data centre, including all the servers, information and data assets. It owned and operated all the hardware and software on which all the data of Transnet was kept. All the computer or electronic based information necessary for the operation of Transnet was thus centralised under the auspices of Arivia. The second entity was Transtel (Pty) Ltd, a subsidiary of Transnet, the network services provider that controlled the ICT network. It was responsible for and owned all of Transnet’s fibre assets, copper assets, routers and switches that enabled all of Transnet’s information applications to talk to each other. This comprised more than 9000 kilometres of fibre and copper cabling for regional communication and within Transnet campuses, as well as other substantial infrastructure including the switches and routers necessary for the electronic communication to take place. A decision was made in 2007 by Transnet to dispose of both businesses on the basis that they were not core to the operations of Transnet. A competitive procurement process resulted in T-Systems and Neotel respectively being the successful bidders for the data centre and the network.

766. The network services previously provided by Transtel were sold by Transtel to Neotel as a going concern in terms of a sale and purchase agreement (SPA) prior to the conclusion of the 2007 MSA in December 2007. As will become clearer later, this sale had significant strategic repercussions as it transferred control of Transnet’s network assets to an outside service provider, making it difficult (and prohibitively expensive) for Transnet to contract with any other service provider to take over the network later.

767. The 2007 MSA required Neotel to provide network services for a period of five years from 1 April 2008 until 31 March 2013. Clause 2.1 of the 2007 MSA provided that Neotel would “operate the business, assets, and infrastructure heretofore owned by Transnet and operated by Transtel in the provision of voice and data and additional telecommunications services to Transnet and its various divisions”. Hence, after the sale of Transtel, Transnet’s IT network, upon which it relied completely for the conduct of its business, was wholly outsourced and owned and managed by Neotel as an external service provider. At the same time, T-Systems managed Transnet’s data centre. Thus, the network was managed by Neotel and the data centre by T-Systems.

768. In 2012, Transnet opted not to extend the 2007 MSA with Neotel, but to put the IT network contract out to open tender. The time-consuming procurement process led to the extension of the 2007 MSA until late 2013.

769. In June 2012, nine months before the due expiry of the 2007 MSA, Transnet issued an RFP for a service provider to conduct a comprehensive due diligence exercise on its network assets and to develop a network sourcing strategy. The due diligence bid was awarded to Detecon International GmbH (Detecon), a company associated with T-Systems. Transnet further procured the services of another consulting firm, Gartner, to assist with the development of an RFP for the IT network services.

770. At a special meeting of the BADC held on 29 May 2013, the BADC resolved to authorise the GCEO “to approve the network services RFP, advertise, negotiate, award, contract and sign all relevant documentation in line with the approved strategy”. On the same day, Mr Singh and Mr Pita addressed a memorandum to Mr Molefe requesting him to approve the network services sourcing strategy and to grant authority to advertise an RFP to the open market for the provision of network services from August 2013 for three years with an option to extend for two years. The estimated spend for the network services contract was R1.5 billion over a period of three years, or R2.5 billion over five years, based on an estimate of R500 million per year. Mr Molefe approved the request and granted the necessary authority on 9 June 2013.

771. The RFP was issued on 14 June 2013 with an initial closing date of 16 July 2013 later extended to 13 August 2013. Five bidders submitted proposals: (i) Neotel; (ii) Telkom SA SOC; (iii) Dimension Data; (iv) Vodacom (Pty) Ltd; and (v) T-Systems in collaboration with Broadband Infraco SOC Ltd (BBI). BBI is a state-owned company, which at the time was working in co-operation with T-Systems. Mr Essa was appointed a director of BBI on 3 October 2011 and resigned on 14 October 2014.

772. The procurement process could not be completed by 31 August 2013, mainly due to extensions requested by the bidders, and thus the 2007 MSA was extended from 1 September 2013 to 31 October 2013 at a flat rate fee of R42.3 million per month (excluding VAT) less a discount of 0.25% per month, regardless of usage by Transnet.

773. Mr Molefe favoured T-Systems (a company linked to the Gupta enterprise) and attempted (in the end unsuccessfully) to award the network services contract to it, in addition to the data contract it already had. For that to have happened, the assets underlying the network business (the cables, the switches and the routers sold to Neotel by Transtel) needed to be transferred from Neotel. T-Systems, or for that matter any other bidder for the 2014 MSA, required the network assets to provide the service to Transnet. But after the SPA those assets were owned by Neotel and had been securitised by it after it concluded the 2007 MSA. Neotel had borrowed money and put up the assets as security for its loans.

774. The arrangement under the 2007 MSA had exposed Transnet to significant risk. Neotel as owner of the network assets had it in its power to switch off Transnet's network preventing it from using the network infrastructure, rendering it a "captive client". In addition, there was an exclusivity clause in the 2007 MSA which obliged Transnet to purchase any network equipment from Neotel. So, it was impossible for any other service provider (such as T-Systems) to provide the services unless it leased or bought the assets from Neotel; or Transnet replaced the assets at a significant cost. This led to the procurement of new equipment from Cisco, the supplier of the equipment, and efforts to buy back some of the assets from Neotel during the negotiations of the 2014 MSA. Once it seemed likely that T-Systems would get the contract and considering that much of the equipment was near the end of its life, Transnet officials entered into proactive discussions with Cisco to acquire the equipment through Neotel (due to the exclusivity clause) in order to start installing it and to transition the network from Neotel to T-Systems. Transnet at that point wanted to re-acquire ownership of the equipment but had to buy any new Cisco equipment via Neotel.

775. Neotel, Dimension Data and T-Systems were the only bidders that passed the functionality threshold and were thus considered for commercial evaluation. After a series of clarification sessions with the bidders and best and final offers were received, Neotel was ranked first of the bidders based on price and preference, with a price of R1.363 billion and preference points of 90. Dimension Data was ranked second with a price of R1.585 billion and preference points of 75.37. T-Systems was ranked third with a price of R1.737 billion and preference points of 65.35.

776. During the final clarification session held with the bidders, T-Systems indicated that its joint venture partner, BBI, was willing to negotiate optimisation with its shareholders which would result in an overall reduction of R248 million on their tendered pricing. T-Systems made this offer unilaterally and without being invited to do so at a time when the price negotiations were completed. Other bidders were not invited to make a corresponding offer of a price reduction, but some may have indicated the possibility of minor price adjustments. These proposals however were not taken into consideration by the evaluation team. Had T-System's offer been considered; it would have been placed second and Dimension Data third.

777. The evaluation team recommended that the tender should be awarded to Neotel.

778. On 30 October 2013, Mr Mahomedy (acting GCFO), Mr Matooane (CIO) and Mr Pita (GCSCO) addressed a memorandum to the acting GCEO at the time, Ms Sharla Chetty (then Pillay), requesting her, in accordance with the recommendation made by the CFET, to approve the procurement process, the award of business to Neotel and to sign the LOI and the letters of regret to the four unsuccessful bidders. Mr Molefe had appointed Ms Chetty to act in his position as the GCEO for the period 28 October 2013 – 1 November 2013 and delegated his powers to her. After considering the TEAR report, three TIA reports (confirming that the procurement process was compliant with Transnet policies), and an excerpt of the decision of the Board approving the extension of the 2007 MSA, Ms Chetty approved the procurement and signed the letters as requested.

The reversal of the award to Neotel

779. After Ms Chetty approved the award to Neotel and signed the letters of intent and regret, Mr Pita requested Mr Van der Westhuizen not to issue the letter, as he had been directed by Mr Singh not to do so, on the instruction of Mr Molefe, who was abroad at that stage and apparently wished to review the process upon his return. Neotel was then requested to continue providing the services.

780. During November 2013, Mr Van der Westhuizen was called to a meeting with Mr Molefe, Mr Matooane, Mr Thomas and Mr Singh. When he arrived for the meeting, he was requested by Mr Molefe's personal assistant to hand over his cell phone to her before entering his office. The other attendees were requested to do the same. He thought this was strange as he had previously attended meetings in Mr Molefe's office and had not been requested to hand in his phone. During the meeting, Mr Molefe indicated that he did not support the recommendation to issue a LOI to Neotel as the preferred bidder for various reasons which he later set out in a memorandum dated 20 November 2013. Mr Van der Westhuizen did not agree and raised various objections which Mr Molefe ignored. Mr Van der Westhuizen realised that his viewpoint was not being well received and decided in the interests of his career to refrain from challenging Mr Molefe. Mr. Van der Westhuizen saw the collaboration between T-Systems and BBI, of which Mr Essa at that time was a director, as factoring into Mr Molefe's decision.

781. After the meeting, Mr Singh instructed Mr Van der Westhuizen to draft a memorandum to record the outcome of the meeting. Mr Van der Westhuizen then prepared a draft memorandum, which was signed by Mr I Molefe and sent to Mr Singh (GCFO), Mr Matooane (CIO) and Mr Pita (GCSCO) on 20 November 2013. The memorandum overturned the decision of Ms Chetty to award the tender to Neotel and awarded it instead to T-Systems. Mr Brian Molefe specifically approved taking the R248 million into consideration as part of T-Systems best and final offer and referred to the following: (i) Neotel had indicated an intention to sell the network assets to Vodacom; (ii) the concentration risk arising from Transnet being Neotel's largest client; (iii) information that Neotel had diluted black ownership of the company; (iv) an information security incident at Neotel that had exposed Transnet to unnecessary risk; and (v) problems with the functioning of Neotel's security cameras in the ports. Mr Molefe recorded his view that awarding the business to Neotel would expose Transnet to unnecessary risk.

782. The award of the preferred bidder status to T-Systems by Mr Molefe made it necessary to plan for a transition of network services from Neotel to T-Systems. At the time, Neotel was still managing the ICT network and the relationship between it and Transnet had become strained. Mr Molefe was obliged to extend the 2007 MSA on 11 December 2013 for a period of 12 months at a substantially increased monthly fee. Having sold its network assets to Neotel in 2007, Transnet was in a weak bargaining position. Neotel also advised that certain network equipment had reached end-of-life and needed to be replaced. Transnet accordingly engaged with Neotel to purchase or lease the network related hardware and infrastructure deployed in the yards and ports of Transnet. Neotel was not amenable to the sale of these assets due to the fact that they had been securitised. It was also reluctant to replace any equipment during the extension period as the duration of the extension was uncertain.

783. On 21 February 2014, Mr Van der Westhuizen addressed a memorandum to Mr Singh requesting approval to procure equipment (switches and routers for all Transnet campuses) from Cisco via Neotel to a maximum value of R305 million. T-Systems undertook to remove this cost from their tender. Mr Singh approved the request on 21 February 2014 and Mr Van der Westhuizen immediately directed Mr Francois van der Merwe, the executive responsible for the Transnet account at Neotel, to proceed with ordering the equipment from Cisco.

784. On the same day, 21 February 2014, Mr. Taufique Hasware Khan the CFO of Homix (a company associated with Mr Essa) sent an email to Mr Van der Merwe at Neotel which attached a copy of a fax sent for his attention on 6 January 2014. The letter presented an opportunity for Homix to work with Transnet to replace network equipment to the value of R315 million (excluding VAT). Homix intimated that they were able to provide advisory services to Neotel and facilitate the direct award of contract from Transnet to Neotel. Furthermore, given that Homix would carry great risk for the project, they requested a 10% success fee to be paid within 14 days from the date of the award of contract to Neotel. The next day, 22 February 2014, Mr Van der Merwe emailed Mr Khan at Homix attaching a letter of acceptance.

785. Mr Van der Westhuizen testified that he had not met any person or representative from Homix during the interaction with Neotel on the Cisco switches transaction. It was unclear to him how Homix identified this “opportunity” and was surprised that Homix knew about the approval of the transaction by Mr Singh on the very day of approval. He doubted whether Homix could have added any value. The exclusivity arrangement obliged Transnet to procure network equipment from Neotel and thus Neotel would have had no need at all for any services from Homix. Moreover, if there had been a genuine need for Homix’s facilitation services on the Cisco transaction, it would have been brought to Mr Van der Westhuizen’s attention as he was the team leader of the commercial team. This did not happen, which strongly intimates that no facilitation by Homix in fact took place.

786. A fee of R30.3 million (excluding VAT) was nonetheless paid by Neotel to Homix in respect of its alleged rendering of services in the Cisco transaction. There is no documentary evidence supporting this payment. However, the evidence of Mr Mazibuko, Head of Financial Surveillance at the South African Reserve Bank (SARB), confirmed that Homix was paid R75.5 million by Neotel in 2015. This amount seems to be made up of the payment for the Cisco transaction and the payment in terms of a business consultancy agreement that is discussed below. It is likely that the additional cost was passed on to Transnet.

787. During April 2014, Transnet’s external auditors reported that T-Systems should have been disqualified from the tender due to the conflict of interest and the rounding-off issue. They also questioned Mr Molefe’s authority to revoke the award and expressed the view that the factors which he took into consideration undermined the fairness and transparency of the tender process.

The 2014 MSA negotiations

788. The negotiations with Neotel to finalise the 2014 MSA took place in the final quarter of 2014. There were two streams in the negotiations: a commercial stream and a technical stream. Mr van der Westhuizen led the negotiation team in the commercial stream. A contentious issue during the negotiations was the buyback by Transnet of its ICT network assets and infrastructure. Transnet sought to re-acquire ownership of the equipment and infrastructure that it had imprudently sold to Neotel as part of the Transtel sale.

789. The negotiations were difficult and at a point in time there was a temporary stalemate because of the inability of Transnet and Neotel to find agreement on a number of issues. In an attempt to resolve the stalemate, Mr Singh became involved as did Mr Sunil Joshi, the CEO of Neotel. A meeting took place between Mr Van der Merwe from Neotel and Mr Singh, on 8 December 2014, in Umhlanga. Mr Van der Westhuizen was unaware of the purpose of that meeting or why the Transnet GCFO would meet directly with the supplier during the contractual negotiations without including anyone from the Transnet negotiating team. Mr Singh testified that he could not recall the meeting.

790. Three days later, on 11 December 2014, another meeting took place at the "SLOW Lounge" in Sandton attended by Mr Van der Westhuizen and Mr Singh from Transnet and Mr. Joshi and Mr Van der Merwe from Neotel. Mr Singh testified that the meeting was proposed either by Mr Van der Westhuizen or the negotiating team. A long list of issues still needed to be finalised and the negotiations had become strained. Mr Singh testified that a meeting was justified and there was nothing untoward in meeting Mr Joshi to discuss the matter because a stalemate had been reached by the two parties. It was necessary to engage with Neotel constructively at a senior management level to regularise the relationship. At some stage during this meeting, Mr Singh and Mr Joshi met separately to discuss the final terms of the repurchase of the network assets and infrastructure. Mr Van der Westhuizen was not provided with feedback after this breakaway meeting.

791. A final meeting to finalise the MSA took place on Saturday 13 December 2014 at the offices of Neotel.

When all was done, Mr Van der Westhuizen gave Mr Singh the final draft of the negotiated MSA and relevant approval documents. That day was Mr Van der Westhuizen's last day in the employment of Transnet. The 2014 MSA was signed by Transnet on 15 December 2014 and by Neotel on 19 December 2014.

792. Clause 25 of the 2014 MSA governed the asset buy-back issue. It dealt with distinct classes of assets differently. It provided inter alia that on the termination or expiration of the MSA, Transnet could exercise its rights to purchase any Service Provider Owned Equipment dedicated to the provision of services in accordance with clause 54.3.6 of the 2014 MSA. Clause 54.3.6 essentially provided that if and as requested by Transnet, as part of the disengagement, Neotel would convey to Transnet (from among those dedicated assets used by Neotel to provide the services) such assets as Transnet might select at specified prices. Further, in terms of clause 25.4, Neotel agreed to sell immediately to Transnet the assets identified in Attachment P to the agreement, used exclusively to provide services to Transnet and physically held within Transnet premises, for an amount of R200 million. Evidently then, the asset buy-back had been successfully resolved by Monday 15 December 2014 when Transnet signed the 2014 MSA.

793. On Friday 12 December 2014, unknown to Mr Van der Westhuizen, the CFO of Homix, Mr Khan (who was also associated with BEX, the Gupta linked company that benefited from the relocation of CNR to Durban), addressed a letter to Mr Joshi offering their services to assist "... both entities to find a workable solution". Mr Khan further intimated that "... Homix shall not bill for any time and material or any out of pocket expense. If successful, Neotel shall pay Homix" a number of fees including a full and final once off fee of R25 000 000 and 2% of the contract value for the MSA currently at R1.8 billion (excluded VAT).

794. This proposal by Homix thus envisaged that Neotel would pay Homix two amounts totalling R61 million: R25 million for the asset buy-back agreement and R36 million (2% of R1.8 billion) on conclusion of the MSA. The letter was sent by Homix shortly after Mr Van der Merwe on 11 December 2014 shared confidential Neotel documents with Homix, including a briefing document for Mr Joshi, the CEO of Neotel, in preparation for his meeting with Transnet later that day.

795. The assertion in the letter that the two deals (the 2014 MSA and the asset buy-back) were "lost business" on Friday 12 December 2014 (and confirmed as such by both Neotel and Transnet) is not credible considering that both deals were closed the next day (Saturday 13 December 2014) and signed by Transnet on Monday 15 December 2014. It seems improbable that services of Homix to the value of R61 million were either necessary or rendered in the 24 hours from Homix's proposal to the conclusion of the 2014 MSA and asset buy-back.

796. Mr Joshi signed two "business consultancy agreements" with Homix on 19 February 2015, two months after the 2014 MSA and asset buy-back was concluded. Both are signed and dated by Mr Joshi and signed but not dated by Mr Khan. Neotel paid Homix R41.04 million (being R36 million plus VAT of R5 040 000) on 27 February 2015.

797. Although the preamble and other clauses intimate that the two agreements were concluded in respect of future services, the other terms of the agreements indicate that in important respects they related to the 2014 MSA and the asset buy-back which had been concluded two months earlier.

798. Mr Van der Westhuizen who successfully led the negotiation of the MSA to a conclusion on 13 December 2014 (the day after Homix's initial letter proposing a business consultancy agreement with Neotel) was unaware of the existence of Homix at the time he closed deal. He subsequently learned in the media that Homix was paid by Neotel for allegedly facilitating negotiations between Neotel and Transnet. He testified that he never met or had anything to do with any person or representative of Homix during the negotiations with Neotel. No member of his team had anything to do with any person from Homix during the negotiations. The reference in the letter of 12 December 2014 to "lost business" and the representation of the negotiations as being at "impasse" was nonsensical in light of the successful conclusion of the deal the next day. The idea that any representative from Homix would have been able to get the parties to reach agreement within a single day is implausible.

799. Mr Singh could not confirm that Homix had performed in terms of the agreements and had no idea why Neotel had paid Homix R41.04 million. He testified that he had no interaction with Homix. After Deloitte the auditors of Neotel queried this transaction, Neotel was compelled to investigate it. During that investigation, Mr Ashok Narayan of Homix wrote a letter to Mr Joshi dated 2 July 2015 justifying the fee it received. No witness for Homix has testified to the Commission regarding the content of this letter. It is nonetheless the only account of Homix's version on record.

800. The letter commences with the inaccurate statement that "both the Asset Sale and the MSA were covered under a single Agreement between Homix and Neotel." That is not correct. There were two agreements. Moreover, the fee paid to Homix in terms of the invoice of 2 January 2015 was limited to a "success fee" for the successful conclusion of the MSA. No fee was paid (R25 million) for the asset buy-back. The letter sets out that Mr Van der Merwe met Homix's representative, Mr Mandla, at JB's Restaurant in Melrose Arch, the same restaurant at which Mr Bester of Hatch met Mr Essa in relation to Transnet's MEP project on 11 December 2014. At the meeting Mr Van der Merwe "requested consulting assistance with a fresh perspective to help Neotel close the deal". The following day, 12 December 2014, Mr Van der Merwe and Mr Mandla met again and agreed on a fee of 2%. The letter sets out the services rendered over three days supposedly justifying a fee of R36 million (excluding VAT).

801. The first observation that can be made about this explanation, besides its lack of specificity, is that it implies that Homix consulted with Transnet senior managers to assess the problem. The letter does not disclose who at Homix engaged with whom at Transnet and Neotel, besides Mr Van der Merwe. Mr Van der Westhuizen made it clear that neither he nor any member of his team knew of the existence of Homix or discussed the 2014 MSA or asset buy-back with it. Mr Singh confirmed that. Secondly, the claim that research by unidentified senior consultants (with unstated expertise) unearthed "a lever" is not substantiated. The auditors were unable to find any evidence that corroborated any of the assertions in the letter.

802. Furthermore, the advice allegedly given by Homix was so banal as to render the explanation wholly incredible. What it boils down to is that Homix advised Mr Van der Merwe, an experienced manager with negotiating experience, to: (i) act urgently to avoid censure by Parliament; (ii) arrange a meeting between Mr Singh and Mr Joshi; and (iii) ensure the presence of Neotel executives in the negotiations. This intervention, together with the pinpointing of "several key factors and a principal lever", Homix contended led both parties to understand each other's positions and reach agreement without further difficulty, thus justifying a fee of R36 million (excluding VAT). It achieved this result without meeting with or consulting a single member of the Transnet team and by allegedly meeting with Mr Van der Merwe once or twice.

803. The supposed "value add" by the intervention of Homix in the last hours of the negotiations is wholly improbable and a likely ex post facto false justification of a corrupt payment made to the Gupta enterprise as part of a pattern of racketeering activity. Mr Van der Westhuizen was not able to say whether Neotel inflated its price to use the additional money to pay the fee to Homix. He did consider the final price to be excessive, but Transnet was in a weak bargaining position because Neotel was in possession of the network assets, the 2007 MSA was about to expire and a further extension of the 2007 MSA would have been expensive. In paying the R41.04 million to Homix, Neotel breached clause 65.6 of the 2014 MSA which included a warranty against corrupt payments and permitted Transnet to cancel the 2014 MSA.

804. During the audit of Neotel for the 2015 financial year Deloitte, became concerned that the payments by Neotel to Homix were irregular. As part of its routine audit testing, the Deloitte audit team was provided with a creditors' age analysis on 28 February 2015, which identified Homix as a new vendor and reflected a debit balance of an amount of R41.04 million which was not disclosed properly in the financial statements. The incomplete and questionable nature of the available information prompted Mr Andre Dennis and Mr Chetan Vaghela of Deloitte to meet with Mr Steven Whiley the CFO of Neotel on 9 April 2015, and with Mr Joshi and Mr Whiley again on 11 April 2015.

805. Mr Joshi and Mr Whiley confirmed that Neotel had made two payments to Homix during the 2015 financial year totalling R75.57 million: an amount of R34.53 million was paid on 3 April 2014 in relation to the Cisco deal and R41.04 million was paid on 27 February 2015 in relation to the MSA. The controls applied by Neotel for the loading of creditors on its system were not followed in respect of Homix. The contract with Homix in relation to the 2014 MSA was concluded by Joshi, without Board approval and in the opinion of the auditors fell outside the scope of his authority. The payments were approved by both Mr Whiley and Mr Joshi. They explained to the auditors that Homix had come on Board on 12 December 2014 to assist with the supposed impasse in the 2014 MSA negotiations and was paid R41.04 million for one day's work. The suggestion to use Homix had come from Mr Van der Merwe. Neither Mr Joshi nor Mr Whiley could offer much in the way of description or explanation of the work performed by Homix other than to say that it had resolved the impasse.

806. Mr Vaghela met with Mr Van der Merwe on 13 April 2015. He became aware of Homix for the first time when he received the letter from Homix in early 2014 notifying him of the Cisco deal for which Neotel had not been invited to tender. This explanation is inconsistent with the fact that Transnet was tied into an exclusive supplier agreement with Neotel and thus did not need to tender. Mr Van der Merwe claimed Homix was a Dubai based company offering specialised consultancy services with a staff of 100 employees and offices in Silverton Pretoria. He usually met with Homix, particularly Mr Ashok Puthenveedu, at Melrose Arch. Mr Van der Merwe believed that the fee of R41.04 million for work of one or two days by Homix was justifiable. The Deloitte audit team doubted the commerciality of the fee paid and assumed it was a "facilitation payment" (a payment of a fee for no value).

807. Subsequent investigations established that Homix was a shell company with little or no resources. A CIPC search on the registration number of Homix returned no result; telephone calls made to the specified contact details were unanswered; an internet search on the registered address of Homix returned the address as being registered to a charity; and the website address did not return a valid webpage. Searches on Puthenveedu revealed that he was associated with Sahara, a company linked to the Gupta enterprise.

808. Following further engagements, the auditors on 8 February 2016 reported other RIs to the IRBA, in particular that the directors of Neotel had failed to report the corrupt transactions to the Financial Intelligence Centre within 15 days as required in terms of Section 29 of FICA and Section 34 of PRECCA. Neotel took issue with some of the reporting obligations which the auditors alleged applied to it in terms of FICA and PRECCA. However, it agreed on the advice of counsel to file some reports out of an abundance of caution but denied that there had been any breach of fiduciary duty in the failure to report and contended that in some instances it had complied with its PRECCA obligations.

809. Mr Joshi and Mr Whiley were placed on special leave by Neotel on 31 July 2015 and eventually re-signed on 30 November 2015 during the disciplinary proceedings against them. The audited financial statements were qualified in respect of the commerciality of the Homix transactions and disclosure on the matter is noted in the financial statements.

The SARB investigation into Homix

810. Mr Shiwa Mazibuko, the HOD: Financial Surveillance of the SARB testified before the Commission in respect of Homix and its directors (Mr Taufique Shaukat Hasware (Khan), Mr Yakub Ahmed Suleman Bhikhu and Mr Mugamat Shakif Adams) and the flow of funds on bank accounts held by Homix domestically and internationally.

811. SARB FinSurv established that Homix operated accounts at Standard Bank. From March 2014 (about the time of the Cisco transaction) there was a marked increase in the number of transactions in the accounts. During this period, the accounts received several large deposits. A cash flow analysis for the period 28 March 2014 to 3 December 2015 showed credits of more than R660 million among which were the two payments totalling R75.57 million from Neotel. Homix also received R179.5 million from Regiments during this same period.

812. The bank statements of Homix reflect regular large transfers to the accounts of two local entities, Ballatore Brands (Pty) Limited and Bapu Trading Close Corporation respectively. Notably, during April 2014, an amount of R34.5 million (including VAT) in respect of the Cisco transaction was transferred from Neotel to the Homix account at Standard Bank, after which the entire amount was depleted by means of electronic transfers to Ballatore Brands and Bapu Trading. The sole director of Ballatore Brands was Mr Mohamed Akram Khan who was the sole director of Syngen Distribution (Pty) Ltd. It appears from the statements of Bapu Trading's bank account held with Standard Bank that funds received from Homix were mainly transferred to Syngen's bank accounts.

813. The disbursement of the funds in the Homix Standard Bank accounts (including the money paid by Neotel) breached the Exchange Control Regulations. The exchange control function of the SARB is primarily governed by Section 9 of the Currency and Exchanges Act read with the Exchange Control Regulations. The Exchange Control Regulations prohibit various transactions which may only be entered into with the permission of the National Treasury or persons authorised by the National Treasury.

814. In May 2015, Mercantile Bank Limited, an authorised dealer, referred certain suspicious foreign exchange transactions involving Homix to FinSurv. During the period 21 to 28 May 2015, Homix effected thirteen cross-border foreign exchange transactions via Mercantile, with an aggregate value of approximately R51.8 million. On 29 May 2015, Homix attempted to affect a further three transactions, to the value of an additional R14.47 million but was prevented from doing so by the FinSurv. The relevant documentation revealed that Homix effected sixteen payments in favour of only two beneficiaries domiciled in Hong Kong, being Morningstar International Trade Limited ("Morningstar") and YKA International Trading Company that had little online or other commercial presence. Three MRNs were supplied by Homix to justify the sixteen transactions. Investigations on the SARS system revealed that while the MRNs were valid, the total value of goods cleared amounted to less than R50 000. Hence, the value of the payments made out of South Africa did not match the value of the goods claimed to be imported. Authorisation was sought for R51.8 million to leave the country, while only R50 000 worth of goods were to be imported.

815. All of the relevant transactions were 'booked' with Mercantile via Peritus Forex Solutions (Pty) Ltd, a treasury outsourcing company which acts as intermediary between an authorised dealer and a client attending to foreign exchange transactions on behalf of the client. A "trading account" was opened for Homix at Mercantile, and a mandate provided to Peritus to transact on its behalf. Peritus received instructions for the relevant foreign exchange transactions for Homix from Mr Bhikhu. After examining other documents, FinSurv was persuaded that the SARS EDI documentation provided to Mercantile by Homix was falsified.

816. After the finalisation of the investigation, a letter was sent by email and registered mail to Homix inviting it to make representations as to why the funds 'blocked' in the Mercantile account should not be declared forfeit to the state. FinSurv never received a response to this letter, nor did any person contact it regarding the contents thereof. The amount of R14.47 million was declared forfeit to the state in terms of Regulation 228 on 30 December 2016.

817. Mr Mazibuko testified that the Homix transactions displayed all the hallmarks of a money laundering scheme aimed at disguising the origin, true nature, and ultimate destination of funds.

T-Systems: The IT data tender

818. During January 2010, Transnet entered into an agreement with T-Systems for the provision of IT data services. Five extensions of the contract took place between 2010 and 2019. The total value of the contract over the nine years of its operation was approximately R4.8 billion.

819. Issues arose with T-Systems in 2015 when it was discovered that Transnet Group Capital was paying T-Systems for approximately 2200 computers when only 1100 were employed by the division. Furthermore, 450 computers leased through the T-Systems contract in July 2015 were delivered to Transnet but then disappeared. The forensic team of Transnet found that these computers could not be traced as the tracking software was not installed. The relevant contract was subsequently ceded initially to Zestilor and then later to Innovent Rental and Asset Management Solutions (Pty)

Ltd. Zestilor was owned by Mr Essa's wife. Transnet carried on paying rent for these leased computers for several years without having the benefit of them. Other evidence shows that T-Systems made regular monthly payments to Zestilor for the benefit of Essa and his wife, thus establishing some link between T-Systems and an associate of the Gupta enterprise.

820. During November 2015, Transnet issued an RFP to the open market for the supply of IT data services. Prior to issuing the RFP, Transnet contracted Gartner Ireland to review the services procured from T-Systems through the IT Outsourcing Master Services Agreement (MSA) and to draft new technical specifications, technical evaluation criteria and improved service level agreements. The process was initiated by the GCIO of the time, Dr Mantsika Matooane, who approved the business case, the service requirement specifications, the evaluation criteria and the appointment of the CFET. Before the RFP was issued, Transnet extended the T-Systems contract until 31 December 2016. The Transnet Board sub-delegated its authority to the GCEO (Gama) to approve the RFP, issue the RFP and conduct due diligence and PTN.

821. The RFP was for the outsourcing of data services for the whole of Transnet. The outsourced services related to the build and upkeep of Transnet's IT estate which included: (i) the data centre and hosting services - which included servers, databases, storage, mainframe and the disaster recovery of these services; (ii) the help and services desk; (iii) the collaboration services and applications used by Transnet; and (iv) end user computing. The tender, estimated to cost R1.85 billion over five years, was a consumption-based contract and had an un-costed portion driven by new projects when required.

822. Four witnesses testified in relation to the award of the RFP and the controversy that arose in relation to it: Mr Popo Molefe, Mr Volmink, Mr Mahomedy and Ms Makano Mosidi.

823. In January 2017, the T-Systems contract was extended for a second time by a further nine months to enable Transnet to finalise the award of the RFP, which at that time was still at the adjudication stage. Transnet was obliged to extend the contract three more times between October 2017 and 8 March 2019.

824. The evaluation process resulted in seven bidders meeting the technical standards of the tender: T-Systems; Gijima Holdings (Pty) Ltd (Gijima); Ubuntu Technologies (Pty) Ltd (Ubuntu); Wipro Technologies South Africa (Pty) Ltd; Business Connexion (Pty) Ltd; EOH Mthombolo (Pty) Ltd; and Mobile Telekom Networks (Pty) Ltd.

825. On 30 June 2016, Ms Mosidi received an email from Mr Pita recommending a shortlist of only two bidders for the final round of adjudication, namely T-Systems and Ubuntu. These, he explained, provided the first and second lowest priced bids in terms of the PPPFA 90/10 principle – 99% and 86.2% respectively. Ms Mosidi responded recommending to Mr Pita and Mr Gama (then GCEO) that four bidders be shortlisted because she was concerned that bidders sometimes withdraw unexpectedly in complex and commercially sizeable tenders, resulting in the extension of the evaluation process unnecessarily. A shortlist of two bidders was cutting it too fine. Seven bidders had successfully satisfied the technical requirements and increasing the shortlist from two to four would not be onerous.

826. In an email addressed to Ms Mosidi and Mr Pita dated 6 July 2016, Mr Gama rejected Ms Mosidi's proposal saying it was "adialectic to think negotiating with more will save more time or money". Ms Mosidi's view proved to be correct. On 20 July 2016, Ubuntu withdrew from the PTN process. On the instructions of Mr Gama, the third highest ranking bidder, Gijima, was then added to the shortlist.

827. During July-August 2016, due diligence was conducted on T-Systems and Gijima, after which they were requested to submit their BAFO. Gijima provided the lowest priced bid and scored a final score of 99%. T-Systems scored a final score of 85.07%.

828. After the due diligence exercise (done by Gartner Ireland), Mr Pita and Mr Thomas prepared a memorandum addressed to Mr Gama recommending the award of the tender to T-Systems. The purpose of the due diligence was to identify business risks to minimise Transnet's operational risks after contract award. No major risks were identified on T-System's bid. However, several risks were identified in relation to Gijima's bid. These included: (i) a risk that the data centre still needed to be built and outstanding equipment needed to be procured from overseas, which may have delayed the transition; (ii) a marginal security risk that Gijima did not have a dedicated security operations centre; and (iii) a major risk with regards to Gijima's transition commitment from the current service provider (T-Systems) which would lead to additional cost for Transnet in the migration from CMO (current mode of operation) to FMO (future mode of operation).

829. An engagement with Gijima about addressing the risks did not prove satisfactory. The CFET felt that Gijima did not provide a strategy on mitigating the risks, which it believed were material. It was concerned that by selecting Gijima "with their current proposition", Transnet ran the risk at not being at CMO and FMO within six months. There was also a risk of the transition project over-running, which would be costly for Transnet.

830. Based on the identified business risks, the CFET decided that Gijima should not be recommended for the award of the tender and that T-Systems instead be recommended as the successful bidder. On 22 September 2016, Ms Mosidi was presented with the complete file of the evaluation process by Mr Thomas, the then GCSCO, and was requested to sign the memorandum to Mr Gama recommending the award to T-Systems. She went through the file and could not "reconcile some evaluation aspects to the final recommendation". While the procurement process was in accordance with the procurement policy, she felt the recommendation was not in line with the evaluation outcome. The bidders had submitted their BAFO in August 2016, which meant that all technical evaluations and risks had been assessed and finalised, with the result that the only consideration left for bid assessment was pricing. As mentioned, Gijima had offered the lowest priced bid in the BAFO stage. The recommendation of T-Systems as the preferred bidder, in her opinion, was accordingly inconsistent with the outcome of the BAFO evaluation process.

831. Ms Mosidi was later called to a meeting at the Carlton Centre to conclude the adjudication process and append her signature to the memorandum as the business owner. The memorandum presented at the meeting was similar to the memorandum she had seen earlier. It was compiled by Ms Pheladi Xaba, Commodity Manager: Group Strategic Sourcing. Despite her ambivalence and not wanting to delay the process, Ms Mosidi appended her signature to the recommendation but added in the manuscript that she thought the risks as captured could be mitigated, Gijima could deliver against the requirements and had the right country profile. Mr Thulani Mtshwene, the Executive Manager: Governance also had some reservations and noted on the memorandum that his signature was conditional on the high value tender report being satisfactory and that objective criteria were applied.

832. The discomfort that Ms Mosidi experienced about the recommendation to award the bid to T-Systems led her to write a detailed response regarding each mentioned risk, explaining why they were not real risks. She gave the document to Mr Mboniso Sigonyela, the Executive Manager in Mr Gama's office who advised her to hold back her response for "the right time".

833. At about the same time, Ms Mosidi was made aware of a letter, dated 5 October 2016, addressed anonymously by a group of "Concerned and Proud Transnet Employees" to Ms Disebo Moephuli, the then Chief Corporate and Regulatory Officer, pertaining to the tender. It is clear from its contents that the employees were either members of the CFET or worked closely with it. The letter made several allegations including: (i) the procurement process had been corruptly manipulated as part of state capture; (ii) the Gijima award was R230 million cheaper; (iii) the identified risks were manufactured to award the bid to T-Systems despite it losing on merit; and (iv) Gijima, a local company with better B-BBEE credentials, had been prejudiced by a deliberate flouting of the procurement policies. The letter confirmed Ms Mosidi's discomfort about there being something untoward in the process.

834. Around October 2016, Ms Mosidi met Mr Gama at the Tintswalo Hotel in Waterfall Estate, Johannesburg where they discussed the tender. She assumed that he had read her memorandum and knew of her objections. Mr Gama had not at any point in the past taken a contrary position to her or openly disagreed with her reasoning. Ms Mosidi explained to Mr Gama that the decision to award the tender to Gijima was the right one, as it was inappropriate for risks to be re-introduced post the BAFO stage. The risks were irrelevant, misleading, or immaterial. Mr Gama in response prevailed upon Ms Mosidi to get her facts straight as procurement could be a life endangering business. Mr Gama's warning rattled Ms Mosidi. She understood him to be asking her if she was aware of the dangers of going against the tide.

835. In his evidence before the Commission, Mr Gama denied that he attempted to intimidate Ms Mosidi at the meeting at the Tintswalo Hotel. He intended to assure her that she had his full support to carry out her role as the GCIO and to determine why she had signed the September 2016 memorandum recommending that T-Systems should be awarded the business, despite her discomfort. He said he had a sense that she may have been intimidated to sign the document and he needed to engage with her to give her the comfort that she could disagree with things. He also needed to get a sense of whether she had the courage to disagree and put forward facts of her own for her to be able to make those decisions. He admitted though that he might have said people are willing to pay lots of money to survey people who make decisions about procurement.

836. The version that Mr Gama may have put pressure on Ms Mosidi gains a measure of credibility from the ultimate award of the tender to T-Systems. As will become clearer later, key decision-makers at Transnet were determined to give the contract to T-Systems and most likely wanted the support of the GCIO to advance that preference.

837. In late December 2016, Ms Mosidi met with Mr Gama and Mr Thomas in Mr Gama's office. Mr Gama suggested that she as GCIO and the business owner of the tender should test the identified risks with Gijima. He also directed that Procurement should facilitate an engagement and send questions to Gijima.

838. On 19 January 2017, Mr Macdonald Maluleke, Category Manager: Group Strategic Sourcing, addressed a letter to Gijima posing several questions related to the identified risks associated with Gijima's transition plan, possible delays; the reduction of its final price by 31% and the like. At a meeting held at the offices of Transnet Engineering in Kilner Park on 23 January 2017, Gijima was able to address all the issues raised concerning the transition from CMO to FMO, their R500 million price reduction, the steps to be taken in getting the data centre operational, the pre-ordering of equipment and related matters. At the end of the meeting, the Transnet team agreed that all risks had been mitigated and agreed that the tender should be awarded to Gijima.

839. In early February 2017, two separate memoranda were drawn up with different recommendations for Mr Gama's signature. The one memorandum from Mr Pita recommended the award of the tender to T-Systems, and the other from Ms Mosidi recommended the award of the tender to Gijima. Mr Gama requested Mr Pita and Ms Mosidi to "iron out" their differences and submit one memorandum for him to approve. They finally signed a memorandum dated 8 February 2017 recommending that the tender be awarded to Gijima.

The BADC and Board meetings and the award to T-Systems

840. The BADC met on 13 February 2017 to consider the award of the tender. Before the commencement of the BADC meeting, Mr Shane, the Chairperson of the BADC requested that the meeting be adjourned to brief Mr Gama. During the adjournment, Mr Shane informed Mr Gama that the non-executive directors intended to overturn the recommendation of management to award the contract to Gijima.

841. The tender was discussed in detail when the BADC meeting re-convened. Mr Thomas, Ms Mosidi and Mr Silinga made extensive submissions in support of the recommendation. Most members of the BADC were not favourably disposed to awarding the tender to Gijima. The minutes of the meeting accurately summarise the different points of view that were expressed and are reflected in the transcript of the meeting. The transcript of the meeting discloses a degree of irrationality and adverse animus or bias against Gijima on the part of some members of the BADC.

842. The interventions by Mr Shane specifically were troubling. His contribution was at times rambling, intemperate, incoherent and of a low standard. His pre-disposition favouring T-Systems was plainly evident, improperly motivated by irrelevant extraneous factors and demonstrated a failure to appreciate his fiduciary duty to act in good faith by testing the market and to seek alternative partners where there was compelling evidence that the incumbent was performing below par.

843. Interventions by other members of the BADC were equally unedifying. Mr Nagdee (another member of the BADC alleged to have links to the Guptas) revealed a lack of understanding about the purpose of the clarification meeting with Gijima when he expressed the concern that Gijima was "given so many opportunities to fix things, to mitigate the risks you know, and there is no opportunity for anybody else". Ms Mabaso also believed that Gijima acted illegitimately when "all of a sudden they tricked and changed their price all of a sudden". Other members supported awarding the tender to T-Systems on the basis of the risks which were accepted to be "objective criteria". Some were concerned about the price reduction and Transnet having been too lenient to Gijima in affording it an opportunity to mitigate the risks.

844. Ms Mosidi made a valiant attempt to assure the members of the BADC that a proper assessment had been done on Gijima and that the risks had been appropriately mitigated. She explained that the R500 million reduction of the price came about after Gijima received further clarification on the scope of the contract, which it had previously misunderstood. The pricing risk could be easily mitigated and managed. The cost of data was progressively declining which also contributed to the reduction in price. As for the "perceived leniency" towards Gijima, Ms Mosidi explained that the clarification meetings were a standard process of engagement. Moreover, the tender to Gijima would introduce a saving of R1 billion.

845. The BADC (particularly the Chairperson) did not have faith that the risks could be adequately monitored and managed through contract management due to the existing challenges that plagued Transnet. Mr Shane described the performance of those responsible for contract management as poor. The BADC accordingly chose not to support the award of the tender to Gijima and recommended to the Board that it approve the award of the tender to T-Systems.

846. During the meeting, Mr Gama sent Ms Mosidi an SMS or WhatsApp telling her to "stop fighting because it was clear what the Board wanted". She only saw the message after the meeting. Mr Gama explained that he sent the message because it was clear to him that the non-executives, led by Mr Shane, had made up their minds to overturn management's recommendation. On 15 February 2017 Mr Gama and Mr Pita addressed a memorandum to the Board of Transnet recommending that it approve the award of the contract to T-Systems for a period of five years with an option to extend for a further two years. The memorandum explained that the BADC had not supported the recommendation for the award of the contract to Gijima, the first ranked bidder, based on the identified "objective risks".

Gijima's complaint and the final award of the tender

847. During March 2017, Gijima lodged a complaint with the Transnet Procurement Ombudsman objecting to the invocation of the perceived risks as "objective criteria" to justify not awarding it the contract. Because the complaint related to a decision taken by the Board, Transnet referred the matter to National Treasury for investigation.

848. National Treasury, in a letter dated 29 July 2017, concluded that the award had to be made to Gijima, as the highest scoring bidder. It held that the objective criteria on which the Board sought to rely ought to have been stated upfront in the tender document. Since the bid document did not specify the objective criteria, Transnet was obliged to award the bid to Gijima as the highest scoring bidder. This reasoning is questionable. In appropriate cases, and subject to certain safeguards being met, risk can be considered as an objective criterion; and the law is unclear on whether the objective criteria need to be stipulated in the RFP. However, where an Organ of State relies on objective criteria to justify not awarding the tender to the highest scorer, it must do so in a procedurally fair manner and invite representations from that bidder. Most importantly, factors already considered during the evaluation of the bid may not be revisited under the guise of "objective criteria". When Gijima's bid was evaluated, it was found that it had passed all relevant thresholds and met all bid requirements. The evidence showed that the perceived risks had been mitigated.

849. On 27 July 2017, Mr Silinga and Mr Volmink recommended to Mr Gama that: (i) Transnet abide by the ruling of National Treasury; (ii) T-Systems be invited to make representations on Transnet's proposed decision to abide the ruling of National Treasury; and (iii) Transnet proceed to make the award to Gijima, after following a judicial process to set aside its award of the tender to T-Systems. On 27 September 2017, the Board resolved to set aside its earlier award to T-Systems. In 2018, Transnet approached the High Court for an order declaring its decision to award the tender to T-Systems to be invalid and a direction that the tender be awarded to Gijima. T-Systems and Gijima eventually indicated that they would abide the decision of the court. On 12 December 2018, the Johannesburg High Court granted the order as prayed for by Transnet. Referring to Mr Shane's performance during the BADC meeting, the court remarked that it was left wondering whether the BADC was not driven by "extraneous considerations".

850. The conduct of Mr Shane and Mr Nagdee in relation to this tender was suspect and evinces a clear intention to favour T-Systems above Gijima. T-Systems was linked to the Gupta enterprise via Sechaba Computer Systems. Sechaba was T-Systems' SDP in Transnet contracts. T-Systems paid Sechaba more than R323 million between February 2015 and December 2017, while the MSA was extended. The Gupta enterprise took over, controlled or owned Sechaba from mid-2015. Sechaba made multiple payments to Gupta laundry vehicles, including Albatime and Homix running to R2.8 million while it was T-Systems' SDP.

851. Zestilor, owned by Mr Essa's wife, was paid a monthly retainer by Sechaba of R228 000 between October 2015 and May 2016, rising to R342 000 per month between June 2016 and October 2016. In total Zestilor was paid more than R5 million by Sechaba. Zestilor itself made payments to first-level laundry entities during the period July 2014 to November 2016 totalling over R2 million. From 2012 to 2015 T-Systems made regular monthly payments of more than R80 000 to Zestilor. More than R3 million was paid over that period. Moreover, as mentioned, T-Systems ceded to Zestilor the equipment sale and rental elements of the MSA that it had with Transnet. Following the cession by T-Systems of the equipment rental and supply elements of the MSA to Zestilor, Zestilor made several large payments to Sahara Computers.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

852. State capture goes beyond and is qualitatively different from specific acts of bribery and corruption. It is a systematic scheme of securing illicit and corrupt influence or control over the decision-making and conduct of state institutions, including SOEs. The focus is on accessing and redirecting resources for the benefit of private, corrupt actors by gaining control over staff appointments and removals, restructuring of governance bodies, centralising power and influence over large procurements and capital expenditure, changes to the procurement mechanisms, such as the use of confinements rather than open tenders, the altering of bid criteria to favour corrupt suppliers, and the payment of inflated costs and advance payments.

853. The evidence shows that a series of carefully timed appointments and removals of senior executives took place. Transnet governance structures were deliberately changed to facilitate irregular procurement decisions for the benefit of specific individuals and entities. Corrupt procurement practices were sustained by bringing approval authority for high value tenders under centralised control and weakening internal controls designed to prevent corruption and malfeasance. Collusion between individuals inside and outside of Transnet, as part of a co-ordinated effort to access and re-direct funds and benefits in substantial procurements, resulted in the strategic appointment of specific individuals in positions of responsibility.

854. The evidence establishes that Mr Salim Essa, through using two shell companies, namely Regiments Asia (Pty) Ltd and Tequesta (Pty) Ltd) concluded several so-called Business Development Services Agreements (BDSAs). These were essentially kickback agreements with various companies, some based in Hong Kong (CSR [Hong Kong]) Co. Ltd, and CNR [Hong Kong] Co. Ltd, later known as CRRC Hong Kong, or with CSR Zhuzhou Electric Locomotive Company Ltd (CSR) and China North Rail (CNR) or its subsidiary, CNR Dalian Locomotive and Rolling Stock Co. Ltd. CSR and CNR were two of the successful bidders in various procurements by Transnet. They amalgamated in 2015 and became known as CRRC.

855. Most of the corruption and money laundering at Transnet happened while Mr Singh was the GCFO, Mr Brian Molefe was the GCEO, and Mr Sharma was the chairperson of the BADC.

856. There is evidence of corruption in relation to Transnet's Manganese Expansion Project. Various witnesses provided compelling testimony that unqualified persons associated with the Gupta family sought improperly to benefit from the project by seeking appointment as SDPs and suggested that the contract price could be inflated to accommodate payments for services that added no value.

857. The evidence shows that many of the irregularities that attended the high value tender procurements between 2011 and 2017 took place within the BADC or at the instance of the GCEO, Mr Brian Molefe and GCFO, Mr Singh, on occasions when they acted without the prior scrutiny and review of Governance.

858. The evidence confirms that Mr Molefe knew the Gupta family well, particularly Mr Ajay Gupta to whom he often spoke to on the phone.

859. These persons failed to exercise the duty of utmost care to ensure reasonable protection of Transnet's assets' and did not act with fidelity, honesty, integrity and in the best interests of Transnet in managing its financial affairs. In acting inconsistently with their responsibilities, the Board members probably contravened Section 50(2)(a) of the PFMA.

860. It is a criminal offence for the Board or its members wilfully or in a grossly negligent way to fail to comply with the duties and responsibilities set out in Sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA. The nature of Mr Gama's settlement and its wholly unjustifiable content alone point to wilful or grossly negligent conduct. It follows that there are also reasonable grounds to believe that the Board members acted in a manner that inflicted harm on Transnet and which conduct amounted to a breach of trust so as to justify an application to declare such persons delinquent as contemplated in section 162(5) of the Companies Act 71 0f 2008, and an action for recovery of damages in terms of Section 77 of this Act.

861. The evidence of the role played by Mr Gigaba, President Zuma and Mr Mkwanazi in the Gama saga, and the likely benefit of Mr Gama's reinstatement and subsequent promotion for the Gupta enterprise, provides a reasonable basis to conclude that these individuals participated in furthering the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering while associated with it, as contemplated in POCA.

862. The findings regarding the improprieties associated with Mr Gama's reinstatement thus reveal possible attempts by then Minister Gigaba and President Zuma to influence the Directors of the Board of Transnet through possible inducements and links to the unlawful awarding of tenders by Transnet to benefit the Gupta enterprise.

863. The evidence before the Commission reveals that the individuals appointed to key positions had a relationship or contact with the Gupta enterprise and Mr Essa in particular.

864. The evidence of Witness 1, assessed together with the evidence regarding Mr Brian Molefe's appointment, the role he played in the various transactions tainted by irregularity and corruption that favoured the Gupta enterprise and his frequent association with the Guptas, left unanswered, would amount to a prima facie case of corruption and one or more of the racketeering offences. His denials must be assessed against his general credibility, which is reflected upon negatively throughout this report: his close association with the Gupta enterprise, his failure to cross-examine Witness 1, and his failure to produce any supporting documentation corroborating his version that the cash payments into his personal bank account were for the benefit of the burial society.

865. On this basis it is possible to conclude that there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Brian Molefe may have committed the crime of corruption by accepting a gratification to act in violation of his duties or to influence the price under various contracts or the procurement of tenders favouring the Gupta enterprise. There are also reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Brian Molefe was associated with or participated in the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity.

866. As with Mr Molefe, the evidence of Witness 3 provides reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Gigaba might have been involved in corruption and racketeering and, justifying a referral for prosecution and further investigation.

867. The evidence of Witness 3, viewed with the conspectus of evidence incriminating Mr Singh in relation to his conduct at Transnet and Eskom during the period of state capture, together with his marked tendency to mislead, be evasive and to give false testimony, provides clear and convincing grounds for a finding ithat Mr Singh committed the crime of corruption by accepting a gratification to act in violation of his duties or in order to influence the price under various contracts or the procurement of tenders favouring the Gupta enterprise. There are accordingly also strong reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Singh was associated with or participated in the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. These findings justify a referral for prosecution and further investigation.

868. For the reasons outlined, the evidence relating to the cash bribes gives rise to strong and convincing reasonable grounds that Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Pita, Mr Gama and Mr Jiyane corruptly received property from and participated in the conduct of the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. Appropriate referrals for prosecution and further investigation are justifiable.

869. In terms of the procurement of 95 locomotives, there are accordingly reasonable grounds to believe that these persons may have committed the offences of corruption and money laundering as contemplated in section 5 and 6 of POCA. Money laundering and corruption are offences listed in Schedule 1 of POCA; thus, any successful prosecution on such charges could be relied on in a racketeering charge.

870. These findings in terms of the procurement of the 95 locomotives are to the effect that there are reasonable grounds to believe employees and Board Members of Transnet violated the Constitution and other legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by Transnet to benefit the Gupta enterprise and involved corruption. The likely offences and identified wrongdoing should accordingly be referred for further investigation by the law enforcement agencies.

871. Whatever the truth about CSR's modus operandi, the irregular procurement process and the BDSA with CSR prima facie constitute arrangements by Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Gama, Mr Singh, Mr Sharma, Mr Jiyane and Mr Essa with CSR, which facilitated the retention, control, use and possession of the proceeds of unlawful activities and from which they all may have corruptly benefited.

872. The conduct of Mr Singh, Mr Molefe, Mr Gama and Mr Jiyane in relation to the CRS probably amount to breaches of Sections 76(1) and (3) of Companies Act and Sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA. They knowingly did not act in the best interest of Transnet and acted prejudicially in relation to its financial interests. The submission of the memorandum to the Board recommending confinement also breached the PPM and not seeking the correct technical input was a breach of fiduciary duty. The failure to alert the Board about Mr Callard's concerns amounted to non-disclosure of material information and a failure to act with integrity in the financial affairs of Transnet. Submitting a misleading memorandum on the escalation of the price and Mr Jiyane's authorising of payment without an APG was also a breach of these provisions.

873. The obvious favouring of CSR and the evidence regarding the kickbacks points towards corrupt activity relating to procuring a tender in violation of Section 12 of PRECCA. There are accordingly reasonable grounds to believe that those involved participated in the conduct of the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity in contravention of Section 2 of POCA. These findings are to the effect that there are reasonable grounds to believe employees and Board Members of Transnet violated the Constitution and other legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by Transnet to benefit the Gupta enterprise and involved corruption. The likely offences and identified wrongdoing should accordingly be referred to the law enforcement authorities for further investigation.

874. All of this wrongdoing detailed above in relation to procurement of 1,064 locomotives constitutes contraventions of various provisions of Sections 50 and 51 of the PFMA on the part of the role players, namely Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Gama, Mr Sharma, and other Board members in relation to the transactions in which they were involved. At various times they failed to exercise the duty of utmost care to ensure reasonable protection of the assets of Transnet. Individually they did not act with fidelity, honesty, integrity and in the best interests of Transnet in managing its financial affairs and did not comply with its operational policies and applicable legislation.

875. Taken with the allegations of corruption against Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh and Mr Gama concerning their receipt of cash gratifications from the Gupta enterprise and the payment of kickbacks to Mr Essa's companies and the Gupta enterprise by CSR and CNR, there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Gama, Mr Essa and Mr Sharma, as well as others, received property derived from a pattern of racketeering activity and participated in the conduct of the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering and may have committed various offences under Section 2 of POCA and money laundering in terms of Sections 4 to 6 of the POCA.

876. With regard to the relocation of CNT and BT to Durban, Paragraph 12.6 of the PPM (2015) provides that where a contract amendment increases the value or period of a contract, supplier development must be re-negotiated based on the cumulative value and/or period of the contract. There was no compliance with this provision which should have been considered and effected by the legal personnel in the relocation negotiation team, in this case Mr Silinga. His conduct accordingly fell short in this respect.

877. The impropriety of the variations arising from the relocation, and their part in the Gupta money laundering and racketeering enterprise, is disclosed in the evidence relating to the payment made to BEX, contracted by CNRRSSA to assist it with the relocation negotiation process. The PFMA contraventions result in the payment to BEX being the proceeds of unlawful activities and thus there are reasonable grounds to believe that the directors of BEX, CNRRSSA and the relevant officials of Transnet contravened Sections 5 and 6 of POCA and Sections 3 and 13 of PRECCA respectively. The benefit to the Gupta enterprise means also that there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Singh, Mr Gama, Mr Silinga and Mr Shaw participated in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity in contravention of Section 2 of POCA.

878. As there was no legal basis for Transnet to pay Regiments an additional fee on a risk sharing basis, there being an agreement with McKinsey for a fixed fee (purportedly ceded to Regiments), both Mr Brian Molefe and Mr Singh were in breach of their fiduciary duties and their conduct led to prejudicial expenditure not in the interest of Transnet in contravention of Sections 50 and 57 of the PFMA. The contraventions of the PFMA constituted unlawful activity as defined in Section 1 of POCA and hence the payments to Regiments were the proceeds of unlawful activities. The acquisition and possession of these proceeds by Mr Essa's shell companies and the arrangement in terms of which they were transferred constitute the money laundering offences contemplated in section 5 and section 6 of POCA. These planned and continuous money laundering offences, being offences in Schedule 1 of POCA, establish a pattern of racketeering activity by the Gupta enterprise. There are accordingly reasonable grounds to believe that Regiments, Mr Brian Molefe, Mr Singh, Mr Essa, Mr Wood, Mr Moodley and others participated in the conduct of the affairs of the Gupta enterprise and may have committed one or more of the racketeering offences contemplated in Section 2 of POCA. The matter should accordingly be referred to the law enforcement authorities for further investigation.

879. The undisputed evidence alone establishes strong probable cause and reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Gama and Trillian were associated with the Gupta racketeering enterprise, and by authorising the wholly unjustifiable payment of R93.48 million to Trillian, Mr Gama acted corruptly and participated in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering in contravention of section 3 and 13 of PRECCA and various provisions of section 2 of POCA.

880. In total an amount of R316 238 389 was paid to the transaction advisors by Transnet. Most of that, R305 235 000 was paid to Regiments. An amount of R11 003 389 was paid to McKinsey in terms of the LOI that expired on 30 November 2013. Regiments received an additional R228 million from the interest rate swaps involving the TSDBF. Part of these payments was transferred via the laundering vehicles to the Gupta enterprise. The fees paid and the substantial losses incurred on the interest rate swaps were in contravention of the PFMA and thus were the proceeds of unlawful activity. There is thus reasonable ground to conclude there was planned and continuous money laundering and that Regiments, Trillian, Mr Gama, Mr Ramosebudi, Mr Pita, Mr Wood and others participated in the conduct of the affairs of the Gupta enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity in relation to these transactions.

881. With reference to the Manganese Expansion project, as explained, the evidence regarding the attempts by Mr Reddy and Mr Essa, with the assistance of Mr Singh, to secure appointment of their companies as SDPs on both the Phase 1 and Phase 2 contracts, provides reasonable grounds to believe that the offence of corruption was committed in those instances.

882. Mr Singh and Mr Essa's proven association with the Gupta enterprise, Mr Singh's earlier attempts to make the appointment of DEC a pre-condition to the award, his manipulation of the SD component, the manner in which the meetings with Mr Essa were set up and their purpose, Mr Essa's disclosure of the modus operandi of inflating tenders for illegal purposes, together with Mr Reddy and Mr Essa's boasts about their access to Mr Brian Molefe and their corporate and political influence, all point to a pattern of racketeering involving the Gupta enterprise. There are thus reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Essa and Mr Singh may have committed corruption (schedule 1 of POCA) and, in the circumstances surrounding the award to Hatch of the tenders for Phase 1 and Phase 2 of the MEP, reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr Singh, Mr Essa, Mr Reddy and Mr Padayachee, whilst associated with the Gupta racketeering enterprise participated in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering in contravention of section 2(1)(e) of POCA.

883. These findings are to the effect that there are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Essa, Mr Singh, Mr Reddy and Mr Padayachee violated the Constitution and other legislation and were involved in corruption. The likely offences and identified wrongdoing should accordingly be referred for further investigation by the law enforcement authorities.

884. There are reasonable grounds to believe that Mr Khan at Homix, Mr Van der Merwe at Neotel, and perhaps others, committed the offence of corruption relating to procuring the tender of R305 million from Transnet, as contemplated in section 13 of PRECCA. Mr Khan offered to accept a 10% commission, ultimately R30.3 million, (a gratification) from Neotel as an inducement (by influencing persons at Transnet) to award a tender for supplying the Cisco equipment. As Homix was an entity associated in fact with the Gupta enterprise, the planned participation and involvement in that corruption may be relied on to establish that Homix, Mr Khan, Mr Van der Merwe, Neotel, and possibly some officials at Transnet, by virtue of their involvement with this transaction, were associated with and participated in the affairs of the Gupta racketeering enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, and hence committed the offence envisaged in section 2(1)(e) of POCA. The likely offences should accordingly be referred for further investigation by the law enforcement authorities.

885. The evidence as a whole therefore provides reasonable grounds to believe that in relation to the payment of the R41.04 million to Homix there was planned participation by Mr Joshi and Mr Van der Merwe in the offences of corruption, money laundering and fraud, as well as contraventions of the schedule 1 of POCA for the benefit of the Gupta enterprise. The authorisation and facilitation by Mr Joshi, Mr Whiley and Mr Van der Merwe of the illegal payments to Homix whilst associated with the Gupta racketeering enterprise, in particular, give rise to reasonable grounds to believe that they participated (possibly along with Mr Singh) in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering and thus contravened section 2(1)(e) of POCA. These findings are to the effect that there are reasonable grounds to believe that these persons violated relevant legislation and were involved in corruption. The likely offences and identified wrongdoing should accordingly be referred to the law enforcement authorities for further investigation.

886. There is a prima facie case that in seeking to favour T-Systems they did not act with fidelity, honesty, integrity and in the best interests of Transnet. They acted prejudicially to Transnet's financial interests by unjustifiably favouring a bid that was R1 billion more expensive on spurious "objective criteria". There are accordingly reasonable grounds to believe that they contravened section 50(1)(b) and (d) of the PFMA.

887. The evidence does not disclose any basis for concluding that Mr Gama, Mr Shane or Mr Nagdee accepted any gratification connected to their failed attempt to favour T-Systems and hence any reasonable grounds to believe the offence of corruption was committed by them in relation to this transaction. However, given the links of T-Systems, Mr Shane, Mr Essa and Mr Nagdee to the Gupta enterprise, their conduct may be of evidential value in establishing that they were individuals "associated in fact" with persons constituting the Gupta "enterprise" as defined in section 1 POCA and may be criminally liable in terms of Section 2(1)(e) of POCA for participating in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering established by their involvement (if any) in other Schedule 1 offences not linked to this particular tender.

DENEL

INTRODUCTION

1. This report specifically relates to transactions within the state-owned enterprise (SOE) called Denel SOC Limited (Denel) and certain of its subsidiaries and divisions as disclosed in the evidence presented to the Commission.
2. Under its TOR the Commission was directed to, amongst other things, inquire into, make findings, report on and make recommendations concerning the following, guided by the Public Protector's SoCR, the Constitution, relevant legislation, policies, and guidelines, as well as the order of the North Gauteng High Court of 14 December 2017 under case number 91139/2016.
3. One of the SOEs implicated in media reports considered by the Public Protector was Denel.
4. The allegations raised concerning Denel are concerning for the following reasons:
    4.1 Denel was established in 1991 and is a state owned entity which specialises in arms and aerospace manufacturing. In 1992 the decision was taken to incorporate Denel under the portfolio of the Department of Public Enterprises.
    4.2 According to Denel's website,

        > Denel provides turn key solutions of defence equipment to its clients by designing, developing, integrating and supporting artillery, munitions, missiles, aerostructures, aircraft maintenance, unmanned aerial vehicle systems and optical payloads based on high end technology. Its defence capabilities date back more than 70 years when some of Denel's first manufacturing plants were established.

    4.3 Denel has over the years entered into numerous co operation agreements, joint ventures and equity partnerships which enable Denel to be a leading manufacturer within the aeronautical and arms manufacturing industry as well as a key supplier to the South African National Defence Force.
    4.4 Denel has twelve main divisions under which it conducts its various business activities. According to Denel's integrated company report 2015/2016, they rank among the world's top one hundred global defence manufacturers. This makes Denel one of the key SOEs, which need to be managed effectively and efficiently in order to promote growth within the South African economy.
5. Denel was established in terms of an agreement in 1992 between the Minister of Public Enterprises, the Minister of Defence and Communication, the Armaments Corporation of South Africa (Armscor) and Denel. Armscor was split into two separate state-owned companies, Armscor and Denel. Armscor proceeded to function as an acquisition agent for the Department of Defence and Denel as a manufacturer of military equipment. Denel has five divisions, three subsidiaries and four international associated companies. It employs over 3 000 employees (60% artisans, technicians, engineers, and scientists). Relevant to the Commission are the Denel Landward Systems (DLS) division, and the subsidiaries: Denel Vehicle Systems (Pty) Ltd (DVS) and Land Mobility Technologies (Pty) Ltd (LMT).

6. In 2015 Denel acquired a South African subsidiary of the British company, BAE Systems PLC, previously BAE Land Systems (Pty) Ltd. Its name was changed to Land Systems South Africa (Pty) Ltd (LSSA) and then to Denel Vehicle Systems (Pty) Ltd (DVS). The purchase price was R855 million.

SCOPE OF THE EVIDENCE

7. The Commission's interest stems from the Public Protector's report (October 2016), which addressed allegations in the media and from other sources, particularly regarding the involvement of the Gupta family and associates in the establishment of VR Laser Asia and Denel Asia and the suspension of three key members of Denel's Exco, who were relieved of their duties (September 2015).

8. The evidence focussed on the following topics:

   8.1 Finances and corporate structure of Denel: 1990s until 2015.

   8.2 Denel internal processes whereby business was channelled to VR Laser, thus establishing VR Laser in a supremely dominant position as a supplier of Denel's requirements of "complex engineering systems" at stated tariffs for a period of ten years, and instituted as Denel's joint venture partner in "Denel Asia", intended to target the arms market in India and Asia.

   8.3 Conclusion of three large contracts between Denel and VR Laser: (i) the hulls contract (28 November 2014) between Denel Landward Systems (DLS) and VR Laser; (ii) the DLS single source contract (19 May 2015), appointing VR Laser as single source supplier to Denel of complex engineering systems at agreed tariffs for a period of ten years; and (iii) the DVS single source contract (14 December 2015), appointing VR Laser as single source supplier to Denel Vehicle Systems (Pty) Ltd for complex armour steel fabrications for vehicles and related steel products for a period of ten years.

   8.4 The replacement in mid-2015 of all but one of the members of the 2011 Denel board and the constitution of the new board (the 2015 board); the summary suspension (September 2015) of CEO Mr Saloojee, group CFO Mr Mhlontlo and group company secretary, Ms E Afrika, pending disciplinary enquiries that never took place, and their departure from Denel with substantial payouts; and the subsequent financial and governance decline of Denel.

HOEFYSTER PROGRAMME

9. In 2007 Armscor awarded DLS a contract ("Hoefyster programme") to manufacture 217 new generation infantry combat vehicle products systems to replace the Ratel infantry combat vehicle. Seven variants of the Hoefyster infantry combat vehicle (Badger) were to be manufactured. The Hoefyster design is based on a platform hull design from Patria Land Services Oy of Finland [2]. Because DLS was not a complete armoured vehicle manufacturer but specialised in the assembly of the vehicles, most of the manufacturing of the different parts of the vehicle had to be outsourced.

10. Hoefyster was to be completed in two phases: development and production. The development phase was to have been completed by 2012, but by 2021 it was still incomplete owing to Denel's lack of funds, engineering complexities, loss of critical skills, slow progress and protracted decision-making processes, exacerbated by COVID-19. Initial cost estimates had been inadequate. These issues were raised with the Portfolio Committee on Public Enterprises (October 2020), when the chair, Ms Hlahla said,

[2] A "platform hull" is the body of the vehicle onto or into which all the features of the vehicle are attached.

Hoefyster remains the biggest threat to Denel. If the parties do not find a way to resolve the technical issues around the programme, Hoefyster remains the single biggest programme on Denel's balance sheet or income statement.

11. The Minister of Defence and Military Veterans (Parliament, September 2020) said:

    Project Hoefyster suffered significant delays and Denel is currently reneging on contractual deliveries.... In 2018 Denel formally indicated to Armscor it cannot complete the project within timescales, specifications or budget and requested a reset of the contract.

DENEL FINANCIAL CHALLENGES

12. The Treasury concluded (16 February 2021), that Denel would run out of cash at the end of March 2021. It was battling to pay salaries and other expenses despite Government guarantee facilities of R5,93 billion and Treasury provision of R1,8 billion for recapitalisation (2019/20) and R576 million for 2020/2021. Denel could not meet sales targets or implement its turnaround plan, particularly to sell non-core assets and find strategic partners. Denel recorded a loss of R1,2 billion by December 2020 and forecasted a nett loss of R1,6 billion by March 2021.

13. Between 1992 and 2000, the equipping of the SANDF was restructured. Most (70%) of SANDF acquisitions were imported. Denel's cumbersome and unprofitable obligations impacted negatively. Research and development expenditure was drastically reduced. Access to commercial markets with non-military products was unsuccessful. Between 2001 and 2004 Denel adopted a strategy to centralise core activities but lost critical markets and sustained increased financial losses. Thus began a long period of financial problems.

14. Between 2005 and 2009, a turn-around strategy was adopted, inclusive of rightsizing, by reorganising the business, workforce and management and managed decentralisation of governance and authority to improve performance and accountability.

15. Denel's board was re-constituted in 2011, under its chair, Ms Janse van Rensburg. Its executive was headed by the group CEO, Mr R Saloojee, a veteran of Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK) and later the South African National Defence Force. Ms Janse van Rensburg testified that the business of Denel grew significantly from 2011 to 2015, reversing previous losses (corroborated by evidence of Mr Tlhakudi, then DDG of the DPE with responsibility for SOEs). From 2010 to 2012, a new strategy was undertaken to improve revenue, optimise efficiency and costs, and leadership and transformation. Shortly after its appointment, the 2011 board appointed Mr Saloojee as CEO.

16. The 2011 board achieved significant successes, and when almost entirely replaced in 2015, it left an unprecedented order book of R35 billion in Denel's traditional products such as missiles, artillery, and military vehicles. Tangible opportunities worth some R40 billion were being actively pursued. Denel's strategic markets had expanded to the Middle East, Africa, South America and the Far East. From a loss-making situation from 2005 to 2010, Denel showed a profit from 2011 to 2015. In 2015, Denel was solvent and liquid (equity R1,9 billion; assets R9,7 billion). Funds and borrowing facilities were sufficient for the next twelve months. This changed substantially with Denel struggling to pay salaries in 2021.

Denel and the 2011 Board

17. Denel's net loss of over R1,5 billion in 2005 had by 2015 been converted to profit, and work on hand worth R6 billion. Denel was praised in Parliament and in the media, and its board was deemed by Deloitte to be highly effective both in providing oversight and direction. Denel secured clean and unqualified audits from the Auditor General (AG). Nevertheless, the 2012 target date for completion of the development phase of Hoefyster had passed with no indication of completion.

VR Laser: Its shareholders and its relationship with Denel

18. VR Laser Services (Pty) Ltd was a large supplier to which Denel could turn for the manufacture of the components which went into the complex machine cutting and bending of armour plate and steel. Its shareholders were Mr John van Reenen and Mr Gary Bloxham and in 2007 Mr MJ Jiyane and his wife [3] acquired an interest in VR Laser for R270 million. A bank financed R61 million of the purchase price and the balance of about R200 million remained a debt owed by the company.

19. In 2012 Mr and Mrs Jiyane realised that the business of VR Laser was not producing the results anticipated due to less demand for products and services by the US government. They sought to negotiate a reduction of the vendor loan with Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham, who offered to sell their shares and loan accounts (including the vendor loan) for R120 million but the Jiyane's found no support from the banks or the Industrial Development Corporation (IDC).

20. Mr Jiyane had separate discussions in late 2012, in an effort to find a new partner, with Mr Saloojee, the Denel group CEO, Mr Z Ntshepe, the Denel business development and marketing executive, and Mr S Burger, the CEO of DLS.

MR ESSA AND THE GUPTAS

21. In February 2013 Mr Jiyane attended a defence exhibition in Abu Dhabi in the UAE where Denel was exhibiting and represented by Mr Ntshepe. Mr Ntshepe subsequently introduced Mr Jiyane to Mr Salim Essa, of Essar Capital, an associate of the Guptas. Mr Jiyane and Mr Essa agreed to take the matter further when back in South Africa.

22. Enter the Guptas. All the evidence shows that Mr Essa was an associate of the Gupta family and there was complete synergy between the interests of the Gupta family and the interests of Mr Essa. Mr Essa and his colleague Mr Iqbal Sharma negotiated with Mr Jiyane about buying out Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham while the Jiyanes would remain as shareholders and even possibly increase their shareholding. Mr Jiyane would become the CEO of VR Laser after the takeover.

23. Mr Essa called a meeting in September 2013 attended by Mr Jiyane, Mr Essa's financial advisors, Mr N Wyma and Mr J Loeb of Regiments Capital who gave Mr Jiyane offer documents that he was to pass on to Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham. One was an offer, signed by Mr Sharma on behalf of Elgasolve (Pty) Ltd to buy the property which VR Laser traded for R50 million from "Propco", whose identity was undisclosed. Another document was a sale of shares agreement by which Elgasolve bought the shares of Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham in VR Laser (74,9% of VR Laser's issued shares) for R72 million, to be paid on or before 10 December 2013.

24. Elgasolve paid Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham the agreed amounts and the property on which VR Laser traded was transferred out of the control of Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham. Mr Jiyane was told that Mr Iqbal Sharma had through Essar Capital (Pty) Ltd obtained control of VRLS Properties (Pty) Ltd, the company that had owned the property. There was no clarity on how Messrs van Reenen and Bloxham, and the Guptas, structured the property transaction.

25. Mr Essa did not keep his promises to Mr Jiyane. On 6 January 2014, the Guptas' new management team gathered at the premises of VR Laser. One of them was later identified as Mr Tony Gupta. Mr Sharma transferred all executive control from the Jiyanes to two representatives of the Guptas, an arrangement extremely unsatisfactory to Mr Jiyane and by an agreement dated 20 February 2014, Mr and Mrs Jiyane sold their 25.1% shareholding in VR Laser to Craysure Investments (Pty) Ltd for R16,5 million. Mr Jiyane was obliged to work for a further twelve months for VR Laser at a monthly cost to company package of R148 761, 43 until the Gupta's attorney, Mr Pieter van der Merwe took over from Jiyane as CEO in late 2014.

26. The evidence of Mr van der Merwe shows that from 2014 onwards, VR Laser made every effort to trade profitably and grow by supplying good work to its customers.

[3] Mr and Mrs Jiyane were married in community of property.

27. The Guptas bought, at market related prices, control of a significant supplier of armoured steel to Denel, although the Gupta connection with the transaction was never explicitly disclosed to Messrs van Reenen, Bloxham and Jiyane. The Guptas invested substantial sums in acquiring control of VR Laser and then caused it to operate, at one level, legitimately in the market in which it had always operated.

The Guptas begin efforts directed at capturing Denel through VR Laser

28. Parallel to the legitimate operations of VR Laser, the Guptas and Mr Essa were operating VR Laser in another dimension altogether. In the first quarter of 2014, Mr Essa contacted Mr Saloojee to meet individuals who were in a position to assist Denel with future business. This request came from the "very top" and it was in Mr Saloojee's interest to attend such a meeting.

29. Eventually, Mr Saloojee acceded to Mr Essa's request and was taken by Mr Essa the Gupta compound in Saxonwold where he was introduced to Mr Tony Gupta, Mr Atul Gupta and Mr Malusi Gigaba, the then Minister of Public Enterprises. It is here that Mr Saloojee says Minister Gigaba told him that "these people" were his friends and that he hoped that they and Mr Saloojee could work together. This evidence shows that then Minister Gigaba, was introduced to the CEO of one of the SOEs under his control by the Guptas at their home and place of business.

30. Mr Saloojee was aware that he had been brought to the Saxonwold compound to show him the reach of the Guptas' influence. This fact informed his further dealings with the Guptas.

31. Several weeks later Mr Essa summoned Mr Saloojee to another meeting at the Saxonwold compound. Here Mr Tony Gupta and Mr Essa introduced Mr Saloojee to Mr Duduzane Zuma, the son of the then president of the Republic, and a man introduced as Mr Ace Magashule's son. At this meeting Mr Essa told Mr Saloojee that the Guptas had supported his appointment as Denel CEO and that they had the full support of "number one". They also referred to them having the full support of "the old man". Mr Saloojee took these to be references to Mr Jacob Zuma. Mr Essa also informed Mr Saloojee that the Guptas wanted to do business with Denel and assist Denel in getting business in other markets, particularly in the Middle East and Asia. Mr Saloojee told them at this meeting and thereafter that, if they wanted to do business with Denel, they had to go through the proper channels.

32. Mr Saloojee evaded Mr Essa's requests to meet but eventually attended a meeting at the Saxonwold compound in the latter part of 2012 where he was told by Mr Tony Gupta to cooperate more closely with the Guptas. He said Mr Saloojee was "not cooperating" and that he did not want to "elevate it further" as the Guptas were working hard to get the Denel blacklisting in India lifted that arose from a criminal investigation into conduct in India attributed to Denel. The blacklisting lasted from 2004 until 2014. Even when the blacklisting was lifted, Denel was unable to penetrate the Indian market. At this meeting, Mr Tony Gupta complained that Denel was one of the few SOEs which was not supporting the New Age Newspaper, a Gupta- owned publication, with subscriptions or advertising. Mr Saloojee insisted the Guptas follow procedures and that to do business with Denel they had to follow the proper processes. When the meeting ended, Mr Tony Gupta walked out with Mr Saloojee and asked him why he, Mr Saloojee, did not take money because "everyone does". Saloojee replied that he did not. If the Guptas wanted to do business with Denel, Mr Saloojee said, they should contact Denel's then Business Executive: Marketing Development, Mr Zwelakhe Ntshepe.

33. Mr Saloojee later introduced Mr Essa to Mr Ntshepe. Prior to the meeting, Mr Saloojee cautioned Mr Ntshepe to follow due process regarding the Guptas. Mr Essa and Mr Ntshepe developed their own relationship. From time to time Mr Ntshepe asked Mr Saloojee to meet Mr Essa so that Mr Ntshepe could provide feedback on their discussions.

34. At one of these meetings, Mr Essa discussed buying companies that would allow the Guptas entry into the defence environment. Mr Essa asked Mr Saloojee about the viability of VR Laser. Mr Saloojee knew that VR Laser had a relationship of some years standing with Denel and responded positively. Ms Lyn Brown replaced Minister Gigaba in May 2014 as Minister of Public Enterprises and Mr Saloojee was told at a meeting with Mr Essa and Mr Ntshepe, that the Guptas had the support of the new Minister. Mr Saloojee's evidence in this regard is consistent with that of Mr Jonas who said that the Gupta "brother" he had a meeting with on 23 October 2015 mentioned Ms Lyn Brown as one of the people who was working with the Guptas.

Background to MOU between Denel and VR Laser to produce hulls for Hoefyster

35. During 2014, Denel was required to deliver a quantity of platform hulls onto which the Badger infantry combat vehicle would be built under Hoefyster. The two main structural components of the vehicle were the hull and the turret. An intense debate within Denel arose around the question of to whom the work of constructing the hulls would be outsourced. On 29 April 2010, DLS and LMT concluded a contract under which LMT was to supply turrets (or trunnion machining) for Hoefyster. LMT was under severe financial constraints at the time. Denel agreed to make advance payments to LMT totalling R1,7 million. Contemporaneously, Denel acquired an option to purchase 70% of the shareholding in LMT. This was seen as operating as a sort of security for Denel for its investment in LMT.

36. A presentation to a sub-committee of the Denel board, 18 August 2011, identified LMT as a strategic supplier to DLS and critical to Hoefyster. By acquiring control of LMT, Denel not only secured a strategic supplier and denied it to Denel's competitors, but also established a vehicle for integration of capacity within Denel. Denel would thereby acquire a subsidiary/ division capable of constructing hulls, generate additional business and save costs.

Denel acquires control of Land Mobility Technologies (LMT)

37. The position of Group Chief Operating Officer (COO) was created in early 2013 becase the board saw the need for more technical and industrial expertise in the Denel corporate office team. Mr JM Wessels was the first such incumbent. This position enabled Mr Wessels to form an overview in regard to the acquisition of LMT by Denel.

38. On 8 May 2012 after the requisite permissions had been obtained, Denel exercised an option to purchase 51% of the shares in LMT from its erstwhile private sector shareholders, with Pamodzi Investment Holdings (Pty) Ltd taking 29% as Denel's empowerment partner. Pamodzi put up a total of R30 million towards recapitalising LMT: R10 million in cash and R20 million by way of preference shares.

39. The remaining 20% of the shareholding was retained by the erstwhile private sector shareholders in LMT: Dr Stefan Nel (8%) and Mr Andrew Hodgson and Mr Chris Gilliomee (6% each). Dr Nel had been the CEO of LMT at the time of its takeover by Denel. Dr Nel was kept on as CEO of LMT until he was replaced in March 2016 by Mr Wessels. Dr Nel then became COO of LMT and resigned from Denel on 19 September 2016.

40. During the period 2014 to 2015, negotiation and conclusion of contracts with suppliers was decentralised. That means that they were done by each Denel division according to approved thresholds set at Denel group level.

41. According to Mr Wessels tension arose between Mr Burger and Dr Nel, the CEOs of DLS and LMT respectively, on a variety of projects and technical issues. Both Dr Nel and Mr Burger were "world class" players with different views on the best way to success. This tension peaked in the debate whether Denel should acquire a majority stake in LMT. Resolving this tension became one of Mr Wessels' key tasks, allocated to him by Mr Saloojee. There were cogent arguments both for and against decentralising. On the one hand, decentralising spread the risk and enabled Denel to go into the market to select suppliers both for quality of work and price. On the other hand, there were strategic reasons why it was desirable for Denel to maintain capability in house.

42. Mr Wessels came to know VR Laser in 2014 as an armoured steel component supplier with a generally good reputation. In 2014 Mr Burger of DLS persistently argued to the Denel senior management that LMT could not be relied upon in this regard but that VR Laser was well equipped to meet Denel's expectations regarding hull manufacture for the Hoefyster programme. This view, it seemed, was also held by Patria, the Finnish design company responsible for the Hoefyster vehicle.

43. At that stage, VR Laser was a highly regarded but also very narrowly specialised company and worked closely with LMT. VR Laser cut pieces of armoured steel precisely and then returned these to LMT who would weld them into the whole structure. However, after VR Laser had been sold to its new owners, its ambition was to obtain business in the field of welded parts, i.e., assembling the finished product from various parts, thus becoming a competitor with its old customers, including LMT.

44. LMT was acquired primarily to manufacture welded steel hulls for the Hoefyster programme. Around 2014, Mr Saloojee asked Mr Wessels and Mr Mhlontlo to advise him on the argument made by DLS that the hull manufacture no longer be awarded to LMT but that the contract be put out to a procurement process.

45. In an email dated 29 July 2014 Mr Wessels proposed a compromise: that the hull components be supplied by VR Laser and the doors and internal components be supplied by LMT. This position was supported by Mr Burger and Mr Mhlontlo.

46. In the opinion of Mr Wessels, this debate dragged on because Mr Saloojee did not make a decision. The impasse since July 2014 was potentially compromising the Hoefyster delivery schedule. The essence of the debate had to do with procurement processes in Denel and DLS and that LMT had become a subsidiary of Denel in order to do the work and to save Denel costs incurred from outsourcing.

Denel goes to the market by closed tender for hulls contract

47. Denel did not follow an open tender process with public advertisements calling for tenders from all possible bidders. Instead, a closed procurement process was followed by Denel involving a targeted and limited Request for Offers ("RFO") which was issued during February 2012. The RFO was sent to three specific entities, all having a history of active involvement in the arms equipment supply sector, being (1) Denel's own group subsidiary, LMT; (2) a locally based arms equipment supplier DCD-Dorbyl (Pty) Ltd ("DCD"); and (3) VR Laser. Of these LMT's price was the lowest, followed by VR Laser which was some R90 million higher. DCD-Dorbyl's price was the highest.

48. Each of the Cross-Functional Team members (or Bid Committee members) provided separate scorings for each of the bidders. These were aggregated to prepare an overall panel evaluation sheet showing the following scores allocated to the candidates:

BIDDER	PRICE	TECHNICAL	BBBEE	TOTAL SCORE	FINANCIAL OFFER
	max 25	max 45	max 30	max 100	Rands
LMT	25.00	39.78	0	64.78	R165,612,451
VR LASER	10.39	50.15	5	65.54	R252,406,634
DCD	4.42	41.86	0	46.28	R301,916,300

49. These scores show a marginal difference of less than 1% between the top two bidders, LMT and VR Laser: LMT received a score of 64.78, while VR Laser received 65.54.

50. Some within Denel, including Mr S Burger, regarded the work produced by LMT as substandard. A major criticism of LMT related to a consignment of Casspir hubs built by LMT for a UN order. The hulls of all those vehicles cracked and many in the professional engineering world in Denel blamed LMT's workmanship for the Casspir hull failures. Other criticisms of LMT included poor planning, late delivery and uncompetitive pricing. Although LMT scored less than VR Laser for technical/functionality, LMT was found to be technically compliant by Patria and Denel's internal officials. And it was a subsidiary within the Denel Group, subject to its management control. LMT was not disqualified for lack of technical compliance; it was simply scored lower than VR Laser against that criterion.

51. On price, LMT was scored 25, whereas VR Laser was scored 10.39, reflecting the huge difference in the prices they tendered. LMT's offer translated into a total contract price of R165,612,451, substantially less than that of VR Laser at R252,406,634.

52. Reference was made above to the fact that VR Laser's average price of over R1.16 million per vehicle exceeded the previously set limit of R1 million per unit. VR Laser's bid probably should have been disqualified or rejected on that ground alone. LMT's bid, on the other hand, equated to an average of R763,191 per unit, well below the budget limit of R1 million per unit. Even if VR Laser was not disqualified, its bid would cost Denel R86,794,183 more than LMT's overall contract price.

53. A further aspect relates to the B-BBEE scoring. As Ms Malahlela's email to Mr Burger of 27 June 2014 indicated, VR Laser alone had received a score of 5 points. LMT and DCD had received a nil score, but this was subject to revision: LMT and DCD had submitted BBBEE certificates which had expired and needed to be updated. Furthermore, Pamodzi was in fact Denel's empowerment partner in LMT and had contributed R30 million towards getting LMT back on its feet. Ms Malahlela indicated to Mr Burger that (in terms of Denel's processes) they would be allowed the opportunity to do so within fourteen days, in which event their scores would be adjusted to reflect the B-BBEE assessment. This was particularly relevant in LMT's case, where its majority shares were held by Denel, an SOE.

54. Further, even without any score for B-BBEE, there was no material difference between LMT's overall score and that of VR Laser, and, crucially, LMT's total price was substantially lower than VR Laser's pricing.

55. The evaluation committee declared VR Laser the winner on scoring by a margin of only 0,76%. This gave rise to protracted boardroom battles. Prominent in the struggle to have the tender awarded to VR Laser was Mr Burger, the CEO of DLS. On the other side were Ms Malahlela, the Denel executive manager: supply chain, and Mr D Mlambo, the Denel group executive: supply chain.

56. After email correspondence with Mr Burger, Ms Malahlela received an unsolicited email from VR Laser that provided a revised lower price. The other two bidders were afforded no such opportunity. It is probable that VR Laser was approached by Mr Burger pursuant to Burger's emailed indication to Ms Malahlela on 27 June 2014 that he would be asking VR Laser to reduce its prices "outside the normal channels". Ms Malahlela forwarded the revised pricing to Mr Teubes, who noted his response as "Interesting". Later the same day he "recommended" that she should revise the Cross-Functional Team's memorandum to Exco to reflect (1) the revised pricing she had just received from VR Laser; and (2) a clear recommendation that the Platform Hulls Contract be awarded. The memorandum was then to be forwarded to Mr Burger "for his call" and further processing.

57. The Commission finds that this was unlawful and unfair, and intended to favour VR Laser inappropriately. The three bidders had submitted their prices previously. They were scored according to those bids by the Cross-Functional Team, and those scores reflected a much higher score for LMT on the important issue of price, whereas VR Laser's price as submitted was more than half higher than LMT's price. Now, VR Laser was being permitted, according to Mr Teubes, to revise its price – apparently in response to a request from Mr Burger "outside normal channels" – to make it more attractive. Neither LMT nor DCD was offered the same opportunity to revise their prices.

58. The course being followed was, the Commission finds, unlawful and unfair. It violated section 217 of the Constitution, the PFMA and the Denel Supply Chain Policy. A representative of Patria compiled a memorandum dated 3 March 2014 visiting the three bidders. This memorandum recorded that VR Laser was capable of manufacturing the whole hull from parts to delivery, that Patria was concerned about information leakage at DCD-Dorbyl and that Patria considered that LMT had a poor level of welding quality and needed to improve in order to be able to manufacture the hulls. Another factor of concern to the engineers within Denel was that LMT failed the land mine protection tests conducted by the CSIR.

59. Under the Denel Company Policy on Delegation of Authority, which applied to all group entities such as DLS, the award of a procurement contract with a value of over R20 million required prior consultation with the Group Executive: Supply Chain, who at that stage was Mr Dennis Mlambo. Procurement via a contract with a value between R50 million and R200 million required the approval of the Group CEO (at that stage Mr Riaaz Saloojee) after consultation with the Group Supply Chain Manager. A procurement contract with a value exceeding R200 million required approval from Denel's Board at head office (group) level. The latter would again require consultation with the Group Executive: Supply Chain.

60. Mr Mlambo explained, in his evidence before the Commission, the purpose of the rule requiring consultation with the Group Executive: Supply Chain prior to approval of all transactions above the value of R20 million was to prevent the award of tenders without following approved processes and applicable legislation. Regrettably it was not properly complied with in relation to this issue. Both Mr Mlambo and Ms Malahlela were opposed to the process followed.

61. At end October 2014, Mr Saloojee called a meeting in his office, attended by Mr Saloojee, Mr Burger, Mr Ntshepe, Mr Mhlontlo, and Mr Wessels. The recollection of Mr Wessels was that Mr Mlambo was not present. An intense debate ensued. During the debate, reference was made to Mr Mlambo's email dated 9 September 2014 in which Mr Mlambo had rejected the proposition that the contract be awarded to VR Laser because procurement procedures had not been followed. However, a counter-argument was advanced either by Mr Ntshepe or Mr Burger that Mr Mlambo's concerns had been adequately addressed.

62. Mr Burger argued at the meeting that he could not rely on LMT to ensure the safety of the crew within the vehicle and said that, if Mr Saloojee instructed DLS to contract with LMT for the hull manufacture, Mr Saloojee should relieve DLS of responsibility for crew safety and bear the burden himself.

63. The outcome of the meeting in Mr Saloojee's office at the end of October 2014 was that the compromise was accepted. VR Laser would get the hulls contract and LMT would be contracted by DLS to manufacture the hull doors and internal components. An agreement to this effect was signed on 28 November 2014 between DLS and VR Laser.

Failure of certain executives within Denel to adhere to appropriate tender process

64. Sections 217(1) and (2) of the Constitution provide as follows:

    64.1 When an organ of state in the national, provincial or local sphere of government, or any other institution identified in national legislation, contracts for goods or services, it must do so in accordance with a system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost effective.

    64.2 Subsection (1) does not prevent the organs of state or institutions referred to in that subsection from implementing a procurement policy providing for

        64.2.1 Categories of preference in the allocation of contracts; and

        64.2.2 The protection or advancement of persons, or categories of persons, disadvantaged by unfair discrimination.

65. The award of the hulls contract was irregular. The process was flawed in the following respects: it was improper to approach VR Laser to reduce its tendered price without giving the other two tenderers a chance to revise their tenders and, in particular, to update their BBBEE statuses; it was improper to sideline and then override Mr Mlambo who was against the award to VR Laser precisely because of flaws in the process; it was improper to accept the criticisms of LMT's capacity to perform without giving LMT an opportunity to deal with those criticisms; it was improper not to start the tender process afresh once the flaws in the process were pointed out; the process was concluded in an over hasty manner.

66. Several Denel executives defended the decision to put the hulls contract out to closed rather than open tender. Mr Saloojee justified the departure from the norm of open public tender on the grounds of audit and risk assessments; supply chain management protocols and procedures; analysis of market and new opportunities; advantages and disadvantages of the deviation; and comparative analysis in favour of the deviation.

67. The evidence does not show that the decision to adopt a closed tender process was irregular. There is no evidence before the Commission which shows that Denel suffered any prejudice as a result of the closed tender process adopted or, indeed, the decision to award the hulls contract to VR Laser. VR Laser had not yet taken over by the Guptas. It had good BBBEE credentials: some 30% of its shareholding was black owned. There was in fact near unanimity among the Denel decision makers that VR Laser was the best and only supplier in a very small field that could be entrusted with the work. The objections to the appointment of VR Laser were at the level of process.

68. This is not to denigrate the importance of process. The requirements of s 217 of the Constitution are not something that Denel could choose or not choose to follow. The provisions of s 217 are binding on all organs of state, such as Denel, and all decision makers within Denel were obliged to implement its terms, both in letter and in spirit.

69. Regrettably, that was not how the Denel executives, except for Ms Malahlela and Mr Mlambo, saw it. They were preoccupied with getting the job done and frustrated by the lengthy and cumbersome decision-making process, which got in the way of getting the job done. So, they cut procedural corners and overrode or ignored the wholly correct objections to the process raised by Ms Malahlela and Mr Mlambo. Most, if not all, the other executives regarded supply chain process as an obstacle to Denel's capacity to get the Hoefyster job done.

Whether irregular award of hulls contract was induced to profit personally

70. The tasks of the Commission relevant to the award of the hulls contract are twofold: firstly, to determine whether any form of inducement or prospect of personal gain influenced any directors or functionaries employed by or office bearers of Denel to award the hulls contract as it did; and, secondly, to determine whether any of those persons breached or violated the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of the hulls contract to VR Laser. There is no evidence before the Commission to justify any conclusion that any of the Denel decision makers was influenced by any form of inducement or prospect of personal gain to award the hulls contract to VR Laser. It must be emphasised that the award of the hulls contract preceded the advent of the Guptas. All those who participated in the decision-making process had as their goal the advancement of Denel's interest. There is no evidence to suggest that LMT would have done a better job if it, rather than VR Laser.

71. So, the question posed by the first of the tasks must be that there was no evidence that any form of inducement or prospect of personal gain influenced any directors or functionaries of Denel to award the hulls contract as it did.

72. The question posed by the second of such tasks must be answered in the positive. All the executives concerned who participated in the corner cutting procedural exercise which led to the award of the hulls contract to VR Laser either knew broadly that they were acting in violation of their obligation to promote a procurement process consistent with s 217 of the Constitution or ignored the readily available material which would have put them on the right path. For these executives, the means justified the end.

Facts do not call for Commission to recommend remedial action

73. The Commission has considered and decided against recommending any action arising from these conclusions regarding the hulls contract.

    73.1 Firstly, the evidence is that Denel itself has commissioned several reports and instructed teams of lawyers to do that in relation to many of the matters which occurred during the period covered by the evidence before the Commission.

73.2 Secondly, a lengthy period has elapsed since the hulls contract was awarded in 2014. In the case of internal disciplinary action against the errant executives and employees, the lapse of time would suggest that disciplinary action is now no longer appropriate. Where civil action to recover loss caused to Denel is concerned, there is the problem of prescription under the Prescription Act 88 of 1968 the provisions of which might well operate in the favour of any defendant in this connection.

73.3 Thirdly, the evidence is that Denel itself has already instituted disciplinary proceedings where it considered such appropriate.

73.4 Fourthly, many of those implicated in the irregular award of the hulls contract are no longer in Denel's employ and are therefore not susceptible to disciplinary action.

73.5 Fifthly, there is the problem that Denel is acutely financially strained.

How the Guptas used VR Laser to capture Denel

74. Next to consider are the circumstances in which the Guptas and Mr Essa took control of VR Laser and engineered for themselves a position as Denel's most privileged supplier of "complex engineering systems" and as Denel's single and exclusive partner in its effort to establish itself in India and Asia. The removal of all but one of the members of the Denel board appointed in and around 2011, the appointment in mid-2015 of a new board, in which only one member of the 2011 board was retained and the suspension of Mr Saloojee and his fellow senior Denel executives in September 2015 all form part of the Guptas' strategy to influence events within Denel.

75. The first meeting of the Guptas with Mr Saloojee at Saxonwold can be seen as the start of their influence in Denel. The following factual evidence should be considered with regards to the Guptas influence. Firstly, that they persuaded the then Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr M Gigaba, and Mr Saloojee, the newly appointed CEO of Denel, to go to the Gupta compound on the same day. Secondly, Mr Tony Gupta there introduced then Minister Gigaba to the CEO of one of his SOEs. Thirdly, that at this very brief meeting, Minister Gigaba asked Mr Saloojee to put Denel business the way of the Guptas, who were "friends".

76. The impression gained by Mr Saloojee was that the Guptas were demonstrating their reach and influence. Mr Saloojee's response to this overture, "If you want to do business with Denel, go through the proper channels." was appropriate. This was a refrain that Mr Saloojee repeated throughout his interactions with the Guptas and Mr Essa. It culminated in Mr Tony Gupta's question to Mr Saloojee: why did Mr Saloojee not take money for doing the Gupta's bidding, as everybody else did?

Minister Gigaba touts Guptas to Denel CEO

77. Mr Saloojee testified that Minister Gigaba used the position of authority and his status as Mr Saloojee's ultimate superior to solicit SOEs for business for his "friends". Accordingly, Mr Gigaba's conduct deserves strong censure. Such conduct violates the Constitution, which requires public powers to be exercised bona fide and for a proper purpose.[4] However, as the law stands at present, such conduct, by itself, attracts no criminal sanction. This lacuna in our law is addressed below and forms the subject of one of the Commission's recommendations. There is no doubt that the Guptas brought Minister Gigaba to the meeting with Mr Saloojee to show to Mr Saloojee that the then Minister was a mere tool in their hands. Mr Saloojee could expect no protection. A politician who did not recognise this to be so would be naive indeed. Mr Gigaba disputed this, but there is no reason to doubt Mr Saloojee's evidence as true.

78. The Guptas continued to apply pressure on Mr Saloojee through Mr Essa to meet with them but Mr Saloojee continued to resist them by restating his position by using the Denel channels created for that purpose. Mr Saloojee did not report or share with others the pressure applied by the Guptas because he did not know whom to trust.

[4] State Information Technology Agency Soc Ltd v Gijima Holdings (Pty) Ltd 2017 2 SA 63 SCA para 34, citing with approval the following passage from T Bingham The Rule of Law (2010) at 60: "Ministers and public officials at all levels must exercise the powers conferred on them in good faith, fairly, for the purpose for which the powers were conferred, without exceeding the limits of such powers and not unreasonably."

79. Mr Saloojee was told more than once by Mr Essa that approval of the approach to him had been sanctioned at the very top. Mr Essa also introduced Mr Saloojee to the 2015 board chair, Mr Mantsha, before Mr Mantsha's appointment had been publicly announced. This introduction was manifestly designed to show Mr Saloojee that Mr Mantsha was the Guptas' man.

80. Mr Saloojee's evidence that he introduced Mr Essa to Mr Ntshepe as a way of creating distance between the Guptas and himself is similarly credible. Mr Saloojee was invited to attend the Gupta wedding at Sun City in 2013 but chose not to do so.

81. In May 2014 Minister Gigaba was replaced by Minister Lynne Brown. For a year or so, the relationship between Mr Saloojee and Minister Brown was good. This is not surprising: under Mr Saloojee's stewardship, Denel had been turned from a loss-making entity into one which made a profit. During this time Denel also achieved a clean audit from the AG.

82. In mid-2015 the terms of office of all but one of the members of the 2011 board had expired and were not extended. The Board member whose term was extended was Mr Motseki who appears to have had certain links with the Guptas. In her address to Denel's 2015 AGM on 23 July 2015 Minister Brown noted "another successful financial year". Ms Brown said that the professionalism and spirit with which the 2011 board had served Denel "not only ensured a smooth transition, but more especially set [Denel] on a long-term path of sustainable performance". Minister Brown noted that for the fifth year in a row, Denel was posting a profit. There were, however, areas of concern: commercial paper redemption was due in the financial year 2015/2016, current liabilities were at their highest in the last ten years and prepayments and their utilisation needed close attention. However, all in all, the Minister's address was in glowing terms. She concluded by thanking the outgoing 2011 board for a job well done. In her budget speech to Parliament on 15 May 2015, Minister Brown praised Denel's performance and the preliminary figures which showed a net profit of R200 million after tax.

83. Yet, the then Minister replaced all but one of the non-executive members of the 2011 board. Mr K Tlhakudi, who held the position of DDG at the DPE during this period (as he continued to do when he gave evidence), described how potential members of a board of an SOE such as Denel were identified, vetted and submitted to the Minister for her consideration by senior officials within the DPE. However, in the case of the 2015 board, the selection process was taken out of the hands of the officials. While the members of the 2011 board had distinguished themselves, the same could not be said for the members of the 2015 board, who appeared to be collectively lacking in the experience and skills required.

84. Ms Janse van Rensburg evidence emphasised the sterling qualities of several of the 2011 board members and the important parts they were playing in the then current projects. She said she could not speculate on Minister Brown's reasons for making the board changes but concluded that the then Minister's decision had not been reasonable: continuity was sacrificed; the former board had been highly effective and was in the midst of a successful turnaround strategy and the new board lacked essential skills. The decision to replace virtually the entire board could not have been made on the ground of poor performance as evidenced by her budget speech.

85. In a letter dated 25 May 2015, Minister Brown informed Ms Janse van Rensburg of her intention to replace the board members. She sought on several occasions to meet Minister Brown to discuss the proposed replacements but was unsuccessful. The terms of office of all the 2011 board members, except Mr Motseki came to an end on 23 July 2015.

86. Ms Janse van Rensburg identified several areas into which the 2011 board anticipated Denel would grow in the short term. Two are mentioned hereunder.

Land Systems South Africa

87. The first is LSSA, important in the wider context because the 2015 board and particularly Mr Mantsha claimed that misconduct by Mr Saloojee and the group financial director, Mr Fikile Mhlontlo, justified their suspensions.

88. The 2011 board concluded a transaction for the acquisition of LSSA in 2014. They regarded LSSA as an ideal fit for Denel to enhance its landward equipment capabilities, building on its experience and expertise regarding vehicle programmes such as the G5, G6, Rooikat and Casspir. LSSA had always been responsible for the production of these vehicles. Denel was responsible for the overall concept design, firepower, and integration. The 2011 board considered that the acquisition would better position Denel for future vehicle acquisition programmes by the SANDF and mitigate production risk on some of the bigger programmes.

89. Acquisition of LSSA was supported by the DOD and SANDF and the then Minister. Approvals were secured from the Competition Board and the Reserve Bank. The success of the acquisition transaction was dependent on the inclusion of a strategic equity partner who would bring at least R450 million as investment equity and provide significant access to markets and orders. The 2011 board before its departure had identified a few such potential partners with the right qualities and had commenced a closed bid process; at an advanced stage when the 2015 board took over.

90. However, the 2015 board discontinued the process for the participation of the strategic equity partner in LSSA. According to Ms Janse van Rensburg, there was no sound business reason for the discontinuation of the process as this partner was critical to the success of the LSSA transaction and the financial viability of Denel. She links the decline of Denel to the decision to terminate the search for a strategic equity partner in LSSA, exacerbated by failures of governance and what she called “other negative publicity”.

91. However, her evidence on the potential value of the LSSA acquisition is contradicted by Mr AS Burger, whose view is that LSSA was worth no more than R300 million, at most, while Denel bought the interest in LSSA for R855 million. This acquisition, according to Mr Burger was what led to Denel’s decline.

92. Mr Burger did not attempt to justify this firm assertion but said that an “objective assessment of all available evidence will undoubtedly reveal” that he is correct. However, Mr Burger’s opinion is based on speculation, reached without an examination of the facts and is part of the bluster he employed to deflect attention from his own conduct. Ms Janse van Rensburg’s conclusion is reasoned and supported by the facts. It is indisputable that the transaction went through many levels of scrutiny, including Denel itself, the Competition Commission, the DPE and the Minister.

93. Ms Janse van Rensburg described how in a process completed on 28 April 2015 Denel acquired Land Systems South Africa (Pty) Ltd (LSSA), which changed its name to Denel Vehicle Systems (DVS). Ms van Rensburg communicated to Minister Brown the position in regard to DVS in a letter dated 3 July 2015. However, the new board simply cancelled or discontinued this strategic equity partnership. This put considerable financial strain on Denel because its balance sheet was not strong enough to repay the loans which Denel had taken out to pay for the acquisition.

Denel Asia

94. The second area into which the 2011 board anticipated Denel would grow in the short term was the Asian market. Ms Janse van Rensburg indicated that the 2011 board did not decide to establish the Denel Asia venture. She said that in August 2014, once Denel had finally resolved the ten year criminal investigation into its affairs, the way opened up for it to seek to do business with the government of India.

95. Ms Janse van Rensburg noted the joint venture Denel had concluded with Tawazun Dynamics after the UAE had concluded a significant missile contract with Denel, as part of the offset provisions of that contract. This showed that Denel was open to such ventures under the 2011 board.

96. Considering these contracts, Ms Janse van Rensburg was of the view, that VR Laser had no manufacturing capabilities or any demonstrable access to markets; there were no offset imperatives that necessitated the creation of VR Asia under the joint venture with VR Laser, Denel would have an effective 25% ownership of the venture vehicle; and VR Laser had no demonstrable experience or access to the relevant Indian market.

97. Ms Janse van Rensburg accordingly concluded that the establishment of Denel Asia made no economic sense for Denel because it would have entailed Denel giving VR Laser a share in the venture without receiving any significant benefit in return. The venture also appeared to go counter to the established principles by which Denel had historically concluded successful partnerships.

98. On 24 July 2015, Minister Brown held a meeting with the incoming 2015 board. At the same meeting, she announced the names of the new members of the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC). This was a departure from usual practice: an ARC is a committee of the board and should have been appointed by the board. However, a possible reason why the ARC members' names were announced before the 2015 board had even met for the first time will emerge from what follows below.

99. Minister Brown, however, maintains that her actions in retiring the 2011 board members and appointing new board members were entirely regular. She testified that she excluded the DDGs such as Mr Tlhakudi from the process as a deliberate act of policy because the DDGs were too close to the decision makers within the SOEs and their involvement might lead to corruption.

100. Minister Brown acknowledged the failure to appoint a chartered accountant to the 2015 board. She accepted that because Ms Janse van Rensburg was a chartered accountant, she would have been an appropriate person to retain on the 2015 board. The positions on the 2015 board were advertised and a list submitted to her by an outside organisation called Nexus, which evaluated the candidates for board positions. Minister Brown then used her legal unit to examine the list. The list was then evaluated first by the deployment committee of the ANC and then by Cabinet.

101. Minister Brown appeared simply to transmit the list of candidates drawn up by the outside organisation to her party and then to Cabinet before she rubber stamped the nominees for appointment. She did not explain why the only non-executive member of the 2011 board to be retained, Mr Motseki, was selected for this purpose. Nor did she explain why the board chair, Mr Mantsha, who had been struck off the roll of attorneys and then reinstated in 2011, was selected as chairperson.

102. Former Minister Brown explained that she did not become involved in the disciplinary process regarding the three suspended Denel executives on advice of her officials that this was a matter appropriately left to play out between Denel and the executives themselves. However, she accepted that the DPE should conduct its own process to evaluate the probity of the process. But despite being asked specifically to do so by Mr Saloojee through his attorney, Minister Brown persisted in her supine attitude.

Denel board chair touts Guptas to Denel CEO

103. In early September 2015, the new chair of the 2015 board, Mr D Mantsha, called Mr Saloojee to a "briefing meeting", to be held probably at his office. While en route, Mr Mantsha called Mr Saloojee and said the meeting would be at the Saxonwold compound. At this meeting were Mr Mantsha, Mr Tony Gupta, Mr Essa and Mr Saloojee. Mr Tony Gupta said that the Guptas were interested in acquiring LMT. Mr Saloojee indicated that this would take time and would require several processes. Mr Saloojee testified that he got the impression that Mr Tony Gupta was frustrated by the way he appeared to be putting obstacles in the path the Guptas wished to follow with Denel.

104. In his affidavit of 28 August 2020 Mr Mantsha stated he did not request to meet Mr Saloojee. His recollection was that Mr Essa convened the meeting as a follow up to meetings he had previously had with Mr Saloojee.

105. Mr Mantsha thought there was an agreement between Mr Essa and Mr Saloojee that Mr Saloojee would ask the two private shareholders in LMT to sell their shares to VR Laser, then controlled by Mr

Essa. Mr Mantsha said that at that stage he did not even know what LMT stood for and what it did and that he had no background in the matter being discussed.

106. Mr Mantsha confirmed that Mr Saloojee had said to him "Chair, I need your support" and that he had told Mr Saloojee he would look into the matter. His impression was that Mr Saloojee and Mr Essa had a "long close working relationship with each other". In oral evidence Mr Mantsha departed from his affidavit, saying it was possible that he or Mr Essa might have asked Mr Saloojee to attend the meeting. According to Mr Mantsha, this was the only meeting at Saxonwold where Denel matters were discussed.

107. Apart from deviating from his affidavit, it is strange that Mr Mantsha would have attended a meeting at which he knew nothing about the topic discussed. Mr Saloojee's evidence that Mr Mantsha called him to the meeting is preferable. That Mr Mantsha was prepared to attend a meeting about Denel with the Guptas, at which he did not even know what was to be discussed, shows that at that early stage he was prepared to do the Guptas' bidding without question.

Denel ARC rushes to recommend suspension of Denel executives

108. On 9 September 2015 a special Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) meeting of newly appointed members convened to consider the acquisition of LSSA, renamed DVS by Denel. They received a full briefing from Mr Saloojee, whose impression was that the members of ARC had neither the experience nor the qualifications to evaluate this transaction. As noted above this transaction had gone through a rigorous process established to evaluate such an acquisition and met with approval of various key stakeholders, including National Treasury. The purchase price which Denel paid for DVS, some R855 million, was determined as an appropriate price by experts retained for the purpose, not by officers at Denel.

109. On 10 September 2015 the 2015 board held its first meeting. The members of the Denel executive were required to leave their cell phones outside the meeting. This had not happened before. Mr Saloojee and Mr Mhlontlo presented a written report that covered a wide range of topics, setting out Denel's position in the local defence industry and describing its products. The report addressed Denel's strategy for business development in Brazil, the UAE, Africa and Malaysia.

110. However, the 2015 board showed little interest in the presentation by the executive and proceeded to discuss establishing a formal presence in Asia, particularly India, to explore business opportunities. Mr Saloojee's evidence was that he expressed the view that such action was premature because, in the light of the lifting of the blacklisting of Denel in India, Denel needed first to undertake an analysis of the market and new opportunities, to develop a credible strategy and to explore potential strategic partnerships with established entities. This process would take time, after which the executive would present their findings to the 2015 board.

111. Mr Saloojee's impression was that his response did not please the 2015 board members but no further discussion on the question took place. However, in the report to Parliament submitted after 29 January 2016, (the date on which the report records Denel Asia as having been incorporated), it is stated that Mr Saloojee made a presentation to the board on 10 September 2015 in which he requested the 2015 board to authorise him to pursue the Denel Asia venture and to find a strategic partner for Denel in this venture.

112. This passage in the report to Parliament was either wholly inaccurate or did not capture the essence of Mr Saloojee's response when the prospect of the venture was raised. When the report was presented to Parliament, Mr Saloojee was under suspension and, therefore, did not take part in its preparation and was not responsible for its contents.

113. From 14 to 19 September 2015, Mr Saloojee and the Denel team, including Minister Brown and Mr Mantsha, attended the Defence Security Exhibition in the United Kingdom. Mr Saloojee arranged a briefing session with Minister Brown and Mr Mantsha to familiarise them with the objectives of the exhibition and key stakeholders and customers with whom they would be meeting. Before the briefing, Minister Brown and Mr Saloojee had coffee together and Minister Brown told Mr Saloojee that she had instructed her officials to extend his term as group CEO, as recommended by the 2011 board and that she was happy with his performance.

114. However, during this UK visit, Mr Mantsha told Mr Saloojee that the ARC was unhappy with Denel's acquisition of DVS. On the day Mr Saloojee returned to his office after the UK trip, he was summoned to a meeting of the ARC. At the meeting, without any prior warning, he was asked by the ARC chair to provide reasons why he should not be suspended because of his participation in the DVS transaction. No specifics were mentioned, nor did the ARC members tell him what he was alleged to have done wrong or which aspect of the DVS transaction they expected him to address if he wanted to avoid suspension.

115. Similar meetings were held that day by the ARC with Mr Mhlontlo, the group CFO, and Ms Afrika, the group company secretary. Mr Mhlontlo responded in a manner similar to that of Mr Saloojee.

116. The following day, 22 September 2015, Mr Saloojee was handed a letter of the same date. The letter dealt in depth with the DVS transaction. Its thrust was that Mr Saloojee had defrauded the South African government through its relevant organs by giving fraudulent reasons to justify the transaction and that he had breached the terms on which permission to conclude the transaction had been given. The letter gave him about one day to advance reasons why he should not be suspended for a period of three months. Mr Mhlontlo and Ms Afrika received similar letters although the text of the letter to Ms Afrika was not placed before the Commission. Mr Saloojee, Mr Mhlontlo and Ms Afrika responded to the allegations by the ARC in a joint letter dated 23 September 2015 addressed to the Denel board.

117. They protested their innocence on the allegations made against them, protested that the time allowed to them to respond was grossly inadequate and that the process was thus unfair, asked for a short extension of time in which to present their case, pointed to their lengthy periods of good service to Denel, contended that the reputational damage to Denel and the executives would far outweigh any benefit of a suspension to Denel and offered to engage in constructive discussions with the members of the board in an effort to resolve the concerns raised against them.

118. Neither the board nor the ARC answered this letter. Instead, the three executives were summoned to a meeting of the ARC that same day (23 September 2015). Each of them met separately with the ARC. After these separate meetings the ARC members were joined by Mr Mantsha and other 2015 board members, after which the three executives were separately called back to the ARC meeting where the ARC offered each of them a three month package if they would resign. Each refused the offer and declined to resign.

119. In a letter dated 25 September 2015, the three executives jointly proposed a final and binding arbitration under s 188A of the Labour Relations Act, 1995. On the same day Mr Mantsha wrote to Mr Saloojee. His letter asserted that Mr Saloojee had failed to provide reasons why he should not be suspended and that the board had resolved on 23 September 2015 to suspend him for three months or such further period as the board might determine, on full pay. Mr Mhlontlo and Ms Afrika received equivalent letters.

120. The 2015 board then instructed Dentons Attorneys to investigate with the assistance of Grant Thornton. Each of the three executives was separately interviewed by Dentons. Mr Saloojee was interviewed on 14 November 2015. On 14 December 2015, he was served with a charge sheet detailing his alleged acts of fraud, breach of his obligations and other alleged malfeasances.

121. Perhaps by accident the Acting Group Company Secretary sent to Mr Saloojee a copy of a letter dated 17 December 2015 written and signed by Mr Mantsha to the Acting Group Company Secretary.

122. Mr Mantsha's letter reads as follows:

> I request you to furnish us with the charge sheet so that we can settle as we need to have the charges served upon the suspended employees before close of business tomorrow the 18 of December 2015. And further request you to draft a settlement proposal of three months payments in full and final to the three suspended employees. The offer of settlement must be delivered tomorrow together with the charge sheet and further with a letter informing them that their suspension is extended until the finalisation of the hearing. You are further requested to inform Dentons that their report is not accepted and request them to provide us with a report within thirty (30) days and kindly direct them to provide information to support the charges. And lastly may you recall the circulated Denton's report and make sure it is not circulated.

123. This letter demonstrates that the suspensions were not affected in good faith and for the purpose of advancing the true interests of Denel. The suspensions were, based on this letter, a hatchet job. The suspensions were, literally, weaponised, to serve a corrupt purpose.

124. Mr Mantsha gave evidence initially over two days. He was consistently vague, taking refuge in lack of memory, and complained consistently of being victimised. He had been informed by the Commission's administrative staff about critical issues on which the Commission wanted to question him. He replied on paper frequently without any attempt to present facts to back up his bland assertions of innocence. He sought to present his relationship with Mr Saloojee as one which began with an admiration for the good work Mr Saloojee had done in Denel. At the first board meeting of the 2015 board on 10 September 2015 Mr Mantsha actually congratulated Mr Saloojee on turning Denel around. Mr Mantsha claimed that soon thereafter he had learned that Mr Saloojee had deceived the board when he concluded a bridging finance arrangement with Absa Bank.

125. Mr Mantsha was at pains to explain why Gupta money had been used to fund his travel to and transport and accommodation in Dubai and India in early October 2015. He explained that he had a private verbal arrangement with Mr Chawla, the then CEO of Sahara Computers, a Gupta company. Mr Chawla paid for Mr Mantsha's travel through invoices raised on Sahara. Mr Chawla would tell Mr Mantsha what he owed and Mr Mantsha would reimburse Mr Chawla the travel costs plus a fee for Mr Chawla. This was said to be a private business of Mr Chawla. There was neither a paper trail to back up Mr Mantsha's version, nor an explanation for Mr Mantsha's access to cash for travel costs and Mr Chawla's fees.

126. The conclusion is that the overseas travel was a quid pro quo for Mr Mantsha's services in effecting the capture of Denel. The letter that was quoted shows that Mr Mantsha tried to get Dentons to manufacture evidence to support Mr Mantsha's campaign to oust the executives. Mr Mantsha was a deliberately untruthful witness and his attempts to contradict Mr Saloojee's evidence were not accepted as fact or truth.

127. This is perhaps an appropriate place firstly to answer the question why was the new ARC constituted before the first 2015 board meeting? The answer is that Mr Mantsha needed the new ARC to neutralise Mr Saloojee. Secondly, it is appropriate to mention that the 2015 board appointed Mr Ntshepe, the relatively junior executive who had formed the link between Mr Saloojee and Mr Essa (and thus the Guptas) as Acting Group CEO in Mr Saloojee's place. They did so probably because Mr Mantsha knew that Mr Ntshepe would do as he was told.

128. All the directors who supported Mr Mantsha in his corrupt endeavour to get the three executives out of the way are similarly probably culpable. The evidence before the Commission does show that at least one of the new appointees to the 2015 board did not go along with this scheme.

129. Ms Nonyameko Mandindi had reservations about the suspension process because the 2015 board had been in office for too short a time to assess the allegations adequately and fairly. She was also confused because, according to the agenda, the board was supposed to discuss the LSSA transaction and not suspensions. She left before the conclusion of the board meeting. She learned the next day that the board had resolved to suspend the three executives and approve certain acting appointments.

130. Ms Mandindi wrote a letter dated 25 September 2015 to Mr Mantsha to express her concerns about the procedure and to the lack of wisdom shown by the board in proceeding as it did. Mr Mantsha did not reply to her letter.

131. On 7 October 2015, Ms Mandindi signed a round robin resolution of the board in which she disagreed with the decision to appoint Dentons to investigate the LSSA transaction. She followed up her letter with an email dated 13 October 2015 to her fellow board members in which she urged the board to investigate and debate the LSSA transaction in a proper manner. She resigned as a board member in July 2016.

132. There followed a series of communications between the attorneys for the executives and those of Denel. The disciplinary hearing was scheduled for 25 January 2016. The executives' attorney called, entirely predictably, for production of a list of documents. None was forthcoming. Instead, Denel offered mediation, which proceeded unsuccessfully on 8 February 2016. In a letter dated 17 March 2016 to Mr Saloojee, Mr Mantsha offered to pay Mr Saloojee out for the balance of his contract, which was due to terminate on 17 January 2017. Mr Saloojee rejected the offer and pressed for a disciplinary enquiry to be held.

133. On 1 October 2015, the three suspended executives, through their attorney, wrote to Mr Mantsha as chair of the Denel board, complaining of the process which had been followed in their suspension. They copied this letter to the Minister and asked her to intervene. The acting DG of the DPE responded in a letter dated 26 October 2015, declining to intervene on the basis that this was a board, and not a shareholder, issue. Nevertheless, the DPE committed itself in the letter to undertake a process of its own to ensure that the actions taken by the Board in respect of the necessary governance processes have been followed in accordance with relevant regulatory principles.

134. Minister Brown approved this stance. By letter dated 25 April 2016, through his attorney, Mr Saloojee wrote to the then Minister. Setting the facts out fully and providing relevant documents, Mr Saloojee asked Minister Brown to intervene in order to cause his immediate reinstatement as CEO. Ms Brown did not respond to this letter and no process was ever undertaken by the DPE to examine the lack of probity with which the disciplinary processes of the 2015 board had been undertaken.

135. It is striking, and not to Minister Brown's credit, that when Mr Saloojee complained to her that he was being victimised to the prejudice of Denel, she did nothing to investigate the situation independently, after previously having offered him an extension of his contract.

136. Minster Brown's refusal to intervene in this matter relating to the Board of Denel and Denel's executives in regard to the suspension of the executives stands in the stark contrast to her willingness to influence the Eskom Board on 11 March 2015 to suspend the executives. The question that arises is: why was she prepared to intervene in the one but not in the other? Could it be that in the Eskom one her intervention may have been to assist the Guptas in their agenda but in Denel they would not have wanted her to intervene?

137. Finally, Mr Saloojee accepted the inevitable and signed a settlement agreement with Denel dated 8 November 2016. Denel paid Mr Saloojee out a total of R2 661 383 made up of accrued leave pay of R298 891 plus an "ex gratia amount" of R2 362 492.

138. Mr Mhlontlo received a settlement of his full salary while he was under suspension until the termination date under his settlement agreement, as well as a 13th cheque amounting to R163 711,35 and an ex gratia amount of R6 625 644 and a 'short term incentive bonus' of R1 656 411, all without prejudice to his rights under the rules of the Denel Retirement Fund and the medical aid fund. Mr Mhlontlo's settlement agreement with Denel was dated 25 July 2016. This means that Mr Mhlontlo was paid R 8 445 766,35 in addition for receiving his full salary for about nine months of suspension without working.

139. Why Denel was paying an employee, who, according to Mr Mantsha was guilty of serious acts of dishonesty, such a large amount. In settlement of her claims against Denel, Ms Afrika was paid an "ex gratia amount" of R1,642 million. Mr Mantsha's version on the conduct or lack of conduct of the disciplinary proceedings was vague. He blamed the Denel management for not proceeding with the process as should have happened. Mr Mantsha justified the very large pay outs to the suspended executives on the ground that this protected Denel's reputation. The damage to Denel's reputation took place when the executives were suspended. Their successful prosecution on the serious charges levelled against them would have improved Denel's reputation.

140. Mr Mantsha sought to justify these payments of some R10 million, at a time when Denel was in a critical financial state on the basis that the disciplinary proceeds would have cost more. There is no evidence to show that he had the attendant financial and reputational risks and benefits analysed.

Denel awards single source supplier contract to VR Laser

141. On 19 May 2015, DLS and VR Laser concluded a contract appointing VR Laser as single source supplier to Denel of complex engineering systems at agreed tariffs for a period of ten years (the DLS single source contract). This contract gave VR Laser a right of first refusal in its field of work and effectively took its competitors out of contention for ten years.

142. While the Denel executives who were responsible for the decision to conclude the contract were remiss in advocating for it and ignoring the prescripts of the legislation and internal rules of Denel regarding fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost effective procurement, the Denel executives concerned acted as they did in the belief that they were advancing Denel's interests or at least not acting against them. The Denel executive who advocated most strenuously for the appointment of VR Laser as single source supplier was Mr Burger, the CEO of DLS. His motive was to speed up decision making and get the job done. He regarded VR Laser as by far the most competent and reliable supplier in its field. The appointment of VR Laser would eliminate what Mr Burger regarded as time wasting exercises which would inevitably lead to the conclusion that the work ought to go to VR Laser.

143. For Mr van der Merwe, the CEO of VR Laser, the single source appointment of VR Laser would give his company a welcome edge over its competitors. However, the appointment of VR Laser was not left, as it should have been, to the internal processes of Denel. There is credible evidence that Mr Mantsha put pressure on the Denel management to appoint VR Laser as single source supplier in this critical field. To avoid the rigid prescriptions of a single source supplier agreement, Mr Saloojee had authorised the conclusion of a memorandum of understanding (MOU) between Denel and VR Laser. The MOU was a legal tool frequently used by Denel. It committed the parties to examine the way forward but did not impose concrete obligations as did another form of contract used by Denel, a memorandum of agreement (MOA). Mr Saloojee was slow to authorise the conclusion of the MOU with VR Laser. However, he was frequently pressed by the Deputy Minister of Public Enterprises, Mr Bulelani Magwanishe, to conclude the MOU. There does not appear to have been any comprehensible reason why the Deputy Minister of Public Enterprises should be concerned about an MOU between Denel and one of its suppliers.

144. According to Ms C Geldenhuys (DVS legal and commercial executive), in November 2015, after the board had removed Mr Saloojee , the new Acting Group CEO Mr Ntshepe put pressure on DVS to agree to the proposal to upgrade the MOU to an MOA. DVS was a subsidiary of Denel, with its own board and exco. DVS saw the plan to make VR Laser a single source supplier to DLS as indicating that the work in question would all go to VR Laser, thus depriving DVS of lucrative and badly needed work. DVS therefore opposed the proposed MOA.

145. The implied threat used by Mr Ntshepe, in the name of Mr Mantsha, was that if DLS did not move ahead to withdraw its opposition to the MOA which appointed VR Laser as a single source supplier, the 2015 board would take steps to reduce the autonomy of DLS through a reorganisation which downgraded DLS to a division. In short, Mr Ntshepe used the DLS's executives fear of losing their jobs as a weapon to persuade them to approve the appointment.

146. From the wider perspective of Denel, the single source appointment of VR Laser made no commercial sense. VR Laser was not overburdened with work. If Denel wished to retain VR Laser for a specific job, it would not have to stand in line and wait until VR Laser had capacity to take on Denel's work. The appointment deprived Denel of the ability to go out into the market unfettered by obligations toward VR Laser. There was equally no good reason why Denel and VR Laser should agree a tariff of fees, with escalation, in favour of VR Laser for the next ten years. Even if, improbably, the market fell and the tariff disadvantaged VR Laser in the years after the conclusion of the single supplier contract, Denel would never have succeeded in forcing VR Laser to do work at a loss.

147. The next contractual step of significance was the conclusion of the DVS single source contract with VR

Laser on 14 December 2015, placing DVS under contractual restraints equivalent to those imposed on Denel through its division DLS.

148. From VR Laser's strategic perspective, the single source contract with DVS was desirable because DVS was, in law, a separate company. The contract with DLS therefore needed to tie up DVS and restrict its freedom to put its work out to the market. The single source contract with DVS also gave VR Laser a right of first refusal of work channelled by Denel through DVS.

149. From the perspective of Mr Essa and the Guptas, they had secured a monopoly for VR Laser in respect of Denel's most important work in South Africa and a seat at the table in the decision-making process around Hoefyster. A further step was to tie Denel up outside South Africa. This was to be done through the Denel Asia project.

150. The Denel COO, Mr Wessels, was not singled out for advancement after the three executives were suspended. Thus, he was most unlikely to have been party to the scheme to get Mr Saloojee and the others out of the way. From 8 to 12 November 2015, Mr Wessels attended an air show in Dubai as part of a Denel contingent. At this event, Mr Ntshepe, who had been advanced after the suspensions to the position of Acting CEO of Denel, instructed Mr Wessels to develop a relationship between DVS and VR Laser comparable to the relationship which had existed between DLS and VR Laser. This meant that the work which had previously been done by DVS would now be done by VR Laser.

151. Mr Wessels said that this was not possible as the work which he wanted to transfer to VR Laser was part of the core in-house business of DVS. Mr Ntshepe responded that he was giving Mr Wessels an instruction, which had been approved by Mr Mantsha. Mr Wessels did not verify the claim with Mr Mantsha but there is no reason to doubt that the instruction came through Mr Mantsha.

152. Mr Wessels and Mr Steyn, the CEO of DVS, then made efforts to delay the transfer of the work to VR Laser and to persuade the Denel management to reverse the decision to transfer the work to VR Laser. The response of Mr Ntshepe was to take the task of transferring the work away from Mr Wessels and to give it to Mr Burger. Mr Wessels was told after this that Mr Mantsha had directed that Mr Wessels would no longer be required to attend board meetings, as he had routinely done in the past. Mr Wessels was then eased out of the decision-making process in relation to the transfer of the work from DVS to VR Laser and, from December 2015 left mostly without productive work.

153. Mr Wessels protested this state of affairs to Mr Ntshepe and the acting CFO, Mr Mhlwane. Mr Wessels was then moved to become the acting CEO of LMT. LMT by this stage was in a poor financial state as its major Saudi client, the Saudi Ministry of the Interior, through its trading company SCC, was in dispute with LMT and had stopped paying. Mr Wessels was forced to approach the LMT shareholders for loans to pay staff and other overhead expenses, but LMT remained in financial difficulties. Mr Wessels left LMT and Denel on 31 August 2016.

The Denel Asia venture

154. Authorisation for a project such as Denel Asia had to be provided by both the DPE and the Treasury. The 2015 board rapidly initiated the process by which approval might be given. Its pre-notification letter under s 54(2) of the Public Finance Management Act 29 of 1999 (PFMA) to the DPE was dated 29 October 2015. A similar letter dated 10 December 2015 was sent to the Minister of Finance (who happened fortuitously to be Mr D van Rooyen MP) on behalf of the Treasury.

155. The relevant section in the PFMA requires that, before a public entity such as Denel concludes a transaction such as the Denel Asia project, the accounting authority for the public entity must promptly and in writing seek the approval of the transaction from both these Departments.

156. In short, the Denel Asia project contemplated a joint venture between Denel and VR Laser to market Denel to India and Asia generally. For this purpose, it was proposed that the venture parties form a company in Hong Kong called Denel Asia and open an office in Hong Kong to further the venture. Officials from both Departments raised queries, which had the effect of delaying the implementation of the joint venture. The officials highlighted the need for Treasury approval; the apparent lack of funding plans; an inadequate business plan; questions about the suitability of VR Laser and its shareholders; the political implications. The team emphasised the questions around the suitability of VR Laser as a potential partner in the regions in question.

157. The team of officials received no further communication of substance on the subject either from the Minister or from the DG of the DPE (Mr Richard Seleka, who was associated with the Guptas). On 5 February 2016, Denel informed the DPE that it had proceeded to implement the transaction based on s 54(3) of the PFMA. This measure provides that a public entity may assume that approval has been given if it receives no response from the executive authority on a submission in terms s 54(2) within 30 days or within a longer period as may be agreed to between itself and the executive authority.

158. Mr Tlhakudi testified that he found this hasty recourse to s 54(3) unusual and discourteous. But, he said, from subsequent engagements between Minister Brown and the 2015 board, it was clear that the Minister had come to terms with the Denel board decision and that both Minister Brown and the 2015 board were looking for ways in which the Treasury could be persuaded to accept the Denel position that Treasury approval for the transaction had been deemed to have been given. It should be noted that Minister Brown challenged the detail of DDG Tlhakudi's testimony. Resolving these evidentiary conflicts has become unnecessary.

159. What is indisputable, however, is that National Treasury did not give its approval. Denel then sued the Treasury. By notice of motion dated 23 March 2017, under Gauteng Division of the High Court case no. 20749/17, Denel applied for an order against the Minister of Finance and the Department of National Treasury for an order declaring that Denel had obtained approval or was deemed to have obtained approval for the joint venture with VR Laser. Denel's founding affidavit was signed by Mr Ntshepe as the acting CEO of Denel.

160. The application was ultimately withdrawn by Denel and Mr Tlhakudi was threatened with not having his contract of employment extended. Mr Tlhakudi drafted letters to Mr Mantsha (15 July 2016) and the then Minister of Finance, Mr Pravin Gordhan (20 September 2016), indicating that Minister Brown accepted the deemed approval status of Denel Asia. Pressure was put on Mr Tlhakudi by Mr Richard Seleke (DG of the DPE) and Mr Mantsha at a meeting in February 2018 to amend the initial memorandum, which had effectively been highly critical of the proposed joint venture. The memorandum was amended to read that Minister Brown had granted conditional approval for the joint venture on 24 December 2015.

161. Although the company, Denel Asia, was incorporated in Hong Kong, the Denel Asia venture happened as the tide of public opinion turned against the Guptas. The Guptas' Denel dealings were made public in a detailed report in the Mail and Guardian newspaper on 5 February 2016. Concurrently, the commercial banks in South Africa terminated all the accounts of Gupta-linked entities, including VR Laser.

162. The Denel Asia venture made no commercial sense to Denel. VR Laser and the Guptas had no established expertise in the field in which it was proposed Denel Asia would operate. The Guptas were politically exposed persons at the time and no research had been done to investigate either the need for such a venture or the relative merits of other potential partners. Denel Asia was a shameless attempt to benefit the Guptas.

INTERVENTIONS IN THE AFFAIRS OF DENEL

163. The next section proceeds to analyse the character of the interventions by the Guptas and Mr Essa in the affairs of VR Laser and Denel:

    163.1 Were any attempts made, and if so to what extent and by whom, through any form of inducement or for any gain of whatsoever nature to influence members of the National Executive (including Deputy Ministers), office bearers and /or functionaries employed by or office bearers of any state institution or directors of the 2015 boards of Denel to facilitate or advance the interventions of Denel into the affairs of Denel?

163.2 Did the President or any member of the present or previous members of his National Executive (including Deputy Ministers) or public official or employee of any SOEs breach or violate the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation by facilitating the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOE's or any organ of state to benefit the Gupta family or any other family, individual or corporate entity doing business with Denel?

163.3 What was the nature and extent of corruption, if any, in the awarding of contracts to companies or business entities by Denel?

163.4 Were there any irregularities, undue enrichment, corruption and undue influence in the awarding of contracts and any other governmental services in the business dealings of the Gupta family with Denel?

163.5 Were there any irregularities, undue enrichment, corruption and undue influence in the awarding of contracts in the business dealings of the Gupta family with government departments and Denel; in particular, did any member of the National Executive (including the President), public official, functionary of any organ of state influence the awarding of tenders to benefit themselves, their families or entities in which they held a personal interest?

164. It is reasoned that the entry of Mr Essa and the Guptas into VR Laser was conceived for the purpose of using VR Laser as a vehicle to achieve the capture of Denel. While the capture process proceeded and broadened, the legitimate business of VR Laser would continue. The denial by Mr van der Merwe that he participated in any illegal dealings is credible. It made 'capture sense' to deflect attention from the capture by presenting VR Laser as a legitimate business.

165. The Guptas were not prepared to compete for Denel's business. This is shown by their conduct, at the start of Mr Saloojee's term of office, in getting the then Minister of Public Enterprises Mr Gigaba, to make clear to Mr Saloojee that he was to exert himself to favour the Guptas. For this purpose, Mr Saloojee was brought to the Guptas' stronghold, the Saxonwold compound, to meet his ultimate boss, a man who had not previously found it necessary to meet Mr Saloojee.

166. Then, when Mr Saloojee showed that he would not dance to the Guptas' tune, steps were taken to gain control and oust Mr Saloojee. At that stage, Denel must have appeared an attractive target for capture. It was showing a profit, surely rare for an SOE at that time, had been given a clean audit by the AG and was praised both by the private sector, including the banks and by the then Minister, Ms Brown.

167. The first step was to remove control of Denel from the hands of a competent and honest board. The cover for this was the end of the terms of office of the members of the 2011 board. By then the Guptas had taken control of VR Laser. Their cover was in place. The evidence shows quite conclusively that the means used by Minister Brown to replace the members of the 2011 board and replace them with her own appointees excluded the DPE officials from any input into the process and ensured that no criticisms of Minister Brown's appointees would be raised by officials who might have concerns about their lack of probity, skills and expertise.

168. In this regard, it is significant that Minister Brown's choice for board chair, Mr Mantsha, was an attorney who, according to Mr Tlhakudi had previously been struck off the roll for something to do with his trust account and then re-enrolled. Surely, a prudent Minister would have had nothing to do with appointing an attorney with such a history as chairperson of such a board.

169. Well-nigh the first action taken by the 2015 board was to suspend Mr Saloojee. One can understand that on the same basis that Mr Saloojee had been suspended, action against Mr Mhlontlo could be made superficially credible, but the question that arises is, why did Ms Afrika need to be suspended? What had she done that warranted her being left on suspension, at considerable expense to Denel for the lengthy period that the 2015 board kept Mr Saloojee and Mr Mhlontlo at bay? All that was produced by Mr Mantsha to justify her suspension was that she had denied ARC the use of the boardroom and then, the same day, allowed ARC to use the boardroom after Mr Saloojee had spoken to her on the telephone from London.

170. It is impossible to understand why the action on the part of Ms Afrika warranted suspension, let alone a protracted period in which the company secretary remained away from her post, at full pay, and was then paid over a million Rands in settlement.

171. The utter cynicism of the suspensions was demonstrated by Mr Mantsha's letter to his acting company secretary dated 17 December 2015, in which he castigated Dentons Attorneys for producing a report which did not justify the suspensions and called on them to fabricate a report which did. Mr Mantsha talked about settling with the three executives, two of whom he had just found had prima facie committed fraud and otherwise misconducted themselves egregiously.

172. The question why Mr Mantsha and, indeed, probably other members of the 2015 board so misconducted themselves can now be answered. The purpose of the suspension of Mr Saloojee was to remove an obstruction from the path of the Guptas. The unscrupulous methods used by Mr Mantsha and his abettors to prevent this loyal servant from protecting Denel are quite palpable. While the other two executives, loyal servants of Denel both, were similarly sacrificed to serve as cover for the intervention to get rid of Mr Saloojee. The sweeping decapitation of the Denel exco also, usefully from the perspective of Mr Mantsha et al, served to warn the employees still at Denel that, if they stood in Mr Mantsha's way, they could expect the same treatment.

173. Viewed in context, the appointment of Mr Ntshepe as Acting Group CEO once Mr Saloojee had been removed is significant. Mr Ntshepe had worked with the Guptas and must have shown himself to be a person on whom they could rely. Certainly, during Mr Ntshepe's term of office, he did nothing to suggest that he would resist any of Mr Mantsha's moves.

174. These conclusions are only reinforced by the way Mr Mantsha evaded the disciplinary enquiry that was the ostensible, but not the true, reason for the suspensions. He knew the suspensions were unjustified and that the executives would be exonerated at an enquiry, but Mr Mantsha needed time for the Guptas to develop their capture strategy. Mr Mantsha therefore spent millions of Rands on preserving the suspensions and evading the enquiry. Then when he had run down the clock, at a time when the executives were confronted with the difficulties of securing reinstatement, in Mr Saloojee's case purely because his contract had come to an end by effluxion of time, Mr Mantsha caused further millions of Rands to be paid to the executives to ensure they went quietly. Moreover, this was at a time when Denel could not pay its own privileged supplier, VR Laser, to whom Denel was so much in arrears (at one stage R15 million) that VR Laser had to refuse to take on new work for Denel.

175. By this time, Denel was in serious financial difficulties, exacerbated by the need to pay back the large loans taken out to pay for the DVS acquisition. In this regard, as Mr Mantsha well knew, it was anticipated that funds to settle loans would be brought in by the anticipated equity partner with Denel in DVS. Yet Mr Mantsha was prepared to spend large amounts of money, which Denel did not have, to make what had now become Mr Mantsha's problem go away.

176. In November 2015 at an air show in Dubai, Mr Mantsha terminated the negotiations with Denel's potential equity partner whose entry, it was hoped, would inject capital into the acquisition and thereby alleviate Denel's burden. There is no suggestion that Mr Mantsha ever again sought such an equity partner. Thus, in a significant sense, Mr Mantsha brought about the financial embarrassment of Denel. Mr Mantsha knew that Denel had this large commitment. This was one of the main bases of the charges he had brought against Mr Saloojee which could have led to safety on this score. It is a fair inference that Mr Mantsha acted as he did because he did not want an equity partner entering the Denel space in potential competition with the Guptas.

177. During Mr Mantsha's testimony, he stated that, without having sight of the relevant minutes of board meetings, he was not able properly and fully to explain why Mr Saloojee, Mr Mhlontlo and Ms Afrika were suspended, why Denel never held a disciplinary inquiry in regard to the conduct of these employees and why Denel paid them substantial amounts in settlement of the disputes between Denel and the employees.

178. By letter dated 24 June 2021, the Secretary of the Commission sent to Mr Mantsha's attorneys' copies of the minutes of meetings of the board held between 8 September 2015 and 15 January 2017 and invited him to supplement his evidence in any way he deemed necessary now that he had ben furnished with these minutes.

179. Mr Mantsha responded in a supplementary affidavit (30 June 2021) in which he summarised the contents of the minutes of the meeting of 28 April 2016 and otherwise merely quoted passages from the minutes in question, the text of which he attached to his supplementary affidavit. He concluded with the assertion that the board had discharged its fiduciary duty diligently in matters relating to the suspension and termination of employment of the employees in question.

180. The minutes undoubtedly contain assertions regarding the misconduct of the employees in question. It is important to summarise comprehensively the allegations put before the board because the seriousness and wide extent of the allegations are relevant to a point explained next: that the allegations never arose above the level of mere assertion; that Mr Mantsha has at no stage given any content to justify those serious allegations; and that the evidence which was produced demonstrates, on a balance of probabilities, that the allegations themselves were no more than bluster, designed to manipulate an under-qualified and inexperienced board into removing the employees concerned so that they could be replaced by officials considered to be more amenable to the planned capture of Denel by the Guptas and their proxies.

181. The case against the three employees was put to the board by Ms Kgomongoe, the newly appointed chair of ARC. She levelled the following allegations against the three employees: DVS shares had been pledged to Nedbank as security for a loan made by Nedbank to Denel. The offer to Nedbank of cross-guarantees of all Denel subsidiaries appeared to be a contravention of the PFMA.

182. The board was informed for the first time on 10 September that Denel was obliged to pay Nedbank R450 million by 30 September 2015. This had been hidden from the board by the executive directors. The financial report of the group financial director, Mr Mhlontlo had not included any information regarding the payment in his financial report. The Nedbank loan had been signed by the executive directors without the required authority of the board and without the approval of the shareholder and the National Treasury. The executive directors had failed to obtain a valuation in accordance with s 51 of the PFMA and had accordingly misled Nedbank as to the ability of Denel to repay the loan by 30 September 2015. The executive directors had misled the Minister of Public Enterprises and the National Treasury by alleging that Denel was in a sound financial position and had an equity balance of R1,5 billion. This statement was not true because R1,2 billion was ring fenced for the Hoefyster project.

183. These acts of misconduct had caused an irretrievable breakdown of the relationship between the executive directors and the board. The company secretary, Ms Afrika, had misled the board by alleging on 9 September 2015 that the shareholder and the Minister of Finance had approved the LSSA transaction on the basis that Denel would find a suitable equity partner, by 'blocking Board members from certain meetings' and generally failing to communicate with members of the board.

184. Ms Kgomongoe advised the board that no good reason had been advanced by the employees in question for a postponement of the action to be proposed to enable the employees to better present their defences. The board decided that the executive directors were to be offered the opportunity to resign with payment of one month's salary, failing which they and Ms Afrika were to be suspended with immediate effect. Further investigations of the LSSA transaction were to be carried out. Disciplinary proceedings were to be instituted within ninety days; such that a law firm was to be appointed to investigate the LSSA acquisition.

185. The board further decided that Mr Ntshepe would be appointed acting group CEO, that Mr Odwa Mhlwana would be appointed acting CFO and Mr Tau Mahumapelo would be appointed acting company secretary. This drastic action was put into effect and Dentons was appointed to investigate the LSSA transaction. Dentons reported and found no misconduct, such had been alleged.

186. The response of Mr Mantsha was not to reconsider the action he had effectively promoted but sought in the letter to the acting company secretary to manipulate the authors of the report into producing a report more to Mr Mantsha's liking; in short to manufacture evidence for him.

187. The Dentons draft comprises 157 pages, including annexures, and a section titled “CONCLUSIONS” in which it is concluded that the application submitted by Denel pursuant to the PFMA was procedurally “not necessarily non compliant, but could have been prepared with a higher degree of care”. It also concludes that the Minister of Public Enterprises had approved the transaction conditionally, one of such conditions being that the terms and conditions of the final loan agreements to be concluded with Nedbank and ABSA should not be more onerous than those in the term sheets which the banks provided during the negotiations toward the conclusion of the acquisition transaction. The approval of the Minister of Finance was conditional on the compliance by Denel with the conditions attached by the Minister of Public Enterprises.

188. However, the Nedbank loan was for a five month period while the term sheet provided for a term of five years. Dentons regarded this as a material change, which did not conform to the board approval obtained for this aspect of the transaction on 11 February 2015. Dentons therefore concluded that both Mr Saloojee and Mr Mhlontlo were in breach of the board authorisation.

189. But both the chair, Ms Janse van Rensburg, and Dr Cruywagen, a board member with considerable commercial experience, were aware of the change in the terms of the Nedbank loan at the latest by 22 April 2015 and the terms of the Nedbank loan were disclosed to the 2011 board on 26 June 2015. Dentons concluded that there:

> ... seems to have been inadequate disclosure and analysis of the financial implications of the shortened term of the loan. In particular, there is limited analysis concerning the financial demands that would be placed on Denel as at the end of September 2015 and the manner in which these financial demands would be met. The ARC reports and presentations indicate that more detailed information was provided to ARC, as opposed to the Board.

190. Nevertheless, the 2011 board did not regard the change in the terms of the Nedbank loan as significant or warranting any further action. The 2011 board did not consider that any action against either Mr Saloojee or Mr Mhlontlo, let alone Ms Afrika, was warranted. Dentons concluded that there had been substantial compliance with the requirement of shareholder approval of the loans (all the essential elements of the funding component of the transaction having been disclosed during the PFMA approval process). However, Dentons regarded the language used in describing the bridging loans as misleading: the loans had not merely been “actuated” for five months pending restructure of the funding arrangements. This, according to Dentons, was because there was no provision in the five month agreement that entitled Denel to extend the loan for the full five years.

191. Dentons further concluded that they had found no evidence of fraud or corrupt conduct by Denel management or members of the 2011 board. Ultimately, in a section headed “RECOMMENDATIONS”, Denel left the taking of disciplinary steps against Mr Saloojee and Mr Mhlontlo up to Denel.

192. The conclusion is irresistible that when Mr Mantsha read the Dentons draft report before he wrote his letter dated 17 December 2015, he realised that the case made by ARC against Mr Saloojee and Mr Mhlontlo, on the strength of which he had executed the suspensions, had no prospects of success if the Dentons draft report was substantially correct. That was why Mr Mantsha wanted Dentons to change their report. The content of the report itself must convince any impartial reader that it simply could not be dismissed out of hand as Mr Mantsha suggested in his testimony.

193. There is no suggestion that Mr Mantsha or Denel ever obtained further evidence to bolster the allegations made against the three employees and laid before the board on 23 September 2015.

194. The allegations or arguments made in the board minutes as to why the disciplinary enquiry should not proceed and the three employees should be offered packages amount to the following:

    194.1 At its meeting on 26 February 2016, the board decided to pay out Mr Saloojee for the remaining ten months of his contract because the disciplinary process could be protracted and costly but the disciplinary process regarding Mr Mhlontlo and Ms Afrika were to proceed ‘immediately’. At the meeting of 28 April 2016, it was asserted that the acting company secretary, Ms Fortune Legoabe, had leaked the Denton draft report to one or more of the suspended employees. This was said to have compromised the disciplinary process and to have led to the removal of the acting company secretary.

194.2 At the meeting of 8 June 2016, the board discussed the 'concern' that Denel had been captured by the Guptas but Mr Mantsha emphasised that Denel was doing very well. The board resolved that the disciplinary hearing should be concluded as soon as possible, preferably before the AGM. The cases against the other employees should be settled in preference to going ahead with the disciplinary process to save costs. This should be balanced with the public outcry to bring officials to account. Management needed to focus on operations rather than the suspensions. The Minister would like to focus on the positives of the business and see the process finalised urgently.

194.3 At the board meeting of 23 June 2016, it was resolved to pay Mr Saloojee "the remainder of the contract". This contradicts the contention made at the previous board meeting on 8 June 2016 that Mr Saloojee was no longer an employee. Despite a discussion around 'legal technicalities' such as whether Mr Saloojee was still an employee, the employment relationship being broken down and the risk that reinstatement might be ordered, the board was still firmly of the view that "nothing has changed in terms of success and the merits of the case" but the case could take long and cost Denel more money. There is nothing to suggest that any analysis was undertaken of the length of time the disciplinary proceedings might take or the alleged saving of cost by paying the three employees out.

195. There was no evidence that the Dentons draft report was leaked to the suspended employees. What was leaked, or inadvertently disclosed, by the acting company secretary was Mr Mantsha's letter to her in which Mr Mantsha directed her to instruct Dentons to manufacture evidence which would support Mr Mantsha's case against the three suspended employees. That report and the drafts that preceded a final report would in any event have been subject to discovery. It was not commissioned to provide Denel with legal advice in relation to a contemplated legal proceeding but to determine whether there had been any justification for the suspensions and the disciplinary process in the first place. If the alleged leaking of the draft report compromised Denel's case, it could only have been so because the report concluded that the disciplinary case against the employees was not likely to end in a justification of the action that had been taken against the employees. If the employees were, as they themselves maintained, innocent of any wrongdoing, there could have been no legitimate objection to their being reinstated.

196. The haste with which the suspensions were implemented should be contrasted with the leisurely pace at which Mr Mantsha allowed the actual disciplinary process itself to proceed. The alleged conduct of Mr Saloojee and Mr Mhlontlo related to matters of historical record. There was no suggestion that their continued presence in their positions might prejudice Denel going forward. That the board - and ARC - needed an investigation by a firm of lawyers to determine the facts showed that the board itself had no adequate grasp of the facts at the time it suspended the three employees. Surely, in these circumstances, the determination of the facts should have preceded the actions taken.

197. And once the lawyers had investigated, and found no wrongdoing, surely what was obviously required was that justice be done and the employees be restored to their posts? This could have been done without cost to Denel because the employees had been paid their salaries while under suspension. The very fact that Mr Mantsha, and the rest of the board, decided to spend Denel's money, at a time when it was already in difficulties, to get rid of the employees, reinforces the conclusion that the purpose of the suspensions was not to protect Denel but to advance an agenda of those who devised the suspension scheme.

198. The conclusion is unavoidable that the entire scheme was manufactured to get rid of three senior employees, not because they were guilty of wrongdoing because they were not, but because the employees in question were unlikely going forward to view wrongdoing with approval, their removal was devised to replace them with officials considered more likely to advance the very schemes of wrongdoing that were contemplated by those who had worked to oust the three employees.

199. The evidence points to the fact that Mr Mantsha was one of the central actors in the Gupta and Essa scheme to capture Denel. He was not duped into acting as he did: he was a witting agent of state capture. He acted as he did in the expectation that he would be rewarded for his efforts on behalf of the Guptas, as he was when he travelled at their expense. Mr Mantsha almost certainly anticipated that, as the Guptas strengthened their grip on the South African state, he would be rewarded by access to positions of power and the fleshpots of power. Mr Mantsha enjoyed a taste for the fleshpots of power when he travelled overseas, in luxury, at the expense of the Guptas in early October 2015, only days after he had, with apparent success, managed the suspension of the three Denel executives.

Evaluation of the conduct of Minister Brown

200. It seems clear that on Ms Brown's own evidence, she did not appear to appreciate that she is individually, not collectively with her party and cabinet colleagues, responsible for the appointments she made. But there is a more serious aspect to consider: whether by abdicating her decision-making function, effectively, to an outside organisation in relation to the appointment of the 2015 board and failing to investigate and consider the probity of the disciplinary action taken against the three suspended Denel executives, she acted with the intention of promoting the campaign of state capture directed at Denel by the Guptas, Mr Essa, Mr Mantsha and perhaps other members of the 2015 board.

201. Minister Brown's failure to respond to Mr Saloojee's letter dated 25 April 2016 asking her to intervene is a cause for concern. To a Minister who had Denel's interests at heart, this letter would surely have come as a shock. Here was an executive of Denel, whom she had previously commended in public and had offered an extension of his contract, being accused of wrongdoing in relation to a transaction that had been comprehensively vetted both by her predecessor, by the Treasury and by the Competition Commission. Surely this, when brought to her notice, warranted an investigation, if not an intervention?

202. A factor which may weigh in favour of Minister Brown is the lack of evidence that she received any of the money which Mr Tony Gupta described as being paid to all those that helped the Guptas. Against this, however, is the fact that the Guptas did not use the influence they undoubtedly were able to bring to bear to replace her with another more willing to misuse his position and powers to advance the Guptas' interests. The mere fact that a captured person was left in his or her position might be adequate reward in certain instances.

203. The decisive factor in the evaluation of whether Minister Brown was a conscious agent of state capture is the analysis of her cell phone records. By notice dated 19 July 2021 under rule 10.6 of the Rules governing the conduct of the Commission, Ms Brown was called on to respond to a schedule containing evidence of telephone records which showed that there had probably been a telephone conversation between, firstly, Ms Brown and either Mr Nazim Howa or Mr Atul Gupta and secondly, several telephone conversations between Ms Brown and Mr Salim Essa.

204. The conversation between Ms Brown and Mr Howa or Mr Atul Gupta was recorded as taking place on 12 March 2015 and lasting 48 seconds. Minister Brown initiated the call. She suggested that the conversation might have been about a certain breakfast event. This conversation took place on the day before the three Eskom executives were suspended. It would have been an extraordinary coincidence if Mr Howa were to have been discussing a breakfast event with Minister Brown during the very period when a crucial phase of the plan to capture Eskom was being affected but I prefer not to base a credibility finding on this evidence.

205. The evidence of telephone conversations between Ms Brown and the user of the cellphone belonging to Mr Salim Essa, and, therefore, probably between Minister Brown and Mr Essa, is however of a different calibre. The evidence of Ms Brown before the Commission was unequivocal: she did not know Mr Salim Essa and had never spoken to him. However, the records show that she had a total of eight telephone conversations with the user of Mr Essa's cellphone, and therefore Mr Essa, in duration a total of 1 398 seconds, i.e., more than 23 minutes. The telephone conversations between Ms Brown and Mr Essa are recorded as having taken place during the period 24 November 2014 to 19 March 2015, after which no more attempts were made from Mr Essa's cellphone to contact Ms Brown.

206. Ms Brown responded in an affidavit signed by her on 30 July 2021 to this evidence of calls between her cellphone and Mr Essa's cellphone as follows:

> ... I do not know Mr Salim Essa as I have indicated ...
> ... I have racked my brain trying to recall and place these calls. I cannot deny the empirical evidence of the calls ...
> ... I simply cannot recall these calls, much less, the content of the conversations, if any.
> Let me explain it this way: before I received this Rule 10.6 Notice, it never occurred to me that a number believed to be used by Mr Salim Essa ever called me. Even when reading about him in the media, this never crossed my mind.
> I am afraid I cannot take this much further and assist the Commission.

207. In her response to the Rule 10.6 notice, Ms Brown does not dispute that she had the conversations with Mr Essa. There is no innocent explanation of the fact that Ms Brown talked on the telephone with Mr Essa while she was Minister of Public Enterprises on eight occasions during the period that the Guptas were putting into effect their scheme to capture Eskom. That scheme required that a board which would not resist the Guptas' capture initiative be put in place and that officials who might resist the Gupta capture be neutralised. That was the period during which the cellphone conversations between Minister Brown and Mr Essa took place. Four long such conversations took place on 24 November (two conversations within less than half an hour), 29 November and 1 December 2014, when the appointments to the new board were being made. For example, Mr Mark Pamensky was appointed to the Eskom board with effect from 11 December 2014 and there is no reason to believe that the timing of Mr Pamensky's appointment was any different to those of the other new board members.

208. Why would Minister Brown lie about her telephone conversations with Mr Essa? The only possible conclusion is that Ms Brown was a witting participant in the Guptas' schemes to capture Denel and Eskom.

209. In the case of Denel, Ms Brown participated in state capture by using the powers of her office to instal persons as members of the Denel board of directors whom she believed, probably because she was told so, would facilitate or at least not oppose the Guptas' state capture schemes and by failing to use the powers of her office when asked to exercise those powers to curb the manifest injustice and corrupt purpose of the scheme to oust the three Denel executives.

True character of sole supplier contracts in favour of VR Laser 210. The sole supplier contracts can now be seen in their proper perspective. They were designed to ensure that VR Laser effectively became able to participate in any lucrative undertaking in which Denel became involved within the borders of the Republic. Through the Denel Asia joint venture, the Guptas believed, no doubt with some justification, that they could do the same to a large extent outside our borders. In the hands of the Guptas, these opportunities enabled them, almost legitimately, to pass themselves off as actually being Denel. All it would take would be a suitably worded business card and a glib tongue. Any scepticism could be overcome by a call to the potential customer, or client, from Mr Mantsha. The Denel Asia joint venture, the Guptas no doubt thought, would gain them entry into the worldwide arms industry.

Capture of Denel established

211. To answer the question posed above: the entry into VR Laser by the Guptas and Mr Essa was affected with the intention of using it as a vehicle with which to capture Denel. Whether the Guptas and Mr Essa were knowingly abetted in their capture design by former Minister of Public Enterprises Gigaba should await further evaluation. Whether Deputy Minister Bulelani Magwanishe and Mr Ntshepe were knowingly complicit in this scheme is not established on the information before the Commission. They might have thought they were just doing the lawful bidding of their superiors. Whether members of the 2015 board, other than Mr Mantsha, were wittingly complicit in the scheme to oust Saloojee and entrench the position of the Guptas has similarly not been established.

212. The attempted capture of Denel was ended by the public exposure of the scheme, a change in the identities of the persons exercising political control in the country and the actions taken by the financial institutions to deny the Guptas access to banking services, finance and credit. In this deprived environment, the Guptas could no longer function. They, and Mr Essa, left South Africa. Because Denel was believed to have been captured, its access to finance was drastically curtailed, morale within the organisation sank, skilled employees resigned, and its business generally declined.

213. VR Laser, the formerly premier supplier of steel armour plate within South Africa, fell along with the rest of the Gupta companies because of the withdrawal of its banking facilities and decline in reputation when it was cast as a Gupta controlled company. VR Laser's main customer, Denel, could not pay what it owed VR Laser. According to Mr van der Merwe, its former CEO, the amount owed by Denel and overdue for payment reached R15 million.

214. The capture of Denel was ultimately unsuccessful. There is no evidence that the Guptas made money from their raid on Denel. However, the reputational damage which Denel suffered from its capture and the fact that the control of Denel passed into unscrupulous hands was enormous. The evidence of its current group CEO shows that rebuilding Denel will take a long time. That is if Denel does not go under. As at mid-2021 Denel was associated with litigation in the media.

215. There remains the need to recognise that the capture of Denel caused harm to several individuals at a personal level. The suspended executives and the other executives whose careers at Denel came to an end through no fault of theirs. It is hoped that the exposure of the conduct that led to these sad results and the recommendations which follow will go some way towards ensuring that state capture and corruption generally are eradicated from our national life.

RECOMMENDATIONS

216. No specific action by Denel for recovery of losses sustained in the light of these findings is recommended. As alluded to above the time that has elapsed since the conduct identified was committed poses a problem. Denel has taken and is taking its own action to identify those who caused the loss and to quantify any loss it may have suffered. Denel will no doubt continue to evaluate action against those it suspects may have caused it harm.

217. Mr Mantsha and the other directors who supported his campaign against the three executives have prima facie shown themselves unfit to be directors of a company. Section 162 of the Companies Act 71 of 2008 prescribes that certain specified persons and bodies may apply to court for an order declaring a director or former director delinquent or under probation, amongst other situations where the director or former director grossly abused the position of director, intentionally or by gross negligence inflicted harm to a company of its subsidiary. The court on making a declaration of delinquency may make a range of consequential orders, including orders precluding such a person from exercising the office of a director or imposing conditions on the exercise of such an office.

218. However, all the persons and institutions entitled to apply for such orders must do so at the latest within 24 months after the director ceases to hold office as a director. The measure does not necessarily count this period from the time the director left the company where he or she misconducted himself. It is sufficient if the allegedly errant person was a director within 24 months of the institution of proceedings.

219. Denel itself, the DPE and the Companies and Intellectual Property Commission established by s 185 of the Companies Act would all have standing to consider bringing appropriate proceedings against Mantsha and other erstwhile members of the 2015 Denel board shown to have abetted Mantsha in his efforts to capture Denel for the Guptas. It is therefore recommended that they all be asked by the Government to consider bringing such proceedings.

220. The Legal Practice Council should be made aware of the findings made by the Commission against Mantsha so that that body might consider applying to court to have Mantsha once again struck from the roll of legal practitioners.

221. The facts before the Commission have shown the inadequacy of punitive measures which currently form part of our law. Egregious violations of the Constitution have been demonstrated. Two forms of that abuse have been demonstrated by the evidence regarding Denel: the constitution of a board of directors for the purpose of achieving a result in direct conflict with the obligations imposed on directors by the Companies Act and other applicable legislation and measures; and the use of the suspension power in an administrative context for improper purposes. The methods by which unscrupulous persons can abuse public power are legion and abuses of public power pervade our public life. The present case merely demonstrates two of the potential violations of the duties attendant on public power which can arise.

222. But abuse of public power per se is not a criminal offence. And as has been shown in the present case, egregious abuses of public power tend not to be identified by legal processes until the perpetrators or those that protect them are out of power. And then the assessment of the relevant facts will be a cumbersome, time consuming exercise.

223. At the end of the process, perhaps all that can be achieved as the law now stands is the identification of the malefactors, years after the event, so that they can be judged by public opinion. Even civil law remedies may be unavailable because of the time that has passed between the commission of the abusive acts and the service of the document initiating civil proceedings. All that is not good enough.

224. It is therefore recommended that the Government consider the creation of a statutory offence rendering it a criminal offence for any person vested with public power to abuse public power vested in that person by intentionally using that power otherwise than in good faith for a proper purpose. Such potential violations might range from the case of a President of the Republic who hands a large portion of the national wealth, or access to that wealth, to an unauthorised recipient to the minor official who suspends a colleague out of motives of envy or revenge.

225. Such a statutory offence would therefore require considerable sentencing powers and might provide as follows in the operative section of the statute creating the offence:

> Any person who exercises or purports to exercise any public power, including any such power vested in such person by the Constitution, national or provincial legislation, any regulation made pursuant to national or provincial legislation or by municipal bylaw, otherwise than in good faith and for the purpose for which such power was conferred, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine of up to R200 million or imprisonment for up to 20 years or to both such fine and imprisonment.

BOSASA

INTRODUCTION

1. This section contains a summary of the evidence presented to the Commission in respect of its investigation into the Bosasa group of companies and the individuals associated with these companies, including:

   1.1 The analysis of the evidence presented to the Commission with reference to the Commission's Terms of Reference (TORs) and the findings that may be warranted based on the evidence; and

1.2 The recommendations that may be considered, including whether any matter ought to be referred for prosecution, further investigation, or the convening of a separate enquiry, to the appropriate law enforcement agency, government department or regulator, regarding the conduct of any persons are provided. This is relevant to TOR 7.

SUMMARY OF THE BOSASA EVIDENCE

2. In this section, the evidence presented to the Commission regarding the activities and business dealings of the Bosasa Group of Companies is summarised. This includes the evidence pertaining to its tender practices and contractual relations with government departments and SOEs; its efforts to gain influence with officials, managers, and employees within those departments and SOEs; and the various role players within and outside Bosasa that were part of these endeavours.

Overview of the Bosasa Group

3. The evidence revealed an extensive network of companies associated with the business dealings of Bosasa. This constitutes an overview of the Bosasa Group, its management structure, Mr Gavin Watson's political connections and key employees.

4. Mr Agrizzi explained the Bosasa Group structure. Bosasa Group began as Meritum Hostels (Pty) Ltd. The company's name was then changed to Dyambu Operations (Pty) Ltd, which later changed to Bosasa Operations (Pty) Ltd. The shareholders of Dyambu Operations were Mr Gavin Watson, Mr Danny Mansell and Dyambu Holdings (Pty) Ltd. Dyambu Holdings held 10% of the shares. Other company name changes within the Group had also taken place. The decision to change the company's name from Dyambu Operations was because of some negativity regarding Dyambu Operations. The new contracts obtained around the time of the rebranding of the company were with the Libanon Gold Mine, Kloof Gold Mine, some smaller operational mines and Sasol.

5. The relationship between Mr Watson and Mr Mansell degenerated. Mr Mansell sold his shares in Dyambu Operations to Mr Watson. The shares so acquired were then divided up and held by various smaller entities.

6. Mr Agrizzi described the Bosasa Group as having a complex network of subsidiaries and entities that made it virtually impossible to identify the true B-BBEE status of a company. Through fronting the true B-BBEE status of the Bosasa Group of Companies was not represented in tender documents presented by Bosasa to various government departments.

Money laundering, cash generation and the payment of bribes

7. Both Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Watson required a substantial amount of cash every month which necessitated establishing mechanisms for generating cash. They stated that the purpose of this cash generation was to use the money for bribery. The various methods used to generate cash are set out below.

False invoices

8. Mr van Tonder testified that, initially, the required cash was generated by means of drawing the cash from Bosasa's bank account by creating fraudulent documentation to attach to a cheque requisition from the Accounts Department. The motivation provided for these cash cheques was that Bosasa was contracting with SMMEs that did not have bank accounts and required cash payment. This method became problematic as Mr Watson required larger amounts of cash.

9. Mr van Tonder explained that fake invoices for non-existent labour brokers would be generated. Another method involved using copies of Metropolitan funeral pay out documents as source documents for cash cheques. Mr Agrizzi testified that, when a Bosasa employee died, Bosasa would advance the payment that was to be forthcoming from the Metropolitan Death Benefit Fund. In doing so, they would also reflect a cash donation by the company in an equivalent amount, although the latter donation would not be paid to the employee but instead would be used for purposes of generating cash for bribery. Bosasa at one point had some 6000 employees. So, it was a fairly regular event that an employee would pass away.

10. Mr Agrizzi explained that Mr Bonifacio was an astute accountant and between him and Mr Jacques van Zyl, also an accountant at Bosasa, they identified liquidated companies and used the names of these companies as suppliers to Bosasa. He elaborated that the fake invoice might take the form of the regeneration of a prior valid invoice for goods or services delivered.

Invoices for goods or services which were never received

11. The scheme to generate cash to bribe individuals also involved service providers supplying false invoices to Bosasa for goods and services that were never delivered or rendered. Bosasa paid the service providers, who repaid Bosasa in cash and deducted a percentage for their own account, with the cash being delivered directly to Mr Watson.

12. Mr Agrizzi testified that he started working closely with Mr van Tonder in 2009 who indicated that this had been the practice to generate cash for some time and explained how cash was generated through various other sources as well, such as Belfast Toyota and the creation of dummy invoices for companies that did not exist.

13. Mr Agrizzi further testified as to various methods of disguising the money flows necessary to pay the cash bribes. These included the following:

    13.1 A cash cheque would be issued and at the same time a fictitious invoice would be created to justify the cash transaction. The fictitious invoice would be created in the name of a company that was nearing liquidation or in liquidation.

    13.2 Mr Watson would instruct that companies be created specifically for purposes of issuing fake invoices which would be liquidated at a later stage.

    13.3 Bosasa arranged through Mr Riaan Hoeksma of Riekele Konstruksie CC that a cash flush company, Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers of Randfontein, would invoice Bosasa for alcohol and instead of alcohol being delivered, cash would be delivered by Mr Hoeksma for the equivalent amount of the invoice, with Mr Hoeksma receiving a commission of between 5 and 7.5%. The invoice from Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers would be settled by way of an EFT payment by Bosasa. It was either Mr van Zyl or Mr van Tonder who would make the arrangements in this regard with Mr Hoeksma. The invoice would be put through as tax deductible operational expenses. Mr van Tonder confirmed this evidence and stated that Mr van Zyl and members of the accounts department would attend to the administrative side of the transaction and he would collect the cash from Mr Hoeksma's offices in Randfontein.

    13.4 The next method appeared to operate in the following manner. A government department, such as a youth centre, would order a software programme from Bosasa. The payment by the government department in respect of the invoice would then be split between Bosasa and the government official arranging the transaction. The money paid to the government official would then be used for electioneering purposes by the ruling party. Mr Agrizzi was party to such a transaction involving the MEC for Social Development in the North West Province. The person from Bosasa that would facilitate these transactions was Syvion Dlamini, Director of the Bosasa Youth Development Centres. Mr Agrizzi estimated that, as far as he could recall, the value of this particular transaction was R3.4 million of which R1.8 million was paid out to the official involved.

14. Mr Agrizzi also testified about the high profit margins of the company and how these helped to disguise the illegality and to make it difficult for any forensic auditor to pick up the illegality. This included ensuring a consistent expenditure pattern through the year. Additional expenditure around Christmas time would be justified by what he described as "public holiday costs".

15. Mr Agrizzi testified that the person responsible for generating the fake invoices was Mr Bonifacio. He at one point decided to cooperate as a whistleblower and corresponded with Mr Agrizzi, including the preparation of a draft affidavit, but was then dissuaded when he confessed his intentions to Mr Watson.

16. Some of the companies and firms that provided cash to Bosasa using the false invoicing method are AA Wholesalers CC, Riekele Construction, Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers in Randfontein, Equal Trade 4 (Pty) Ltd and Equal Food Traders (Pty) Ltd and various derivatives of these names, and Lamozest (Pty) Ltd which, according to Mr Agrizzi was "not [used] for cash predominantly but for filtering, let us call it racketeering".

Cash sales at the Lindela Repatriation Facility

17. Another method of raising cash testified to by Mr Agrizzi related to Bosasa's contract to administer Lindela Repatriation Facility. Bosasa ran the canteen as well as a telephone facility at Lindela. These were the sole sources at the facility where detainees could purchase goods and make telephone calls. The detainees paid cash for the goods and the telephone services. A portion of the cash estimated at 10 to 15% was declared as revenue and the remainder transferred to the vaults at Bosasa headquarters. The total cash takings were estimated at between R300,000 and R400,000 per month.

18. A similar system operated in respect of the cash bars and canteens at the mine hostels that were administered by Bosasa. There was a special cash in transit team that would collect the cash from these facilities and bring it to "Gavin's vault". Mr van Tonder confirmed cash would be collected from the canteen at Lindela as well as canteens and bars run by Bosasa at mine hostels.

19. This practice dwindled in either 2002/2003 or 2003/2004 when Bosasa sold off the mining contracts to Mr Lacon-Allin of Equality Foods.

Payment to ghost employees

20. Another cash generation scheme testified to by Mr Agrizzi involved the creation of ghost workers. Bosasa had various sites where construction was under way. To generate cash, fictitious lists of casual employees were created by Riekele. Mr van Tonder and others were instructed to draw up fake payroll sheets on Excel reflecting ghost workers who would be paid wages in cash. Mr Agrizzi believed that it was easy to identify the wages to "ghost employees" because payments to employees were normally paid by EFT and these supposed casual workers are not reflected on the payment system. Further, there were no employment agreements for these workers.

21. Cash cheques would then be drawn on the local bank and Bosasa staff would collect the cash themselves. Mr Agrizzi accompanied them on one occasion. The amount then drawn was made up of three cheques which totalled R720,000. The cash was then packed in a bag and they left Key West FNB and drove to the Bosasa office. This was a weekly occurrence.

22. This practice was stopped when the Unemployment Insurance Fund started to require UIF contributions to be paid also in respect of casual labour.

Equal Trade and false invoices

23. Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and Mr Lawrence testified on the arrangement of procuring cash from Equal Trade. Mr Lawrence testified that in 2012, Mr Lacon-Allin told him to take the cash generated from Equal Trade's alcohol business to Bosasa instead of the banks given bank charges for cash deposits. The cash given to Bosasa was then paid back to Equal Trade by EFT. Mr Lawrence was aware that commission was payable for the cash handling but was not aware of the amount charged by Bosasa. Mr Lawrence explained that the cash handling arrangements worked as follows:

23.1 Once he had sufficient funds, he was required to contact an individual from Bosasa (whose name he could not recall) and meet him at the Bosasa Head Office to hand over the cash. This amount was never less than R100,000 and went up to R1 million.

23.2 Mr Lawrence kept no record of the cash taken to Bosasa but was "quite sure" that a record was kept by Mr Lacon-Allin and Bosasa.

23.3 Mr Lawrence could not recall how long this practice lasted but he "would say months". After some time, Mr Lacon-Allin informed him that the arrangement was coming to an end.

24. Mr Lawrence described having suspicions that the money delivered to Bosasa was to assist it in underhanded activities, given the rumour in the industry that Bosasa bribed government officials. After some time, Mr Lawrence began video recording the delivery of the cash to Bosasa because (i) he felt that the arrangement was wrong; and (ii) he wanted to protect himself.

25. In relation to the amounts that Mr Lawrence would have delivered to Bosasa, Mr Agrizzi recalled one specific delivery of R900 000 and a further R1 million the following week. Larger amounts of R2.8 million and R3 million would be collected by Mr van Tonder from a petrol station at Lanseria. Mr Agrizzi explained that payments made by Bosasa to Equal Trade would demonstrate exactly how much cash had been delivered.

26. After the period during which Mr Lawrence was involved in making deliveries to Bosasa, Mr Lawrence received an email from the Bosasa employee he dealt with in the cash deliveries and who was depicted in the video. Mr Lawrence read the email a few weeks later and it appeared that the email was sent to him in error. The email was intended for Mr Lacon-Allin. The email included a spreadsheet of purchase orders for 33 Department of Correctional Services (DCS) facilities. These purchase orders from Bosasa were addressed to Equal Trade to supply it with non-Vatable foodstuffs. Mr Lawrence confronted Mr Lacon-Allin about this and was informed this scheme was a different means of cash generation for Bosasa.

27. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that the modus operandi in this regard was like the one used with Jumbo Liquors. Mr Agrizzi tendered his cooperation in the further investigation of these transactions.

AA Wholesalers

28. Mr Agrizzi attested to a further method of raising cash for the illegal payments and explained that Mr Venter "understood the difficulties with trying to deal with the cash requirements in the company". Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Venter had a client, AA Wholesalers, with whom he had dealings in Lenasia. Bosasa considered acquiring the business but decided against this "because there was a major culture difference between the two". However, it was decided that Bosasa would work with AA Wholesalers. The scheme was developed whereby AA Wholesalers would heavily over-invoice for a legitimate order of goods from the business. An EFT payment would be made by Bosasa in respect of the full amount of the invoice and the difference between the small amount of goods delivered and the full invoice would be delivered to Bosasa in cash.

29. Mr Venter testified that he knew the owner of AA Wholesalers, Mr Amod, from the time that he was employed at SARS and that they had become friends. Mr Venter introduced Mr Amod to Mr van Tonder. Mr van Tonder, according to Mr Venter, was impressed with Mr Amod's business and wanted to show Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson. Mr Venter testified that he accompanied Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and Mr Watson to AA Wholesalers. At the meeting, Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder expressed an interest in purchasing the company from Mr Amod (though this did not take place) and asked about how much cash was generated in the business. Mr Venter testified that he was not involved in any of the cash schemes in relation to which Mr van Tonder gave evidence that he had been informed of the scheme to obtain cash through AA Wholesalers and Equal Trade by Mr van Tonder. However, he said that it was not part of his functions.

Mr Watson's vaults and safes

30. Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and Mr le Roux testified about cash stored at the Bosasa premises in a walk-in vault and safes. A video of the vault was handed in as evidence, along with a transcript of the soundtrack on the video. Mr van Tonder filmed this video on 28 March 2017 on request from Mr Agrizzi.

31. Mr Watson was the only person with keys for the safes. The Company Secretary had the keys for the vault. Mr Watson would take money from the drop safe and pack it into the other safes "when he was around". The origin of the money being deposited into the drop safe is dealt with in Mr Agrizzi's evidence.

32. Mr Agrizzi testified further in response to questions from the Chairperson that every one of the contracts in which Bosasa was involved was tainted with bribes and corruption. He would not say they were all awarded because of corruption, but, once they were awarded, corruption crept in because "somebody would have to be looked after". He went on to testify that corruption featured in both seeking the award of new contracts and in seeking the extension of contracts, save perhaps for one or two exceptions.

33. The focus then moved to the parts of the transcript of the video dealing with "Patrick". Mr Agrizzi explained that there were "two Patricks". The one was Mr Patrick Littler who was an operational leader within Bosasa and the other was Mr Patrick Gillingham. Mr Agrizzi was involved in paying money to Mr Gillingham. In this instance, Mr Agrizzi testified, "Patrick" was a reference to Mr Gillingham. This was confirmed by Mr van Tonder who explained that he was given instructions in the past to take a delivery of cash to Mr Gillingham in a grey, plastic security bag. Deliveries of this nature occurred at a shopping mall near Lanseria Airport.

34. Mr Agrizzi explained the difference between handling and paying. "Handling" meant doing certain things for the person being paid whenever he or she might need help other than cash and ensuring that the person did not "become like I did, a loose cannon in the opinion of Watson". Mr Agrizzi went on to explain that the same person would do both the managing and the paying (subject to what he said later about intermediaries) but in Mr Gillingham's case it was a unique situation which was very sensitive. For that reason, Mr Biebuyck was co-opted into handling him and Mr van Tonder was co-opted into paying him.

35. Before the handover regarding Mr Gillingham, Mr Agrizzi was responsible for both handling and paying him, although he explained that an intermediary would usually be involved in effecting the payment to the beneficiary. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that Mr Gillingham used to receive "a full 110,000 that was packaged specifically for Patrick Gillingham". The other Patrick, Patrick Littler, received the money for the unions at Kloof, Libanon and Leeudoring mines and he used to get the money for the hostel manager who used to be paid as well.

36. As pointed out above, Mr Agrizzi explained that the video was taken in 2017 when he was no longer employed at Bosasa. He had not been involved in any of the payments after the termination of his employment. He obtained the video as a form of protection and with the intention of publicising it.

Mr Agrizzi's role and cash payments

37. Mr Agrizzi testified that from 2009 he was tasked specifically with the handling of cash – getting the cash, taking and delivering the cash, handling the cash and counting it out for bribery and corruption. Prior to this time, Mr Agrizzi would be tasked to go "arrange and to do things" as requested.

38. Mr Watson stated that it would be more convenient to handle the cash for the payment of junior officials at the DCS if a safe was installed in Mr van Zyl's office, and a certain amount of money allocated to that safe, which was attended to. Mr Watson, Mr Gumede, Mr Leshabane and Mr Dikani made payments on a monthly basis from shortly after Mr Mti's resignation in 2007 until approximately the end of December 2016 to the following DCS officials: Mr Josiah Maako, Contracts Manager (R15,000); Ms Maria Mabena, Catering and Development and Care (R10 000); Mr Shishi Matabella, Commissioner for Development and Care (R10 000); Mkabela Commissioner (R10 000); Ms Dikeledi Tshabalala, Head of Procurement (R15 000); Mr Zach Modise, Regional Commissioner (R20 000); and Mr Mollet Ngubo, Finance (R15 000).

39. Mr Agrizzi's evidence regarding the system that was implemented for the handling of cash was detailed. Initially Mr Agrizzi would not prepare the cash and would only prepare the codes and the list and would hand it to Mr van Zyl who would pack the cash from his safe. When the cash was handed to a director with a code, the director would know who the money was for because they would have been told the codes by Mr Agrizzi.

40. A payment at Bosasa could not be paid with just one signatory; it required at least four or five signatories to authorise an EFT transfer. The purchase order for a payment of this nature would be created and two signatures from the originator would be required. In addition, either Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder or Mr Bonifacio's signature was required. It would also require a director's signature before payment could be made.

41. In 2013 Mr Gumede saw lists and cash in Mr van Zyl's safe, reported it to Mr Watson and questioned Mr van Zyl's loyalty in Mr Agrizzi's presence. Mr Watson instructed that the cash duties be taken over by Mr Agrizzi. Mr Van Zyl would still help in creating false invoices. Mr Agrizzi testified that he refused to handle the cash alone, would always ensure that there were two people present and would usually handle it with Mr van Tonder, or Mr van Zyl in Mr van Tonder's absence.

42. Mr Agrizzi estimated that the total amount paid in bribes by Bosasa monthly to be in the region of between R4 million and R6 million. He said that this amount was a drop in the ocean compared to Bosasa's turnover. Mr Agrizzi would deliver cash to people who would then distribute it further, including Mr Ishmael (Director of Bosasa); Mr Dlamini (Director of Bosasa); Mr Gumede (Chairperson of Bosasa); Mr Seopela (consultant); Mr Mti; Thandi Makoko (Director of Bosasa); and Mr Leshabane.

43. Mr Agrizzi wrote some of the codes and the full names of persons in his black book, which was locked in Mr Watson's safe for Mr Watson to check if he wanted to reconcile the cash.

44. Mr Agrizzi testified that around 2009/2010 he would deliver payments monthly to Mr Seopela to be handed over to officials, including senior officials, at the DCS. This would be in addition to the monthly payments managed by Mr Agrizzi as described above.

45. Mr Gillingham resigned in November 2010 after he had been suspended for approximately two years. He resigned the day before his disciplinary hearing for charges that had been brought against him based on an SIU Report. His resignation was accepted by the DCS. Bosasa assisted Mr Gillingham to secure the services of a firm of attorneys. Mr Agrizzi testified that, after Mr Gillingham had resigned, he approached Bosasa for financial assistance and Mr Watson agreed to pay him an amount of R110,000 per month. Previously he had received an amount of R47,000 per month. Mr Gillingham was still being paid the R110,000 per month at the time when Mr Agrizzi left Bosasa. The arrangement, according to Mr Agrizzi, was that the senior members would be paid by Bosasa for as long as the DCS contracts were in place.

46. Mr Agrizzi was approached by Mr Leshabane who requested that he be provided with a monthly amount of R71,000. Within the R71,000, R11,000 was specifically for informants that he had and R30,000 was for the payment of journalists. Mr Agrizzi recorded this information in his black book. In the black book, Mr Agrizzi made an entry "Papa – Journo's R30,000-00". The payment for the journalists was suggested by Mr Leshabane, following negative reporting on Bosasa. It was also utilised to get information from the media if there were to be negative stories published so that they could counteract it. These payments had already begun in 2012. The journalists mentioned were Mr Ntuli, working for the Times or the Star newspaper, Ms Pinky Khoabane and someone referred to as Bongs. Mr Agrizzi was unable to confirm if the journalists received the money given to Mr Leshabane.

47. Bosasa also employed media consultants, Ms Benedicta Dube and Mr Stephen Laufer, to counter the negative publicity and to discredit the journalists that were writing these articles. There was a campaign to discredit the journalists, including Mr Basson and Ms Carien du Plessis, following an in-depth report they produced.

Mr Agrizzi's black book

48. At one point Mr Agrizzi was tasked with managing and trying to keep a record of what cash was going in and out of the safes for inter alia bribes or gratuities. He was unable to record the date when he had been tasked with this responsibility. To this end, Mr Agrizzi kept a record in "a little black book" in which he recorded the amounts sought and communicated the amounts to Mr Watson. The director or manager seeking the payment would have to provide a short motivation either on a piece of paper or by SMS. Persons who received payments regularly would be paid by Mr Agrizzi without reference to Mr Watson, but if a new name came up or a new amount came up, he would have to get approval from Mr Watson. The code allocated to a payment would be written on the security bag.

49. In Annexure HH to Mr Agrizzi's Supplementary Affidavit, he sought to set out in a table, or spreadsheet as he described it, the names of the people that were referred to in the codes, providing the names of both the person to receive the bribe and the name of the person delivering it to them.

Payments of bribes and gratuities

50. Mr Agrizzi was asked to estimate the number of people on the "payroll" (referring to recipients of illegal payments) of Bosasa. He said that the forty names in the pages of his book represented about half of the recipients, so that the total number of recipients would have been in the region of eighty. These were the people receiving monthly payments.

51. Later, Mr Agrizzi recalled counting a list of 38 government employees and officials who received bribes on a regular basis. Mr Agrizzi went on to describe how Mr Watson would deal with deliveries to very high-profile officials himself. This was particularly so over the festive season.

Blake's Travel

52. Blake's Travel was the travel agent used by Bosasa to book travel and accommodation. Government officials benefited from travel and accommodation arranged by Blake's Travel and paid for by Bosasa. For example, Mr Agrizzi testified that flights, travel, and accommodation would be booked by him on the Bosasa "VIP account" with Blakes Travel for Mr Linda Mti, his wife and family.

53. Mr Brian Blake, Managing Director and 50% shareholder of Blake's Travel, deposed to an affidavit dated 28 November 2019. He also testified at the Commission on 29 July 2020. His evidence was in line with his affidavit. The affidavit is referred to below where it provides corroboration of oral evidence received by the Commission. For present purposes, we highlight the following aspects of Mr Blake's evidence in the affidavit:

    53.1 Mr Blake confirms a number of bookings made by Bosasa on behalf of various individuals, including Mr Gillingham, Mr Mti, Mr Katleho Mokonyane, Mr Mohamed Moorad, Ms Dudu Myeni, Mr Trevor Fourie, Ms B Smith, Mr Vusi Mbasela, B Njenje, Mr Joel Mbatha, Mr Peter Daluxolo, Mr Phumlani Seyema, Mr Jacobus Du Toit, FC Bopape, S Xulu, Mr Watson, Mr Seopela, Mr Dlamini, Mr Mansell, Mr van Tonder, and Mr Agrizzi. Mr Blake also provided the Commission with copies of invoices, collated into a consolidated spreadsheet attached as "BB" to his affidavit. The invoices supporting the information are also attached to the affidavit. The spreadsheet contained a summary of the clients to whom Blake's Travel provided services through Bosasa. Mr Blake testified that there may be further clients that had not been identified.

    53.2 Mr Blake confirms the process followed in respect of travel arrangements utilising various accounts that Bosasa had with Blake's Travel and payments made by Bosasa to Blake's Travel.

    53.3 Bosasa used the Bosasa Operations account for their day-to-day business travel arrangements and the account was settled by Bosasa Operations by way of an EFT or occasionally by cheque.

    53.4 The Bosasa VIP account and those that replaced it were utilised for Bosasa directors' travel arrangements, travel and accommodation of "non-directors of Bosasa, including government officials and/or private citizens.

Attorneys' trust accounts

54. Mr van Tonder testified that he was aware of substantial funds transferred from Bosasa into attorneys' trust accounts. He was told by Mr Watson that this was done to mitigate against the risk of Bosasa running out of funds in the event of the NPA freezing its bank accounts pursuant to an SIU investigation.

55. Mr van Tonder explained that from time-to-time Bosasa needed cash for cash flow purposes. A request would be made to withdraw funds in the attorney's trust account. In this regard, he referred by way of example to an email from Mr Agrizzi to Mr Biebuyck on 27 June 2016 in which Mr Agrizzi requested that R25 million be transferred from the trust account to Bosasa Operations. According to the email, the funds would be replaced as soon as payments were received from the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (DOJCD) "that is currently R84 million outstanding."

THE AWARDING OF CONTRACTS AND TENDERS TO BOSASA

56. In this section, the evidence on the contracts awarded to Bosasa by various SOEs and government departments as well as key Bosasa employees' interactions with public officials during Bosasa's efforts to source such contracts is summarised.

57. Between 1999 and 2002 Bosasa received contracts relating to: (i) Kloof Gold Mine; (ii) Libanon Gold Mine; (iii) Sasol; (iv) Randfontein Gold Mines; (v) Hartebeesfontein Gold Mines; (vi) Harmony Gold Mine in the Free State; (vii) Goedehoop Colliery; and (viii) Horizon Youth Centre in the Western Cape.

58. During 2001 to 2004, Bosasa received (i) a contract to guard various post offices which also encompassed pension pay-outs; and (ii) a contract from ACSA for guarding a car park at OR Tambo International Airport (ORTIA).

59. During the period 2004 to 2007, Bosasa received contracts from the DCS. These contracts included: (i) a training contract run by Dr Smith and Mark Taverner; (ii) a catering contract at seven management areas; (iii) the Sondolo IT access contract and CCTV contract; (iv) the Sondolo IT television network system contract for every cell in every correctional centre; and (v) the Phezulu fencing contract. Most of these contracts had provisions for their extension or variation or a maintenance component attached to them. These contracts were discussed in more detail below. In addition to the contracts for the DCS during the period 2004 to 2007, Bosasa received contracts for various youth centres in the North West Province.

60. During the period 2007 to 2010 Bosasa performed the first guarding contract for the DOJCD. This related to the guarding of "all the rural areas ... for them". During this period, Bosasa also had contracts for various Limpopo Youth Centres through the Department of Social Development (DSD).

61. In the period 2011 to 2016 Bosasa had contracts with the Clanwilliam and Namaqua Youth Centres; a contract with the DoJCD for the provision of access control, fencing and CCTV facilities to 101 courts nationally. This was an integrated system managed by the Independent Development Trust (IDT). Three liaison people from the Department sat in on all meetings.

62. In the period 2011 to 2016 the contracts with the ACSA were extended to include all airports in South Africa, except for the airports in Polokwane and Lanseria. In addition, there were contracts with the Department of Home Affairs (DHA) pertaining to Lindela.

63. The aggregate value of contracts awarded to the Bosasa companies by various SOEs and Departments between 2000 and 2016 was at least R2,371,500,000. Approximately R75,700,000 was paid out in bribes. The value of the continuing contracts for Bosasa is in the region of R 90 million. Mr Agrizzi estimates the annual bribes paid in cash for these contracts to be at least R 9.4 million.

64. The Chairperson enquired from Mr Agrizzi whether, if Bosasa knew they were going to be paying bribes for the duration of the contracts, it would inflate the contract prices. Mr Agrizzi explained that the contracts were run at between 35 and 40% gross profit. Bribes were always factored in at around

2.5% or Mr Agrizzi was told they would need to pay X amount out and he would factor that into the contract prices. When asked how the bribes were ultimately accounted for in the company's books in relation to tax, Mr Agrizzi explained that they were not accounted for. Mr Agrizzi explained that these amounts were taken into consumption and they became costs of sales and, therefore, Bosasa paid less tax on them.

65. Mr Agrizzi was asked whether, apart from the bribes, the state was receiving value for money from Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi responded that it was not a one answer scenario. The state was receiving value for money in relation to some contracts but not others. For example, it was not receiving value for money in relation to the Lindela contracts, but it was for purposes of the youth centres.

Bosasa's early contracts

66. Mr Agrizzi testified that from 2001, the company grew rapidly with new contracts coming in. This included several additional mines owned by other mining houses. There was also a security contract with the SAPO which evolved to include pension pay out points.

Sasol and Simon Mofekeng

67. Mr Agrizzi testified about an instance where someone at Sasol informed them of flaws in a tender submitted by Dyambu Operations to Sasol for catering services, after the closure date. Mr Agrizzi was asked to meet with an official or employee of Sasol. He sought and was afforded an opportunity to amend the bid even though the closure date had passed. The procurement official he met was annoyed because they had been instructed from a higher authority to allow the change.

68. Mr Agrizzi also testified about a meeting with Mr Simon Mofokeng of the Chemical Energy Paper Printing Wood & Allied Workers Union. He accompanied Mr Watson to the meeting with Mr Mofokeng. Mr Watson explained the purpose of the meeting as being "to put pressure on the union, to create a work stoppage so that management was forced into submission in giving a tender". At the meeting, Mr Mofokeng provided Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi the pricing that the other companies had submitted to enable them to tailor their price accordingly. Mr Agrizzi understood that this was entirely improper. Mr Mofokeng apparently had this information because he "had a phenomenal network at Sasol". Mr Agrizzi testified further that Bosasa employed Mr Mofokeng's wife, Maureen, to head up a newly established training department.

69. After the amendment of the bid, it was successful. Mr Agrizzi was instructed by Mr Watson to arrange for braai packs, cold drinks and various grocery items and the like to be delivered to Mr Mofokeng. Bosasa held the Sasol contract from 1999 until about 2002 when the contract was sold off.

South African Post Office

70. Mr Agrizzi then turned to a tender to provide security for the SAPO. Mr Watson informed Mr Agrizzi that he (Mr Watson) "was paying [Siviwe Mapisa, head of security at SAPO] and [Maanda Manyatshe, the CEO] for the SAPO contract and looking after them".

71. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson had instructed him to start the logistical preparations for the SAPO security contract before the tender was submitted. The contract was awarded and operated for a three-year period with a further extension of two years. At one point, Mr Agrizzi attended a trade show in Dubai focussing on security applications. He was accompanied by Mr Johnson Vovo, director of security at Bosasa, and Mr Gumede who was also a security director. When they had a free day, they purchased various "premium gifts" for Mr Mapisa and Mr Manyatshe.

Airports Company South Africa

72. The ACSA awarded Bosasa a tender to do the multi-storey carpark protection and guarding services at ORTIA. This was at a time when many cars were being stolen from the airport. The contract was awarded in 2001 and, according to Mr Agrizzi, was a five-year agreement renewable at the end of each five-year term. He understood Bosasa still to have the contract. Mr Agrizzi was responsible for compiling the tender documents. Mr Agrizzi testified that, when drafting the tender bid, he was informed by Mr Watson and Johnson Vovo that Bosasa would be awarded the tender.

73. Mr Watson knew Mr Thele Moema, the head of risk at ACSA. He also knew Mr Siza Thanda, the head of security for ACSA. Mr Agrizzi used to visit ORTIA and often went with Mr Gumede, then a director of Bosasa and subsequently its chairperson. They would take with them grey security bags and give it to "certain people" at ORTIA. Mr Agrizzi testified (somewhat contradictorily) that he was not aware that there was money in the bags although he had himself received a bag with cash in it, with the result that he "knew what was in the bags".

74. These occurrences were a regular event. Payments continued to be made to people at ACSA until Mr Agrizzi left Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that the payments were a monthly event. Payments to Messrs Thanda and Moema stopped when they left ACSA. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that he not only packed the money bags but also kept a record in this regard.

Department of Correctional Services

The catering / kitchen contract

75. Mr Agrizzi first met Mr Gillingham in mid-to-late 2003 at Lindela. He was introduced to Mr Gillingham by Mr Watson. When he met him, he gained the impression from his uniform that he had a senior rank. Mr Agrizzi learned at the meeting that he was employed in the DCS. During this introductory meeting, Mr Gillingham had a few requests. Mr Watson also told Mr Agrizzi to get cash from him every month for Mr Gillingham and during that meeting Mr Gillingham mentioned that there were issues with his house that needed to be attended to. Mr Agrizzi had to attend to this immediately.

76. In 2004 Bosasa had been awarded a contract to train senior officials of the DCS on compliance with meal intervals and related matters, as required by the Correctional Services Act 111 of 1998. Mr Agrizzi became aware of the contract at an awards evening for the officials who had attended the training. The function was coordinated by Dr Smith and Mr Taverner, Mr Watson's brother-in-law and employee of Bosasa. At the time, Mr Agrizzi was not aware that Mr Taverner was involved in the furnishing of Mr Mti's and Mr Gillingham's respective houses.

Initial efforts to secure the catering contract

77. Mr Vorster testified that Mr Watson approached him in 2003 with a request that he contact Mr Gillingham as Mr Watson would love to tender for the catering contracts at the DCS. At this stage, the catering at the DCS was not outsourced. Mr Gillingham was the Provincial Commissioner at the DCS for Mpumalanga, Limpopo and Gauteng and the project leader for the tender. Pursuant to this request, Mr Vorster approached Mr Gillingham and explained to him that Bosasa wanted to get involved in the catering sector at the DCS. From there on, Mr Vorster met Mr Gillingham regularly.

78. Mr Vorster explained that he would later take the cash to Mr Gillingham at a restaurant in Pretoria/Centurion. During this meeting, they discussed the specifications of the kitchens at the DCS and menus. Mr Vorster would then hand envelope of cash to Mr Gillingham in exchange for information. Mr Vorster would later pass this information on to Mr Mansell who was a "consultant" for Bosasa at the time.

79. In the beginning Mr Vorster's meetings with Mr Gillingham occurred on a bi-weekly basis. The frequency of these meetings depended on how much information was required. He did not take cash to Mr Gillingham on each occasion and did not know if there was an agreement between Mr Watson and Mr Gillingham. The amounts Mr Watson provided for Mr Gillingham varied but it was mostly around R20 000.

80. Mr Vorster explained that, with the information provided to him, Mr Mansell was able to prepare a presentation and strategy to obtain the catering contract. At the end of 2003, Mr Mansell presented this plan to senior management of the DCS, although Mr Vorster did not attend this meeting. At this stage it was not known that the DCS would be outsourcing the catering services. In early 2004, Mr Gillingham did a presentation regarding the outsourcing of the catering contract which was prepared for him by the Bosasa team.

81. Mr Vorster also testified that Mr Watson had a close relationship with Mr Mti who, at the time, was Commissioner of the DCS. This led to Mr Gillingham being appointed in procurement and later as CFO to drive the processes which Mr Mti would then approve.

82. At the beginning of 2004 Mr Watson informed Mr Agrizzi that Bosasa had to visit prisons around South Africa, together with Mr Gillingham, to evaluate the catering needs and concerns of the DCS to create a blueprint for the catering services. This was the second time that Mr Agrizzi met Mr Gillingham. Mr Agrizzi and others were instructed not to wear Bosasa uniform so as not to be identified as Bosasa and that the tour was to be coordinated by Mr Mansell and Gillingham. Mr Agrizzi, Mr Vorster, Mr Viljoen, Mr Mansell and Mr Gillingham attended the tour. They visited approximately 26 facilities across Johannesburg, Port Elizabeth, Durban, Cape Town and Pretoria.

83. Mr Agrizzi submitted the report to Mr Watson and Mr Mansell. Mr Agrizzi wanted to include catering security systems and requested an employee, Mr Johan Helmut, to design a solution that they could implement or show to the DCS. Mr Helmut designed such solution that Mr Agrizzi included in the final report and specification layout.

84. Mr Agrizzi testified that after the report had been finalised, he emailed it to the two email addresses that Mr Watson had provided him with, that of Mr Mansell and Mr Gillingham. Mr Agrizzi became aware of the fact that the report was used as a specifications document when the invitation to bid was advertised on 21 May 2004 and he was instructed to respond. When he confronted Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi was told that the tender would be awarded to Bosasa, he should keep quiet, keep his head down, do the paperwork and fill in the tender.

Award of the catering contract

85. All bids fell under Mr Agrizzi's supervision. He had a team that compiled the response to the invitation to bid. Bosasa was awarded the contract on 27 July 2004, initially for a three-year period with an annual value of R239,427,694.00. This was corroborated by Mr Bloem who explained that the contract was for seven large prisons, namely Durban-Westville, Pollsmoor, St Albans, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Modderbee and Krugersdorp. Mr Agrizzi explained that the costings were manipulated by doubling the price of a special meal (the exact same as a normal meal but prepared differently) and running the normal and special meals at a 70/30 ratio, instead of the 90/10 ratio. This resulted in a monthly costing that was on average 35% higher, with the DCS paying closer to R310 million instead of the R239 million for the first year.

Extension of the scope of the catering contract

86. On 29 September 2004 Mr Watson instructed Mr Agrizzi to propose to Mr Gillingham that seven satellite Correctional Centres should be included in the catering tender. This followed discussions between Mr Mansell and Mr Gillingham and approval from Mr Mti. The expansion of the contract was approved, and Mr Agrizzi had to provide a price for it. The monthly value of the expansion was R14 million. Mr Agrizzi testified that the scope of the catering contract was extended without authorisation in terms of the original tender or a new tender, and that everyone involved was aware of the fact. The contract was due to expire in September 2007 and was extended in July 2007 for a further year, a fact that was corroborated by Mr Bloem.

87. Mr Bloem testified that during a meeting on 26 February 2008 the National Commissioner of the DCS assured the Portfolio Committee that the tender for the catering contract would be advertised before its expiry on 31 July 2008. Despite this assurance, the contract was extended for a further six months until the finalisation of a new tender process chaired by Ms Sibushini Moodley (CDC: Care and Development), and not Mr Gillingham who had been closely linked to the extensions of the Bosasa contracts. Mr Bloem believes that Ms Moodley was used to avoid Mr Gillingham having to account.

88. At this stage, Mr Bloem called the DCS to account for these extensions before the Portfolio Committee. A meeting was held on 19 August 2009 in which the catering contract was discussed and the DCS was requested to provide the Portfolio Committee with information relating to the feasibility study for the outsourcing, why and how the seven correctional centres were selected, and the role Mr Gillingham had played in this process. The DCS has never provided this information and proceeded to re-award the tender to Bosasa Operations. The Portfolio Committee became aware of this award through the media.

89. On 6 January 2009 the DCS awarded Bosasa a new catering contract. The contract was for three years and the specifications documentation that had been used for the prior catering contract was again used for the second catering contract awarded to Bosasa.

The next catering contract

90. Mr Agrizzi testified that in 2013 a further catering contract for the DCS was awarded to Bosasa. The DCS used the same specifications that had been used in the previous contracts. Bosasa submitted a bid and was awarded the contract for a three-year period to the value of more than R420 million per annum. Mr Agrizzi testified further that the approximate gross profit margin for the contract was 40% with 28% net profit.

91. Mr Agrizzi was introduced to the Treasurer General of the ANC Youth League, Mr Reggie Nkabinde by Mr Watson. Mr Watson asked Mr Agrizzi to see if he could assist Mr Nkabinde, given that Mr Nkabinde was very close to Ms Mokonyane. Mr Agrizzi knew that Mr Nkabinde was politically connected and that he was very close to Mr Tom Moyane and "would be able to resolve any issues at Correctional Services". Mr Tom Moyane was the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services at the time.

92. In 2016 Mr Agrizzi was called to a meeting at Bosasa during which Mr Watson, Mr Nkabinde, Mr Patrick Monyeki and Mr Sam Sekgota were in attendance. Mr Watson told Mr Agrizzi that he was required to work with Mr Nkabinde and Mr Sekgota if Bosasa was to retain the catering contract with the DCS. Mr Agrizzi was shocked by this, given that he thought Bosasa was "on top of issues". He later realised that Mr Nkabinde had a copy of the tender before it had been issued. After discussing the matter, Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi approached Mr Sekgota for assistance. Mr Sekgota advised them to pay R5 million to his consultancy company to secure a six-month extension of the contract "which then would give us time to work out a plan of sorts on how to manage this thing", referring to the new tender.

93. Given that a six-month extension was equivalent to R150 million in fees, Bosasa paid the R5 million consultancy fee to Mr Sekgota's company. An invoice was raised by this company and then Bosasa "raised the second agreement". The second agreement with Mr Sekgota was for the renewal of the catering contract. This agreement required a payment of R10 million to Mr Sekgota's company. Mr Watson refused to pay that amount, effectively reneging on the agreement with Mr Sekgota. The decision to renege on the agreement followed advice given to Mr Watson from "people" that he did not need to pay that kind of money for the agreement. Consequently, Mr Sekgota "did not bother getting the renewal for the catering contract" resulting in Bosasa losing a portion of the contract (approximately 40%) of the catering contract.

The Portfolio Committee's concerns with the catering contract

94. Mr Bloem described the catering contract as "just a money laundering scheme". This is because, even though the function of taking over the kitchens and preparing food was outsourced to Bosasa, Mr Bloem witnessed inmates preparing the food and saw no labour from Bosasa. He explained that the Portfolio Committee were not given answers as to who supplied food to the prisons given that the DCS had its own farms. Mr Bloem was unequivocal that there was no way the Minister (at the time, Mr Ngconde Balfour) would not have known about these concerns as Mr Bloem had raised them personally with him.

95. Mr Bloem testified that the only thing Bosasa did was "to give these inmates a certificate at the end of the year saying that he is trained". He therefore did not believe there would be any disruptions to the functioning of the DCS kitchens if Bosasa's contract was cancelled. Mr Bloem confirmed that attempts were made to intervene in the award of further contracts and extensions to Bosasa but these were ignored. He said that the speaker, Mr Max Sisulu and the chairperson of the caucus, Ms Vytie Mentor,[5] were aware of these problems. Ms Mentor attempted to discuss these issues with Mr Balfour. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts (SCOPA) also raised concerns and Mr Bloem raised these concerns with Mr Balfour directly. It was clear to Mr Bloem that Mr Mti had Mr Balfour's protection.

96. During 2004 and 2009 there were two burglaries at Mr Bloem's office at Parliament during which documents were removed. This included a letter accusing Mr Bloem of attacking Bosasa and promoting White Capital and threatening him and his family with personal attacks. Mr Bloem testified that Ms Winnie Ngwenya, one of his Committee members, visited him and stated that she was sent by the owners of Bosasa to say that they wished to meet with him. He said that he was not willing to do so. She referred to there being "inyuku" which is a township slang word for "money". Mr Bloem informed her that he was not interested. Mr Bloem later realised that Ms Ngwenya showed bias towards Bosasa and had no real concern for the DCS.

97. Mr Bloem testified that during the time he was vocal about the Bosasa tenders, he received many calls threatening his life. He pleaded with the Chairperson to investigate the death of Mr Vernie Petersen because he opposed corruption and the tenders to Bosasa. He also indicated that Judge Erasmus from the Western Cape High Court raised many concerns regarding the Bosasa contracts in his reports at the Judicial Inspectorate into prisons.

The access control contract

98. In November 2004, Bosasa was invited to attend a monthly meeting of the DCS at Supersport Park to present on the implementation of the catering tender and to showcase some of the other services Bosasa could provide. Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham, Mr Agrizzi together with several Bosasa directors (excluding Mr Watson and Mr Mansell), attended the meeting.

99. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Watson indicated that he had received very good feedback from Mr Mti after the meeting and that there was an access control contract in the pipeline. Mr Watson and Mr Mansell instructed Mr Agrizzi to draft a specifications document for an access control system that would be advertised. Mr Agrizzi was instructed to draft the specifications in a manner to ensure that the award of the tender to Bosasa would be guaranteed. This was done by including aspects in the specifications that only Bosasa would be likely to have, such as experience working in a correctional services environment and to be an accredited National Key Points service provider.

100. The DCS issued an invitation to bid, on 4 February 2005, based on the specifications drafted by Mr Agrizzi. Initially, Mr Agrizzi was instructed to bid under Bosasa Security (Pty) Ltd and was later instructed to amend the documents and to respond under a newly established company, Sondolo IT. Around April 2005 Sondolo IT was awarded the contract. The contract's initial period was for two years and was later expanded to include a control room contract in terms of which Bosasa was paid to manage control rooms for the DCS at 66 sites. The value of the expansion was R236,997,385.31. Mr Agrizzi testified that the contract was inflated from the start.

The fencing contract

101. In June 2005 Mr Watson informed Mr Agrizzi that high security fencing at the DCS was a business opportunity for Bosasa. From the discussion it was evident that Mr Watson was aware that the DCS required a solution. According to Mr Agrizzi, Bosasa had never previously provided fencing and did not have the internal capacity to do so. An agreement was reached for Mr Watson to acquire 26% of the South African branch of Beta Fence.

102. Mr Agrizzi attended a meeting with Mr Watson, Mr Mansell, Mr Michael Roodenburg the Managing Director of Beta Fence, JP Hobbs (an engineer), and Riaan (Mr Agrizzi could not recall Riaan's surname). Riaan and Mr Hobbs were from the companies Teq-con and Modutech. Mr Agrizzi read up on the specifications used for high security applications and learned that the fence is made up of the Bode Mesh from Beta Fence and the taut wire system (which triggers an alarm when touched) from Modutech. It later became clear to Mr Agrizzi that this had been put together by Mr Mansell, Mr Roodenburg, Riaan and Mr Hobbs to capture the fencing business at the DCS. The arrangement was that there would be cooperation between the various entities (Sondolo IT, Modutech and Beta Fence) with the prospect of supplying security fencing to the DCS.

103. Due to the controversy about the Bosasa Group at the time Messrs Watson, Mansell and Perry negotiated with Mr Roodenburg and his wife, Jean, as well as with Ms Gloria Josephs to buy a company owned by the Roodenburgs and Josephs (the majority shareholders) called Phezulu Fencing. The sale would only go through (i.e., the shareholding would only be transferred) once the contract had been awarded to Phezulu Fencing by the DCS. The Bosasa Trusts (Bopa and Phafoga) were the buyers. The management of Phezulu Fencing was immediately taken over by Bosasa. The Roodenburgs and Josephs would transfer their shareholding for a "nominal fee of a few million Rands", and would retain an interest by subcontracting through Gordian (Pty) Ltd.

104. Mr Agrizzi testified that at the same time a supply agreement was entered into between Beta Fence and Phezulu Fencing where Beta Fence would supply all fencing material to Phezulu Fencing at a lower or "base cost". The fence was patented and sold at a premium price to any other customer, including any potential competitors of Phezulu Fencing. Beta Fence benefited by obtaining the contract and the black economic empowerment obtained through the transfer of the 26% shareholding to the Bosasa Trusts. Mr Agrizzi arranged with Beta Fence to pay the dividends in respect of the shareholders into the attorney's trust account of Mr Biebuyck who was instructed to transfer the money to Bosasa Operations. The dividends were not paid to the two trusts. The rationale for doing so, Mr Agrizzi testified, was because the shareholders reflected on paper were actually not shareholders and so did not get the dividends.

105. At this stage there was no public announcement of such a tender being issued. According to Mr Agrizzi, the various arrangements were put in place because of a preceding discussion between Bosasa and the DCS (Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham). As it was contemplated that the fencing would be provided for all prisons throughout the country, various companies were approached to act as subcontractors to Phezulu Fencing. The companies included Live Wire (Pty) Ltd, Gordian (Pty) Ltd, Mavundla Ironclad (Pty) Ltd, L&J Civils (Pty) Ltd and another company represented by Jaco Pitso (Siyaya Fencing). Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mansell compiled the specifications document for 47 correctional facilities for fencing, security and taut wire before any tender was issued. Bosasa personnel also had access to the DCS sites to survey the sites to assist in the preparation of the specifications and any bid document that would be submitted in the future. According to Mr Agrizzi, Bosasa was advantaged in that it had undertaken all the work required before the tender was advertised. These surveys took place over a period of two to three months before the tender was advertised.

106. The fencing tender was advertised by the DCS on 14 October 2005. The contract was awarded to Phezulu Fencing on 29 November 2005. The tender allowed for less than six weeks to prepare and submit the documents, which was virtually impossible to do for any competitor in respect of the bid. According to Mr Agrizzi, the DCS would have been aware of and appreciated this fact.

107. The submission value of the contract was R486,937,910. As with the catering tender, Mr Agrizzi testified that the figures were manipulated to grow the tender. The maintenance contract linked to the fencing that was installed ran for a period of three years, was billed separately, and was internally awarded from Phezulu Fencing to Sondolo IT. The maintenance contract did not go through a tender process. Mr Agrizzi was of the view that Mr Watson and his family were the ultimate beneficiaries of the DCS fencing contract.

Integrated computerised offender management system and television contract

108. In late 2005, Mr Gillingham informed Mr Agrizzi and Mr Mansell that the DCS was interested in a centrally distributed television management programme. Under this system each cell, across the country, would have a television screen that would be able to be programmed so that the head of a prison could decide what would be watched and distributed on the television, to network and create a system where addresses by, for example, the Minister could be streamed nationally. The rating of the system was required to be Ingress Protection 65 to ensure that the unit was waterproof and vandal resistant.

109. Also at this time, Mr Mansell and Mr Watson received information in discussions with Mr Gillingham and Mr Mti that the DCS had surplus funds in their budget that they needed to use quickly to prevent it from going back to National Treasury. Mr Agrizzi testified that he learned of this and was instructed to design a system that incorporates an interfaced system to plug in other value adds such as cell phone detection and thermal imaging. Mr Agrizzi testified that Bosasa was also given the documents necessary to design an integrated computerised offender management system, based on "all the DCS forms". As far as Mr Agrizzi could recall, Mr Gillingham spent time with some of the people in the Bosasa IT division during the design process. The design (specifications document) was given to Mr Mansell and Mr Gillingham. Mr Agrizzi was then instructed by Mr Watson to have a specifications document drawn up. The document was drafted by Mr Agrizzi and, without their knowing of anything untoward, Elandre Fourie from Pinnacle Micro (Pty) Ltd.

110. The invitation to bid was only advertised on 14 October 2005. Mr Agrizzi was instructed to respond to the invitation to bid through Sondolo IT. According to Mr Agrizzi, he was aware that Sondolo IT would be awarded the contract, which award took place on 3 March 2006. The initial contract value was R224,364,480.

111. In 2006 Mr Watson instructed Mr Perry to register a company, Lianorah Investments, on behalf of Mr Mti. Mr Agrizzi testified that the negative publicity concerning Bosasa and its relationship with government departments, including the DCS, started around 2005, predominantly in the Beeld and Die Burger newspapers. Mr Watson, Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham were mentioned by name in the articles.

Interactions with the various officials of the DCS

Mr Patrick Gillingham

112. Mr Vorster testified that, after the catering contract had been awarded to Bosasa in 2004, Mr Watson instructed him to meet with Mr Gillingham and assist him to acquire a vehicle. Mr Gillingham was looking for a Mercedes Benz E270. At that stage, he was driving a gold Mercedes Benz which he sold to Bosasa for R155,000 despite its trade-in value being between R80,000 and R90,000. The money from Bosasa was deposited into Mr Gillingham's personal bank account. Mr Vorster confirmed that he negotiated this deal. Mr Vorster testified to three other occasions when he assisted Mr Gillingham to obtain a vehicle because he was able to negotiate the best deals.

113. Mr Vorster was then subjected to a fake disciplinary hearing at the time the SIU investigated the matter. The purpose of this was to mislead the investigation into payments to Mr Gillingham so that the company was not implicated. Mr van Tonder testified that he was present at a meeting where a Bosasa attorney drafted an agreement in terms of which Mr Vorster advanced R180,000 to Mr Gillingham to purchase the vehicle. The cost of this loan was ultimately carried by Bosasa. This credit agreement was confirmed by Mr Vorster who attached a copy of it to his statement. He indicated that the agreement was necessary to conceal the true nature of the transaction given the SIU investigation.

114. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson also instructed Mr van Tonder to purchase a new Volkswagen Polo for Mr Gillingham's daughter. Mr Vorster confirmed that Mr van Tonder dealt with the purchase of this vehicle. Payment for the vehicles were made from Mr van Tonder's personal accounts via electronic transfers. In return, a bonus would be paid to Mr van Tonder, via Consilium.

115. Mr van Tonder corroborated this evidence and elaborated on the financing of the purchase of the car for Mr Gillingham's daughter. According to Mr Agrizzi, Riekele built Mr Mti's house and was also involved in building a house for Mr Gillingham at Midstream Estate. Mr Vorster testified that it was "common knowledge" that Mr Hoeksma and Riekele built Mr Gillingham's house as well as Mr Mti's house in Savannah Hills.

116. Mr van Tonder explained that the expenses incurred in the building of houses for Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham were accounted for Bosasa's books in the "normal way" as if they were expenses incurred by the company itself (i.e., as legitimate business expenses), given that these expenses coincided with the renovation of company property. Mr van Tonder testified that this was an unlawful reflection of the expenses to SARS. The false invoices were documented in the books and the originals were destroyed when the SIU Report was released. Incriminating evidence was removed and replaced with dummy invoices – invoices were swopped because references could not be removed from the Microsoft System at that stage. According to Mr Agrizzi, the costs for work being done by Bosasa for government entities were inflated and the monies were used to pay for the building of the houses of Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham.

117. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was also instructed by Mr Watson to prepare a declaration on behalf of Mr Gillingham that the monies and benefits he had received were in fact loans, which declaration was to be backdated and approved by Mr Mti. Mr Gillingham signed the declaration and Mr Agrizzi took the declaration to Mr Mti. They met at the Protea Hotel in Midrand. Initially, Mti did not want to sign the declaration, but did so after Mr Agrizzi telephoned Mr Watson who spoke to Mr Mti. After the telephone discussion between Mr Watson and Mr Mti, Mr Mti signed and backdated the declaration in the presence of Mr Agrizzi.

118. Gillingham provided the letterhead of the DCS to Mr Agrizzi, who typed the declaration. The declaration was attached as annexure L to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit. The amount of R47,500 was the same amount that Mr Gillingham received on his salary slip. When Mr Gillingham was suspended and he subsequently resigned, this amount was doubled up so that he got approximately R95,000. There was an additional R2,000 added for cell phone costs and there were contributions to medical aid. That is how the amount of R110,000 was determined. This amount was paid over to Mr Gillingham for a period of about four years.

119. In 2008 Mr Agrizzi received what he referred to as a frantic call from Mr Gillingham to advise him that he had been raided by the SIU and that they had taken amongst other things his computer and had seen his safe with the cash in it. In addition, the SIU had found a Consilium business card with Mr Gillingham's name on it. Mr Agrizzi said he was astounded that there was a Consilium business card with Mr Gillingham's name on it and this did not make sense to him. Nevertheless, Mr Agrizzi had to rush through to go to see Mr Gillingham on Mr Watson's instruction to make sure that there was nothing else left. Mr Agrizzi described that it was interesting that, when the SIU raided Mr Gillingham, they did not check the garage that contained boxes which had files and files of "important stuff".

120. Mr Agrizzi described the Consilium business card as making him aware that there was something much deeper going on with Mr Gillingham. Mr Agrizzi confronted Dr Smith who had printed the business cards for Mr Gillingham. Dr Smith informed Mr Agrizzi that he was instructed by Mr Watson to do so because Mr Gillingham was to accompany Mr Watson to see manufacturers and suppliers of goods and Mr Watson wanted people to think that Mr Gillingham was the CFO and had an interest in the business. Mr Agrizzi explained the rationale for this strategy was to strong-arm the owner of the business to hand over a 26% stake in their company in return for business at the DCS.

121. When Mr Watson went to see Mr Gillingham, he was told that Mr Gillingham had been suspended from his position by the then National Commissioner of DCS, Mr Vernie Petersen. The morning after the raid at Mr Gillingham's house, Mr Watson came to Mr Agrizzi's office to request that he see Mr Mti at his house in Midstream Estate. After that meeting, he went to see Mr Gillingham to make sure that they calmed him and that there were no mistakes made. They later met with Mr Gillingham in the car park of the shopping centre close to his house during which time Mr Watson told Mr Gillingham not to be concerned. Mr Gillingham's biggest concern at that stage was his pension fund as he was not worried about losing his job because he knew he was going to be receiving R110,000 per month from Bosasa. Mr Watson informed Mr Gillingham not to worry about his pension fund as Bosasa would stand in to cover that amount as well. On the way back, Mr Watson asked Mr Agrizzi to determine the value of Mr Gillingham's pension fund and to make a contingency available for such funds. During the meeting, Mr Watson also told Mr Gillingham not to worry about his legal fees as these were being paid for by Bosasa. Mr Watson instructed Mr Agrizzi to utilise an arm's length company to do so. The purpose of creating this arm's length company was to ensure that the payment of Mr Gillingham's legal fees could not be traced back to Mr Watson.

122. Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Gillingham's legal fees during the SIU investigation were paid to BDK Attorneys by Bosasa through Sinkoprop CC. Mr van Tonder testified that Sinkoprop belonged to Mr Watson, and it owned property in Ruimsig which was donated to Mr Agrizzi as an incentive. Sinkoprop was ultimately liquidated and the property was transferred to another entity known as Spilacraft which belonged to Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder.

123. During 2015 there were talks again about the SIU Report and Mr Gillingham complained that he had been short-changed and insisted on being paid a salary via a company. Mr Agrizzi suggested that they put him on the Consilium payroll so he could show employment and get UIF payments. Mr Agrizzi recalls Mr Watson coming to him the next morning and saying that he had met Dr Smith and they did not want to put Mr Gillingham onto the Consilium payroll, but rather they should use an arm's-length company, BEE Foods, which was owned by Mr Taverner.

124. Mr Gillingham never worked for BEE Foods but he received a salary and vehicle from it. Mr Agrizzi estimated that the arrangement to pay Mr Gillingham through BEE Foods was made in and around 2015. However, he noted that he was not good with dates and names. Other benefits to Mr Gillingham included payment of his legal fees during his divorce from Bosasa funds retained in the Hogan Lovells trust account. Mr Agrizzi was referred to the evidence on record about the vehicle purchased for Mr Gillingham's child, Megan Gillingham. The purchase of Mr Gillingham's daughter's car happened just before Christmas and Mr Agrizzi had to leave everything and meet up with Mr van Tonder at a Volkswagen dealership in Alberton where they purchased a Polo for her.

125. In 2016 Mr Gillingham's son, Patrick, was implicated in using funds from his employer, Bakwena. Mr Agrizzi testified that he had to get a top labour lawyer to assist and ultimately there was a payment of R700,000 due to Bakwena. It was explained in Mr Agrizzi's Supplementary Affidavit that he was told to intervene and arrange the payment of this amount. In this regard, Mr Watson instructed him to draft a one-page loan agreement between Mr Gillingham and Mr Agrizzi's erstwhile in-laws to keep the transaction at arm's length

Mr R. Linda Mti

126. The first time Mr Agrizzi saw cash paid directly to Mr Mti was on his first visit to Mr Mti's house in Savannah Hills. The amount paid to Mr Mti on this occasion was R65,000. The second occasion occurred when a meeting was held at the 'Cod Father' restaurant off Rivonia Road where Mr Watson frequently met Mr Mti. Although Mr Agrizzi could not remember the date of this meeting, he recalled Mr Mti still being the National Commissioner and stated that the investigations ought to be able to pick up a date from his telephone records. After the meeting at the restaurant, Mr Mti walked to his dark metallic Volkswagen Touareg and opened his boot with the remote. Mr Watson took a briefcase from the boot of his own car, walked to Mr Mti's car, took cash out of his briefcase, placed the cash into a brown satchel and placed it in Mr Mti's boot. Mr Agrizzi recalled it being a considerable amount of money of approximately R150,000.

127. There were a few occasions when Mr Watson would call Mr Agrizzi to his vault while he was packing money. He would specifically count amounts for Mr Mti and others and ask Mr Agrizzi to keep it with him until the next morning. The next day, they would both go to Mr Mti's house and wait for him in the study. Up to this point, Mr Agrizzi had no direct contact with Mr Mti and had only assisted Mr Watson, as instructed, with documents or information as required.

128. Mr Watson informed Mr Agrizzi that Bosasa had paid for Mr Mti's house as well as its furnishings when Mr Agrizzi met Mr Mti for the second time in 2007. In fact, Bosasa paid for the furnishings of both houses – Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham – through Mark and Sharon Taverner's company.

129. Mr le Roux estimated the costs of work at Mr Mti's homes to have been R350,000. In his further affidavit, Mr le Roux produced invoices for components used in the work done at Mr Mti's homes at his plot in Greenbushes, Port Elizabeth and in Colchester to the value of R70,306.19.

130. Mr le Roux also attached copies of WhatsApp messages between himself and Mr Mti in January 2017 in terms of which Mr Mti requested assistance with maintenance of the security systems at Greenbushes and Colchester. Mr Vorster testified that in 2005 he was instructed to procure a vehicle for Mr Mti, namely a silver Volkswagen Touareg V8. He negotiated the deal and the vehicle was purchased from Lindsay Saker, Krugersdorp.

131. After Mr Mti resigned from the DCS, Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi met him at Savannah Hills Estate, as Mr Mti had wanted a proposal to be presented that he could utilise as a presentation on the 2010 World Cup security. Mr Agrizzi was instructed to prepare a security plan and to assist Mr Mti wherever possible in doing the presentation. Mr Watson handed a grey security bag to Mr Mti during the meeting, which contained Mr Mti's monthly fee of R65,000. Holidays and travelling costs for Mr Mti and his family were also paid for by Bosasa. After the meeting, Mr Watson jokingly said to Mr Agrizzi that Bosasa pays monopoly money, but that Mr Mti always delivers on his promises.

132. In his affidavit filed with the Commission, Mr Blake states that he is reasonably sure that Blake's Travel never received any funds from Mr Gillingham, Mr Mti or their direct family and that he could find no accounting record reflecting any such payment. Mr Blake's affidavit further provides that the travel and accommodation booked for Mr Mti and his family is too voluminous to include within the body of his affidavit and is, therefore, reflected in a spreadsheet attached to his affidavit, together with supporting invoices. The data in the spreadsheet shows that for the period October 2012 to January 2017 a total amount of R1,234,481.11 was expended on travel and accommodation for Mr Mti.

133. At a later stage, Mr Agrizzi had to arrange a meeting with Mr Mti and the attorney, Mr Biebuyck, to re-assure Mr Mti that the process was under control and that he would be protected. During this meeting with Mr Biebuyck, Mr Mti explained that Ms Jiba of the NPA had told him to prepare representations as to why prosecution should not take place. Mr Agrizzi handed over documents he had received from the NPA as well as his handwritten notes to Mr Biebuyck who then produced a lengthy document addressed to the then National Director of Public Prosecutions (NDPP) dated 28 September 2010.

134. The representations sent by Mr Biebuyck contained vital information that had been received via Mr Mti from, according to Mr Mti, Adv Jiba and Ms Jackie Lepinka (who was the secretary to Adv Mrwebi, Head of the Specialised Commercial Crimes Unit). It was on this premise that Mr Biebuyck would constantly remind Mr Agrizzi that there was no purpose in whistleblowing as the matter would never see its day in court.

135. When asked to comment by way of summary who made the decisions in relation to the assistance given to Mr Gillingham and Mr Mti, Mr Agrizzi stated that Bosasa was owned and run by only one person, and he would make the ultimate decisions. In this respect, Mr Agrizzi was referring to Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi's Supplementary Affidavit was to the effect that the major beneficiary of all the contracts and tenders was Mr Watson and his family.

Mr Vincent Smith

136. Mr Agrizzi first met Mr Vincent Smith around 2010/2011 in Parliament. At the time, Mr Smith was a member of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services and was opposed to Bosasa and had been openly vocal about the SIU Report.

137. In 2011 Mr Watson collected Mr Agrizzi and they drove to a meeting with Mr Smith, Mr Seopela, a gentleman by the name of Mr Magagula, and Ms Ngwenya. The meeting took place at a hotel on Rivonia Road. During the meeting it became evident to Mr Agrizzi that the individuals present were members of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services. Mr Agrizzi described this meeting as a turning point in Mr Smith's attitude to Bosasa.

138. In his oral evidence before the Commission, Mr Smith confirmed, based on minutes of meetings of the Portfolio Committee when he was the Chairperson in October 2010 and October 2011, that there had been reports of corruption involving Bosasa and that he was aware of these reports when he met with Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson. Mr Smith testified that he was comfortable to meet with Bosasa in 2011, after Mr Watson had called him. Mr Smith was previously not comfortable to meet with Mr Agrizzi when he had just been appointed as the Chairperson.

139. According to Mr Smith, he met with Bosasa as a stakeholder in the same way that he also met with various other stakeholders. Although he could not recall the detail, Mr Smith testified that normally, following a briefing by a stakeholder, he would ask them to reduce a request to writing or to attend a "formal stakeholder meeting where they were then presented to the Portfolio Committee". It was put to him that there was a record where he reported to the Portfolio Committee that he had met with Bosasa at a hotel in Sandton, seemingly to discuss negative reports about Bosasa. Mr Smith said that, whilst he could not recall the detail and had not seen the report, it would not be strange that, after such meeting, he would have reported to the Portfolio Committee because ultimately that is where decisions would be taken.

140. Smith testified that he never discussed the allegations of corruption involving Bosasa with Mr Watson, despite their longstanding personal relationship, because he had made an undertaking to the Portfolio Committee as Chairperson that the members should not sabotage the work of the SIU investigation and that he was very clear to separate politics from his work as a MP at the time.

141. According to Mr Agrizzi, it was discussed at the meeting that MPs would receive amounts of money in return for keeping quiet and managing the negative press on Bosasa to ensure that Bosasa would continue to get new business. On a monthly basis, Mr Smith would receive an amount of R45 000; Mr Magagula would receive an amount of R30 000; and Ms Ngwenya would receive an amount of R20 000.

142. In an affidavit filed in response to a Directive issued by the Chairperson under Regulation 10(6), the content of which was confirmed during his oral evidence, Mr Smith denies facilitating or influencing any unlawful award of any tender for himself, any other person, family, or entity. Mr Smith also denied influencing any individual to unduly favour a service provider or prospective service provider to the State, in particular Bosasa. Mr Smith also denied ever meeting Ms Ngwenya outside of Parliament and stated that he never had a discussion with Mr Watson regarding the working relationship between Bosasa and the DCS. He further denied ever being a recipient of monthly cash payments from Mr Watson, Bosasa or Mr Agrizzi. He contended that any requests for assistance he may have made to Mr Agrizzi or Mr Watson were never on a quid pro quo basis.

143. Mr Agrizzi testified that he delivered money to Mr Smith on many occasions, including at Mugg and Bean at Clearwater Mall, a Greek restaurant at Cradlestone Mall, and in Florida. If Mr Agrizzi met Mr Smith in a restaurant, he would take the cash in a newspaper. During 2015/2016, Mr Smith became uncomfortable with Mr Seopela as a "middleman" and it was agreed that Mr Seopela would be excluded.

144. Mr Smith denied ever receiving a payment at Clearwater Mall. According to Mr Smith, he met with Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi at Clearwater Mall on a social basis when in Johannesburg, that the meetings were a continuation of his relationship with Mr Watson and that no exchange of money was ever done at these meetings.

145. Mr Agrizzi testified that Ms Ngwenya lived close to the Bosasa office and would frequently collect her payment there. Mr Agrizzi was present on an occasion when Mr Magagula took delivery of a payment, although Mr Agrizzi did not himself hand the cash to him. Payments to Mr Magagula and Ms Ngwenya were stopped when they ceased to be members of the Portfolio Committee.

146. According to Mr Agrizzi, at that time, meetings with Mr Smith were held every second week, where Mr Smith would brief Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi on the activities of the DCS and to enable Mr Smith to intervene where Bosasa had problems with Mr Zach Modise, then National Commissioner of DCS. Mr Smith denied that frequent meetings were held. Mr Smith further denied intervening or interfering in any way with Mr Modise's functions or attempting to unduly influence him. According to Mr Smith, his role as Chairperson and full-time member of the Portfolio Committee had come to an end in May 2014 and he was, therefore, unable to exert any influence on Mr Modise who was appointed in 2015, having acted since June 2014.

147. Mr le Roux confirmed that Mr Watson instructed him to undertake what became known as "Project Jones" for Mr Smith following an incident of crime. At the time, Mr Smith was the SCOPA Chairperson. Work was undertaken at Mr Smith's residence in Roodepoort. The work entailed electric fencing, installation of an IP CCTV system and continuous maintenance on the electric fence. The value of the equipment installed was approximately R200 000. Mr Smith stated that he allowed Mr le Roux access to his residence but was not involved in deciding who would do the installation, how it would be done and what make of system would be installed. After the upgrade, Mr Smith would call either Mr Agrizzi or Mr le Roux when there was a fault with the system.

148. Payments were also made to Aberystwyth University for Mr Smith's daughter's fees. One such payment was made on 14 July 2015 for an amount of R276,667.90, as a cash deposit to an entity called Euro Blitz at FNB Krugersdorp. Mr Smith stated that two loan payments were made through the bank account of Euro Blitz, a company in which Mr Smith is the sole Director. According to Mr Smith, the amounts paid to Euro Blitz were loan amounts that he had discussed and agreed with Mr Agrizzi he would repay when one of his investments matured in 2023.

149. Mr Smith was referred to an email sent by him to Mr Agrizzi on 11 May 2015 under the subject line "daughters study 2015 University Aberystwyth". Relevant correspondence from the university is attached to the email. The evidence leader asked Mr Smith why there was no request for a loan made in the email. In response, Mr Smith confirmed that the email is a request for funds but asserted that the reference to the earlier discussion between Mr Smith and Mr Agrizzi was a reference to the discussion on a loan.

150. When asked by the Chairperson, why Mr Agrizzi would continue to allege that the money paid to Mr Smith was corrupt and deprive himself of having the money paid back to him, in terms of a loan, Mr Smith said that he does not know what Mr Agrizzi's motivation was. Mr Smith further said that Mr Agrizzi may have done so because he knew that it was not his money but that he did not want to venture into that area or get into that argument. Mr Smith confirmed that a car was hired by Bosasa for his daughter on three separate occasions; the first for 25 days, the second for 17 days and the third for 30 days at an approximate total cost of R26,000.

Mr Vernie Petersen

151. Mr Petersen was appointed as National Commissioner of the DCS in mid-2007. Mr Agrizzi testified that he had attempted to communicate with Mr Petersen about possible future ventures but that he would not have anything to do with any of the companies in Bosasa.

152. Around the same time, two meetings were held with Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi, Mr Khulekani Sithole, former Commissioner of the DCS, and someone by the name of Sbu, who Mr Agrizzi thought was the General Secretary of Police and Prisons Civil Rights Union (POPCRU) at the time. Mr Agrizzi testified that the purpose of the meetings was to discuss how they could swing Mr Petersen and get a solution where he would start communicating with Bosasa. It was agreed that Mr Sithole, Sbu and Mr Nxele, the Regional Commissioner of the DCS in KwaZulu Natal, would be paid R1 million per month in exchange for undue pressure that would be put on the DCS and Mr Petersen, through the associations with POPCRU and the unions, to ensure that the attitude towards Bosasa changed to get Peterson to agree to work with Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Petersen's cooperation, as decision maker and accounting officer of the DCS, was required because Bosasa wanted more business and new opportunities.

153. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Sithole would get somebody to email an invoice and he would pass it on to accounts, get Mr Watson to approve it and put it through for payment. The invoices were on a company letterhead, called Vleissentraal. Mr Agrizzi testified that he recalled an issue with the payments at a stage because the recipients were unhappy that the R1 million included VAT. Mr Agrizzi also testified that the amount was reduced to R700,000 per month after Sondolo IT lost the contract for the staffing of the control rooms at the DCS.

154. Mr Agrizzi attended a meeting with Mr Gumede and Mr Nxele at a restaurant at the Intercontinental Hotel at ORTIA. It was the first time that Mr Agrizzi met Mr Nxele, who was in full uniform. Mr Agrizzi testified that, prior to the meeting while Mr Watson was packing the money for Mr Nxele in the vault, he briefed Mr Gumede and Mr Agrizzi on what to say to Mr Nxele. Mr Agrizzi testified that he explained to Mr Nxele that Bosasa was not able to increase the amount agreed upon and that Mr Gumede handed the security bag of money to Mr Nxele. After the lunch, Mr Nxele said that he was unhappy with the money, as it was not the money promised to him and that he would convey his dissatisfaction to Mr Watson.

155. Mr Agrizzi testified that a few weeks later, he was instructed to accompany Mr Mathenjwa, at that stage Managing Director of Sondolo IT, to the Beverly Hills Hotel in Durban to meet Mr Nxele. This was after constant messages from Mr Nxele regarding his dissatisfaction with the amount he was being paid. Mr Mathenjwa and Mr Agrizzi met with Mr Nxele for about two hours. Mr Agrizzi explained that Bosasa was not able to increase the amounts. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Nxele was not happy, said he would deal with it in his own way and left without taking the grey security bag of money that contained R57,500. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Nxele called Mr Mathenjwa about ten minutes later and asked if he could come and fetch the bag which he did in Mr Agrizzi's presence.

156. In his affidavit filed in response to a Regulation 10 (6) directive, Mr Mathenjwa denies having any knowledge about any financial arrangements or discussions with Mr Nxele and denies that he was ever involved in paying Mr Nxele money whether in a grey bag or otherwise. According to Mr Mathenjwa, he was asked to join Mr Agrizzi in Durban. Mr Agrizzi advised him that there was concern over the use of emerging contractors on the DCS projects in KwaZulu-Natal which needed to be resolved. Although Mr Mathenjwa indicates that he did not have a working relationship with the Department, and it puzzled him why Mr Agrizzi wanted him to be part of the discussion, he nevertheless accompanied Mr Agrizzi as it was his prerogative as the COO to decide who should attend meetings regarding the affairs of the Bosasa Group, from time to time.

157. Mr Mathenjwa alleges that he excused himself to go to the washroom before Mr Nxele arrived. When he returned to the table, it was clear that Mr Agrizzi and Mr Nxele had had a disagreement. Mr Mathenjwa alleges that he sat some distance from them and that the discussion appeared to end abruptly when Mr Nxele left the hotel. Mr Mathenjwa denies that Mr Nxele contacted him later to arrange for the collection of the grey bag. Mr Agrizzi requested that he call Mr Nxele to see if he would resume discussions with Mr Agrizzi. He did so and there was no immediate answer. Mr Nxele returned Mr Mathenjwa's call a while later and told him not to bring a white man to KwaZulu-Natal to undermine him, and that he would not speak to Mr Agrizzi. Mr Mathenjwa alleges that he was confused but that Mr Agrizzi advised that he handle the matter. Mr Mathenjwa left Durban and Mr Agrizzi remained behind. According to Mr Mathenjwa, he had no further dealings with Mr Nxele after that interaction.

158. In late 2008 Mr Petersen was moved to the Department of Sports and Recreation and the DG at Sports and Recreation Ms Xoliswa Sibeko was appointed as the National Commissioner of the DCS. Mr Agrizzi testified that, after Ms Sibeko's appointment, they were informed that the DCS was going to cancel Sondolo IT's contract for the staffing of the control rooms, as Ms Sibeko was adamant that she did not want the Bosasa Group involved with the DCS.

159. Mr Agrizzi was tasked by Mr Watson to accompany Mr Leshabane to the Intercontinental Hotel at ORTIA to meet with Mr Modise (who at the time was Chief Deputy Commissioner in charge of Correctional Care and Security at the DCS). Mr Agrizzi testified that he explained the benefits of outsourcing to Mr Modise when Mr Leshabane arrived and gave Mr Modise a packet wrapped in newspaper. The packet was a grey plastic bag of cash that Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi had packed earlier that day. Mr Modise was one of the officials at the time who was receiving monthly payments from Bosasa.

Oversight of the DCS

160. Mr Bloem provided an overview of the oversight role played by parliamentary Portfolio Committees. Mr Bloem considered the multi-party Portfolio Committee as being a central instrument in our parliamentary democracy and commented that the Portfolio Committee was working in the interests of the country and as a single unit despite the varying political affiliations.

161. As to the difficulties encountered in the operation of the Portfolio Committee, Mr Bloem testified that the Committee had serious problems with the national leadership of the DCS, i.e., the Commissioner and his top structure. At the time Mr Bloem was the Chairperson of the Portfolio Committee, the Commissioner was Mr Mti, then Mr Petersen, and thereafter Mr Moyane. The Minister of the DCS at the time was Mr Ngconde Balfour

162. Mr Bloem described the Portfolio Committee as having had serious problems in respect of accountability from the DCS. Specifically, information requested at its meetings was either provided late or was not forthcoming. This made it very difficult for the Portfolio Committee to interrogate the DCS' operations. Mr Bloem considered this conduct to undermine the authority of the Portfolio Committee. Mr Bloem considers there to have been a breakdown of the relationship between the Portfolio Committee and the then executive authority of the DCS Minister Balfour. For example, when the then Commissioner Mr Petersen, was redeployed to the Department of Sports and Recreation, the Portfolio Committee was not informed, nor were they given reasons for his redeployment.

163. Mr Bloem described the DCS as being in a state of havoc when Mr Petersen took over from Mr Mti. Mr Moyane later succeeded Mr Petersen as the Commissioner. Mr Bloem testified that there was no control or discipline within the DCS and that "Bosasa was hampering the functioning of the Department of Correctional Services". The staff were unhappy with the situation and convened protest marches.

164. Mr Bloem testified that from 2004, the DCS received qualified audit reports. He attributed this to the weak internal financial controls within the DCS which impacted on the SCM process. Mr Bloem described it as being a "free for all that was happening in the department". Mr Bloem testified that despite the Portfolio Committee raising several concerns and objections (including concerns with corruption) with the then Minister as well as during "study group" meetings, these were not addressed. The Minister's response was that the DCS should be left to sort out their own problems and the Portfolio Committee should not interfere in its operations.

165. Mr Bloem found himself to be in a conflict of interest situation in the sense that he was trying to stop what he referred to as 'the havoc' at the DCS, but at the same time he was told by his party not to take certain steps. When Mr Bloem served as Chairperson of the Portfolio Committee, former President Kgalema Motlanthe was Secretary General of the ANC and several party members complained to Mr Motlanthe about Mr Bloem's conduct. However, Mr Motlanthe took a firm stand that Mr Bloem's conduct was in line with the function of an oversight committee which was meant to hold the Minister and the DCS to account. Many people labelled Mr Bloem as an opposition in the ANC.

The DCS and breaches of the PFMA

166. Insofar as the decision to outsource functions is concerned, Mr Bloem confirmed that, ideally, a department would perform its own functions internally. A feasibility study is conducted to determine whether a function should be outsourced and whether the budget allowed for the outsourcing.

167. Mr Bloem's affidavit noted that the Portfolio Committee voiced its reservations and objections regarding the outsourcing of services within the DCS primarily on the issues of cost-effectiveness and necessity. They considered there to be other urgent priorities requiring attention such as poor salaries of DCS personnel and overcrowded facilities. Notwithstanding this, contracts were awarded to Bosasa and the feasibility studies for outsourcing functions to it were not given to the Portfolio Committee. Mr Bloem identified four contentious contracts with Bosasa. These are (1) a catering and training contract in July 2004 called "Nutrition"; (2) a contract with Sondolo IT in April 2005; (3) a fencing contract for 47 DCS sites in November 2005; and (4) a television system. He estimated the value of the contracts awarded to the DCS to be over a R1 billion.

168. Mr Bloem testified that the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services questioned the rationale for the television distribution contract (worth R224 million) and the explanation that it was for the development and training of inmates. He confirmed that, to date, educational programmes have not been rolled out.

169. Mr Bloem further testified that Mr Petersen's attitude as National Commissioner was to look at ways of stopping outsourcing given that he believed that outsourcing increased the opportunity for corruption.

Department of Justice and Constitutional Development

Contracts awarded to Bosasa and its affiliates

170. Around 2013, Sondolo IT was awarded the contract with the DOJCD at an approximate value of R601 million to install a security access control system for close to 110 courts nationally. Sondolo IT paid 2.5% of all money received to certain individuals in the DOJCD as lobbying fees or bribes. The project was managed by the IDT, on behalf of the DOJCD.

171. The contract awarded for the CCTV and access control was, according to Mr Agrizzi, irregular and was met with resistance from the procurement and financial divisions at the DOJCD. It came to Mr Agrizzi's attention during 2016 that various court managers were dissatisfied with the services rendered and, in many instances, installations were incomplete and substandard. This concerned Mr Agrizzi and he deployed a specialist team to survey and take corrective actions on a national basis to rectify the matter. Mr Agrizzi initiated and instructed a team to repair and replace the faulty equipment at these sites.

172. Accountants prepared and presented a document to Mr Agrizzi as proof that payments had come in and that certain monies were outstanding. The schedule reflected the year-to-date receipts as R98,842,025.32. The total receipts for February 2013 were reflected as R15,798,081.19 and the 2.5% paid to individuals in the DOJCD, referred to as a management fee, for that month was R394,952.03. The total 2.5% paid to date was R2,026,098.60. This was paid over and above other monies that were being paid to officials in the DOJCD.

Upgrades to the South African Legal Union (SALU) premises

173. The DOJCD rented the SALU premises from the Billion Group and security upgrades were done to the premises, for which the Billion Group was liable. No tender process was followed and Sondolo IT was appointed. The Billion Group resisted payment and so arrangements were made with Mr Seopela to facilitate the transaction. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was told by Mr Seopela that he needed to provide R1.9 million as a fee for arranging the contract. Mr Agrizzi gave the R1.9 million to Mr Seopela in cash and testified that he did not know whether Mr Seopela paid the money over to anyone or not.

Mr Desmond Nair

174. Mr le Roux gave evidence to the effect that he was instructed by Mr Mathenjwa in early 2016 to attend to work at the home of Mr Desmond Nair, the Chief Magistrate in the Pretoria Magistrates' Court. The work entailed installation of a full electric fence, IP CCTV system and alarm system with beams. This work was signed off by Mr Agrizzi. His initial estimate of the approximate cost of this project was R200,000. Mr le Roux also confirmed having attended to one or two maintenance issues on the fence and CCTV system.

175. Mr Nair, provided an affidavit in response to a Regulation 10 (6) directive, dated 26 August 2019, a further affidavit dated 14 July 2020 responding to Mr le Roux's affidavit of 30 June 2020, and he gave oral evidence. He denies any involvement in state capture, corruption, dishonesty, or improper conduct. Mr Nair said he had no discussions with Mr le Roux. He denies speaking to or knowing Mr Agrizzi or Mr Watson or Mr Mathenjwa, although he acknowledged that the latter may have been present at some meetings following a fire at the court.

176. Mr Nair came to know Mr "Deuts Baijoo," who had been assigned the Pretoria Magistrates' Court as one of his nodes of responsibility as an employee of Sondolo IT under its contract with the DOJCD to provide security for the courts. Mr Nair explained that during mid-2016 he was busy hearing a murder trial as an acting judge in Skukuza. He was away from home a lot of the time for this purpose. He was concerned about his family's security because there were 23 accused and they were out on bail. He was particularly concerned that he did not have CCTV cameras covering the premises. Therefore, he contacted Mr Baijoo and said that he had an amount of R50,000 available and explained his requirements. Mr Baijoo said that he would have to have a look at Mr Nair's premises. This he did. During his visit, Mr Nair also pointed out that there was an existing electric fence and alarm system that would sometimes malfunction. He asked if Mr Baijoo could also establish what repairs needed to be done in this regard. A verbal agreement was concluded on this basis. Mr Baijoo departed on the understanding that he would "try and ascertain prices". He knew suppliers personally and, for labour, would use "one or two of his boys".

177. Mr Baijoo started the work on the morning of 4 October 2016, while Mr Nair was away for a funeral, from which he returned on the evening of 5 October 2016. Upon his return he found that the monitor for the cameras had been installed in the garage. Mr Nair objected because he wanted visuals on his monitors and TVs in the house, including the TV upstairs. Installation of the monitor in the garage was in breach of their agreement. Mr Baijoo undertook to investigate the problem.

178. The first time that he heard that Bosasa was involved in the installation was when Mr le Roux testified in the Commission in January 2019. The evidence came as a shock to him because the only person he dealt with was Mr Baijoo.

179. Mr Nair asserted that a Chief Magistrate does not have any role to play in the awarding of contracts and tenders. There had been a fire at the court after which the Chief Justice had requested him to play a leadership role in getting the court back to an optimum level of functioning. Only at that point did he have some engagement with some service providers in "Steercom" meetings. Aside from this role, "any decision relating to finance . . . is a departmental issue" where the court manager must give final approval. Of course, the court manager would seek out his opinions on these matters as head of court and chief magistrate and report to him. That was as far as it went. By 2011, he had already delegated the function of chairing the Steercom meetings to the senior magistrate and the work to address the fire was completed around 2012, well before his private dealing with Mr Baijoo.

180. In response to a question from the Chairperson, Mr Nair confirmed that the equipment that had been installed was still at his premises. He had never paid for it. He declined to pay on the basis that Mr Baijoo "had the duty to perform first. I was fully within my right to withhold payment until he did what he ought to have done". Further, he insisted that he was unaware of any involvement by Bosasa / Sondolo IT. Mr Nair confirmed that he was aware that Mr Baijoo worked for Sondolo IT but was unaware that Sondolo IT was a subsidiary of Bosasa. While he was aware that Sondolo IT was the DOJCD's CCTV provider, he only knew Bosasa to be the service provider in terms of security guards at the court.

181. Mr Nair pointed to his concession that, following the fire at the Magistrates' Court he may have been in a meeting with Mr Mathenjwa. However, regarding the meetings as described in paragraph 4 of Mr Mathenjwa's statement to the Magistrates Commission he said he was "unaware of and they did not happen". Mr Mathenjwa denies that he instructed Mr Agrizzi to do anything about the security installation at Mr Nair's residence.

182. In his affidavit in response to a Regulation 10(6) directive from the Commission, Mr Mathenjwa repeated and confirmed the contents of his statement to the Magistrate's Commission. Mr Mathenjwa explained that it was common practice for him to report back to Mr Agrizzi as the COO on the outcome of operational meetings he attended and that the meeting at the office of Mr Nair was no different. He gave feedback to Mr Agrizzi and, in doing so, drew attention to the concerns raised by Mr Nair. Mr Agrizzi did not foresee a problem in evaluating the system and would take the matter further.

183. Mr Nair was asked whether he understood Mr Baijoo to have his own company. Mr Nair said he did not. Because of Mr Baijoo's function at court, he was aware of his position as an employee of Sondolo IT. However, he engaged him as one might engage a family member who, for example, worked at an air-conditioning company, to install an air conditioner over the weekend in his private capacity.

184. Mr Nair was asked whether there was any arrangement insofar as a pre-payment or a deposit was concerned to enable Mr Baijoo to purchase the required equipment. There was not. When Mr Baijoo left him after their initial meetings, he understood that he was still sourcing the equipment. Mr Nair was questioned about the exchange of "WhatsApp communications" with Mr le Roux. A possible explanation for this, he suggested, was that it might have been that he complained to Mr Baijoo and Mr Baijoo asked him to call his technician.

185. Mr Nair was asked whether he had ever approached the DOJCD regarding his security problem. He said that he had done so but had been informed that there was no policy to provide for acting judges or magistrates hearing serious crime cases. In the circumstances it would have taken a year if he had pursued the route of a special motivation. He therefore did it privately.

186. Finally, Mr Nair drew the Chairperson's attention to affidavits deposed to by Mr le Roux in 2017 and 2018, which were attached as annexures to an affidavit of Mr Agrizzi wherein Mr le Roux sets out the special project beneficiaries and in doing so, makes no mention of Mr Nair.

Department of Home Affairs

The Lindela contract

187. Lindela is a detention and repatriation facility for undocumented migrants owned and managed by Bosasa Properties (Pty) Ltd under the authority of the DHA. The initial tender for the management of Lindela was awarded to another subsidiary of Bosasa, Leading Prospect Trading 111 (Pty) Ltd for a period of ten years.

188. Mr Vorster testified that Bosasa was paid per person detained at Lindela and he was instructed by Mr Watson to improve the Lindela figures so that "we could pay Riekele Construction for all the work that was done". The facility had enough beds for 5,000 migrants, but in approximately 2004 Bosasa was able to raise the number of occupants to 7,000. This was to be achieved by purchasing two buses and six trucks that were built to look like large versions of those used by the SAPS to transport prisoners between the police cells and court. Bosasa then provided the police with two private security teams to assist with transporting people to Lindela. When Mr Vorster started at Bosasa, they were paid R28.00 per person per day at Lindela. By the time he left Lindela in 2006, it had increased to R45.00 per person per day. The number of occupants at the facility increased over the festive season because migrants could not be deported using Transnet trains over this period.

189. Given that Mr Vorster headed up the facility, he was able to comment that Bosasa "was doing very well from Home Affairs". The DHA paid their invoices by cheque during this time. In 2006, the DHA's annual budget for Lindela was depleted within six months. This necessitated an additional R120 million being allocated to the DHA by the Minister of Finance.

190. Mr Vorster testified that when Mr Arthur Fraser became DG for Home Affairs, he was under pressure to explain why the DHA budget was utilised in a short space of time. To address this, Mr Fraser issued an instruction that Bosasa would not be permitted to transport people from the SAPS or assist the SAPS in their special operations to "catch" illegal immigrants. Thereafter, Mr Vorster used police reservists to drive the Bosasa vehicles to bring people into the facility. Mr Fraser stopped this practice and by 2007, the occupant count at Lindela was approximately 50% less.

191. Mr Vorster described Mr Watson as being upset by the decrease in the number of occupants and Mr Vorster was subsequently transferred to Bosasa technical division.

The review of the Lindela contract

192. Under the leadership of Minister Nosiviwe Mapisa-Nqakula, the contract for the management of Lindela came under review at the insistence of the DHA. Mr Wakeford describes this review as occurring in 2007 and as part of a turnaround strategy which involved large-scale restructuring of the DHA. The purpose of the review was to reduce costs at Lindela given that the DHA had since the early 2000's been paying a fixed minimum fee (calculated based on there being 3,500 occupants) irrespective of the number of occupants. Given that Lindela was only accommodating 1,000 people, the Minister considered the fixed fee to amount to wastage.

193. A consulting firm known as Fever Tree Consulting was engaged to conduct the review to determine the scope of the turnaround project and identify a comprehensive set of transformation projects for the DHA, including reviewing and renegotiating existing contracts. In turn, this firm, according to Mr Agrizzi, subcontracted the fee review discussion and negotiations to Mr Aneel Radhakrishna from Akhile Management and Consulting (Pty) Ltd (Akhile). According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Radhakrishna was appointed because Mr Watson and Mr Wakeford decided that they could work with him. This was the first time Mr Agrizzi met Mr Radhakrishna.

194. According to Mr Agrizzi, an agreement was subsequently reached to reduce the contract price at Lindela by approximately R860,000 per month. Mr Agrizzi testified that, following the price reduction, the Lindela contract was extended for another five years. Given that the Lindela contract was subject to public scrutiny, the price reduction assisted in that "it kept everybody quiet".

195. Following this Mr Radhakrishna asserted that an agreement had been reached with Bosasa that he would be paid an amount of R7 million by them for facilitating the extension on favourable terms. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was unaware of this arrangement and approached Mr Watson. Mr Watson was unwilling to pay the R7 million but was willing to pay Mr Radhakrishna a monthly amount of R75,000 for which Mr Radhakrishna was required to submit an invoice. This he did through an agency with a name along the lines of the Wine Merchant Company. These payments were affected by Mr Bonifacio.

196. Mr Wakeford responded to these allegations as follows. He was appointed by the Minister of Home Affairs as Ministerial Turnaround Advisor to oversee the turnaround project. His appointment was through his close corporation and endured for two years from 2007 to 2009. His appointment ended a month before the general elections in 2009. He disclosed his consultancy services to Bosasa. He denied attending or participating in a meeting with Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson concerning the renegotiation of the Lindela contract with the DHA, or with Fever Tree or Mr Radhakrishna. Mr Wakeford denied ever being part of any discussion that Mr Radhakrishna could be managed or where any deal was reached with Mr Radhakrishna to pay him R7 million. Mr Wakeford argued that plain logic made it unlikely that a consultant would be rewarded with R7 million if his efforts cost Bosasa R325,706,422, being the amount that Mr Wakeford calculated to have been saved by the DHA because of the renegotiation of the Lindela contract with Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi was the signatory of all contracts and addenda relating to Lindela. Furthermore, it was Mr Agrizzi that would have met with Mr Radhakrishna to renegotiate the contract. The annual report of the DHA recorded that the renegotiation of the Lindela contract generated a savings for the Department of R7.7 million per annum along with further savings of R68 million and potential future savings of R112 million.

The extension of the Lindela contract

197. According to Mr Agrizzi, apart from the renegotiations and price reduction, Mr Radhakrishna facilitated the extension of the contract. The contract with the DHA was consequently extended for a further five years. There was no tender process undertaken nor Treasury approval obtained for the extension of this contract. Mr Agrizzi testified that more favourable terms were included in the extended contract. The annual gross value of the contract to Bosasa was R93.6 million. Mr Wakeford denies discussing the benefits of an extended contract with Mr Agrizzi.

198. According to Mr Agrizzi, he stopped the payments to Mr Radhakrishna in and around 2015 given that (i) Bosasa was under scrutiny from the banks; and (ii) the company could not afford the monthly payments due to cash flow issues. Mr Agrizzi told Mr Radhakrishna that he would be assisted with an alternative until "things came right". Bosasa assisted Mr Radhakrishna with rebranding Akhile.

199. Reverting to Mr Wakeford's version of events, he testified that there were two addenda to the original Lindela contract concluded in 2005, although he was not part of the negotiations. These addenda, known as the "Second and Third Addendums" were concluded on 18 February 2008 and 13 March 2009, respectively. Mr Wakeford pointed out that the "extension" referred to in the contract, was (i) only to be determined by the DHA, six years after the signing of the Third Addendum; (ii) a decision to be made six years after Mr Wakeford and Mr Radhakrishna were no longer connected to the DHA in any way, and (iii) no extension was eventually awarded to Bosasa in 2015. Mr Wakeford testified that Mr Agrizzi attempted to repurpose the demands he made of the DHA in 2007, i.e., that he would only consider reducing the monthly invoice to the DHA on condition that the original contract be extended for five years. At this time, the recommendation was that the DHA should only consider a three-year potential renewal subject to performance. Ultimately, Mr Agrizzi was not afforded the extension he demanded.

200. Mr Wakeford stated that, the price after renegotiations represents an immediate decrease in billing of R2,261,578 monthly, R27,138,936 annually. Bosasa did not increase this price by CPIX for the following five years (despite being contractually entitled to do so). Mr Wakeford tabulated the "actual" prices billed by Bosasa and compared them to what would have been billed by Bosasa had the renegotiation of the original contract not transpired. This exercise was for the period 2009 to 2015 when the contract expired and Mr Wakeford claimed it demonstrated that the true financial saving by the DHA over this period amounted to R325,706,422.

201. Mr Agrizzi stated that the turnover billing pre- the negotiation was approximately R7,894,120.00 with a profit margin of 35% on average yielding between R2,600,000 to R2,900,000 a month. Post the negotiation, the turnover dropped to R7,560,130 but because of reduced occupancy levels and reduced costs related to the operation thereof, the profit margin increased to between 55 and 61%, yielding "a net-profit contribution on average between R4,100,000 to R4,300,000 per month".

202. Mr Agrizzi alleged that, to disguise the actual profits from the directors and the DHA, Mr Watson created ingenious ways to dilute the profits by raising intercompany charges from non-performing entities and therefore profits in high-value contracts like Lindela were diluted. These included fictitious costs relating to security (which was provided by employees on the payroll), rentals (charged by Bosasa Properties), management fees and software.

203. Insofar as Mr Radhakrishna was concerned, Mr Wakeford stated that Mr Radhakrishna was only one member of a team of people responsible for negotiating savings at the DHA. All statutory powers remain vested in the accounting authority being the DG and his subordinates. Mr Wakeford claimed that Mr Agrizzi approached Mr Radhakrishna in October 2009 to enquire if Akhile could provide business advisory services in the negotiation of the terms of Kgwerano Phakisa's fleet management contracts with the Eastern Cape Government. A proposal was sent to Mr Agrizzi on 8 October 2009 detailing the work to be performed. Mr Agrizzi requested Mr Wakeford's input on this proposal.

Mr Radhakrishna

204. Mr Radhakrishna joined Akhile in 2007. He is the CEO. Akhile was appointed by a firm called Fever Tree which was engaged by the DHA for services regarding the DHA's turnaround project. Akhile's provided Fever Tree with consulting services on various projects including SITA, Telkom, SAPO, XPS/SkyNet Courier Company, Nthwese/ Double Ring, Government Printing Works and Lindela. Double Ring and Lindela had existing contracts in place with the DHA at the time, which required renegotiation. The primary focus was for the DHA to receive cost savings and increased service delivery. Mr Radhakrishna pointed out that renegotiation of existing contracts did not require a tender process, nor did it require any National Treasury involvement or approval.

205. Mr Radhakrishna referred to the Lindela negotiations Fever Tree report of 4 December 2007 which reflects that Bosasa had offered cost reductions on the Lindela contract on the condition that the DHA extended the contract by five years, whereas Fever Tree recommended that no extension beyond three years be considered. Mr Radhakrishna confirmed that, ultimately, Bosasa conceded to the cost reductions without accepting any extension of the initial period of the contract.

206. Mr Radhakrishna confirmed that the negotiations pertaining to the Lindela contract were held with Mr Agrizzi and culminated in the conclusion of the second and third addenda to the initial Lindela contract of 2005. Both the addenda were signed by Mr Agrizzi as the authorised signatory of the service provider, being Leading Prospect Trading (Pty) Ltd, on 18 February 2008 and 13 March 2009 respectively. Mr Radhakrishna stated that none of the terms of the addenda were beneficial to Bosasa – all the terms of the addenda were to the benefit of the DHA.

207. Mr Radhakrishna addressed Mr Agrizzi's allegation that when the purported R7 million that was supposed to be received by Mr Radhakrishna from Bosasa for renegotiating the extension of the Lindela contract was not forthcoming, Mr Watson agreed to pay him monthly. He pointed out that Mr Agrizzi's oral evidence on this issue was contradictory: initially Mr Agrizzi said that he approached Mr Watson believing that Mr Radhakrishna should not be entitled to any payment, and that Mr Watson told him that Mr Radhakrishna should not be paid R7 million but should instead be paid monthly. Subsequently Mr Agrizzi says that he in fact proposed to Mr Watson that Mr Radhakrishna be paid monthly.

208. Mr Radhakrishna explained that the use of bank account of Distinctive Choice Wines to receive payments for Bosasa was because he did not wish to involve his Akhile co-directors in fees received for work performed in his personal capacity for Bosasa in 2011. He stated that that there is no logical basis for the contention he sought to disguise that the payments were from Bosasa, given that Akhile had already received consulting fees from Bosasa in November 2009, eighteen months before Distinctive Choice Wines ever received any payments from it. Mr Radhakrishna states that the fees received by Akhile and himself personally through Distinctive Choice Wines were not related to the renegotiation of the Lindela contract but were for various engagements for consulting work performed relating to introducing Bosasa to opportunities in the oil and gas industry, consulting work on e-learning projects for the Gauteng Department of Education and introducing Bosasa to opportunities in e-health.

209. Mr Radhakrishna referred to an allegation in Mr Agrizzi's replying affidavit to Mr Wakeford that prior to the renegotiation process, the pricing structure was approximately R8,900,000 per month and the average occupancy at Lindela exceeded 3,200 persons per day. After the renegotiations, the occupancy decreased to approximately 1000 people per day, yet the monthly amount payable reduced by only a nominal amount of R7,500,000. Mr Radhakrishna stated that the ultimate savings to the DHA would have been R2,169,693.50 per month or R134,520,997 over the 62-month period.

210. Mr Radhakrishna summarised his assertions as follows. Mr Agrizzi's accusations against him are untrue. The Lindela contract extension never transpired. Bosasa remunerated him for his work as an independent consultant. There was never any conflict of interest. Mr Agrizzi has sought to use the Commission to serve a personal agenda he has against his former employer for retrenching him and against Mr Radhakrishna for declining his advances.

Department of Education

211. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Mathenjwa employed a technician called Mr Bheki Gina whose sister worked at the Department of Education and had numerous contacts within the Provincial Education Department in the Northern Cape. A contract was issued without a tender for the provision of CCTV and access control for the offices of the Department of Education for an estimated R10.5 million. Mr Agrizzi explained that they tried to keep him out of the loop on this tender, because he was just about to resign for the first time.

212. Mr Mathenjwa approached Mr Agrizzi at one stage and mentioned that he had established a relationship with Mr Gina's sister who could procure additional business via the Department of Education and other departments in the Kimberley region. This discussion with Mr Agrizzi was precipitated by a concern Mr Agrizzi had with Mr Gina's performance in the company. At that stage, Mr Mathenjwa requested Bosasa to provide a bribe. Mr Agrizzi reminded Mr Mathenjwa that protocols required that he should be dealing with Mr Watson in terms of the formal arrangements.

213. When asked whether he was aware of any bribe money that was actually paid, Mr Agrizzi testified that there was an amount of R1.25 million that was paid out to the sister of Mr Gina. Mr Mathenjwa managed the project, and he handled the bribery. Mr Agrizzi was aware of this because Mr Mathenjwa showed him the costings and because they had made provision for the R1.25 million. In other words, the bribe money was included in the contract price.

Universal Service and Access Agency of South Africa (USAASSA) school tablet and connectivity project

214. Mr Agrizzi testified that a few years previously he had been involved with Sunward Park High School in implementing an e-learning facility where iPads were provided to learners. Mr Agrizzi was then approached by Mr Fezikile Mzazi who was a director at Sondolo IT. Mr Mzazi mentioned to Mr Agrizzi that he had contacts within the USAASSA, which is an SOE established under the Electronic Communications Act 36 of 2005 to provide digital education and which had been given the contract to provide iPads for schools in Gauteng. Mr Agrizzi described this as being a major contract.

215. An initial, informal, and underhand agreement was concluded between Mr Mzazi and the procurement personnel to ensure that lucrative portions of the tender would be allocated to Sondolo IT. This was done for an initial illegal sum of R500,000 which was paid in cash. Mr Agrizzi was present in the vault when this cash was handed over to Mr Mzazi. This tender was subsequently cancelled or it did not perform because USAASSA had been awarded a total of ten schools with maintenance contractors running and they just continued paying the contract.

216. Pursuant to the contract being awarded, a meeting was arranged by Mr Watson with the accounting officer at USAASSA whose name Mr Agrizzi could not recall. During this meeting, the accounting officer was categorically told that he would be looked after financially. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the extension of the existing contracts and other opportunities. The accounting officer accepted the offer to work together. Mr Agrizzi did not know what had transpired with this contract since then.

Department of Transport

217. Mr Agrizzi's dealings with the fleet management aspect of Bosasa and its associates was recorded as being limited in Mr Agrizzi's Supplementary Affidavit. At that stage, Bosasa employed the services of Mr Vicus Luyt and Mr Alan Chapman to deal with the fleet management and to establish the necessary call centres. Mr Watson "utilised the employees of a Transnet related company known as HSA to establish a fleet management subsidiary called Kgwerano".

218. Kgwerano, Mr Agrizzi was informed, was originally a joint venture between Mr Itu Moraba, Mr Brian Gwebu and Wesbank, a subsidiary of FNB. Kgwerano Financial Services provided fleet management services for senior management in government on an RT62 Contract and managed 15,000 vehicles for government. These vehicles were to be driven by senior government officials.

219. Eventually Mr Watson decided to buy Mr Moraba and Mr Gwebu's shares in respect of which he paid R20 million. The payment for the shares was initially reflected as a loan in the Bosasa financial statements as Mr Watson did not want to incur tax charges.

220. Mr Agrizzi was told by Mr Leshabane that the contract awarded to Kgwerano had been pre-arranged and was unlawful. At that stage, Leshabane was not involved in Kgwerano and had a major issue with it. Mr Leshabane told Mr Agrizzi that they were paying a certain "Mlungise" at the Department of Transport a substantial amount of money for this contract. The amounts were collected for Gwebu from Mr Watson's vault in cash.

221. Coming to Mr Vorster's evidence in relation to Kgwerano, he testified that in July 2011 he was called to a meeting with Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson and told to fix the problem with the Kgwerano contract as they were running at a loss of R2 million a month. Mr Vorster was therefore appointed Head of Operations of Kgwerano Financial Services and was responsible for "everything" including dealing with clients, overseeing the operations in every province, and having all the call centre managers' report into him. He stated that he was able to turn the company around within three months and, by the time he left around the beginning of November 2017, the loan account that Bosasa had with Kgwerano was nearly R19 million. Mr Agrizzi's evidence does not, however, refer to Mr Vorster being responsible for Kgwerano.

Department of Social Services in the North West Province

222. Mr Agrizzi had the opportunity to give further evidence about the relationship between Bosasa and the North West Province. He recalled two women, Ms "Kgasi" and Ms "Chidi" to whom he had been introduced. Upon gaining access to his archived emails, he was able to identify one of them. In this regard, Mr Agrizzi explained that Ms "Chidi" appears to be a Ms Matshadisa Cordelia Mogale (Ms Mogale), a former HOD at the Department of Social Development (DSD) in the North West. Mr Agrizzi's supplementary affidavit refers to Ms "Kgasi" as a former Chief Director at the DSD in the North West. Mr Agrizzi explained that both these individuals were government officials in the North West in Mahikeng and it was Mr Dlamini who introduced Mr Agrizzi to them. Mr Agrizzi said that at a later stage Ms Mogale sent her CV to Mr Agrizzi when she was leaving the North West Department because things were "hotting up" in an investigation against her.

223. In an affidavit filed in response to a Regulation 10(6) directive, Mr Dlamini confirms that Ms Matshidiso Kgasi was the former Chief Director of DSD and Ms Mogale was the former HOD in the North West Province. Mr Dlamini denies ever introducing Mr Agrizzi to Ms Kgasi. Mr Dlamini admits that he introduced Mr Agrizzi to Ms Mogale after a contract had been awarded to Bosasa's Youth Development Centres, of which Mr Dlamini was a national trainer and was later promoted to the position of director of professional services and operations. Mr Dlamini alleges that he introduced Mr Agrizzi to Ms Mogale in the ordinary course of business of the Youth Development Centres. He further alleges that Mr Agrizzi had requested a copy of Ms Mogale's CV because she was an Advocate and Mr Agrizzi believed that he could employ her based on her qualifications. Mr Dlamini requested that Ms Mogale forward her CV to him and he, in turn, sent it to Mr Agrizzi. Mr Dlamini denies that there was anything untoward in his reasons or intentions when introducing Ms Mogale to Mr Agrizzi.

224. According to Mr Agrizzi when he met Ms Kgasi and Ms Mogale they discussed the need to provide software to raise funding for electioneering purposes. Mr Agrizzi referred to this as being a laundering type of system. For this arrangement, the North West Province would pay Bosasa R4.5 million. Another meeting was to discuss the fencing at one of the facilities and a security system.

225. Mr Agrizzi explained that, when a contract was awarded for the North West, Bosasa's fee was calculated as being inclusive of all services. However, they would sometimes receive messages that more money was needed for electioneering and Mr Dlamini would then raise an invoice for software. This was recorded as a once-off cost so that government was not burdened with a month-to-month cost. It was a simple way of raising money because nobody could prove that the software was not delivered given that the software was already at the facility and working. In response, Mr Dlamini alleges that Mr Agrizzi is not telling the truth. He denies any wrongdoing in relation to the contract awarded to Bosasa's Youth Development Centres. He alleges that the DSD had purchased software and owned it. Mr Dlamini alleges that if there was any inflation of invoices or drawing of cash for purposes of bribery, he was never aware and was not involved. According to Mr Dlamini, he was not authorised to engage in any financial negotiations, but that Mr Agrizzi alone was authorised to negotiate, sign, or authorise the costing in respect of any tenders. Mr Dlamini maintained that Mr Agrizzi was responsible for the inflated invoices or the bribing of officials. Mr Dlamini denies ever taking any cash to or from anyone.

Department of Health, Mpumalanga Province

226. In November 2016 Mr Agrizzi was informed by Mr Gumede, Chairperson of the Bosasa Group at the time, that he had been successful in negotiating a contract for hospitals in Mpumalanga.

227. At that stage Mr Gumede wanted to arrange payment for the co-ordinator or the person who had worked on the contract for the DOH as he had promised a success fee to this person. Mr Agrizzi was annoyed to hear this because he had just returned to Bosasa under the promise that things were going to change. He, therefore, voiced his opinion to Mr Watson and said that this should not be entertained. Mr Agrizzi stated that his relationship with Mr Gumede had been good up to that stage. However, their relationship began breaking down. Mr Gumede then raised his discontent with Mr Agrizzi to Mr Watson.

228. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was led to believe that an amount was in fact paid to "the person" and that it was requested that Bosasa attend to the servicing of his vehicle, which Mr Watson approved. Mr Agrizzi stated that he refused to sign the invoice for the servicing of the vehicle and told Mr Vorster to take it either to Mr Watson or Mr Gumede. Mr Agrizzi thought that the repairs to the vehicle were considerable.

229. The person referred to in Mr Agrizzi's testimony appears to be a Mr MS Netshishivhe who was referred to in Mr Vorster's evidence. Mr Vorster stated that in May 2016 he was approached by Mr Gumede with an instruction to assist with fixing Mr Netshishivhe's Isuzu bakkie. His understanding was that Mr Netshishivhe sat in the security cluster of the Mpumalanga province and had influence over the contracts with the hospitals. The final quote for the repairs was R29,239.79. This cost was booked against one of the Bosasa vehicles.

230. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson signed this contract, and this was one of the exceptions to his rule not to put his signature on anything. Mr Agrizzi believed this was done because he was testing Mr Watson's and the Bosasa directors' patience, seemingly by refusing to sign the document himself.

Randfontein Local Municipality

231. Mr Agrizzi testified that incidents of corruption also occurred at a municipal level. This was prevalent at the Randfontein Local Municipality where, at times, tenders were not even issued. Instead, the Municipality used emergency type provisions instead of tender processes even though the value of these contracts were more than R10 million.

232. Mr Agrizzi testified that there were numerous irregularities that occurred within the Randfontein Municipality. For some time, Mr Agrizzi avoided doing any business with the municipalities even though they had been offered security contracts. Directors of Bosasa had meetings with municipal managers which Mr Agrizzi refused to attend. He also refused to put in tenders, or he would over-price tenders so that Bosasa had no chance of getting them anyway because he felt it was wrong of the people in the municipal area to put them under such contracts. Of the most recent activity was the installation by Bosasa of security fencing and CCTV access control at municipal buildings. No tender process was followed.

233. In March 2016 an employee of Sondolo IT, Mr Riaan Van Der Merwe, approached Mr Agrizzi to arrange a meeting between the local CEO of Dahua and Mr Andile Ramaphosa. Dahua is a company from China that is a provider of video surveillance products and services that grew exceptionally fast, but Mr Agrizzi refused to utilise their products because he believed the products to be inferior. Even though Mr Agrizzi responded in the affirmative to the meeting request, he did not attend the meeting allegedly held between Dahua and Mr Andile Ramaphosa. He indicated that an email is available to substantiate this. Mr Andile Ramaphosa, in his affidavit filed in response to a Rule 3(3) notice, denies having knowledge of the meeting referred to above, that he was ever contacted by Mr Agrizzi in relation to such meeting and never attended such meeting.

234. At the stage of the discussion with Mr Riaan van der Merwe, Mr Agrizzi had asked for his resignation to be made official and he had written a letter to Mr Biebuyck stating the format in which he had wanted this communication to be addressed to all staff at a board meeting and staff meetings. However, Bosasa refused to do so, and the staff were only notified of Mr Agrizzi leaving in August 2017.

235. The agreement with the municipal person who was involved in this arrangement, was that a proportionate amount of cash be paid to himself in respect of the provision of the systems, as well as a Dahua system being installed at his personal residence at no charge. Mr Agrizzi notes in his Supplementary Affidavit that evidence of this installation can be seen at the property situated at Randfontein. Even though this incident happened after Mr Agrizzi's departure, he was aware of the plan for this prior to him leaving Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi testified that one of the whistle-blowers had told him about this incident as well and that they may give testimony at the Commission. Mr Agrizzi visited the site and the residence of the person in question and can confirm that the Dahua system had been installed at the residence in Randfontein. The address has been supplied to the Commission's investigators.

THE SIU INVESTIGATION AND REPORT

236. In this section, the evidence regarding the events surrounding the SIU investigation into the allegations of the irregular relationships between Bosasa and DCS officials, as well as the irregular award of DCS tenders to Bosasa, is summarised.

237. In 2006, the Public Service Commission (PSC) and the Office of the Auditor General (AG) referred specific allegations relating to contracts awarded to Bosasa to the SIU for investigation. Reference is made in the executive summary of the SIU Report to the surfacing of various allegations in the media relating to the allegedly irregular awarding of contracts by the DCS to Bosasa Operations and its affiliated companies. Mr Oellermann described the role of the SIU as being to identify and investigate maladministration, public monies that are lost, and to recover those monies. He explained that there is a civil element to the SIU investigations, with the primary focus to ensure that maladministration is reversed, and remedies are implemented. Many of the remedies are civil actions, such as setting aside of contracts, recovery of losses and damages.

238. Mr Agrizzi testified that the SIU Report contained information that he was previously aware of and read into the record the information listed in paragraph 33.1 of his Initial Affidavit. He testified that he did not give any evidence or information to the SIU investigators and confirmed that the information in the SIU Report must have come from sources other than him. Mr Agrizzi further testified that he and Mr Watson had discussed the SIU Report and that Mr Watson blamed Mr Taverner, Mr Mansell and Mr Perry for not taking precautionary measures. Mr Watson also told Mr Agrizzi that "everything is under control and that they had to stick to him [Mr Watson] otherwise the future is very bleak".

239. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that the SIU Report only deals with the four contracts but that there are many other contracts tainted with the type of evidence that Mr Agrizzi had given. Mr Oellermann testified that the SIU, during its investigations, came across indications of wrongdoing other than those defined in the Proclamation. The indications of wrongdoing were significant and involved Bosasa and other government departments, including the DHA and ACSA. A request to the President to extend the scope of the Proclamation to include these issues was not made.

Implementation of the SIU Report's recommendations

240. Mr Oellermann testified that, to the best of his knowledge, and apart from the disciplinary proceedings instituted against Mr Gillingham, he was not aware of any recommendations that were implemented by the DCS after the SIU Report being issued. Other than the communication with the DCS related to the disciplinary proceedings of Mr Gillingham, the DCS did not respond to the SIU after receipt of the Report. Mr Oellermann testified that he had been advised that the contracts between Bosasa and the DCS continued, and were extended, notwithstanding the submission of the SIU Report to the DCS.

241. The SIU, because of the findings in the Report, convened a meeting with the NPA and handed over a copy of the Report and its annexures. Mr Oellermann clarified that the role of the SIU is to investigate a matter in terms of the relevant Proclamation, and to hand over evidence of criminality to the relevant prosecuting authority. At subsequent meetings with the NPA, the SIU gave several presentations where they set out the evidence and how they had gathered it and reached their conclusions. The SIU also handed over all the evidence that they had in their possession to the NPA. He said that if the NPA was satisfied that a crime had been committed that needs to be investigated or prosecuted, the SIU would embark on the process of handing over all evidence and providing the NPA with everything that they need for a criminal docket to be registered.

242. Furthermore, Mr Oellermann testified that although they had regular meetings with the NPA initially, concerns were raised by the NPA indicating that they needed to discuss the concerns internally. A few more presentations were conducted after that, but by the time Mr Oellermann left the SIU in October 2012, a case had not been registered and there was not much momentum on the investigation. Mr Oellermann described it as unique that the matter has taken ten years to be prosecuted.

Attempts to discredit the SIU investigation

243. Mr Oellermann described an incident where he was approached by a Captain from the Crime Intelligence Services in Gauteng, during his investigation into Bosasa. The Captain, whose name Mr Oellermann could not recall, wanted to see him specifically. He advised Mr Oellermann that he had been informed by a source in Bosasa that they had a list of the investigators that were conducting the investigation and that they knew their identities. He told Mr Oellermann that they were trying to acquire more personal information about them and that there was going to be an attempt to discredit the investigation team and Mr Oellermann himself. According to the Captain, they were trying to obtain Mr Oellermann's bank details so that they could make an anonymous deposit to discredit him and to taint the investigation, and to have Mr Oellermann removed from the investigation. Mr Oellermann reported these allegations to his principals but testified that nothing much happened, and that no anonymous money was deposited into his account.

244. Mr Oellermann explained that due to the sensitivity of the investigation, they would report once or twice a week to their principals and would immediately relay any information they considered important. They had to report regularly to ensure that they were operating within the agreement that had been reached to avoid any further legal challenge.

Bosasa Directors' response to the SIU investigation

245. At the time of the negative exposure of Bosasa in the press surrounding the SIU investigation, Mr Agrizzi and his colleagues would discuss the matter as they walked into the Bosasa office park so that nobody could tape the conversation. Mr Agrizzi confronted Mr Watson in the boardroom threatening to resign after he had been informed that Mr Watson had received advice that Mr Agrizzi should take the fall on behalf of the company in the SIU investigation. This entailed admitting to "absolutely everything" which included that he had corrupted Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham.

246. The Bosasa Directors were of the view that they needed to keep fighting the SIU case, fighting the NPA and fighting the Hawks. Mr Agrizzi recalls their attorney Mr Biebuyck telling him that the matter would never get to trial because the NPA is useless, and they would never be able to prosecute.

247. Mr Agrizzi explained that he had received instructions to place an aggregate of R40 million in attorneys' trust accounts to defend Bosasa although he was told categorically that this might not be enough. At that stage, he realised that he did not have the resources to fight the process by himself. It was for that reason he considered it a real risk to leave Mr Watson.

Leak of the SIU Report to Bosasa

248. Around mid-2009, Mr Agrizzi was sent a copy of the SIU Report by Mr Biebuyck while he was in Paris on holiday with Mr van Tonder and Mr Watson. Mr van Tonder confirmed that he was in Paris with Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi when the SIU Report was released. Mr van Tonder recalled Mr Watson boasting that his name did not appear in the report. He believed this was because Mr Watson did not sign any documents that might incriminate him.

249. Mr Oellermann testified that the only authorised recipients of the SIU Report were the Minister and Acting National Commissioner of the DCS, the Head of the SIU, the SIU Programme Manager and the SIU archive. He confirmed that, if the SIU Report came into the hands of Bosasa at any stage, it would have been entirely unlawful. Mr Oellermann did not know how the SIU Report came to be in the possession of Mr Agrizzi or members of the public but confirmed that the SIU did not distribute the Report to any other entity or individual. Mr Oellermann testified further that within a day or two after the SIU Report had been delivered to the DCS, he received a telephone call from a journalist who indicated that he had a source within Bosasa which had informed him that the SIU Report was at Bosasa and was being discussed by the executives.

250. Mr Oellermann described measures taken by the SIU to ensure that it would be difficult for the Report to be provided to an unauthorised person which included: separating the entire investigation team from the rest of the SIU in a separate part of the building; forbidding any discussion of the matter with any colleague at the SIU; the investigations team reported directly to their principals, and Head and Deputy-Head of the Unit; restricting information sharing (including printing the report), delivering a hard copy to the DCS offices in Pretoria (no electronic copies were provided); meeting with recipients of the Report prior to delivery where SIU emphasised the importance of ensuring confidentiality of the report due to the sensitivity and the various legal challenges brought by Bosasa.

251. Mr Watson asked Mr Agrizzi to arrange a meeting to discuss the SIU Report with Mr Biebuyck. The meeting with Mr Biebuyck resulted in people being given certain responsibilities in the contemplated prosecution of Bosasa. Mr van Tonder needed to deal with the banks, the financing and cash-flow of the business to ensure sufficient funds for legal fees. Mr Agrizzi was responsible for all legal aspects in conjunction with Mr Biebuyck. Mr Watson took responsibility for handling the current political dynamics.

The SIU Report and criminal charges brought against certain individuals

252. Mr Oellermann confirmed that Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham, Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and certain companies known to be part of the Bosasa Group were named as accused persons in a charge sheet served in 2019. In response to a question from the evidence leader, noting that other Bosasa officials are absent from the list of accused persons, Mr Oellermann responded that Mr Watson is not mentioned in the SIU Report because the SIU never had an opportunity to interview him.

253. According to Mr Oellermann, at the time of issuing the Report, the SIU had wanted to investigate the matter further and did not have enough evidence to put Mr Watson's name in the Report. Although the SIU had received information that Mr Watson was aware of what was going on at all times and in fact was at the forefront of the irregularities that had been identified, the SIU never had an opportunity to test the allegations with Mr Watson. The persons that were interviewed told the SIU that Mr Watson never signed anything, never sent an email, always kept his nose clean and did not even use the computer that was in his office – the SIU felt that the evidence needed to be investigated further before they could approach Mr Watson. During this period Mr Watson dies on a car accident.

254. Mr Oellermann testified that the charges brought against Mr Agrizzi and others in February 2019 following the evidence of Mr Agrizzi at the Commission, substantially relate to the SIU Report and that in the main the charge sheet is based on this Report. Mr Oellermann highlighted two exceptions in the charge sheet, which in his view were not dealt with in the SIU Report, namely:

    254.1 Charges relating to payments and gratification to Mr Mti (accused number 1) for flight tickets, car rental services, accommodation, and cash payments over the period May 2004 to July 2015;

and

254.2 Charges for money laundering and the payment of R62,796 for travel expenses relating to a trip to Europe undertaken by Mr Gillingham (accused number 2) and Ms Teresa Gillingham.

255. In relation to the delay in bringing charges based on the SIU Report, Mr Oellermann testified that there would have been certain procedural issues that would need to be dealt with for the evidence in the SIU Report to be admissible in terms of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 and certain further investigations to be done, but that he found the delay of ten years incomprehensible.

The NPA - Adv Nomgcobo Jiba and Adv Lawrence Mrwebi

256. In this section of the summary, the evidence alleging that Bosasa paid certain individuals within the NPA to assist it by providing information related to the ongoing investigations into and possible prosecution of Bosasa and related entities is addressed.

257. Around 2009/2010, Mr Agrizzi accompanied Mr Watson to a meeting with Mr Mti at his residence where they had an informal discussion about the SIU investigation into Bosasa and potential criminal charges. They discussed what had been reported in the media and what was happening in the NPA. These meetings generally took place once a month.

258. Mr Agrizzi testified that at the meeting, Mr Mti was aware of the Hawks and the NPA's investigation and suggested that Bosasa needed to pay certain individuals within the NPA so that they could assist Bosasa. The assistance was in the provision of information as well as to interfere with the investigation. Mr Mti also had documentation that had been provided to him after he had met with various people. Mr Agrizzi further testified that Mr Mti and Mr Watson made it clear that packages needed to be made up for certain people on an urgent basis. The names that were mentioned at the meeting were Adv Jiba, Adv Lawrence Mrwebi and Ms Jackie Lepinka.

259. Mr Agrizzi said that Mr Mti indicated that he met with Adv Jiba and Ms Lepinka who, he said, provided him with detailed information about the status of the investigation and the prosecution. Mr Mti would mention to Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson that the ladies were "with me", as a reference to their co-operation. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Mti said that Adv Mrwebi did not attend these meetings. The updates provided by them, according to Mr Agrizzi, were very accurate because they would receive two sets of updates and the update from Mr Mti was always accurate. Mr Agrizzi testified that in return, according to Mr Mti, these three officials would get the cash monthly.

260. According to Mr Agrizzi, the arrangement started in around 2010. Adv Jiba would be allocated R100 000 per month, Ms Lepinka would be allocated R20 000 per month and Adv Mrwebi would be allocated R10 000 per month. When Mr Agrizzi asked why Adv Mrwebi received less than Ms Lepinka, he was informed that Ms Lepinka was far more active and far more important than Adv Mrwebi and that he was calm and happy if he received his R10 000 and would not interfere in anything.

261. Adv Jiba denied the allegations made against her. She denied that she ever met with Mr Mti as alleged or at all. According to Adv Jiba, she was a Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions and was based in the Commercial Crimes Offices in Pretoria and had nothing to do with the Bosasa cases in 2009/2010. Adv Jiba, in her affidavit filed in terms of Rule 3(4), denies receiving cash in the amount of R100 000 monthly, or any amount at whatever frequency, in return for updates or the status of the investigation. In response to Adv Jiba, Mr Agrizzi's affidavit alleges that Mr Mti informed him that the staff from Bosasa handling the VIP transport were transporting Adv Jiba in a Toyota Fortuner, until Adv Jiba informed Mr Mti that she preferred a Mercedes Benz. As a result of the request and Adv Jiba's assistance in her position as acting NDPP, Mr Agrizzi alleges that Bosasa purchased a black E200 Mercedes Benz sedan that was dedicated only for Adv Jiba's use.

262. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Gillingham was extremely anxious about these arrangements. He expressed concern about the NPA "processes". Mr Agrizzi requested that Mr Watson speak to him. Mr Watson did so and explained to Mr Gillingham that he had personally spoken to everybody and that the NPA was under control and everything was sorted out. Mr Agrizzi further testified that there was a discussion between Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham in his presence where Mr Mti advised Mr Gillingham not to be concerned, that he had it all under control and that he was dealing with Adv Jiba, Ms Lepinka and Adv Mrwebi.

263. Approximately a week after the meeting with Mr Mti, Mr Agrizzi was instructed by Mr Watson to take the cash earmarked for Mr Mti as well as cash to be delivered to several other officials, which was to be done monthly. Mr Watson instructed Mr Agrizzi to take extra cash for the persons in the NPA as well. Mr Watson explained to Mr Agrizzi that he had packed the grey security bags in a large plastic haversack, including R100 000 for Adv Jiba (marked Snake), R10 000 for Adv Mrwebi (marked Snail), and R20 000 for Ms Lepinka (marked Jay). Mr Agrizzi testified that there were six bags in the haversack, including for Mr Jolingane, Ms Grace Molatedi, and Mr Mti.

264. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Mti liaised with the persons in the NPA to obtain information and to provide Bosasa with such information, which would be verbal and written, including copies of secret documents, minutes of meetings and various other information sources. The information was given to Mr Watson and then to Mr Agrizzi, or at times Mr Agrizzi would be with Mr Watson and the documents would be handed to them.

265. Adv Jiba filed an application to cross-examine Mr Agrizzi. On 22 June 2021, she resolved not to persist with her application and her request to give evidence before the Commission on the basis that Mr Agrizzi had no personal knowledge of her having received any money.

266. In Adv Jiba's affidavit filed in terms of Rule 3(4), she also dealt with the allegations connecting her to Ms Lepinka. Adv Jiba states that it is not correct that she worked with Ms Lepinka in handling the case or in the manner suggested by Mr Agrizzi at all. According to Adv Jiba, she never "handled" the Bosasa investigation or any investigation in relation to its related companies.

267. In response to a Regulation 10 (6) directive issued by the Chairperson, Ms Jacobeth Lepinka, filed an affidavit in which she admitted that she was Mr Mti's secretary when he was the National Commissioner of the DCS (from September 2001 until November 2006) but denied receiving money from Bosasa and its associates, having been at any stage in her employment with the NPA secretary to Advs Jiba and Mrwebi, and having handed or caused to be handed any documents or information to any unauthorised persons during her employment with the NPA. Ms Lepinka recorded that Mr Agrizzi's allegations implicating her amount to hearsay evidence, and that she has no legal obligation to answer (based on legal advice she obtained).

268. An affidavit in terms of Rule 3(4), dated 16 March 2019, was filed with the Commission. The affidavit was in support of an application to cross-examine Mr Agrizzi and purports to be signed by Adv Mrwebi. The application was dismissed by the Chairperson on 15 June 2021. The application was dismissed following correspondence from Adv Mrwebi to the Commission wherein he stated that he never made this formal application, requesting documentation in this regard. It will not be considered or dealt with further.

Leak of NPA documents to Bosasa

269. The documents attached to Mr Agrizzi's statement as annexures "Q1" to "Q17" were given to Mr Agrizzi by Mr Mti directly or by Mr Watson who had received them first from Mr Mti. Mr Mti informed Mr Agrizzi that he had received the documents from Adv Jiba or when he attended meetings with the persons from the NPA. Mr Agrizzi testified that he had kept the documents at a storage facility away from his residence that he had hired especially to store these documents, together with other documents and hard drives, because he had reached a stage where he had wanted to use the documents "and open it up".

270. Adv Jiba denies having supplied the documents attached to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit to Mr Mti or to any Bosasa official. According to Adv Jiba, the documents were usually in the possession of relevant investigators, police and prosecutors dealing with the cases. During Adv Jiba's tenure as the acting NDPP, Ms Lepinka was responsible for the co-ordination and receipt of reports in cases on which she would be briefed, including Bosasa. When Adv Jiba was reassigned to NPS (after the appointment of Adv Shaun Abrahams), Ms Lepinka was still in the division. According to Adv Jiba, she was never involved in any Bosasa investigation, beyond receiving briefings.

271. Annexure Q3 to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit is a memorandum from Adv Glynnis Breytenbach, then Deputy-Director of Public Prosecutions in the Special Commercial Crimes Unit (SCCU), to Adv Simelane, the NDPP at the time. The memorandum is dated 4 February 2010 and is concerned with the Bosasa investigation and shows that the investigation and prosecution was at that time in the hands of the NPA. The memorandum is a report from Adv Breytenbach to Adv Simelane concerning the progress of the investigation into Bosasa. The final paragraph of the memorandum notes the urgency of dealing with Mr Mti's position as a main suspect, who was then Head of Security for the 2010 World Cup. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that this is consistent with what he knew at the time and the fact that Bosasa had helped Mr Mti in relation to the bid for the security function at the World Cup.

272. The memorandum also states that the Bosasa matter was received by the SCCU directly from the SIU in late November 2009, which is consistent with evidence given by Mr Oellermann before the Commission. The memorandum also references a follow up meeting held by the prosecution team, investigating officer and Mr Oellermann to discuss material in the possession of the SIU and not yet supplied to the SCCU. Mr Oellermann testified that the information contained in the memorandum, including problems regarding the conduct of further investigations and prosecution, would be invaluable in the hands of potential accused persons as it would provide them with information which they could use to attack the process, the investigation and any subsequent prosecution.

273. Mr Agrizzi testified that the facts contained in the leaked documents concerning the progress of the investigation, who was involved and how the investigation was progressing were also confirmed to him by Mr Seopela. Mr Seopela was close to Adv Simelane. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that there were various sources of information that he had and that there was always confirmation of whatever documentation he received and that it would always "collaborate" (presumably meaning to corroborate or confirm or coincide with the information contained in the documents).

274. Mr Oellermann confirmed again that the SIU refers evidence of criminal conduct to the NPA. Mr Oellermann testified that the affidavit he provided with the SIU Report was confirmation of the SIU Report and the referral of evidence of a criminal offence that had been uncovered but was not a complainant's affidavit to initiate a criminal case. Mr Oellermann further testified that such a document in the possession of a potential accused person would provide them with ammunition to attack the investigation.

275. Mr Agrizzi testified that, prior to Bosasa receiving the assistance of Adv Simelane in helping them shut the investigation down, it was very tense in early 2010. Bosasa would receive reports, in writing or verbally, every week or second week. The reports that they received were consistent with the documents that they were given.

276. In response to the various challenges to a successful prosecution raised in the minutes, Mr Oellermann testified that:

    276.1 He was not aware of the unconstitutionality of the SIU Report, as the evidence was gathered in terms of the SIU Act and that the investigation was conducted within the parameters of the Proclamation and the Act. Mr Oellermann confirmed that even if there had been irregularities, the Constitution does not prevent the leading of evidence provided certain groundwork is laid for the admission of that evidence.

    276.2 It seemed to him that a judgment had been made on the admissibility of evidence at an early stage of the investigation without it going through a credible process where it can be properly evaluated.

    276.3 He did not believe it to be a fair comment that the SIU Report cannot hold water in any court and that any presiding officer will not proceed with the Report.

    276.4 He did not believe it to be true that the SIU investigation was not in line with the proper administration of justice without fear, favour or prejudice as the investigating team reported to their principals, were given a mandate to investigate, and did so, and obtained evidence legally in terms of the SIU Act. Mr Oellermann did not believe that they acted outside of the Act or the parameters of the Proclamation. Mr Oellermann denied being on a witch hunt and said, "it would have been within my power to implement a witch hunt in any case at that stage." He confirmed that the team took advice from counsel on several matters and acted in accordance with such advice.

276.5 Mr Oellermann did not understand what was being referred to in the minutes that incorrect sections of the mandate were used to find evidence as, in his view, the Act and Proclamation were clear, and they acted within those boundaries. He further testified that all the affidavits that were obtained were done in accordance with how one would do so legally. Mr Oellermann was not aware of any political vendetta or agenda.

276.6 Mr Oellermann further testified that he was present when Adv Willie Hofmeyr presented the SIU Report to the Portfolio Committee and that he believed the presentation was made towards the end of 2009, prior to the Report being sent to the NPA and the DCS. Mr Oellermann was of the view that the media coverage of the Report had no impact on the investigation. Mr Oellermann testified that the investigative team was a diversity of race and gender.

276.7 Mr Oellermann confirmed that he is not aware of the unconstitutionality of the Report nor any political vendetta or any of the other issues raised which would prevent a successful prosecution.

277. Annexure Q6, on the letterhead of the SCCU dated 17 November 2010, appears to be addressed to the NDPP Adv Simelane and authored by Adv MC de Kock, with the subject being "the Bosasa matter". The purpose of the report is stated to be to apprise the NDPP of the status quo of the SIU Report on Bosasa. The report states that the SIU received information from various and sometimes unreliable sources and made use of the information without verifying facts. It contends that the SIU Report was drafted in a "careless and almost casual fashion" and that the lack of accuracy and precision with the drafting of the SIU Report will give ample opportunity to those seeking fault.

278. Mr Oellerman did not believe it to be correct that the SIU received information from unreliable sources and made use of such information. He explained that through the investigation process evidence and information is evaluated as a matter of course, which is what took place. He believes the report placed the SIU Report in a bad light and would be harmful to the prosecution's case. He also believes that any person who leaked the report to Bosasa must have known that it would harm the prosecution. He also stated that he did not agree with the comments in the report made by Adv de Kock.

279. Further, Mr Oellermann disagreed that the SIU Report was drafted in a careless fashion with a lack of accuracy and precision. He explained that there may have been further investigation to follow but that the purpose of the SIU Report was not to hand over a court-ready criminal case docket for charges to be immediately drawn and prosecution to be initiated. The SIU Report was to identify the areas where evidence of criminal offences had been uncovered and to link the individuals identified as part of the criminal offence and then for the investigation and prosecution to take its course. Mr Oellermann agreed that the person who handed the report to Bosasa would presumably have known expressly that the mere handing over of the report would undermine the prosecution and thus unlawfully assist the accused persons.

280. An information note marked "secret" and dated 17 October 2011 is attached as annexure Q7 to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit. The note is addressed to the commander of the anti-corruption task team the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigations (the DPCI or "the Hawks") and is headed "Progress of Investigation: Bosasa Investigation: PC 5: Pretoria Central CAS 1556/02/2010". The note names witnesses that have been consulted and refers to draft statements being prepared for signature and further states from whom statements were intended to be obtained. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that because of the receipt of the note, he knew who was being consulted, who would testify and from whom statements were going to be taken.

281. Mr Agrizzi also received an unsigned memorandum authored by Adv de Kock of the SCCU dated 28 October 2011 and marked confidential. The memorandum is attached as annexure Q8 to Mr Agrizzi's

Initial Affidavit. The content of the memorandum examines the validity of a subpoena duces tecum that was served on the SIU during February 2011 by the Mail & Guardian newspaper. The conclusion reached in the memorandum is that "there are various levels of argument that could be advanced in support of the view that the subpoena amounts to an abuse of the process of court."

282. Mr Agrizzi explained that the memorandum was provided to Bosasa to use as a mechanism in defending its case. Mr Agrizzi testified that although the memorandum was authored by Adv de Kock, she was beyond reproach and, to his knowledge, was not involved in any interference with the investigation and/or prosecution. The memorandum deals with similar cases to Bosasa and not with Bosasa specifically.

283. Adv de Kock testified that the memorandum attached as annexure Q8 to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit is the same document attached to her affidavit as MDK1. Adv de Kock confirmed that she authored the memorandum following a request from Investigating Officer, Colonel Danie Kriel in October 2011. Colonel Kriel, the Bosasa investigator, asked Adv de Kock to study documents and give her opinion on a subpoena duces tecum dated February 2011. Adv de Kock did so and issued an opinion on 28 October 2011. She has no idea how the memorandum came into Mr Agrizzi's possession. An opinion authored by Advs de Kock and van Rensburg on 1 November 2012 regarding legal issues concerning subpoenas issued in terms of section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977 (as amended), is attached to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit as annexure Q9. Mr Agrizzi received it as part of the series of documents through the irregular arrangements at the NPA.

284. From the investigation into Bosasa, certain subpoenas were issued and Bosasa had an interest in avoiding the execution of those subpoenas. Whilst Bosasa was considering what to do in relation to certain subpoenas that had been issued, they were provided with the opinion authored by Adv de Kock regarding the legality of the very subpoenas which Bosasa had an interest in challenging. The opinion, in conclusion, found that a letter forwarded to Adv Mrwebi was an irregular attempt to review the issuing of subpoenas, avoid the required court appearances by the witnesses and mislead the NPA as to the true facts concerning the legal process.

285. After the release of the SIU Report, subpoenas were issued to Mark and Sharon Taverner amongst others. Mr Agrizzi testified that three subpoenas, specifically came to mind, those issued to Mr Brian Blake, and Mark and Sharon Taverner. Mr Agrizzi further testified that it was standard practice to make sure that there were delays in the witnesses appearing in court. Mr Agrizzi was instructed to meet with Mark and Sharon Taverner and to take steps to delay their appearance as much as possible. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was also instructed to attend every single meeting with them and Mr Biebuyck and make sure that Mr Biebuyck was the attorney of record for them, or whoever Mr Biebuyck agreed to if he did not do it himself. Mr Agrizzi had to ensure that Bosasa was not compromised and insisted that he saw their statements before they were submitted. The Taverners eventually appeared in compliance with the subpoenas after about eighteen months. Mr Agrizzi testified that the responses to the questions put to the Taverners were not necessarily the whole truth.

286. Mr Agrizzi was also in possession of a letter from Advs Mokgatlhe, de Kock and van Rensburg addressed to Adv Mrwebi under the letterhead of the SCCU dated 2 November 2012 about subpoenas issued to Mark and Sharon Taverner. The letter provides information on the status and the legality of the subpoenas from the SCCU.

287. Also provided to Mr Agrizzi by Mr Mti from the NPA was an email authored by Ms Lepinka and sent on 22 November 2012, who was the Manager: Executive Support to the ANDPP. Adv Jiba was the acting NDPP at the time. It is apparent from the preceding email trail that Adv Jiba sought a status report on various cases, including the Bosasa case. Mr Agrizzi testified that he received the document personally in Mr Watson's presence at Mr Mti's house and was told categorically that they could not just isolate and close the Bosasa case, as it would raise too many concerns and so it had to be done as part of five other cases.

288. On 20 November 2012, Ms Palesa Matsi, sent an email indicating the acting NDPP would like to discuss certain matters, including Bosasa, with the addressee's principals on 22 November 2010. Mr Agrizzi did not know who Ms Matsi was.

289. Mr Agrizzi was also in possession of a document addressed to Adv M Mokgatlhe, the acting Regional Head of the SCCU from Adv de Kock dated 26 November 2012 regarding progress on the Bosasa investigation. The report is made four days after the email of Ms Lepinka in which email it was indicated that there is no evidence or prospect of a successful prosecution in relation to Bosasa. Adv de Kock's view, at that stage, was that:

    289.1 The police investigation clearly indicates criminal behaviour on the part of Mr Gillingham, Mr Mansell, Mr Hoeksma and others

    289.2 The investigation is not yet completed, and a charge sheet has not been drafted. Almost 200 statements had been obtained since the start of the investigation, which will take another six months to complete. It is difficult to speculate on the anticipated date of enrolment, but it would definitely be impossible to enrol the matter prior to 14 February 2013; and 289.3 A summary of the nature and quality of the current and still to be obtained evidence could not be provided except to say that it was not anticipated that it would be challenged on any known grounds.

290. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that he received information on or after 26 November 2012 that the investigation and contemplated prosecution was still on the table. According to Mr Oellermann, a further six months to finalise the investigation was a realistic estimate given his knowledge of the matter and the fact that over 200 statements had already been obtained.

291. Adv de Kock testified that around 2012 she was regularly requested to report on the Bosasa matter. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that as of 30 April 2013, the position was that at least one prosecution could occur during 2013 or shortly thereafter and that such knowledge came to his attention despite the earlier contradictory reports. Even though Mr Agrizzi had been provided with a copy of Mr Gillingham's draft charge sheet dated 30 April 2013, Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Gillingham was never charged. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that there are several alleged acts in the charge sheet of which he had given direct evidence before the Commission.

292. Mr Oellermann testified that the information contained in the progress reports would be valuable to a potential accused as it would provide insight into the tracking and progress of the investigation, what is still outstanding and where there might be shortfalls in the investigation and prosecution. Adv de Kock testified that the progress report on the Bosasa investigation, dated 30 April 2013, was prepared by her and that the content is the same as annexure Q13 attached to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit. She explained that she had prepared the report and sent it to the personal assistant of Adv Mokgatlhe, Ms Moja, who transferred the content onto a new letterhead and corrected the formatting.

293. Mr Agrizzi was also provided with a document dated 8 August 2013 titled "Proposed Racketeering Memorandum – confidential document" which document consisted of the draft memorandum, a provisional draft racketeering charge sheet, and a provisional draft list of racketeering activities. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was provided with the document by Mr Mti in mid-August. Through the document Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson had been informed of the identification of the individuals and entities who would be the subject matter of the racketeering charges before the Memorandum was completed. They were also made aware of contemplated charges in relation to racketeering in terms of the Prevention of Organised Crime Act (POCA) before the charges were brought. The document was intended for the attention of Advs Jiba, Mrwebi and Mosing.

294. Adv de Kock testified that she had sent an email on 8 August 2013 to Adv Mokgatlhe with the title "Confidential Email: Bosasa, Gillingham, Mti and Others Racketeering Documents". Three MS word documents were attached to the email, namely "Proposed Racketeering Memorandum, Bosasa and Others, 8 August 2013.doc"; "Provisional Draft Charge Sheet Bosasa Racketeering.doc" and "Provisional List of 149 Racketeering Activities POC and L Mti.doc". Adv de Kock testified further that:

    294.1 She indicated in her email to Adv Mokgatlhe that she had raised concerns about the security of the attached documents.

294.2 At some time prior to sending the email, her investigating officer, Colonel Kriel informed her that documents prepared by the SCCU, such as progress reports, were being leaked. She held a meeting with Colonel Kriel and Brigadier Simon to confront them about who was leaking documents. Adv de Kock testified that they denied leaking the documents and said they did not know who was doing so.

294.3 Adv de Kock explained that the NPA investigation started from the SIU Report, which was used as background and to provide direction to the NPA's investigation. The NPA undertook its own investigations (i) because the SIU Report was prepared for the SIU's own purpose, related more to civil proceedings, and (ii) where there were gaps that had to be met to ensure the criminal standard would be met. Adv de Kock further testified that it was not unusual for the NPA to conduct its own investigation.

294.4 Adv de Kock explained that the number "017514" printed at the top of the email she had addressed to Adv Mokgatlhe was a part of a numbering system that she had implemented after she had been removed from the Bosasa matter in February 2016. At that time, she prepared an index and numbered her working papers to be handed over to the next prosecuting team. Adv de Kock testified that document security and access to the documents were a priority to her because she had heard that Bosasa had destroyed servers during the time of the SIU investigation. As such, she would not work on the original documents and generally worked on scanned documents or photocopies of scanned documents. The number "017514" meant that the document was document number 17 514 (of approximately 22 000 pages). Adv de Kock testified that, after seeing Mr Agrizzi's documents, she recovered this specific email to show that the three attachments to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit actually comprised a single set of documents.

294.5 Adv de Kock confirmed that she was the author of the three documents attached to her email, and that those same, identical documents were in Mr Agrizzi's possession.

295. Adv de Kock confirmed that every document dealt with in her affidavit was identical to the documents presented by Mr Agrizzi to the Commission, which she established by finding those documents she had prepared and sent to Adv Mokgatlhe and others, on her computer. Adv de Kock was unable to say how the documents came to be in Mr Agrizzi's possession.

296. According to Adv de Kock, the documents were all confidential NPA documents which she had marked as confidential as an extra precaution. She confirmed that any person within the NPA would have been aware that to provide the documents to a suspect or a person affected by the investigation would be wrong. Adv de Kock testified that the leakage of the documents, in her knowledge and experience, was not random. She further testified that the possession of the documents by an implicated person would harm the investigation.

297. Although Adv de Kock had previously been told that documents were being leaked, the first time that she saw that specific documents had in fact been leaked was when she was shown the documents by the personnel from the Commission. According to Adv de Kock, she was criticised at the time for being paranoid about her documents and the docket and about people having access to her documents, and people had the attitude that she was "sort of crazy" in this regard. After she became aware that some of the documents relating to the Bosasa matter were being leaked, Adv de Kock took greater precautionary measures in the security and confidentiality of the dockets.

Further attempts to interfere with the NPA investigation and prosecution

298. Mr Agrizzi testified that he attended a meeting with Mr Mti, at his house, in the course of 2013 at which they again discussed what had happened at Mr Mti's meeting with Adv Jiba and Ms Lepinka. During the discussion, Mr Mti wrote instructions down for Mr Agrizzi to take to the legal representatives to provide them with a guideline on drafting of a letter as a basis to challenge the legality of the SIU investigation. The attorneys (Mr Biebuyck) were to draft a letter requesting that the case be closed and that no prosecutions are instituted. Mr Mti's written instructions are attached to Mr Agrizzi's Initial Affidavit as annexure Q16.

299. Mr Agrizzi testified further that the instructions from Mr Mti, following his meeting with Adv Jiba and Ms Lepinka, were: first, to challenge the legality of the SIU Report in its entirety based on the process the SIU followed in obtaining evidence and that the Report needed to be presented to the President first; second, to raise the fact that the fundamental rights of the company and of the individuals in the company had been encroached upon, which was highlighted as the most important argument to be used; third, to question the time period that had lapsed between the initial investigation and prosecution; fourth, the legal basis for the ongoing persecution and harassment; and fifth, to seek relief on how the issue should be resolved going forward.

300. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that, when Bosasa contemplated steps to quash the investigation, it was acting not only in its own interests but also in the interests of Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham.

301. Following his meeting with Mr Mti, Mr Agrizzi took the information to the attorneys and a document was drafted by the attorneys that Mr Agrizzi took back to Mr Mti. The letter was taken to Mr Mti so that he could read and consider it before it was sent to the NPA. It was also taken to Mr Mti to allow him an opportunity to take it back to Adv Jiba and Ms Lepinka to satisfy themselves that it reflected what they had told him.

302. Mr Agrizzi contacted Mr Mti the same evening after he had taken the draft letter to him and Mr Mti told Mr Agrizzi to come to his house the following morning. Mr Agrizzi went to Mr Mti's house the following morning and made notes of their conversation. That note is attached to his Initial Affidavit as annexure Q17. Mr Agrizzi testified that according to Mr Mti, he, Adv Jiba and Ms Lepinka were not happy with the draft letter and so Mr Mti read out to Mr Agrizzi points that needed to be addressed. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was told categorically that the advice emanated from the meeting that Mr Mti had with Adv Jiba after he had shown her the letter drafted by Bosasa's attorneys. At the time, the monthly payments to Adv Jiba, Ms Lepinka and Adv Mrwebi were still being made.

303. On 8 May 2015 Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi went to meet with Mr Mti at his house following a story in the media about Adv Jiba either being suspended or compromised, Mr Agrizzi could not recall the details. Mr Watson emphasised at the meeting that Mr Mti and Adv Jiba were compromised and that Bosasa was at risk. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson proposed how the matter should be handled and said that he was going to see Mr Jacob Zuma. Mr Watson then conducted a role-play and showed Mr Agrizzi and Mr Mti what he was going to say and how he was going to approach the former President. Mr Agrizzi recorded the conversation.

304. The two topics discussed during the meeting were the contemplated prosecution of Bosasa and the involvement of various parties in that prosecution and the so-called "rogue unit" and SARS.

305. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson had the type of relationship with former President Zuma that he could tell him what to do and that he would visit Mr Zuma quite regularly. Mr Agrizzi further testified that Mr Watson was politically influential.

DESTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE

306. In this section of the summary, the evidence relating to Bosasa's attempts to destroy evidence which could implicate it, its employees and stakeholders in unlawful activities is highlighted.

307. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson instructed Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder to fetch all the computers and invoicing books from Blakes Travel and to destroy them. This was confirmed by Mr van Tonder who elaborated that the incriminating documents were those pertaining to the "VIP account". Mr van Tonder explained that destroying this information was necessary given that the SIU had received information that Bosasa had paid for the travel of government officials.

308. Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder testified that the documents and computers were handed to them, and they took these items to Luipaardsvlei Hostel for destruction. Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder confirmed that a tractor was used to dig a hole in which they threw the documents and computers. Thereafter, fuel was poured into the hole and the content was set alight before the hole was covered and a concrete block placed over it. In Mr Agrizzi's evidence, however, he indicated that Mr Ryno Rhoode, who was responsible for gardening, maintenance, and oversight, was tasked to collect petrol and the hole was covered using a tractor operated by Mr Gert van der Bank. This was confirmed in an affidavit deposed to by Mr Christiaan Gerhardus Johannes van der Bank dated 14 March 2019. Mr van der Bank stated that Mr Agrizzi's evidence was true and correct and that Mr Agrizzi had instructed him to close a hole with burned papers and computers inside, at Luipaardsvlei. Mr van der Bank confirmed that he closed the hole with soil.

309. Mr Agrizzi explained that Blake's Travel cooperated with them because it received R1.7 million to R2.2 million a month worth of business from Bosasa. He testified that Blake's Travel knew that they were going to destroy the computers and issued them with blank invoice books to be replicated and filed for auditing purposes.

310. In his affidavit filed at the Commission and in his oral evidence, Mr Blake disputed that Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder took computers from Blake's Travel, buried them, and later replaced them. He stated in his affidavit that he did not recall this happening. Mr Blake stated that, after he had watched Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder's testimony at the Commission, he realised that he had to give further information and contacted the authorities to arrange for the police to image Blake's Travel computers, which was attended to on 4 February 2019. Mr Blake testified that it was not possible for Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder to have taken the computers belonging to Blake's Travel because they are still in possession of all the evidence on the computers and it would have required that the computers be reprogrammed, as a travel agent's computer must have a certain IP address.

311. Mr van Tonder testified that the travel coordinator rewrote the invoices with different information which did not reflect the actual travel that had taken place. This confirmed Mr Agrizzi's evidence that a Bosasa employee was instructed by Mr Watson to rewrite every single travel invoice in Bosasa's records replacing, for example, Mr Mti's name with that of Mr Agrizzi or of another person. That invoice would then be attached and given back to Blake's Travel with the other copy retained in their accounts folder. The new invoices would be used as a basis to counter the fact that a journalist had obtained copies of documents from Blake's Travel that showed that Bosasa used Blake's Travel to facilitate travel arrangements of government officials and others.

312. Mr Agrizzi testified that, after the destruction of the original documents, VIP travel was booked under the account of JJ Venter, which would be reconciled monthly and given to Dr Smith who would reimburse Mr Agrizzi for actual travel used for other individuals.

313. After the destruction of the evidence, Mr Blake was subpoenaed to testify in a matter instituted in the Pretoria High Court by the SIU relating to information, records, documentation, and hard drives that the SIU wanted in relation to dealings with the Bosasa Group of companies. Mr Agrizzi testified that there were various postponements of the subpoena as numerous excuses were given. A meeting then took place at Mr Blake's attorney's office in Randfontein with Mr Biebuyck and Mr Agrizzi, where they tried to intimate to Mr Blake's attorney that he had to postpone and play for time with the SIU. Mr Blake's attorney was not happy and told Mr Biebuyck that he was playing with fire because he was interfering with witnesses. Mr Agrizzi testified that he did not know whether Mr Blake ever testified or if they were successful in their endeavour to prevent the subpoena being carried out. Mr Blake testified that he was subpoenaed in 2014 to provide documents and related information to the Hawks for an investigation that they were conducting into three specific clients of Blake's Travel (including Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham). He cooperated with the investigation, deposed an affidavit and was ready to testify when "the case just disappeared".

314. After Mr Agrizzi's testimony at the Commission, Mr Blake contacted the Hawks and was advised that the original cloning of Blake Travel's server had been stolen or had disappeared. Mr Blake testified that he was advised by Colonel Smit that it was impossible for the evidence to disappear and that the evidence was locked up. In February 2020, an official from the Hawks took a further copy of Mr Blake's computer.

2007 server "crash"

315. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson, after receiving information in respect of the SIU's investigation, instructed an IT specialist and employee of Bosasa to fake a server crash and destroy files. The instruction was given by Mr Watson in Mr Agrizzi's presence to destroy any files that could implicate the company before the investigators could gather evidence. Prior to the destruction of the files, a disaster log was created on the server and Mr Agrizzi circulated a memo in this regard. In addition, the information was preserved on two or three hard drives before its destruction.

316. The Commission's evidence leader referred to a document headed "Bosasa IT Disaster Log 8 November 2007" and enquired whether Mr Agrizzi could indicate where in the document they would be able to find the list of contents, namely the scope of the disaster, the disaster classification, and the recovery strategy. Mr Agrizzi was unable to answer the question and was also unable to assist in respect of the meaning of the content of the document. Later he provided more information on the server crash stating that there was a file server failure or crash and that this resulted in approximately 70% of the data on the servers being lost, Mr Agrizzi said he could attest to the fact that "the crash was, in other words, manipulated".

    316.1 Mr Agrizzi explained that an instruction was issued that the crash should occur, and, notwithstanding this instruction, steps were taken by Mr Agrizzi and others to preserve data. Mr Agrizzi instructed Mr van Tonder to backup and double up on the server and to keep it safe if they needed the information going forward. This occurred in 2007.

    316.2 Mr Agrizzi pointed out that 70% of the data lost was data regarding the tenders of the DCS.

Destruction of evidence before the SIU raid

317. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson contacted him on a Sunday afternoon to instruct him to return to Johannesburg as Mr Watson had received information from Mr Seopela that someone was going to raid the Bosasa office the following day. Mr Agrizzi could not recall whether it was the Hawks or the Scorpions but recalled that Mr Watson instructed him to meet at the office. Mr Agrizzi had to leave the American guests, arrange transport for their return on the Tuesday and drove back to the office. Mr van Tonder testified that, around the time of the SIU investigation, Mr Watson called him early on a Sunday morning to meet him at the Bosasa office. The purpose of this meeting was to "clean up all possible evidence" that might incriminate Mr Watson and Bosasa in unlawful activities given that Mr Watson had been informed that the offices would be raided the next day.

318. Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Watson instructed them to go through all the safes, employee's drawers, etc., to ensure that any possible sources of incriminating evidence were removed and destroyed. Evidence considered to be incriminating included documents relating to all tenders, business dealings with government entities and travel invoices. Mr van Tonder recalled that he and Mr Agrizzi searched for the incriminating evidence and Mr Watson personally went through documents in his walk-in vault. These documents included tender related documents as well as CD storage discs. They later met at Mr Watson's house and Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Watson handed Ms Lindi Gouws a metal box with money.

319. Mr Agrizzi testified that after they had removed the documents, they packed them into the boot of his car and took them to be stored on a farm. Following further media reports on the SIU investigation, Mr van Tonder approached Mr Agrizzi and informed him that Mr Watson had instructed them to go and destroy the documents. Mr Agrizzi testified that he phoned Mr Watson who confirmed the instruction and requested that they do not destroy an agreement signed by Mr Watson and Mr Mti. When Mr van Tonder and Mr Agrizzi took the agreement to Mr Watson, he was visibly relieved, shredded the document by hand, placed it in a Ziplock bag with water and then flushed it down the toilet.

320. According to Mr van Tonder, the information collected during the search of the offices was taken to a farm near Mooinooi in the North West Province where it was stored in safes installed by Bosasa. The information was kept there for approximately two years. Thereafter, Mr van Tonder and Mr Agrizzi collected the documents and CDs and took them to Buffelspoort Dam where they were burnt. Mr van Tonder testified that there was one document that was not destroyed. Although he did not understand the relevance of this document, Mr Agrizzi explained to him that it was an agreement between Mr Watson and Mr Mti. Mr van Tonder confirmed that this document was subsequently handed over to Mr Watson who tore it up and flushed it down the toilet.

321. Mr Agrizzi testified that the raid did not take place and that Bosasa reached an agreement with the SIU that they could attend at Bosasa and copy the servers.

The deletion of files

322. Mr van Tonder testified that towards the end of 2008 and around the time of the SIU investigation, he met with Mr Watson and an engineer at Bosasa, Mr Matthew Lee-Son, and Bosasa's lawyers. After this meeting, he was instructed to make sure all "data documents" on the servers and selected employees' desktops and laptops were deleted. He was instructed to focus on the tenders awarded to Bosasa by the DCS during the period 2004 to 2007. Mr Agrizzi testified that, when he arrived at the office, Mr Watson, and Mr van Tonder were already there. Mr van Tonder and Mr Agrizzi were instructed to go through all the offices and to look for any incriminating evidence relating to the sale of shares agreement in respect of Phezulu Fencing as well as the agreement between Mr Watson and Mr Mti for the payment of money in return for an undertaking from him to favour Bosasa in relation to the awarding of tenders. Mr Seopela had informed Mr Watson that the SIU was looking for this information.

323. Mr van Tonder complied with the instruction and was assisted by Mr Lee-Son, Mr Allan Lee-Son and Mr William Brander. Mr van Tonder later signed a statement (on instruction from Mr Agrizzi) to the effect that the files were deleted during routine maintenance. Mr van Tonder considered this non-essential data but confirmed that the data related to tender specifications for the DCS catering contract. This was the first time Mr van Tonder signed a statement after routine maintenance work.

324. Mr Agrizzi testified that around January 2009, a meeting was arranged between the representatives of the SIU and Bosasa because of the rumours that the SIU was investigating Bosasa. Bosasa sent a communication to the SIU indicating that it had heard via the media that it is being investigated and would like further information regarding the investigation so that it could tender its assistance. Mr Oellermann testified that Bosasa had contacted the SIU and said that they had information that the SIU were going to conduct a search and seizure of their premises. Bosasa approached the SIU through their lawyers, after which they met and arranged for the SIU to get access to their servers to digitally and forensically image. According to Mr Oellermann, whilst it was the SIU's intention to conduct such an operation, it had not yet been determined where and how it was going to be done.

325. Mr Agrizzi testified that the arrangement for the SIU to attend at Bosasa was postponed on instruction of Mr Watson to allow enough time for the IT specialist to remove potentially damaging information. A letter was sent to the SIU requesting a postponement on the basis that Bosasa was busy with month and year-end and could not have the servers checked at that stage. Mr Oellermann testified that Bosasa requested an extension of time at the meeting because someone had to attend a funeral. After the meeting, the agreement was formalised by the SIU issuing a section 5(2)(b) notice to Bosasa. The SIU did eventually make mirror images of hard drives and laptops at Bosasa.

326. According to Mr Oellermann, it was unusual for subjects of a search and seizure to have forewarning of the operation and to persuade those who are going to conduct the operation to hold off for a time so that they can prepare. The danger is that it gives them an opportunity to sanitise the server and be selective as to what can be imaged, so that records pertinent to the investigation would be destroyed and lost. Mr Oellermann testified that Bosasa seemed to have an inside track into the investigation at times, that they would almost know what the SIU were planning and would try to obstruct it. Mr Oellermann said that throughout the investigation, there were regular incidents that occurred where it seemed that Bosasa had a very good idea or knowledge of the investigation's progress and where the SIU was with the investigation. This is the reason, according to Mr Oellermann, why the Head of the Unit decided to separate the Bosasa investigation team and provide them with a dedicated server outside of the SIU environment. Mr Oellermann testified that he raised his suspicions, but that the decision was taken to proceed in that manner after a discussion and after being advised by the cyber forensic expert that if Bosasa did destroy files it would be likely that he would find that they had done so.

327. Mr Oellermann testified that Bosasa had indicated that they had dedicated people in charge of their IT and because of security reasons, only certain people had access and these people were not available. As the SIU did not know the environment they were going into, it was difficult for them to comment on how access was to be given. In Mr Oellermann's experience when executing a search warrant, the cyber expert would be taken with them to shut down the system upon arrival and then image the devices or servers. The service of internal IT would not be required. For this very reason, an expert is brought to do the imaging independently from any interference from the entity whose electronic data is being imaged. Mr Oellermann agreed with the Chairperson that it would have been expected of the SIU to refuse the postponement of the imaging. The problem, according to Mr Oellermann, was that as soon as Bosasa approached them and said that they knew that the SIU wanted to undertake a search and seizure and invited them to do so, the "cat was out of the bag" and they had lost the element of surprise, so it was immaterial whether it was delayed by a few days as Bosasa would have had ample opportunity to sanitise the servers before approaching the SIU.

328. Mr Agrizzi further testified that Bosasa had two servers (for redundancy purposes) with one server as the main server. The other server was linked to the main server. Mr Agrizzi testified that he understood that when something is done on one server, you can monitor it on the other server, that it is a mirror image. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Watson personally arranged with William Brander and Max Leeson to monitor what the representatives of the SIU were looking at and were doing, using the second server. Whilst Mr Malan and other representatives of the SIU were copying the data on the main server, their activity was being monitored on the connected server by William Brandon and Max Leeson. Mr Agrizzi testified that they were also tasked to ensure that they removed information which might damage or implicate Bosasa prior to the mirror image being made.

329. Mr Oellermann testified that Mr Malan is a cyber-forensic expert appointed by the SIU to assist with the imaging and obtaining of digital forensic evidence from Bosasa which was going to be crucial for the investigation. When the SIU team arrived at Bosasa, Mr Oellermann testified that they were met by Mr Agrizzi who took them to the server room. Mr Malan then prepared to image the servers, which was done over the period of a few nights because of the size of the servers. On the second night, Mr Malan informed Mr Oellermann that he could see that there were several files that were missing and that he suspected may have been deleted. When Mr Malan began the analysis of the information, Mr Oellermann testified that Mr Malan reported to him that he had identified software known as 'Eraser' which had been employed on the servers, and that he had identified over 40 000 files that had been intentionally destroyed or deleted from the server.

THE ROLE OF MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE, PUBLIC OFFICIALS AND FUNCTIONARIES

330. In this section of the summary, the evidence regarding Bosasa's "Special Projects Team" and the assistance and benefits provided to members of the National Executive, public officials and functionaries of organs of state is introduced.

The Special Projects Team

331. Bosasa provided full security solutions at the residences of ministers, senior politicians, and senior government officials on a regular basis. To facilitate this assistance, a team known as the "Special Projects Team" was created.

332. During his investigation into the Bosasa matter, Mr Mlambo was informed by Mr le Roux that the members of the Special Projects team included Mr Johann Fourie, Raymond (whose surname is not apparent from the transcript of the oral testimony or the witness affidavits or other documentary evidence), Mr Michael Ndho, Mr Tshepo Huma, Ms Nichola Du Toit and Mr Eugene Bredenkamp.

333. Mr le Roux's Affidavit records that part of Mr le Roux's duties was to head up the Special Projects Team and oversee the implementation of the Special Projects which included the purchase and installation of CCTV systems for Mr Watson's "high profile associates", i.e., ministers and high-ranking officials. The Special Projects Team had three unbranded vehicles and operated wearing plain clothes so that their services were not linked to Bosasa. The services rendered by this team ranged from installing CCTV systems to sorting out electric fences to fixing pool pumps and doorbells. This team undertook installations, maintenance, follow-ups and client customer-care at no cost to the recipients. Mr Agrizzi explained that the state was paying for these benefits indirectly. Beneficiaries of this practice were named in the affidavit of Mr le Roux. Generally, there were no invoices sent to recipients. If there were invoices, they would have been backdated and sent. These expenses were catered for in Bosasa's books as operational costs. As a result, these amounts were deducted from income in Bosasa's tax returns.

334. The Special Projects Team existed from approximately 2013. By the time Mr Agrizzi left Bosasa, members of the Special Projects Team had been dismissed, and new people had been employed. The reason for this was a concern that the old employees would uncover or unfold what was happening and whose houses were being monitored. Mr le Roux testified further that on 20 November 2017 Mr Watson instructed him to meet with Ms Lindsay Watson the next day and depose to an affidavit which stated that Mr Agrizzi had instructed Mr le Roux to do the special projects undertaken to date. Mr le Roux informed Mr Watson that he did not want to get involved in any disagreement between Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi. He also did not want to depose to the affidavit as instructed given that the instructions on the special projects came from Mr Watson and other Bosasa directors rather than Mr Agrizzi. Ms Lindsay Watson informed him that he was required to sign the affidavit as Bosasa and Mr Watson paid his salary. Mr le Roux eventually signed the statement on 20 November 2017 because he was concerned about his job and family being at risk. On advice from Mr Agrizzi, Mr le Roux later annotated his statement with a note that it was false and not of any effect. It was witnessed by Mr van Tonder.

"Project PRASA"

335. Mr le Roux later testified that Mr Dlamini and Mr Agrizzi requested him to do a security analysis and installation code-named "Project PRASA" in Randburg for Mr Mbulelo Gingcana who worked for PRASA. The Special Project team installed an alarm system, full IP based CCTV system, new gate motor and an intercom system.

336. In his further affidavit, Mr le Roux stated that he was able to identify invoices marked "project sd" which related to Mr Dlamini who facilitated the work at Mr Gingcana's premises. Mr le Roux personally attended to the installation of the security at Mr Gingcana's property with five technicians over a minimum of 20 days. The total approximate value of the equipment, vehicle travel and labour was R239,486.84. This excludes the Paradox system which cost between R8 000 and R10 000. In respect of maintenance, Mr le Roux produced a WhatsApp message from Mr Gingcana requesting assistance when he was locked out of his home.

337. In his affidavit filed in terms of Rule 3.4, Mr Gingcana confirmed an alarm system with 7 IP based CCTV camera system together with a new gate motor and intercom system were installed at his home in Randburg. Mr Gingcana gave oral evidence more or less to the above effect. When he appeared before the Commission in June 2021, he had been dismissed from the employ of the South African Civil Aviation Authority (SACAA) because of the allegations that had been levelled against him. In the end he disputed that he ever met Mr Agrizzi in his house or anywhere. He testified that in 2016 he met Mr Dlamini at his house in connection with the security upgrades and that he had requested. It must be noted that Mr Dlamini stated that he had mentioned Mr Gingcana's details to Mr Agrizzi in a meeting and Mr Agrizzi offered to assist. Mr Agrizzi later involved Mr le Roux who requested Mr Gingcana's address, which he provided to Mr le Roux after he confirmed that Mr Gingcana still wanted to proceed. Once the upgrade was completed, Mr Dlamini advised Mr le Roux and Mr Gingcana to exchange contact details, should Mr Gingcana experience any technical or operating challenges with the system.

338. Mr Gingcana also disputes the costs of the installation. He accepted that Bosasa made the installations in March/April 2017 and testified that a system had been installed at his home but that no part of the system had the "Paradox" name. He further testified that he was never given an invoice but he said he asked for it from Mr Dlamini. He had not requested an invoice from Bosasa directly, because he testified that Mr Dlamini was coordinating and organising his security upgrades and had promised to come back to him. Mr Dlamini stated that he had requested an invoice from Mr Agrizzi on several occasions but that Mr Agrizzi never provided him with an invoice.

339. Under cross-examination, Mr le Roux testified that the installation was done in March or April 2016. He confirmed that the equipment cost R48,000 and that with labour, travelling and expenses the cost was R239,486.84. When questioned about the fact that Mr le Roux did not dispute Mr Gingcana's statement (in his affidavit) that the equipment was installed in 2017, Mr le Roux indicated that it was an oversight on his part.

Ms Nomvula Mokonyane

340. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson provided various forms of financial and other assistance to Ms Mokonyane because she was very influential and held a powerful political position. Mr Agrizzi had been informed that Ms Mokonyane had influence over former President Zuma, the prosecution authorities and various persons in government departments who would take decisions on matters that could affect Bosasa. In return for Ms Mokonyane's scope of influence, Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson and Bosasa provided her with various benefits including cash payments, food and alcohol, funding for Ms Mokonyane's birthday party and various repairs, installations, and maintenance work at her residence.

341. Ms Mokonyane explained that she knew the Watson family from as far back as pre-democracy when she was part of the "National Civic Organisation" (presumably SANCO) and involved in the UDF consumer boycott as a trade unionist. In response to a question from the evidence leader whether it was not problematic that Bosasa continued supporting the ANC once they had been awarded government tenders, she asserted that an SOE and other industries such as the wine industry had supported the ANC, including during the terms of Presidents Mandela and Mbeki.

342. In response to Mr Agrizzi's assertion that she had requested Mr Watson to arrange for Bosasa to fund and cater for election galas and lekgotlas in several national, provincial, and local elections, she disputed making any such requests and said that "the head of organising he is responsible for organising the ANC must provide resources. The head of organising is not the convenor of the lekgotla. Lekgotla is convened by the SG of the African National Congress".

343. Ms Mokonyane disputed Mr Agrizzi's evidence that he met Ms Mokonyane during 2002/2003 when she attended at the Bosasa office on social visit. She denied meeting him "at that stage . . . on a social visit". It was in response to this that Mr Agrizzi testified that he had met her at both business and social meetings and that he had "even coordinated . . . Mokonyane's 50th birthday party celebrations which was (sic) funded by BOSASA" with the theme "Break a Leg or words to that effect."

344. Ms Mokonyane admitted having attended meetings at Bosasa's offices but denied that she had ever attended a meeting with Mr Agrizzi, whether alone or with Mr Watson. She confirmed having met other people who worked at Bosasa, including Mr Watson. She disputed that any of the meetings had dealt with criminal prosecution being considered against Bosasa and its directors, or with the SIU report. In response to Mr Agrizzi's evidence that "BOSASA funded all celebrations, food, refreshments, including hiring and ancillary costs" of "social occasions . . . official headquarters and ANC events", she said that "This was for the ANC and it was not a social thing, it was a political programme of the ANC which I am a member of."

Ms Mokonyane's birthday party

345. Returning to Mr Agrizzi's evidence that he had coordinated Ms Mokonyane's 50th birthday celebrations, which were funded by Bosasa, and which were held at the Victoria Guesthouse in Krugersdorp with the theme "Break a Leg", Ms Mokonyane disputed this as being a false assertion. She testified that her 50th birthday was held in 2013 at the Silver Star Casino in Krugersdorp. On 22 July 2020, two days after this testimony, Mr Frederik Hendrik Coetzee, the owner of the Victoria Guesthouse, deposed an affidavit. He confirmed that the Victorian Guest House did host a birthday party for Ms Mokonyane, but it was her 40th birthday in 2003, not her 50th birthday in 2013. The birthday event was booked and paid for by Bosasa and the person whom he dealt with from Bosasa was Mr Agrizzi. the booking was first for eighty people which then increased to one hundred and twenty guests. However, on the night of the function a total of one hundred and seventy-four people arrived. all beers, hard liquor and soft drinks for the event were sponsored and supplied from a liquor store in Lewisham. The amount of liquor supplied filled an entire garage at the guest house. He was able to produce documentary evidence in relation to the event, including an event invoice which was charged to Bosasa for the attention of Mr Agrizzi and that the relevant invoice reflected an amount of R25,080 for the initial reservation in respect of 80 guests and a further R16,757 for the additional ninety-four guests, all of which was settled by Bosasa.

346. On 21 August 2020, Ms Mokonyane deposed an affidavit in answer to Mr Coetzee's affidavit in which she repeated her denial that her 50th birthday celebrations were held at the Victorian Guesthouse; admitted that her 40th birthday celebration was held at the said venue, declared that she had "no personal knowledge of most of the allegations regarding the booking and payment of the venue, including, catering and the provision of alcoholic and non-alcoholic beverages for the occasion" and that her family insisted on celebrating her birthday with a surprise party.

347. Furthermore, Ms Mokonyane testified that she was unaware of the arrangements made and was merely advised by her husband not to make any commitments on the day because he wanted to take the family out for dinner. Her late husband, she claims, was responsible for the arrangements in respect of the surprise party, which were kept secret to the extent that she was still unaware of "who did what". Her late husband never told her that he had received assistance from anyone outside her close family members and friends and that her late husband was a successful businessman who could afford to pay for such an event. She highlighted that neither Mr Agrizzi nor Mr Coetzee alleged that she had been involved in the arrangements.

348. Mr Coetzee gave oral testimony on 25 August 2020. He confirmed the evidence in his affidavit and provided the following additional information. The birthday function was arranged between Mr Agrizzi and himself. Bosasa was one of the Guest House's corporate clients and had been for many years. Mr Coetzee was introduced to Ms Mokonyane. Except for the arrival drinks, wine and sparkling wine for the speeches, Bosasa paid for all the beverages. He remembered the function well because it was one of those events that "stuck in your head".

349. Ms Mokonyane gave testimony again on 3 September 2020. She persisted in her evidence that she knew nothing about who had paid for the event but accepted that she could not dispute Mr Coetzee's evidence that the event was paid for by Bosasa. When referred to Mr Coetzee's affidavit and his statement that there was a birthday party held in Ms Mokonyane's honour at the guesthouse, Ms Mokonyane persisted with her version that she attended at the guesthouse for a private dinner and not to celebrate a birthday party. She believed that Mr Coetzee's version on the number of guests and the additional drinks were "a bit of exaggeration". Twenty or thirty people would fit in that venue, although the venue could accommodate more if other rooms were used. Given that she did not organise the event, she therefore could not dispute Mr Coetzee's estimate of there being 174 people at the dinner.

350. It was put to her by the evidence leader that in her previous testimony "[y]ou said no birthday of yours was ever held at this place". She stated that she did not mention the 40th birthday party previously because it had been more than a decade before and she was "preoccupied" by Mr Agrizzi's assertions that it was her 50th birthday party with a "Break a Leg" theme. There were many parties and functions held at the guesthouse. When asked what jogged her memory, she said "What made me to recall it was when after this testimony here that now the story was by Mr Agrizzi outside in the media or whoever had did, now no longer about the 50th but about the 40th. When it was pointed out to Ms Mokonyane that it was strange that Mr Coetzee could recall her 40th birthday at the guesthouse but she could not, Ms Mokonyane stated that "[i]t can sound strange because honestly speaking, that was not a party that I knew was going to happen".

351. When it was put to her by the Chairperson that a surprise birthday of that nature should stand out in her memory, she said that she "would have preferred a better place", that she was looking forward to her weekend partying with her friends, that she did not like surprises, but that she "had a husband who would always go and do extraordinary things to surprise me". She disputed that her earlier evidence denying any party having taken place at the venue was misleading.

352. When asked if it was not strange that her husband would not have mentioned at any point during the years after the event that the party was funded by Bosasa she stated that her husband never ventured into the funding of the party. She testified that "we both knew that we did not pay for the party because we knew we did not organise it." When the contradiction was pointed out between this and her affidavit, where she said that she had always assumed that her husband had paid for the event, she confirmed that this was her assumption.

353. Ms Mokonyane confirmed her statement in her affidavit that the revelation that Bosasa paid for the event embarrasses her. She confirmed further that it was inappropriate.

Cash payments

354. Moving away from the birthday party and reverting to Mr Agrizzi's evidence, he explained that a monthly payment of R50 000 would be packed and delivered to Ms Mokonyane. Ms Mokonyane, in her affidavit, filed in response to a Regulation 10(6) directive, denies ever receiving payments. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was present on two occasions when cash was given to her by Mr Watson. Ms Mokonyane denied ever receiving money from Mr Agrizzi or Mr Watson and denied that Mr Agrizzi was ever at her house in Krugersdorp with Mr Watson.

355. Mr Agrizzi explained that he would never meet with Ms Mokonyane alone as this was "Gavin's deal". He would, however, receive an occasional phone call to attend to a task when Mr Watson's phone was off. Mr Agrizzi explained that there was a third occasion that he recalled where money was delivered to Ms Mokonyane. At the time she was still the Premier and Mr Watson requested him to pack R50 000 into a security bag. The purpose of Mr Watson's visit was to discuss the SIU matter as a matter of urgency. Mr Agrizzi, however, was not at this meeting. Ms Mokonyane denies receiving any money and states that she played no role in the security cluster and had no business discussing the issues of the SIU with any person, including Mr Watson.

Other benefits

356. As to benefits provided to Ms Mokonyane other than cash, Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson would instruct him annually to provide for Ms Mokonyane's "Christmas needs". The list of items would usually include 120 cases of cold drinks, 4 cases of high-quality whisky, 40 cases of mixed beer, 8 lambs, 12 cases of frozen chicken pieces, 200kg of beef as well as various braai packs and numerous cases of premium brandy and speciality alcohol. Initially, he arranged delivery himself, but this was later passed on to a person named Catherine and Bosasa's executive chef. This was done over approximately ten years.

357. Ms Bongiwe Eves Dube testified that her predecessor as unit leader, Matabata, arranged "Christmas" deliveries on Mr Leshabane's instruction for Ms Mokonyane. Ms Dube referred to one instance in 2017 during which she received a call from Food Boys regarding a delivery despite the Bosasa offices being closed at the time. This delivery was intended for Ms Mokonyane. It contained a large order of meat to the value of approximately R17 000. Ms Mokonyane denies that Mr Watson saw to her family's Christmas needs and that she ever received the items from Bosasa. She testified that she did not have the capacity to store the volumes of items referred to above.

358. Ms Mokonyane stated that she was aware that Bosasa provided large quantities of food and drinks to communities in Gauteng as part of its corporate social investment projects for Christmas activities and school feeding programmes. Ms Mokonyane recalled one instance where food items intended for the community were delivered to her residence – when the Kagiso Old Community Hall was under reconstruction. Community volunteers collected these items.

359. After this benefit started, Mr Watson began to give Mr Agrizzi other instructions pertaining to meeting requests conveyed by Ms Mokonyane's PA, Ms Thomas. According to Mr Agrizzi, these included organising and paying for funerals, catering for political rallies for the ANC for up to 40 000 to 50 000 people, and catering for the "Siyanqoba" rallies of the ANC. These were never charged. Ms Mokonyane stated that Bosasa assisted communities, veterans, military combatants, and destitute families with burial costs.

360. The Chairperson questioned Ms Thomas about the delivery of items at Christmas time. She said that she would liaise with Ms Mokonyane's sister, who also resided at the home, about the arrival of these items. They were delivered there because parcels would be made up there. Coordination could take place from there. It would then go to Kagiso. The goods would be placed in the garage at the home. This was a yearly event usually around Christmas time, save for the previous two years. Sometimes it would happen in the middle of the year around the time of Ms Mokonyane's birthday. At times Ms Mokonyane would not know about the arrangements and Ms Thomas and Mr Watson would work on it. Ms Thomas did not know who took the parcels to Kagiso. In response to the Chairperson's question whether she knew that the items were brought to the home by Bosasa, she said "I would be the one that would be called. Mr Agrizzi would indicate that, you know, you would get this call, just for a day and make sure that somebody is home to take responsibility of these things". Most but not all the years Bosasa delivered the items.

361. Ms Thomas also testified that, while she knew that Mr Watson was a family friend of Ms Mokonyane's, she only saw him in person once – when he attended the funeral of Ms Mokonyane's son. This was before 2014. However, she "knew Mr Watson telephonically for a very long time." She also recalled meeting Mr Agrizzi at the Mokonyane home in the period leading up to the funeral – this was the only meeting with him she could specifically recall although she said she would "come back".

362. Ms Thomas was referred to Ms Pieters' (Mr Agrizzi's PA) affidavit in which she asserted that, on instructions from Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi, she arranged the provision of gifts for Ms Thomas and Ms Mokonyane annually from around 2010. Ms Thomas testified that she saw Ms Pieters' name for the first time when she received her summons to testify before the Commission. She had only spoken to her once, apparently when Ms Thomas was in hospital, about where to send the get-well gift. This was a gift she could account for.

363. Ms Thomas was taken to email correspondence attached to Ms Pieters' affidavit (not addressed to Ms Thomas herself) that pertained to organising gifts in 2010, 2014 and 2015 for Ms Thomas and Ms Mokonyane. The 2015 email from Ms Pieters bore the subject line "2 X URGENT LADIES HAMPERS - CONFIDENTIAL" and included a paragraph saying not to reference Bosasa and to contact Ms Thomas, providing her contact number.

364. Ms Thomas was referred to her evidence that she only dealt with Mr Agrizzi on one or two occasions, one of which was when she was in hospital. However, she went on to concede that "we could have spoken more", that "he would call me about various things", that "Mr Watson [would] ask me to call him" and that she developed a friendly relationship with him over the phone.

365. Apart from deposing to the affidavit referred to, Ms Pieters also gave oral evidence. She testified that Mr Agrizzi had requested her to send hampers to Ms Mokonyane and Ms Thomas. Ms Pieters could not recall the exact date when Mr Agrizzi first asked her to do so but knew that it was, at least, from 2010 because she had a record of that hamper. Ms Pieters testified that she would get hold of Ms Thomas to determine the delivery address, who asked her to send it to a home address and not to the office. Ms Pieters testified that when something like ordering the hampers became a regular occurrence, she saved the details on her phone with an address and telephone number to make it easier to contact the person. She referred to an email that she had sent on 29 June 2015 to procurement staff at Bosasa asking them to assist with two ladies' hampers to the value of R1 500 each, for Ms Mokonyane and Ms Thomas.

366. Reverting to Mr Agrizzi's evidence, he stated that he signed off expenses such as the cost of hiring a marquee, air-conditioning, printing of memorial pamphlets, and refreshments for the funeral of Mokonyane's son. Ms Mokonyane denies this. She insisted her family procured the services of the undertaker and paid for the burial. They do however appreciate contributions that are made, although she does not know what Bosasa contributed.

367. Coming to allegations regarding Bosasa's involvement in arranging ANC events, according to Ms Mokonyane, in her capacity as the national organiser of the ANC, she had a duty to ensure that all the rallies organised by the ANC were funded but that she never approached Bosasa and never instructed Mr Agrizzi to cater for any ANC rallies. Ms Mokonyane stated that she could not deny that Bosasa supported the ANC, that ANC elections operations were held at the Bosasa office park or that Bosasa helped with lunch packs for volunteers. She explained, however, that all fundraising initiatives were led by the Treasurer General of the ANC and explained the process.

368. Insofar as Mr Agrizzi stated that funding and catering for various municipal, provincial and general elections was done by request from Ms Mokonyane to Mr Watson, she denied this was a personal request and testified that Mr Agrizzi's version demonstrated his naivity in understanding the ANC. The Head of Organising, i.e., the Secretary-General of the ANC, convenes the lekgotla. Although she indicated that she did not want to speak on behalf of the ANC, Ms Mokonyane pointed out that she did not think there was anything untoward about Bosasa supporting the ANC when it had been awarded government tenders. This is because even SOEs support the ANC golf events, and there are companies in the wine industry that endorse ANC events.

369. Mr Agrizzi also testified that he would receive instructions to "sort out birthday party cakes", and to "cater for supporters 10 000 at a time." He testified specifically to receiving a call one Sunday evening from Mr Watson instructing him to drive to Café Mozart where he dealt with "Fritz" and designed a cake for then President Mr Zuma's 72nd birthday. A photo of the cake forms an annexure to Mr Agrizzi's statement. Although not clear in the photo, he was able to point out the Bosasa logo on the cake.

370. In response, Ms Mokonyane states that she played no role concerning the catering for any of the former President's birthday parties and that "an attendance of a birthday or the provision of a cake to the then State President if done openly and for bona fide reasons cannot be faulted." She also did not think there was anything untoward with Bosasa sponsoring the birthday party.

371. Another aspect of Mr Agrizzi's evidence pertained to assistance provided to Ms Mokonyane's daughter. He explained that there were a few occasions where he was called to assist with hiring vehicles for up to three months at a time for Ms Mokonyane's daughter when she was back from China where she was studying (arranged through Blake's Travel). The cost of the car hire would range between R80 000 and R150 000 because there were additional issues such as accidents and demands. In Mr Agrizzi's supplementary affidavit, he recalled specific examples of the car hiring for Ms Mokonyane's children and detailed these in his affidavit.

372. According to Ms Mokonyane, her daughter Katleho, was very close to Mr Watson who treated her like his own daughter. Mr Watson engaged Katleho to assist him in coordinating, translating, and interpreting Mandarin for business engagements. Ms Mokonyane said that Katleho is fluent in Mandarin and assisted Mr Watson.

373. In his supplementary affidavit Mr Agrizzi stated that at one stage Bosasa employed one of Ms Mokonyane's children at the Clanwilliam Youth Centre "to assist with a program he was undergoing". Ms Mokonyane denied this and said that her eldest son had a drug abuse problem and being of age, booked himself at the said centre for rehabilitation and that nothing untoward occurred in this regard and that she was not involved.

374. According to Mr Agrizzi, another benefit conferred upon Ms Mokonyane was the maintenance of her house when she lived in Silverfields, Roodepoort. This included attending to "electric fencing, generators, CCTV, gardening, ponds, lights, gates, absolutely everything really." Mr Watson would give Mr Agrizzi the instruction and he had to "make sure that the job got done." Mr Agrizzi explained that every time there was something wrong with her house, they would receive a phone call to get it sorted and, irrespective of the cost, it would get done. The estimated were approximately R350 000 to R400 000.

375. Mr le Roux testified that Mr Watson contacted him in 2013 to meet him and Mr Agrizzi at Ms Mokonyane's premises in Noord-Heuwel, Krugersdorp. Mr Watson instructed him to look at the electric fence, CCTV system, the generator, distribution board, the pool pump and attend to a green pool and garden clean up. This project was code-named "Project Blouberg". This project endured from 2013 to 2017. The garden clean-up was a once-off, but the maintenance of all the equipment was ongoing during this period.

376. In his further affidavit, Mr le Roux stated that the work undertaken by the Special Projects team at Ms Mokonyane's residence included repair of the electric fence, installation of CCTV, repair of gate motor, fixing of intercom system and rewiring of the police guard house at the main gate. The invoices for the purchase of the equipment would have been put down to maintenance at the Bosasa office park. Mr le Roux estimated the cost of the equipment to be in the region of R100 000 to R130,000. The cost of labour and travelling to undertake this work would have been approximately R58,080.

377. In addition to the above, Mr le Roux stated that he used the Bosasa Garden Maintenance team to do an initial garden clean-up before they repaired the electric fence. Bosasa also purchased new pots and new water feature pumps for the residence on Mr Watson's instruction and with cash provided by Mr van Zyl. Mr le Roux attached a copy of a WhatsApp message from Ms Thomas requesting assisting with the house alarm.

378. Ms Thomas in her testimony dealt with her role in relation to maintenance issues when they arose at Ms Mokonyane's private home. She referred to a day when the alarm kept going off. She called Mr Mokonyane and he advised her to call the person she knew as "Richard". She did not know his surname or who he worked for. She confirmed that she was asked to call him several times.

379. She went on to say that it was not over a long period and changed her stance to say that it was a few times that she had called Richard. She testified in relation to the specific WhatsApp or SMS dated 1 June 2017 when she had, on Mr Mokonyane's instructions, messaged Mr le Roux about the alarm that kept going off. She confirmed that this was not her first contact with him. Because he had been before for more or less the same problem, it was not necessary to give him the address. Her evidence suggested that "Richard" was only called in relation to problems with the alarm. Service providers would leave the invoice at the home, although she did not know if Mr le Roux would leave an invoice when he attended to the alarm.

380. At the time when Ms Mokonyane was MEC for housing, Ms Thomas was called by the office of the Premier to arrange a security and risk assessment and thereafter to install an electric fence, gate, CCTV cameras and a room for the police. It was put to her by the evidence leader that the Commission's investigators had contacted the office of the Premier and they said that they did not install any security features at the house. Following this she said that it was done through the (provincial) Department of Housing and the responsible person's name could have been Thabo. This was in a period predating the time when she would contact Richard.

381. Mr Charl le Roux testified that he was employed as an apprentice electrician from mid-2014 until 2019 at SAN Electrical, owned by Mr Van Biljon. Mr le Roux testified to various repair and maintenance works undertaken on instruction from Mr Van Biljon at a house in Krugersdorp, including works on the lights, water feature and backup power system. Mr le Roux testified that the house had high fencing with a guardhouse to the left when entering the premises. He also testified that he had observed an Aston Martin at the premises parked in the middle garage. Mr le Roux testified that he attended at the premises many times.

382. The first time that Mr Charl le Roux attended at the premises, in 2014, he met Mr (Richard) le Roux and Mr Van Biljon at the premises when the backup power system was not working. On the next occasion Mr Charl le Roux visited the premises, the lights on the staircase and the walkway were not working and had to be repaired. On the third occasion, Mr Charl le Roux fixed the water feature and downlights in the ceiling of the entertainment area. Whenever Mr le Roux attended at the premises, the guard stationed at the property would open for him. Mr le Roux attended to repair work at the premises from 2014 to 2018.

383. The memo was supported by photographs, as confirmed by Mr Charl le Roux. Mr le Roux also confirmed Mr Agrizzi's evidence that the generator room with an automatic switch mechanism, which was supplied by Bosasa, was situated outside. Mr Van Biljon provided an affidavit that confirmed that he undertook work at Ms Mokonyane's house in Krugersdorp but at the time he did not know that Ms Mokonyane lived there. He details the work undertaken and provides copies of invoices.

384. Ms Mokonyane said that she had checked with Ms Thomas and there was only one instance during which Ms Thomas contacted Mr Watson to assist with Ms Mokonyane's house alarm. Mr Watson referred Ms Thomas to someone (but not Mr Agrizzi) within Bosasa who could assist. This was on Ms Mokonyane's husband's instruction to find someone that could assist. The usual service providers could not be reached in this instance. Ms Mokonyane said that Ms Thomas contacted Bosasa on her late husband's instructions. Ms Mokonyane did not request this.

385. Ms Mokonyane testified that she was not aware of the work done by Mr Charl le Roux as this was not on her instruction. She was not aware if her family paid for the work authorised by her husband as these were the responsibilities of her husband. He took responsibility from 2014 when she was appointed as a Minister. She asserted however that security for her private residence was done by the state, including close circuit television. She accepted the Chairperson's proposition that it would be strange, if the services had been provided by Bosasa as alleged by Mr Van Biljon and the two le Rouxs', and if her husband had been responsible for this, that he would not have shared this information with her. It was put to her that she could not dispute that Mr Van Biljon's company had done the work at her house. She responded that they never asked Mr Van Biljon to do the work.

386. The WhatsApp message from Ms Thomas to Mr le Roux dated 1 June 2017 seeking assistance with a problem at the house with the alarm system, was explained on the basis that this was the single occasion where Ms Mokonyane accepted that Bosasa's involvement had been sought by Ms Thomas. However, it was put to her that it was strange if this was a once-off item of work that she says in the message that there is a problem at "the house" without saying which house is spoken of, as if he knows the house. Her response was that she only had one home. She also speculated about the possibility that there might have been telephone calls that resulted in the WhatsApp message.

387. Ms Mokonyane confirmed Mr Charl le Roux's evidence regarding the details of the security guard-house and the generator. It was put to Ms Mokonyane by the Chairperson that it appeared indisputable that Mr Van Biljon's company did some work at her residence, that he, together with Charl and Richard le Roux had had all been to her house, that Mr Van Biljon's company had been paid by Bosasa and were there on Bosasa's instructions. It anybody came to do this type of work, it would have been her husband's responsibility, but in this case, as she had said, he would have shared this information with her.

388. With regard to the Aston Martin, Ms Mokonyane was asked how she could afford to pay a deposit of R2.2 million on the car (which cost over R3 million in 2013) when her total income was R143,137.66 per month. She explained that her husband was trying to get a contract from Eskom and from Denel and he had people that were mentoring and supporting him. These people could see that the business had a chance of growing. Her husband then made arrangements with the firm that was not doing business with government to provide them a partnership in his work on the Eskom contract in exchange for their assistance with the deposit. Ms Mokonyane explained that she also made a direct contribution to the deposit.

389. When pressed about who paid the deposit, Ms Mokonyane stated that it was their friend, Mr Thaba Mufamadi, and this was a business arrangement with her husband who had been short-changed in the bids with Eskom. A letter from the firm De Klerk Mandelstam to the Commission confirms that payment was made by Mr Mufamadi from a legitimate source of funds.

390. During her second day of testimony, Ms Mokonyane revisited, amongst other things, the security and maintenance work on her home. She informed the Chairperson that she had written to the office of the Premier to ask for information about the security for her house. A response of "piles of documents" was received the day prior to her testimony and she had not had the opportunity to go through them. It was put to her that she ought to have signed a document acknowledging receipt of the security. Ms Mokonyane stated that she did not remember signing anything as it is done through the SAPS and the people responsible for security in government. She testified that she did not know of any installation done by Bosasa of any security measure at her house. She assumed everything had been done by the state.

391. A letter was produced by the evidence leader, from the Department of Public Works stating that the Department did not have a record of a formal request for security measures in Ms Mokonyane's private residence either by the Gauteng Housing Department, the Gauteng Office of the Premier, the Department of Infrastructure Development, or the Department of Water and Sanitation. The Department indicated that generally security measures are administered by the province and not the national department.

392. Ms Mokonyane went on to draw a distinction between the time before and after she became a Minister at national government level. After Ms Mokonyane became a Minister at national level, the state did not take care of security at her home and she had to make private arrangements. She cannot dispute that Bosasa installed CCTV at her house.

Money allegedly paid to Ms Mokonyane

393. Mr Agrizzi testified that in 2014, at the time that Ms Mokonyane was the Minister of Water Affairs, Bosasa was requested to do an analysis and report on the securing of the dams in South Africa for the Department. The report was done under time pressure and at the cost of some R1.3 million. Mr Agrizzi was also instructed by Mr Watson to recommend a consultant group who would assist the Department of Water Affairs in managing the award of the tender for securing the dams.

394. Mr Agrizzi knew of payments made to Ms Mokonyane because he would pack the money and Mr Watson would often deliver it in front of Mr Agrizzi. The amount of R50,000 "was a monthly amount on a few occasions" but the payments continued for years. He could not remember the exact time though.

395. Ms Mokonyane denied receiving any cash from Mr Watson or Mr Agrizzi. She testified that Mr Agrizzi did not visit her home in her presence. She speculated that representatives from Bosasa may have met with her husband or when she experienced a bereavement. She denied having a wooden staircase as described by Mr Agrizzi. She speculated further that Mr Agrizzi might have become familiar with some features of her house when her fence was being looked at. Ms Mokonyane accepted that it would be fair to expect her husband to have told her if Mr Agrizzi had been at their home, but his response in this regard had been that "they are talking nonsense".

396. A discussion was referred to that took place in the car outside Ms Mokonyane's house between Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi. Mr Agrizzi pointed out to Mr Watson that a lot of money had been paid to Ms Mokonyane with no return to Bosasa. Mr Watson's response was that "she has a lot of clout" and that her support was needed for protection from the SIU investigation, the Hawks and the NPA. In this conversation Mr Agrizzi claims to have complained about Mr Watson's method of doing business using bribery and corruption, saying that it threatened to close the business and lose the jobs of Bosasa's employees. Mr Agrizzi says that he "pleaded with him that we stop being politically based as a company".

397. In the ensuing exchanges with the evidence leader and the Chairperson, Mr Agrizzi to some extent contradicted himself as to whether his complaint regarding the investment on Ms Mokonyane was that it was not delivering returns for the Bosasa Group or whether his complaint was that it was not an appropriate and ethical way to do business. His evidence appeared to be that he was making both points.

Ms Mokonyane's scope of influence

398. Mr Agrizzi was asked about the reason for the continued assistance being given Ms Mokonyane after her connections as Premier ceased. Mr Agrizzi explained that Ms Mokonyane was very powerful in politics and Mr Agrizzi had seen prosecutions being stalled on account of Ms Mokonyane and he was told categorically that she should not be messed with. She had influence over former President Zuma, the prosecution authorities and individuals in various government departments who would take decisions on matters that could affect Bosasa. Mr Vorster testified that he was told by Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi and other directors that Ms Mokonyane was an influential person with links to former Presidents Mbeki and Zuma.

399. Ms Mokonyane denies that she could protect Bosasa from any prosecution, denies that Bosasa ever received any contract from any department where she was appointed as the executive head, and further denies payment ever being made to her.

Potential conflict of interest

400. An example of Ms Mokonyane's continued ability to affect Bosasa was her involvement in the adjudication of an appeal on an environmental impact assessment undertaken for a wind farm project in respect of which the Watsons had an interest. To expand on this example, Mr Agrizzi was referred to annexure GG to his Supplementary Affidavit which was an article from the Mail & Guardian newspaper titled "The Minister, the gifts, the Watsons and the wind farm" dated 13 March 2019. The article pertains to the Inyanda-Roodeplaat Wind Energy Facility that the Watson family wanted to build on a farm situated on approximately 12 200 ha between three portions of the Groendal Nature Reserve in the Eastern Cape. The Groendal wilderness area is protected under the National Forests Act and is critical to biodiversity and environmental sensitivity.

401. The entities owned or controlled by the Watsons involved in this project were Inyanda Energy Projects (Pty) Ltd, Laidback Investments (Pty) Ltd and O'Feh Investments (Pty) Ltd. The Watsons in this instance were Mr Ronnie Watson, Mr Valence Watson, Mr Jared Watson and Mr Ronnie Watson's daughter, Ms Tandy Snead.

402. The project proposal drew strong objections from inter alia the Eastern Cape Parks and Tourism Agency, the Eastern Cape's Department of Environment and Tourism, BirdLife South Africa, Wilderness Foundation Africa, and the Elands River Conservancy. Notwithstanding these objections, the project received environmental approval from the national Department of Environmental Affairs in April 2018. This decision was under appeal at the time of Mr Agrizzi's testimony. This appeal was to be heard by Ms Mokonyane in her capacity as the Minister of Environmental Affairs. There were concerns that this posed a significant conflict of interest given that Ms Mokonyane was receiving benefits from Bosasa but was also required to deal with the appeal relating to the Watsons and the wind farm.

403. The Mail & Guardian article recorded Ms Mokonyane's response to the allegation was that she would not withdraw from the adjudication process and there is no conflict of interest. Ms Mokonyane alleges that the acting Minister, Ms Lindiwe Zulu, attended to the matter and that she did not.

Ms Mokonyane's involvement in the SIU matter

404. Ms Mokonyane denied having anything to do with the SIU and its authority. She explained that she has never been part of the Criminal Justice System Cluster and has never been in meetings with any people responsible for the SIU investigation. She maintained that Mr Agrizzi was lying about her scope of influence.

405. Mr Agrizzi recalled there being constant pressure for a meeting to be convened with Mr Dramat so that the matter could be returned to Adv Jiba's office so she could arrange for the matter not to be prosecuted. Ms Mokonyane denies these allegations and states that she was not a party to any arrangement with Mr Dramat or Adv Jiba, who are not known to her. Ms Mokonyane however supported Adv Jiba through the ANC Women's League because of the onslaught against female leaders and the attempt to vilify them.

406. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was present in meetings during which Mr Watson would put pressure on Ms Mokonyane to ask Mr Dramat for the files back. Ms Mokonyane referred to this as a "damn lie" and stated that she did not have the kind of relationship with these individuals that she could influence them and had never met with them. In his supplementary statement, Mr Agrizzi recalled an occasion in 2014 when the ANC's election campaign was being run from the Bosasa call centre and an impromptu meeting was held where Mr Watson raised the matter of the SIU case and Ms Mokonyane confirmed that it was all under control, and that they should not concern themselves with it.

Ms Mokonyane's comments on Mr Agrizzi's evidence generally

407. Ms Mokonyane testified that she did not know the reason why Mr Agrizzi falsely accused her of many things, other than that, in her view, hatred is involved.

    407.1 She pointed out the timing of the allegations were at a time there were tensions within the ANC about differences concerning "preferential leaders". She believed Mr Agrizzi was playing into the perception that anyone that supported Mr Zuma was corrupt.

    407.2 Mr Agrizzi is on the record to be a known racist. Mr Agrizzi's evidence on Ms Mokonyane demonstrates hatred, misogyny, and racism. Ms Mokonyane described it as being character assassination and opportunism.

    407.3 Mr Agrizzi has "gone out himself to be the one who was frustrated about me not helping them". She believes he is punishing her for not giving them the assistance he thought she had the capacity to provide.

    407.4 Mr Agrizzi "wants everybody to believe that he is a holy cow". There was nothing untoward about Bosasa funding the ANC as the Ruperts wine and dine the presidents of the ANC and the Guptas funded the DA.

Ms Duduzile Myeni

Payments to Ms Myeni

408. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson was open about the fact that he paid Ms Myeni R300 000 in cash monthly. Mr Agrizzi was told by Mr Watson that this money was intended for the Jacob G Zuma Foundation. At the time, Ms Myeni was Chair of the Foundation. Mr Agrizzi suspected that the money was paid to former President Zuma.

409. Ms Myeni was referred to her affidavit in response to the evidence of Mr Agrizzi in which she had stated that all funds received by the Jacob G Zuma Foundation are done by electronic transfer and not cash. When asked about this, Ms Myeni initially took up the attitude that she refused to answer questions relating to donations to the Foundation firstly, because she was not the Foundation, it was not her business and it was an entity, and, secondly, because foundations linked to other former presidents were not being subjected to similar scrutiny. She explained however that donations from Bosasa for purposes of the Foundation's event for the birthday of Mr Zuma were deposited electronically to service providers. She appeared to accept that in respect of donations emanating other than from Bosasa, cash deposits might be made. At another point, she stated however that some of the questions she was being asked were "too operational" as she was neither a bookkeeper nor a fundraiser. She testified that she had never dealt with Mr Agrizzi and denied that he had ever given her R300 000.

410. This included a refusal to answer questions to avoid self-incrimination, pertaining to numerous cash deposit slips which were signed with a signature resembling Ms Myeni's in substantial amounts, including amounts of R20 000, R50 000, R80,000 and R100 000. She refused to answer for the same reason when asked to "assist the Commission as to where you got these large cash amounts from to deposit them into the Jacob Zuma Foundation bank account".

411. Mr Agrizzi was responsible for drawing the cash for Mr Watson and, on occasion, assisted with packing the money. When asked whether Ms Myeni's details were recorded in his "black book", Mr Agrizzi explained that Mr Watson often made these payments himself and did not want to keep a record of this because he did not want to get caught out. Ms Myeni testified that she never dealt with Mr Agrizzi. She later refused to answer a question about how well she knew Mr Agrizzi or Mr Watson as she did not want to incriminate herself. Mr Agrizzi witnessed the payments being delivered to Ms Myeni on three occasions – twice by Mr Watson and once by Mr Mathenjwa.

412. Ms Myeni denied having received money from Mr Agrizzi. She stated that she only dealt with Mr Watson. She also denied having received gifts from Bosasa.

Gifts to Ms Myeni

413. Mr Agrizzi testified that, at some stage, Mr Watson requested assistance with an idea to impress Ms Myeni. Mr Agrizzi's wife suggested they purchase a Louis Vuitton handbag for her and arranged for its purchase. The handbag was delivered to the Bosasa offices, Mr Watson filled it with R300 000 in cash and it was delivered to Ms Myeni. Although Mr Agrizzi did not witness the handbag being handed over to Ms Myeni, Mr Watson informed him that Ms Myeni was "over the moon" and she thanked him for choosing the right handbag. In her affidavit Ms Myeni denied "possess[ing] a Louis Vuitton handbag which was allegedly filled with cash to the amount of R300,000". She later refused to answer any further questions on the issue as she did not want to risk incriminating herself.

414. Ms Myeni often called upon Mr Watson to arrange high-end functions for former President Zuma. For example, Bosasa catered a birthday dinner for Mr Zuma on short notice. The cost of these functions was approximately R3.5 million per year. Mr Agrizzi approved the claims for these functions and the claims were allocated as corporate social investment payments in the company's financial records.

415. Ms Myeni confirmed Bosasa's involvement in arranging and funding birthday celebrations for Mr Zuma. Apart from gifts, Ms Myeni also called upon Bosasa to attend to the security at her home. Her claims were approved without interrogation. Mr le Roux testified that he was instructed by Mr Mathenjwa and Mr Watson to attend to security work in the form of electric fencing, a full CCTV IP system with offsite monitoring, and alarm system with perimeter beams at Ms Myeni's home in Richard's Bay.

416. Mr le Roux initially estimated that the value of the project was R250 000. In his further affidavit, Mr le Roux was able to identify a series of invoices for components in respect of the work done at Ms Myeni's home in the aggregate amount of R119 375.81 plus two credit notes in the value of R5 751.18. Again, the person invoiced as customer is "Mr A Agrizzi". Mr le Roux personally attended to the installation together with four other technicians. This took approximately 21 days. The total approximate cost of the equipment, vehicle travel and labour were R486,514.63.

417. Ms Myeni refused to answer any questions pertaining to the installation of the security system at her home, its value, its status as a gift to her and her failure to disclose the gift in terms of the conflict of interest policies at South African Airways (SAA) and uMhlathuze Water Board; and the Hawks operation at her home in Richards Bay to investigate the installation, on the basis that she may incriminate herself.

Reasons for assisting Ms Myeni

418. Ms Myeni was assisted because, according to Mr Agrizzi, "she was very, very important. She could swing deals and she was powerful." An example of a deal that was influenced by Ms Myeni was the fracking transaction in the Northern Cape detailed by Mr Agrizzi. In this regard, Bosasa was approached by Mr Radhakrishna to participate in a transaction with a company known as Falcon Oil and Gas. Falcon Oil and Gas had expressed an interest in the transaction to Mr Radhakrishna's neighbour, Ms Liezl Oberholzer, and were looking for a facilities management company to render security, access control, guarding and operational management services. Pursuant to this, Mr Agrizzi was introduced to Mr Phillip O'Quigley, the international Chairman of the Falcon Oil and Gas group.

419. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was aware that the transaction was brought to Bosasa because of Mr Watson's close relationship with Ms Myeni, who, in turn, would be able to influence the then President. He explained that with Ms Myeni's influence Bosasa was able to demand that the normal rules regulating meetings with potential participants in the transaction not apply to it. For example, Chevron and Standard (it is unclear which entity is referred to here) required prospective partners to the transaction to interview at their offices. Bosasa was the only party able to insist that the interview take place at their own offices.

420. Around May/June 2016, Ms Myeni facilitated a meeting between Mr Jacob Zuma, Mr Watson, Mr O'Quigley and Ms Oberholzer to seek former President Mr Zuma's assistance in advising the then Minister of Minerals and Energy, Ngoako Ramatlhodi, to make certain amendments to what were considered restrictive regulations applicable to the oil and gas industry. Although Mr Agrizzi did not attend the meeting with Mr Zuma, he was informed about it in independent accounts by Mr Watson, Mr Radhakrishna and Ms Oberholzer. Following this meeting the Minister of Minerals and Energy's legal advisors were instructed to meet with Ms Oberholzer to make the necessary amendments to the regulations. Mr Agrizzi was uncertain if such amendments were actually affected. Mr Radhakrishna and Ms Oberholzer advised Mr Agrizzi that Mr Zuma indicated that Bosasa was favoured by him (Zuma).

421. Ms Myeni denied allegations that she had influence in the fracking matter, although she admitted in her affidavit that a meeting took place at Nkandla in this regard. When cross-examined about the meeting she conceded having taken place, she refused to answer on the basis that she may incriminate herself. She denied having set up a meeting between Mr Zuma, Mr O'Quigley, Mr Watson and Ms Oberholzer pertaining to fracking, but, for the same reason, refused to answer cross-examination based on Ms Oberholzer's affidavit, which confirmed that Myeni arranged the meeting. Ms Oberholzer's confirmation in her affidavit was based on an email that she provided dated 20 July 2014 from dudumyeni@telkomsa.net, seemingly addressed to Mr Watson and later the same day forwarded by him to Ms Oberholzer, which, under the subject line "Forward address by President Jacob Zuma at the launch of operation Phakisa big fast results implementation methodology" which read:

> For my Mkhokheli, I hope you are well. By God's grace we are all well. I have to get this speech of the launch of yesterday's event because I felt you have to know what the event or launch was about. Please be assured all is under control. I am trying to set up a meeting for the 27th. Regards.

422. Ms Myeni refused to answer any questions on the email as she did not want to incriminate herself. Mr Agrizzi testified that after this event there were numerous meetings coordinated by Ms Myeni at the now infamous Nkandla residence.

423. At some stage, Mr Watson grew concerned that Mr Zuma was not receiving the R300 000 per month paid to Ms Myeni purportedly for the Foundation. Mr Watson therefore asked Mr Agrizzi to pack the money so the funds could be delivered directly to Mr Zuma. Around the time of Mr Zuma's birthday party in April 2016 and prior to him departing for a trip to Russia, Mr Watson and Mr Gumede met with him at Nkandla. Mr Watson and Mr Gumede relayed to Mr Agrizzi that they delivered the money to former President Zuma and that he had confirmed during this meeting that he was receiving the monthly payments from Ms Myeni.

424. Mr Watson also raised the issue of the Hawks investigation of Bosasa during this meeting and Mr Zuma informed him that that he would "make a call or two". Mr Gumede subsequently advised Mr Agrizzi that the former President had indeed made these calls which gave rise to the Hawks contacting Mr Gumede to arrange a meeting.

Meetings with Bosasa

425. Ms Myeni would have frequent meetings with Mr Mathenjwa. Mr Mathenjwa was tasked with handling the NPA prosecution of Bosasa and Ms Myeni. Therefore, insofar as the Bosasa investigation was concerned, Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi dealt with Mr Mti and Mr Mathenjwa dealt with the same issue through Ms Myeni. Mr Mathenjwa denies that he had frequent meetings with Ms Myeni and alleges that he was not involved in, nor aware of, discussions regarding the NPA or the prosecution of Bosasa.

426. Mr Agrizzi was present at a meeting where the contemplated prosecution of Bosasa was discussed with Ms Myeni and this led to the direct involvement of Mr Zuma.

427. Mr le Roux testified on his return from the UK he was placed in charge of the security camera systems at the Bosasa offices as well as maintenance of the server and the footage on the server. He was instructed by Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi on numerous occasions to delete footage of VIP and VVIP guests that attended at the offices. This included the footage of Ms Myeni's visit to the premises along with Mr Jacob Zuma and Mr Bheki Cele.

Meeting at the Sheraton Hotel

428. Mr Agrizzi's affidavit refers to one afternoon (on a date he could not recall) that Mr Watson asked him to attend a meeting with Ms Myeni regarding information on the Hawks investigation and discussions she had with the NPA. Mr Watson prepared the R300 000 in cash. When they arrived at the Sheraton Hotel, they were escorted to a private lounge area with stringent access control on a member's only floor which was possibly the 6th floor.

429. During this meeting, Ms Myeni indicated that she was trying to arrange that the investigation be terminated. She produced a police case docket that had purportedly been obtained from the NPA and insisted that Mr Agrizzi could not make copies. He therefore requested that he be excused to study it and make notes in his journal. Mr Agrizzi took a few photographs of the docket on his cell phone but was later interrupted by Ms Myeni who seemed very nervous.

430. At the meeting with Ms Myeni, Mr Watson requested that the matter "be put to bed and shut down". He also requested that Ms Myeni speak to Mr Zuma as a matter of urgency.

431. Mr Dutton testified that he met Mr Agrizzi at his home on 18 December 2018. During this visit, Mr Agrizzi displayed a series of photographs of documents on his laptop which had been taken at the Sheraton Hotel. These appear to be photographs of confidential documents of the South African Police Service's Anti-Corruption Task Team relating to the progress of the police criminal investigation into corruption allegations against Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi had explained to Mr Dutton that Ms Myeni had shown him a file of these documents at the Sheraton Hotel and he had managed to photograph some of the documents using his iPhone.

432. Mr Agrizzi had told Mr Dutton that the photographs displayed on his laptop were taken on 23 September 2015. Mr Agrizzi copied these photographs onto a memory stick and handed them over to Mr Johan Hershling who is a member of the Commission's digital forensic team. The document photographed is titled "ACTT Monthly Progress and Audit Report" on the status of the Bosasa investigation. Mr Dutton referred to several of the photographs, in particular page 14 of Exhibit T7 which clearly indicated a pattern of what is apparently a carpet. Mr Dutton then visited the Sheraton Hotel to see whether he was able to match the patterns in the photographs to the carpet on the 6th floor.

433. Mr Dutton visited the Sheraton Hotel on 21 December 2018. Mr Agrizzi's description of the 6th floor aligned closely to what Mr Dutton observed. In addition, he observed that the carpet was the same as that featured in Mr Agrizzi's photographs. On 14 January 2019 formal inquiries in the form of a request for information from the Commission was sent to the manager of the Sheraton Hotel and thereafter a member of the investigation team visited the hotel to interview the general manager. Mr Dutton was advised by the investigation team that on 22 and 23 September 2015, Ms Myeni had been a guest of the Sheraton Hotel and she had been accommodated in Room 616. This was confirmed in an affidavit from the hotel's General Manager, Pascal Foquet, who confirmed through hotel records that Ms Myeni had booked into the hotel on 22 September 2015 and there were no further transactions on her invoice after 24 September 2015. Although Mr Foquet's affidavit refers to the fact that the invoice relates to Ms Myeni booking the Mopani Boardroom on the 7th floor on 24 September 2015 and that she could have used it on one of those days while she was staying there, Mr Dutton confirmed that he did not do an investigation on the 7th floor, because Mr Agrizzi had emphatically told him that the meeting had occurred on the 6th floor. Mr Dutton explained that he could not comment on whether the 7th floor was like the 6th floor save for the fact that it was also a restricted area of the hotel.

434. Mr Dutton confirmed that the account for Ms Myeni's stay was paid off from the FNB account of one Nicole Stone. At the top of the customer registration card it stated, "Account Jacob Zuma Foundation".

435. The Commission's investigation team showed Mr Agrizzi's photographs to both General Moodley and Senior State Adv de Kock who was originally the prosecutor assigned to the matter and they both advised the documents appeared to be an ACTT progress report dated 24 August 2015. However, they had not been able to find the original document. These documents are not publicly available and are confidential documents or correspondence between the police and the NPA.

436. The memory stick handed over by Mr Agrizzi to the Commission did not contain the metadata of the photographs. When Mr Agrizzi had completed his evidence, he voluntarily handed over his iPhone and in his presence members of the Commission's digital forensic team continued an examination of the iPhone upon which they found the photographs as originally recorded. Upon examination of the metadata, it was revealed that the photographs on Mr Agrizzi's phone were taken on 23 September 2015 at 10:37:06. The longitude and latitude co-ordinates of the location of the photograph is within the vicinity of the Sheraton Hotel.

437. In respect of the invoice which appears at page 30 of Mr Dutton's affidavit, being an invoice from the Sheraton Hotel addressed to Ms Myeni, it states that her arrival was 22 September 2015 and departure was 5 October 2015. Mr Dutton explained that the departure date was likely to have been indicated as being 5 October 2015 as that is when payment was received. The arrival date corresponds with what the GM had declared in his affidavit and all expenditures generated by the guest had stopped by 24 September 2015.

438. Ms Myeni refused to answer questions regarding the meeting of 23 September 2015 as she did not want to incriminate herself. She similarly refused to answer questions relating to Mr Blake's evidence regarding payment in respect of her stay at the Sheraton between 4 and 6 May 2014. Ms Myeni also refused to answer questions relating to handing over a police docket containing information regarding the investigation into Bosasa as she did not want to incriminate herself.

439. Ms Myeni understood the impact of her refusal to answer questions on the evaluation of her evidence.

Ms Myeni's statement to eNCA

440. After Mr Agrizzi's testimony before the Commission in January 2019, Ms Myeni made a statement on eNCA regarding meetings held at Bosasa's offices. To this end, Ms Myeni stated that she had only attended one official visit which was Mr Zuma's visit to SeaArk during which he spent four hours on the Bosasa campus with Mr Watson and the rest of the directorate. Mr Agrizzi commented that Ms Myeni's statement was not true and recalled at least three meetings at the Bosasa offices. One such meeting was regarding the fracking transaction. A third meeting was held at what Mr Agrizzi described as "the Intercontinental, I think it is the Sheraton Hotel at OR Tambo Airport" after a meeting in the conference venue. Ms Myeni arranged this meeting to enable Bosasa officials to meet the then CEO or acting CEO of SAA, Mr Nico Bezuidenhout.

441. During the pre-meeting, a tender for security services was discussed and Ms Myeni wanted Bosasa to investigate the possibility of taking over the security contract and the catering contract for SAA. Confirmation that the meeting took place at the Intercontinental Hotel at ORTIA and details of the meeting were provided in an affidavit from Mr Bezuidenhout. Ms Myeni refused to answer any questions put to her based on his affidavit because of her concern that she may incriminate herself.

442. In relation to this catering and security contract for SAA, Mr Agrizzi testified that he realised that this was "going south" and he conveyed to Mr Watson that he did not think there was any money in it. Mr Watson agreed with Mr Agrizzi. Mr Agrizzi testified that the real reason why he did not want to engage in these contracts with SAA was because he wanted to stay far away from Ms Myeni and the Foundation. During mid-August 2016, Mr Agrizzi and his wife encountered Ms Myeni on a flight from Johannesburg to King Shaka International Airport in Durban. Ms Myeni asked Mr Agrizzi how Mr Watson was doing. Mr Agrizzi recalled being aloof with her and said he did not know. Ms Myeni asked him what was wrong and he responded by advising her that he had resigned from Bosasa.

Mr Watson's introduction to former President Zuma

443. According to Mr Agrizzi, Ms Zukiswa Madonga who ran a guest lodge in East London, had a very good relationship with President Zuma. Madonga was introduced to Mr Watson by a Director of Bosasa, Ms Thandi Makoko. Following this meeting, Mr Agrizzi received an instruction to top up the limit on Ms Makoko's credit card so that she could buy dresses for Ms Madonga.

444. Subsequently, Mr Watson was introduced to Mr Zuma by Ms Madonga at his Forest Town house. This occurred before May 2009, when Mr Zuma was President of the ANC but had not taken office as President of South Africa. Although he took Mr Watson to Mr Zuma's house, Mr Agrizzi did not participate in the meeting.

Meetings at the Bosasa office park

445. When high profile individuals were introduced to the Directors of Bosasa, they were taken on a tour of the Bosasa office and given an overview of its entire operations and staff. Mr Agrizzi described this as a 4.5 hour long "smokes and mirrors exercise". He testified that Ms Myeni visited the office park as well as Mr Zuma and the then Minister of Health.

Meetings at Nkandla

446. Mr Agrizzi testified that after the exposé on Nkandla, Mr Watson and Mr Gumede met Mr Zuma at Nkandla. The purpose of this visit was to discuss shutting down the Hawks investigation into Bosasa. During this meeting, Mr Watson asked Mr Zuma to call Mr Dramat to tell him to shut down the matter. At the time, Mr Dramat was avoiding Ms Mokonyane.

447. Mr Watson relayed the details of his visit with Mr Zuma during an Exco meeting convened by Mr Agrizzi the following Monday. Mr Watson commented during this meeting that he was shocked at the poor standard of the workmanship at Nkandla.

448. Mr Agrizzi also presented a recording of a meeting arranged by Mr Gumede during which the meeting with former President Zuma was discussed. The transcript of this recording refers to Mr Watson and Mr Gumede seemingly having been advised to "go and see the old man, the president, on this matter" when the investigation by the Hawks was "starting to brew again." Mr Gumede confirms having visited the President, saying "[w]e went to see him and he told me to say, he was going to Russia, I remember when we had a chat with him he said, no, before I go, I will phone the two people, and we didn't phone them because we got feedback and that's the reason why". In the recording, Mr Gumede goes on to say:

> Then the next thing, the guy from the Hawks, he even showed us, the meeting we were having, every month you were having a meeting, where he decides all those things. It's confidential information, he showed us, that meeting, the guy said the person they wanted to charge was Angelo and Ryker, none of you guys. Even if I showed this one and showed that guy was never gonna allow, I said please can I take the minutes? I took them on my phone. But the guys they want to charge, if at least they can throw this thing on the charging, it was four hundred, but they're charging two, he said, no, but the other people we are not worried. It was him and Patrick. I said but you're charging two, are you comfortable? We'll replicate the case. They said no, the other people we are not even worried about. Even Angelo knows that copy, I took a copy of those minutes in my phone, and I showed him alone with Trevor. We had two meetings. Every month we were getting those minutes through that inaudible. And again, it was twice, those people came back to say hey, these guys, the only people they can charge, is those two. We said no, over our dead body, it cannot happen. And Angelo knows that, that's why, for him to even try and involve other people, he knows, he knows that even on that number, because he had minutes twice, I showed him the minutes of that number. Even he had a meeting at the Sheraton at four o'clock, and he was very clear to say that for them to close this project, the only people they think they will charge, is those two. He was aggrieved because Gavin did not appear on the list of the suspects.

Mr Zuma and the Bosasa investigation

449. In a later meeting between Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi and Mr Mti, Mr Watson told Mr Mti that he should convey to Adv Jiba that he was waiting for her to make a move in the process to shut the Bosasa investigation down. Mr Watson referred to Adv Jiba as the "President's person". Mr Agrizzi was also present at a meeting at Mr Mti's house during which Mr Watson spoke to Mr Zuma on the telephone. During this call, Mr Watson handed the telephone to Mr Mti saying, "your boss wants to speak to you". Mr Agrizzi recalled Mr Mti taking the phone and speaking in either Xhosa or Zulu and when he was about to finish, he said in English "I am ready to be deployed".

450. During the morning meetings held at Bosasa, Mr Watson would praise Mr Zuma. Mr Agrizzi commented that Mr Watson believed that he was "totally bulletproof" with Mr Zuma on his side.

Mr Cedric Frolick

451. Mr Frolick met Mr Watson through the acquaintance with Mr Daniel Watson. His relationship with Mr Daniel Watson started in the late 1980s when Mr Frolick became involved in non-racial sports. When Mr Frolick was elected as a member of the National Assembly, he served on the Sports and Recreation Committee. Mr Daniel Watson was elected as the President of Eastern Province Rugby in 2006/2007 and Mr Frolick was roped in as an advisor and, later, joined the Board in 2012 and served as director of the company, the professional arm of the union. It was around this time he got to know the other Watson brothers.

452. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was first introduced to Mr Frolick by Mr Daniel Watson during a period when Bosasa was under severe attack from the media. Mr Frolick was a longstanding friend of the family. Mr Daniel Watson informed Mr Agrizzi that Mr Frolick would be visiting Bosasa Business Park which, at that stage, was known as the Mogale Business Park, with a certain Buti Komphela. At that stage, Mr Agrizzi was not aware of the purpose of the meeting.

453. Mr Agrizzi was thereafter advised by Mr Watson that the purpose of the meeting was to showcase the magnitude of the Bosasa business and the diversity of the office park as well as how as a "quasi-BBBEE" company it was performing in terms of development in Southern Africa. Mr Watson stressed that Mr Frolick would be instrumental in assisting them to cross the impasse that had developed with Mr Smith. Mr Smith, at that stage, was chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services and Justice. Mr Agrizzi described Mr Smith as being very anti-Bosasa. Given that Mr Frolick had served as "chairman of chairman's" in Parliament, it is believed that he would be able to influence Mr Smith to sort out this problem with Bosasa. Mr Frolick stated that the reference to him being the "chair of chairs" could not be correct as he was only elected to the position on 18 November 2010.

454. Mr Agrizzi testified that the meeting took place and he recalled having to book flights for the gentlemen to attend the meeting. In addition, he had to arrange a golf cart to assist Mr Komphela as he was disabled and would not be able to manage the 4.5-hour tour of the facilities. After a tour of the office park, the visitors were taken to lunch. Mr Frolick disputed the duration of the meeting and stated that it did not last longer than an hour because they had intended to see the youth facility and not the office park. He also disputed that Mr Komphela was driven around in a golf cart. He advised that Mr Komphela agreed with his account of events. A confirmatory affidavit from Mr Komphela was put up by Mr Frolick in this regard.

455. According to Mr Agrizzi, a meeting was then held in a boardroom with Messrs Watson, Komphela, Frolick and Agrizzi. During this meeting they discussed a way of dealing with Mr Smith. Mr Frolick requested Mr Agrizzi to prepare a document and said that he would arrange with a Ms Bailee at the Parliamentary offices to meet with Mr Smith. Mr Frolick does not dispute that Mr Smith was discussed during his meeting with Mr Watson but denies, in his affidavit filed in terms of Rule 3(4), that Mr Agrizzi was present. He stated that Mr Watson was unhappy with the treatment Bosasa had received from the Portfolio Committee and Mr Khompela suggested that he request a meeting with Mr Smith and for Mr Frolick to assist as he was friends with Mr Smith. After discussion, they determined the best way forward was to approach Mr Smith directly. Mr Frolick undertook to attend to this as he was friends and colleagues with Mr Smith. He advised Mr Watson to request an audience with Mr Smith and that he would then talk to Mr Smith about a meeting with Bosasa. Mr Frolick explained that he entertained this discussion with Mr Watson because, as an MP, he had a general interest in concerns being raised by the public. As pointed out above, Mr Frolick denied that Mr Agrizzi was present during the discussion regarding Mr Smith.

456. Mr Agrizzi testified that he prepared the document requested by Mr Frolick. It showcased the benefits of having outsourced certain operations at correctional services. A formal introduction of Bosasa portfolio was to be used as a cover. After Mr Agrizzi drew up the introductory document requested by Mr Frolick. He asked Mr Watson whether he wished to sign it. Mr Watson's position was that one must always have a "whitey and a darky or it depends" sign documents. It was therefore suggested for a document addressed to Parliament, that Mr Gibson Njenje would sign the document. Mr Njenje was for a brief period the Chairman of Bosasa, although he was not actively involved in the business, Mr Agrizzi described him as a figurehead.

457. In essence, the purpose of the meeting which had been held was for Mr Frolick and Mr Komphela to see Bosasa's operations and its BEE work so they could go back and win over Mr Smith who was extremely anti-Bosasa. As far as Mr Agrizzi knew, Mr Frolick and Mr Komphela were not part of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services.

458. Mr Frolick testified that the visit to Bosasa was initiated after discussions with Mr Daniel Watson who informed them that there was a youth facility that required sport activities. The purpose was to get parliamentarians to note the role of sports in rehabilitating youth offenders. Mr Watson specifically requested Mr Frolick's presence since he was going to be in Johannesburg to meet with a potential sponsor for the Eastern Province Rugby Union.

459. Mr Agrizzi was asked whether Mr Watson ever addressed Mr Frolick directly in relation to any influence over Mr Smith. Mr Agrizzi responded in the affirmative and stated that there was a specific meeting where Mr Watson told Mr Frolick to do whatever is possible to ensure they could win over Smith. As an alternative measure, Mr Frolick was told to try and move Mr Smith out of the position so he could not be detrimental to Bosasa or its contract/s. Mr Agrizzi recalled that, while discussing the approach to Mr Smith, Mr Watson excused himself and went to the vault. Upon his return, Mr Watson called Mr Frolick into the passageway and placed a security bag in Mr Frolick's pocket. Mr Agrizzi was certain that the security bag contained money.

460. Mr Frolick disputes that Mr Watson left the meeting to go to the vault. Mr Frolick denied receiving money from Mr Watson or any person during this visit or that he was alone with Mr Watson. He describes the suggestion that he met alone with Mr Watson as being "untrue and artificial" because he was in the company of Mr Komphela for the duration of the visit.

461. At around the time of which Mr Agrizzi was referring in his evidence (approximately 2010), Mr Smith was instrumental in allowing Adv Willie Hofmeyr to present the SIU Report on Bosasa to the Portfolio Committee. Certain people were not happy about Adv Hofmeyr being allowed to speak to the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee about the Report and the allegations contained therein. Mr Agrizzi recalled Mr Biebuyck authoring a letter to several people informing them that Bosasa intended to bring an application to prevent the State Attorney and Adv Willie Hofmeyr from presenting any details of the SIU Report. Mr Oellermann explained that the SIU is required by statute to report to Parliament on various matters. Mr Oellermann attended Parliament with Adv Willie Hofmeyr because he was involved in the investigation, as the SIU was giving feedback on the DCS investigations in general. Mr Oellermann testified that in 2009 Adv Willie Hofmeyr presented some of the key findings made during the investigation but was not specific with names or detail. Adv Willie Hofmeyr did provide an indication of some of the major concerns arising during the investigation. Mr Oellermann described the members of the Portfolio Committee as being shocked. He recalled that a member had approached them after the presentation and informed them that he had never experienced such blatant irregularities and evidence of possible corruption and asked them to ensure that the matter gets finalised and handed over to the relevant authorities.

462. Mr Agrizzi testified that he vividly remembered Mr Watson instructing him to arrange R40,000 to be delivered to Mr Frolick every month. Mr Watson said this would be the standard arrangement and that he would arrange to take it to Mr Frolick whenever he went to Port Elizabeth or give it to his brother Mr Valence Watson to take down for him. Mr Agrizzi questioned how Mr Watson would be able to take that amount of money in cash on a plane without security picking it up. Mr Watson responded that they never checked, and he would get "Bosasa guys" to carry his bags and surround him so that no-one would really worry to check his bags.

463. Mr Frolick confirmed having visited Mr Valence Watson's house on several occasions. He does not recall being in a meeting with Mr Agrizzi at the house. Mr Frolick checked his re-collection with Mr Valence Watson who could also not remember such a meeting. Mr Frolick pointed out that Mr Agrizzi could remember details about Mr Valence Watson's furniture but could not provide a timeframe when the meeting for the handover of money allegedly took place. Mr Frolick denied a meeting at Mr Valence Watson's house or anywhere else in Port Elizabeth. He further denies having received money from Mr Valence Watson. He stated that Mr Agrizzi provided no information on how monthly payments were made to Mr Frolick.

464. Generally, Mr Frolick denied receiving money from Bosasa, Mr Gavin Watson or Mr Valence Watson. He received amounts totalling R25,000 from Mr Valence Watson during 2014 as a contribution to the ANC's election fund. These funds were handed to the regional treasurer of the ANC. He also received a desktop computer for his office from Mr Daniel Watson for use by learners/students. This, together with two shirts, two pairs of shoes and a belt from Mr Daniel Watson for Mr Frolick's birthday was declared. In respect of other benefits to Mr Frolick, Mr Agrizzi testified that he was able to get a copy of an invoice from Blakes Travel Agency for a stay at City Lodge OR Tambo for "Guest Frolich Mr C" from 21/8/2010 to 22/8/2010 in an amount of R2,744.28. The Dr is made out to "EP Rugby c/o Mr D Watson". The invoice was emailed to Dr Smith on 14 December 2010. As appears from the email, Mr Daniel Watson had called Dr Smith and told him that Bosasa must pay for this invoice

465. Mr Frolick stated that the invoice from Blake's Travel was for accommodation while he attended a test match between the Springboks and All Blacks in his capacity as an advisor to the Eastern Province Rugby Union ("EPRU"). He was under the impression that these costs were borne by the EPRU. Mr Frolick testified that he did not get involved in operational issues such as the travel arrangements. Mr Daniel Watson did not explain to him why the travel was arranged by Bosasa. In his affidavit filed at the Commission, Mr Blake confirms that this booking was made through Blake's Travel and provides the details of further bookings made on behalf of Mr Frolick. Mr Blake states that the bookings were initially issued to EPRU, later changed to C Venter and were paid for in cash by Mr Agrizzi or his wife, as per the agreed procedure. Mr Blake identifies four invoices that were paid for by EPRU, and one paid for by Mr Frolick on behalf of Ms Goliath.

466. Mr Agrizzi explained that he had a meeting with Mr Njenje before meeting with Mr Smith to inform him that he was simply there to dilute Mr Agrizzi's whiteness and that he should just follow Mr Agrizzi's lead. Mr Agrizzi recalled Mr Njenje not being comfortable with the situation, but he was doing it because Mr Watson asked him to do so. Mr Agrizzi and Mr Njenje went to Parliament and were met by Mr Frolick and taken to wait in a specific office. Mr Frolick testified that they did not expect Mr Agrizzi to attend the meeting. Mr Frolick thereafter returned with Mr Smith who appeared visibly annoyed to see Mr Agrizzi and Mr Njenje there. Mr Agrizzi did not think that Mr Smith knew about the meeting. Mr Frolick confirmed that Mr Smith, Mr Agrizzi and Mr Njenje briefly met. He said that the meeting took place in his absence, and he does not know what was said. Mr Frolick testified that Mr Smith did not raise a concern that he was ambushed by the meeting or that it was unannounced. Mr Frolick did not engage further with Mr Smith on this issue because he did not want to come across as putting him into an uncomfortable situation.

467. Mr Agrizzi described his meeting with Mr Smith as being very abrupt. While he tried to provide Mr Smith with the documents providing an introduction of the business, Mr Smith indicated that he was very busy and had to go to a meeting. Mr Frolick confirmed that Mr Smith was in a hurry due to another engagement. It most definitely did not seem as if Mr Smith had changed his mind on Bosasa.

468. Mr Smith testified that Mr Agrizzi (and the delegation's) visit was "facilitated by the Chair of Chairs, Mr Frolick", who had indicated to Mr Smith that there was a delegation that wanted to see him. Mr Smith could not recall if Mr Frolick was the Chair of Chairs in 2009 but testified that "towards the end", Mr Frolick held this position. Mr Smith did not know the capacity in which Mr Frolick brought the delegation to him. Mr Smith testified that he went to see the delegation at a venue that Mr Frolick had arranged, and that the meeting took place in 2009 when he was elected Chairperson. At the time, Mr Smith knew the name Bosasa by virtue of his relationship with Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi testified that after this meeting Mr Njenje and Mr Agrizzi joined Mr Frolick for lunch at the canteen and Mr Frolick paid for the lunch on his card. Mr Frolick confirms this.

469. Mr Smith was referred to minutes of a meeting of the Portfolio Committee held on 17 November 2009, which confirm that the issue of corruption in Bosasa had been raised before it in 2009. Mr Smith was unable to confirm whether Mr Frolick would have been privy to the minutes or the discussion of the Portfolio Committee and said that there was no obligation on the Portfolio Committee to submit their minutes to any person and so it was possible that Mr Frolick never had sight of the minutes. Mr Smith testified that the SIU Report was a very worrisome report and that all members of the Portfolio Committee unambiguously agreed with that position.

470. Mr Agrizzi recalled that in and around 2015, Mr Watson was very excited because he was going to be meeting the then Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development. Mr Watson explained that there was going to be an ANC meeting or rally in Port Elizabeth and Mr Frolick was going to help him organise accommodation for Minister Michael Masutha and that they would have a meeting. Mr Agrizzi recalled Mr Watson explaining to him that Mr Frolick had offered Minister Masutha accommodation at a game reserve or wildlife estate at a house which belonged to Mr Watson. Mr Frolick denied the house was on an estate, stating that it was "literally a few minutes away from the Nelson Mandela Bay Stadium".

471. Mr Frolick stated that accommodation was arranged for Minister Masutha and other comrades involved in community- and sector-related matters in the run-up to the 2016 local government elections. It was arranged by Mr Valence Watson's wife as no other accommodation could be found. The house was used by the Minister for one night and it was situated in a residential area. Mr Frolick explained that the arrangements were not for the Minister alone. Mr Frolick also secured accommodation for the support staff of Deputy Minister Bapela.

472. Mr Agrizzi explained that Mr Frolick and Mr Watson had planned to make it seem as if there was no accommodation for members of the ANC and on that basis, accommodation could be offered by Bosasa or by Mr Watson. To Mr Agrizzi's knowledge, the meeting with Minister Masutha took place. Mr Watson was accompanied by Mr Valence Watson, probably because Mr Valence Watson was more known in political circles than Mr Gavin Watson. Mr Agrizzi did not believe the meeting with Minister Masutha was a success. He testified that if it was successful, he would have received a phone call from Mr Watson exclaiming so, as he usually did. On this occasion, he "did not really comment much".

473. In late 2016, a tender was submitted for the catering contracts for the DCS. The then Commissioner was "Zach Modise and he was being attended to by Leshabane. That was the contact and Sesinyi Seopela". Mr Agrizzi was concerned about the catering tender of the DCS and used other consultants namely Mr Nkabinde and Mr Sekgota. Mr Agrizzi explained that it was a "straight tender" and he had got information that Bosasa was the cheapest at that stage and "we should have got everything". There were ten management areas of the DCS. However, it appeared the DCS had issued out two other management areas to other companies.

474. On the advice of Mr Watson, Bosasa instituted proceedings to set aside the award of these contracts to its competitors. In this regard, it utilised the services of Mr Biebuyck as well as Adv Etienne Theron. The day before the application was to be heard, Mr Watson arrived with some of the directors and stated that they had to take a resolution that they were not going to proceed with the application. The reason for this was because Mr Watson had received political advice that it would be suicide if they went ahead with the application. Mr Agrizzi challenged Mr Watson's suggestion that they abandon the court proceedings on the basis that he believed they had a strong legal footing to challenge the award of the tenders. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Watson then informed Mr Agrizzi to hear the advice directly from the horse's mouth and put Mr Frolick on the phone who advised that the litigation must be withdrawn.

475. Mr Frolick denies having a telephonic discussion or having instructed that the litigation be withdrawn. He stated that Mr Watson called him on a Wednesday morning while he was with his attorneys and two Bosasa directors to obtain a view on the litigation against the DOJCD. Mr Frolick advised them to consider the impact the litigation could have on their future business relationships with government. Mr Frolick however advised them to proceed with the case if they believed it was in Bosasa's best interests. Mr Frolick stated that he advised Mr Watson as a friend but stated ultimately it was their decision whether to proceed with the litigation. In explaining why Mr Frolick and Mr Smith were consulted on the litigation against the DCS, despite Mr Smith's attitude to Bosasa having not changed, Mr Agrizzi stated that for a long period of time, Mr Smith was friendly towards Bosasa following a meeting (discussed above) that was held at a hotel on Rivonia Road. Both Mr Smith and Mr Frolick agreed that the litigation should be withdrawn. The meeting with Mr Smith at Parliament coincided more or less with the release of the SIU Report for the first time which had been around 2009 and 2010 and the meeting with Mr Smith in Rivonia Road took place during 2011. The events that Mr Agrizzi was recalling relating to the advice to withdraw the litigation from Mr Frolick and Mr Smith took place in 2016 / 2017.

476. Mr Agrizzi was asked whether Mr Smith was won over because of Mr Frolick's efforts or through other efforts made by Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi responded that it could be both. Although he did not know specifically the position with Mr Frolick, he did know that Ms Winnie Ngwenya and Mr Magashula were the people that eventually won Mr Smith over during the meeting that was held in Rivonia Road in 2011.

477. Mr Frolick was referred to his call records which showed a call from Ms Mokonyane on 6 March 2017. He testified that he did not recall receiving a call from Ms Mokonyane. He only recalled a discussion with her in and around 2017 when she was unhappy with an issue in relation to her water and sanitation committee. The telephone records showing a call to his phone from Ms Mokonyane relates to a phone that is used by his child who is very active in the ANC in the Western Cape. Mr Frolick was also referred to a telephone record showing a call from Mr Gumede on the 11 December 2017. He describes Mr Gumede as an old comrade who worked for Bosasa, and Mr Leshabane as someone that worked for a subsidiary of Bosasa. He did not know Mr Dlamini. He explained that his number is publicly available on the Parliamentary website.

Mr Gwede Mantashe

478. Mr Agrizzi's version is that he was tasked by Mr Watson to attend to "special projects", which included installation and maintenance of security at Mr Mantashe's residences. Mr Agrizzi stated that he was aware that the installations done at the homes of Mr Mantashe were, according to Mr Agrizzi, "all . . . paid [for] by Bosasa Operations and not by a director as alluded to", i.e., not by Mr Leshabane in his personal capacity. The reason why Mr Agrizzi says this, is as follows. The whole issue was kept away from him by Mr Leshabane. They had arranged with one of the other technical heads, Mr Francois Cronjé, to go out and to do a site survey at a property in Boksburg, Sunward Park. This was the first installation undertaken where they appointed a subcontractor. Mr Agrizzi confronted Mr Watson about this and he initially denied having any knowledge of agreeing to fund the installations, but later conceded that he had done so. Mr Agrizzi knew that Mr Leshabane would not have made a personal donation to fund the installations and had committed Bosasa to doing them. Knowing this, Mr Agrizzi instructed Mr le Roux to continue with it and Mr le Roux made the payments from money that he received in cash from Mr Van Zyl.

479. Mr le Roux testified that Mr Leshabane instructed him to attend to the following at three of Mr Mantashe's premises: CTV, lighting, perimeter and DVR at a house in Sunward Park, Boksburg; CCTV, IP system and lighting at a farm in Elliot in the Eastern Cape; and CCTV, IP system and lighting at a house in Cala in rural Eastern Cape.

480. Mr le Roux estimated the cost of the project as being R300,000. Mr Agrizzi conservatively estimated the total cost of installations for three sites for Mr Mantashe to be R650,000. This would be based only on an alarm system and 6-zone camera installation. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that the same equipment, lights and fencing were used for all the people who benefitted from what was called the "special projects". Mr Agrizzi said there was no doubt in his mind that the payments for these installations were done by Bosasa and they were covered up by using cash.

481. Mr Agrizzi stated that the account that the technicians opened at Regal and other suppliers was in Mr Agrizzi's name and he could pull up all the invoices for the investigators if required. Once he conceded having authorised the installations, Mr Watson explained to Mr Agrizzi that Bosasa's purpose in assisting Mr Mantashe was because Mr Mantashe is a "brilliant connection" to have. At that stage, he was Secretary-General of the ANC "who controls the rest of the people". He was also highly placed with the trade unions and in government. When it was pointed out to Mr Agrizzi that he does not mention any assistance that Mr Mantashe gave him, he answered that one did not know what other assistance was happening behind the scenes, like the situation with Ms Mokonyane.

482. Mr le Roux also confirmed that they assisted Mr Mantashe with maintenance work and assisted his security person, Mr Mzonke, with playing back security camera footage. To this end, he attached a WhatsApp message from Mr Mzonke requesting such assistance.

483. Mr Mantashe admits that cameras were installed at his properties in Boksburg, Elliot and Cala in the Eastern Cape. He explained that he had experienced attempted break-ins at his property in Boksburg. He therefore had a discussion with his security advisor (employed by the ANC) to deal with his security. It was then agreed that cameras should be installed. The task was handed over to his security advisor, Mr Mzuphela "Mzonke" Nyakaza, to attend to. However, Mr Leshabane later offered to give Mr Nyakaza "better cameras because the cameras we got from Game, were of [a lesser] quality". The camera installation at the Boksburg premises was done in July 2013. After the success of the installation done in Boksburg, this was repeated at Mr Mantashe's Eastern Cape properties in 2016. When asked who he engaged to install the cameras at his Eastern Cape properties, Mr Mantashe explained that, in the political setting, there is a very strict division of labour. He therefore kept out of the security arrangements, and this was handed by Mr Nyakaza.

484. Later, Mr Mantashe testified that he was not aware of who paid for the security installations at the time. When asked who he thought was paying for the security installations, he said "Papa and Mzonke and had arrangement that Papa would offer security that were of higher quality and he will do that his own costs (sic)."

485. There was a time, however, when he had a discussion with Mr Leshabane about the offer for the cameras at his Boksburg property and who would be responsible for the costs. Mr Leshabane said that he would assume responsibility for paying the costs. He was not sure what was discussed between Mr Nyakaza and Mr Leshabane regarding the payment of the security cameras at the other properties. He did not enquire whether Mr Nyakaza had approached Mr Leshabane. Mr Mantashe described the "nitty gritties" of the security arrangements as resting with Mr Nyakaza and that he was approached by his security team on a "need to know" basis. He initially stated that his security is financed by the ANC but later said "I did not say the ANC would pay for the installation" and instead remarked that the ANC was "responsible" for his security.

486. At the time the security installations were funded by Mr Leshabane (approximately 2013), Mr Mantashe was the Secretary-General of the ANC. The installations undertaken in 2016 occurred when he was still Secretary-General of the ANC. Mr Mantashe was aware that Mr Leshabane was working at Bosasa at the time he funded the security installations but stated that "we [as in the ANC] had no tensions with Bosasa at the time". He went on to say that he did not have a problem at the time that Mr Leshabane was working at Bosasa because it was a group that was initiated by ANC women. Mr Mantashe was asked if Mr Leshabane indicated whether the money was going to come from his pocket or from Bosasa. He answered that Leshabane said that "he will carry the cost".

487. When asked whether he was aware at the time that Bosasa had been awarded contracts by the government, Mr Mantashe responded that he was not in government at the time and that the only thing he knew about Bosasa was the West Rand Youth Centre. Other contracts "were really not [his] business". Mr Mantashe was not uncomfortable with Mr Leshabane paying for his security installations because, even though Bosasa had contracts with several government departments he was not one of those Ministers.

488. It was put to Mantashe that the Secretary-General and the executive committee of the ANC are very influential in government appointments including the appointment of government ministers. Mr Mantashe confirmed that, as Secretary-General of the ANC, he formed part of the NEC. He however stated that it would be unfair to ask him questions on the appointment of ministers and high-ranking government officials given that the Commission has asked the NEC to "come here and explain the issue of deployment" and it would be incorrect for him to be asked to give that evidence on 19 March 2021.

489. Mr Mantashe knew of Mr Watson from his time working with the mines. To his knowledge, Mr Watson had tried to bribe shop stewards to secure catering contracts at the time. He was aware that Mr Watson was the CEO of Bosasa. When it was put to him that it was strange to accept the funding from Mr Leshabane who was employed by a company headed by a person that previously attempted to bribe shop stewards, Mantashe stated that he was not worried about this because he is not a person amenable to bribes and is known for this. Now that he is a minister, Mr Mantashe stated that gifts arising from a social arrangement would be declared.

490. It was put to Mr Mantashe that Mr Watson adopted a clan name and was asked whether he knew it. He answered "I do not know. If you know that he has the clan name, tell us." Mr Mantashe did not dispute that Mr le Roux was present at the installation of the security cameras but did not remember speaking to him. He was questioned about Mr le Roux's recollection that Mr Mantashe arrived in a red "FJ Toyota Cruiser" and was asked whether he remembered having a car like that. He said, "I do not remember I had it". He did not recall that, using Mr Watson's clan name, he told Mr le Roux that he should thank Mr Watson on Mr Mantashe's behalf for the installations. Mr Mantashe said that that was the reason why he wanted to cross-examine Mr le Roux.

491. Mr Mantashe was again questioned about Mr Watson's clan name and whether it was Scally or Secaly. He answered "[i]t is not Secaly. It is not close to that. I know that", demonstrating that he did in fact know Mr Watson's clan name. He was again asked what the clan name was. He answered "People, you see you want me to give you information to use it against me, you know." When pressed on the issue he said, "Gavin Watson was known as Radebe".

492. No invoices were sent to Mr Mantashe for the installations at the Boksburg or Eastern Cape properties. He therefore did not know the cost of the installations. Mr Mantashe did not dispute the costing provided by Mr le Roux because he had no dealings with Mr le Roux or Mr Agrizzi. He pointed out, however, that there was a dispute regarding the cost as between Mr le Roux and Mr Agrizzi, with Mr Agrizzi almost doubling the cost, which, to Mr Mantashe appeared suspicious.

Mr Thabang Makwetla

493. Mr le Roux testified that the Special Projects team attended to "Project Bramley". This involved a security installation for Mr Thabang Makwetla, the Deputy-Minister for Correctional Services. According to Mr le Roux, this was on instruction from Mr Watson and, at the time, even Mr Agrizzi was not aware of the project. Mr le Roux stated that the work undertaken for Mr Makwetla included the installation of a full electric fence and alarm systems, maintenance on these systems, and installation of an IP CCTV system, Cathexis Server and off-site monitoring capabilities. The approximate value of the work undertaken was R308,754.25.

494. Save in respect of its value, Mr Makwetla testified that Mr le Roux's version, generally, about the security installation that was done by Bosasa at his residence is accurate. In providing context to the matters raised, Mr Makwetla testified that he received a telephone call in early-2015 from Mr Watson, requesting an urgent meeting. Mr Makwetla obliged and met with him. At the meeting, Mr Watson raised concerns that the DCS did not understand the catering industry which, according to Mr Watson, was on the verge of a crisis. Mr Watson indicated that an upward adjustment to the pricing (of the rates in terms of the catering contract with Bosasa) was required. Mr Watson explained to Mr Makwetla that two other companies also providing catering services to the DCS at the time and that Mr Watson had discovered that these companies' rates were higher than Bosasa's rates. Mr Watson had requested that Bosasa be paid at the same rate as the other two companies. He requested the Ministry's intervention to assist in the renegotiation of the rates because Bosasa's catering operations were not making money. Mr Watson indicated that Bosasa should be paid at the same rate as the other two companies and requested Mr Makwetla's assistance. Mr Makwetla took this suggestion to the accountant general of the Department.

495. During a discussion about the festive season that had recently passed, Mr Makwetla informed Mr Watson of a burglary that had taken place at his residence in Johannesburg and explained that he had been unable to source a service provider to install an electric fence at his premises because of the time of year. Mr Watson indicated that Bosasa could assist him very quickly. Mr Makwetla testified that he was surprised because he had visited Bosasa in December 2014 to familiarise himself with its operations and the services being provided to the Department, and that he was not aware that Bosasa was involved in home security. Mr Makwetla said that he was pleased to be advised that Bosasa did home security and had asked Mr Watson to send a team to his residence to do an evaluation and to provide a quotation.

496. Mr Makwetla was questioned on whether he found it strange that Bosasa would provide him with security services when it had a contract with the Department and had requested his intervention on its behalf regarding its rates in terms of its contract. He said "[n]o, not at all" because he requested a service that he was going to pay for, so there was no conflict of interest. He further pointed out that Mr Watson had requested his assistance on the rates before he raised his home security.

497. When Mr Makwetla returned to his residence a week or two after he had met with Mr Watson, he found that the installation of security features was almost complete, and the only outstanding work was because the Bosasa team did not have access to the inside of his house. He arranged for his son to allow them access during the week to complete the work as he was in Cape Town during the week and lived in a government house in Pretoria. Mr Makwetla testified that he telephoned Mr Watson enquiring about the cost because he had not yet been provided with a quote. Mr Watson said that it should not worry him and that he would explain everything when they next met. Mr Makwetla was anxious because he observed aspects of the installation that he had not requested and did not understand the purpose of and was keen to meet with Mr Watson as soon as possible.

498. Mr Makwetla testified that he could not do much at the time because the works were almost complete and because of his relationship of mutual respect with Mr Watson. He did not want to undermine their comradeship and he sought a resolution in a way that would not suggest that he was "playing to the gallery and wanting to make [himself], you know, a better more disciplined person in terms of, you know, appearance, you know, to procedure."

499. Upon his return to Johannesburg at the end of the week, Mr Makwetla met with Mr Watson who said that he would not charge him for the work because the cost was insignificant to him. Mr Makwetla said that he was shocked at the time because he thought that Mr Watson would appreciate that he could not make such an offer because Bosasa was doing business with the DCS at the time. Mr

Makwetla explained to Mr Watson that he could not accept a favour from Bosasa for this reason. Mr Makwetla also testified that he did not expect Mr Watson to make such a proposal because he had heard about reports in the media about Bosasa, as far back as six years prior to 2015 when he was the Premier of Mpumalanga, and that a person would not want to be involved with Bosasa.

500. Mr Makwetla testified that he resolved to take the matter up with then President Zuma because Mr Watson had indicated that he had access to the President whom he saw from time to time. Mr Makwetla was of the view that the President would take it up with Mr Watson and explain that it could not be allowed. Despite several attempts by Mr Makwetla to meet with President Zuma, no meeting took place. Mr Makwetla indicated that he secured a meeting with President Ramaphosa in December 2018, although he had requested a meeting from January 2018 to brief him about the matter. By the time he met with President Ramaphosa, the fact of the installation at his residence had been made public. Mr Watson had contacted him, acknowledged that Mr Makwetla had been correct and apologised for what he had done. Mr Watson indicated that he would send an invoice to Mr Makwetla who advised Mr Watson that the damage had been done and that he should direct his apology to Parliament's Ethics Committee. Mr Makwetla attached a draft letter that Mr Watson had sent him at the time to his submission to the Ethics Committee. In the letter, Mr Watson proposed that Mr Makwetla pay the amount to a charity organisation, which Mr Makwetla refused to do instead insisting Mr Watson send him the invoice.

501. The invoice was for an amount of R90,000 including VAT but it was not itemised. Mr Makwetla indicated to Mr Watson that he "[did] not have that budget" and that he was only going to pay for the items that he had requested and not for the items installed that he had not requested. Mr Makwetla paid R25,000, which was never queried or disputed by Bosasa. Mr Makwetla testified that he did not obtain a quotation to assess the value of the work at the time; instead, he used a previous report by the government that had assessed the security measures at his residence. Mr Makwetla had made the payment by the time that he met with President Ramaphosa. The payment was made in two separate amounts – one of R15,000 (for the installation of the electric fence) and a second of R10,000 (for the repair to the home installation). It was done on this basis because Mr Makwetla did not have the full amount at his disposal to pay at one time.

502. The Ethics Committee found Mr Makwetla guilty of breaching certain provisions of the code in that he had breached the public trust when he allowed Bosasa to conduct work at his private residence that was not paid for. Mr Makwetla explained that he did not agree with the Ethics Committee that buying from a company that did business with the Department was a conflict of interest. Mr Makwetla indicated that there may be circumstances where it would differ and be dependent on the specific facts. He said that he had requested a quote from Mr Watson because he had still wanted to confirm the amount to protect himself. Mr Makwetla admitted that he knows now that doing so was a conflict of interest but that at the time, he did not know that a situation such as this would arise.

BOSASA AND THE ANC

The "War Room" for the ANC

503. Mr Agrizzi referred to the setting up of operational centres for elections as the "War Rooms". He was asked to explain what the War Room referred to in a newspaper article was, how it came about that Bosasa funded and created the War Room, and how it was run. Mr Agrizzi testified that "War Rooms" were set up for Mr Zuma for the ANC's national conference in Mangaung in 2012 and for the ANC for the national elections in 2014 and the local government elections in 2016 and certain other elections. Although Mr Agrizzi was told to get the centres running, he did not get involved in what he referred to as the "nitty gritty" because this task would consume the company for up to two or three months at a time.

504. Mr Agrizzi testified that Bosasa had a massive call centre. One half dealt with government fleet contracts. The other half was vacant. It was initially built to deal with the integration of CCTV access control for the DOJCD but that never happened. Mr Agrizzi was told to kit out the centre with new computers, new video boards and ANC branding. They also had to convert the lodge for volunteers and provide them with food three times a day because some Ministers were at the facility. Mr Agrizzi said, if he asked a question about these War Rooms, he was told to just shut up and do it and that everything, like the SIU matter, would go away.

505. Mr Vorster testified that in approximately 2014, he was instructed by Mr Watson, Mr Leshabane and Mr Gumede to set up the vacant half of the Kgwerano call centre for the ANC to run its call centre prior to the national elections. All related expenses were covered by Mr Vorster's allocated budget for Kgwerano.

506. In response to an email produced by Mr Agrizzi which appears to be a report of the call centre statistics and canvassing information reports, to Ms Mokonyane's PA, Ms Mokonyane pointed out that there was nothing untoward about the contents of the email. The email was providing information in terms of canvassing and voter turnout. She indicated that she only had brief interactions with Mr Agrizzi when operations were live at events such as this and all arrangements were done between Bosasa and the ANC directly and not with Ms Mokonyane personally.

507. Mr Vorster testified that, after the national elections, Bosasa Operations paid for a function at its premises which was managed by the general manager of the office park, Mr Allister Esau. The process was driven from the ANC side by Ms Mokonyane. Mr Agrizzi was asked by the Chairperson whether Bosasa's name was up for everybody to see at the War Rooms. Mr Agrizzi explained that Bosasa was not branded everywhere; however, it was done subtly. For example, people would eat in the diner and see the Bosasa campus and would be impressed by what they saw.

508. Mr Agrizzi explained that people would know that Bosasa was involved because there were many times where Ministers and MECs visited the facilities. Mr Agrizzi indicated that the installation and its operation for Mangaung lasted two months. The installation and operation for the national elections ran for two to three months. This operation was stationed at the Bosasa head office. The call centre at the Bosasa head offices housed 100 call centre seats and it was split in two – the operational side on the right-hand side and the left-hand side is reserved for the "War Room" type of operation.

Response by the President of the ANC

509. In his opening statement before the Commission, appearing as President and former Deputy-President of the ANC, President Ramaphosa stated that the government and the governing party would not shy away from appearing before the Commission so that they may shed light on the matters it is dealing with and assist the Commission in fulfilling its mandate. President Ramaphosa indicated that the Commission is the instrument through which South Africa as a nation seeks to understand the nature and extent of state capture and to confront it, to hold those responsible to account and to take the necessary measures and steps to ensure that such events never occur again. President Ramaphosa explained that the ANC's position was to support the objectives and work of the Commission, knowing that it would be placed under great scrutiny and that the process of examining matters would very likely be difficult and painful for the ANC.

510. In the President's affidavit, he explained that, despite the absence of an official policy on donations, there is an expectation in the ANC, based on the ANC constitution, its principles and values, that the ANC would not knowingly accept monies that are the product of a criminal act, are offered in exchange for favours or from a source known to engage in illegal or unethical activities. President Ramaphosa confirmed the principle that the ANC would not knowingly receive funding from tainted hands. He explained that breaches of the principle present a problem because the money would have already been donated to the ANC, and, as a political party that is strapped for cash, the money would be used for a variety of activities that would not allow for a refund. President Ramaphosa further explained that these issues would be addressed through the Political Funding Act, which would bring about transparency and was in many ways "revolutionary".

511. The evidence leader stated that it must have been known to parties in government, the administration, and the executive that Bosasa was heavily reliant on government contracts, particularly the DCS, and that it must have been known that the ANC benefitted as well, including through the elections war room and Mr Zuma's birthday party. He asked President Ramaphosa how it could have happened that the ANC continued to receive benefits from a company that relied heavily on government contracts without a thorough investigation of what was taking place. President Ramaphosa responded that "it did happen." He said that it was one of the anomalous events that did happen. He said that it was prominent in his mind to see what they could do to prevent it from happening and that, on the one hand, the Political Funding Act "is going to be our saviour." President Ramaphosa further testified that, if a company donated money to a political party, and in some form does business with government, but the funding is not provided in return for getting contracts, and it happens openly and transparently, then it should not be a problem. Transparency, openness, and a limitation on the amount donated were described as measures of control that would stop any entity being able to have control over a political party.

512. The Chairperson asked, having regard to the number of years that Bosasa enjoyed contracts with government departments and the fact that allegations of its involvement in irregular and corrupt contracts were made public in the media for a long period of time, which the ANC ought to have been aware of, whether the ANC turned a blind eye because it was receiving donations from Bosasa. The President indicated that was one of the issues that he would address at the end of his evidence. He acknowledged that the Chairperson was "absolutely right" and that the ANC should have been aware that there were problems in relation to Bosasa obtaining contracts unlawfully and unfairly.

513. Relating to the matter of party funding, two issues were put to President Ramaphosa. First it is difficult to accept that vigilant members of the ANC would not have known Bosasa was helping the ANC through donations and benefits, Second, given that Bosasa was the recipient of large contracts under dubious circumstances from government, how could it be that the party continued to receive benefits from and be financed by Bosasa.

514. President Ramaphosa considered the above to be a "very valid" query and accepted that one should have been aware of this at an earlier stage. He stated that he had visited the election centre which Bosasa financed during the election campaign and it "never really. . . occurred to [him that Bosasa was] bank rolling or [that it] was financing in full that whole centre for – on behalf of the ANC". He stated that the Treasurer-General and other ANC members who ran the elections were aware, but it did not occur to him. President Ramaphosa reiterated that the ANC would not knowingly and intentionally accept donations from companies or donors who had been involved in criminal activity and it should be regarded as a major lapse on the part of the ANC in accepting the funding from Bosasa, particularly given that it had been proven that Bosasa had obtained its contracts unlawfully. It was put to President Ramaphosa that it is difficult to avoid the conclusion on the facts that, despite stating that the ANC would not knowingly accept donations, there was a breach of this principle in circumstances of the ANC receiving donations from Bosasa while key ANC officials, including the President of the time, knew of the concerns regarding Bosasa's conduct. This was accepted by President Ramaphosa.

515. It was put to President Ramaphosa that the reason why there was no reporting of this specific receipt of donations from Bosasa was that the then President was in control of the party. President Ramaphosa responded "Yes, certainly the President plays a very key role in the life [of] the party . . . she leads . . . and provides leadership and gives direction".

516. Turning to the issue of the CR17 donation from Bosasa into the FNB account, President Ramaphosa stated that there were aspects that needed to be considered:

    516.1 The campaign managers had taken a conscious decision that they would not involve President Ramaphosa at all in the fundraising process. This was to create a wall so that those funders who give money would never think that there is anything that they will get in return for such funding. Although he met some of his funders at dinners, it was merely to advise them of what he was seeking to achieve in his candidature.

    516.2 The campaign managers also solicited money directly from President Ramaphosa which he gave, and it was put in an account. He was not and still is not aware of how those funds were managed, save to say that there was proper record-keeping and accounting.

517. Seemingly based on hearsay evidence obtained after the event, President Ramaphosa testified that one of his colleagues approached one of the Watson brothers whom the colleague knew from many years previously in the ANC and UDF structures. The Watson brother referred to must be Mr Gavin Watson, because President Ramaphosa referred to his colleague as knowing him "before he passed away". The colleague specifically indicated to Mr Watson that he wanted him to provide funding in his personal capacity and not through the company. However, the news reports seem to suggest that this money came from Bosasa, although he thought "the money never really came from there".

518. President Ramaphosa was "far away from the finances that financed the CR17 Campaign". He commented that the ANC has arrived at a situation where there are formal campaigns that are now mounted for people to be elected to positions when it should never be a campaign-style type of contestation for leadership. He considered this approach to be regrettable. A billion rand was not raised in funding. President Ramaphosa was told that the amount that was raised was some R 300m or so.

519. President Ramaphosa made it clear to his colleagues that he never wanted to be part of a campaign that descends into "deviant . . . behaviours that we talk about in the ANC about vote buying. And I said that I would rather lose the race . . . than have votes bought."

520. The campaign funds were used to transport people, for food costs, to hire venues, and for purchasing paraphernalia like T-shirts and caps to be given out for the campaign. There is still a debt that is to be paid after that campaign that happened in 2017. The people who were running the campaign were methodical about recording the funds received and the source of these funds. At times, these funds were paid into the accounts of other persons so that they could be used for venues, etc. President Ramaphosa confirmed that he was never involved in this.

521. People who donated to the campaign did so before the new law on political party funding came to be and they expected their identity and the fact that they donated to a campaign be kept out of the media. The campaign managers agreed to this confidentiality and President Ramaphosa did not know how much specific donors contributed. President Ramaphosa claimed that there was nothing sinister about the CR17 campaign funding. Mr Watson may have transferred money from one account to another which gave the Public Protector the perception that money was being laundered, but there was no such money laundering.

522. After the story regarding the alleged Bosasa's contributions broke, President Ramaphosa said to the NEC of the ANC that they needed to regulate how internal leadership contests are managed in the ANC, i.e., the issue of funding, the management of campaigns, how money should be given and issues of accountability.

523. President Ramaphosa accepted that:

    523.1 Principles applied to party funding should apply to individual campaigns within the party; and

    523.2 There should be a limitation of how much should be given when candidates are raising money for internal contests to avoid a situation where you could have huge amounts coming from one donor. He referred to there now being a limit of R15m. This would allow for greater transparency, openness, and confidence in the process.

524. President Ramaphosa conceded that there was enough information relating to donations from Bosasa that demonstrated a breach of the principle that the ANC would never knowingly accept donations that were the proceeds of criminal conduct, such that there should possibly have been an internal investigation. However, he pointed out the limitations of a party undertaking such investigations (e.g., the Secretary-General does not have the power to subpoena documents and evidence) but accepted the investigation could have been outsourced.

THE ROLE OF CONSULTANTS, FORMER EMPLOYEES AND RELATED ENTITIES

525. In this section the evidence on the role consultants, former employees and related entities played in furthering Bosasa's business interests is outlined.

526. Mr Agrizzi was introduced to Mr Seopela during 2005/2006 at a meeting with Mr Watson, Mr Mansell, Mr van Tonder, Mr Leshabane and Mr Watson's children at Tasha's Restaurant at the Hyde Park shopping centre. Mr Agrizzi was informed that Mr Seopela was a former bodyguard and driver to the late Mr Peter Mokaba, was a previous ANC Youth League leader, had an LLB degree but had never done articles or practised as an attorney, was very close to the previous detail of the late President Nelson Mandela, was very influential in government circles and had been substantially involved with Mr Fana Hlongwane in relation to the Arms Deal.

527. Mr Seopela became employed in Consilium as a consultant and "was being managed by Dr Jurgen Smith and Watson". Mr Watson and Mr Seopela worked on tenders together. In this regard Mr Agrizzi refers to a video that was in the press during which Mr Watson stands up at an imbizo and calls Mr Seopela and asked him to explain as the "Commander" what must be done at night. Mr Agrizzi explained that they would talk about having caucus tenders at night and Mr Gumede would get pulled into these conversations. Mr Seopela was also instrumental in arranging the meeting with Mr Vincent Smith in 2011 when Mr Agrizzi was asked to accompany Mr Watson.

528. During 2011, Mr Agrizzi was instructed by Mr Watson to purchase a new vehicle for Mr Seopela along with a company expense card and company credit card for petrol. These expenses were not deducted from his income.

529. Mr Agrizzi described Mr Seopela's function as consultant to liaise with potential clients of Bosasa and "to get involved with politicians which he had introduced us to." According to Mr Agrizzi he was informed by Mr Seopela that the DOJCD was looking to investigate the implementation of new security systems, including access control and surveillance equipment. This must have been around 2010. Mr Seopela told Mr Agrizzi that he was well-connected with high-ranking officials in the NPA, Hawks and the erstwhile Scorpions. Mr Seopela told Mr Agrizzi and others that Bosasa could benefit from his interactions, which went right up to ministerial level, from tenders that were coming out.

530. To this end, Mr Agrizzi was instructed by Mr Watson to make cash available to Mr Seopela for purposes of making payments to influential persons. Sometimes, but not always, Mr Seopela would inform Mr Agrizzi who the payments were destined for. However, the instruction from Mr Watson was that whatever Mr Seopela asked for should be handed over. Although Mr Watson did not require this, Mr Agrizzi would always still check with Mr Watson about the monies handed over to Mr Seopela, even if it was after the event.

531. What impressed Mr Agrizzi about Mr Seopela is that the information which he provided based on his influence would later turn out to be verified as being correct. This was particularly so in relation to the information he gave about the SIU investigation into Bosasa, referred to in more detail above. Mr Agrizzi became involved in supplying the cash to Mr Seopela from 2009 onwards.

Payments and the connection to Bosasa's contracts with the DCS

532. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that all monies handed over for purposes of bribery were recorded in a black book, as discussed above. Mr Agrizzi then went on to refer to specific beneficiaries of the payments arranged through Mr Seopela. He confirmed expressly that these were bribes. Payments were made monthly. Bribes to officials in the DCS were initially in the amount of R500,000 per month and, after Mr Tom Moyane was appointed as National Commissioner of DCS, increased to R750,000 per month. These payments continued during 2008 to 2016. The increase from R500,000 to R750,000 per month was specifically attributed to the appointment of Mr Moyane as Commissioner by Mr Seopela. At the time of these payments, Bosasa was enjoying the benefits of contracts with the DCS.

Payments and the connection to Bosasa's contracts with the DOJCD

533. The security contract for the DOJCD was awarded to a company within Bosasa, being Sondolo IT. Seemingly there was an understanding that 2.5% of the total contract value would be paid out over time to officials of the department by way of bribes. 2.5% of the contract value amounted to R15 million in total. From his own knowledge, Mr Agrizzi was aware of four names amongst the DOJCD officials who were receiving payments. These were Ms Masha who had a position in the security section within the DOJCD, Mr Norman Thobane, Ms Mamsi E Nyambuse head of security, and the fourth person whose name he could not remember at the time of giving evidence. These were smaller amounts in comparison to those paid to some of the other officials. Mr Agrizzi was present when some of these were handed over by Mr Gumede of Bosasa. He clarified that he was present on one of the payments to Ms Masha. The other three he was present on more than one occasion. At a point during his evidence in relation to the DOJCD officials who, to his knowledge, received payments, Mr Agrizzi asked to go back to his testimony in relation to Ms Mokonyane. Mr Agrizzi accepted that this was not entirely consistent with his earlier evidence to the extent that it suggested that Bosasa did not receive anything in return from Ms Mokonyane.

534. Reverting to the payments made to officials of the DOJCD, he referred to payments which he said he had been told were made to Dr De Wee, Chief Operations Officer of the DOJCD at the time. This name was mentioned to him as a recipient of payments by Mr Seopela. Mr Agrizzi recalled an occasion when he was told that he was late with packing a delivery of cash in an amount more than R2 million and he was informed that Dr De Wee was very upset with him because he was late in getting the cash delivered to Mr Seopela. This was around 2013/2014. Mr Agrizzi understood that this payment was to be made to a group of people of whom Dr De Wee was one.

535. Dr De Wee, in his statements filed in terms of Rule 3.4, denies that Mr Seopela had any basis for allegedly mentioning his name to Mr Agrizzi. He denied that he received any payments or was involved in any other wrongdoing and could therefore not have been upset with Mr Agrizzi for any alleged late delivery of money to Mr Seopela. He also made the point that Mr Agrizzi's evidence about him was hearsay. In his oral evidence, Dr De Wee read out the statement submitted in support of his Rule 3(4) application for purposes of it being recorded under oath. The statement incorporates strenuous denials that Dr De Wee was aware that Mr Seopela was receiving money from Mr Agrizzi and that he received money from Mr Seopela, and that Mr Seopela would have had any basis for mentioning his name or stating that he (Dr De Wee) was upset with Mr Agrizzi because of a late delivery of money. He pointed to the harm suffered to his dignity and reputation. He confirmed that he was Chief Operations Officer (COO) for the DOJCD from 1 April 2005 until 30 June 2015. Prior to that, he was Director-General for the Free State Province. He was responsible for four directorates within the DOJCD, including the security and risk management directorate. He thus had oversight, management, and control in relation to all the aspects concerning the operations within the security and risk management directorate. The Chief Director of the Directorate reported to him.

536. Dr De Wee asserted that he was not intimately involved in procurement because this was largely driven from the office of the Chief Financial Officer. However, there were one or two occasions when he chaired the Bid Evaluation Committee ("BEC), which makes recommendations to the departmental Bid Adjudication Committee ("BAC"). He also at times had acted as Director-General. Dr De Wee also explained the concept of a change of scope during implementation of a tender. That, too, had to follow a particular process.

537. Reference was made to a service level agreement between the DOJ&CD and Sondolo IT dated 15 July 2009. The contract was for the supply, delivery, installation, commissioning, support and maintenance of a comprehensive CCTV alarm and access control system at various nominated court buildings. The amount of the bid was R601,863,308.80 in respect of 127 court buildings. Mr De Wee's signature does not appear on the contract. The agreement in question was signed on behalf of the DOJCD by a Deputy Director-General, Mr Vusi Shabalala.

538. Dr De Wee confirmed that he was on the BEC for this contract. As COO of the DOJCD he "might have been the Chairperson of the BEC". Both the BEC and the BAC awarded points. Dr De Wee referred to a memorandum dated 10 June 2008 from his office to the BAC and pointed out that the fact that the bid was issued on 29 February 2008 and closed on 20 March 2008 showed that the market was tested in terms of the PFMA. He could not recall whether it was a closed or open tender. The memorandum also records that pre-qualification was done and, from that process, one bidder was recommended. The bid was evaluated by the BEC on 5 June 2008. The criteria were in the ratio 90/10 where 90 was for price and 10 for functionality. As the memorandum records, the BEC concluded that the recommended bidder's price was fair and market related. Dr De Wee confirmed that two legal opinions were sought before the recommendation was made by the BEC, one from the Department of Justice Law Enforcement Unit and the other from National Treasury. In response to the question why these two opinions were sought, Dr De Wee said that they were very worried about the efficacy of physical security in the form of guards with batons and questioned why they were relying solely on that when the security industry had modernised security by using technology.

539. Dr De Wee's attention was drawn to the forensic report prepared by Grant Thornton. They worked out that, considering that no services were delivered at 32 of the 127 court buildings, there were actual cost overruns on the agreed contract price, which amounted to R177 million, constituting unauthorised expenditure. Dr De Wee asserted that proper authorisation was obtained for the R177 million expenditure. He pointed out that the ultimate cost was R567 million which was less than the R601 million contract price. He also asserted that the changes in contract price were brought about consistently with schedule 2 to the SLA which established an operational steering committee with equal representation from each of the two parties to the contract.

540. Dr De Wee referred to paragraph 3.2 of a memorandum dated 8 February 2015 from the Chief Director: Risk Management and the Director: Security Management, to the Director-General via Dr De Wee and the Chief Financial Officer. This refers to delays in signing the SLA, which were due to "internal frustrations" and limited cooperation from the Department of Public Works and SAPS, leading to a rapid risk assessment after signing the SLA, which then led to the discovery of a wide range of changed or unanticipated circumstances at the various implementation sites.

541. Dr De Wee was asked why, if 127 facilities were contracted for and only 95 were completed, Sondolo IT received full payment for their services. In response, Dr De Wee referred to the Grant Thornton forensic report detailing costs of the security installation.

542. Dr De Wee was referred to a document being an internal memorandum dated 9 December 2010 from both the BEC and the BAC to the Director-General pertaining to the adjudication of a bid for the appointment of a service provider to render 24-hour security guarding and special services at various offices. He confirmed having signed the document in the capacity of Acting Director-General of the Department. His signature reflected approval of option 2 of three options in the memorandum. This option involved Bosasa sharing the contract with other companies. Dr De Wee asserted that this "counter[ed] the narrative that Bosasa was privileged in the Department of Justice". It evidenced a move away from monopolies and the giving of an opportunity to as many service providers as possible.

543. Dr De Wee was referred to the minute of a briefing given by the DOJCD to the portfolio Committee on Justice and Correctional Services on 28 March 2011. The Department was confronted about awarding tenders to Bosasa while it was being investigated by the SIU for corruption. The minute records that Dr De Wee in his capacity as COO of the DOJCD answered, saying that this was recently of concern to the department as well. He informed the committee that the tenders were compliant and, although cancellation had been considered, none of Bosasa's directors had been charged and several departments had awarded to, or renewed contracts with, Bosasa. For this reason, the DOJCD had continued with the contract.

544. Dr De Wee confirmed that this maintenance contract related to the R601 million tender. It arose from a query in relation to whether the original contract included or excluded maintenance, which this new contract was concerned with. Before the evidence leader could take up the issue of the timing of the new contract in relation to Dr De Wee's knowledge of the corruption allegations against Bosasa, Dr De Wee intervened to refer back to the minute of the Portfolio Committee where he had pointed out that, if contracts with Bosasa were blocked on the basis of the SIU report and hearsay alone, the PFMA and regulations' requirements of objectivity, fairness, genuine competition and avoidance of discrimination were likely to be violated.

545. At this point, the Chairperson pointed out to Dr De Wee that there were allegations of corruption involving Bosasa and the DCS in the press long before 2010. The Chairperson enquired how it was possible that in those circumstances, where there were serious allegations of corruption against it, Bosasa was able to continue getting contract after contract from government departments. In response, Dr De Wee suggested that one could not always rely on the media because the media can get it wrong. He said that there were concerns about it but that > the difficulty that all of us were confronted with was that we did not have a clear basis to act on this matter. And like I say, if we knew then what we know now, I am sure a different set of considerations would have been made because we share your concern.

546. The Chairperson made the point that, if faced with two job applicants, one of whom had serious corruption allegations against it, one would not hire the job applicant facing corruption allegations over the one who did not. Dr De Wee accepted this but said that "this is a question for reflection from all of us and this is where we hope that your report will guide us on this matter." Dr De Wee filed a further affidavit dated 10 August 2021 denying all knowledge and participation in corrupt activities to influence tender outcomes and always asserted compliance with relevant legislation, as well as observing that if he had acted on hearsay and media reports, he would have risked non-compliance with the procurement process.

Payments and the connection with the fleet management contract

547. Mr Agrizzi also testified about a payment relating to the fleet management contract for Kgwerano, also known as the RT62 contract. Mr Agrizzi would have to pack R300,000 per month which would go via Mr Leshabane to be delivered to various officials. Mr Agrizzi clarified that these payments would sometimes be handed to Mr Leshabane and sometimes to Mr Seopela for distribution to officials. When the money was handed to Mr Seopela he would indicate where Mr Agrizzi was to meet him. Sometimes it would be alongside the road. Sometimes it would be at Monte Casino in the parking lot at the Palazzo Hotel. Quite often it would be in a restaurant such as Tasha's Morningside, or at the Fishmonger at Thrupps Centre, Illovo. Sometimes it was at a petrol station, and he would follow him from the petrol station on "some obscure road and then stop halfway and then hand it over." About 70% of the time the payments would be made via Mr Seopela and the balance would be via Mr Leshabane.

Mr Danny Mansell

548. Mr Agrizzi testified that he met Mr Mansell for the first time when he went to Dyambu. Mr Mansell was exceptionally close to Mr Watson, and he was a shareholder in the business. In addition, Mr Mansell and Mr Watson had been involved in some dealings in the Small Business Development Corporation. Mr Smith provided this information to Mr Agrizzi.

549. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mansell was the link between Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham, that it was Mr Mansell who would write up the specifications that were sent to Mr Agrizzi and who was the first person to really get involved with the DCS. He also testified that Mr Mansell left Bosasa after an acrimonious fight with Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi described the fight as being very embarrassing and Mr Mansell left after he was paid an amount of money. Mr Agrizzi stated that Mr Mansell blamed him for interfering with Mr Watson, which he never did. Mr van Tonder confirmed that there was a disagreement between Mr Watson and Mr Mansell which led to Mr Watson acquiring Mr Mansell's shares in Dyambu Operations. However, Mr Mansell reappeared on the scene in later 2003/2004. Mr van Tonder recalled that this was because his services were required in a potential business deal with Rand Water Board which involved cattle. Mr Agrizzi testified that, upon his return, Mr Mansell was actively involved in building and construction with Riekele at the company's facilities in Randfontein and another hostel in Luipaardsvlei.

550. Mr Agrizzi stated that Mr Mansell was involved in meetings with Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham as well as Mr Watson upon his return. The purpose of these meetings was to arrange for amongst other things payments from Bosasa to his company called Grande Four (Pty) Ltd. Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Mansell introduced him to Mr Gillingham during a visit to the Bosasa offices by officials of the DCS. During this time, Bosasa had commenced extensive upgrades on the kitchen at Lindela and the Youth Centre in Krugersdorp. Mr van Tonder was told that the visit by the DCS officials was to prepare for a kitchen tender.

551. Mr van Tonder testified further that on 25 February 2005, Mr Mansell arranged that he fly Mr Gillingham in a private aircraft to Mafikeng and back the next day. This was paid for by Bosasa. Mr Mansell merely indicated that this trip was to enable Mr Gillingham to "meet people in Mafikeng". Mr Agrizzi testified that after having done the technical management of four tenders for the DCS, Mr Mansell and his son Jarod started doing work for Phezulu Fencing and Sondolo IT. A company called L&J Civils was used and this was the entity periodically used to purchase items for Mr Gillingham and Mr Mti. When asked whether the books for Grande Four and L&J Civils were ever dealt with, Mr Agrizzi responded that he would often walk into the office and Mr Perry would be sitting with Jarod and Mr Mansell busy with cheque books and stubs and doing a reconciliation of what payments had to be made by Bosasa to Grande Four.

552. In 2012 following Adv Willie Hofmeyr's report to Parliament on Bosasa, Mr Mansell arrived at Mr Agrizzi's office early one morning. He insisted that Mr Agrizzi call Mr Watson as Mr Mansell was extremely nervous and felt that Mr Watson had left the blame on him. Mr Mansell indicated that he wanted to leave South Africa. When Mr Watson arrived that morning, he instructed Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder to put everything in place. Mr Agrizzi stated that the instruction received from Mr Watson was to relocate Mr Mansell to the United States of America. Mr van Tonder recalled Mr Watson informing him that Mr Mansell would be emigrating and instructing him to accompany Mr Mansell to the US to ensure that he does not turn back. The air tickets for Mr van Tonder and the Mansells were paid for by Bosasa.

553. Mr van Tonder testified further that there was a concern that Mr Mansell's passport might have been blocked because of the SIU investigation. Mr Leshabane used his contacts in the DHA to ensure that customs control would not block Mr van Tonder and Mr Mansell at ORTIA. Mr van Tonder recalled Mr Mansell appearing "extremely stressed out" at the airport and had tears in his eyes because he could not accept the reality of having to emigrate. Mr van Tonder described feeling sorry for Mr Mansell and referred to an email in which Mr Mansell stated that he had to start over five times since beginning his association with Mr Watson.

554. Mr Agrizzi testified that a company was established in the USA called Safe SA Fences America. Bosasa agreed to pay Mr Mansell $7,000 USD a month for as long as he was alive and stayed in the USA. Mr van Tonder confirmed this arrangement with reference to invoices from Mr Mansell and explained that Mr Mansell needed to stay in the US because he was very involved with Bosasa's unlawful dealings in the past, specifically with the DCS. Mr Agrizzi stated that, in exchange, Mr Mansell agreed not to divulge any details of Bosasa and to remain in the USA. Mr Mansell would invoice Bosasa monthly. Bosasa also helped Mr Mansell in his application for residency in the USA.

555. Mr Agrizzi testified that the work specified on the invoices from Mr Mansell was not actually done, it was fictitious. Mr van Tonder confimed this. The amounts were deducted as expenses in the books of Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi knew that the payments to Mr Mansell continued until he left Bosasa in December 2016.

556. Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Mansell requested that Bosasa assist him in acquiring American citizenship. To this end, Mr van Tonder and Mr Agrizzi signed a letter to the USA Citizenship and Immigration Services dated 21 February 2017 in which they stated that Mr Mansell had been transferred to the US by Bosasa to market speciality high security fences. The letter further records:

556.1 Mansell American Inc. d/b/a Safe As Fences is a subsidiary of Solectric CC, a South African company that operates as a security fencing contractor providing gate automation and perimeter security and access control.

556.2 Solectric CC had a working relationship with Bosasa for several years and in February 2015, Bosasa Operations (Pty) Ltd formally acquired Solectric CC and Mansell American Inc.

556.3 Mr Mansell founded Solectric CC in 2008 and served as its CEO and CFO before transferring to the USA. As CEO of the company, he determined the overall direction of the company and the types of projects to be undertaken. He managed government contracts for fencing construction and installation.

556.4 Mr Mansell transferred to the USA in April 2014 to lead the marketing and business development of the USA office.

556.5 Mr Mansell is the Operations Manager of the business and will oversee company operations, planning, systems, and controls. He will oversee the work of the Finance Manager and provide know-how for a joint venture between Bosasa and the South African Public Private Partnership Correctional Services model.

556.6 Mr Mansell would continue to receive an annual salary of $45,000 USD per year plus travelling and accommodation expenses.

557. Mr van Tonder testified that, contrary to what was stated in this letter, Mr Mansell was not involved with Bosasa. When Mr Mansell left in 2012, Mr Agrizzi was tasked to take over the role that Mr Mansell had played with Mr Gillingham. This included taking care of Mr Gillingham's meetings and attending a lunch once or twice a month with Mr Gillingham to keep him under control.

Mr Venter and Miotto Trading

Miotto Trading

558. Mr Venter testified that around 2013 he advised Bosasa to make use of a company belonging to Dr Erasmus, the tax attorney, Tax Risk Management Services ("TRM Services"), which assisted Bosasa and Mr Venter with the SeaArk SARS audit. Bosasa was hesitant to do so, according to Mr Venter, because Dr Erasmus is a well-known litigator against SARS and they did not want to attract attention. D'Arcy-Herrman was still providing auditing services to Bosasa at the time.

559. In 2016, it was agreed that TRM Services would invoice a dormant company of a family member of Mr Venter, Miotto Trading, for services provided to Bosasa. Miotto Trading would then on-invoice Bosasa to recover the fees for TRM Services/Dr Erasmus. Mr Venter testified that he had questioned the practice and was told by Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder not to worry as they were signing off the invoices. This practice continued until Mr Agrizzi left Bosasa in 2016, with the last invoice from Miotto Trading being issued in January 2017. Mr Venter testified that he used Miotto Trading for various things, that he was reflected on the company records but that the intention was to change it, that he considered himself the financial manager of the business and that he took the business over from a family member.

560. Once TRM Services had invoiced Miotto Trading for actual services rendered to Bosasa, Mr Venter would approach Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder who would dictate the wording as well as the amount of the invoice to be issued by Miotto Trading to Bosasa. Mr Venter explained that the invoices were always inflated to provide a commission for Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and himself. Mr Venter testified that D'Arcy-Herrman did not know of his involvement with Miotto Trading. Mr Venter testified further that D'Arcy-Herrman did not pick up the fact that the introduction of Miotto Trading increased the costs of Bosasa because there were invoices and they would have checked the invoices and the payments made.

561. Mr Venter testified that he had proof of payments made by him from Miotto Trading towards the legal costs of Mr Hlaudi Motsoeneng as well as three payments to a company called Moroka Consultants

Training and Development (Pty) Ltd and a payment to a bank account referred to as "EFG2", held at ABSA. He provided these to Mr Agrizzi at the first meeting at Mr Agrizzi's house.

562. Mr Venter confirmed that in the middle of August 2017, on instruction from Mr Watson, he paid two amounts into the trust account of Majavu Attorneys for the legal costs of Mr Motsoeneng. The first payment was an amount of R600,000 on 20 August 2017 and the second of R587,656, was made on 21 August 2017. The money had been paid into Miotto Trading's bank account from Lamozest. Mr Venter described Lamozest as "one of the Gavin Watson group of companies".

563. Mr Venter confirmed that Mr Watson requested him to assist him and Mr Syvion Dlamini, in September 2017, to make three payments to Moroka Consultants. Ms Lindsay Watson prepared a consulting agreement between Miotto Trading and Moroka Consultants but no services had been provided as it was merely a front for the payments to be made. From September to November 2017, three payments of R450,000 were made from Miotto Trading to Moroka Consultants. Mr Venter testified that he did not know who Moroka Consultants were and did not know what the funds were for but was instructed to make the payments and that no services were rendered.

564. Mr Agrizzi testified that the situation with Miotto Trading was explained to him by Mr Venter after Mr Agrizzi left Bosasa. The true reason for the payments was concealed by reflecting that the payments were made to Moroka Consultants for training. This training did not take place. According to Mr Agrizzi, that is how Mr Dlamini and Mr Watson decided to move the funding. Mr Agrizzi testified that Miotto Trading had only two employees, namely Mr Venter and his sister-in-law. However, they invoiced R1.4 million for training. Once that invoice was paid out, the bribes were paid out. Essentially, Miotto Trading was used to make disguised payments and to make payments that could not easily be traced. Mr Venter showed Mr Agrizzi the documentation and that is why Mr Agrizzi included this issue in his statement. He testified that he tested the documentation, and he tested the information submitted by Mr Venter. Mr Dlamini denies that no training took place and avers that Mr Agrizzi has no personal knowledge of these facts as he had left the employ of Bosasa at that time. Mr Dlamini alleges that there was a supplier development agreement between Bosasa and Miotto and that, to the best of his knowledge, services were rendered in terms of the agreement. According to Mr Dlamini, his involvement in matters related to Miotto was when he was copied on any communications and invoices so that he could follow up on these matters in the interests of efficiency.

565. Mr Venter testified that Mr Watson approached him again on 17 October 2017 to assist in making payment of R2.5 million towards the purchase of a residential property for Ms Lindie Gouws. Ms Gouws was a close colleague of the Watsons who used to work at Bosasa and, at the time of Mr Venter's testimony, was still doing the branding and group marketing for Bosasa. Mr Watson instructed Venter to affect a payment of an amount of R3 milliom from his personal account into Miotto Trading's bank account, with R2.5m to be paid to Ms Gouws, as a loan. Mr Watson also instructed that a payment of R500,000 be made to the "EFG2" account. Seemingly this also came from Mr Watson's personal account via Miotto Trading's account. Mr Venter was told that the R500,000 was for a "foundation trust" of Mr Andile Ramaphosa, the son of the then Deputy President, Mr Cyril Ramaphosa.

566. Mr Venter was surprised when he was informed of the R500,000 to be paid for Mr Andile Ramaphosa. He was not aware of the relationship and why Mr Watson would make a payment to the son of the Deputy President. Mr Venter also confirmed that he made a payment from Miotto Trading's bank account in October 2017 in the amount of R500,000 to a beneficiary "EFG2", with the description "social development". Mr Venter testified that Mr Agrizzi was very curious when he mentioned the name "Ramaphosa" to him, despite Mr Agrizzi's testimony that he was not really interested. Mr Venter confirmed that Miotto Trading was used as a vehicle to disguise the true nature of the transaction because otherwise Mr Watson would have paid it from his own account directly. Mr Venter testified that he is not aware of any other payments made to the Foundation or to the account referred to as "EFG2".

567. Mr Venter confirmed that on 6 November 2017, Ms Gouws called and informed him that she would not proceed with the transaction and that he should repay Mr Watson's money immediately. This followed Ms Gouws' meeting with her attorney about issues pertaining to Mr Agrizzi, whom she was "paranoid" about. Mr Venter confirmed that Mr Watson asked him to assist Ms Gouws on many occasions. One of the tasks he was instructed to do was to register a company called the Exchange Space (Pty) Ltd, to do the marketing and branding of Bosasa. According to Mr Venter, over and above the monthly salary paid to Ms Gouws by Consilium, he now had to pay her an additional gross salary of R42,000 from Exchange Space in order that she could clear a net amount of R24,000, which amount went towards Ms Gouws' bond repayment. The salary from the Exchange Space was purely for the bond repayment, as Ms Gouws was paid by Consilium.

The end of Mr Venter's relationship with Bosasa

568. Mr Agrizzi assembled a group of about 22 people who were going to act together as whistleblowers against Mr Watson. According to Mr Agrizzi, Mr Venter indicated a willingness to join the group and become a whistleblower. Mr Agrizzi facilitated his preparation of a statement for this purpose. After preparing a full statement and in the middle of November 2017, Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Venter said that he had had a change of heart because he had been offered a substantial amount of money by Mr Watson in return for not acting as a whistleblower.

569. Mr Agrizzi testified that during December 2017, Mr Venter contacted Mr Agrizzi to indicate his wish to re-join the group. Another meeting was arranged which took place at the Chicken Pie on the way to Lanseria at 14h00. Following this, Mr Agrizzi received a call from Mr Venter to say that he had spoken to his wife and decided to go ahead with the whistleblowing, and he sent Mr Agrizzi a signed and commissioned statement before he went away on holiday.

570. Later, during January 2018, on Mr Agrizzi's version, Mr Venter reverted to Mr Agrizzi to say that he had once again had a change of heart after meeting with Mr Watson and had decided against cooperating in the whistleblowing. Mr Venter testified that this was not true as he still had contact with Mr Agrizzi for three to four months and only terminated all communication with Mr Agrizzi in April 2018, after he became aware that Bosasa was monitoring his phone calls and knew he was talking to Mr Agrizzi. According to Mr Venter, Mr Agrizzi would keep him informed of the processes that he had explained through the flow diagrams, that he was busy with the negotiations with Bosasa to take over the contract and keep Mr Venter informed of progress in that regard. In February 2018, Mr Agrizzi requested Mr Venter to provide him with financial information regarding Bosasa's turnover and profits as he knew that Mr Venter was busy with the group's provisional tax at the time. Mr Venter testified that he provided Mr Agrizzi with very limited information and explained to Mr Agrizzi that Bosasa did not trust him fully and that he did not have access to the information he previously had. Mr Venter further testified that persons within Bosasa were leaking information to Mr Agrizzi because he knew where Mr Watson was, where he was going and who he was meeting with, as if Mr Agrizzi was still employed at Bosasa.

571. Mr Venter testified that on a Friday in April 2018, Mr Agrizzi sent him invoices that had been leaked to him via a message and requested that Mr Venter print the invoices, place them in an envelope and take them to Mr Watson. The invoices related to a security company that rendered services to Bosasa and Mr Agrizzi insisted that Mr Venter take them to Mr Watson that same Friday. Mr Venter explained that Mr Agrizzi was suspicious as he did not know the supplier and had wanted to make a point to Mr Watson that he was aware of it. Mr Venter duly took the invoices to Mr Watson and explained to him that the invoices had been delivered anonymously at his (Mr Venter's) office. Mr Venter testified that Mr Watson was very upset when he opened the envelope and saw what was inside. Mr Watson contacted Louis Passano who had taken over from Mr van Tonder and showed him, and both were very upset. When Mr Venter acknowledged that he still had contact with Mr Agrizzi, he was questioned on his loyalty and was told to decide whether he was loyal to Bosasa or not, and whether they would remove them as auditors of Bosasa. Mr Venter had to make the decision and let them know that afternoon that his loyalty was with Bosasa and that the relationship could continue. Mr Venter testified that he believed that Mr Watson knew that Mr Agrizzi had sent the invoices to him and that they had not been delivered anonymously. He believed that Bosasa were monitoring his telephone calls. Mr Venter explained that they accepted his word but that things changed and he was not trusted anymore.

572. The last time Mr Venter spoke to Mr Agrizzi was the Monday morning in April before his meeting at Bosasa. The telephone call with Mr Agrizzi was the usual call he made with Mr van Tonder, Mr Vorster and others every morning and every afternoon, to find out how they were, what had happened, and who they were going to see, and to try and get information. Mr Venter informed Mr Agrizzi that he was meeting Mr Watson that morning. Mr Agrizzi was furious that Mr Venter stopped speaking to him and started threatening him via anonymous email addresses – including PSVenterleaks@pm.me. Mr Venter testified that Mr Agrizzi would email his firm, the South African Institute of Chartered Accountants ("SAICA"), IRBA and various other people about him, threatening that he needs to come clean otherwise consequences would follow. Because Mr Venter did not respond, Mr Agrizzi may have thought that he (Mr Venter) had changed his mind about his statement and going through with being part of Mr Agrizzi's whistleblower group. In August 2018, Mr Agrizzi carried out his threat of exposing Mr Venter and sent his signed first affidavit to D'Arcy-Herrman.

573. Mr Venter testified that the last time he spoke with Mr Watson was in August 2018 when Mr Agrizzi made his statement public. Mr Venter said that he never received any payment from Mr Watson in return for his loyalty. Mr Venter explained that he had been suspended in August 2018 and was asked not to have any contact with Bosasa or its Directors or Mr Watson and so he had no communication with anyone at Bosasa from early September 2018. Mr Venter resigned in September 2018. Mr Venter confirmed that he had no further contact with Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and Mr Watson and placed on record that Mr Watson had contacted him twice the week before his testimony at the Commission and had left a message for Mr Venter to call him back but that Mr Venter did not return his call.

The circumstances giving rise to Mr Venter's two affidavits

574. The evidence leader dealt with the circumstances surrounding Mr Venter's first affidavit with Mr Agrizzi. Mr Agrizzi confirmed Mr Venter's signature on the affidavit. Files 1 and 2 which are referred to as annexures to the affidavit he said were in the possession of "the attorney who dealt with the matter in the beginning and are still with him at the moment." The affidavit was seemingly based on a structure which was sent to Mr Venter by Mr Agrizzi. The structure was obtained from the affidavit that was done by Mr van Tonder. He testified that at the time the affidavit was deposed to, he [Mr Agrizzi] was in Krugersdorp, while Mr Venter was on holiday in Mossel Bay or George. The Commissioner of Oaths at the end of the affidavit has an address in Mossel Bay.

575. Mr Venter confirmed that he had been requested, in November 2017, to prepare a statement that would reveal Mr Watson's illegal activities. Mr Venter went to Mr Agrizzi's house in Fourways and could recall sitting next to Mr van Tonder who had his statement open on his computer and who guided Mr Venter through the process with Mr Agrizzi dictating some of the wording. Mr Venter testified that Mr van Tonder and Mr Agrizzi would remind him of certain things that had happened which they wanted him to include in the statement. Mr Venter confirmed that he was not requested by Mr Agrizzi or Mr van Tonder to fabricate information and said that they had wanted him to include information which he is aware of and had in his possession.

576. Initially Mr Venter did not want to make a statement but testified that Mr Agrizzi threatened to expose him and that, like Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi could destroy a person. Mr Venter indicated that he was scared when Mr Agrizzi showed him a table full of files of evidence accumulated over time and said that Mr Venter had a choice, to go down with Mr Watson or to prepare a statement. Mr Venter testified that Mr Agrizzi referred to the use of Miotto and the fact that a boundary wall had been built for him by Riekele Construction and paid for by Bosasa, which had not been declared by Mr Venter. Mr Venter explained that Mr Agrizzi would take advantage of his knowledge of any wrongdoing by a person to expose them.

577. Following various threats sent by Mr Agrizzi to Mr Venter via telegram messages, Mr Venter agreed to meet with Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder in December 2017 before going to Mossel Bay on holiday. Mr Agrizzi showed Mr Venter a flow diagram at the meeting and explained that he was busy with negotiations with the Bosasa Group for the cession of certain of the DCS contracts to Mr Agrizzi. Mr Agrizzi was negotiating in this regard on his own behalf as well as that of Mr A van Tonder, Mr van Tonder and Mr Vorster.

578. Mr Agrizzi explained to Mr Venter that he would use the evidence he had accumulated as ammunition and that if the negotiations were successful, he would hand back all evidence to Bosasa. A series of flow diagrams had been prepared by Mr Agrizzi, which would be implemented to, if necessary, "bring Mr Watson down". Mr Venter explained Mr Agrizzi's plan as:

    578.1 Mr Agrizzi would use his company, "Malandela Crearis", to run the DCS contract. At the time Bosasa was making approximately R2.5 million to R3 million profit per month and were negotiating a price increase on the contract. Mr Agrizzi believed that Bosasa ought to have allowed him to do the negotiations. This would result in a profit of R12.5 million per month. Mr Agrizzi intended to give Bosasa 30% of the profits, which would have been more than they were making at the time. The potential advantage to Bosasa would be from a reputational point of view, due to the negative media at the time, and that Bosasa would receive an annuity for doing nothing, because Mr Agrizzi would be managing the contract.

    578.2 If the negotiations were successful, they would conclude the cession of the contract and Mr Agrizzi would hand over all documents.

    578.3 If the negotiations were unsuccessful, Mr Agrizzi would leak the information to social media, and "it would trigger something with the banks, it would trigger the auditors, underneath the auditors it refers to IRBA, politicians, [SAICA], he would use all of this against Bosasa, should it be unsuccessful".

579. Mr Agrizzi, the van Tonders and Mr Vorster were concerned about where the money would come from to make payment to them. For this reason, they were in negotiations via Mr Biebuyck for a team payment to them. If the negotiations were successful, they would return the information and files and would sign an anti-whistleblowing and anti-competition agreements. If the negotiations were unsuccessful, the plan included a "non-governmental expose" (sic) including various leaks to the print, electronic and social media with "systematic 1 story per week for 14 weeks from 1st Feb 2018". This would involve exposure of "questionable business interests", "houses CCTV", "VAT and tax fraud" and "payoffs and bribes". The flow chart suggests that this, in turn, would lead to a response from the public, NGOs such as Afriforum, Solidarity and Corruption Watch, banking institutions and various regulatory and prosecutorial bodies. The ramifications for Bosasa would include exposure, public scrutiny, reluctance of banks to provide facilities, reviews of tenders and criminal and related consequences. Mr Venter testified that this was essentially what had taken place over the course of the past few months.

580. Mr Venter was required to decide on whether he would sign a statement at the meeting with Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder. Mr Venter testified that he agreed to do so after he had seen the flow diagrams and heard the plan from Mr Agrizzi. The second draft of Mr Venter's first statement was emailed to Mr Venter by Mr Agrizzi and Mr Venter signed it and emailed it back to Mr Agrizzi on 18 December 2017. He signed it on the same day that it was sent to him, after quickly reading through it. Mr Venter testified that he realised that Mr Agrizzi had changed some of the wording and added some information into the statement but went ahead and signed it.

581. In December 2017, Mr van Tonder sent an SMS or WhatsApp message to an audit partner at D'Arcy-Herrman, informing him that there were several employees that wanted to meet with him in respect of illegal activities by Mr Watson and Bosasa. Mr Venter testified that this was part of the plan that was carried out as per the flow diagram. Mr Venter was advised before the message was sent that it was going to be sent and the message was forwarded to him by the partner once it had been sent. Mr Venter no longer had a copy of the message. The audit partner followed up with Mr van Tonder in January 2018. Mr van Tonder informed the audit partner that he had been advised by attorneys not to meet with him at that point in time. Mr van Tonder did this as a delay mechanism "in order for Mr Watson to see the seriousness about this whole text message to the audit partner (sic)."

Mr Venter's Carte Blanche interview

582. Mr Venter testified that he had no contact with Mr Watson since September 2018 but had contact with an internal risk consultant from time to time, who requested Mr Venter to meet with Mr Gumede and Mr Leshabane. At the meeting with Mr Gumede and Mr Leshabane, Mr Venter was asked to do an interview with Carte Blanche. Mr Venter was informed that the purpose of this interview was to discredit Mr Agrizzi based on the plan (flow diagrams) to sabotage Bosasa as well as the similarities between Mr Venter and Mr van Tonder's statements. Mr Venter agreed to do so. He had the interview with Carte Blanche on the basis agreed with Mr Gumede and Mr Leshabane. Mr Venter further testified that while he only discussed those aspects on Carte Blanche, there was nothing in the interview that was dishonest or untrue. Mr Venter agreed to do the interview for the possibility of future reappointment as tax consultant with Bosasa again.

Consilium Business Consultants

583. As to the company known as Consilium, Mr Agrizzi testified that this company was formerly owned by Dr Smith and, to his best recollection, 10% of the company was owned by Dr Smith's son. When Dr Smith fell ill, the company was transferred to Mr Venter's sister Ms Longworth. That company was owned by Mr Venter and the shareholders were Booi and Nklele for the purposes of BEE compliance. Consilium only had one client which was Bosasa.

584. Mr Agrizzi was asked to comment on Mr Venter's testimony that he had been told that for all members of the Watson family who received money from Consilium, services were rendered, and proper contracts of employment were in place. Mr Agrizzi responded that this was not true. He stated that Dr Smith would bring him an invoice every month and the attached payroll to sign off and Mr Agrizzi was sworn to secrecy as to the fact that there were family members on the payroll. Mr Agrizzi explained that Consilium was developed to cover up what people were earning because the law had changed in that financial statements had to reflect what the highest earners were earning. Mr Watson did not want the black directors to know exactly what they were earning therefore half of their salaries were paid by Consilium and half paid by Bosasa. Apart from the Watson family that were paid by Consilium, Mr Seopela was also paid. Mr Agrizzi referred to it being like a secret payroll and if he could recall correctly, there was Consilium 1 and Consilium 2, meaning that as soon as Consilium 1 reached the threshold, a second Consilium would open on the payroll. Mr Agrizzi explained that this meant that there were apparently two separate legal entities but the directorships and the shareholders were the same.

585. In respect of whether the persons who received monies, purportedly for services rendered or as employees of Consilium, actually did work for Consilium. Mr Agrizzi testified that there was no work done. Mr Agrizzi was asked to comment on Mr Venter's testimony that Consilium was or is a labour broker. Mr Agrizzi responded that Consilium was never registered as a labour broker, but it was intended to perform that service as a separate company to Bosasa. He further elaborated that Consilium never made a profit while Dr Smith owned the company. He described Consilium as being a desk and a computer.

586. Mr Venter testified that Consilium would invoice Bosasa Operations, Bosasa Youth Development Centres and Kgwerano Financial Services monthly for services provided. Mr Venter explained that a spreadsheet was prepared to monitor who was employed in which company. Where they would render services in more than one company, each of those companies would be separately invoiced. Mr Agrizzi was asked to comment on Mr Venter's testimony that Consilium had raised three invoices for Bosasa Operations, Sondolo IT and the Bosasa Youth Development Centres monthly to recover the fees and salaries paid by it. Mr Agrizzi responded by saying that they had to allocate charges to the various companies and that the charges were split amongst the companies so that it would not all be lumped into a single company.

Lamozest

587. Mr Agrizzi testified that Lamozest was created at the pinnacle when there was a major concern about the SIU investigation to look after white employees and senior white management. It would be a company to be established that would charge a fee to Bosasa for special skills.

588. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Watson called Mr van Tonder and himself to a meeting which was held in Mr van Tonder's office. Mr Watson advised them that he wanted to start a new company because he could not give them direct shareholding and this company will have a long-term agreement with Bosasa in respect of which they can have dividends from this company. The idea was this company would provide them with bonus payments to develop an entity that the other black directors were not aware of. Essentially, the company would be registered and Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder would charge for their skills. Mr Venter was involved in forming the company and registering it, but it was never used for those intended purposes. Rather, Lamozest became a mechanism to pull funds out of Bosasa to pay for services, building the Watson children's homes and other personal use. Mr Agrizzi described it as becoming a real bone of contention in the company because Mr van Tonder and he were subsequently told that it was not possible to remunerate them from Lamozest and that they should rather look at a new arm's length company. In other words, the promises made to them were simply not kept. Ultimately, most of the profits were taken out of Bosasa and transferred to Lamozest.

Mr Kevin Wakeford

589. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Kevin Wakeford was Mr Watson's long-standing friend. Mr Wakeford did not dispute this, providing details of how they met in the 1980s when being recreuited into ANC underground cell. Mr Agrizzi claimed that Mr Wakeford provided consulting services to Bosasa in relation to the negative press the company had received as well as the various audits of both the company and its directors in their personal capacities by SARS.

590. Mr Wakeford explained that he secured a consultancy contract through his company Wakeford Investment Enterprises CC with Bosasa in 2006. This consultancy arrangement was because of Mr Valence Watson's intervention during a time that Mr Wakeford was "unemployable" due to having blown the whistle on the manipulation of the Rand during his time as Chief Executive of the SA Chamber of Business. Mr Wakeford confirmed that he received R50,000 per month (plus VAT) to provide on-going consultancy services to Bosasa, including analysing the broader political economy and assessing the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats in the business context of the group.

Mr Wakeford's relationship and dealings with Mr Agrizzi

591. It was clear from Mr Wakeford's evidence that he had a strained relationship with Mr Agrizzi. Mr Wakeford described it as being "unproductive from the start" and testified that he had expressed concerns to Mr Watson about Mr Agrizzi's character and attitude. Mr Wakeford's view remained that Mr Agrizzi was a racist and had perjured himself when denying claims of racism. Mr Wakeford described Mr Agrizzi as having built an institutional mode of control around Mr Watson. He described Mr Watson as managing by walking and not a "details" person whereas Mr Agrizzi was "the CEO here". He expressed his view that "if anything went wrong ... he was an inexplicable part of what went wrong at Bosasa". He described Mr Agrizzi as someone that exploited every relationship that he had.

592. Mr Wakeford testified that Mr Agrizzi was motivated to falsely implicate him in the alleged corruption at Bosasa because of (i) of their contentious relationship given Mr Wakeford's relationship with Mr Watson and the Watson family; (ii) Mr Wakeford's non-racial values; (iii) Mr Agrizzi's perception regarding Mr Wakeford's part in the termination of his employment; and (iv) Mr Wakeford's usefulness to Mr Agrizzi to promote the interests of the Democratic Alliance.

593. To demonstrate Mr Agrizzi's vindictive character, Mr Wakeford referred to Mr Agrizzi disseminating confidential Commission documentation to Lord Peter Hain on 23 March 2021 on his publicly available email address even though Regulations 11(3) and 12(2)(c) prohibits this without written permission of the Chairperson.

594. Apart from his involvement with the DHA, Mr Wakeford was questioned about his involvement in advising Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson about a Portfolio Committee meeting relating to the DCS and a "judgment call" which Mr Wakeford had said (in an email) had to be made in this regard. Mr Wakeford stated he could not recall the specifics of why he advised Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson about the meeting, although it was consistent with his function of alerting Bosasa to what is taking place in the Parliamentary and other spheres. The Chairperson pointed out that this Portfolio Committee was holding hearings in connection with the SIU report and serious allegations of corruption against Bosasa at the time. Mr Wakeford said that he "would have encouraged engagement and attendance rather than avoiding those."

595. It was put to Mr Wakeford that the evidence revealed that he had enquired from Mr Agrizzi about job opportunities within Bosasa for acquaintances. Mr Wakeford admitted to doing so on several occasions, explaining that Bosasa was a growing organisation. He stated that there was no response to these requests and no employment opportunities were created for anyone within his network. In return for his services, Mr Agrizzi stated that Mr Wakeford received a monthly fee of R100,000. Again, Mr Wakeford denied that this was their agreement and pointed out that nothing had been produced by Mr Agrizzi to counter this. Mr Wakeford stated that the only months he received R100,000 from Bosasa was as a result of arrear payments or catch-up payments due in terms of his retainer agreement with Bosasa. Mr Wakeford stated that Mr Agrizzi was "adjusting and playing the fool" with his consultancy payments.

596. As to the signing powers within Bosasa to approve invoices, Mr van Tonder explained that any two directors could authorise payment. Mr Watson's signature was not a prerequisite for approval. Authorised signatories included Mr Watson, Mr van Tonder, Mr Agrizzi, Mr Leshabane, Mr Gumede and Mr Leyds. When asked about Mr Wakeford's role during the SARS investigation that spanned over two years, Mr van Tonder indicated that Mr Watson had insisted that he (Mr van Tonder) give continuous feedback on the SARS investigation to Mr Wakeford. According to Mr van Tonder, the only services rendered by Mr Wakeford in respect of the SARS investigation were to attend meetings with Mr van Tonder. Mr Wakeford did not provide any reconciliations, reports, opinions, or advice.

Mr George Papadakis

597. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Wakeford approached Mr Watson with the recommendation that Mr George Papadakis be brought on board to resolve Bosasa's issues with SARS. At the time, Mr Papadakis was employed at SARS and the idea was to make representations to him in relation to the ongoing investigation against Bosasa. Mr Wakeford disputes this and testified that no discussion took place with Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi and himself about using the services of Mr Papadakis, nor had he ever told any party within Bosasa that Mr Papadakis could resolve any issues at SARS.

598. During the section 417 enquiry in the liquidation of African Global Operations, Mr Agrizzi testified that the "issues" at SARS related to the Biorganics tax write-off, which was the "CR continuation exercise". Mr Agrizzi acknowledged in the enquiry that Mr Wakeford was not an attorney or accountant or tax consultant and suggested Mr Andries Van Tonder was better placed to explain the precise ambit of Mr Wakeford's alleged assistance to Bosasa was at the time, other than that Mr Wakeford consulted with Mr Papadakis and Mr Watson "on the SARS matter". Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Wakeford and Mr Papadakis introduced Mr Watson to Mr Gorbi Mokonyane at SARS.

599. Mr Wakeford testified that Mr Papadakis could never have assisted Bosasa in resolving any major investigation at SARS before 26 February 2009 as no SARS investigation existed before 23 March 2011, given that there was no notice of an initiation of an investigation until the end of 2010. Further, there was no need to ask Mr Papadakis for tax advice because Bosasa had some of the best tax advisors. Mr Wakeford would only ask Mr Papadakis for guidance from an administrative perspective from time to time.

600. Mr Agrizzi also claimed that Mr Wakeford arranged for Bosasa to provide wet and dry cement to a property in Meyersdal owned by Mr Papadakis where a house was being built. Mr Wakeford disputes this.

601. According to Mr Vorster, Mr Watson introduced him to Mr Wakeford in mid-2008. Mr Vorster recalled Mr Wakeford visiting the Bosasa offices often. During late 2009, Mr Watson called Mr Vorster and informed him that Mr Wakeford would instruct him to buy and deliver wet and dry cement. Wet cement was purchased from WG Wearne in Randfontein and the dry cement was purchased from Randfontein Trading Centre ("RTC"). Mr Vorster understood the cement was intended for Mr Papadakis.

602. Mr Wakeford explained that his role in assisting Mr Papadakis in 2008/2009 was when Mr Papadakis was building a house and there was a shortage of cement. Mr Wakeford thought that Bosasa had shares in AfriSam and could assist Mr Papadakis in procuring the cement at a cheaper rate. He therefore referred the builder to Mr Agrizzi, who would, in turn, have referred the builder to Vorster. From time to time, Mr Wakeford was phoned by the builder and asked to assist in getting hold of Mr Agrizzi. He claims that there was nothing "malicious" about this, nor was there any quid pro quo. Mr Wakeford said initially in his oral testimony that he understood that "he" (seemingly referring to Mr Papadakis), paid Bosasa for the cement. Later in his oral evidence, responding to questions from the Chairperson, Mr Wakeford said that much smaller quantities of cement than was claimed, were involved and that "there was some assistance and as far as I understand there was payment for it from Mr Papadakis's builder".

603. Mr Wakeford was questioned by the evidence leader with reference to his email communications with Mr Papadakis. Email communications were conducted through Papadakis' wife, Ms Chrisna Engelbrecht, not with him directly. He said this was because Mr Papadakis was "running around all the time".

604. Ms Engelbrecht deposed to an affidavit on 13 August 2020 in response to a request for information by the acting secretary of the Commission on 30 January 2020. Ms Engelbrecht was married to Mr Papadakis in the period January 2009 to January 2014. During this time, Mr Wakeford was introduced to her and he visited the home she shared with Mr Papadakis. From her understanding, the association between Messrs Papadakis and Wakeford commenced in approximately 2002 when they were involved in the Commission of Inquiry into the rapid depreciation of the exchange rate and related matters. It was Mr Wakeford that had introduced Mr Papadakis to the Watsons. Mr Valence Watson occasionally accompanied Mr Wakeford to Mr Papadakis' house.

605. Ms Engelbrecht states she did not have any personal or business dealings with Mr Wakeford. However, she had several interactions with him solely because of his association with Mr Papadakis. Ms Engelbrecht confirmed having used the e-mail address chrisnae@gfia.co.za during the period January 2009 to January 2014. This was her work e-mail address and Mr Wakeford sent e-mails intended for Mr Papadakis to this address. Ms Engelbrecht would print these e-mails as well as attachments and provide them to Mr Papadakis. Examples of these emails were attached to Ms Engelbrecht's affidavit. Mr Wakeford referred to Mr Papadakis in these emails as either "advisor" or "George". Despite printing the emails from Mr Wakeford as described above, Ms Engelbrecht claimed to have no knowledge or information of the services or of the association between Messrs Papadakis and Wakeford nor was she aware of the services Mr Papadakis provided to Mr Wakeford or Bosasa.

606. Ms Engelbrecht referred to information obtained from SARS dated 3 April 2020 which recorded that Mr Papadakis' first day of employment with SARS was 10 March 2008 and on 1 July 2012 he occupied the position of Executive: Specialised Auditor. This position was on a fixed term basis from 1 July 2012 until 31 July 2015. However, Mr Papadakis submitted a resignation letter on 3 June 2013 and the SARS personnel system shows that his employment was terminated on 14 September 2013. Based on this, Ms Engelbrecht confirmed that Mr Papadakis was employed by SARS over the period 2008 to 2013.

607. Ms Engelbrecht confirmed that she was a trustee of the Evergreen Environment Trust for the period February 2005 to March 2017. Mr Papadakis had informed her that the purpose of this trust was to ensure the financial future of their son. She does not have any knowledge of the operations of the Trust. According to Ms Engelbrecht's knowledge, Erf 361 Meyersdal Nature Estate, Extension 3 is owned by the Evergreen Environment Trust. Ms Engelbrecht is aware that cement was delivered to construct the house situated at this property, However, she has no knowledge of who ordered, provided or delivered the cement or whether the cement was provided by Bosasa or any its affiliates.

608. From an undated map of the Meyersdal Eco Estate, Ms Engelbrecht confirmed that Erf 361 was situated at Unit 55. She is not aware of any other house in the Meyersdal area that is owned by the Evergreen Environment Trust. She did however provide the Commission with details of the properties in the Meyersdal area that were owned by Mr Papadakis and trusts associated with him.

609. Mr Wakeford was asked why he referred to Mr Papadakis in some of the emails as "advisor". He said they were friends and that it was his nickname. His nickname was also on account of him being knowledgeable and always having advice to offer.

610. Mr Agrizzi testified during the section 417 enquiry in the liquidation of African Global Operations that the value of cement delivered to Mr Papadakis was over R1 million. When pressed he however said that he did not know the exact amount, which could be obtained from the Commission.

611. Mr Papadakis filed an affidavit responding to excerpts from the affidavit of Mr Agrizzi dated 15 February 2019 and the affidavit of Mr Vorster dated 4 April 2019. Mr Papadakis referred to Mr Agrizzi's evidence to the effect that at a point when Bosasa was being "pestered by SARS" with tax audits and, at another time, a major tax investigation, Wakeford suggested "getting Mr Papadakis on board ... to help in sorting out the SARS issue", following which a meeting took place between Mr Watson, Mr Wakeford, and Mr Papadakis. Mr Papadakis disputed this evidence and denied being party to any such meeting.

612. He pointed out that the first alleged email between Mr Wakeford and Ms Engelbrecht is dated 21 February 2013, approximately three years after the alleged last delivery of wet cement, said by Mr Agrizzi to be the quid pro quo for the assistance provided by Mr Papadakis. Furthermore, Mr Papadakis could only recall attending one meeting at Bosasa in late 2014, after he had left SARS' employ.

613. Mr Papadakis confirmed having met Mr Wakeford during the Rand Commission. He also met Messrs Ronnie and Valence Watson during this time. Mr Papadakis met Mr Gavin Watson in late 2014, after he had left the employ of SARS. He denied having requested or being offered any financial inducement or benefit from Mr Wakeford or anyone else in relation to Bosasa. In relation to the cement provided to him, Mr Papadakis explained that while building at Eco Estate, Messrs Ronnie and Valence Watson indicated that they were engaged with a major cement manufacturer and informed him that he should let them know if he ever encountered difficulties with cement supply. Mr Papadakis was to communicate with Mr Wakeford, if needed.

614. Mr Papadakis stated that he was "fully employed" during the period of construction and "as such the building activities were attended to by my contractors, including the ordering of supplies". Although Mr Papadakis could not recall the quantities of cement ordered, he testified that "toward the latter part of 2009 I was provided an amount that needed to be settled, which was settled." Mr Papadakis stated that the quantities and values of cement attested to by Messrs Agrizzi and Vorster are fallacious. He asserted that the delivery notes made available to him demonstrated that no deliveries for wet cement were made by Wearne after 10 July 2009 and the RTC records reflected an invoice and delivery in February 2010 which was credited as the goods had not been ordered. Other than this, there is an invoice which only refers to delivery to the general Meyersdal area. Mr Papadakis stated that purchases of material for the wet works at Eco Estate, cement and building material were ordered, "in the main", by his contractor and these purchases were either "settled by him or directly with his suppliers".

615. Insofar as meetings with Messrs Watson and Agrizzi are concerned, Mr Papadakis stated that he did not attend any such meetings during his employment with SARS. He pointed out that Annexure A to Mr Agrizzi's January 2019 affidavit does not list him as a person whom Mr Agrizzi dealt with, nor does his name appear in Mr Agrizzi's "Black Book".

616. In respect of the evidence of Mr van Tonder, Mr Papadakis pointed out that, as CFO, Mr van Tonder would have been intimately involved in all dealings with SARS and the audits of Bosasa, yet his evidence does not implicate Mr Papadakis in any wrongdoing. There is no allegation in Mr van Tonder's evidence that he signed-off any invoices pertaining to cement purchases for Mr Papadakis. Mr Papadakis referred to there being "destructive facts" pertaining to the allegations made by Messrs Agrizzi and Vorster. In this regard, the delivery of cement predates the first engagement initiated by SARS. He highlighted that, despite the documents from Wearne and RTC destroying the very basis of their allegations, Messrs Agrizzi and Vorster refuse to admit that their evidence is false.

617. Insofar as the deliveries of wet cement from Wearne are concerned, Mr Papadakis provided an analysis in which he sought to demonstrate that the quantities of cement said to have been delivered in the Wearne documentation were inconsistent with the stages reached in the construction of the house on the relevant dates. As evidence of the state of construction on the relevant dates, he used images showing the progress of the construction from time to time on Google Earth.

618. On this basis he asserted that "the information provided by Wearne is, at best, unreliable, and only signed delivery notes would constitute reliable evidence." On this basis he contended that "the empirical evidence conclusively proves the fallaciousness of Mr Agrizzi and Mr Vorster's allegations."

Mr Wakeford's cross-examination of Mr Agrizzi

619. Under cross-examination, Mr Agrizzi stated that he could not answer yes or no to the question of whether he stood by his evidence relating to Mr Wakeford, Mr Radhakrishna and Mr Papadakis. While he may have made mistakes relating to a date or time, he never faltered in terms of explaining the corrupt relationships. Mr Agrizzi indicated that he no longer wished to refer to himself as a whistleblower after reading a book by Motshilo Maseku on the issue. He also no longer considered himself to be a racist as he had worked with Mr Barney Mhlatla from the Human Rights Commission who has helped him to not think of race as a colour. Furthermore, he previously stated that he was a racist in the context of the language he had used at the time.

620. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that he was not at the meeting alleged to have taken place between Mr Watson, Mr Wakeford and Mr Papadakis to discuss the assistance Mr Wakeford and Mr Papadakis would provide in relation to the SARS investigation. Mr Agrizzi stated that, as far as he could recall, Mr Papadakis was still employed by SARS during the time his assistance was sought. In answer to whether he accepted that Mr Papadakis had to have rendered services to Bosasa before the cement was delivered to him, he answered "Probably, yes", but later sought to retreat from this position.

621. When asked during which "major SARS investigation" Mr Wakeford approached Mr Watson, Mr Agrizzi stated it was "one of the big companies". He could not specifically recall which of the big companies SARS was investigating but thought it "might very well have been" Phezulu Fencing. Mr Agrizzi conceded that he does not know which investigation it was specifically. It was put to Mr Agrizzi that he had adapted his version regarding the timing of the delivery of the cement for Mr Papadakis from late 2009 to mid-2011. Mr Agrizzi simply stated that this was the opinion of Mr Wakeford's counsel.

622. When asked to comment on the specific amounts paid by Bosasa to RTC, Mr Agrizzi did not deal with the details put to him and instead stood by a generalised allegation that cement, paid for Bosasa, was delivered to Mr Papadakis as gratification. Mr Agrizzi was thereafter referred to an affidavit by Ms Luanda Davids - debtors supervisor at Ready Mix which is a subsidiary of Wearne – supplier of the wet cement. Ms Davids attached invoices to her affidavit, nine of which related to the delivery of cement to the Papadakis property. The invoices demonstrated that the first order for Mr Papadakis was placed on 22 February 2009, and it was therefore put to Mr Agrizzi that Mr Papadakis would have rendered his services prior to or around February 2009. Mr Agrizzi responded by stating that Mr Watson worked differently with each person and some people would receive payment for services rendered before they did the job.

623. From the invoices attached to Ms Davids' affidavit, the last delivery by Wearne to the Papadakis' property was on 9 July 2009. Mr Agrizzi was unwilling to concede that this was objective evidence regarding the date of the last delivery of cement because he has no access to the records of Bosasa or Wearne. He later accepted that he cannot dispute that the last delivery to Mr Papadakis was in 2009.

624. When it was put to Mr Agrizzi that there was no evidence before the Commission of a SARS investigation prior to 9 July 2009, Mr Agrizzi denied this. Mr Agrizzi could furthermore not dispute that Mr Wakeford was paid a fee of R50,000 per month plus 14% VAT in total and, on the odd month, there were additional expenses.

625. Mr Agrizzi could not dispute that Bosasa fell into arrears in paying Mr Wakeford for a period. He disputed that he controlled the payments to Mr Wakeford and stated that any withholding of payments was done on Mr Watson's instructions. When referred to his email of 7 March 2012 instructing Mr Bonifacio to make payment to Mr Wakeford for February and March as Bosasa was behind on payments, Mr Agrizzi alleged that Mr Wakeford's accounting system was "such a mess" and this made it difficult to dispute that there were some months that Mr Wakeford received double payments. Mr Agrizzi denied that there was no evidence to demonstrate that Mr Wakeford was paid R100,000 to manage Mr Papadakis.

626. It was put to Mr Agrizzi that the allegation of an extension of the Lindela contract was verifiably false, which he disputed. Mr Agrizzi stated that the contract is still in process and is continuing and it was therefore extended naturally. He referred to Mr Radhakrishna visiting him during 2020 to complain that Mr Watson did not pay the balance of the R7 million due to him.

627. At the Commission, Mr Agrizzi was referred to a letter from his attorneys dated 15 December 2017, which counsel sought to characterise as calling on Bosasa to cede its catering contract with the DCS to inter alia Mr Agrizzi and it was put to him that this was a demand to take over the contract. Mr Agrizzi disputed this letter was a demand and referred to the contents of the letter as a proposal stemming from an agreement that such a proposal would be made.

628. When referred to the "game plan" attached to Mr Venter's affidavit, Mr Agrizzi stated that the Carte Blanche interviewer believed Mr Agrizzi's version, and he considered that to tell a lot about Mr Venter's statement. Ultimately, it was put to Mr Agrizzi that long before the Commission, he had devised a scheme to destroy Bosasa if he could not take it over or ensure that it went into liquidation; further, that Mr Agrizzi's motive in approaching the Commission was to blacken the name of Bosasa and that he misled the Commission in many respects, but certainly in respect of Mr Wakeford, Mr Papadakis and Mr Radhakrishna.

629. In re-examination, Mr Agrizzi confirmed that Mr Wakeford had received R6,502,783.01 as a consultant from Bosasa over the period 2006 to 2015. In addition, Mr Agrizzi confirmed that "R2,109,000 was paid to Distinctive Choice Wines of which R1,821,600 was paid over directly to Mr Radhakrishna". Further, during the period 20 November 2009 to 2011, R1,132,000 was paid to Akhile Management Services which belonged to Mr Radhakrishna.

SEAARK

630. This section addresses the evidence surrounding the establishment of a prawn aquaculture business by Bosasa and subsequent attempts to avoid adverse findings in an investigation by SARS into this enterprise.

Messrs Fred Alibone and Arthur Kotzen

631. Mr Agrizzi testified that during 2005 and 2006, Bosasa was extremely cash flush with over R300 million in the bank. At that date, Mr Watson decided to go into a prawn aquaculture project with Mr David Kevin Wills. Mr Agrizzi's involvement was dealing with Mr Fred Alibone and Mr Arthur Kotzen. Mr Agrizzi testified that he had to employ Mr Kotzen's son Jason.

632. Mr van Tonder testified that during 2005/2006, Watson commenced a process of building an aquaculture pilot project called "SeaArk" in the Coega IDZ in Port Elizabeth. This project entailed breeding and growing seawater prawns in a controlled environment. At the time Kotzen had a small building company. Mr Watson decided he wanted to use Kotzen to build SeaArk. Mr Agrizzi questioned Mr Kotzen's ability to undertake this R300 million construction project given that his business comprised of essentially two bakkies and a cement mixer. Since there were numerous insurmountable issues with the Environmental Impact Assessment at SeaArk at that stage, Mr Watson deployed people from Bosasa to help build it. He then bought Mr Kotzen's company, BuildAll, for R15 million. Mr Agrizzi testified that it was very important that Mr Watson controlled both Mr Kotzen and Mr Alibone.

633. Mr Agrizzi was informed by Mr Alibone that he was tasked by Mr Kotzen and Mr Watson to keep a little black book of any expenses incurred for parliamentarians and politicians. The assumption was that this pertained to politicians in the Port Elizabeth area, being the region in which Mr Alibone and Mr Kotzen were active.

The establishment of SeaArk

634. SeaArk Africa (Pty) Ltd was established as a wholly owned subsidiary of Bosasa Operations for the aquaculture project. In addition, an American company known as Sustainable Resources International (SRI) was involved in the project. Consultants were employed by Bosasa and SRI.

635. Large sums of money up to approximately R50 million were transferred to SRI over three years by Bosasa Operations through SeaArk for payment to the consultants. In Mr van Tonder's assessment, Bosasa did not receive value for money for these consulting services. As CFO of Bosasa, Mr van Tonder was involved in the application for funding for the project and had direct knowledge of its financial transactions.

636. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was often informed, whilst SeaArk was operational, that it was an ideal model to get international funding and that it would, in effect, be a game-changer. Mr Agrizzi explained that he became aware of large amounts of money that were being paid to SRI. Mr Agrizzi testified that there was a bulk payment to the value of R35 million transferred to this company and thereafter single monthly payments of between R700,000 to R1 million. He described the payment as draining all the profits off the company. Mr Agrizzi subsequently learned that Mr Watson owned 51% of SRI. In Mr Agrizzi's opinion, SRI was a scam because he could not understand why Mr Watson would want to invest money offshore when the company in South Africa was doing very well.

637. Mr Agrizzi testified that at one stage when the business was "going south", he approached Mr Biebuyck to try to recover funds from SRI. However, he was told to not touch it and to just leave it with Mr Watson.

638. The project was unsuccessful and due to a lack of funding, Bosasa could not grow the project. There were also operational concerns which prevented the continuance of this project. Mr Venter testified that due to bad publicity at the time, the banks would not finance the project or the business so they could not carry on. They closed it down and moved it to Krugersdorp. The project was subsequently terminated. On termination, the project was recorded as having an assessed loss of R138,498,378 in the books of SeaArk. This assessed loss was derived from the expenses on the project as well as equipment write-offs. In this regard, the prawn processing plant equipment was purchased but never unboxed or used. This equipment was written-off in the books for income tax purposes over this period.

SeaArk change to Bosasa Supply Chain Management

639. The main business of SeaArk was changed to accommodate the utilisation of the assessed loss for tax purposes within Bosasa Operation's kitchen operations, after the project termination. That is, the catering contract with the DCS and the kitchen utilised for cooking for people in the youth centres and at Lindela. These contracts generated profit for Bosasa. The name of the company was also changed from SeaArk to Bosasa Supply Chain Management (Pty) Ltd (BCSM) which acted as a procurement company for food items which were then on-sold to Bosasa Operations for use in the kitchen operations. These food items were marked up by 20%.

640. Mr Venter testified that the name and the nature of the business changed and that BCSM became the supply chain for Bosasa. Mr Venter was not aware if prices were inflated but testified that his audit colleagues at D'Arcy-Herrman found nothing untoward. According to Mr Venter, SeaArk's main business was changed based on an internal decision. As far as he was aware, there was nothing untoward in doing so. Mr van Tonder testified that the procurement portion of the BCSM business was a genuine business transaction but the on-selling of the food items to Bosasa Operations was not. The profit margin created by the mark up of the food items was reflected as a profit in BCSM and set-off against the reflected assessed loss. The result was that the assessed loss in BCSM could be utilised for the income tax purposes of the day-to-day businesses of Bosasa Operations. The value of the benefit to Bosasa Operations from this scheme was R38,700,000.

641. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that SeaArk was interposed as a supply chain management company to acquire goods for the Bosasa companies and charge at a mark-up. Mr Agrizzi also confirmed that the profit made by SeaArk was offset against the assessed tax loss. Mr Venter confirmed that SeaArk benefitted by using the loss, and by using BSCM which would then make a profit to on-sell and by not paying tax on those profits. In response to a question from the evidence leader on whether this could have created an opportunity for tax fraud, Mr Venter testified that it could have but that he relied on the audit division to have established that, and that SeaArk and BSCM each received a clean audit and so he could not comment on that.

642. Mr Venter testified that he advised that equipment could be leased out to constitute trade for tax purposes because Mr Watson did not want to forfeit the loss.

The SARS investigation

643. Later, SARS investigated the utilisation of the assessed loss, the existence of the assessed loss within BSCM and Bosasa Operations and the equipment write-offs. Mr van Tonder was involved in responding to the SARS investigators so that Bosasa could justify the use of the assessed loss and the write-offs. To achieve this, two things had to be shown:

    643.1 Firstly, Bosasa had to show that the SeaArk project continued. This was done by building a prawn production facility in Krugersdorp where artificial seawater was manufactured to grow prawns. An entity called Biorganics (Pty) Ltd was created as a 100% subsidiary of Bosasa Operations for this purpose. Mr van Tonder recalled being formally introduced to Mr Zuma during his visit to this facility. Mr Vorster testified that on 9 October 2013, Bosasa's Senior Accountant, Ms Coleen Jansen Van Rensburg, instructed him to make certain entries into three truck logbooks that would accompany a statement to SARS to confirm that equipment was moved from SeaArk in Port Elizabeth to Krugersdorp. He was asked to submit another affidavit to SARS in March 2014. Mr Vorster confirmed that the purpose of his statement and affidavit to SARS was to mislead it in its investigations. Ms Jansen Van Rensburg commissioned the affidavit and statement before it was sent to Mr Vorster. He confirmed that he did not want to sign the documents but was forced to. The truck logbooks were later confiscated and locked in Mr Watson's vaults.

    643.2 Secondly, Bosasa had to demonstrate that the processing plant equipment was installed and utilised within the various kitchen operations in the group when in fact they were never used.

644. Mr van Tonder stated that part of the response to SARS was clearly a misrepresentation. On the strength of these representations, SARS concluded that the assessed loss was legitimate and only disallowed a portion of the processing plant write-offs.

645. When asked to comment on the truthfulness or correctness of the following allegation made in his first statement in relation to an opportunity to evade tax on an amount of R38, 779, 545. Mr Venter explained that, at the time of the SARS audit on SeaArk, he utilised the services of a tax attorney to formulate the response to SARS and based on the information made available to Mr Venter and the attorney, they successfully defended the assessed loss. Mr Venter testified that they were not involved in anything unlawful. He explained that he could not confirm the validity of what was provided to him by Bosasa and would not know whether documents or processes were fraudulently manufactured. Mr Venter confirmed that SARS required proof to be submitted to substantiate the claims, including the proof of trade in order to retain the loss but that he was not aware of anything that was fraudulently drawn up.

646. A few months after the outcome of the SARS investigation, Mr Watson instructed Mr van Tonder to close down Biorganics with immediate effect and retrench staff. Mr van Tonder pointed out to Mr Watson that closing down Biorganics was in contradiction with the information provided to SARS that it was a genuine ongoing production facility. He discussed this instruction with Mr Agrizzi and explained that it was unlawful to terminate the facility. Mr Agrizzi agreed with him.

647. The facility was closed and the processing equipment later sold to Connie Muller from Ibhongo Traders for R3,200,000. Mr Agrizzi was referred to Mr Venter's evidence which strongly suggested that this arrangement was entirely legitimate in that it involved no prejudice to SARS and that any falsification of invoices would have been picked up by the auditing firm, D'Arcy-Herrman. Although he acknowledged that he was not an accountant, Mr Agrizzi insisted that the use of the assessed tax loss was a defrauding of SARS.

648. Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder lied to Mr Watson and said that the company could no longer pay the R1 million a month to SRI. To this end, Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder told Mr Watson that "the Reserve Bank is closed" and they would not allow them to transfer any more money. Mr Agrizzi explained they were battling to pay salaries and wages and he and Mr van Tonder had to bond their houses to pay wages. That led to the closure of SeaArk. When Mr Watson realised that they were not going to get money from the Development Bank of Southern Africa and the Department of Trade and Industry, he agreed to close SeaArk but the problem was that they had a lot of equipment which had been specifically designed (by a company called Shrimp Co in the US) and cost them in the region of R20 million.

649. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Venter suggested that they change the name of the company and the focus of the so-called "guts of the company". That is when SeaArk closed, and a series of fictitious invoices were created. These pieces of equipment were moved out to all the catering operations under the guise that they were continuing business, whereas in fact they were changing the very nature of the business.

650. This involved the leasing of equipment to various Bosasa operations. Mr Agrizzi was asked whether this equipment was of any use in the prison catering department. In response, he indicated that the equipment was never used and rather stood in a shed in Port Elizabeth. He mentioned that Mr Vorster would be able to tell the Commission how they got the equipment to a place called Luipaardsvlei because SARS was doing an audit and they informed SARS that this was part of the meat processing plant.

Burying of evidence at SeaArk

651. When asked if there was anything else about the operation of SeaArk that he could assist the Chairperson with, Mr Agrizzi mentioned one anecdote in relation to SeaArk pertaining to computers that were buried at SeaArk. In this regard the company tendered its assistance for the burying of Grande Four and L&J computers and of documentation. The documentation reflected all the purchases for the houses of Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham. For this reason, this documentation had to be destroyed. Mr Watson sent the information to Port Elizabeth and said it must be buried at SeaArk. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that Mr Kotzen was subsequently instructed to collect the computers and to bury them at the SeaArk site in Coega and that he was later told by Mr Watson and Mr van Tonder to recover these computers and burn them.

652. SeaArk is a factory on the coast and they put the information into plastic bags and dug a big hole in which the computers were buried. A few weeks later, Mr Agrizzi received a call from a news reporter in Port Elizabeth asking why they were digging up at SeaArk. Mr Watson later insisted that they pick up the computers and they get burnt. However, they were never burnt. They were kept in a garage of Mr Kotzen's son-in-law and Mr Agrizzi testified that they were probably still there.

653. The excavation work undertaken at the SeaArk location in Coega was done by the Hawks and Mr Agrizzi was surprised that they did not ask him for assistance because that area had already been excavated. This failed excavation took place two or three weeks prior to Mr Agrizzi's testimony on 29 March 2019.

654. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that with SeaArk, Bosasa received a tax write-off of approximately R148 million. They were not entitled to that tax loss. The rebate and remittance from SARS were arranged by Mr Watson, Mr Curtis Venter and Mr Daniel Erasmus who "paid some other people off within SARS". Bosasa received that assessed tax loss for the prawns that supposedly moved from Port Elizabeth to Krugersdorp.

MR AGRIZZI'S RESIGNATION AND SUBSEQUENT DEVELOPMENTS

655. In August 2016, Mr Agrizzi resigned from Bosasa. Mr Daniel Watson approached Mr Agrizzi to take over the reins at Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi says that he was offered a substantial retainer and a shareholding in Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi testified that he accepted the offer. Upon his return to Bosasa he set about preparing a turnaround strategy based on restructuring the company into one focussed on the private sector and not based on corruption. According to him, the strategy was well received, including by Mr Gavin Watson.

656. Mr Agrizzi asserts that problems however arose in relation to the transfer to him of the share certificates pursuant to the agreement concluded. He claimed further that Mr Watson showed signs of reverting to a corrupt way of doing business. On 15 December 2016 Mr Agrizzi went on leave. He was then hospitalised on 25 December 2016. He required emergency surgery which did not go as planned and became extremely ill. Once he had been discharged from hospital, Mr Biebuyck called him to inform him of an alternative offer of a consultancy agreement form him for a lesser amount of remuneration. The agreement suited Mr Agrizzi and he decided to accept it.

657. Mr Agrizzi claimed that he started to receive threats from two of Bosasa's directors, Mr Gumede and Mr Leshabane. The terms of the consultancy agreement were also not complied with. Seemingly his employment came to an end in March 2017 amidst developments in relation to possible whistleblowing by him and a group of fellow employees.

658. Mr Wakeford was of the view that Mr Agrizzi was coercing these employees to make false statements. Further, Mr Wakeford was of the view that Mr Agrizzi's true motive was to take over Bosasa or, failing that, bring about its liquidation. This would enable him to take over Bosasa's contracts into his own entity, Malandela Crearis. Following advice from prominent legal personalities, on 21 August 2017, Mr Agrizzi issued a press release that he was going to come clean. During the latter part of August 2017, there were further negotiations between members of the Watson family and Mr Agrizzi around a fresh agreement. However, this did not come to anything.

Threats against Mr Agrizzi

659. On one of the days of testimony before the Commission, reference was made to a serious threat within the preceding week that had been made on Mr Agrizzi's life. However, Mr Agrizzi did not wish to go into the details of the threat. The proceedings of day 75 started with the Chairperson of the Commission referring to certain events in the public domain that had concerned him. He informed Mr Agrizzi that he had made enquiries and was assured that it was not connected with the evidence that Mr Agrizzi was giving at the Commission, and he was assured that the processes of the Commission would be respected until its work was finished. The Chairperson was also informed that the new Director of Public Prosecutions knew nothing about those events. The Chairperson noted that he was very concerned and continued to be concerned that nobody should do anything that would discourage witnesses from assisting the Commission.

660. Mr Agrizzi's referred to Exhibits LL1 and LL2 which were documents written in isiZulu and an attempt at a translation, respectively. The document LL1 in isiZulu and was found on Mr Agrizzi's windscreen after he left breakfast at Nicolway. Essentially the document was a threat with reference to his mother and a statement to the effect that the persons know what car he drives and that he should stop talking about state capture and about Bosasa.

661. A second incident which was placed on record is the fact that the Commission's investigators received a message from a senior police officer on 27 March 2019 informing them that Mr Agrizzi's life was under threat. This was based on reliable information. As a result of that, further security was provided to Mr Agrizzi. Notwithstanding those threats, Mr Agrizzi was willing to give evidence at the Commission.

Destruction of further evidence

662. Mr Agrizzi was asked to comment on the concern that at the time of the liquidation and when documents were returned to the liquidators at the Bosasa offices, documents were being destroyed. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that he had reported this to the liquidators and investigators. Mr Agrizzi testified that documents pertaining to the Bosasa supply chain management had been removed and destroyed and various other documents were being destroyed as well, but he had attempted to give all the information to the investigators.

Intimidation of journalists

663. Mr Basson testified on acts of intimidation against him. He explained that in 2006, he had occasion to publish articles concerning Bosasa while working at Die Beeld newspaper together with his colleague Ms Carien Du Plessis who was working for Die Burger newspaper at the time. These articles concerned numerous allegations levelled at the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services about Bosasa which had suddenly received "an avalanche of tenders from the Correctional Services Department". While employed at the Mail & Guardian newspaper and doing work there which pertained to the allegations referred to above, Mr Basson received threats on two occasions. He adduced that the only purpose of such threats at the time was to stop him writing about Bosasa. In January 2009, Mr Basson published a series of articles in the Mail & Guardian based on leaked emails that exposed how Bosasa employees had written large sections of tender documents for contracts that were awarded to the Bosasa companies detailed in evidence.

664. Following the publication of the article, Mr Basson started receiving calls on his cellular telephone. These calls always came during the day and night and early parts of the morning, sometimes from a number that was visible on his phone and sometimes from unknown numbers. The purpose of these calls and messages were always a person claiming that they were a Bosasa employee and saying to Mr Basson that he was threatening their jobs and that he would cause them to lose their jobs. They also asked Mr Basson to stop writing and reporting on Bosasa. In addition, there were other callers who accused him of racism, saying that he was only doing these articles because he was white and a racist. Mr Basson describes these phone calls as being upsetting and perturbing given that they were received at all times of the day. The callers also used profanities and an aggressive tone that made it clear that they believed Basson was endangering their livelihoods.

665. Mr Basson received confirmation from someone in Bosasa that his number had been distributed in the group to employees and that the employees were tasked to call and threaten him. The name of one specific Bosasa director was named as giving this instruction to employees. However, Mr Basson was reluctant to disclose the name of this director given that he had not been able to corroborate this information from his source.

666. The second episode during which Mr Basson was threatened and intimidated took place in February 2009.

    666.1 He received a call from a woman who did not introduce herself by name, but said she was a colleague or somehow involved with the media and that she wanted to warn Mr Basson about the investigations into Bosasa. The woman tried to convince Mr Basson that she was helping him by saying things like what he was doing was dangerous and she wanted to make sure that she was talking to the right person. She asked Mr Basson to verify his ID number, his home address and to confirm a list that she would provide him of his friends and family. The woman then proceeded to read an accurate list of names of friends and family members and their professions. Mr Basson got the clear impression that the woman was reading from some kind of intelligence document that had gathered information on Mr Basson and the real purpose of the call was not to help him but to scare him. The woman told Mr Basson how dangerous Bosasa was. The woman also had records of Mr Basson's tertiary studies where he studied, what he studied as well as the information of where he was born.

666.2 Mr Basson was perturbed by the call and that someone had known all this personal information about him. His impression was that some kind of intelligence operation was conducted on him.

666.3 The woman warned Mr Basson with the words "I will kill you if you tell anyone about our conversation". Although Mr Basson knows that sometimes people use that phrase jokingly, he did not believe this was joking as it was in the context of a much larger longer conversation with very ominous use of language and even the tone of her voice was very harsh in supposedly trying to help him.

667. Mr Basson later googled the telephone number and the identity of the caller came up as someone by the name of Ms Benadicta Dube. Ms Dube was a public relations consultant of a company called Igagu Media. Mr Basson quickly established that Ms Dube was in fact a journalist who worked for reputable publications like the Financial Mail and eTV before joining the public relations realm. Mr Basson testified that one of his sources within Bosasa had told him that Ms Dube was on the company's payroll and had been consulted about Mr Basson.

668. The call from Ms Dube was the subject of an article published by Mr Basson in the Mail & Guardian under the tile 'Very brave for a young man' on 22 May 2009. He explained that at the time of the article many journalists in South Africa were being targeted by either rogue private intelligence services or rogues state intelligence operators. The Mail & Guardian then published a series called 'Spy Nation' which dealt with all these occurrences where journalists had been spied on. The call that he received from Ms Dube was the subject matter of this article.

669. Mr Basson confirmed that his conclusion on the call received from Ms Dube was that her motives were never to caution, but rather to intimidate him. He also confirms the contents of the article that noted the Mail & Guardian's lawyer wrote to Bosasa and Igagu Media on 6 May 2009 demanding an immediate return of Mr Basson's personal information in their possession. Bosasa's lawyer denied the company had acted in an unlawful manner as alleged or at all and said Ms Dube's information falls within the public domain. Mr Basson confirmed that the information about him conveyed by Ms Dube on the telephone call was not in the public domain.

670. This concludes the summary of the evidence. The analysis of the evidence with reference to inter alia the Commission's TORs is contained below.

EVALUATION OF THE EVIDENCE

Analysis of the evidence against the TORs

671. This section provides an analysis of the Bosasa-related evidence presented before the Commission against the relevant TORs. The evidence is analysed with reference to the questions raised by each TOR.

672. The questions do not provide for hermetically sealed analysis, with evidence sometimes being relevant to more than one TOR. The evidence is analysed based on where it fits most comfortably.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.1.

Whether there were attempts to influence public office bearers: The evidence of Mr Agrizzi

673. The evidence of Mr Agrizzi provides the primary basis for an answer to this question. If his evidence is to be accepted, then the answer is a resounding yes. But can it be accepted? One must immediately acknowledge that several criticisms may be made in respect of Mr Agrizzi as a witness. His evidence was contradictory in certain instances. Examples of this include the following:

    673.1 He was clear in his initial affidavit that Mr Siza Thanda was head of security and Mr Thele Moema was head of risk for ACSA. When he gave oral evidence, he had difficulty recalling which positions they each occupied, acknowledging that he would need to clarify this.

    673.2 His evidence was contradictory as to whether the cash kept in the vaults was, apart from the payment of bribes, used to pay legitimate bonuses to employees, or to buy employees' silence.

    673.3 His evidence was contradictory as to whether the bundles of notes for large cash amounts used for bribery came in amounts of R100,000 or R150,000.

    673.4 On one occasion, Mr Agrizzi referred to Ms Lepinka as "Jay" and on another to Adv Mrwebi as "Jay".

    673.5 Mr Agrizzi to some extent contradicted himself as to whether his complaint regarding the investment on Ms Mokonyane was that it was not delivering returns for the Bosasa Group or whether his complaint was that it was not an appropriate and ethical way to do business.

    673.6 Mr Agrizzi testified that "more favourable terms" were included in the extended Lindela contract for Bosasa. He testified that Mr Wakeford explained these terms to Mr Agrizzi, which included making it "more feasible" for contract price increases. However, in his testimony during the Section 417 enquiry in the liquidation of African Global Operations, he conceded that the renegotiation of the Lindela contract was aimed at introducing cost savings for the DHA. He later revised his position to explain that the "more favourable contract terms" he claimed had been negotiated for Bosasa lay in the five-year extension and avoiding a tender process.

674. There are other examples of contradictory testimony on his part, as noted in the relevant places in the summary of evidence. His evidence was fallible in relation to detail. Examples include the following:

    674.1 He said that his employment with Dyambu Operations began in 1999, whereas it may have been 1998.

    674.2 He could not recall whether he had personally packed or delivered bags of cash to Siza Thanda and Thele Moema at ACSA, arguably, this type of criminal conduct is something that would stay in one's memory, although the large number of recipients of bribe money may well justify his inability to recall the details of his involvement with the payment of cash to specific recipients.

    674.3 When discussing the date when he met Mr Gillingham, he contradicted himself and acknowledged that "I get confused sometimes."

    674.4 He wrongly named a senior DCS official, Ms Jabulile Sishuba, as having received corrupt payments. To his credit, however, when challenged in this regard in her application to cross-examine him, he readily acknowledged his error and made a public withdrawal and apologised.

    674.5 When cross-examined by Mr Wakeford's representative as to whether he stood by his evidence relating to Mr Wakeford, Mr Radhakrishna and Mr Papadakis, Mr Agrizzi acknowledged that there might well have been mistakes in relation to dates and times, although he insisted that his evidence was correct insofar as it pertained to corrupt relationships.

    674.6 When asked to comment on the specific amounts paid by Bosasa to RTC, a cement supplier, Mr Agrizzi did not deal with the details put to him and instead stood by a generalised allegation that cement, paid for by Bosasa, was delivered to Mr Papadakis as gratification.

674.7 Mr Agrizzi could not provide detail about which "major SARS investigation" Mr Wakeford approached Mr Watson, nor could he recall which of the "big companies" was under investigation.

675. He was prone to exaggeration. Examples include the following:

675.1 He estimated that there were about eight walk-in vaults at the Bosasa premises. Mr le Roux testified that there were only four.

675.2 His claim that his estimate of total Bosasa contract values would be accurate to within R1 to R 2 million, is likely to be an exaggeration.

675.3 His estimates of the value of the security installations at Mr Mantashe's houses appear to be exaggerated when compared to the evidence of other witnesses.

676. His evidence was less convincing where he tried to portray a less corrupt version of himself. Examples include the following:

676.1 Mr Agrizzi tried to suggest that when Mr van Zyl approached him to change the methodology for securing large cash amounts without raising suspicion, he "did not want to get involved at first" and "kind of shunned the idea", because he was "getting a bit fed up of all this" and told Mr Watson "look I really do not want to know".

676.2 At one point, Mr Agrizzi claimed that despite being Group COO, "my influence [in Bosasa] is very limited, in actual fact."

677. His demeanour as a witness was open to criticism in certain respects.

677.1 There are instances where Mr Agrizzi unreasonably refused to concede that certain aspects of his evidence were inconsistent with objective evidence put to him. For example, the invoices attached to Ms Davids' affidavit which demonstrated that the last delivery by Wearne to Mr Papadakis' property was on 9 July 2009. Mr Agrizzi was unwilling to concede that this was objective evidence regarding the date of the last delivery of wet cement, despite accepting that he could not dispute that the last delivery to Mr Papadakis was in 2009.

677.2 Under cross-examination by Mr Wakeford's representative, he was at times unnecessarily defensive or argumentative.

677.3 His motives in revealing the extensive corruption to which he testified may have been mixed ones, rather than exclusively public-spirited ones. The disclosures followed a breakdown in relations between him and Mr Watson and, if he could somehow avoid prosecution, might have advanced his own business ambitions.

678. Notwithstanding these observations there was substantial corroboration on the main pillars of Mr Agrizzi's evidence. This included the investigations of the SIU reflected in their report and amplified in the testimony of Mr Oellermann; the evidence of other witnesses who were previously employed at Bosasa and were willing to incriminate themselves in their testimony; the video evidence put up, particularly that of the vault and safes where the cash was stored and distributed, with the handling of cash underway; and, in several instances, the admissions and concessions of the persons implicated in his evidence.

679. More detail of the corroborative evidence is provided below. As pointed out earlier, one must also consider that Mr Agrizzi implicated himself widely and extensively in the criminal conduct to which he testified. Whilst he may sometimes have sought to lessen his role to some degree, he was, on his own evidence, guilty of criminal conduct on a substantial scale. Taking this into account, along with the corroborative evidence, it may be accepted that Mr Agrizzi was in the main a truthful witness, the above criticisms notwithstanding.

680. To the extent that he may have underplayed his role in the corruption and has sought to shift a greater share of the blame for the corrupt activities to Mr Watson, it does not detract from the fact that, with reference to the first question asked by TOR 1.1, there is overwhelming evidence that there were indeed attempts through various forms of inducement and gain, to influence members of the National Executive, and office bearers of state institutions and organs of state. This is particularly so when the evidence is looked at as a whole or as a mosaic.

681. In fairness to Mr Agrizzi, whatever the true distribution of corrupt activities as between him and Mr Watson, the evidence of Mr Watson's involvement in corrupt activities is overwhelming. That conclusion is reached mindful of the fact that he is not able to defend himself on the allegations against him, having lost his life during the Commission's proceedings. It is significant in this regard that:

    681.1 By the time of his death Mr Watson had not sought the opportunity to testify in the Commission to defend the allegations made against him by Mr Agrizzi

    681.2 By the time of his death, Mr Watson had not responded to the Rule 3.3 notice calling upon him to file an affidavit in response to the allegations (the Regulation 10(6) directive had not yet been served on him); and

    681.3 None of Mr Watson's siblings, who were to a lesser degree also implicated in the corrupt activities of Bosasa, have stepped forward to respond to the allegations against themselves or those made against their deceased sibling, by volunteering testimony in the Commission or responding appropriately to the Rule 3.3 notices issued to them.

682. To conclude on the question whether Mr Agrizzi's evidence can be accepted, it must be answered in the affirmative, save where indicated otherwise in any specific instance. Taken cumulatively, there is clear and convincing evidence pertaining to Bosasa, of attempts to influence persons in the categories of office bearers and officials listed in TOR 1.1.

What was the extent of the attempts to influence public office bearers?

683. Bosasa's primary mechanism for attempting to influence public office bearers was the payment of cash bribes. The amounts paid tended to be commensurate with the degree of influence that could be exercised by the official concerned. The system involved seeking to do so, in most instances, on an ongoing basis. This was no doubt aimed at developing a corrupt form of loyalty to Bosasa, through the dependence on the regular payments that would develop. By spreading the benefits relatively widely, it also sought simultaneously to maximise its corrupt influence, but also to decrease the likelihood of whistleblowers coming forward to expose particularly corrupted public office-bearers.

684. However, the attempts at influence through inducement or gain were not confined to cash payments. Bosasa also built houses, provided various furnishings for homes, installed several home security systems, purchased motor vehicles, bought gifts (from premium luxury gifts such as pens and jewellery to food and grocery items) and paid for travel and accommodation.

685. Perhaps the best sense of the extent and scale of the attempts at influence is that to be derived from an examination of the various mechanisms that Bosasa established to generate, store, and distribute sufficient cash to sustain the payments used to influence the public office bearers concerned.

686. The evidence establishes that various mechanisms were used by Bosasa and its associates to generate cash for these purposes. Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder testified that Mr Watson and Bosasa required a substantial amount of cash every month, which necessitated establishing these illegal mechanisms. The various illegal methods used to generate cash included:

    686.1 The creation of fraudulent documentation and fake invoices by Bosasa

    686.2 Utilising Metropolitan Death Benefit Fund documentation as source documents for cash cheques - symptomatic of the level of depravity of the corrupt activities of Bosasa and those of its directors and employees involved in the bribery

    686.3 Service providers supplying false invoices to Bosasa for goods and services, where, in truth, cash rather than goods and services were delivered

    686.4 Fictitious transactions between Bosasa and government departments for the supply by Bosasa of, for example, software programmes

686.5 Cash sales at Lindela that were not accounted for as income from Lindela, but rather shifted to the vaults at Bosasa.

686.6 Cash bars and canteens at various mine hostels administered by Bosasa, that were similarly not accounted for as income, but rather shifted to the vaults at Bosasa

686.7 Payments to ghost employees; and

686.8 Over-invoicing for goods supplied by AA Wholesalers where the difference between the goods supplied and the total invoice would be delivered in cash to Bosasa.

687. Mr van Tonder testified that Bosasa had also used various attorneys' trust accounts to hold Bosasa monies to mitigate against the risk of Bosasa running out of funds if its bank accounts were ever frozen. When Bosasa required cash, requests would be made to withdraw the funds. As an example, Mr van Tonder referred to an email sent by Mr Agrizzi to Mr Biebuyck and himself where Mr Agrizzi requested that R25 million be transferred to Bosasa from the trust account.

688. Mr Agrizzi, Mr van Tonder and Mr le Roux testified to the cash stored at Bosasa's premises. Mr Agrizzi testified that the amount of cash stored in a walk-in vault behind the main boardroom would range from R2 million to approximately R6.5 million, which amount would be exceeded over the December period. The amount of cash stored would depend on the amount requested weekly by Mr Watson and members of Bosasa's board or management, who would ask for money to be paid out as bribes. Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder testified that employees involved in the administrative process of arranging the cash would also be paid monthly "bonuses" from the cash as a means of retaining their loyalty and buying their silence.

689. A video filmed by Mr van Tonder on 28 March 2017 at Bosasa's office supports the evidence regarding the cash stored at the premises. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was tasked specifically with the handling of cash, which included getting the cash, counting it out and delivering the cash for making the attempts at influence. Mr Agrizzi often made up cash bundles himself to be paid to government officials, as he was instructed to do by Bosasa's board of directors.

690. Mr Agrizzi also gave evidence regarding the system that was implemented for the handling of cash. Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson would meet monthly with the board who would give instructions on what needed to be paid to whom. After Mr Watson had approved a list compiled by Mr Agrizzi, Mr Agrizzi would encode the list and the cash would be packed per code-identified recipient. Mr Agrizzi would then hand grey sealable bags with the money to the member of senior management who would deliver the money to the relevant officials. Some of the senior managers included Mr Dikane, Mr Dlamini, Mr Gumede, Ms Makoko and Mr Leshabane. Mr Agrizzi explained his system of assigning codes to the bribery money and attached some of the lists that he had compiled in early 2016 to his Initial Affidavit. Later, Mr Agrizzi started to record the various codes in what he referred to as his "black book". The code would contain information of the person to receive the bribe, the amount and the name of the person delivering the bribe to them. Some of the discrepancies in the codes used by Mr Agrizzi were pointed out to him. Mr Agrizzi explained that the codes changed when he and Mr Gumede realised that Mr van Zyl was able to decipher the standard codes and that he varied the codes to avoid them becoming a trail. Mr Agrizzi acknowledged that there were errors in some of the codes where he had made mistakes.

691. Mr Agrizzi testified that an estimated amount of R4 million to R6 million in bribes was being paid monthly at the time he left Bosasa. He also testified that Bosasa gave gifts to individuals other than cash payments, although less frequently. According to Mr Agrizzi, the most important criterion to determine whether a person should receive a payment would be that they would be supportive of Bosasa and, in particular, that they would ensure that a tender would be awarded to, or retained by, Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi estimated that the total number of persons who would be paid by Bosasa monthly was in the region of 80 and he recalled a list of 38 government officials and employees who received bribes on a regular basis.

692. Mr Agrizzi confirmed that various emails between him and Mr van Zyl from early to the middle of 2011, where reference is made to arranging "loaves" of bread and "breadroll requirements", were references to money bribes. Mr Agrizzi also explained that reference in an email between him and Mr van Zyl to a DOJCD management fee was code for bribe money that was paid in cash to Mr Seopela (who would then hand over the money to officials in the DCS). Other emails exchanged between Mr van Zyl and Mr Agrizzi show the references to codes where payments were to be made, including payments to Reuben Pillay (security manager at ACSA) authorised by Mr Gumede and payments to Ms Makoko, including R100,000 for a funeral in Rustenburg and a R5,000 donation for Ms Zukiswa Jamela.

693. Mr Agrizzi in his evidence estimated the aggregate value of contracts awarded to the Bosasa Group of Companies by various public departments and entities between 2000 and 2016 to be at least R2,371,500,000.00. Mr Agrizzi estimated that approximately R75,700,000 was paid out in bribes. The breakdown of the various contracts within the Bosasa Group and an estimated value that was paid out in bribes annually, per contract, includes the value of houses built, fixtures and fittings, security systems, furnishings, motor vehicles purchased, and travel expenses incurred.

694. The evidence thus reveals that the attempts at influence by Bosasa and its leadership were carried out at what may fairly be characterised as an industrial scale, requiring, and evidenced by, mechanisms to secure an ongoing generation and delivery of cash in quantities that were not feasible through normal trading operations, particularly where the nature of Bosasa's business was not inherently cash based. Payments pursuant to the catering and security tenders that it was awarded by government departments, municipalities and SOEs would have been affected by electronic funds transfers. Cash generating activities, such as the canteen at Lindela, were not the main source of income for Bosasa. Hence the need for the illicit mechanisms for large-scale cash generation and the need for substantial vaults at the Bosasa offices where the cash could be stored and processed.

695. Even if one accepts that Mr Agrizzi was not always accurate in his estimations, judged purely by the quantum of evidence placed before the Commission, the attempts at gaining influence through inducement or gain by Bosasa and persons associated with it were central to its business model and operated at a very substantial scale.

By whom were the attempts at influence made?

696. The evidence was that the following individuals and entities were involved in providing inducements and gain, in the form of cash payments or other material benefits, to various functionaries or office bearers employed by state institutions or organs of state:

    696.1 Mr Watson made cash payments to Mr Siviwe Mapisa (head of security at SAPO) and Mr Maanda Manyatshe (CEO at SAPO).

    696.2 Mr Agrizzi and Mr Gumede purchased premium gifts for Mr Siviwe Mapisa and Mr Maanda Manyatshe. These were provided by Bosasa in exchange for a security contract at SAPO. There was similar evidence against Mr Johnson Vovo, but no Rule 3.3 notice was issued to him and accordingly, no negative finding may be made against him.

    696.3 Mr Agrizzi testified to having, together with Mr Gumede, made cash payments to various officials at ACSA, including Mr Thele Moema (head of risk), Mr Siza Thanda (head of security), Mr Reuben Pillay and Mr Johannes Serobe. Messrs Moema, Pillay and Serobe did not respond to Rule 3.3 notices and the evidence may be taken as established in respect of the payment of bribes to them.

    696.4 Ms Bongi Mpungose, Mr Jason Tshabalala and Mr Mohammed Bashir were also named as having received corrupt payments. However, these three persons have not been provided with Rule 3.3 notices and accordingly negative findings may not be made against them.

    696.5 Messrs Watson, Agrizzi, Taverner, Mansell and Vorster were involved in making cash payments and providing fittings and furnishings to the private residences of Mr Gillingham and Mr Mti in exchange for information regarding DCS tenders, permitting corrupt involvement by Bosasa officials in the development of tender specifications and generally enabling Bosasa to secure and retain the contracts flowing from the tenders. Mr Venter corroborated the fact that cash payments were made to Mr Gillingham. Various travel expenses, including international travel and flights, were paid for by Bosasa for Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham. Bosasa paid for the studies of two of Mr Mti's children and for security guards to be placed at Mr Mti's house. Mr Gumede paid cash to an official at a court to make a drunk driving charge against Mr Mti disappear. Bosasa also paid Mr Gillingham a 'salary' through BEE Foods after his resignation from DCS. Mr van Tonder testified that he attended to various computer repair issues for Mr Gillingham and Mr Mti, on instruction from Mr Watson, on numerous occasions from 2008.

696.6 Mr Watson, Mr Vorster, Mr van Tonder, Dr Smith and Mr Bonifacio were involved in the purchase of motor vehicles for Mr Gillingham and his family members, including his wife, son and daughter. Mr Agrizzi, Mr Vorster and Mr van Tonder gave corroborating evidence in this regard. Mr Agrizzi and Mr Vorster's evidence differed on whether an amount of R180,000 (or R150,000) paid towards a Mercedes Benz E320 was paid to Mr Bonifacio and then transferred between other accounts before being paid to Mr Gillingham, or whether it was paid to Mr Bonifacio who then paid it to the motor vehicle dealership. It is apparent from the evidence that fake documents were drawn up and that the money was paid between different individuals and accounts to conceal or disguise the true nature of the transactions. Mr Vorster testified that he was instructed to procure a motor vehicle for Mr Mti in 2005 and that he presumed that the vehicle was paid for by Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mti's children also benefitted from flight tickets and cars.

696.7 Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder testified that Bosasa, through Mr Watson and Mr Hoeksma, paid for the building of Mr Gillingham's house in Midstream Estate and Mr Mti's house in Savannah Hills. Bosasa paid for the cost of the construction of the houses via companies that Mr Mansell had set up to handle these transactions – Grande Four and L&J Civils. False invoices were submitted with the costs of the construction being accounted for as a legitimate business expense in Bosasa's books. Mr le Roux testified that he had been instructed by Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson to install security systems at Mr Mti's homes to the value of R350,000. The total approximate cost of the equipment, vehicle, travel and labour for work done at Mr Mti's residences in the Eastern Cape was R417,980.19, which excludes miscellaneous costs Mr le Roux purchased on his credit card in the Eastern Cape.

696.8 Mr Agrizzi and Mr van Tonder testified that Bosasa had paid for Mr Gillingham's legal fees during the SIU investigation, through a company called Syncho Prop. Bosasa also paid for Mr Gillingham's legal fees related to his divorce as well as R2.2 million in settlement to Gillingham's wife. Bosasa paid for the legal fees related to Mr Gillingham's son's labour dispute with Bakwena, as well as for the payment of R700,000 owed to Bakwena. A fictitious loan agreement was drawn up between Mr Gillingham and Mr Agrizzi's erstwhile in-laws.

696.8.1 Bosasa paid a "consultancy fee" of R5 million to Mr Sekgota's company to secure an extension of the third catering contract at DCS, pending its renewal. Mr Agrizzi's evidence was that the third catering contract was granted using the same corruptly prepared specifications drafted for the first catering contract and that he was instructed by Mr Watson to work closely with Mr Nkabinde and Mr Sekgota to ensure that Bosasa retained the catering contract. On the probabilities, the monies paid to Mr Sekgota and Mr Nkabinde were, in part, used for the payment of inducements or gains, for them to be able to secure the tender awards. Mr Agrizzi made several allegations to suggest that Mr Nkabinde and Mr Sekgota had the ability to facilitate the award of the catering contract to Bosasa, despite not being officials of the DCS:

696.8.2 Mr Nkabinde had a copy of the tender before it had been issued.

696.8.3 Mr Sekgota required a R5 million fee to be paid to his consultancy company to secure a six-month extension of the contract which would then give them time to iron out details for obtaining the new tender. This amount was paid by Bosasa.

696.8.4 Mr Sekgota required payment of R10 million to secure a renewal of the catering contract. When this was not paid, Bosasa was unable to retain 40% of the catering contract but retained the remaining 60% of the contract that had been irregularly awarded.

696.9 Despite being issued with Rule 3.3 notices, neither Mr Nkabinde nor Mr Sekgota sought leave to cross-examine Mr Agrizzi or present evidence in contradiction of his version. Mr Agrizzi's evidence in this regard therefore stands undisputed.

696.10 Bosasa made monthly payments of R1 million (later reduced to R700,000) to Mr Sithole, 'Sbu' and Mr Nxele, in exchange for undue pressure being placed on the DCS and Mr Petersen, through the unions, to get Mr Petersen to agree to work with Bosasa.

696.11 Mr Agrizzi testified that Bosasa made payments to officials in the DCS, through Mr Seopela, including to Mr Moyane when he was National Commissioner.

696.12 Mr Leshabane, Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi paid cash to Mr Modise, who Mr Agrizzi testified was receiving monthly payments from Bosasa.

696.13 Mr le Roux testified that Bosasa paid for the maintenance and installation of a security system at Mr Makwetla's residence, which included the total approximate cost of the equipment, vehicle travel and labour to the approximate value of R308,754.24. There is little doubt that from the perspective of Bosasa, the security system was provided as an attempted inducement.

696.14 Sondolo IT paid 2.5% of all money received through the DOJCD secure systems contract, to individuals within the Department as lobbying fees or bribes. Bosasa also paid for the repair of vehicles, for the purchase of furniture and it paid cash amounts to officials in the DOJCD.

696.15 Bosasa, through Mr Gumede, paid monthly cash amounts to Ms Nyambuse (R40,000) and Mr Thobane (R30,000). Mr Agrizzi was present on a few occasions when money was handed over to them by Mr Gumede. Both names also appear in Mr Agrizzi's black book. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was present on one occasion when money was paid over to Ms Masha around 2013/2014. Bosasa (Sondolo IT) also paid Mr Seopela R1.9 million as a 'fee' for arranging the DOJCD security upgrades contract at the SALU building. However, Ms Nyambuse and Mr Thobane have not been provided with Rule 3.3 notices and accordingly negative findings may not be made against them.

696.16 Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mathenjwa facilitated payments for Bheki Gina's sister at the Department of Education to secure the contract for the provision of CCTV and access control systems. On the one hand, Mr Agrizzi testified that approximately R1.25 million was paid as bribe money to this individual, but on the other hand, he stated that he was "out of the loop" on this tender. Given this contradiction, no finding may be made in this regard, although it would be appropriate for the matter to be investigated further by the appropriate authority. Mr Mathenjwa denied that he facilitated payments to secure a contract.

696.17 Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mzazi facilitated and secured, through his contacts at USAASSA (procurement personnel and the accounting officer), that portions of a tender would be allocated to Sondolo IT. To secure this undertaking, Mr Mzazi paid an illegal inducement in a sum of R500,000 in cash. According to Mr Agrizzi, at a meeting with Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi, the accounting officer agreed to work with Bosasa. Whilst the procurement personnel and the accounting officer have neither been identified, nor served with Rule 3.3 notices, and accordingly may not be the subject matter of negative findings, Mr Mzazi failed to respond to a Rule 3.3 notice and it may therefore be accepted that he provided inducements or gain to unidentified persons in an attempt to influence them.

696.18 Mr Agrizzi testified that payments were made to a certain "Mlungise" at the Department of Transport for the award of the contract for fleet management to Kgwerano. This evidence is hearsay as Mr Agrizzi relied on the version purportedly conveyed to him by Mr Leshabane. Mr Agrizzi also testified that when Avis bought Bosasa's shares in the joint venture, Phavisworld, for R23.5 million, an amount was included therein to be paid to Mr Seopela and Mr Leshabane to pay officials at the Department of Transport to secure an extension of the fleet management contract. "Mlungise", if a person exists or existed by that name in the Department of Transport, has not received a Rule 3.3 notice, with the result that no negative finding may be made in respect of him. However, the stance of Mr Seopela and Mr Leshabane, explained above, has the consequence that the evidence against them stands uncontradicted. At least on a balance of probabilities, Mr Seopela and Mr Leshabane sought to influence the award and the extension of the contract for fleet management through unlawful inducements and gain, as contemplated in TOR 1.1. On Mr Agrizzi's version, Clive Els may have participated in, or at least had knowledge of, the unlawful inducements and gain. However, no Rule 3.3 notice was issued to him and no negative finding may be made against him. There is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case in this regard.

696.19 Mr Agrizzi and Mr Vorster testified that Mr Gumede instructed that Mr Netshishivhe's Isuzu motor vehicle be serviced, which was approved by Mr Watson. Mr Netshishivhe was a member of the Mpumalanga Department of Health's security cluster and is alleged to have had influence over the award of contracts. Mr Netshishivhe has not received a Rule 3.3 notice, so no negative finding may be made against him, but having regard to Mr Gumede's stance, the evidence against him is undisputed and it may be accepted for purposes of TOR 1.1, on a balance of probabilities, that he attempted to influence unidentified persons in the Department of Health, Mpumalanga, through unlawful inducements or gain.

696.20 Mr Agrizzi testified that he together with Mr Watson and Mr Mti were involved in making monthly cash payments to Adv Jiba, Adv Mrwebi and Ms Lepinka at the NPA to provide Bosasa with information regarding ongoing investigations into Bosasa and to interfere with the investigation and possible future prosecutions. Although Mr Agrizzi was not present when the deliveries were allegedly made by Mr Mti to Adv Jiba, Adv Mrwebi and Ms Lepinka, he made the deliveries of the cash to Mr Mti and recorded them in his black book. Adv Jiba denies ever receiving bribes from Mr Mti or anyone else. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mti liaised with the persons in the NPA to obtain information, which included copies of secret documents, minutes of meetings and other information internal to the NPA. Adv Jiba denies having supplied the documents to Mr Mti or to any Bosasa official. Adv Mrwebi distanced himself from Adv Jiba's application to cross-examine Mr Agrizzi, which purports to be signed by Adv Mrwebi. The application was dismissed as a result. As such, the evidence against Adv Mrwebi is undisputed, but remains hearsay.

696.21 Mr Agrizzi attached twelve documents to his Initial Affidavit, which he alleges were given to him or Mr Watson by Mr Mti, who informed Mr Agrizzi that he had received the documents from Adv Jiba and persons within the NPA. Mr Agrizzi testified that the facts contained in the documents were confirmed to him by Mr Seopela, who was close to Adv Simelane. Mr Oellermann was of the view that the persons who leaked the documents to Bosasa must have known that the information would harm the prosecution. Adv de Kock confirmed that six of the twelve documents were in fact what they purported to be and were all confidential NPA documents which she had marked as confidential to ensure that the relevant information security provisions were applicable. She believed the leaks were not random and that any person within the NPA would have been aware that to leak the documents would be unlawful, as possession of the documents by an implicated person would harm the investigation. Mr Oellermann testified that throughout the course of the SIU investigation, there were regular incidents which occurred where it seemed that Bosasa had a very good idea or knowledge of the progress of the investigation. Mr Agrizzi's evidence regarding the alleged participation of Adv Jiba, Adv Mrwebi and Ms Lepinka is hearsay. Adv Mrwebi did not dispute the allegations made against him. Adv Jiba resolved not to persist with her application to cross-examine and her request to give evidence before the Commission on the basis that Mr Agrizzi had no personal knowledge of her having received any money. Ms Lepinka filed an affidavit in response to a Regulation 10(6) directive issued by the Commission in which she denied having received any money from Bosasa, Mr Agrizzi, Mr Watson or their agents for any purpose and denied having handed any documents or information from the NPA to any unauthorised person. It nonetheless remains probable that some form of inducement or gain was paid to a person or persons in the NPA for Bosasa to have been able to gain possession of confidential documentation which they were not lawfully entitled to have in their possession. This matter should also be the subject of further investigation.

696.22 Mr Mlambo and Mr le Roux testified to security upgrades being undertaken by Bosasa at two properties owned by Mr Mti, located in the Eastern Cape and KwaZulu-Natal. That evidence stands uncontested for the reasons given above.

696.23 Mr Venter testified about payments he was instructed by Mr Watson to make to Mr Motsoeneng, Moroka Consultants and a trust established by Andile Ramaphosa (President Ramaphosa's son). According to Mr Venter, Miotto Trading was used by Mr Watson as a vehicle to disguise the true nature of the transactions. No findings may be made against Mr Andile Ramaphosa, Mr Motsoeneng or Moroka Consultants as no Rule 3.3 notices were issued to them. Miotto Trading did not respond to the Rule 3.3 notice, but it would be prejudicial to the other parties referred to in this paragraph if a finding were to be made against it.

696.24 In addition to those persons already named, Mr Agrizzi recorded in his black book that the following individuals employed by or associated with Bosasa were involved in making unlawful payments to various state officials and functionaries as forms of inducement or gain as contemplated in TOR 1.1: Syvion Dlamini, Ryno Roode and Patrick Littler.

697. Mr Dlamini filed an affidavit in response to a 10 (6) directive in which he denies ever taking money to or from any person. Given that Mr Roode and Mr Littler have not responded to Rule 3.3 notices, the evidence may be taken as established against them. This matter should also be the subject of further investigation.

698. Mr Johann Fourie, Raymond (it is unknown what his surname is, but he formed part of the Special Projects Team), Nichola du Toit, Eugene Bredenkamp, Danie van Tonder and Johan Aubrey were implicated in the evidence but no Rule 3.3 notices were issued to them. No negative findings may thus be made against them. These instances, along with similar ones referred to above, should be subject to further investigation. Tshepo Huma was issued with a Rule 3.3 notice on 11 August 2020, to which he failed to respond. The evidence against him is uncontested.

698.1 The above evidence in relation to the persons and entities by whom inducements or gain as contemplated in TOR 1.1 was provided, may be taken as established, at least on a balance of probabilities, save where an implicated party has not received a Rule 3.3 notice or has responded to a Rule 3.3 notice or Regulation 10(6) directive in a manner that precludes a negative finding.

Messrs Wakeford and Radhakrishna

699. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was advised by Mr Radhakrishna that Mr Watson and Mr Wakeford had agreed to pay him R7 million for facilitating the renegotiation and extension of the Lindela contract on favourable terms and without following any tender process. Mr Wakeford denied being party to any such agreement and further denied being aware of any discussion regarding payment to Mr Radhakrishna. Mr Agrizzi contended that Mr Watson refused to pay the R7 million, but did agree to monthly payments to Mr Radhakrishna, disguised by being made through a company with a name along the lines of "the Wine Merchant company".

700. Mr Agrizzi's oral evidence on the allegation that a fee of R7 million was claimed by Mr Radhakrishna from Bosasa for renegotiating the extension of the Lindela contract was contradictory. Initially, Mr Agrizzi said that he approached Mr Watson believing that Mr Radhakrishna should not be entitled to any payment, and that Mr Watson told him that Mr Radhakrishna should not be paid R7 million but could instead be paid monthly. Subsequently Mr Agrizzi said that he in fact proposed to Mr Watson that Mr Radhakrishna be paid monthly.

701. There are also problems with Mr Agrizzi's version in relation to timing and the role he played. Mr Agrizzi testified that, at the time that the monthly payments to Mr Radhakrishna were agreed, he had not yet examined the revised Lindela contract in detail and was not aware of its favourable terms. This was why he had questioned why Mr Radhakrishna should be entitled to any payment at all. Mr Agrizzi himself signed both the second and third addenda on 18 February 2008 and 13 March 2009 respectively. By then he must surely have been aware of at least their main terms. However, the monthly payments to Mr Radhakrishna (through the "wine merchant company" which turned out to be Distinctive Choice Wines) only commenced in July 2011. Mr Agrizzi's evidence does not hang logically together.

702. Mr Radhakrishna was frank in his acceptance of the fact that he received payment from Bosasa through the bank account of Distinctive Choice Wines. He proffered an explanation for this – the fees from Bosasa were received for work performed in his personal capacity (he said it was for consulting work performed relating to introducing Bosasa to opportunities in the oil and gas industry, consulting work on e-learning projects for the Gauteng Department of Education and introducing Bosasa to opportunities in e-health) and he did not wish his Akhile co-directors to share in the fees earned.

703. Mr Radhakrishna stated that there is no logical basis for the contention he sought to disguise that the payments were from Bosasa, given that Akhile had already received consulting fees from Bosasa in November 2009, i.e., twenty months before Distinctive Choice Wines ever received any payments from it and only a few months after the third addendum was concluded. Further, Akhile still received funds from Bosasa in August 2011, subsequent to Distinctive Choice Wines receiving fees in July 2011. Again, this evidence was not challenged by Mr Agrizzi in any meaningful way, nor was he able to present any evidence to contradict the version of Mr Radhakrishna.

704. Based on the foregoing, no findings can reasonably be made against Mr Radhakrishna in this respect. It may or may not be that his diversion of fees to himself through Distinctive Choice Wines instead of Akhile was open to question as between them, but that is not conduct falling within the Commission's terms of reference.

705. It follows that it cannot be said that either Bosasa or Mr Wakeford sought to influence any of the categories of officials listed in TOR 1.1 through the payments to Mr Radhakrishna via Distinctive Choice Wines.

Messrs Wakeford and Papadakis

706. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Wakeford approached Mr Watson when Bosasa was undergoing "a major SARS investigation" with the recommendation that Mr Papadakis be brought on board to help resolve Bosasa's "issues" with SARS. Bosasa, and some of its leadership were being "constantly hounded" by SARS with audits. At the time, Mr Papadakis was an official at SARS and the idea was to make representations in relation to the ongoing investigation against Bosasa to him. Mr Agrizzi also claimed that Mr Wakeford arranged for Bosasa to provide wet and dry cement to a property in Meyersdal owned by Mr Papadakis. In return for procuring Mr Papadakis' assistance in the particular investigation and other ongoing SARS investigations, Mr Wakeford received payment of a fee of "about R100,000 a month" from Bosasa.

707. Messrs Wakeford and Papadakis denied the allegations and that there was any malfeasance on their part, as alleged by Mr Agrizzi. In support of his denial, Mr Wakeford explained that he secured a consultancy contract through his company Wakeford Investment Enterprises CC with Bosasa in 2006. This consultancy arrangement was because of Mr Valence Watson's intervention during a time that Mr Wakeford was "unemployable". Mr Wakeford testified that he received R50,000 per month (plus VAT) to provide on-going consultancy services to Bosasa.

708. Mr Wakeford stated that the only months he received R100,000 from Bosasa was because of arrear payments or catch-up payments due in terms of his consultancy agreement with Bosasa. This version was substantiated by documentary evidence in the form of schedules of invoices and an independent audit report.

709. Mr Agrizzi was not able to dispute that Mr Wakeford was engaged by Bosasa as a consultant during the period 2006 to April 2015. Mr Agrizzi could furthermore not dispute that Mr Wakeford was paid a fee of R50,000 per month plus VAT in total and, in some months, there were additional expenses. Mr Agrizzi initially accepted that the invoices issued by Mr Wakeford were in the amount R50,000 plus VAT. However, subsequently in his evidence he sought to walk back on this concession and ultimately refused to concede that there was no evidence to demonstrate that Mr Wakeford was paid R100,000 to manage Mr Papadakis.

710. During the section 417 inquiry, Mr van Tonder testified that the payments to Mr Wakeford did not start only during the SARS investigation. He confirmed that it was not unusual for Mr Wakeford to receive monthly payments; however, the amounts were sporadic – in some months it was R50,000 and in others R100,000. His evidence furthermore confirmed Mr Wakeford's version that Mr Agrizzi was opposed to the payments to Mr Wakeford and, at times, payment to Mr Wakeford was late as a result, "and then it was ... double up".

711. Weighing the contrasting versions on this issue, that of Mr Wakeford regarding the nature and amount of the monthly payments to him is largely to be preferred and there is insufficient evidence to support a finding that the payments to Wakeford were exclusively for corruptly "managing" Papadakis in relation to the "major SARS investigation". Indeed, other evidence of Agrizzi himself points to a substantially wider role of Mr Wakeford as consultant to Bosasa. Accordingly, it cannot be said that the payments to Wakeford were made exclusively to influence Mr Papadakis as an office bearer of SARS as a state institution.

712. That finding does not, however, mean that the role of Mr Wakeford as consultant, in relation to Mr Papadakis should not be scrutinised.

713. Mr Wakeford testified that Mr Papadakis could never have assisted Bosasa in resolving any major investigation at SARS before 26 February 2009 as no SARS investigation existed before 23 March 2011, given that there was no notice of an initiation of an investigation until the end of 2010. Instead, the first notification of an impending audit from SARS was issued on 18 August 2010. Mr Wakeford testified further that he would only ask Mr Papadakis for guidance from an administrative or administrative justice perspective from time to time.

714. Mr Papadakis declined to respond to Mr Agrizzi's allegation because he claimed that it would constitute a violation of section 69(1) of the Tax Administration Act ("TAA") and he had requested "an undertaking from the Commission" which request had not, by the time of deposing to his affidavit, been responded to by the Commission.

715. Despite Mr Agrizzi's inability to recall precisely what SARS matters Mr Papadakis' assistance was purportedly procured for, documentary evidence revealed that email communications between Mr Wakeford and Mr Papadakis were conducted through Mr Papadakis' wife, Ms Engelbrecht.

716. Ms Engelbrecht explained that, from her understanding, the association between Messrs Papadakis and Wakeford commenced in approximately 2002 when they were involved in the commission of inquiry into the rapid depreciation of the exchange rate and related matters. It was Mr Wakeford that had introduced Mr Papadakis to the Watsons. Mr Wakeford referred to Mr Papadakis in the emails addressed to Ms Engelbrecht as either "advisor" or "George". Examples include the following:

    716.1 An email dated 25 July 2011 is addressed by Mr Wakeford to Mr Agrizzi, "bigjohn" and Ms Engelbrecht under the subject line "Food Supply Opportunities" saying "Meeting postponed as suggested by George".

    716.2 An email is sent by Mr Wakeford on 10 October 2012 to Ms Engelbrecht with the subject line "Letter", referring to advice that is needed "on this matter". On the same day she responds "Advisor in CTown until Friday, 19 October so don't expect response before then? Ok?"

    716.3 An email is sent by Mr Wakeford on 21 February 2013 to Ms Engelbrecht incorporating a draft letter intended to be placed on Bosasa's auditors' letterhead and seemingly to be addressed to SARS regarding a tax audit, complaining about the tax treatment of certain expenses and complaining that "our client feels that it has been overly subject to audits". The source of the draft letter is Mr Agrizzi. Above the draft letter is the request "Please see below and ask advisor to comment." Ms Engelbrecht responds, saying "Will ask advisor tonight only if that's ok?"

    716.4 An email is sent by Mr Wakeford on 17 May 2013 to Ms Engelbrecht saying, "See attached re discussion!" and forwarding an email from Mr Bonifacio with the subject line "Tax Audits in the Spotlight", attaching a newspaper article on the subject.

716.5 An email is addressed by Mr Wakeford on 30 September 2013 to Ms Engelbrecht under the subject line "Tomorrow's meeting". It reads

> I will be meeting George tomorrow at 2pm. Please cancel your driver's collection at my office as I will give him the Fidentia file personally.
>
> In addition I will drop off 75% of the Biltong and Dried Wors for him, Nick and Athos.
> I attach a document that he needs to peruse before I meet him.

and attaches a draft letter addressed to SARS complaining about tax audits conducted against the Bosasa Group of companies, alleging breach of an agreement reached with a SARS official not to raise further queries, and threatening possible review proceedings in this regard.

717. An email is addressed by Mr Wakeford on 5 December 2013 to Ms Engelbrecht under the subject line "Letter of findings" and reads "Please ask advisor to have a look." Attached is a document from SARS setting out certain "Audit Findings".

718. Ms Engelbrecht referred to information obtained from SARS dated 3 April 2020 which recorded that Mr Papadakis' first day of employment with SARS was 10 March 2008 and that on 1 July 2012 he occupied the position of Executive: Specialised Auditor. This position was on a fixed term basis from 1 July 2012 until 31 July 2015. However, Mr Papadakis submitted a resignation letter on 3 June 2013 and the SARS personnel system shows that his employment was terminated on 14 September 2013. Based on this, Ms Engelbrecht confirmed that Mr Papadakis was employed by SARS over the period 2008 to 2013, i.e., the period during which the emails referred to above were sent, save for the emails dated 30 September 2013 and 5 December 2013.

719. The email communications between Mr Wakeford and Mr Papadakis raise several queries:

719.1 When asked why he referred to Mr Papadakis in some of the emails as "advisor", Mr Wakeford stated that they were friends and that Mr Papadakis' nickname was "my Advisor" and that he "called him Advisor because of his head space and his knowledge". Mr Wakeford also pointed out that he continued to use the nickname after Mr Papadakis terminated his employment with SARS. Nevertheless, the innocent use of such a nickname does not ring true and the emails post-dating his employment with SARS continued to deal with matters raised during his employment which he plainly ought not to have been involved in. As explained below, the duties of SARS officials not to disclose confidential information continue after termination of employment.

719.2 If there was nothing untoward about the correspondence, why did Mr Wakeford elect to correspond with Mr Papadakis through Ms Engelbrecht on her work email as opposed to with Mr Papadakis directly? The explanation proffered by Mr Wakeford, that it was because Mr Papadakis was "running around all the time", is unconvincing. Accessing email on the go is part of modern life and has been for many years now. Ms Engelbrecht also referred to having received calls from Mr Wakeford on her private cell phone for Mr Papadakis, some of which were made by Mr Wakeford on his wife's phone. Tracking down Mr Papadakis via his wife may be understandable, but why would Mr Wakeford call him from his wife's cell phone?

719.3 In respect of the email dated 25 July 2011, addressed by Mr Wakeford to Mr Agrizzi, "bigjohn" and Ms Engelbrecht, it is not properly explained what the food supply opportunities referred to were or why Mr Papadakis, then employed by SARS, would have had anything to do with food supply opportunities.

719.4 The email sent by Mr Wakeford on 21 February 2013 is particularly telling. In it, Mr Papadakis comment is sought on a draft letter to SARS complaining about Bosasa's treatment in relation to tax audits and a meeting recently held with a Ms Herbst of SARS in this regard – this in circumstances where Mr Papadakis held the position with SARS of Executive: Specialised Auditor:

719.4.1 This gives the lie to Mr Wakeford's assertion that Mr Papadakis only assisted with tax matters from an administrative or administrative justice perspective.

719.4.2 Mr Papadakis was acting in conflict with his employer's best interests in the field of tax audits, in circumstances where he was employed to protect SARS' interests.

719.4.3 The draft letter refers to the fact that the matter is being taken up with Bosasa's "relevant consultative tax experts, as well as the legal team". This demonstrates that Mr Wakeford saw Mr Papadakis' advice as being of value, notwithstanding the availability to Bosasa of leading tax experts. This undermines Mr Wakeford's assertion on this basis that there would have been no reason to seek tax advice from Mr Papadakis.

719.4.4 If Mr Papadakis' was not involved in conduct that was untoward, the natural response to such an email would have been to say to Mr Wakeford in no uncertain terms that he could not involve himself in providing any such advice, because it conflicted with his contractual and, possibly, statutory obligations towards SARS. He could not have done so, because on 17 May 2013 Mr Wakeford felt free to forward to Mr Papadakis (via Ms Engelbrecht) a newspaper article about tax audits and to comment "See attached re discussion!". Nor is there any suggestion in Mr Papadakis' affidavit that he raised a red flag.

719.4.5 Further, the provision by Mr Papadakis of advice in these circumstances may have constituted a breach of section 68 of the TAA insofar as it prohibits disclosure by a current or former SARS official of various categories of confidential information related to SARS, including "information relating to the ... audit selection procedure or method used by SARS, the disclosure of which could reasonably be expected to jeopardise the effectiveness thereof".

720. The evidence emanating from the emails does not support Mr Agrizzi's assertion that the assistance took the form of Mr Papadakis actually receiving representations from Bosasa and making decisions on behalf of SARS favouring Bosasa in relation to the tax audits. Rather, the evidence points to Mr Papadkis being influenced by Mr Wakeford to provide advice to Bosasa in relation to both tax administration matters and tax audits, using the knowledge, information, and expertise that he had by virtue of the position that he occupied at SARS. That is sufficient to constitute influence as contemplated in TOR 1.1, and it was the consequence of:

720.1 Direct successful attempts by Mr Wakeford; and 720.2 Indirect successful attempts by Bosasa, through Mr Wakeford, to influence Mr Papadakis to provide the advice. Mr Papadakis, in turn, was an office bearer in SARS, which constitutes both a state institution and an organ of state, as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

721. The question which must then be asked is whether any inducements or gain were paid or provided to Mr Wakeford or Mr Papadakis or both to influence the latter to provide the said advice. The emails suggest that Mr Wakeford's work as the person who liaised with Mr Papadakis was an important component of the consultancy services that he provided to Bosasa in return for his fee of R50,000 plus VAT per month. The payment of that fee, in part for purposes of getting Mr Wakeford to solicit advice from Mr Papadakis, falls within the concept of "any gain of whatsoever nature" in TOR 1.1. Therefore, from the perspective of the attempts at influence through Mr Wakeford, there was conduct by Bosasa as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

722. That leaves unanswered the question whether there was "any form of inducement or ... any gain of whatsoever nature" paid or provided to Mr Papadakis. Mr Agrizzi claimed that Mr Wakeford arranged for Bosasa to provide wet and dry cement to a property in Meyersdal owned by Mr Papadakis where he was building a house, for no charge. This is disputed by Mr Wakeford and Mr Papadakis.

723. However, during his evidence before the Commission, Mr Wakeford accepted that he was instrumental in securing Bosasa's assistance for Mr Papadakis in 2008/2009 when Mr Papadakis was building a house and there was a shortage of cement. It is uncontentious that Mr Papadakis was employed by SARS during this time. However, Mr Wakeford asserted that the cement was paid for and was therefore a legitimate transaction.

724. Mr Agrizzi's allegation that Mr Wakeford arranged for Bosasa to provide wet and dry cement to a property in Meyersdal owned by Mr Papadakis was corroborated by the evidence of Mr Vorster. According to Mr Vorster, during late 2009, Mr Watson called him and informed him that Mr Wakeford would instruct him to buy and deliver wet and dry cement. Wet cement was purchased from WG Wearne in Randfontein and the dry cement was purchased from RTC.

725. Mr Vorster testified that Mr Wakeford instructed him to deliver the cement to an address at Meyer Park Eco Estate in Meyerton. According to Mr Vorster, the value of the cement purchased was "round-about" R600 000. Mr Vorster understood the cement was intended for Mr Papadakis. There appears to be no real dispute that the cement was in fact delivered to Mr Papadakis. What is contentious is the quantity and value of the cement, who assumed responsibility for payment of the cement and the timing of the deliveries.

726. As to who assumed responsibility for the payment of the cement, Mr Wakeford's evidence was contradictory. He initially said in his oral testimony that "he [i.e., Mr Papadakis] paid for the cement. It was done above board." Later in his oral evidence, Mr Wakeford said that much smaller quantities of cement than was claimed, were involved and that "there was some assistance and as far as I understand there was payment for it from Mr Papadakis's builder." Under re-examination, Mr Wakeford said "I do remember him [i.e., Mr Papadakis] contacting me Chair and saying I have settled. I have paid this thing, because he was worried if I recall that he didn't want to be fingered for being naughty".

727. Mr Papadakis asserted that "the purchases of material for the wet works at Eco Estate, the cement and other building material was in the main ordered by the contractor .... Purchases were either settled by him or directly with his suppliers". Mr Papadakis stated that he was "fully employed" during the period of construction and "as such the building activities were attended to by my contractors, including the ordering of supplies". Mr Papadakis later stated, vaguely, that "toward the latter part of 2009 I was provided an amount that needed to be settled, which was settled." He does not say what the amount was, how it was calculated, who provided him with the information about the amount, whether he was provided with this information verbally or in a document, if in a document, what the nature of the document was, or who precisely it was that settled the amount. If it was he who made the payment, it would be a relatively simple matter to demonstrate with reference to a bank statement that he had done so. If not, he could have explained this and why it was not possible to verify the payment. After all, he is a chartered accountant with experience in auditing.

728. The contradictions in the evidence of Mr Wakeford regarding payment and the failure of Mr Papadakis to deal fully and squarely with the assertion that the cement was provided by Bosasa free of charge as a quid pro quo, are matters of concern and inevitably arouse suspicion.

729. Mr Papadakis focussed on challenging the allegations regarding the total quantity and value of the cement delivered, and its timing. As to the quantities of the cement, Mr Papadakis' provided a reasonably convincing analysis of the documentary evidence to challenge the veracity of the allegation that approximately R600,000 worth of cement was delivered to his properties. As to the quantities of dry cement, the documentary evidence, he pointed out, cannot be linked specifically to the address where he was building the house. As regards wet cement, his analysis suggested that only an amount valued at R204,734.26 was delivered. On this basis he contended that "the empirical evidence conclusively proves the fallaciousness of Mr Agrizzi and Mr Vorster's allegations."

730. This analysis notwithstanding, it was not in dispute that wet and dry cement was indeed provided, albeit of a considerably lower value than contended for by Mr Agrizzi and Mr Vorster.

731. In respect of the timing of the deliveries, Mr Papadakis was able to demonstrate with reference to the Wearne documentation that no deliveries of wet cement were made after 10 July 2009. He also pointed to a Google Earth image dated 27 December 2009 that demonstrated that by that date there was already a roof on the house under construction, thereby confirming that there would not have been any need by then for the delivery of further wet cement. He juxtaposed these dates with the date of August 2010, which appears to be the earliest reference to a SARS tax audit on a Bosasa entity, and the date of the 21 February 2013 email discussed above.

732. This line of thinking takes as its premise that a quid pro quo would only have been forthcoming in return for advice given by Mr Papadakis in response to a major SARS investigation or tax audit. Certainly, that is a factor to be considered in assessing the evidence and the probabilities. However, it is not in conflict with the probabilities that Bosasa, with the assistance of Mr Wakeford, may have wished to get Mr Papadakis onside at an early stage of Mr Wakeford's consultancy, before any services had been provided by him (Mr Papadakis). By the time of Mr Papadakis' appointment at SARS, Mr Wakeford's consultancy agreement with Bosasa was already in place. That remained the position until the termination of Mr Papadakis' employment with SARS in 2013 and covers the period of the cement deliveries, payment for which has not been satisfactorily explained.

733. Nor is there any attempt by either Mr Papadakis or Mr Wakeford to explain what the basis was upon which he was providing advice during the period when Bosasa was facing successive tax audits. Why not volunteer this information to assist the Commission? It is improbable that this advice was being provided for free, particularly given the risk that Mr Papadakis' breach of his employment contract with SARS (and possibly breaches of the TAA) would be uncovered. The email correspondence with Mr Papadakis under the subject line "food supply opportunities" and the reference in Mr Wakeford's email to his intention to "drop off 75% of the Biltong and Dried Wors", also arouse suspicion.

734. Although arising in a different context not pertaining to Mr Papadakis, the emails of 16 and 20 June 2011 addressed by Mr Wakeford to Mr Agrizzi under the subject lines "Smarties" and "Smarties confirmed" and referring to "confectionery" are similarly suspicious and point to the use of food items as a form of code. Mr Wakeford's attempt to explain the emails away on the bases of a challenge to their authenticity, that he had such a good relationship with the then Minister of Correctional Services that he did not need to provide gratification to her adviser to have access to her, and that Bosasa was involved in catering and tended to spoil their guests, are not sufficiently compelling to warrant ignoring these emails.

735. In the circumstances, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that there was conduct on the part of Bosasa and Mr Wakeford as contemplated in TOR 1.1, which warrants further investigation. Mr Papadakis' conduct also requires investigation.

Mr Mantashe

736. To précis the evidence and contentions in relation to Mr Mantashe, Mr Mlambo and Mr le Roux testified to security upgrades being undertaken by Bosasa at three of his properties in Elliot and Cala, Eastern Cape and in Boksburg, Gauteng. Mr Mlambo corroborated Mr le Roux's evidence regarding the location of the cameras and CCTV monitors and obtained invoices of the lodge where the Special Projects team was accommodated while undertaking the work, booked by Blake's Travel. Mr Mlambo also testified to visiting Mr Mantashe's property in Cala, where he observed mounted cameras and LED perimeter lights, which Mr le Roux indicated were installed by Bosasa. Mr Mantashe admits that the security upgrades were installed at his properties but:

    736.1 Disputes that there was anything untoward about the installations, which were arranged as between his security adviser and Mr Leshabane

    736.2 Contends that it was not done on any basis to solicit favours from him

    736.3 Disputes that the evidence pertaining to him falls within the terms of reference as he was secretary-general of the ANC at the relevant times and did not hold any position in any component of the State contemplated in the terms of reference

    736.4 Disputes that he was in any position to influence any officer bearer in any such position; and 736.5 Disputes the value attributed to the installations.

737. At the time of the security installations at his homes Mr Mantashe himself clearly fell outside of the list of public office bearers in TOR 1.1, 1.4 and 1.9. Nor was he an office bearer in, or associated with, any entity contemplated in TOR 1.5. His position clearly places him beyond the reach of TOR 1.4, 1.5 and 1.9 (as well as TOR 1.2, 1.3, 1.6. 1.7, 1.8). Does this, in effect, mean that the consideration of the evidence pertaining to Mr Mantashe fell outside the ambit of the Commission's TORs?

738. The only term of reference which requires consideration in relation to Mr Mantashe is TOR 1.1. Two questions are raised:

738.1 Does it include within its ambit an attempt through inducement or gain to influence the list of office bearers indirectly through another person who does not fall within that list?; and 738.2 If so, does the term of reference require that the office bearer sought to be influenced be specifically identified?

739. In relation to the first of these two questions, having regard to the broad purpose of the Commission being to unearth corruption (as Mr Mantashe recognised in his evidence) it would represent far too narrow a reading if the Commission was forced to turn a blind eye to attempts at corrupt influence of State office bearers through the agency of a third person. The answer to the first question posed must therefore be in the affirmative.

740. Turning to the second question, answering this in the affirmative would require the Commission to turn a blind eye to a corrupt attempt at influence through the agency of a third person if the attempt was based only on that person's perceived potential to influence unspecified or unnamed office bearers falling within the list in TOR 1.1. Again, this seems to conflict with the purpose of the Commission and its terms of reference. It also fails to take into consideration the inclusiveness of the wording of TOR 1.1, which brings within its ambit both influence and attempts at influence; describes the concept of inducement broadly; does not require that the influence had any positive result; and spreads the net wide in terms of the public office-bearers that might be influenced. The second question must therefore be answered in the negative, to include attempts to influence unspecified or unnamed public office bearers on the list. Accordingly, the TORs do not preclude a consideration of the evidence pertaining to Mr Mantashe.

741. The matter must first be viewed from the perspective of Bosasa and Mr Leshabane. A finding that they were guilty of conduct as contemplated in TOR 1.1 does not automatically translate into guilty conduct or knowledge on the part of Mr Mantashe.

742. There can be no doubt that the provision of security installations for no charge amounts to "gain of whatsoever nature" as contemplated in TOR 1.1. Whilst the value of the installations may be in dispute, the fact of the installations, and the fact that they were not paid for by Mr Mantashe, is common cause. The provision of free security installations was manifestly part of the corrupt modus operandi of Bosasa and its directors, including Mr Leshabane himself. Mr Leshabane has not come forward to testify that this arrangement was different from the others and was an altruistic attempt on his part at assisting a family friend.

743. The next question from Bosasa, Mr Watson and Mr Leshabane's perspectives is whether they sought, through the political party funding of the ANC as well as free installations for Mr Mantashe, to influence the listed office bearers. In this regard, there is no evidence of a particular named office bearer they sought to influence through Mr Mantashe. However, the evidence that stands uncontradicted by Mr Leshabane is that Mr Mantashe was seen by the leadership of Bosasa as a "brilliant connection". Objectively, this is borne out. The majority party, through its majority in Parliament, wields very substantial constitutional power. Mr Mantashe was at the relevant times the secretary-general of the majority party and a member of its national executive committee ("the NEC"). On Mr Mantashe's own version, whilst the President of the Republic of South Africa appoints Ministers, he must consult with the NEC before doing so. In terms of the constitution of the ANC, the secretary-general:

743.1 May have delegated to him or her any of the powers of the NEC

743.2 Is a member of the National Working Committee, which carries out the decisions of the NEC and the ongoing work of the ANC

743.3 Is the chief administrative officer of the ANC; and 743.4 Acts as president of the ANC in the absence of the president and deputy-president of the ANC.

744. Bosasa was a business organisation that was heavily invested in securing tenders from government departments and organs of state. At the very least on a balance of probabilities, it sought to be able, through Mr Mantashe and the inducements and gain provided to him, to influence the leadership of those departments and organs of state, a leadership drawn almost exclusively from the ranks of the ANC and falling within the categories of public office bearers listed in TOR1.1. That is conduct sufficient to fall within TOR 1.1.

745. What then of the position from Mr Mantashe's perspective? He did not dispute the provision of the three installations; nor did he dispute that he received them for free. However, he contends that his receipt was an entirely innocent one, borne of arrangements made between his security person, Mr Nyakaza, and a family friend, Mr Leshabane. He also downplayed his capacity for influence as secretary-general, characterising the position as "secretary-general of an NGO called the ANC". His version however faces the following difficulties:

    745.1 His characterisation of the ANC as a mere "NGO" does not withstand scrutiny. It is the majority party, with the levers of legislative and executive power at its disposal through its elected members of Parliament and the persons it deploys to positions of executive leadership.

    745.2 His characterisation of the position of secretary-general of the ANC is inaccurate - it is a powerful position with scope for influence over the listed persons, for the reasons given above - and the term of reference does not require an enquiry into whether or not the influence sought was in fact achieved (to be clear, there is no evidence that Mr Mantashe did act in the way that Bosasa and Mr Leshabane would have intended).

    745.3 Even though the evidence of the value of the installations was unsatisfactory, it was uncontested that this was on a significant scale - three separate homes were provided with security installations and two of them required the installation to be done a long way from Bosasa's headquarters in Johannesburg, which carried with it significant additional expenses.

    745.4 His characterisation of the security installations as being a manifestation of traditional intra-family support or a traditional project, akin to contributions for a traditional wedding ceremony, is not convincing and is undermined by The scale of the generosity and his failure to offer to make any contribution whatsoever of his own towards the costs - if it was a project based on a traditional sharing of costs one would have expected him at least to contribute commensurate with his means.

746. With each additional installation, the improbability of his having no knowledge about who exactly was responsible and at what cost, increases.

747. The nature, manner and content of his testimony was not satisfactory:

    747.1 Mr Mantashe's attempt to characterise the installation of security equipment at his three houses as a traditional project, similar to a traditional wedding, where family members or friends voluntarily contributed to the cost, was not convincing.

    747.2 He initially denied knowledge of Mr Watson's clan name, but later gave it.

    747.3 His response to the question whether he knew that Mr Leshabane was working for Bosasa, was that this was immaterial - this is not an adequate response when, to his knowledge, the organisation was led by Mr Watson whom he knew to have been involved in earlier bribery in relation to contracts for catering at mine hostels.

    747.4 His testimony that all he knew of Bosasa was of their contract in relation to the West Rand Youth Centre was unconvincing, given the widely reported allegations in the press of corruption on the part of Bosasa emanating from the SIU investigation and his knowing Mr Watson well enough to know his clan name and his bribery in relation to hostel catering contracts.

    747.5 His evidence that he could not remember whether or not he had a red Toyota Land Cruiser, was improbable - this is the type of thing that every person would remember.

    747.6 His testimony was hesitant and evasive, not of a kind that one would expect from a leader of the majority party seeking to assist the Commission in every possible way to uncover the truth.

748. In the circumstances, it may be concluded that there is a reasonable suspicion that Mr Mantashe received the free installations, knowing that Mr Leshabane sought through him to influence unspecified or unnamed office bearers in the categories listed in TOR 1.1 that lead departments that Bosasa did, or sought to do, business with. As pointed out above, there is no evidence that he did act in the manner intended by Mr Leshabane. The significance of this is dealt with further below.

The African National Congress

749. Like Mr Mantashe, the ANC as a political party falls beyond the reach of TOR 1.4, 1.5 and 1.9 (as well as TOR 1.2, 1.3, 1.6. 1.7, 1.8).

750. However, TOR 1.1 requires consideration in relation to the ANC. For the reasons set out above in relation to the evidence of, and pertaining to, Mr Mantashe, the terms of reference do not preclude a consideration of the evidence pertaining to the ANC, on the basis that influence of the public office bearers listed in TOR 1.1 may in principle be achieved through the ANC because, for as long as it was the majority party, through its members elected to the legislature and the persons deployed to executive leadership positions, it would indirectly wield legislative and executive power. The capacity to influence the ANC as a juristic person or organisation, necessarily means the ability to influence persons in those positions.

751. The matter must first be viewed from the perspective of Bosasa and its directors. What requires particular consideration here is the provision of the "War Room" facilities. The provision to the ANC of the "war room" facilities, according to Mr Agrizzi, at a cost of millions to Bosasa and at no cost to the ANC, amounts to "gain of whatsoever nature" as contemplated in TOR 1.1. Mr Agrizzi may have exaggerated the expenditure, but it is clear from the sophistication of the equipment and facilities, and the time period over which they were provided (three months in respect of the 2014 elections and two months in respect of the Mangaung conference) that the value was substantial. Ms Mokonyane did not dispute that such assistance had been provided by Bosasa to the ANC at no charge. President Ramaphosa testified that, whilst he visited the facility, it never occurred to him that Bosasa were bank rolling the "war room" facilities. However, "the Treasury (sic) General as well as colleagues or comrades who ran the elections knew."

752. The question from the perspective of Bosasa and its directors, is whether they sought through the provision of the "war room" facilities to the ANC at no charge, indirectly to influence the public office bearers listed in TOR 1.1.

753. There is no evidence to suggest that the provision of the facilities was a bona fide contribution by Mr Watson based on his long-standing relationship with the ANC. Instead, the evidence is that it was provided by Bosasa as a business organisation at its office park, at the instance of its directors, Mr Watson, Mr Gumede and Mr Leshabane. Bosasa was a business organisation that was heavily invested in securing tenders from government departments and organs of state. Against the backdrop of all the evidence received by the Commission in connection with Bosasa, and the extent to which its business model was based on its ability to influence public office bearers, one need merely consider the potentially catastrophic consequences for Bosasa if the ANC were to be voted out of power, to understand how important the provision of the "war room" facilities to the ANC was, in order for Bosasa to be able to achieve its business objectives.

754. On a conspectus of the evidence about Bosasa and its corrupt modus operandi, and viewed from the perspective of Bosasa, the provision of the "war room" facilities was, at least on a balance of probabilities, aimed at ensuring that:

    754.1 The ANC would remain the majority party and thus in a position to appoint to positions of public office, persons whom Bosasa was able to influence or would seek to influence; and 754.2 Members of the ANC deployed to senior positions in State institutions, Organs of State and SOEs would remain well-disposed towards Bosasa, in its business dealings, which included tendering for and retaining contracts with such State institutions.

755. It follows that the availing by Bosasa of the "war room" facilities constituted a form of inducement and gain aimed at achieving influence as contemplated in TOR 1.1.

756. The matter must next be viewed from the perspective of the ANC. Whilst President Ramaphosa testified that it never occurred to him that the "war room" facilities were being provided entirely at the expense of Bosasa, he confirmed that the "Treasury-General" as well as those ANC officials involved in running the elections did know this. Although he testified that the ANC would not knowingly and intentionally accept donations from companies or donors who had been involved in criminal activity and pointed out that the allegations of corruption against Bosasa had taken place a few years beforehand, President Ramaphosa appropriately accepted that there was a "major lapse" on the part of the party in accepting this assistance from Bosasa.

757. President Ramaphosa also appropriately conceded that it is difficult to avoid the conclusion on the facts that the ANC received this and other forms of assistance from Bosasa:

757.1 In breach of its rule that it would not knowingly receive donations from donors involved in criminal activities; and 757.2 While key ANC officials, including the President of the time, must have been aware of the earlier serious allegations of corruption against Bosasa.

758. In the circumstances, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the "war room" facilities were received by the ANC as a juristic person with knowledge on the part of the ANC officials directly involved in the election campaigns, that Bosasa and its directors, including Mr Watson, sought through the ANC to influence unspecified or unnamed office bearers in the categories listed in TOR 1.1 in the departments and organs of State with which it did or sought to do business.

759. The ANC office bearers involved in organising the ANC election campaigns have not been identified. Nevertheless, there is a reasonable prospect that further investigation will identify them and uncover a prima facie case against them. This matter is accordingly dealt with further under the referral section.

760. Turning to the contribution to the CR17 campaign, the evidence emanating from President Ramaphosa is largely hearsay and lacking in any detail. It is therefore difficult to draw reliable conclusions with reference to TOR 1.1 in respect of either Bosasa or its directors, on the one hand, or those involved in managing the CR17 campaign on the other. Suffice it to say that the fact that the moneys were seemingly passed through more than one account by Bosasa, if correct, suggests on the face of it that Bosasa and Mr Watson's motives were not bona fide ones. However, there is far too little first hand or detailed information to draw any reliable conclusions. The issue was the subject matter of an investigation by the Public Protector and thereafter the subject matter of court proceedings.

761. Insofar as President Ramaphosa himself is concerned, there is no evidence to gainsay his assertion that he was deliberately kept out of the funding arrangements in respect of the campaign and that he had no knowledge of the donation at the time. He readily came forward to testify before the Commission under oath and made himself available for questioning by the Chairperson and the evidence leaders on the issue. This is something that is seldom seen on the part of the President of a country and stands in marked contrast to the approach towards the Commission of his predecessor in office. His demeanour as a witness was impressive. He readily made concessions, even though they may not have been in his interests or those of the ANC. He was open in his approach and did not seek to avoid difficult questions put to him by the Chairperson or the evidence leaders. He gave the impression of wishing to assist the Commission in the performance of its function.

762. In the circumstances, and on the limited evidence available to the Commission, no negative findings can be made in respect of President Ramaphosa in relation to the donation to the CR17 campaign.

Mr Nair

763. To précis the evidence and contentions pertaining to Mr Nair, the evidence of Mr Le Roux, Mr Baijoo and Mr Van der Merwe is that Sondolo IT installed new cameras and related hardware, along with repairs to an existing electric fence and alarm system at Mr Nair's home, as part of the work of the Special Projects team. However, Mr Nair in his affidavit and oral evidence insisted that this was the result of a private, oral agreement with Mr Baijoo in his personal capacity. He denies any involvement in corruption or state capture. Any involvement of Messrs Le Roux, Mathenjwa or Agrizzi, or of Sondolo IT or Bosasa, or the Special Projects team, was without his knowledge. Nor was he acquainted with them.

764. Mr le Roux gave evidence that he was instructed by Mr Mathenjwa to install the security system at Mr Nair's residence and carried out this instruction. On Mr Nair's version, Mr Baijoo did the installation but never complied with his contractual obligations in terms of their oral agreement, as the CCTV camera system was so unsatisfactory that it amounted to a breach of contract. On the basis of the exceptio non adimpleti contractus, because of Mr Baijoo's failure to perform he (Mr Nair) was excused from his performance in the form of payment.

765. Mr Nair set out his assessment of the evidence of Mr le Roux, which in his view militates against a finding that he was a beneficiary of Bosasa's Special Projects team. Mr Nair asserted that Mr le Roux did not know who he (Mr Nair) was; that Sondolo IT branded vehicles and employees in uniform came to his premises on one occasion, contrary to evidence that unbranded vehicles would be used for special projects; no project name was assigned to the installation at Mr Nair's residence; and that no direct link was established between Bosasa and Mr Nair. Mr Nair also alleges that there was a lack of corroboration of Mr le Roux's evidence. He pointed out that, in any event, there was no evidence whatsoever that he corruptly provided anything in return for the installation.

766. Does the evidence pertaining to Mr Nair fall within the scope of the terms of reference? None of TOR 1.2 to 1.9 come into play. Does TOR 1.1 apply?

767. There can be little doubt that from the perspective of Bosasa and its subsidiary, Sondolo IT, the installation of the security system for no charge was an attempt at inducement. Whatever Mr Nair's ability to influence the outcome of tenders, his perceived influential position as chief magistrate would have made him an appropriate target for inducement in circumstances where Bosasa and Sondolo IT wished to retain their security service contracts with the DOJCD. This is so notwithstanding Mr Nair's evidence distancing himself from procurement activities at the court. On his own version, the court manager would seek out his opinion on operational matters of this nature, even though it is the court manager who had the final say. One can also see an advantage for Bosasa in having a senior member of the magistracy "onside", in case Bosasa's activities ever resulted in one of its office bearers or employees being prosecuted.

768. However, with reference to the wording of TOR 1.1, a magistrate would not fall under "members of the National Executive" or "directors of boards of SOE's". Nor would a magistrate be considered a "functionary". Would he be "an office bearer of any state institution or organ of state"? The definition of "organ of state" in the Constitution expressly excludes "a court or a judicial officer". The only possible basis for inclusion in the terms of reference is if a magistrate is an "office bearer of any state institution".

769. Applying the purposive approach advanced above to the interpretation of the TORs, it would be surprising if a broad enquiry into the phenomena of state capture and corruption would have contemplated the exclusion of a member of the judiciary. It was more likely that corrupt office bearers within all institutions exercising public power under the Constitution, were to be subject to scrutiny. Textually, the recognition of a magistrate as "an office bearer of [a] state institution", does not give rise to any dissonance. A magistrate therefore falls within the reach of TOR 1.1. Mr Nair's version, that the installation was the fruit of a legitimate private contract with Mr Baijoo must therefore be considered.

770. There are several aspects of Mr Nair's version that present difficulties for its acceptance:

    770.1 Whilst it would reflect questionable judgement in the first place to contract privately with an employee of a court security contractor, one would have expected that Mr Nair, as a seasoned magistrate and acting judge, would take deliberate steps and great care to ensure that there was no misunderstanding as to whether it was Sondolo IT or Mr Baijoo himself who was to do the installation. He gave no evidence that he took such steps and care.

770.2 If the work was to be done by Mr Baijoo other than in his capacity as a Sondolo IT employee, one would expect it to have been done after hours, but on Mr Nair's own version, the work began on 4 October 2016, which was a Tuesday.

770.3 It would be surprising if a person doing work based on an oral, private agreement with an acquaintance, would advance significant amounts of money for new equipment for the installation, without expecting any form of deposit or assistance with purchasing the equipment.

770.4 Mr Nair failed to provide an adequate explanation for the SMS/text messages that he exchanged with Mr le Roux. These run counter to his assertion that he did not know him. His suggestion that it might have been because Mr Baijoo referred him to Mr le Roux as a technician, does not align with his assertion that Mr Baijoo did the work himself, privately. The politeness of Mr Nair's "Ok thank you" message, is not what one would expect from a person who was frustrated by a failed installation that had not been attended to in six months.

770.5 His explanation for not returning the equipment defectively installed - that he thought Mr Baijoo was going to return to address the problems - loses force when Mr Nair also says that he reached a point where he gave up on this ever happening.

770.6 Mr Baijoo does not corroborate Mr Nair's version as to a private, oral agreement. Instead, he confirmed the involvement of Mr le Roux and the Special Projects team.

770.7 It is incongruous that, on his own version, when Mr Nair next saw Mr Baijoo at court after his alleged fundamental breach of their oral agreement, said to be a source of considerable frustration for him, Mr Nair said nothing to him about it.

770.8 He provided no corroborating evidence to support his averment that he had to employ a third-party contractor to set up a parallel CCTV system.

771. None of these improbabilities were satisfactorily explained by Mr Nair in his oral evidence. Mr Nair was critical of the case against him in various respects. These do not however significantly undermine it. The request to cross-examine Mr le Roux was dropped and no significant weaknesses in his version were pointed out by Mr Nair. Inaccuracy, if there was any, in Mr le Roux's estimates of the value of the work, is not a sufficient reason to disbelieve him on the main fact of his having been responsible for the installation as a special project. He had no motive to falsely implicate Mr Nair. It is not correct that Mr Baijoo's affidavits failed to mention the meeting at the Pretoria Magistrate's Court with himself, Mr Mathenjwa and Mr Nair. One did not. One did. This was not a sufficient basis to prefer Mr Nair's version.

772. Mr Nair is quite correct in pointing out that there is no evidence that he corruptly provided anything in return for the installation. However, this is not a component or requirement of TOR 1.1. However, it may have significance as to whether the matter should, insofar as it pertains to him, be referred to the appropriate authorities for further investigation. This is dealt with further in relation to TOR 7.

Dr De Wee

773. If Mr Agrizzi's evidence pertaining to Dr De Wee were to be accepted, the circumstances pertaining to Dr De Wee would fall squarely within TOR1.1. Dr De Wee was an office bearer employed in the DOJCD which is both a state institution and an organ of state. He was directly involved in the decision-making processes in relation to tenders in which Bosasa's subsidiary Sondolo IT was involved. As chair of the BEC, and at one point, Acting DG, he was clearly able to influence the outcome of decision-making in relation to these tenders. Cash payments to him by Bosasa through Mr Seopola would clearly have amounted to attempts through a form of inducement to influence Dr De Wee.

774. The difficulty is that the evidence of the cash payments was pure hearsay. There was no direct corroborating evidence. Dr De Wee's name did not feature in the black books to which Mr Agrizzi referred or in any other documentary evidence.

775. Notwithstanding the unreliable nature of the evidence against him, it is appropriate to consider the evidence put up by Dr De Wee in his defence. It can unfortunately not be said that his evidence laid to rest any concern regarding malfeasance in the DOJCD under his watch or on his part. There were several aspects of his evidence which were less than satisfactory.

776. He initially explained the origin of the two opinions as being in relation to the appointment of a consultant to draw up the specifications for the security contract. However, in explaining the need for the opinions he shifted to the need for the opinions arising from only a single bidder having scored above the 65% cut-off point. This evidence however manifestly pertained to the bid for the security contract itself, not the drawing up of the specification. Later in his evidence he reverted to the position that the two opinions were obtained for purposes of the drawing up of the specification.

777. Dr De Wee's evidence in relation to the complaint that the BAC was not informed about the Treasury opinion was not satisfactory. He asserted that the minute of the BAC meeting of 24 April 2008 demonstrated that the committee was alerted to the existence of the two opinions, and he suspected that they had been provided with copies. The relevant portion of the minute of the meeting records as follows:

    777.1 Since it was one bidder who met the requirements, the Department requested advise [sic] from the National Treasury and the State Law Advisor.

    777.2 The advise [sic] obtained was:

        777.2.1 To re-advertise and lower threshold from 65% to 50% - but then it will prejudice the company that met the threshold.

        777.2.2 The conclusion was to invite a bid for phase 1 only from the qualifying bidder.

        777.2.3 New bids will be invited for phase 2.

778. The following comments are apposite in this regard:

    778.1 There was no reference to the fact that there were separate written opinions (only a reference to a request for "advice").

    778.2 There was no reference to the fact that the written opinions were divergent.

    778.3 On the contrary, the minute suggests that the BAC was led to believe that the advice from National Treasury and the State Law Advisor was unanimous and as set out in the three sub-bullet points.

    778.4 No clear reference is made to the content of the divergent advice emanating from the written opinion from National Treasury.

    778.5 The internal departmental opinion seems, misleadingly, to have been ascribed to the State Law Advisor.

779. The bid process in question took place in 2008. Dr De Wee sought to justify preferring the internal opinion based on the urgency created by the crime problem in courts. He justified this with reference to a memorandum which referred to the problem. However, that memorandum is dated 8 February 2015, more than six years later than the time of the tender.

780. On the face of it, clauses 2.2 and 2.3 of the SLA with the Contractor are troubling. The clauses read as follows:

> The Bid was awarded to the Contractor in the amount of R601 863 308.80 in respect of 127 Facilities, however, in order for the Principal and the Contractor to ensure an economic, effective and efficient services is rendered, the Parties agree that negotiation may take place in terms of the Change Control Policy with regards to either the Bid Price, the number of Facilities or the specifications of the Services.

The following Faculties / Sites have been identified as the Pilot Sites for this project. These are the Magistrate Court: Johannesburg, Magistrate Court: Kempton Park, Magistrate Court: Pretoria, Magistrate Court: Pretoria North, High Court: Johannesburg, and High Court: Pretoria,

Due to the incomplete Service specifications in the Bid document, the Parties have agreed that the Contractor will conduct a comprehensive audit at the Pilot Sites to establish the Principal's security requirements in general. The parties recognise that this will result in additional costs to both parties and in this regard the parties have agreed that the Principal will be liable for the costs of any additional Equipment that may be required, but that the Contractor will forfeit any labour costs relating to the installation of the additional Equipment. A PDR will be completed for each Pilot Site and the Contractor will not proceed with any additional work at the Pilot Sites unless the PDR has been signed off by both parties.

The purpose of the Pilot Sites is to identify a complete solution to be adopted and used during the roll out of the remaining Facilities (emphasis added).

781. Clause 2.2 essentially permits the parties, outside of the tender process, completely to renegotiate the central terms of the agreement, namely bid price, the number of facilities and the specifications for the services. In this regard it should also be borne in mind that there had already been a tender process for the drawing up of a proper specification for the contract. Why should there be any need to renegotiate it?

782. Clause 2.3 compounds the problem. It permits the Contractor, Bosasa, to conduct an audit of the selected pilot sites "to establish the Principal's security requirements in general". Clause 2.3.2 then goes on to provide that "the purpose of the pilot sites is to identify what will then be rolled out at the remaining facilities." The combined effect of these provisions is to allow Bosasa to completely rewrite the specification. Having rewritten the specification, in terms of clause 2.3.1, the Department is automatically liable for the costs of "any additional equipment that may be required" albeit with the Contractor purporting to forfeit labour costs. However, with Bosasa or Sondolo IT supplying the equipment, with no competitive process for that supply, it would be a simple matter to build a labour cost into the price of the equipment.

783. In the absence of any proper explanation, these provisions appear to create fertile ground for undermining the entire procurement process and to create real opportunities for corruption.

784. In the context of this clause, it is significant that what then proceeded to happen is that 32 of the 127 sites where Bosasa was bound under the tender to install security equipment and services, were dropped from the contract. Yet the Department was billed an amount only just short of the original contract price of R601 million. Grant Thornton estimated that the net effect of this was an unauthorised overpayment of some R177 million. Although Dr De Wee referred to other provisions in the contract providing for variations, and the role of the operational steering committee in this regard, he never provided a direct answer to the evidence leader's question as to whether the excess expenditure of R177 million was ever properly authorised and certainly pointed to no documentary evidence in this regard.

785. A further matter of considerable concern is the evidence that, in a memorandum of February 2015, Dr De Wee recommended the conclusion of a further maintenance contract with Bosasa. This was after he and other departmental officials had been confronted by the Portfolio Committee on Justice about tenders to Bosasa in circumstances where it was facing allegations of corruption. He sought to justify this based on there not being sufficient evidence against Bosasa's directors. However, there was no suggestion on his part that he made any effort whatsoever to enquire what the nature and outcome of the SIU investigation of Bosasa entailed. Surely his senior position in the DOJCD would have given him the opportunity at least to attempt to obtain the information?

786. In terms of his demeanour as a witness, Dr De Wee displayed a worrying tendency to avoid giving direct answers to the evidence leader's questions, sometimes under the guise of offering to "deal with this thing in full" or expressing a desire to assist the Chairperson or alleging that the investigators had confused the evidence leader.

787. In fairness to Dr De Wee, the hearing of his evidence was a hurried affair. Further investigation of the matters about which he testified is clearly called for. There is sufficient evidence to find a reasonable suspicion that further investigation might reveal corruption in relation to the tenders entered into with Bosasa under Dr De Wee's watch.

Mr Gingcana

788. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was aware of an access control contract with PRASA (through Sondolo IT) but that he did not know the contract value. Mr Agrizzi said that he had received reliable information that bribes had been paid but was waiting for tested information to provide to the Commission's investigators. Mr le Roux testified that he undertook a security analysis and installation, at the request of Mr Agrizzi and Mr Dlamini, at a Randburg property for Mbulelo Gingcana under the code name "Project PRASA". The Special Project team installed an alarm system, full IP-based CCTV system, new gate motor and an intercom system, including the cost of vehicle travel and labour, to the value of approximately R239,486.84.

789. Mr Gingcana gave evidence that he had been employed by SACAA since April 1999 and was seconded to PRASA from around October 2015 until October 2016 in the position of Acting Chief Procurement Officer, and thereafter to the National Treasury in the office of Chief Procurement Officer. Mr Gingcana disputes that at the time of the security upgrade to his home there was a project linked to PRASA or that he was a secondee of PRASA. Mr Gingcana confirmed that an alarm and CCTV system with a new gate motor and intercom system were installed at his home in Randburg. He alleges that the upgrade was installed in 2017.

790. Mr Dlamini visited Mr Gingcana's residence in 2016 and provided an approximate cost to upgrade Mr Gingcana's security system that was installed at his residence at the time.

791. Initially, Mr le Roux was unable to recall the dates when he undertook the installation. Under cross-examination, Mr le Roux testified that the installation was done in March or April 2016. When he was questioned about the fact that he did not dispute Mr Gingcana's affidavit wherein Mr Gingcana alleged that the equipment was installed in 2017, Mr le Roux indicated that it was due to a mistake on his part at the time of responding to Mr Gingcana's affidavit.

792. Mr Gingcana did not dispute that Bosasa installed a security system at his residence, for which he did not pay, although he contended that at the time of the installation, he did not know that Bosasa installed the system and was of the view that it was a company of which Mr Dlamini was a director. Mr Gingcana's version is that, despite various requests to Mr Dlamini for an invoice for the upgrade, none was forthcoming. Although Mr Gingcana disputes when the upgrade was installed, it is likely that the upgrade was installed at Mr Gingcana's residence in 2016 and not during 2017 for the following reasons:

    792.1 Mr Dlamini was at Mr Gingcana's residence in 2016 when he provided an estimate of the cost to upgrade the security system to Mr Gingcana.

    792.2 Mr le Roux testified that this was the only special project installed on the instruction of Mr Dlamini and supporting evidence in the form of invoices were identified by Mr le Roux because they were marked "project sd", which stood for Syvion Dlamini. Those invoices are dated 26 April and 10 May 2016. Mr le Roux testified that he would not hold stock for a year before installation.

    792.3 Mr Gingcana was unable to provide any explanation on why the security system was only installed in 2017 when he had first discussed the security upgrade with Mr Dlamini in 2016. Accepting Mr Gingcana's version that the security system was to be installed from September 2016, when he was due to receive a bonus, he was still unable to provide any plausible explanation. Mr Gingcana said:

        > That is the question that I want to understand, because it was agreed that we were going to install after September but because the year was almost over then it was only installed in April. I was ready for installation after September.

792.4 2016 accords with the period when Mr Gingcana was seconded to PRASA, which is consistent with Mr le Roux's evidence that Mr Dlamini and Mr Agrizzi had requested him to do a security installation for Mr Gingcana, who worked for PRASA.

793. As indicated, Mr Gingcana gave evidence that the security upgrade would be undertaken by Mr Dlamini. He said that he repeatedly requested an invoice but never received one. In his affidavit, Mr Dlamini avers that he mentioned Mr Gingcana's details in a meeting with Mr Agrizzi, who offered to assist. According to Mr Dlamini, Mr Agrizzi thereafter involved Mr le Roux to whom he provided Mr Gingcana's address after he confirmed with Mr Gingcana that he still wished to upgrade his security system.

794. Does the evidence pertaining to Mr Gingcana fall within the scope of the terms of reference? Other than Mr Agrizzi's hearsay evidence that he had received reliable information that bribes had been paid for an access control contract through Sondolo IT with PRASA, there was no evidence of irregularities concerning a contract or a tender being awarded to Bosasa or any of its subsidiaries. None of TOR 1.2 to 1.9 come into play. Does TOR 1.1 apply?

795. As was the case with Mr Nair, there can be little doubt that from the perspective of Bosasa and Sondolo IT, the installation of the security system for no charge was an attempt at inducement. Whatever Mr Gingcana's ability to influence the outcome of tenders, his perceived influential position as a senior procurement officer would have made him an appropriate target for inducement in circumstances where Bosasa and Sondolo IT wished to secure or retain security service contracts with PRASA. This is so despite Mr Gingcana's evidence that he did not form part of any procurement or bid committees.

796. With reference to the wording of TOR 1.1, is a chief procurement officer an "office bearer of and / or functionary employed by any state institution or organ of state". A chief procurement officer is an office bearer of an organ of state (as defined in section 239 of the Constitution) and therefore falls within the reach of TOR 1.1. Mr Gingcana's version must therefore be considered.

797. There are several aspects of Mr Gingcana's version that present difficulties for its acceptance:

797.1 It would be expected that a chief procurement officer would take deliberate steps and great care to ensure that there was no misunderstanding as to who was responsible for the security upgrade, whether it was Bosasa, Sondolo IT, or a company linked to Mr Dlamini. Mr Gingcana gave no evidence that he took such steps and care. He testified that he was told that the persons installing the equipment were from a company of which Mr Dlamini was a Director.

797.2 Mr Dlamini does not corroborate Mr Gingcana's version as to a private agreement. Instead, he confirmed the involvement of Mr Agrizzi, Mr Le Roux and the Special Projects team. Mr Dlamini denied that he ever undertook to invoice or to collect payment from Mr Gingcana. Mr Dlamini alleges that he indicated to Mr Gingcana that he would pass the invoice on to him if and when he received it. This does not accord with Mr Gingcana's version that the upgrade was by agreement with Mr Dlamini.

797.3 Mr Agrizzi and Mr le Roux testified that Mr Gingcana was at his residence when they attended with Mr Dlamini. Although Mr Dlamini avers that Mr Gingcana was at work at the time, all versions corroborate the fact that employees of Bosasa and Sondolo IT were at Mr Gingcana's residence. Mr le Roux was clear in his evidence that Mr Gingcana met Mr Agrizzi at his residence. It is unlikely that Mr le Roux would have reason to fabricate that Mr Gingcana was present at the meeting.

797.4 Mr Dlamini gave evidence that he advised Mr Gingcana after the upgrade had been completed to exchange contact details with Mr le Roux, should Mr Gingcana experience any technical or operating challenges with the system. Mr Gingcana later in fact contacted Mr le Roux for assistance. He did not fully explain the context in which he contacted Mr le Roux if he believed that Mr Dlamini was in fact responsible for the security upgrade at his residence.

797.5 Mr Gingcana's version that the security upgrade was installed in 2017 is improbable, for the reasons detailed above.

797.6 Mr Gingcana's testimony was that he was still willing to pay for the security upgrade at his premises. However, he has not done so despite becoming aware that it was Bosasa that installed the upgrade. He testified that after the allegations were made public in the media, there was turmoil at Bosasa and he could not get hold of Mr Dlamini. He never attempted to discuss the invoice or payment with Mr le Roux and never attempted to contact Bosasa directly.

798. None of these difficulties were satisfactorily explained by Mr Gingcana in his oral evidence. Under cross-examination, no significant weaknesses in Mr le Roux's evidence were pointed out. He had no motive to falsely implicate Mr Gingcana. There is no evidence that Mr Gingcana corruptly provided anything in return for the installation. However, this is not a component or requirement of TOR 1.1. It may however have significance as to whether or not the matter should, insofar as it pertains to him, be referred to the appropriate authorities for further investigation. This is dealt with in relation to TOR 7.

Conclusion and findings in relation to TOR 1.1

799. Mr Agrizzi's evidence is corroborated in various respects by the evidence of Messrs van Tonder, le Roux, Mlambo, Venter, Vorster and Lawrence. The testimony of these witnesses is also corroborated by documentary and video evidence. As with Mr Agrizzi, when assessing the weight to be accorded to the evidence of Messrs van Tonder, le Roux, Venter, Vorster and Lawrence, consideration must be given to the fact that these witnesses implicated themselves in the various unlawful acts. Evidence is also given particular weight where the witness was directly involved in the event that was testified to. This was the case in respect of all these witnesses.

800. Taken as a whole, even if one leaves out of consideration (as one must) the evidence in respect of those implicated persons that have not been afforded a hearing, the balance of the evidence overwhelmingly establishes that Bosasa, its directors and some of the employees, along with persons and entities associated with it, were involved on an industrial scale in attempts to influence, through inducement or gain, members of the National Executive and office bearers and functionaries of, or employed by, state institutions and organs of state. This includes attempts at such influence, by way of inducement or gain, through Mr Mantashe, as secretary-general of the ANC, and the ANC as an organisation itself.

801. It is not established on the evidence whether any of the employees of SOEs who received illegal cash payments from Bosasa were directors of the organisations concerned. However, even if they were not directors, they would fall within the category of employees of organs of state.

802. The evidence in relation to inducements and gains alleged to have been provided to Mr Frolick, Mr Smith, Ms Ngwenya, Mr Magagula, Mr Zuma, Ms Mokonyane and Ms Myeni, is dealt with under TOR 1.4.

803. Based on the evidence, the following directors and employees of Bosasa were, at least on a balance of probabilities (and in several cases on their own admission and therefore on the basis of clear and convincing evidence), involved in attempts to influence public office bearers in the categories contemplated in TOR 1.1, through inducements or gain:

803.1 Gavin Watson (widespread involvement)

803.2 Angelo Agrizzi (widespread involvement)

803.3 Andries van Tonder (widespread involvement)

803.4 Carols Bonifacio and Jacques van Zyl (involved in the manipulation of documents; Mr Bonifacio was also involved in the authorisation of payments and Mr van Zyl was involved in the payment of inducements)

803.5 Carien Daubert (accounting staff involved in manipulation of company documents)

803.6 Rieka Hundermark (accounting staff involved in manipulation of company documents)

803.7 Gavin Hundermark (manipulation of the accounting system “Great Plains”)

803.8 Leon van Tonder (involved in the payment of inducements)

803.9 Richard le Roux (involved in the payment of inducements); and 803.10 Johannes Gumede, Papa Leshabane and Thandi Makoko (involved in agreeing to pay someone, in the payment and/or provision of inducements and authorising payments).

804. Based on the evidence, the following persons who were either employees of, or associated with, Bosasa were, at least on a balance of probabilities, involved in attempts to influence public office bearers in the categories contemplated in TOR 1.1, through inducements or gain:

804.1 William Daniel Mansell (widespread involvement)

804.2 Riaan Hoeksma (facilitated the generation of cash for Bosasa from Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers and the creation of fictitious lists of casual employees)

804.3 Gregory Lawrence (delivered cash to Bosasa from Equal Trade)

804.4 Greg Lacon-Allin (facilitated the generation of cash for Bosasa from Equal Trade)

804.5 Sesinyi Seopela (involved in the payment of bribes)

804.6 Richard Mti (involved in the payment of bribes)

804.7 Patrick Littler and Ryno Roode (involved in the payment of bribes)

804.8 Valence Watson (involved in the payments of bribes)

804.9 Reggie Nkabinde (involved in corruptly influencing the award tenders)

804.10 Sam Sekgota (involved in corruptly influencing the award of tenders); and

804.11 Petrus Venter (involved in the payment of bribes)

805. Based on the evidence, the following juristic entities were involved in attempts to influence public office bearers in the categories contemplated in TOR 1.1, through inducements or gain: Bosasa Operations; Sondolo IT; AA Wholesalers; Riekele Konstruksie; Jumbo Liquor Wholesalers; Equal Trade 4 and Equal Food Traders; and Lamozest.

806. Based on the evidence, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the following persons were involved in attempts to influence public office bearers in the categories contemplated in TOR 1.1, through inducements or gain: Mr Syvion Dlamini, Mr Trevor Mathenjwa and Mr Kevin Wakeford.

807. Based on the evidence and his own admission, Mr Venter was aware of the scheme between Bosasa, AA Wholesalers and Equal Trade to generate cash and, at a minimum, failed to report these schemes.

Analysis and findings with reference to TOR 1.4.

808. This Term of Reference is approached by assessing specific tender awards and then focussing on those implicated in facilitating them. The range of potential facilitators in respect of whom the question is asked, includes the President, members of the National Executive, including Deputy Ministers, public officials, and employees of SOEs.

809. The focus thus moves from those seeking to influence, discussed in relation to TOR 1.1, to those subject to the attempts at influence. The question raised is, in effect, whether the targets of the attempts responded by facilitating the unlawful award of tenders in the governmental or SOE sectors, for their own or another person or family’s benefit.

810. The analysis is best commenced with reference to the evidence of what took place in relation to the DCS tenders.

Contracts with the DCS

811. In the analysis that follows, the award of four contracts (and various renewals and an extension of these contracts) by the DCS to Bosasa and its affiliate companies is assessed for compliance with these requirements and to establish whether or not there was corrupt facilitation of the kind contemplated by TOR 1.4.

The catering contracts

812. Concerning the first catering contract, the evidence of Mr Agrizzi and Mr Vorster was that Mr Gillingham played an integral role in assisting Bosasa in corruptly being given the opportunity of developing the tender specifications for this contract and tailoring them to suit and advantage Bosasa as one of the tendering parties.

813. This evidence is corroborated by the findings in the SIU Report which records that during a search and seizure operation at Mr Gillingham's residence, a document containing the bid evaluation criteria and guidelines for evaluating this tender was found and this data was determined to have originated from Mr Agrizzi's computer. Although the SIU Report notes that the date of creation of this data could not be determined, its existence aligns with Mr Agrizzi's evidence that Bosasa was allowed to prepare the contract specifications. This is also evidence of Mr Gillingham's facilitation of the unlawful award of the tender. The evidence of Mr Agrizzi and Mr Bloem confirms that Bosasa was ultimately awarded the contract in and around July 2004.

814. That Bosasa was afforded the opportunity to draft the specifications for the tender and was later successful in being awarded the contract, establishes, at the very least on a balance of probabilities, that the specifications and tender-award process were skewed in favour of Bosasa. This would have had the effect of undermining the competitiveness and parity of the bid evaluation process and falls foul of the requirement that departments must implement supply chain management systems that are fair, equitable and competitive, thus rendering the award of the contract unlawful. Even if, notionally, the tender specifications had not been skewed in favour of Bosasa, the mere participation of Bosasa in preparing (or being involved in the preparation of) the specifications for a tender process in which it would participate, would violate the requirements of fairness, equity, transparency, and competitiveness.

815. In respect of the second catering contract, Mr Agrizzi's evidence that contract HK14/2008 was granted using the same specifications drafted for the first catering contract is undisputed. The second catering contract is a natural progression from the first contract (including the extension of the first contract referred to below). Consequently, the irregularities referred to above pervade the award of the second contract and are causally linked to it.

816. As a general observation in respect of the catering contracts, the undisputed evidence of Mr Agrizzi is that the benefits given to Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham were linked to the award of the catering tenders at the DCS. There is no evidence to suggest that there was a lawful basis for the benefits provided to Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham. Nor did they come forward to offer one. The extent of the benefits lavished on them, and the fact of the awards of the tenders, demonstrates that, at the very least on a balance of probabilities, they, as public officials, facilitated the award of tenders in the manner contemplated by TOR 1.4.

817. Given the scale of the illegalities in the procurement process in this regard, it would have been insufficient to ensure the ongoing corrupt award of the tenders, to have unlawful facilitation by Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham alone. It may safely be concluded on a balance of probabilities that other DCS officials officially involved in the procurement and implementation processes in respect of these contracts, were in receipt of corrupt payments from Bosasa and similarly facilitated the illegal award of the tenders. Those identified by Mr Agrizzi who failed to respond to Rule 3.3 notices or regulation 10(6) directives are listed below.

818. For these reasons, the procurement processes resulted in failures to implement supply chain procedures in compliance with regulation 16A of the Treasury Regulations which requires:

818.1 That a supply chain management system be fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost effective (regulation 16A.3)

818.2 That officials involved in supply chain management treat all suppliers and potential suppliers equitably (regulation 16A.8); and

818.3 That officials involved in supply chain management maintain the credibility or integrity of the supply chain management system (regulation 16A.8).

819. Furthermore, the procurement processes failed to comply with section 217 of the Constitution which requires that, when an organ of state contracts for goods or services, it must do so in accordance with a tendering system that is "fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective".

820. There is also a prima facie case for statutory crimes having been committed in relation to the facilitation of this tender.

821. Considering the above, it is established at least on a balance of probabilities that the tenders giving rise to the award of these contracts were unlawfully awarded, that the awards of the tenders were facilitated by Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham and other officials of the DCS in breach of the Constitution and legislation and that they did so to benefit themselves, their families, Bosasa and its associates and the Watson family.

The access control contract

822. Mr Agrizzi testified that, following a meeting in November 2004, Bosasa was invited to attend a meeting of the DCS to inter alia showcase some of the other services Bosasa could provide. This meeting was attended by Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham and Mr Agrizzi, together with several Bosasa directors (excluding Mr Watson and Mr Mansell).

823. Following this meeting, Mr Agrizzi was informed by Mr Watson that he had received "very good feedback" from Mr Mti and that there was an access control contract in the pipeline. Mr Agrizzi states that he was then instructed by Mr Watson and Mr Mansell to prepare a specifications document for the access control system to be procured by the DCS. When doing so, Mr Agrizzi testified that he included security aspects which afforded Bosasa a clear advantage over the other bidders. This evidence remains undisputed. Further, the SIU Report corroborates the evidence that these specifications were prepared by Mr Agrizzi and sent to Mr Gillingham.

824. It is thus established, at least on a balance of probabilities that Bosasa was allowed to draft the specifications for the tender. The fact that it was subsequently awarded the contract demonstrates that the procurement process was unfair, inequitable and did not foster competitiveness. For these reasons, the award of the tender giving rise to the contract was unlawful. The evidence suggests that Bosasa's efforts to secure the access control contract were prompted by Mr Mti and the unlawful award of the contract was then facilitated by Mr Gillingham. Mr Mti, in prompting the involvement of Bosasa, facilitated the award to them. In addition, he must have been aware of Mr Gillingham's efforts in this regard. So too, on the probabilities, were the other officials that were involved in procurement and implementation that were receiving corrupt payments from Bosasa. In this regard, silence and a failure to report corruption by an official who knows it is taking place or has taken place in relation to a tender, amounts to facilitation as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

825. There is also a prima facie case for statutory crimes having been committed in relation to the facilitation of this tender.

826. It is therefore established, at least on a balance of probabilities, that there was facilitation of an unlawful tender as contemplated in TOR 1.4 in respect of the DCS access control tender. The facilitation was in breach of the Constitution and legislation and was aimed at benefitting the Bosasa officials who received the corrupt payments as well as their families in the case of Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham and the Watson family.

The fencing contract

827. Regarding the fencing contract, Mr Mansell has not responded to the Rule 3.3 notices issued to him on 2 April 2019 and 30 June 2020. Consequently, the evidence implicating him in the irregular award of the fencing contract is undisputed.

828. In this regard, Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mansell compiled the specifications for the contract before the tender was issued. This was corroborated by the investigative media report which appeared in the Mail & Guardian newspaper on 30 January 2009 with reference to evidence reviewed by the journalists. The fact that the tender specifications were weighted in favour of Bosasa is also confirmed in the SIU Report. This could only have come about with facilitation by officials within the DCS and, on the probabilities, this was provided by Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham and those others in the DCS that were in receipt of corrupt payments from Bosasa.

829. Apart from obtaining an advantage over other bidders by being integrally involved in the creation of the tender specifications, the evidence that Bosasa was afforded early access to the DCS sites to survey the area in preparing the specifications was undisputed, as was the evidence that an unreasonable amount of time was granted to Bosasa compared with other bidders, to prepare and submit bids for the contract.

830. For these reasons, the procurement process resulted in a failure to implement a supply chain procedure in compliance with regulation 16A of the Treasury Regulations. Furthermore, the procurement process failed to comply with Section 217 of the Constitution. There is also a prima facie case for statutory crimes having been committed in relation to the facilitation of this unlawful tender. The award of the tender was therefore unlawful.

831. In the light of the above, it is established at least on a balance of probabilities that the facilitation of the unlawful award of this tender was in breach of the Constitution and legislation as contemplated in TOR 1.4. This was done to benefit Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham, their families, the other officials involved, Bosasa, its associates and the Watson family.

The integrated computerised offender management system contract

832. Mr Agrizzi's evidence that Bosasa was, through Mr Gillingham, provided with the necessary documents and was involved in the preparation of the tender specifications for the integrated computerised offender management system, was undisputed. As with the catering contract, this would have resulted in the specifications being skewed in favour of Bosasa and the undermining of the competitiveness and parity of the bid evaluation process. Consequently, the award to Bosasa of the tender giving rise to this contract would have been unlawful for the same reasons as those listed in relation to the tenders discussed above. The role of Mr Gillingham in enabling this process amounted to the facilitation of the unlawful awarding of a tender as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

833. Moreover, the evidence shows that Mr Mansell and Mr Watson were aware from their discussions with Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham, prior to Bosasa preparing the tender specification and pricing their proposal, that the DCS had surplus funds that it needed to use. In this respect too, Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham played a facilitative role in enabling Bosasa to plan for and obtain the tender. On the probabilities, the other officials in receipt of corrupt payments were similarly involved in the facilitation of the unlawful award of this tender.

834. The flawed procurement process followed resulted in a failure to implement a supply chain procedure in compliance with regulation 16A of the Treasury Regulations for the same reasons as those given above in respect of other DCS tenders. Furthermore, the procurement process failed to comply with section 217 of the Constitution. There is also a prima facie case for statutory crimes as identified in Appendix 1, having been committed in relation to the facilitation of this tender. The award of the tender giving rise to this contract was thus unlawful.

835. In the light of the above, it is established, at least on a balance of probabilities, that the facilitation of the award of this tender was in breach of the Constitution and legislation. The corrupt payments and other forms of gratification benefitted Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham, their family members, and the other officials of the DCS who received the corrupt monetary payments. The facilitation of the unlawful award of the tenders was also intended to benefit Bosasa, its associates and the Watson family. This amounts to conduct as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

The extension of the catering contract

836. Insofar as the 2004 extension of the catering contract to seven other satellite correctional centres is concerned, Mr Agrizzi's evidence that (i) the contract was extended without any tender process, following Bosasa's proposal in this regard to Mr Gillingham and subsequent approval from Mr Mti; (ii) the catering contract was extended without authorisation in terms of the original tender or a new tender; (iii) Ms Jolingana, then acting head of the bid adjudication committee of the DCS ensured that the contract was extended, and (iv) the contract was extended by Mr Mti, is uncontested. The alleged irregularities with this extension were corroborated by Mr Bloem who confirmed that the Portfolio Committee had, without success, called upon the DCS to account for the extension and the role Mr Gillingham had played in this process.

837. The fact that the extension was borne of a proposal from Bosasa that was directed to Mr Gillingham and approved by Mr Mti, both persons in receipt of corrupt benefits from Bosasa, renders the extension of the contract and its facilitation, unlawful.

838. Moreover, National Treasury Instruction Note 32, which prescribes that an extension of an existing contract that represents 15% or more of the original value of the contract or that has a value of at least R15 million, whichever is the lower amount, requires Treasury approval for a deviation from this threshold. According to Mr Agrizzi, the value of the extension was R14 million a month. On this basis too, the award of the extension was unlawful.

839. The procurement process also resulted in a failure to implement a supply chain procedure in compliance with regulation 16A of the Treasury Regulations.

840. Furthermore, the procurement process failed to comply with section 217 of the Constitution. Given that the officials involved were in receipt of corrupt payments and other benefits, there is also a prima facie case for statutory offences as contemplated in Appendix 1 having been committed.

841. In the light of the above, it is established, at least on a balance of probabilities, that:

    841.1 The award of this contract was in breach of the Constitution and legislation and was therefore unlawful

    841.2 There was facilitation of the unlawful award of this contract, on the part of Mr Mti, Mr Gillingham, Ms Jolingana and all those officials of the DCS involved in procurement and implementation who were receiving corrupt payments from Bosasa; and 841.3 Those involved in the facilitation acted in breach of the Constitution and legislation and aimed to benefit themselves, in the case of Mr Mti and Mr Gillingham, their families, Bosasa and the Watson family.

842. TOR 1.4 refers to the facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders. On a purposive interpretation, this must include the extension of a contract concluded pursuant to the award of a tender (particularly a tender which had itself been awarded unlawfully).

843. The focus must now turn to the specific individuals named in the testimony of the various Bosasa witnesses as having facilitated the unlawful award of tenders, including the respects in which they benefitted from the corruption.

Mr Mti

844. Given that Mr Mti was implicated in the evidence of Messrs Agrizzi, le Roux, Vorster, van Tonder, Blake and Venter, he was issued with five notices in terms of Rule 3.3 as detailed above. He was also issued with a Regulation 10(6) directive. Mr Mti refused to comply with the directive, primarily because he alleged that it infringed his right to remain silent and his right to a fair trial. There is prima facie evidence that called for an answer from Mr Mti. Given his refusal to respond to such evidence, it may be concluded, at least on a balance of probabilities, that the evidence is sufficient to make adverse findings against Mr Mti. The evidence includes the following:

844.1 Cash payments were made to Mr Mti in exchange for his facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders to Bosasa in the manner described above.

844.2 In addition, Mr Mti was provided with funds to purchase luxury clothing items. Mr Agrizzi's evidence on the amounts paid to Mr Mti and the type of goods purchased for Mr Mti was not superficial, and the level of detail provided presents a compelling basis for establishing, at the very least on a balance of probabilities, that Mr Mti received these benefits. This evidence is also supported by the copies of extracts from Mr Agrizzi's black book that were provided to the Commission and record that Mr Mti was paid cash by Mr Agrizzi and/or Mr Watson on several occasions. The extracts also suggest that Mr Mti was given cash to pay to other persons, including Adv Mrwebi, Adv Jiba, Ms Lepinka, Ms Jolingana, and Grace Molatedi. No findings may be made against Grace Molatedi as she was not issued with a Rule 3.3 notice. The evidence reveals that Ms Jolingana facilitated the extension of the catering contract. She was issued with a Rule 3.3 notice and failed to respond. Accordingly, an adverse finding may be made against her, given that she has failed to dispute the evidence against her.

844.3 Bosasa paid for the furnishing of Mr Mti's house through the Taverners' company.

844.4 Security upgrades were conducted at Bosasa's cost to Mr Mti's home. This evidence was corroborated by Mr le Roux in his further affidavit. Mr le Roux produced invoices for work done at Mr Mti's homes in Greenbushes Plot and Colchester in Port Elizabeth. The updated estimated cost of this project was R417,980.19. This compromised equipment, accommodation, labour, and vehicle travel.

845. Mr Vorster's evidence regarding the purchase of a Volkswagen Touareg V8 for Mr Mti demonstrated that it coincided with the timing of the award of the access control contract (April 2005) and the fencing contract (November 2005) to Bosasa. An inference can therefore reasonably be drawn that the vehicle was intended to be a quid pro quo for Mr Mti's facilitation of the securing of these contracts.

846. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mti facilitated the award of 2010 FIFA World Cup security plan to Sondolo IT following receipt of his monthly R65,000 cash payment from Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi had been requested by Mr Watson to prepare a security plan and to assist Mr Mti. Mr Agrizzi was present at the meeting when Mr Watson handed Mr Mti a grey security bag containing his monthly payment of R65,000.

847. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mti received regular payments from Bosasa for as long as it maintained contracts with the DCS. Mr Agrizzi also testified that holiday costs, the education costs of Mr Mti's children and the fee for a security guard outside Mr Mti's residence were paid for by Bosasa. The holiday and travelling costs were paid for by Bosasa, through an account opened at Blake's Travel in the name of JJ Venter. Mr Blake confirmed that reservations were made for Mr Mti and his family through the "Venter", "Bosasa VIP", and "Mr Agrizzi" accounts. These bookings were predominantly paid for in cash by Mr Agrizzi or his wife. Mr Blake attached a spreadsheet to his affidavit, together with supporting invoices, reflecting the travel booked for Mr Mti and his family for the period October 2012 to January 2017 to a total value of R1,234,481.11.

848. In addition, the SIU Report records that Mr Mti received benefits following the award of the four contracts (the kitchens/catering, access control, fencing, and television contracts) and the extension of the catering contract.

849. Apart from the other evidence of facilitation, based on the inducements paid and gains provided to Mr Mti, the inference may be drawn that Mr Mti facilitated the unlawful awards and the unlawful extension of the catering contract. It would be most improbable that Bosasa and its officials would continue to lavish Mr Mti with payments and other substantial material benefits at considerable expense, if he was not facilitating the award of the tenders that formed a substantial part of Bosasa's business.

850. In the light of the above, there is undisputed evidence that Mr Mti breached the Constitution (section 217 and 195) and legislation (the PFMA and PRECCA) by facilitating the unlawful award of tenders by the DCS to benefit his own family, the Watson family, Bosasa and its associated business entities.

851. Mr Mti's conduct also involved the breach of the following obligations as an accounting officer: ensuring that the DCS maintains an appropriate procurement system which is fair, equitable, transparent, competitive and cost-effective; and taking effective and appropriate steps to inter alia prevent unauthorised and irregular expenditure.

852. Mr Mti's failure to comply with section 38 of the PFMA also amounts to a prima facie case of a criminal offence under section 86 of the PFMA. It can also be inferred from the evidence that Mr Mti was aware of the conduct of Mr Gillingham. Mr Mti also failed to manage the investigation and correction of financial misconduct in the DCS as required in terms of Regulation 4.1 of the Treasury Regulations.

853. In addition to the Constitutional and legislative breaches detailed above, the evidence reveals that Mr Mti facilitated the awarding of tenders to benefit himself and his family in contravention of section 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA and there is a prima facie case of a criminal offence against him in this regard.

854. Insofar as the commission agreement alleged to have been concluded between Mr Watson and Mr Mti, and witnessed by Mr Perry, is concerned, in the absence of this agreement having been produced before the Commission, Mr Agrizzi's failure to particularise the nature and purpose of the commission agreement, and the fact that Mr Perry was not issued with a notice in terms of Rule 3.3, there are insufficient facts to conclude that such agreement existed.

855. In many instances, the evidence suggests that, in his capacity as CFO, Mr Gillingham was more closely involved than Mr Mti in the management of the negotiation of contracts and preparation of tenders for various contracts with the DCS. Although Mr Mti may have delegated such duties to Mr Gillingham, in terms of section 44(2)(d) of the PFMA it did not divest Mr Mti of responsibility concerning the exercise or performance of that delegated power or assigned duty. Had Mr Mti come across unlawful conduct by Mr Gillingham (as he must on the probabilities have done), it was open to him in terms of section 44(3) of the PFMA to override and reverse any unlawful decisions made or steps taken by Mr Gillingham. There is no evidence that he did so.

856. Moreover, the probabilities are strong that Mr Mti was complicit with Mr Gillingham in the facilitation of the unlawful award of the tenders, given the extent to which inducements were paid and gains provided to Mr Mti by Bosasa. This complicity included providing Mr Gillingham with protection from investigation, discipline, and prosecution, at the highest level within the DCS.

857. Mr Mti facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in breach of the Constitution and legislation to benefit himself, his family, Bosasa and its associates and the Watson family. Mr Mti's conduct thus falls squarely within that contemplated by TOR 1.4.

858. Save in respect of criminal offences, the analysis in respect of Mr Mti has been based above on whether corrupt activities have been established on his part on at least a balance of probabilities. It must be noted, however, in many if not most respects, the level of certainty of the evidence of his corrupt activities has the status of clear and convincing evidence.

Mr Gillingham

859. Mr Gillingham was summonsed to appear before the Commission but has, to date, failed to do so. For the reasons given above, an adverse inference may be drawn from his failure to rebut the evidence that was given against him. In the absence of Mr Gillingham appearing before the Commission to dispute the evidence implicating him, there is undisputed evidence that Mr Gillingham breached the Constitution and legislation by facilitating the unlawful award of tenders by the DCS to benefit himself, his family, the Watson family, Bosasa and its associated business entities.

860. The evidence of illicit facilitation in return for inducements and gain has to some extent been set out above in the analysis of the successive tenders. The following evidence is also relied upon to reach these conclusions:

860.1 Bosasa purchased various vehicles for Mr Gillingham and members of his family. The timing of these benefits is sufficiently linked to the award of the first catering contract to substantiate his corrupt facilitative role. The SIU Report corroborates that Mr Gillingham received benefits from Bosasa after the award of this tender.

860.2 The integrated computerised offender management system and television contract was awarded in March 2006. Mr Vorster's evidence is that in April 2006, he assisted in negotiating a deal to purchase a vehicle for Mr Gillingham's son which vehicle was ultimately funded by Mr Mansell. The timing of this financial assistance is sufficiently linked to the award of this contract to justify an inference that it was a reward for the facilitation of the award of the contract.

860.3 Mr van Tonder corroborates Mr Agrizzi's evidence that Mr Gillingham offered his cooperation in arranging for Bosasa to be awarded the various tenders and tender extensions with the DCS in return for assistance in building a house. There is no evidence before the Commission to suggest that there was a lawful cause for this benefit to Mr Gillingham.

861. The assistance provided to Mr Gillingham to purchase vehicles for himself and his family has been confirmed by Mr Agrizzi, Mr Vorster and Mr van Tonder. Mr Vorster and Mr van Tonder's evidence on the conclusion of a sham loan agreement between Mr Vorster and Mr Gillingham to advance him an amount of R180,000 to purchase a vehicle is further corroborated by documentary evidence.

862. Mr Blake also confirmed that travel and vehicle hire were booked and paid for by Bosasa for Mr Gillingham and his family, and that Blake's Travel did not receive any direct payment from Mr Gillingham or his wife for any of the bookings. There is no compelling reason to reject this evidence, particularly considering Mr Gillingham's failure to refute the evidence before the Commission.

863. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was instructed to draft and conclude fictitious loan agreements between Mr Gillingham and various Bosasa employees for all the benefits that Mr Gillingham had received unlawfully. Mr Agrizzi was also instructed by Mr Watson to prepare an official declaration on behalf of Mr Gillingham, as a senior manager in the DCS, to "declare" such benefits. This was corroborated with a copy of the declaration in the form of a memorandum addressed to Mr Mti from Mr Gillingham and on the DCS letterhead. In the absence of Mr Mti or Mr Gillingham complying with the regulation 10.6 directives issued to them, the undisputed evidence before this Commission is that this declaration was a sham.

864. Mr Agrizzi's version that Mr Gillingham received a regular amount from Bosasa in lieu of his salary following his resignation from the DCS is borne out by the video recording of the conversation in Mr Watson's vault.

865. Apart from the above, the SIU Report notes in relation to each of the contracts referred to above that Mr Gillingham received financial benefits from Bosasa after the award of the tenders.

866. At the very least on a balance of probabilities, it is established that Mr Gillingham facilitated the unlawful award of tenders as contemplated by TOR 1.4.

867. Based on the evidence, Mr Gillingham breached the following obligations prevailing upon him as a senior official of the DCS:

867.1 Section 217 and 195 of the Constitution

867.2 The duty to ensure that the system of financial management and internal control established for DCS is carried out within his area of responsibility as CFO

867.3 The responsibility for the effective, efficient, economical and transparent use of financial and other resources within his area of responsibility

867.4 The obligation to take effective and appropriate steps to prevent irregular expenditure; and

867.5 The obligation to comply with the provisions of the PFMA.

868. In addition to the Constitutional and legislative breaches detailed above, the evidence reveals a prima facie case that Mr Gillingham facilitated the award of tenders to benefit himself and his family in contravention of section 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA.

869. Mr Gillingham facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in breach of the Constitution and legislation to benefit himself, his family, Bosasa and its associates and the Watson family. Mr Gillingham's conduct thus falls squarely within that contemplated by TOR 1.4.

870. Save in respect of criminal offences, the analysis in respect of Mr Gillingham has been based above on whether corrupt activities have been established on his part on a balance of probabilities. It must be noted, however, in many if not most respects, the level of certainty of the evidence of his corrupt activities has the status of clear and convincing evidence.

Other officials

Mr Cedric Frolick

871. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Frolick assisted Bosasa in resolving an impasse with Mr Smith who was, at the time, chairperson of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services and Justice and considered "anti-Bosasa". He alleges that, in return for doing so, a payment was made to Mr Frolick at a meeting held with him and Mr Butana Komphela (then chair of the parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Sport) at the office park where Bosasa is situated, and that further monthly payments were made to Mr Frolick after that.

872. Save that he firmly denies having received any corrupt payments and disputes other aspects of the detail of events, Mr Frolick confirms important aspects of Mr Agrizzi's evidence, namely that:

872.1 He, Mr Frolick, had a longstanding relationship with the Watson family – Mr Frolick testified that this went back to the 1980s when he met Daniel 'Cheeky' Watson through non-racial sport and when he served as adviser to, and later the board of, Eastern Province Rugby, which Mr Daniel Watson chaired from 2006/2007, and which had led to his meeting the other Watson brothers.

872.2 He met with Mr Watson at Bosasa and was accompanied by Butana Komphela at this meeting - Mr Frolick however denied details of the meeting testified to by Mr Agrizzi, including the latter's presence at the meeting, and further testified that the meeting was organised between Mr Komphela and Mr Daniel Watson for purposes of viewing a youth sports facility for young offenders at Bosasa and he went along, as he often did, as a friend of Mr Komphela because of Mr Komphela's physical disability (also testified to by Mr Agrizzi).

872.3 Mr Watson was unhappy with the manner in which the Portfolio Committee treated Bosasa, and Mr Frolick was requested to facilitate a meeting with Mr Smith because he considered Mr Smith to be a colleague and friend and they stayed in the same parliamentary village - Mr Frolick however testified that the proposal of facilitating a meeting between Mr Watson and Mr Smith was that of Mr Komphela, after Mr Watson said that their written requests for such a meeting had not met with success.

872.4 Mr Frolick indeed facilitated a meeting between Mr Smith, Mr Agrizzi and Mr Njenje at Parliament, albeit that it was brief and not seen as successful at the time, this after Mr Watson had called Mr Frolick to say that he himself would not be able to attend.

872.5 He had lunch with Mr Agrizzi and Mr Njenje at Parliament, although he denies having provided a tour, save for pointing out the assembly where the apartheid government sat.

872.6 He was called by Mr Watson at the time when Bosasa was considering litigating against the DCS relating to the failure to award the full catering tender to Bosasa in 2016/2017 and he advised Mr Watson to consider the negative impact the contemplated litigation could have on their future business relationships with government. Mr Frolick said this advice was given to Mr Watson because he was a friend.

872.7 He received travel benefits to attend rugby matches, but states that he was under the impression that his travel was paid for by EPRU.

873. It is clear from the above that Mr Frolick sought to assist Bosasa resolve its impasse with Mr Smith and thereby improve its relations with a parliamentary oversight body that was concerning itself with allegations of irregularities in the award of contracts to Bosasa. It must have been known to Mr Frolick (as an MP and later House Chair of Committees, who must have kept himself well-informed about affairs within and beyond Parliament, and as a friend of the Watson family) at the time that:

    873.1 Parliamentary oversight committees have considerable powers in their capacity to expose malfeasance in public administration and dealings between the public administration and the private sector

    873.2 Exposing malfeasance on the part of a company benefitting from it could well result in the cancellation of contracts deriving from it or the non-renewal of such contracts

    873.3 Bosasa had contracts with the DCS and would inevitably have sought the renewal of those contracts in later tender processes from time to time

    873.4 There were allegations of corruption on the part of Bosasa in relation to the award of tenders to it - the Mail & Guardian had been reporting on the matter since 2007 and Mr Frolick on his own version records Mr Smith's response when he approached him about meeting with Bosasa officials as follows: I had a discussion with Mr Smith and he said: "Man, you know, there are big problems surrounding this company"

    873.5 Despite this response, Mr Frolick said to Mr Smith in response that "it is important just to hear the other side" and proposed either a private meeting or one before the committee

    873.6 As Mr Frolick conceded when questioned by the evidence leader, he was aware that the Rules governing members of Parliament would prevent them from being seen to be "batting for one company or one individual"; and

    873.7 On his own version, the intentions of Mr Watson at the meeting at Bosasa were not in good faith - assuming Mr Frolick's version is correct that they were called to the meeting to inspect a sports facility for youth offenders, the moment Mr Watson began instead to discuss and press him for a solution to his problems with the chair of the relevant portfolio committee and to inform him that they were not ready for a viewing of or discussion about the sports facility, Mr Frolick must have become aware that he and Mr Komphela had flown all the way to Johannesburg under false pretences; the appropriate response of an innocent parliamentarian thus mislead would have been one of anger and a desire to dissociate himself from what was happening, not accommodation by exploring and offering solutions to Bosasa's problem.

874. Taking all of this into account, on Mr Frolick's own version, there was conduct facilitating the unlawful award of tenders in breach of, at least, the oath sworn by members of Parliament in schedule 2 item 4 of the Constitution, not only to uphold the Constitution, but also to perform their work to the best of their ability, and clauses 4.1.1, 4.1.3, 4.1.4 and 4.1.5 of the code of conduct governing members of the National Assembly. That facilitation stood to benefit Bosasa, its associates and the Watson family. That is sufficient to establish conduct contemplated by TOR 1.4.

875. Of course, the averments made by Mr Agrizzi go much further than this, to include allegations of corrupt payments in return for the facilitation brought to bear by Mr Frolick. This must be considered because it determines the form that the conduct contemplated by TOR 1.4 took, and because it is relevant to the basis for any referral of the matter under Term of Reference 7 for prosecution or further investigation.

876. Mr Agrizzi's evidence is that (i) Mr Watson presented Mr Frolick with a security bag of money at the meeting at Bosasa; and (ii) Mr Frolick received regular payments of R40 000 often through Mr Valence Watson. Mr Frolick denies this. Mr Agrizzi and Mr Frolick therefore have irreconcilable versions.

877. Mr Frolick denies that Mr Agrizzi was present at the meeting with Mr Khompela, Mr Frolick and Mr Watson. He also disputes certain details of that visit, for example, the duration of the meeting and that Mr Khompela was driven around the Bosasa campus in a golf cart because of his disability. Mr Agrizzi found it difficult to pinpoint the year in which the meetings at Bosasa and at Parliament took place. It is so that he cannot produce documentary evidence of the payments to Mr Frolick, although that is to be expected. There was also no detailed evidence of the ongoing payments allegedly made to Mr Frolick, save for the single instance where Mr Agrizzi saw monies being handed to Mr Frolick by Mr Valence Watson at the latter's home.

878. Despite this, there are significant features of Mr Agrizzi's evidence pointing to its reliability:

878.1 Save for the issue of whether Mr Frolick received payments from Mr Watson or Bosasa, the substantive aspects of Mr Agrizzi's evidence are not in dispute. Both the meetings that he alleged to have taken place were conceded by Mr Frolick to have taken place and Mr Agrizzi's evidence as to the subject matter of the meetings was, in the main, confirmed by Mr Frolick.

878.2 Mr Agrizzi's detail of having arranged a golf cart because of Mr Komphela's physical disability, although denied by Mr Frolick, is corroborated to a significant degree by Mr Frolick's evidence that he used to accompany Mr Komphela to meetings because of his disability and the assistance he needed.

878.3 Mr Agrizzi has not been offered a section 204 indemnity in return for his testimony. He nevertheless provided evidence against Mr Frolick, despite such evidence implicating himself in criminal activities.

878.4 Although not able to provide documentary evidence of specific payments allegedly made to Mr Frolick, Mr Agrizzi was able to produce substantial documentary and other evidence, including the evidence of other witnesses, corroborating his evidence of the systemic, organised, large-scale payment of bribes by Bosasa to secure and retain contracts with organs of State.

879. As far as Mr Frolick's evidence is concerned:

879.1 He did not present a compelling explanation why Mr Agrizzi would seek to implicate him, i.e., there is no suggestion of Mr Agrizzi's being biased towards him or having a motive to implicate him.

879.2 Whilst his evidence that the meeting at Bosasa was intended to deal with a sports facility for youth offenders enjoys some corroboration from the fact that he was accompanied by the chair of the Portfolio Committee on Sport and Recreation, his own version as to how he responded by going along with the request to set up a meeting with Mr Smith, is not the response expected from a busy parliamentarian finding that he has been brought to a meeting under false pretences.

879.3 Mr Frolick's version is self-serving. Unlike Mr Agrizzi, who is already facing charges of fraud and corruption, Mr Frolick has an interest in denying the allegations against him to avoid further scrutiny.

880. Given his admitted longstanding friendship with the Watsons, there is a reasonable basis to believe that Mr Frolick would shield them from allegations of wrongdoing and a foundation for Mr Watson to seek to persuade him to act corruptly in Bosasa's interests.

881. In the circumstances where Mr Frolick faces allegations of corruption, one would have expected more than a short, formulaic confirmatory affidavit from Mr Komphela. As a close friend and colleague, surely, he would have been willing to give oral testimony to corroborate Mr Frolick's evidence? At the very least one would expect an affidavit that provided a full account of events from Mr Komphela's perspective.

882. It is curious that Mr Frolick obtained a confirmatory affidavit from Mr Khompela but did not, despite the seriousness of the evidence against him, attempt to obtain one from his longstanding friend, Mr Valence Watson. Mr Frolick's explanation for not doing so was that Mr Valence Watson was upset by Mr Agrizzi's evidence. This explanation is unsatisfactory. It seems more likely than not that Mr Valence Watson would have seized the opportunity to discredit Mr Agrizzi if Mr Frolick's version is in fact the correct one.

883. Mr Daniel (Cheeky) Watson provided an affidavit to the Commission that confirmed the content of Mr Frolick's affidavit insofar as it related to him. Mr Daniel Watson confirms that from 2007 to 2016, he was the president of Eastern Province Rugby and Mr Frolick became involved at the request of the late Minister of Sport. He confirms that Mr Frolick travelled on behalf of Eastern Province Rugby on several occasions and attended certain test matches at the cost of Eastern Province Rugby. According to Mr Daniel Watson, in 2014 Mr Frolick brought a cheque to his offices for a flight that was arranged by Eastern Province Rugby for an acquaintance to travel. He said that any flights or accommodation were arranged by himself or Eastern Province Rugby for Mr Frolick, and that was the only knowledge that Mr Frolick had.

884. Mr Frolick claims to have assisted Mr Watson in smoothing things out with Mr Smith because he had a general interest in assisting the public resolve complaints with government officials. This explanation is expedient given Mr Frolick's longstanding relationship with the Watsons and that there are no other examples of Mr Frolick assisting general members of the public resolve disputes with members of portfolio committees.

885. As discussed elsewhere, the evidence strongly suggests that Mr Smith was won over to Bosasa's cause and came to protect Bosasa pursuant to benefits corruptly conferred upon him by Bosasa.

886. Taking all his into account there are at least reasonable grounds for suspecting that Mr Frolick's conduct in assisting Bosasa in the respects set out above and in the summary of the evidence, was in return for payments corruptly made to him in contravention of section 3 and 7 of PRECCA.

Ms Jolingana and other DCS officials

887. According to Mr Agrizzi, during the period from 2007 until approximately 2016 monthly payments were made to the following DCS officials: Josiah Maako; Maria Mabena; Shishi Matabella; Mandla Mkabela; Dikeledi Tshabalala; Zach Modise; and Mollet Ngubo. These officials had been identified to look after Bosasa's DCS contracts and Ms Jolingana is alleged to have ensured the extension of the catering contract. All the officials are recorded in the extracts from Mr Agrizzi's black book.

888. Ms Jolingana failed to respond to the Rule 3.3 notice issued to her, with the consequence that the evidence against her is undisputed.

889. Regulation 16A.8 of the Treasury Regulations requires all officials and other role-players in a supply chain management system to comply with the highest ethical standards to promote mutual trust and respect, and an environment where business can be conducted with integrity and in a fair and reasonable manner.

890. The duties resting on Ms Jolingana as acting head of the BAC included:

    890.1 Recognising and disclosing any conflict of interest that may arise

    890.2 Treating all suppliers and potential suppliers equitably

    890.3 Not using her position for private gain or to improperly benefit another person

    890.4 Ensuring that she did not compromise the credibility or integrity of the supply chain management system through the acceptance of gifts or hospitality or any other act; and 890.5 Assisting the accounting officer in combating corruption and fraud in the supply chain management system.

891. Further, regulation 16A.8.5 of the Treasury Regulations required an official in the supply chain management unit to immediately report any breach or failure to comply with any aspect of the supply chain management system to the accounting officer in writing.

892. The payments to Ms Jolingana recorded in Mr Agrizzi's black book were, at least on a balance of probabilities, quid pro quo for the extension of the catering contract. Such conduct is, in addition to the contraventions of the Treasury Regulations, prima facie in contravention of sections 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA for purposes of criminal liability. By receiving the corrupt payments, she benefitted herself and by facilitating the extension of the catering contract, she benefited Bosasa, its associates, and the Watson family. Her conduct falls squarely within TOR 1.4.

893. The remaining officials said to have received cash payments from Bosasa to ensure that they continued to "look after" its contracts with the DCS were issued with notices in terms of Rule 3.3. Save for Josiah Maako and Dikeledi Tshabalala, no official has challenged the evidence against them. There is therefore undisputed evidence establishing on a balance of probabilities that they facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in the DCS in return for corrupt payments, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

894. In relation to Mr Maako and Ms Tshabalala, while they have, through an attorney's letter, denied the allegations against them, they have not made an application in terms of Rule 3.4. They have failed adequately to dispute the truth of Mr Agrizzi's evidence. On that basis it may be accepted, at least on a balance of probabilities, that they facilitated the unlawful award of tenders in the DCS in return for corrupt payments, as contemplated in TOR 1.4 and in prima facie contravention of sections 3, 4, 12 and 13 of PRECCA.

Ms Ngwenya

895. In Mr Bloem's evidence, he referred to a fellow Portfolio Committee member, Ms Ngwenya, having shown bias towards Bosasa during the deliberations of the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services. According to Mr Bloem, Ms Ngwenya informed him that there was money involved in meeting with Bosasa.

896. Mr Agrizzi testified that Ms Ngwenya was paid cash monthly in return for keeping quiet and ensuring that the negative public press on Bosasa and scrutiny by the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services would not prevent it from getting new business. According to Mr Agrizzi, Ms Ngwenya lived close to Bosasa's office and would collect her payments there when he did not make the payments to her personally, or through Mr Smith.

897. Ms Ngwenya was issued with a notice in terms of Rule 3.3 on 28 February 2019. She has not made an application in terms of Rule 3.4 to cross-examine either Mr Agrizzi or Mr Bloem, or to present evidence at the Commission. The evidence implicating her in corrupt activities and in failing to discharge her duties as a Portfolio Committee member in good faith is therefore unchallenged.

898. Her conduct, on at least a balance of probabilities, constitutes facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders in return for corrupt payments in breach of the Constitution (Section 217 and 195), the provisions of the code of conduct for members of the National Assembly and legislation (the PFMA and PRECCA). For her and the other members of Parliament referred to above, given that they were holders of a public office, "public official" includes within its ambit a Member of Parliament. Her conduct therefore falls squarely within TOR 1.4 and is prima facie a contravention of sections 3 and 7 of PRECCA.

Mr Vincent Smith

899. Mr Smith deposed to an affidavit on 3 August 2020 and testified before the Commission on 4 September 2020. Mr Smith's evidence was in response to evidence given by Mr Agrizzi, Mr Richard le Roux and Mr Blake. Initially, in response to a 10(6) directive, Mr Smith had relied on his right to remain silent and right to a fair trial as a basis not to respond to the directive issued by the Commission compelling him to answer certain evidence against him. Despite assurances from the Commission, Mr Smith initially failed to place his version before the Commission in response to Rule 3.3 notices dated 23 January, 28 March and 1 July 2020 (the latter was addressed to Mr Smith's daughter, Brumilda Doreen Smith), as well as the 10(6) directive. The Commission assured Mr Smith that:

    899.1 It respected his rights, including his right to approach the courts for relief where he felt that his rights had been or were being infringed or threatened

    899.2 It believed that the immunity that regulation 8 provided was applicable to Mr Smith and ensured that no statement or evidence Mr Smith placed before the Commission would be used against him in criminal proceedings and that the immunity was effective; and

    899.3 The judgment in Ferreria v Levin No and Others; Vryenhoek and Others v Powell NO and Others 1996 (1) SA 984 (CC) was clear that requiring a person to give evidence regarding a matter that may later form the basis of a criminal charge or trial against him did not infringe such a person's right to remain silent or right to a fair trial where there was an immunity such as that which regulation 8 provides.

900. Ultimately, however, Mr Smith elected to file the affidavit referred to above with the Commission. In his affidavit Mr Smith provided a detailed account of how he interacted with the Commission from late January 2019 when he received the first Rule 3.3 notice until he filed his affidavit in August 2020.

901. Mr Smith also contended in his affidavit that despite his name being mentioned so many times before the Commission, there was no evidence presented to the Commission pointing to his involvement "in any activities where I facilitated the unlawful awarding of tenders for my benefit or the benefit of any other person, family and/or entity", and "in influencing the unlawful awarding or maintenance of any tender for my own or family interest, or the interest of any entity where I have an interest".

902. Mr Smith provided his account of the nature and evolution of the relationship between business and politics post-1990, as commencing when multitudes of individuals in exile or prison, including activists inside the country in hiding from the police, returned to their homes and started a process of rebuilding their personal lives. Mr Smith said that many businesspeople saw an opportunity (for good or bad motives) to provide financial and other assistance to politicians and activists who did not have the wherewithal to re-establish their personal lives. According to Mr Smith, so began a relationship "characterised by inherent conflict" between "business generally, government and individuals who are public representatives". Mr Smith identified the Watson brothers as members of the "patriotic bourgeoisie".

903. Mr Smith explained in his affidavit that it was in the early days, post-1990, that he first met Mr Watson while working on re-establishing ANC branches in the greater Johannesburg area. Mr Smith indicated that Mr Watson assisted with the financing of some of the community development projects and that he also, on a personal level, received financial assistance from Mr Watson from time-to-time, long before he was deployed to Parliament in 1999. For Mr Smith, it was not unusual to call on Mr Watson for assistance as and when he needed to, even after he had become a parliamentarian. According to Mr Smith, this was never in any way a quid pro quo exchange. Mr Watson indicated to Mr Smith that he should liaise with Mr Agrizzi when Mr Watson was unavailable to attend to Mr Smith's requests, which is when a line of communication was opened between Mr Agrizzi and Mr Smith.

904. Mr Smith acknowledged that he was aware of the various allegations of corruption against Bosasa. He was asked why, despite knowing these allegations, he still requested assistance from Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi. His response was that his requests were since at the time he was no longer active in the Portfolio Committee on Correctional Services, that he always maintained a distinction between the company, Bosasa, on the one hand, and Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi, on the other, and that the separation of powers doctrine did not allow a MP to influence the award of tenders and similar affairs within a government department.

905. This was not the only time that Mr Smith relied on the separation of powers doctrine as a reason for why he could not have influenced the workings of the DCS (specifically, the award of tenders) in his interactions with Mr Agrizzi. In theory, the doctrine of the separation of powers may assist in preventing corrupt activities. Mr Smith is correct that the doctrine encompasses the notion that legislative, executive, and judicial functions are separate and distinct, and do not operate in the realm assigned to the other. Parliament makes laws, but it is also entrusted with the onerous task of overseeing the executive. The doctrine assists in reducing the influence of one arm of government over another but is not a foolproof guard against corrupt activities by individuals with no respect for the Rule of law. Where Parliament fails to hold the executive accountable, whether deliberate or not, corruption can flourish. If Parliament itself is corrupt, it can actively exert corrupt influence over government departments or passively permit corruption to enter and establish itself within the executive.

906. Mr Smith acknowledged that relationships of corruption can endure beyond an official's term of office. He accepted the Chairperson's proposition that a company engaged in corrupt activities could be involved in making corrupt payments to persons after they had left their position in parliament, based on what they had done for the company at the time when they were able to do things to benefit the company.

907. Mr Smith denied ever being a recipient of cash payments from Bosasa. Mr Agrizzi testified that initially Mr Smith as a member of the Portfolio Committee would receive R45,000 monthly in exchange for keeping quiet and helping to manage the negative press concerning Bosasa, so as to ensure that it would not prevent Bosasa from receiving further business from the state. Mr Agrizzi testified that, at Mr Smith's request, the payments to him increased to R100,000 in 2016. Mr Agrizzi testified that he had personally handed the cash to Mr Smith on various occasions. Mr Smith did not deny meeting with Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi but claimed that he did so on a social basis when he was in Johannesburg. He denied receiving payments at these meetings, frequent or otherwise. Mr Smith's name also appears in Mr Agrizzi's black book, as "Vincent Smith 100,000".

908. Mr Smith denied that the assistance he received from Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi was ever on a quid pro quo basis. He relied on minutes of meetings of the Portfolio Committee, which in his view reflect his position as being consistently against outsourcing from 2009 to 2013. Mr Smith reasoned that it did not make sense that Bosasa would have paid him to be soft on them, in circumstances where he remained harshly against outsourcing. Whilst Mr Smith maintained that he held a strong view in this respect, he was not able to point to an instance where he singled out Bosasa for criticism.

909. Mr Smith was unable to provide an explanation for WhatsApp messages exchanged between Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi, allegedly in late 2016 or early 2017, wherein:

    909.1 Both Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi mentioned having received phone calls from Mr Smith

    909.2 Mr Watson referred to a meeting Mr Smith told him he was to have the next day with "ZM", in all probability Zach Modise, then National Commissioner, and Mr Smalberger, a senior manager in the DCS, the outcome of which Mr Watson should await "until Tuesday"

    909.3 Mr Agrizzi mentioned advice received from Mr Smith to "continue the prep meetings drafting documents" and that "we will convene on Tuesday at 14:00 then review our approach and adjust the three pronged strategy", but that Smith "didn't say should halt it"

    909.4 Mr Watson confirmed the three pronged approach as being "our approach, Vincent's approach and Cedrick's approach"; and 909.5 Mr Watson explained "it is for the meeting on Tuesday to give us more information on how to approach this thing. This is why he is having a meeting with Smallburger to give us more information on what's taken place in DCS".

910. This evidence points strongly towards the giving by Mr Smith (and Mr Frolick) of assistance constituting a clear quid pro quo. Mr Smith said that at the time he was no longer Chairperson of the Portfolio Committee and that he was not privy to what Mr Agrizzi and Mr Watson were discussing. However, his long spell as chair of the Portfolio Committee and his senior position in the ANC would have given him access to the senior officials in the DCS. The provision of inside information about what was taking place internally within the department is a clear quid pro quo. Mr Smith claimed that he needed more context to respond in relation to this exchange of messages. However, a public official whose conduct was consistently beyond reproach would easily be able to explain away evidence of this nature.

911. Mr Smith admitted that Bosasa installed security upgrades at his residence, following a burglary that took place in 2014. He admitted that he did not pay for the installation. According to Mr Smith, he requested the invoice on various occasions so that he could make payment but that it was not forthcoming. Mr Smith also admitted that, after the installation, he would contact Mr Agrizzi or Mr le Roux if there was a fault with the system, which would be attended to. Mr Smith disputed that the value of the security installation was R200,000 as alleged by Mr le Roux.

912. In Mr Smith's affidavit, he stated that he had contacted Mr Watson for some advice after the burglary, given Mr Watson's businesses' involvement in the security industry. During his evidence, Mr Smith indicated that he had canvassed at least three organisations for quotations and that Mr Watson's company was one of them. Mr Smith did not see any conflict of interest in contacting Mr Watson because at that time he was no longer active in the Portfolio Committee and because he thought that the separation of powers did not allow for such influence. Mr Smith's explanation of this as an innocent, legitimate transaction faces the following difficulties:

912.1 No evidence was put up of the other quotations that he had sought.

912.2 He remained an ordinary member of the Portfolio Committee of Justice and Correctional Services at the time and there can be no doubt that an ordinary member of the Committee who had for several years served as its chairperson and represented the majority party in Parliament would continue to wield a considerable amount of influence.

912.3 In any event, if there had been facilitative conduct during his time as chairperson, there is no reason why benefits would not continue after that time and there is no logical reason why the benefits would have to precede or coincide with facilitation.

912.4 The fact that Mr Smith testified that he requested an invoice for the installation on various occasions contradicted what he stated in his affidavit i.e., that he had received financial assistance from Mr Watson on various occasions and that it was not unusual, even after he became a parliamentarian, to call on Mr Watson's assistance as and when he needed to, although it was never a quid pro quo exchange.

912.5 In any event, as soon as there had been allegations of corruption against Bosasa in an official report of the SIU during the time when he was chair of the Portfolio Committee, which had been deliberated upon in the Committee, he should, from that time onwards, have been scrupulous in ensuring that he neither received, nor could be perceived to have received, any benefit in any form whatsoever from Bosasa or any of its senior office bearers or employees. A clean break was even more necessary where Mr Smith had a personal friendship and political association with Mr Watson. This would have required him not entering into any transaction of whatsoever nature with Bosasa, Mr Watson or Mr Agrizzi, whether or not quotations were sought from other security system service providers.

913. In September 2018 Mr Smith publicly responded to, amongst other things, the evidence that the security installation at his home had been paid for by Bosasa. A newspaper reported on his response, referring to the payment in respect of his daughter's university tuition, discussed below, and went on to quote Mr Smith as saying:

> I deny any further assistance, financial or otherwise, including the installation of CCTV cameras at my home from him [Mr Agrizzi] or any other person or company. The cameras that are at my home were paid for by myself.

914. The following comments are apposite in relation to this public statement:

914.1 On Mr Smith's own evidence before the Commission, the statement is dishonest.

914.2 Before the Commission, he volunteered that he received financial assistance from Mr Watson before and after he became a member of Parliament - the statement is not consistent with this.

914.3 He also admitted that he received assistance in the form of the hiring by Bosasa of a vehicle for his daughter on three occasions - the statement is not consistent with this.

914.4 The final sentence regarding the cameras at his home having been paid for by himself must be read in context with the preceding sentence. By not providing any detail or dates, it is intended both to reinforce the preceding sentence containing his denial of any benefit whatsoever (including any CCTV cameras) and to counter the allegation that a security system had been provided to him at no cost by Bosasa. The meaning intended to be conveyed to the reader is an emphatic denial of any such installation at any time. Yet on Mr Smith's own version before the Commission, Bosasa installed the security system in 2014 and removed it following a request to Mr Watson to do so, "end of 2017 beginning of 2018" because it had "become obsolete". The last sentence in the public statement is thus a classic example of a half-truth and, read in context, is dishonestly intended to deceive as to the true position.

914.5 If the installation was legitimate on the basis Mr Smith contended for in his evidence before the Commission, particularly in the face of a specific allegation of this illicit benefit, one would have expected Mr Smith in the public statement to have admitted that Bosasa had, sometime in the past, installed cameras at his home following his having obtained three quotations, that Bosasa's quote was the cheapest, that subsequent to installation he had requested an invoice on various occasions which was not forthcoming, that those cameras had subsequently been removed and that the cameras installed at his house since 2018 had been paid for by Mr Smith. What he said in the statement amounted to a complete denial of any such installation by Bosasa, which was untrue.

914.6 When the difficulties with his public statement were put to him by the Chairperson, Mr Smith said, "it's very difficult at this point" and conceded that what the Chairperson said made sense.

914.7 Mr Smith's dishonesty in the public statement undermines his assertion that he gave no quid pro quo in return - why deny the benefit it if was not tainted with corruptly having given something in return? It also undermines his assertion that he had canvassed quotations and had always intended to pay for the installation. If it was so, why not point this out in the public statement?

915. There was a brief debate on when the security installation was removed from Mr Smith's residence at his instruction, January or October 2018, and whether it was because of allegations that had been published in the media in September 2018. Mr Smith contended that the installation was removed in late 2017, early 2018 and it was accepted that the date reflected in the video that showed the removal could have been January 2018, and not October 2018. This does not, however, detract from the dishonesty of his public statement.

916. Mr Agrizzi testified that Bosasa paid for Mr Smith's daughter's university fees to study overseas at the University of Aberystwyth. Both in his public statement and in his evidence before the Commission, Mr Smith contended that this was a personal loan from Mr Agrizzi, to be repaid when an investment of Mr Smith's matured in 2023. Mr Smith did not dispute that:

916.1 Amounts of R267,667.90 and R395,076.00 were paid into Mr Smith's company (Euro Blitz) account in July 2015 and August 2016 respectively

916.2 These amounts were paid for purposes of payment of Mr Smith's daughter's university fees

916.3 No written loan agreement was concluded between Mr Smith and Mr Agrizzi

916.4 The first payment was made by cash deposit and the second payment was made through a law firm with the electronic payment referenced as "Car Accident Settlement"

916.5 The payments were made following an email from Mr Smith to Mr Agrizzi on 11 May 2015 under the subject line "daughter's study 2015 University of Aberystwyth", in which he referred to "discussions earlier this year" and conveyed inter alia that he was "in the process of sorting out the funding requirements for her and hereby request any assistance in this regard"; and 916.6 Mr Smith did not disclose the loan to Parliament but did disclose his interest in Euro Blitz.

917. Mr Smith testified that he had wanted the money to be paid into his company Euro Blitz's account for audit purposes and because the dividends that he would use to repay Mr Agrizzi, would be paid into the Euro Blitz account. He did so even though the loan from Mr Agrizzi was a personal loan. Mr Smith did not declare the alleged loan between himself and Mr Agrizzi and explained that at the time there was a debate in Parliament about whether one was obliged simply to disclose one's interest in a company or whether one was obliged to refer to "line-items", as he sought to characterise the loan.

918. Mr Smith's position was expressed as follows:

> ... by the time I had left, I have not reached any conclusion [on the debate], other than saying: Here is my company. And if somebody wanted to ... go and look at the transactions, they probably could have gone to look at the transactions.

919. Mr Smith's attempt to characterise this as a legitimate, arms-length transaction faces the following difficulties:

919.1 As Mr Smith conceded, the position in as far as Parliament is concerned is that there is nothing that Mr Smith did to disclose to Parliament that he had been given a loan personally and that there was nothing indicating that Mr Agrizzi had given a loan to Euro Blitz.

919.2 Mr Smith also accepted that a person inspecting the books of the lender, would see the name of an unknown company and would not have any reason to check whether it had been declared, in the same way that they would have done if they saw Mr Smith's name, a prominent person, on the books.

919.3 Initially, Mr Smith had testified that he had provided Mr Agrizzi with a copy of the valuation of his shares as security regarding Mr Smith's ability to pay Mr Agrizzi. However, when Mr Smith provided a copy of the valuation to the Commission (during a lunch break and after his evidence that he had given a copy to Mr Agrizzi in 2015), it was apparent that the valuation was dated 2017. Mr Smith admitted that he could not have shown the valuation to Mr Agrizzi and said that he had only shown the quantum of shares that he held to Mr Agrizzi. On Mr Smith's version, Mr Agrizzi thus advanced him a loan without any form of security or written assurance as to Mr Smith's ability to repay the loan and, specifically, without having seen the Rand value of the shares referred to.

919.4 Mr Smith admitted that R600,000 was a lot of money to request from an individual. Mr Smith was questioned by the Chairperson as to why he was not concerned that Mr Agrizzi, as a high-ranking official at Bosasa, a company that he knew to have faced allegations of corruption, was paying a large amount of money to him in cash. Mr Smith said that he did not register it that way at the time. He said that maybe it "should have rung a bell" but that at the time it "never registered either way".

919.5 Mr Smith refused to answer a question regarding his agreement with Mr Agrizzi on the interest to be paid on the loan because he said that he had been advised not to answer the question as it could potentially incriminate him. On two previous occasions when he had been asked about the terms of interest, Mr Smith did not answer the questions directly and merely stated that there had been no written loan agreement.

919.6 Mr Smith's use of his company for a personal loan contradicts his repeated emphasis on separating the individual from the institution/company. When specifically questioned about the fact that Mr Watson was seen as "Mr Bosasa" by various witnesses who had given evidence, Mr Smith said that he distinguished between Mr Watson and Bosasa but that, in hindsight, the lines were blurred.

919.7 Mr Smith was unable to provide a reason why Mr Agrizzi would say that the money paid for Mr Smith's daughters' university fees was paid as a bribe and not a loan. It is improbable that Mr Agrizzi would have said that such a large sum of money was paid as a bribe if it was in fact a loan to Mr Smith, particularly when considering that:

919.7.1 This evidence would deprive Mr Agrizzi of any basis for claiming repayment of the money; and 919.7.2 Mr Agrizzi's evidence implicated himself in criminal activities in circumstances where he was already facing criminal charges.

919.8 Mr Smith's email seeking assistance in the payment of his daughter's university fees makes no mention whatsoever of a loan.

919.9 There is no evidence that the money was paid as a loan. There is no evidence of an agreed interest rate. Mr Smith's evidence as to repayment terms is flimsy and is undermined by the failure to put up the written evidence of the value of the shares alleged to provide an assurance of his capacity to repay the loan.

919.10 In any event, if there was facilitation of the kind contemplated in TOR1.4, it would remain unlawful if the quid pro quo took the form of a loan on favourable terms. Absent any evidence regarding an arms-length rate of interest, on Mr Smith's own version, it was a favourable loan, not at arms-length.

920. Mr Smith admitted that his daughter made use of a rented vehicle that Bosasa facilitated and paid for on three occasions at an approximate cost of R26,000 and that he did not disclose this to Parliament. Mr Smith sought to justify this on the basis that it was a minor favour and remarked that, if he was receiving the monthly payments that were alleged, he would have paid for this himself out of those funds. The difficulties with his explanation are these:

920.1 The benefit is clearly one that was required to be disclosed in terms of the code of conduct governing members of the National Assembly.

920.2 It was clear from Mr Smith's evidence that he was aware that this benefit was coming from Bosasa, and not from either Mr Watson or Mr Agrizzi - this undermines his evidence that he drew a clear and consistent line between Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi on the one hand and Bosasa on the other.

920.3 When faced with a complaint of having received a bribe, a de minimis non curat lex defence would not justify payment or receipt of a benefit to the value of R26,000.

920.4 His attempt to use his admission of the benefit in relation to the car hire as a basis for disputing the monetary payments is unconvincing and may well point the other way i.e., that Mr Smith was a person who was on the take in respect of whatever was on offer from Bosasa.

921. What emerges from the evidence is that Mr Smith clearly received benefits that were paid for by Bosasa, including money that was used to pay for his daughter's university fees and car hire as well as security upgrades at his home. Having regard to the many difficulties in his version in relation to these benefits listed above, his attempt to suggest that these were at arms-length and legitimate does not withstand scrutiny. The benefits were, at least on a balance of probabilities, corruptly conferred on him. This is so before one even gets to the alleged monthly cash payments of R45,000 and, later, R100,000, which Mr Smith disputes. These are addressed below.

922. On a consideration of the evidence, in the main Mr Smith does not dispute the receipt of illicit benefits other than the monthly payments, but that he facilitated the unlawful awarding of tenders by organs of state so as to benefit any family or individual. In this regard the following must be considered:

922.1 Most of Mr Agrizzi's evidence in relation to Mr Smith was corroborated by Mr Smith himself. Mr Agrizzi's evidence that Mr Smith was brought onside and dropped the hostility that was previously shown by him in his capacity as chair of the Portfolio Committee must therefore be taken seriously.

922.2 Mr Smith's main answer to this is that he was unrelenting in his opposition to outsourcing. However, notwithstanding his alleged stance in this regard, the reality is that, during his tenure as chairperson, Bosasa retained 60% of the catering contract (upon its renewal), while its other contracts remained intact, and, of particular importance, the SIU investigation which had earlier formed the subject matter of scrutiny in the Portfolio Committee, ground to a halt.

922.3 The evidence of Mr Frolick's intervention to enable a meeting between Mr Smith and Bosasa representatives was largely common cause, as was the evidence of the subsequent meeting at Parliament (less successful) and in Johannesburg (on the probabilities, more successful). It is odd that the chairman and members of a Portfolio Committee would agree to meet with a stakeholder in Johannesburg in a hotel where that stakeholder had, to the knowledge of the Committee, quite recently been accused of serious corruption. It does not appear to be justified even to have a meeting in a hotel. It is difficult to see why members of the Portfolio Committee would have had to go and meet a stakeholder accused of corruption in a hotel instead of dealing with such stakeholder in an official Portfolio Committee meeting in Cape Town. What legitimate purpose would there have been for members of a Portfolio Committee to meet a company alleged to be engaged in corruption in hotel rooms instead of calling them to a proper Portfolio Committee meeting and questioning them about such allegations.

922.4 Considering the non-cash benefits alone, it is unlikely that an organisation would spend several hundred thousand rand on one person, without expecting something in return.

922.5 Mr Smith conceded that he could not identify a single instance of his having singled Bosasa out for criticism after the meetings with Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi. This too tends to point to a quid pro quo having been provided. In the main, what was expected of Mr Smith by way of a quid pro quo was not to act i.e., not to criticise Bosasa and not to scrutinise their activities or call them to account. It was therefore not difficult for him to respond in the manner expected by Bosasa.

923. In any event, the WhatsApp exchange between Mr Watson and Mr Agrizzi points to active involvement on the part of Mr Smith in the facilitation of the award of tenders. At the same time as the WhatsApp exchange, in late 2016, a tender was advertised for the catering contracts in the DCS. Zach Modise was the Commissioner at the time. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was concerned about the catering tender that Bosasa was trying to retain, that he had received information that Bosasa was the cheapest and should have been awarded all ten management areas but that two areas had been awarded to other companies. At the time, Bosasa only had received contracts for seven of the ten management areas.

924. At least on a balance of probabilities, it may be inferred that Mr Smith provided facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders as contemplated by TOR 1.4. The question then is whether Mr Smith in doing so breached or violated the Constitution or any relevant ethical code or legislation.

925. The offence of corruption requires that Mr Smith must have had the intention of acting in a certain manner in return for the gratification. The gratification must be accepted with a certain aim, which is broadly defined under PRECCA. It includes influencing another person to act in a manner that amounts to the biased performance of any powers or functions arising out of a constitutional, statutory or other legal obligation or that amounts to abuse of a position of authority or amounts to any other unauthorised or improper inducement to do or not to do anything. Based on the evidence before the Commission, read with the presumption contained in section 24(1) of PRECCA, prima facie gratification (in the form of the benefits identified above) was accepted by Mr Smith to achieve one or more of the aims set out in the definition. A reasonably diligent and vigilant person in Mr Smith's position (having the knowledge and experience expected of a member of parliament) would have known or suspected that the benefits that were conferred upon him by Bosasa were unlawful and were given to induce a certain result.

926. It is improbable that Mr Smith did not know that the assistance he received from Bosasa was on a quid pro quo basis because Mr Smith had, by his own admission, been shocked by the amount of corruption that the SIU alleged was associated with BOSASA and its relationship with DCS. When Mr Smith accepted the benefits from Bosasa as described above, he knew that he was receiving them from a company that faced serious allegations of bribery and corruption. Therefore, Mr Smith must have known that these benefits were probably being given to him for corrupt purposes.

927. It is also improbable that Mr Smith intended to pay for the security upgrades at his residence having regard to the following:

927.1 He had not done so for a period of four years

927.2 He was dishonest in a public statement about the security system; and 927.3 Mr Smith admitted that Mr Watson had assisted him in the past and he had no difficulty with such an arrangement, even when he was a Member of Parliament.

928. For the reasons set out above, on a balance of probabilities, Mr Smith came to protect Bosasa pursuant to benefits corruptly given to him by Bosasa and, from the perspective of any prosecution, a prima facie case of corruption under at least sections 3 and 7 of PRECCA has been established.

929. Mr Smith acted in breach of section 40(2) and 195 of the Constitution. He breached the oath sworn by members of Parliament to uphold the Constitution and to perform their work to the best of their ability (read with section 48 of the Constitution). Mr Smith's conduct was also in breach of clauses 4.1.1 to 4.1.5 , 5.2.1, 9.3.6 and 9.3.7 of the code of conduct governing members of the National Assembly.

930. Mr Agrizzi's evidence that Mr Smith was one of the persons who received monthly payments, initially of R45 000 per month and later, R100 000 per month was disputed by Mr Smith. A finding in this regard is not required to bring his conduct within the ambit of TOR 1.4 or for there to be a prima facie case of corruption. His conduct in relation to the benefits admittedly received by him is sufficient to do so. However, the question whether he received such payments is relevant to the factual basis upon which TOR 1.4 is engaged and the basis upon which any referral is made in terms of TOR 7. The following considerations need to be weighed:

    930.1 Mr Agrizzi contradicted himself as to whether it was Mr Smith or Mr Watson that developed an antipathy towards Mr Seopela attending their meetings

    930.2 The extract from Mr Agrizzi's "little black book" received into evidence as an exhibit specifically records amongst other names "Vincent Smith R100,000"

    930.3 There is in Mr Smith's case documentary evidence to support Mr Agrizzi's allegation of receipt of cash payments

    930.4 There is no other written evidence of the cash payments, although this would obviously be the reason to make use of cash payments

    930.5 On the information before the Commission, Mr Agrizzi does not stand to gain anything by making the allegation, whereas Mr Smith benefits from his denial

    930.6 Mr Smith's own evidence corroborated that of Mr Agrizzi in respect of major components of the evidence against Mr Smith, including the security installation, the funding of his daughter's overseas education and the provision of a hired car to his daughter during university vacations; and 930.7 Mr Smith's demonstrable dishonesty in the form of an almost blanket denial of the allegations against him when he made his public statement on 4 September 2018 renders his denial in relation to the cash payments unreliable.

931. In the circumstances and weighing the competing considerations, it may be concluded, at least on a balance of probabilities, that Mr Smith did indeed receive the cash payments testified to by Mr Agrizzi.

Mr Mnikelwa Nxele

932. The evidence before the Commission is that the Regional Commissioner of the DCS in KwaZulu Natal, Mr Nxele, received a monthly payment in exchange for ensuring that undue pressure was placed on Mr Petersen and the DCS to continue the DCS's association with Bosasa.

933. Mr Nxele's name is recorded in the extracts from Mr Agrizzi's black book. Mr Nxele was issued with a notice in terms of Rule 3.3 on 24 January 2019. He has not made an application in terms of Rule 3.4 to cross-examine Mr Agrizzi or present evidence at the Commission. This evidence implicating him in corrupt activities and in failing to discharge his duties as an official of the DCS in good faith is therefore unchallenged. He benefitted personally. His conduct is in breach of section 195 and 217 of the Constitution, section 45 and 57 of the PFMA and section 3 and 4 of PRECCA. This conduct is established on at least a balance of probabilities and at the level of a prima facie case for purposes of any referral for investigation and prosecution. His conduct too falls within the ambit of TOR 1.4.

934. The question of the further steps to be taken in respect of Mr Nxele is dealt with in the discussion under TOR 7 below.

935. There is also evidence of facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders by other government departments to benefit the Watson family, Bosasa and its associated business entities. These allegations of corrupt payments in return for the facilitation of the unlawful awarding of tenders by SOEs or government departments, as contemplated under TOR 1.4, are discussed below.

Contracts with the DOJCD

936. Mr Seopela, whose function Mr Agrizzi described as liaising with potential clients of Bosasa and getting involved with politicians, informed Mr Agrizzi that the DOJCD was looking to investigate the implementation of new security systems, including access control and surveillance equipment. Mr Seopela had told Mr Agrizzi that he was well-connected with high-ranking officials in the NPA and the Hawks and that Bosasa could benefit from his interactions, which went right up to ministerial level.

937. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was instructed by Mr Watson to make cash available to Mr Seopela for purposes of making payments to influential persons.

938. Mr Agrizzi testified that Sondolo IT was awarded the contract with the DOJCD for the installation of access control across courts nationally, that the award of this contract was irregular and that certain officials received payments as lobbying fees or bribes. However, save for Mr Thobane and Ms Nyambuse, no particulars were given as to the identity of these officials.

939. Mr Thobane and Ms Nyambuse were implicated in Mr Agrizzi's evidence as having received bribes. He testified that he had direct evidence of these payments. Ms Nyambuse and Mr Thobane's names appear in Mr Agrizzi's black book. Neither Mr Thobane nor Ms Nyambuse was issued with a Rule 3.3 notice informing them that Mr Agrizzi's evidence implicated them. No adverse findings may therefore be made against them. The matter ought however to be referred to the appropriate authorities for further investigation.

940. Sondolo IT was also appointed to undertake the security upgrades at the SALU premises, rented by the DOJCD, with no tender process having been followed and the consent to their involvement not having been secured from the owner of the building, Billion Group. The Billion Group as owner of the building was responsible for the improvements and preferred to involve their own supplier. Arrangements were then made with Mr Seopela to facilitate the transaction and, later, to secure payment from the Billion Group. Mr Agrizzi testified that he gave Mr Seopela R1.9m in cash, as a fee for arranging the contract. Mr Agrizzi testified that he did not know whether Mr Seopela paid the money over to anyone.

941. Mr Seopela was employed in Consilium as a consultant and was given access to the Bosasa VIP travel account, provided with a company credit and fuel card and access to Blake's Travel. Mr Seopela would also hire cars on the company account.

942. Mr Seopela's stance in response to his being implicated has been dealt with above. The upshot is that the evidence against him stands undisputed. For purposes of TOR 1.4, on a balance of probabilities, and having regard to Bosasa's business model, persons within the DoJ&CD must have facilitated the unlawful award of the tender in return for corrupt payments. Further investigation would be required to identify who they were. For purposes of TOR 1.1, it may be accepted on a balance of probabilities that Mr Seopela influenced the award of the tender by providing inducements or gain.

Contracts with the Department of Education

943. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Mathenjwa facilitated payments for Bheki Gina's sister at the Department of Education to secure the contract for the provision of CCTV and access control systems. On the one hand, Mr Agrizzi testified that approximately R1.25m was paid as bribe money to her, but on the other hand stated that he was "out of the loop" on this tender.

944. Mr Mathenjwa was sent a Rule 3.3 notice on 31 January 2019. Mr Mathenjwa filed an affidavit, dated 6 September 2020, with the Commission in response to a 10(6) directive. In his affidavit, Mr Mathenjwa denies that he approached Mr Agrizzi to solicit work from the Department of Education in the Northern Cape, or to make any bribe in that regard. According to Mr Mathenjwa, Mr Bheki Gina does not have a sister who works at the Department of Education. Mr Mathenjwa denies that there was no tender process for the work undertaken by Sondolo IT for the Department of Education, Northern Cape. Mr Mathenjwa denies having any knowledge of payments being approved for Mr Gina's sister, or that he managed any contract for the Department of Education.

945. In the absence of any particularity of the identity of the person implicated in this evidence, her position at the Department of Education and ability to influence its decision-making in the award of contracts, coupled with Mr Agrizzi's admission that he did not have detailed information on the award of the contract, there is insufficient evidence to make a finding on the lawfulness of the award of the contract or on the conduct of the unidentified person. The evidence is incomplete, and no findings are appropriate.

Contracts with USAASSA

946. The Universal Service Agency and Access of South Africa ("USAASSA") is a schedule 3A SOE. Its existence, functions, duties, and mandate are governed by sections 80 – 91 of the Electronic Communications Act, 36 of 2005. Sondolo IT was interested in a contract that had been awarded to USAASSA to provide iPads for schools in Gauteng.

947. Mr Agrizzi testified that, although the tender was subsequently cancelled or did not perform, an initial amount of R500,000 was paid to Mr Mzazi (director at Sondolo IT) for purposes of illegally paying procurement personnel at USAASSA for portions of the tender to be allocated to Sondolo IT. Mr Agrizzi testified that he was present in the vault when the cash was handed over to Mr Mzazi.

948. Mr Agrizzi also testified that the accounting officer of USAASSA agreed to work together with Bosasa, in return for the illegal payment of money to him, for the extension of existing contracts and other opportunities, during a meeting with Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi stated he did not know what transpired with this contract subsequently.

949. Mr Mzazi failed to respond to the Rule 3.3 notice issued to him, with the consequence that the evidence against him is undisputed. That means that inducement is established at least on a balance of probabilities for purposes of TOR 1.1. However, absent the identification of the recipient or evidence of the conclusion of a contract, it is not possible to establish facilitation for purposes of TOR 1.4.

Contracts with the Department of Transport

950. The evidence presented before the Commission by Mr Agrizzi that payments were made to a certain "Mlungise" at the Department of Transport to secure the award of the contract for fleet management to Kgwerano, and to other officials in that Department to secure the extension of the contract, is dealt with above in discussing TOR 1.1.

951. From the perspective of TOR 1.4, there is a lack of evidence about the identity of the persons alleged to have received corrupt payments from either Mr Leshabane or Mr Seopela and therefore of persons responsible for facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders. Further investigation would be required to ascertain their identities.

Contracts with the Department of Health in the Mpumalanga Province

952. Mr Agrizzi's evidence in this regard has been dealt with above for purposes of TOR 1.1.

953. From the perspective of TOR 1.4, Mr Agrizzi's evidence was corroborated by Mr Vorster who testified that the cost of servicing Mr Netshishivhe's vehicle was booked against one of the Bosasa vehicles. Bosasa was awarded the contract. This is evidence of the facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders. In the absence of Mr Netshishivhe having been issued with a Rule 3.3 notice, no negative finding may be made against him.

Contracts with Randfontein Local Municipality

954. Mr Agrizzi testified that, although he had been opposed to it, an unnamed official at the municipality facilitated the award of the tender for the provision of CCTV access control systems to Sondolo IT in return for a proportion of the value of the contract being paid to him and the Dahua video surveillance system being installed at his residence. Mr Agrizzi also purported to provide the Commission's investigators with the home address of the implicated official, maintaining that one could still see the Dahua System installed at the house.

955. At the same time as dealing with this testimony, Mr Agrizzi testified that an employee of Sondolo IT, Riaan van der Merwe, approached him in March 2017 to arrange a meeting between the local CEO of Dahua, Mr Kwon, and Mr Andile Ramaphosa. Dahua was a Chinese company that manufactured these surveillance systems and was growing rapidly. Mr Agrizzi did not have faith in its products. He set up the meeting but did not attend it himself.

956. Mr Andile Ramaphosa filed an affidavit in response to a Rule 3.3 notice in which he denied:

    956.1 That the evidence of Mr Agrizzi implicated him in any corrupt or otherwise unlawful conduct; and 956.2 Ever having been contacted by Mr Agrizzi in relation to or having attended any such meeting.

957. Mr Andile Ramaphosa is correct on the first point and for that reason alone, no finding or referral can be made against him on this score. There are the following additional difficulties in relation to this evidence:

    957.1 No particulars are provided on the identity of the municipal official or his scope of influence within the municipality. It would however be possible to trace him using the address provided by Mr Agrizzi if that information turns out to be correct.

    957.2 Mr Agrizzi testified that there were numerous irregularities committed at the municipality but did not provide any detail of these alleged irregularities.

    957.3 The incident occurred after Mr Agrizzi departed from Bosasa and his version is based on the hearsay evidence of an unidentified whistle-blower.

958. In the circumstances, it would not be appropriate to draw a conclusion as to whether or not there was facilitation as contemplated in TOR 1.4 on the part of any official of the Randfontein-Mogale City Municipality.

959. A finding against Mr Andile Ramaphosa on this aspect of Mr Agrizzi's evidence would not be justified, given that no conduct falling within the TORs is alleged against him.

Contracts with the Department of Social Development in the North West province

960. Mr Agrizzi testified that Ms Kgasi and Ms Mogale, officials at the North West Department of Social Services, agreed on a fictitious arrangement with Bosasa as a mechanism to generate money for electioneering purposes for the ANC. Invoices were raised by Bosasa for software that was never provided to the department, because the department already had it, or for software that was provided but which had no inherent value and had therefore not been paid for by Bosasa. Bosasa was paid R4.5 m by the department through this arrangement. The money was allegedly then handed back to be used for electioneering purposes. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Dlamini would raise an invoice for the software.

961. Ms Kgasi and Ms Mogale were both issued with Rule 3.3 notices but failed to respond to them. The evidence against them is therefore uncontested by them. However, the evidence against them is, to some extent, contested by Mr Dlamini. Mr Dlamini filed an affidavit, dated 14 September 2020, in response to a 10(6) directive, in which he denied any knowledge of the inflation of invoices or drawing of cash for purposes of bribery or ever taking any cash to or from anyone. Mr Dlamini avers that it could only have been Mr Agrizzi that was responsible for inflated invoices or bribing of officials. Only he had the authority to negotiate, sign for or authorise the costing in respect of the tendering for services in any Bosasa company. According to Mr Dlamini, as far as the information technology system was concerned, the Department of Social Development had purchased software and therefore owned it.

962. There is no suggestion by Mr Agrizzi that the conduct involved the unlawful awarding of tenders. The question therefore arises whether any of the terms of reference are engaged by the conduct alleged by Mr Agrizzi on the part of the officials in question. Clearly, if the alleged transaction had not been a sham one, and software was to be procured by the DSD, a tender process would have to have been followed. It would be absurd if corruption involving the abuse of procurement processes fell outside the TOR because the procurement laws were disregarded to such a flagrant degree. If the word “tenders” is interpreted to include contracts that ordinarily flow from a tender process, then the conduct complained of here is included within TOR 1.4 (and TOR 1.9), even if the contract entered into is a sham for the misappropriation of public funds. Thus, on a purposive interpretation of TOR 1.4, the conduct, from the perspective of the officials involved, constitutes facilitation of the unlawful awarding of tenders.

963. As against the two officials, facilitation of the kind contemplated by TOR 1.4 is established at the level of reasonable grounds for a suspicion, for the reasons already given. The question then is whether the conduct of the officials in question was in breach or violation of the Constitution, any ethical code or legislation. Clearly the procurement requirements of section 217 of the Constitution would have been breached if the conduct of which they are suspected were proven. In addition, a sham contract for the provision of software concluded to generate money, whatever its intended use, falls within the definition of corruption.

964. Ms Kgasi and Ms Mogale’s conduct may also be in breach of the following obligations resting on department officials in terms of the PFMA:

    964.1 The responsibility for the effective, efficient, economical and transparent use of financial and other resources within their area of responsibility

    964.2 The obligation to take effective and appropriate steps to prevent irregular, fruitless and wasteful expenditure; and

    964.3 The obligation to comply with the provisions of the PFMA.

965. In the light of Ms Kgasi and Ms Mogale’s failure to respond to Rule 3.3 notices and their failure to make an application in terms of Rule 3.4, the evidence before the Commission is that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that their conduct fell within the ambit of TOR 1.4. Their conduct should be subject to further investigation.

Members of the National Executive

Thabang Makwetla

966. Mr le Roux testified that Bosasa provided former Deputy Minister for Correctional Services Mr Thabang Makwetla, with a security installation and maintenance services to the value of more than R308,754.25. The installation was on the instruction of Mr Watson. Mr Agrizzi was not aware of the installation.

967. A Rule 3.3 notice was issued to Deputy Minister Makwetla on 18 March 2019. Mr Makwetla testified before the Commission on 19 March and 5 July 2021.

968. Mr Makwetla did not dispute that Bosasa had installed a security system at his residence while he was the Deputy Minister of the Department. Initially Mr Makwetla testified that he did not find it strange that Bosasa would provide him with a security installation in circumstances where it had a contract with the Department and had requested his intervention on its behalf regarding its rates in terms of its contract. Mr Makwetla justified his response on the basis that he had requested a service from Bosasa that he was going to pay for. He said that, as a result, there was no conflict of interest. He also testified that Mr Watson had requested his assistance on Bosasa’s contract rates before he had raised his problem with his home security with Mr Watson.

969. Mr Makwetla testified that at the time when Mr Watson advised him that he would not charge Mr Makwetla for the work, he was shocked because he thought that Mr Watson would appreciate that he could not make such an offer because Bosasa was doing business with the Department at the time. Mr Makwetla said that he had explained this to Mr Watson. At the time, Mr Makwetla was also alive to the previous negative reports in the media concerning Bosasa. According to Mr Makwetla, he was frustrated and worried and was caught in “an unfortunate situation” where a comrade said he would do him a favour that he rejected, and that Mr Watson did not want to understand his material conflict of interest.

970. At the end of his evidence, Mr Makwetla confirmed that in hindsight what transpired was regrettable. He also admitted that he knows now that doing so was a conflict of interest but that at the time, he did not know that a situation such as this would arise.

971. Mr Makwetla confirmed that he raised the matter regarding Bosasa's rates under its contract with the accountant general of the Department. He claimed not to see any difficulty or conflict of interest in him personally interfering in contractual affairs of the Department or that it may have amounted to the improper influence of a price to be agreed upon.

972. Under re-examination, Mr Makwetla did not dispute any material fact concerning the installation of the security system at his residence. He disputed the number of technicians that attended at his residence, the labour cost, and the number of days it took to complete the installation.

973. Mr Makwetla's evidence was problematic in the following respects:

973.1 Whilst one could perhaps understand the topic of a burglary at his private home might arise during a discussion about the previous festive season, it is strange that this would not come at the beginning of an official meeting during the exchange of pleasantries before the official business of the day came under discussion.

973.2 The fact that the topic was raised following Mr Watson's request for a change in rates under the contract, seems to make matters worse, not better for Mr Makwetla. Hard on the heels of Mr Watson's request for an increase in rates came the revelation that Mr Makwetla was struggling to find a service provider for an electric fence.

973.3 Mr Makwetla's protestation that the conflict of interest was not apparent to him because he said that he was going to pay for the service is unconvincing. The conflict was a glaring one. He was getting involved in private contractual arrangements with a company that was doing business with his department in circumstances where Mr Watson was seeking an increase in rates outside of any formal process for achieving this. If Mr Makwetla's evidence that he saw no conflict of interest in this situation is true, then, quite frankly, that is scary. Mr Makwetla is a Deputy Minister. Not only that, previously he was the Premier of Mpumalanga Province. What guidance would he have given to his Members of the Executive Council in the Province if he, as Premier, did not know that a situation such as this constituted a conflict of interest? Mr Makwetla has had about five years to reflect on this incident since it occurred. Yet, when he gave evidence before the Commission in March 2021, he still said that he saw no conflict of interest in this scenario. If this is true, it means that he should not be occupying such a senior position in government. It means that in the Department in relation to which he is Deputy Minister, he would advise the DG and others that there is no conflict.

973.4 It is also strange that he did not call an immediate halt to the installation when he returned from Cape Town to his residence and purportedly found that the installation had proceeded to an advanced stage before any quotation had been provided; instead, he had arranged for his son to give access to the inside of the house for the installation to be completed.

973.5 Mr Makwetla's explanation for his initial inaction on the basis that he did not wish to be seen to be "playing to the gallery and wanting to make [himself], you know, a better more disciplined person in terms of, you know, appearance, you, to procedure", is difficult to comprehend.

973.6 His explanation of the failure to meet then President Zuma because of a stance he adopted in relation to the MKMVA is both difficult to comprehend and unconvincing.

973.7 His evidence was unconvincing where he acknowledged knowing about reports about unethical conduct on the part of Bosasa in 2009, even down to the detail of which newspaper they appeared in and that it was "massive", yet, when asked by the Chairperson why he therefore did not completely dissociate himself from Bosasa, claimed that:

> I did not even technically understand exactly what were they saying was the problem with this BOSASA ... all I know is that there was reports that were negative at some point and that is where it ends.

973.8 When he purportedly sought to address the problem when knowledge of the installation became public, he only paid for what he claimed to have asked for but did not suggest that he tendered the return of the balance of the installation that he had received for free.

974. In the circumstances, Mr Makwetla's version suggesting innocent receipt does not withstand scrutiny and must be rejected. Mr Makwetla's supposed resolve to take the matter up with Mr Zuma and, later, President Ramaphosa does not detract from the fact that he had received a form of gratification from Bosasa in order to act or to exert influence on another to act and that amounts to the illegal or biased performance of a duty or amounts to the abuse of a position of authority or is designed to achieve an unjustified result. Mr Makwetla also did not disclose the outcome of his meeting with President Ramaphosa.

975. Mr Makwetla testified that Bosasa eventually provided him with an invoice for the security installation in the amount of R90,000 inclusive of VAT. The invoice was provided after the security installation by Bosasa had been made public. Mr Makwetla paid R25,000 for the security upgrades as he resolved to only pay for the items that he had requested be installed. The amount paid by Mr Makwetla is substantially below the amount quoted by Bosasa and that calculated by Mr le Roux.

976. Mr Makwetla was (and still is at the time of preparing this report) subject to the Constitution and his oath of office under the Constitution.

977. In terms of section 96 of the Constitution, a deputy minister may not expose him/herself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between his official responsibilities and his private interests. Further, he must act in accordance with a code of ethics prescribed by national legislation, i.e., the Executive Members' Ethics Act and the Executive Ethics Code published in terms of section 2 of that Act.

978. In terms of the Executive Ethics Code, Mr Makwetla was not permitted to:

978.1 Use his position or any information entrusted to him, to enrich himself or improperly benefit any other person

978.2 Expose himself to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between his official responsibilities and his financial and/or personal interests; or

978.3 Solicit or accept a gift or benefit which (i) is in return for any benefit received in his official capacity; (ii) constitutes improper influence of him; or (iii) constitutes an attempt to influence him in the performance of his duties.

979. In respect of the benefits conferred upon him by Bosasa he was in breach of his constitutional, legislative and ethical duties, as contemplated in TOR 1.4.

980. Mr Makwetla was also under a duty not to solicit or accept a gift or benefit in return for any benefit given in an official capacity and the duty to seek permission to receive and to disclose a gift worth more than R1 000. Mr Makwetla failed to do so.

981. Even though Mr Makwetla's conduct in discussing the rates in terms of the Bosasa contract with the accountant general of the Department was not explored further during Mr Makwetla's evidence, the evidence establishes a prima facie case of corruption in terms of sections 3 and 4 of PRECCA against Mr Makwetla in respect of whom the institution of criminal charges and prosecution should be considered.

982. If Mr Makwetla were to be prosecuted for corruption under PRECCA, the presumption in section 24(1) would come into play, to the extent that there was no lawful authority or excuse apparent or suggested by Mr Makwetla for his receipt of the gratification conferred upon him by Bosasa. Unless he is able in criminal proceedings to introduce evidence to establish a reasonable doubt in this regard, the evidence of the benefits conferred upon him will be deemed by Section 24(1) to constitute sufficient evidence that the necessary quid pro quo was provided by him.

Former Minister Ngconde Balfour

983. Although Mr Bloem testified that Mr Balfour was aware of the Portfolio Committee's concerns with the catering contract and that Mr Balfour protected Mr Mti, there is no evidence that former Minister Balfour received any benefit from Bosasa in return for facilitating the award of unlawful contracts by the DCS. Mr Agrizzi testified that Mr Balfour did not receive any benefits.

984. It is significant, however, that Mr Bloem testified that both he and, later, Ms Vytjie Mentor raised their concerns personally with Mr Balfour on more than one occasion. When asked by the Chairperson whether he was able to give some factual basis for his statement that Mr Mti enjoyed the protection and support of Mr Balfour, Mr Bloem responded:

> Chairperson many a times when both of them appeared before the Portfolio Committee and we ask difficult questions to the Department, Mr Mti or Gillingham the Minister will interject and say he will answer such questions. When we - I meet with him personally one by one he will tell me that no Comrade Bloem you know this comrade is an experienced comrade. We must not harass this comrade. Let us treat him well. That is my conclusion. That is my observation. That is why I am saying that Chairperson (sic).

985. A Rule 3.3 notice was issued to Mr Balfour on 8 February 2019. He has failed to respond to the allegations made against him and the evidence before the Commission is therefore undisputed. Considering that Mr Agrizzi was clear that Mr Balfour did not receive corrupt payments and that the above extract from the evidence of Mr Bloem is insufficient, on any of the relevant standards of proof, to conclude that there was knowing facilitation of the award of unlawful tenders, the evidence of Mr Bloem does not provide a sufficient basis for any negative finding in respect of Mr Balfour.

Former President Jacob Zuma

986. Mr Zuma is the most senior public office bearer that Bosasa is alleged to have attempted to influence. Conduct falling within the Commission's TORs involving Mr Zuma is alleged to have occurred during his tenure as President of the Republic of South Africa.

987. Mr Zuma was issued with a notice in terms of Rule 3.3 on 30 January 2019. On 30 April 2019, Mr Zuma was invited to appear before the Commission from 15 to 19 July 2020. The purpose of this appearance was to address the evidence of witnesses who had implicated him and to answer questions from the Commission. Mr Zuma thereafter appeared at the Commission and testified for two and half days before declining to answer questions and objecting to being questioned in a manner that he said amounted to cross-examination. He then indicated that he would no longer participate in the proceedings of the Commission.

988. Following an agreement between the evidence leaders and Mr Zuma, he was furnished with a letter on 30 July 2019 outlining particular "areas of interest" in respect of which a response was required by affidavit. Mr Zuma did not meet the deadline for submitting his affidavit. Therefore, in December 2019, the Commission's legal team took a decision to invoke the Commission's powers of compulsion to force Mr Zuma to attend and testify. The Commission's secretary was later authorised to issue summons which was issued on 20 October 2021. The summons required Mr Zuma to appear before the Commission from 16 to 20 November 2020.

989. On 16 November 2020, Mr Zuma attended before the Commission, but his representative moved an application for the Chairperson's recusal. On 19 November 2020, the Chairperson issued his ruling dismissing the application for recusal. Following the ruling, Mr Zuma left the hearing without being excused. The Chairperson instructed the secretary to lay a criminal charge against Mr Zuma for this conduct and to launch urgent proceedings in the Constitutional Court.

990. The Constitutional Court issued an order in terms of which Mr Zuma was ordered to obey all summonses and directives lawfully issued by the Commission and appear and give evidence before the Commission on dates determined by it. The Court's order further declared that Mr Zuma did not have a right to remain silent in the proceedings before the Commission, although he was entitled to all privileges under section 3(4) of the Commissions Act, including the privilege against self-incrimination.

991. In its judgment Secretary of the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into Allegations of State Capture, Corruption and Fraud in the Public Sector including Organs of State v Zuma and Others (CCT 52/21) [2021], the Constitutional Court held that a witness has an obligation to appear before the Commission on receipt of a duly issued summons and remain in attendance until the proceedings are concluded or the witness is excused by the Chairperson. A breach of this duty constitutes an offence under section 6 of the Commissions Act.

992. In a public statement issued after judgment was handed down by the Constitutional Court, Mr Zuma said:

> I. . . state in advance that the commission into allegations of state capture can expect no further cooperation from me in any of their processes going forward. If this stance is considered to be a violation of their law, then let their law take its course.
> In the circumstances, I am left with no other alternative but to be defiant against injustice as I did against the apartheid government. I am again prepared to go to prison to defend the Constitutional rights that I personally fought for.

993. The next date upon which Mr Zuma was required to attend the proceedings of the Commission was Monday 15 February 2021. Following similar public statements, his attorneys addressed a letter to the Commission shortly before the hearing was due to commence confirming that he was unwilling to attend.

994. Mr Zuma's unwillingness to attend at the Commission precipitated an urgent application by the Secretary of the Commission for direct access to the Constitutional Court seeking an order declaring him to be in contempt of court and sentencing him to a period of two years' imprisonment. This application was not opposed by Mr Zuma.

995. The majority of the Constitutional Court found that Mr Zuma was in contempt of court in that (i) there was an order of the Constitutional Court; (ii) which was served on Mr Zuma; (iii) Mr Zuma had subsequently failed to comply with the order by failing to depose to affidavits or appear and give evidence before the Commission; and (iv) Mr Zuma had failed to present evidence to establish a reasonable doubt that his non-compliance was wilful and mala fide. In respect of the sentence that should be applied against Mr Zuma, the Constitutional Court held:

> [128] Quantifying Mr Zuma's egregious conduct is an impossible task. So, I am compelled to ask the question: what will it take for the punishment imposed on Mr Zuma to vindicate this Court's authority and the Rule of law? In other words, the focus must be on what kind of sentence will demonstrate that orders made by a court must be obeyed and, to Mr Zuma, that his contempt and contumacy is rebukeable in the strongest sense. With this in mind then, I order an unsuspended sentence of imprisonment of 15 months. I do so in the knowledge that this cannot properly capture the damage that Mr Zuma has done to the dignity and integrity of the judicial system of a democratic and constitutional nation. He owes this sentence in respect of violating not only this Court, nor even just the sanctity of the Judiciary, but to the nation he once promised to lead and to the Constitution he once vowed to uphold.

996. Following the "Contempt Judgment", Mr Zuma began serving his 15-month jail sentence for contempt of court. He also applied for rescission of the Contempt Judgment. At the heart of the application was the allegation the order of the Court was erroneously granted in Mr Zuma's absence. The application was characterised by most of the Court as "nothing more than an attempt to re-open the contempt proceedings on the merits" and that Mr Zuma had not met the requirements of rescission either in terms of the Court's Rules or at common law. Most of the Court concluded that it would be contrary to the interests of justice to expand the legal grounds of rescission or reconsider its earlier judgment. The rescission application was therefore dismissed with costs.

997. Mr Zuma has at the time of writing been granted medical parole. He has not presented evidence before the Commission. The consequence of his stance is that the evidence before the Commission implicating him remains undisputed.

998. The evidence implicating Mr Zuma is summarised below. A significant portion of the evidence is hearsay, but it is admissible in the Commission's proceedings. The evidence includes the following:

998.1 Mr Watson was introduced to Mr Zuma during 2009 by Ms Zukiswa Madonga, when he was president of the ANC, but not of the Republic. This took place at the Mr Zuma's home at Forest Town.

998.2 Later a second introduction to Mr Zuma was brought about by Ms Dudu Myeni, which Mr Agrizzi said resulted in several further meetings with former President Zuma at Nkandla.

998.3 Mr Watson openly used to tell Mr Agrizzi and others that he paid Ms Myeni R300,000 a month for the benefit of the Jacob G Zuma Foundation. Mr Agrizzi witnessed these payments being delivered to Ms Myeni on three occasions; twice delivered by Mr Watson and once delivered by Mr Mathenjwa.

998.4 One of the meetings following the second introduction was when Mr Watson and Mr Gumede met Mr Zuma at Nkandla. According to Mr Watson and Mr Gumede, at the meeting Mr Watson asked Mr Zuma to call Mr Dramat to tell him to shut down the Hawks investigation into Bosasa. Mr Watson informed Mr Agrizzi that at the meeting a "bag of R300 000 cash" was given to Mr Zuma. Mr Watson also wished to check with Mr Zuma at the meeting that Ms Myeni was "not taking a haircut of the money". Apparently, Mr Zuma said that she was not.

998.5 Mr Agrizzi attached to his affidavit a recording of a subsequent Bosasa EXCO meeting, in which Mr Gumede talks about this meeting that he and Mr Watson had held with Mr Zuma.

998.6 Mr Agrizzi testified that he was also present at a meeting at Mr Mti's house during which Mr Watson spoke to Mr Zuma on the telephone and then proceeded to hand the telephone to Mr Mti saying, "your boss wants to speak to you".

998.7 There was testimony that Mr Zuma visited Bosasa facilities on at least two occasions:

998.7.1 Mr Zuma visited the Bosasa office park with Ms Myeni and the then Minister of Health, spending some 4½ hours there on a Saturday morning; and 998.7.2 Mr Van Tonder recalled being formally introduced to Mr Zuma during a visit to the prawn production facility in Krugersdorp using artificial sea water operated by the Bosasa subsidiary, Bioorganics (Pty) Ltd.

998.8 Ms Myeni often called upon Mr Watson to arrange high-end functions for Mr Zuma including an occasion when Bosasa catered for a birthday dinner for him at short notice. Mr Agrizzi estimated the cost of these functions at approximately R3.5 million per year. These were treated as corporate social investment payments in the company's financial records. Ms Myeni confirmed Bosasa's involvement in arranging and funding birthday celebrations for Mr Zuma. Mr Agrizzi also attached to his affidavit a thank you letter from Ms Myeni in respect of the birthday celebrations.

998.9 Ms Myeni testified that donations from Bosasa for purposes of the Jacob G Zuma Foundation's events for the birthday of Mr Zuma, were deposited electronically to the relevant service providers after the Foundation had indicated to Bosasa what it would like to see done for the event.

998.10 On one evening Mr Agrizzi received a call from Mr Watson instructing him to drive to Café Mozart where he dealt with "Fritz" and designed a cake for then Mr Zuma's 72nd birthday. A photograph of the cake forms an annexure to Mr Agrizzi's statement. Although not clearly visible from the photograph, Mr Agrizzi was able to point out the Bosasa logo on the cake.

998.11 In around May/June 2016, Ms Myeni facilitated a meeting between then Mr Zuma, Mr Watson, Mr Philip O'Quigley, international chairman of the Falcon Oil and Gas Group, and Ms Liezl Oberholzer of the same company, to seek the President's assistance in advising the then Minster of Minerals and Energy, Mr Ngoako Ramatlhodi, to make certain amendments to what were considered to be restrictive regulations applicable to the oil and gas industry. Although Mr Agrizzi himself did not attend the meeting, he was informed about it in independent accounts by Mr Watson, Mr Radhakrishna and Ms Oberholzer.

998.12 Following the meeting, the Minister of Minerals and Energy's legal advisors were instructed to meet with Ms Oberholzer to make the necessary amendments to the regulations. Mr Agrizzi was uncertain if such amendments were affected.

998.13 Ms Myeni, whilst denying that she had influence in respect of the issue pertaining to the oil and gas regulations, which pertained to amendments to certain regulations, which were required to facilitate fracking in the Karoo, admitted that she was party to a meeting that took place with then Mr Zuma at Nkandla in this regard.

999. The following observations are made regarding this evidence:

999.1 Whilst a significant part of the evidence is hearsay, it enjoys a level of corroboration in important respects.

999.2 The manifestly generous expenditure by Bosasa on Mr Zuma's birthday parties was confirmed in oral evidence by Ms Myeni and also evidenced by her thank you letter and the photographs attached to Mr Agrizzi's affidavit, including the photographs of the birthday cake with the Bosasa logo.

999.3 Whilst Ms Myeni did not confirm the detail of the meeting with Mr O'Quigley and Ms Oberholzer, the fact that the meeting took place at Nkandla is confirmed by her.

999.4 Ms Myeni 's email to Ms Oberholzer dated 20 July 2014 put up by Ms Oberholzer as an annexure to her affidavit is also corroborative evidence of Ms Myeni having arranged for the meeting to take place.

999.5 The recording of the Bosasa exco meeting arranged by Mr Gumede, is also corroborative evidence that a meeting with then Mr Zuma had taken place and further that the President had undertaken to help by making calls to two persons.

999.6 To the extent that the evidence includes hearsay, it is admissible in the Commission's proceedings for the reasons already given. Mr Zuma had every opportunity to come forward and dispute the evidence. He failed to do so.

999.7 There were aspects of Mr Agrizzi's evidence that may be criticised:

999.7.1 For example, it was not entirely clear whether the R300,000 monthly payments were, in truth, originally intended for the Foundation, or whether this was simply a guise for payments directly to Mr Zuma. Mr Agrizzi was clear, though, that his suspicion was that they were being applied by Mr Zuma for his personal use.

999.7.2 It may well be that the frequency of the meetings at Nkandla was exaggerated because the evidence that emerged focussed on two meetings at Nkandla.

999.7.3 There is no concrete evidence of any facilitation of the award of any unlawful tender or amendment of any regulations emanating from the President's meeting with Mr Watson, Mr O'Quigley and Ms Oberholzer.

999.8 TOR 1.4, part of terms of reference issued specifically requires the enquiry to focus on the holder of the office of the President and whether he facilitated the unlawful awarding of tenders. In those circumstances, given that South Africa is a constitutional democracy in which accountability and transparency are recognised as basic values of public administration, one would have expected the President to come forward voluntarily to provide a full accounting of all his dealings with Mr Watson and Bosasa.

1000. The upshot of the giving of the evidence by the witnesses referred to, particularly that of Mr Agrizzi, along with the failure by the former President Zuma to rebut it, is that the only version available to the Commission as to what transpired is that which is summarised above.

1001. In the circumstances, there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that these events took place. Even if the evidence of the R300 000 payments were to be ignored, there is clear and convincing, non-hearsay evidence, confirmed by Ms Myeni, that Mr Zuma received the benefit of lavish spending by Bosasa on his birthday functions. That on its own required Mr Zuma to come forward and explain publicly and on oath how that spending was justified, how it was dealt with in terms of the Executive Ethics Code and that it was not reciprocated with any form of quid pro quo. His failure to do so warrants an adverse inference.

Application to the terms of reference

1002. The abovementioned evidence must then be considered against the terms of reference, primarily those in TOR 1.4. As pointed out above, the range of potential facilitators contemplated by TOR 1.4 includes "the President".

1003. There is no evidence to suggest direct facilitation by Mr Zuma of the unlawful award of any of the tenders discussed above to Bosasa. Nor is there any evidence of his having facilitated the award of any other tenders. However, it is clear on a conspectus of the evidence that it was crucial for Bosasa's ability to retain its lucrative contracts and its continued ability to secure tender awards in its favour, that the criminal investigations against Bosasa should be brought to a halt. It is also clear that the achievement of this goal would be facilitated by the provision to Bosasa's leadership of confidential information about the investigation. This would mean that they could prepare to respond in Bosasa's best interests and those of its leadership.

1004. Both Mr Agrizzi's evidence and the recording of the Exco meeting arranged by Mr Gumede, confirm that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that then Mr Zuma assisted Bosasa on this score. The relevant part of the transcript of the recording of the meeting reads as follows:

> [part of the transcript is marked as inaudible and then appears what follows] ... go and see the old man, the president, on this matter, when this matter was starting to brew again. We went to see him and he told me to say (sic), he was going to Russia, I remember when we had a chat with him he said, no, before I go, I will phone the two people, and we didn't phone them, because we got feedback and that's the reason why. Then the next thing, the guy from the Hawks, he even showed us, the meeting we were having, every month you were having a meeting, where he decides all those things. It's confidential information he showed us.

1005. The transcript of this recording goes on to refer to Mr Watson and Mr Gumede. Whilst Mr Gumede's words do not present a model of clarity (enhancing the probability that it is a genuine recording), they draw a clear causal link ("the next thing") between the President's undertaking to "phone the two people" and the provision by a member of the Hawks of "confidential information". From the discussion that followed, the confidential information, in the form of minutes, some of which Mr Gumede was able to "take . . . on my phone" provided inside information on what was developing in relation to the investigation and who specifically was envisaged would be charged. He also confirms that "I showed him [Mr Agrizzi] the minutes." Mr Gumede also refers to Mr Agrizzi's disappointment because "Gavin did not appear on the list of suspects."

1006. The probability of Mr Zuma having played a role in securing the disclosure of confidential information in the hands of the prosecuting authorities is enhanced by the fact that Mr Zuma's close associate, Ms Myeni, was also involved, providing confidential information emanating from the prosecuting authorities to Bosasa, as discussed in Part H and further analysed below.

1007. The Supreme Court of Appeal has recognised that the provision of confidential information in the hands of police pertaining to investigations into criminal conduct, constitutes a quid pro quo for purposes of the crime of corrupt activities relating to public officers in section 4(1)(a)(i)(bb) of PRECCA. That provision reads in relevant part -

> Any public officer who, directly or indirectly, accepts or agrees to or offers to accept any gratification from any other person . . . in order to act, personally or by influencing another person to act, in a manner . . . that amounts to the . . . misuse or selling of information or material acquired in the course of the exercise, carrying out or performance of any powers, duties or functions arising out of a constitutional, statutory, contractual or any other legal obligation.

1008. What can also not be ignored is the fact that there was a concrete result. The investigation and prosecution were, indeed, successfully brought to a halt. Again, Mr Zuma having failed to appear before the Commission and provide a full account, there are reasonable grounds to suspect that he was instrumental in preventing the investigation and prosecution from proceeding.

1009. That would certainly constitute the facilitation of the unlawful award of tenders by Organs of State. By playing a role in inhibiting a prosecution in respect of unlawful tenders already awarded, Mr Zuma would have both:

1009.1 Prevented, or assisted in preventing, the setting aside of the contracts flowing from the unlawful tender awards; and

1009.2 Enabled Bosasa to keep an ostensibly clean record, which would, in turn, have facilitated the further unlawful award of tenders from organs of State and SOEs.

1010. It follows ineluctably from the foregoing analysis that there are reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr Zuma provided the facilitation to benefit a corporate entity doing business with government and Organs of State, namely Bosasa; and to benefit himself and his Foundation as the recipients of Bosasa's material and monetary largesse.

1011. It is so that there was no evidence that the meeting with Mr Watson, Mr O'Quigley and Ms Oberholzer generated any concrete facilitation of unlawful tender awards or the amendment of any regulations. Nevertheless, it does serve as evidence of Mr Watson having developed, through Bosasa's spending on Mr Zuma, a relationship where he had easy access to the President and the ability to influence his decision-making.

1012. The question then is whether the conduct suspected of the Mr Zuma in facilitating the unlawful award of tenders in the manner described above, was in breach or violation of the Constitution, any ethical code or legislation.

1013. A President has the powers entrusted by the Constitution and legislation, including those necessary to perform the functions of Head of State and Head of the National Executive. Central to the President's duties is the obligation to uphold, defend and respect the Constitution as the supreme law of the country, and to promote the unity of the nation and advance the country.

1014. Section 96 (2) (b) of the Constitution provides that members of Cabinet (which includes the President) may not expose themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and their private interests. In addition, members of Cabinet, including the President, may not use their positions or any information entrusted to them, to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person.

1015. Section 96 (1) of the Constitution enjoins the President, as a member of Cabinet, to act in accordance with a code of ethics prescribed by national legislation. The national legislation and code of ethics contemplated in section 96(1) are, respectively, the Executive Members' Ethics Act and the Executive Ethics Code.

1016. Section 2(1) of the Executive Members' Ethics Act provides as follows:

> The President must, after consultation with Parliament, by proclamation in the Gazette, publish a code of ethics prescribing standards and Rules aimed at promoting open, democratic and accountable government and with which Cabinet members, Deputy Ministers and MECs must comply in performing their official responsibilities.

1017. The Executive Ethics Code was published in terms of this subsection and prescribes that member may not use their position or any information entrusted to them, to enrich themselves or improperly benefit any other person; nor may they expose themselves to any situation involving the risk of a conflict between their official responsibilities and their financial and/or personal interests.

1018. It follows from this that there are reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr Zuma's conduct was in breach of his obligations as President under the Constitution, in breach of his obligations under the Executive Ethics Code and in breach of legislation. Having regard to the nature of the relationship between Mr Zuma and Bosasa, as revealed by the evidence, Mr Zuma placed himself in a conflict of interest situation. In those circumstances there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that there was conduct on the part of Mr Zuma that falls within the ambit of TOR 1.4.

1019. With reference to TOR 1.1, Bosasa and its leadership clearly provided inducements and gain to Mr Zuma, aimed at gaining influence over him. The evidence in that regard is established at least on a balance of probabilities. Accordingly, based on the evidence presented in relation to Mr Zuma, there was also conduct falling within TOR 1.1.

1020. In the absence of any evidence from former President Zuma rebutting the evidence placed before the Commission, there is also a reasonable prospect that further investigation will uncover a prima facie case against Mr Zuma, at least on a charge of corruption in terms of section 3 of PRECCA, considering the effect of the presumption in section 24(1) of that Act. The presumption is relevant because of the absence of any lawful authority or excuse on the part of Mr Zuma placed before the Commission for the gratification bestowed upon him by Bosasa, particularly when regard is had to the fact that the evidence placed before the Commission reveals that BOSASA was engaged in massive corruption in relation to tenders and contracts with government departments and organs of state.
