REPORT ON THE EXIT POLL CONDUCTED FOR THE INDEPENDENT ELECTORAL COMMISSION DURING
THE ELECTION OF 14TH APRIL 2004

APRIL 2004

Introduction

The Independent Electoral Commission (IEC) requested the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) on the 26th March to conduct an exit poll of voters as they emerged from voting stations on Election Day, 14th April 2004. The intention of the poll was to determine the operational efficiency of the IEC. The HSRC then approached Markinor to handle the survey logistics, in view of its capacity to mobilise a large fieldwork team at short notice.

The study method comprised brief (5-minute) interviews with 50 to 70 randomly selected voters exiting from 200 randomly selected voting stations. Voters were asked eleven questions pertaining to their experiences on Election Day. The questions included the distance travelled to the voting station, means of transport utilised, time spent in the voting queue, perception of IEC officials' competence, and perception of the freeness and fairness of the election.

Research Methodology

In order to select a random sample of 200 voting stations at which voters would be interviewed, two factors were taken into account. These were the national distribution of registered voters, and the absolute number of registrations in each of the nine provinces.

The selected sample was directly proportional to the provincial distribution of registered voters, with three exceptions. The first exception was in the case of the Northern Cape, where a proportional sample of only four voting stations would have been inadequate to make any provincial generalisations. The sample was thus increased to a disproportionately large ten voting stations. This would generate a potential 700 interviews. The data gathered was down-weighted for the purposes of the analysis in this report.

The second and third exceptions were Gauteng and KwaZulu-Natal, where 22,5% and 18,5% of registered voters were located. For these two provinces, the proportional 45 and 37 out of the 200 sampled voting stations were each reduced by three, to 42 and 34 respectively. This accounted for the six added to the Northern Cape and kept the total voting station sample at 200 (see Appendix 1). Data from Gauteng and KwaZulu-Natal were up-weighted in the analysis.

The IEC had designated 16990 voting stations across the country. The sample of 200 was thus selected randomly within each province, thus allocating a potential total of 14000 questionnaires as indicated in Table 2.

Table 2: Provincial sample of voting stations and questionnaires

Province	GT	KN	EC	WC	LP	NW	MP	FS	NC	Total
Voting stations	42	34	28	21	21	17	14	13	10	200
Expected questionnaires	2940	2380	1960	1470	1470	1190	980	910	700	14000

At each voting station, a fieldworker was required to interview between 50 and 70 voters during the course of the day. The interviews were to be divided into three periods, namely 25 between 07:00 and 12:00, 25 between 12:00 and 17:00, and the remaining 20 between 17:00 and closing time, scheduled to be 21:00. This was to ensure a spread over different times of the day when different dynamics might have been in operation.

Fieldworkers wore T-shirts marked clearly on the front with the words "Exit Poll" in all eleven of South Africa's official languages. The words "14 April 2004" and the logos of the HSRC and Markinor were printed on the back of the T-shirt. Each fieldworker obtained permission from voting officials to situate herself or himself at a point close to where voters emerged from the voting station after casting their ballots. It was at this point that interviews were conducted. HSRC researchers visited a sub-sample of the selected voting stations randomly during the day to verify that surveys were taking place in the prescribed manner.

Data collected in the completed questionnaires were captured by two methods during the course of the day. In cases of voting stations situated in close proximity to Markinor's offices in the metropolitan areas, they were fetched at intervals by a Markinor employee and taken to the offices for capturing. In cases of the more distant or remote voting stations, fieldworkers were telephoned at regular intervals so that the responses to each completed questionnaire could be read out and captured immediately. These procedures resulted in the completion of capturing before 12:00 on Friday 16th April, a mere 39 hours after the closure of most voting stations.

Monitoring of sampled voting stations

HSRC researchers visited sampled voting stations throughout Election Day and concluded that fieldwork was being conducted effectively. In several cases it was found that the quota of 25 interviews that had been allocated for between opening time (07:00) and midday was done too rapidly and fieldworkers were reminded to pace the interviews more slowly, in order to obtain a sample spread throughout the period. In one case, a selected voting station (Tlhabane Town Hall, Rustenburg district, number 87020131) was found to be no longer a designated voting station. The fieldworker therefore moved to the closest operational voting station, namely the Lutheran Bapedi Church (87020209), situated less than one kilometre from the originally selected station.

Realised sample

On the day, the targeted number of 14000 voter interviews was slightly exceeded in each province, and the total realised sample was 14227.

Table 3: Number of interviews conducted in each province

Province	GT	KN	EC	WC	LP	NW	MP	FS	NC	Total
Interviews conducted	3014	2389	2022	1477	1484	1195	987	928	731	14227

Demographically, the characteristics of voters reflected those of the voting age population in general, as indicated in Table 4.

Table 4: Demographics (unweighted data) of voters interviewed on Election Day

Gender	Male: 44,9%		Female: 55,0%
Age group	18-22: 9,4%	23-29: 18,8%	30-44: 34,0%	45-59: 23,8%	60+: 13,9%

Educational level	None: 10,0%	Primary: 21,3%	Gr 8-11: 33,3%	Matric: 23,8%	Tertiary: 11,5%

The data was then weighted in accordance with the sampling procedure requirements, thereby down-weighting the Northern Cape sample and up-weighting the Gauteng and KwaZulu-Natal samples.

Analysis of responses to interview questions

1. Where did you find out most about the voting procedure?

Table 5: Where did you find out most about the voting procedure?

	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0	100,0

The two most common sources of information about the voting procedure were radio (44,6%) and television (28%). Almost three-quarters (72,6%) of voters found out most about the voting procedure from one of these two sources. Television was a much more common source of information about voting procedures than radio in Gauteng and the Western Cape, the two wealthiest provinces, where access to television is higher. In the other seven provinces, radio was more common than television, as a source of voting information.

Less prominent sources of information about the voting procedure were newspapers (3,4%), especially in Gauteng, the Western Cape and KwaZulu-Natal; political parties (4,9%), especially in the Eastern Cape and Northern Cape; and civic organisations (5,3%), especially in the Eastern Cape.

By far the majority of voters (76,6%) came to vote on foot. This was most almost exclusively the case in Limpopo (94,6%) and much less so in the Western Cape (50,8%).

16,5% of voters made use of cars to reach their voting stations. Conversely mirroring the situation with respect to pedestrians, the use of cars was most common in the Western Cape (31,9%) and least common in Limpopo (3,9%), probably reflective of disparities in wealth between these two provinces.

Overall, much smaller proportions used taxis (3,8%), buses (0,3%), or other means of transport (2,9%) to get to their voting stations. The totals in Table 5 exceed 100% in some cases because some voters used more than one means of transport to reach their voting stations.

3. How long did it take to get to this voting station?

The close proximity of voting stations to voter's homes was illustrated by the response that more than three-quarters of voters (78,2%) took less than half an hour to get to the voting stations where they voted. A further one out of six (16,1%) took between 31 and 60 minutes to get to the station, and about one in twenty (5,5%) took more than one hour to reach their voting stations. The best-served province in this respect appeared to be the Western Cape, where 93,5% of voters took less than 30 minutes to reach their voting stations. At the opposite extreme, more than one out of ten (10,5%) voters in KwaZulu-Natal travelled for more than an hour to get to their voting stations.

4. How long did you queue before voting?

Table 8: How long did you queue before voting?

More than two-thirds (67,3%) of voters stood in queues for less than 30 minutes before they could vote. A further 12,8% waited between 30 and 60 minutes. The rest waited for between one and two hours (10,1%) or in 9,6% of cases, in excess of two hours.

Provincially, Gauteng fared the most poorly in terms of waiting time. More than one-fifth (20,6%) of voters reported having waited in the voting queue in excess of two hours. Observations at polling stations in Hillbrow and Yeoville, areas with very high residential densities testified to this. In contrast, the shortest waiting times occurred at North West voting stations.

Significantly, the proportion of voters who waited for more than half an hour declined during the course of Election Day. For those who voted between 07:00 and 12:00, 45,2% queued for more than 30 minutes. For those who voted between 12:00 and 17:00, only 31,2% waited for more than 30 minutes. Finally, for those who voted after 17:00, the proportion that waited in queues in excess of 30 minutes was only 17,7%.

The vast majority of voters (98,5%) indicated that the voting procedure inside the voting station had been easy to understand. Only in Limpopo (2,9%) and North West (2,4%) did noticeable, yet still very small, numbers of voters say that the voting procedure was not easy to understand.

6. Do you think the voting officers clearly understood the voting process?

Similarly, almost every voter (99%) said that they thought the voting officers themselves had clearly understood the voting process. Only Gauteng and Mpumalanga registered figures above 1% (1,4% and 1% respectively). Significantly, this occurrence coincides with the highest proportion of voters waiting in queues for longer than two hours. Lengthy waits might have contributed to such perceptions amongst some voters.

7. Did you cast your vote for both the national and the provincial assembly?

Almost every voter (96,7%) said that he or she had cast a vote for both the national and the provincial assemblies. Only Gauteng and the Northern Cape registered figures of 95% or less. A very small proportion (2,8%) had only cast a national ballot and an even smaller number (0,3%) had only cast a provincial assembly ballot. The proportion that indicated that for some reason they had not cast a ballot at all was 0,1%.

More than nine out of ten voters (92,4%) indicated that the voting station where they had cast their votes was the one at which they had been registered. Only 7,4% said that they had voted at a voting station where they were not registered. This proportion exceeded 10% in North West (10,9%) and Eastern Cape (10,3%), where slightly more than average numbers of voters had voted at voting stations other than the ones at which they had been registered. A very small proportion (0,2%) did not respond to this question.

More than nine out of ten voters (92,4%) expressed the belief that nobody would know for which party they had voted in the elections, thereby implying that their ballot is secret. Certainty about this was highest in the Western Cape at 97,2%, and lowest in Limpopo at only 84,8%. About one out of twenty (4,8%) respondents did not believe their vote was confidential, and 2,6% said that they did not know either way. Clearly, if such information is totally confidential, it needs to be communicated more effectively, especially to the voters of Limpopo and the Eastern Cape.

The vast majority (98,4%) of voters were of the opinion that the election procedures were "free and fair". Only 1% said that they had not been "free and fair", and 0,6% indicated that they did not know.

Although still minimal, 1,7% of KwaZulu-Natal respondents considered the elections not to have been free and fair. 1,5% did not respond to this question.

More than three-quarters (77,9%) of voters were of the view that the 2004 elections were better organised than those of 1999. This perception of an improvement in the organisation of the elections was highest in North West (82,1%), and KwaZulu-Natal (80,9%). Only 7,4% of respondents thought that they were not better organised in 2004 than in 1999. About one in seven (14,5%) said that they did not know. Among this proportion, 50,2% were first time voters aged 22 or less, who would have been less able to compare the two elections than their older counterparts.

Conclusion

A HSRC-conducted survey based on a statistically representative and stratified sample has concluded that 98,4% of South African voters who participated in the elections held on the 14th April 2004 deemed the election procedures to have been "free and fair".

The IEC seems to have conducted an effective outreach and voter education programme with 99,7% of respondents having knowledge of the voting procedure from a variety of sources. A majority of these voters (72,6%) cited the radio and television as their sources of information.

The IEC also seems to have displayed high overall levels of operational and logistical efficiency. 76,6% of voters reached their voting station on foot, and 78,2% took less than 30 minutes to get to their voting station. This attests to well located and easily accessible voting stations.

In terms of queuing, more than two-thirds of respondents waited for less than 30 minutes to vote, while almost all respondents (98,5%) found the procedures inside the voting station easy to understand. 99% of voters thought that the voting officials understood the procedures clearly.

Most (96,7%) respondents voted for both national and provincial legislatures and more than nine out of ten (92,4%) respondents voted at the stations where they were registered.

A high proportion (92,4%) of voters were of the view that nobody would know for which party they had voted.

More than three-quarters of respondents (77,9%) said that the 2004 elections had been better organised than the 1999 elections.
